For wounded sood soldiers alone, free train transportation was furnish furnished to any o point in the state of Angelinia also provided they had relatives and friends who would take care of them.Also many of the refugees mst mostly from the towns arived at Dorothy Gale city scantily clad and half frozen and in a most pitiful condition, and espeecially the sights of the condition of many of the children infuriated the soldiers of the Mobolization camps through which may of the refugees passed first on their way to the city.

''Vast as the worko is all are being provided for''said general Sladerlinia to his officers during a conference.''We have not let any one go through uncared for.But for one thing keep a constant eye on your men.Our soldiers are mostly Abyssinkilians and as these conditions have been caused mainly by the enemy there is no telling what will happen to prisoners if the Abyssinkilians once get let louse.They don't believe in quarter.''

Here curiosity was indeed at a discount here.Persons of any kind who had the most urgent business in the battle stricken re-ion and the christian lines found it very hard to get permits to get there, and all those who were simply simp curious could not get there at all.Every camera fiend, and foriegn neswp er man and war correspondent and also artists were also barred, and also Angelinian newspaper men also.

One foriegner wasshot for taking a moving picture scene of the sights of the battlefield and many other war correspondents, camera fiends, and newspaper men who were taking views of the battle fields ruins of towns and the like, were rounded up, their cameras and moving picture machines smashed, and them selves formed to go to work gathering up corpses or help in the reconstruction of the camps. Every place was in a similiar state of Martial Law, even Dorothy Gale, and Angelinia Agathia City cities. Big forces of armed guards surrounded all depots depots of railroads running south and north, and east, and were instructed not to allow curious crowds to gather to see the refugees, and wounded sol diers come in. This was enforced or in enfordement of a proclamanation issued by the Mayor of Dorothy Gale and also of Angelinia Agathia city and elsewhere, copies of which printed on large red cards were posted conspicuously all over the cities and towns. There were persons allowed at the stations however who waited for the arival of loved ones who when they did not come from the battle zone shook the air with their lamentations.

The catastrophe all but paraliz paralyzed railroad and all other buisness in the battle visited section. And had the vehene vehement battle lasted another day the loss would have been greatly increased. Even now hundreds of thousand thousands of more bodies have been buried without identification, hundreds of thou thousands of more have been burned or taken to the Aronburgs „un River and dumped into the half frozen stream with weights, fastened to them. The two week weeks and two days have wrought surprising chances in condition of the army. Each day has been a chapter in its self. The day after the battle the whole christian army was completely paralyzed. On the first week after came the beginning of realization. The next week, or the following night, could have been called the crisis period, which meant whether vivianannas army would give further service in the war or disband. And the crisis was passed safely. what had been accom lis accomplished since the turning point is amazing. It was as incredible as some of the effects of this battle are without our precedents without pred precedent. So far it was the most appalling calamity in the war and out of all battles no matter how severe or how slight, never was there such a total as was gall as the most dreadful disgraceful and astonishing christian defeat and total downfall of an army before in all the world. Here at Big Girl Knool the Angelinia States ac acknlwledged that the War is lost and Glandelinia has won never to lose even in the wrong run.

INSANITY FOLLOWS THE FRIGHTFUL SUFFERING OF WOUNDED SOLDIERS, AND WAR REFUGEES.
ONE MILLION FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DEIENTED ONES.
APPARENT INDEFFERENCE TO THE LOSS OF FRIENDS AND RELATIVES.
BATTLE REFUGEES PRECIPITATE A PANIC DURING CONFLICT NEAR CHRISTIAN CENTER.
RAN THROUGH FIRING LINES ON HORSEBACK! SAVED AS IF BY A GREAT MIRACLE.

HUNDREDS OF thousands of the wounded soldiers, and also refugees from the towns became insane during the week succeeding the battle. Eventhe non-combatants had bravely borne the loss of relatives in the army, the hunger, cold, exposure, fatigue, had apparently been unmindful of the horrors of the batt en disaster and also had as a general rule given anot the slightest indication of the slightest mental illness while the battle and the disasterous results was on, but when when all was over and three quarter of the army was reported wiped out, and relief from the strain came, the overburdended mind gave way. General Herdrude who also was connected with the relief work, told of many cases w which came under his observation. The seventh day following the battle he said in recounting his experiences;

"From what I've heard there are at leaset I,500,000 persons, and nearly three hundred thousand wounded soldiers whose minds have become more or less unbalanced, and one hundred and fifty thousand have lost every vestige of their reason, and are absolute raving maniacs one of whom came under my personal obse rvation. He iscolonel Charles Nero, andAlyssaInkilion officer. He occupied a room opposite me at my headquarters and during the heat of the battle he rescued comrades and saved eighty five wounded officers, and privates according to witnesses who knewthe circumstances. He lost his whole regiment and by a miracle saved himself. He then lost his mind. during the day and night he kept raving andpacing the floor and kept telling every one he saw that he was general Manley and that they'd better surrender to him.

He or eated so much excitement at my headquarters that two sergeants deadetailed two squads of men to capture him. He either heard or saw them approaching and leapedout of the ground floor wit window and after a mad fight baffled his persuers and escaped although he was badly wounded.

This is only one illustration of the conditions that prevailed there. A non-combatants whose son was killed in the battle had been searching in vain for his remains for three days and then located the body under the snow. soldiers had also seen the body and they took it in charge. He in his dazed mind thinking they were insurgents, protested, cursed the Glandelinians and their cause roundly and picking up up a big club rushed at the soldiers and fought them to take possession of the body. The soldiers were stern and had to discharge their duty, and the poor old man practically crazed fought them most desperately but was overpowered and bound while the body was thrown into the flames and soon burned to a crisp.

The man denouncing glandelinia's cause fiercely made frantic efforts to get away from the soldiers but to no avail. He was utterly ferocious in his savage ravings.

In the course of my rounds I saw many wounded soldiers, and even whole families of refugees, and they appeared stark crazy, and would look into the face of every stranger with a vacant stare that was most pitiful in the extreme! They t They were hurrying in the direction of the places where the provisions were being distrubited. Most of them had lost all, even the clothing on their backs were not their own. There were scores of thousands in a similar condition.

One officer who was very active insaving his troops from destruction during the battle, b ecame insane because of the dreadful scenes he had beencompelled he had been compelled to witness. his friends first noticed his condition when he t ld them he was Jennie Vivian, the dearest of Emperor vivians daughters, and that he had rescued Emperor vivian and hisother daughters the night e before from the end of the world. He also told them he was going to order general vivianana to move at once upon the enemy at the Moon, and that he was going to lick Manley nd even all the planets o in the sky and even trash the Glandelinian King and all his followers within an inch of their lives and destroy all the mightiest of the Glandelinian ar i armies in active service in one day, and with his own hand alone. The officer then retu retired to his room on the third floor of the building that night seemingly sane.Soon afterwards to the consternation of others he became suddenly very dangerous, shouting madly in all directions, and dashing off he was a lion looking for his prey and trying to roar like one.The soldiers engaged to watch this mad man had been before this compelled to leave the building for a few minutes mij minutes and when they returned they found all the furniture in the room wrecked and that he had shattered out the window and leaped out. leapedout three stories below.He was never hurt in his awfully high leap, and he was persued but never taken or afterwards found.

However he had been seen running out of the camp, and i all r -probably perished out in the cold.Another case was that of a young private who fought in the thickest portion of the battle but at a point where the christian defeat was the most complete and disasterous, and at tt the risk of his own life saved the lives of two officers.As the batt e on the eve evenic evening of the second day gradually subsided with the enemy in possession of all the fields and camps and doing a driving all before them like a cyclone does in striking the farm, the young officer dazed as he was from the din started to where he believed the christian lines were situated, wquite re-assured.He was still more bewildered to find the enemy in po ssession of the surviving christian camps.When he finally found his way to Big Girl Knool city the first victim to be buried was his older brother.He was followed by his father and two other brothers.This he tried to bear without a murmur but when he heard that the battle was lost, and that the army hardly even existed, and that the enemy was in possession of everything the shock overthrew the young young mans reason and he became a nervious wreck, without a relative or loved one in the whole world.

The lo- and strongly defended christian works along the central line held by the troopsunder general Vivianin himself, but in charge of general Angelo Turner was situated in the big Ursuline woods near the tow town of Kittens viscberts.This was held by 2,500,000 Dr dobians, and 200,000 wounded still fighting .For sixteen hours no desperate attempts ofthe 12,000,000 insurgents could dislodge them from these works .A hyssinkilians and Tripoli ans were sent from the reserves to reinforce this part of the li e line, and these columns werethrown heavily upon the attacking Glandelinian soldiers hurling them back.In the midst of the turmoil at another part of the line a force of Abbissonian troops driven into confusion before the advancing Glandelinian hor es retreated u on the works giving the rest of the relief line or rebellins I mean time to refore and resume their storming assault with the most redoubled violence...The glandelinian ''Devil Yell'' grew wild/ exceedingly wild indeed, as they advanced, shouting and shrieking their awful bl blasphemies in true camp meeting style untill the nerves of the christian troops thrown out of whack already by the sudden torrent of fi fugitives, were shattered portions of the line began to retreat and a fearful pa ic panic seemed surely imminent.

It was then that the surviving generals dashed in among the confused and ret retreating masses of troops and though they succeeded in rallying a portion of them caused an tremendously increase or enormous increase in the wild pandemonium.

It was positively sos y to hear the awful Glandelinian ''Devil Yell'' above the roar of the battle which was raging with the most increasing fury even as the officers rallied their demorilized troops.

The panic had been caused by the precipitatefalling back of the disordered Angelinian columns which reco l recoiled upon the Dondobian line.Order and reformation were brought about by the utter determination and presence of mind of the officers and generals who told their men as best as they could that it was no time for retreating, or a place for such scenes, that they must hold their works for the sake of their Creator.

Regiments that had been torn asunder by the disorder were united during the rally.Heart moving scenes were presented by the sad conditions of the many wounded as the half dead, manbl mangled and bruised streams of soldiers moved to the rear.This portion of theline did not withdraw from its position untill dark a consimuous stream of heavy reinforcements having arived prepartory to holding back the assailants at this section at al, costs.And the succeeded, butpaid the costs.This line of shattered troops was commanded by fourty generals, and three hundred other officers and those officers risking everything held the line firm before overwhelming numbers even when it broke.

Angolinia Aronburg, one of the bir girl heroines who went through this battle also had many different experiences too many to describe here or in the whole story but indeedone of her other experiences was equally as horrible and exciting as that of Violet and her sisters, and just as serious to boot.

Only a c short chapter was learned by an Angelinian war correspondent as told by colonel Haldemann.Angolinia Aronburg found herself found herself at the mercy of the persueing enemy when the christian line before her view was shattered to fragments by a tornado of fire from the Glandelinian parks of cannon, and swept away by theheadlong Glandelinian attack.Two brigades, each cos consisting of one hundredthousand men each, duringthe headlong retreat had been forced to seperate when the whole of the main christian line at thisportion began to abandon their war s and flee before the mad irrestible onslaughg onslaught of the cruelly yelling Glandelinian soldiers.

When Gertrude Angeline raced away from the awfulscene on horseback, she had urged her horse on so swiftly that she soon lost trace of the retreating Angelinian soldiers and founf found f herself persued by a hog body of Glandeldian on horseback mostly of the fierce Gargoylian cavarly, but never t lost the her courage or her faith in god.A shellhit some obstruction not far away, her horse was killed under her, and the next instant the girl was hurled from her saddle and freaki freakishly thrown upon the back of another riderless horse whih had been racing madly on just a few paces behind her.

Lying across the back of the madly galloping horse the poor little heroine suffering agonies from even the slightest injuries she had recieved was protected from the bullets of the persueing re els to a limited extent, and was afforded some relief by seeing a party of Angelinians rallying in front of her.On went the madly galloping horse racing right straight through the firing lines untill it arived within reach of the rallying Angelinians.

So overdone wasthe wounded girl that for a while she did not know where she was.She could but merely discern the outlines of the rallying christian lines.

while not knowing her chances of life or death, she heard the cries of soldiers and faintly she saw hands grasping for the birld bridle of the horse with the purpose to stop it, while Abyssin kli Abyssinkilian cavarly closed in.

An officer reaching out with one hand caught the reins and a few minutes afterwards the soldiers brought the girl softly out of the reach of the enemy. and attended to her wounds which were not as severe as they had feared.The child heroine had experienced the race so swiftly and had been so stunned by the force of the explosion that she had not had time to even realize her per peril.

"Many of the officers and the chair man of the Organization of a army physicians for the relief of the wounded and sick soldiers and also refugees stated that there was an absolute necessity for hundreds of more score of trained nurses and physicians.

Gertrude Angeline however was destitute savesfor a few personal effects carried on her person and brave as she was her nerves were almost shattered by her many thrilling ex er experiences throught out the two days of the battle and horror, but she reached Angelinia Agathia city on a morning two days later from the battle swept districts of Big Gir / Girl Knool and went right away to visit the vivian Girl Princesses who she learned had been wounded by their own experiences.

'' Yes indeedc I was very fortunate in escaping as I did, but I stilldefy the Gddelianesjust the same''said Gertrude as she lay on her cot in violets room.''It seems to me as if it had been an awful dream and when I think of thehundreds andhundreds of thousandsof soldiers who were killed before my very eyes I feel as though I alwa/s ought to be satisfied no matter what happens in this awful war.And the reports from the awful battlefield of Big Girl Knool are only one third as appalling and as exciting as they say the sit ation is and should be.The battle ended with general Vivianis army routed and h rled back crushed to pieces and scattered all the way to tward the little villiage of Beppo Lansin jnot far from Jessica a distance northeast of not less than th twenty five to thirty six miles, but Concentinian Aronburgs as well as Francis Vivianannas armies held till all was lost and then curing the night slowly retreated tward big Girl Knool to make a further stand if necessary.But the enemy did not follow up the attack but rested on the hard won ground.

I remained at Big Girl Knool for two or one day then left theill fated region the very next afternoon going t by trainto where I am now in your ow own place at Angelinia Agathia City.The condition of the vanquished christian army at this time now as I hear while showing a slight improvement is awful and I will never forget the terrible scenes that I witnessed as long as I live.As the train I was on pulled out of Big Girl Knool City loaded with so many wounded soldiers and e refugees I cried myself to sleep.

There were countless odies on both sides of the train for miles and grea great big fires were burning.In some places the bodies lay bed besides the works, or railroad embankments as thick as grass in a field, or lay piled in long wide windrows six and seven deep at the thickest, and the stench of burning bodies was horrible.During the last day of the battle I was in the rear of the christian line.This was between Kittens Hischerts and Chamberlane.and yet this portion of the christian line was swept away at 6.P.M. in the evening and with it later, whe went the whole christian army.

I was pers ed by a large body of the victorious enemy but some of the retreating Angelinians rallied to my rescue, and I was slightly injured by the explosion f a shell while riding through the firing lines but escaped as if by a miracle.I watched some of the soldiers in the work of rescue after the battle.Unde r a heavy stone they found a so soldier who was frightfully injured andpinnedunder the stone as he could not get from under.

Some more soldiers came along and finally succeeded in rescueing him after being tempted twice to s oot shoot him to end his awful misery.

The snow covered battlefield presented a most grewsome appearance, and eve y every wagon, and sleigh, and cehicle belonging to the army ,and also coming or being sent from the ci i city and towns near by is being used to transport the slaiand wounded soldiers to the towns, or the dead to the Aronburgs Run river and it is no uncommon thing to see many loads of bodies twenty deep and so on.Big windrows of fuel by hundreds, areburninglike so many big houses afire upon which count e countless thousands of bodies are thrown every hour, and the stench of burning flesh was nauseating, and I believe could be detected scores of miles.

Since the fearful battle the only water that can be used for drinking purposes was in the river and now most of it has been frozen too hard and too deep to obtain water without chopping and melting theice, and swiftly running streams that are not frozen have become tainted with the slime and filth from the countless slain of the battlefied field battlefield untill it is surelylittle better than if it is no water at all.

And the towns and the city still in possession of the christian arfies were placed under martial law conditions have beenmuchbetter and there is very little lawlessness i on the part of the Glandelinian and other rebel vandals.

The soldiers have refused to show any quarter whatever and have orders to shoot all rebel spies on sight.Thisindeed has had a most wonderful effect on the wicked disreputable dis u disguised rebel spies and ghouls who have flocked into t the christianlinew, and the towns and cities.Every one of theprisoners able, whether he is wounded or not is made to work under the point of the bay onet and the punishment for a refusal is the same as that meted out to the Glandelinian ghouls.I saw four hundred vandals hot in one day and wonder if or not the whole rrebel line is trying to become spies there are so many many of these ghouls.

There were even hidden t in the basement of a generals headquarters seven disguised rebel sies who were found by the soldiers with their pockets filled with the mostimportant letters and other papers.As these men would not surrender but tried to shoot it out with these soldiers in the dark cellar, these rebels were therefore as they say shot to death right there in the basemen basement.In the work of succoring the wounded, I saw streams of them covered with blood soaked bandga bandages.T countless s numbers of unfortunate non-combatants st-raggle into Angelinia Agathia every day and indeed their condition is most pitiful in the extreme.

Hundreds, may thousands have lost their reason and there are many mad ones among them.The citi zens of the city are do ing all in their power to meet the demands of the sufferers, and every available building in the city has been converted into a hospital for the wounded soldiers.

When I arived here myself, I scarcely had clothes enough to cover me and I had to be fitted out in a drygoods store.

And the fear of the approach of the victorious enemy drove mos most of the people from Big Girl Knool city, and the other towns.''''''''''A__

A MOST SERIOUS DANGER FRO' A BIG FIRE. SCARCETY OF TRAINS TO CARRY THE WOUNDED AND NON-COMBATANTS REFUGEES TO SAFER PLACES.

PRISONERS I'PORTED UNDER GUARD INTO BIG GIRL KNOOL CITY.
UNTOLD SUFFERING OF WOUNDED AT CHA'BERLANE. AN EXPERIENCE OF A MAN FROM DOROTHY GALE CITY . BIG GIRL K'OOL SCARED BY A BIG FIRE.
A WOUNDED GENERAL HAS HIS BROKEN NEX NECK SET. THE MOST TERRIBLE TWO DAYS OF THEIR LIVES..
THE HORRORS AND NOISE OF THE TERRIBLE SQUABBLE DROVE COUNTLESS NUMBERS OF SOLDIERS CRAZY. A HELP IN GETTING RELIEF SUPPLIES TO THE WOUNDED.....

INDEED ONE OF THE 'OST SERIOUS DANGERS' of all that Big Girl Knool and other towns within the battle zone for a many days after the great conflict was of fire.Not another flake of snow had fallen during the two weeks succeeding the battle, and despite the cold winds, and the old snow previously fallen, the wrecked towns were like so much tindor, with their debris piled in windrows in every direction.In nearly all parts of these towns the very fire hydrants were buried under the wreckage to any unknown depth and the water supply itself at best was only of the most meagor kind.

However the fire departments of Big Girl Knool was large, but those of the smaller towns were small and badly crippled, and indeed would have been utterly powerless tostay the flames should they once get started.And for these towns there was no negrer relief than Big Girl Knool and that was more than four hours away for the fastest of all trains.

In view of all these then existing conditions it was no wonder that the cry was''Get the old men, women ,and children to neighboring cities and towns, as fast as you can.'' nor was it a wonder that with onlyone train a day carrying only little over three hundred and nine passengers, and being able to make onlyone trip every twent wtw twenty four hours ,people fairly fought to be taken aboard.

All that time for those two weeks fears were entertained by the auth authorities that even this service would be cut off by the enemy and the inhabatants and wounded soldiers left without any means of getting to the refugee cities owning to trouble with ene y soldiers.

The sanitar conditions of the wounded remaining did not, and was not even now improving to anygreat extent.All those in charge of caring for the sick and the wounded all soldiers were proceeding with dispatch.More and more physc physicians were needed and they requested that all outside physician from various towns and cities not touce touched by the horrors of war come to Big Girl Knool and aid the wounded for at least three months, and if needed, longer.The eletric light service of Big Girl Knool City was op completely destroyed, and the city eletricians said it would he over fou four months before any portion of the city can be lighted.A glorious and more powerful army to be reformed in place of the beaten one was the cry raised by the Nationals, butindeed it seemed a task beyond all human power to even regain half of thenumber of the soldiers of vivianannas shattered army.

The total number of able bodied wounded remaining within the christian army, or returning dailing r daily was about I' I8,I44,996.The next day the number of returning soldiers increased slightly.No accurate statement of the amount of supplies could be obtained as they were put in the general stock as soon as recieved.It also happened that Big Girl Knoo/ City recieved a big scare sixteen days after the battle when it became rumored that a large portion or nearly all of the newly erected camps of the reforming christian army where all the relief trains for the ar y and city refugees were side tracked was burning fiercely withball its precious supplies and other store stores.

The scare grew out of a real $II,400,000 fire in the camp set by some unknown vandal which rapidly destroyed one third of the newly constructed camps ad set fire to a portion of the pine forest near by especially the foliage on top created an ocean of fire in severa hours.The fire broke out tward night fall and the glowin the sky could be seen at the distance of one hundred miles.Two hundred and fifty fire companies from Big Girl Knol Big Girl Knool came to fight the blaze.However Big Girl Knool the other towns and the main christian armies, were reassured by witeless, and also telegraph that a big fire calamity was out of the question, that the blaze was unable to spread any f rther, and that all the army relief supplies were safe.One great feature of the efforts to relieve the remaining wounded of the army was the delay on account of the h n hinderance of the enemy was the long delay in getting the most needed supplies to the army.much of it rthat was sent was captured by big forces of foraging parties of the enemy. Train-load after trainload was however already in Big Girl Knool city which was striving galantly to assist materially in the work of relief, but as said before on a c account of the limited transportation facilities brought on by the hinderance of the enemy the best of them could not all arive, and those that did arive did not arive soon enough.

On account of the wars devastations there were only a few railroad tracks open.Even if the best of the supplies were at ghamberlane or Kittens niocherts cities, they were not and could not be in a osition to be moved fast as there were not enough trains to run from ghamberlane. Aronburgs Bayou could be used from „hamberlane, but just now it was impossible to run boats for the purpose, as the streams were already frozen over.
The general army Com i Commitee at Big Girl Knool City had decided to im-port the prisoners who were more willing to work into „ig „irl Knool city under guard.This action was taken with the fullconsent of the army officers.

Other prisonersxware still busy in the work of burning or burning the dead still being found, but the most willing and docile of these Glandelinian prisoners were relieved of this work or task, and sent to work in the city under guard, and replaced by the more sullen prisoners.

''The water supply for the whole army and others had been utterly adequate so that we had to melt snow and ice,''said general Jack Evans''and none of the streams on account of freezing over so hard and deep "is liable to any amount of contamination.Nervious prostration, hysteria, and mild and severe dementia paco red among many of the refugees due to shock, horror exhaustion, exposure from cold and grief and the situation is awful.''

Among all classes of people, including many of the soldiers the forced use of spoiled and frozen food during the first week after the battle had led to severe intestinal troubles.Hundreds every day had been overcome by the cold, and deaths from exposure and those frozen to death have occured among working Angelinian soldiers, and also prisoners.Thedamage from the cold weather was most severe to those who had lived in the warmer regions and were not used to cold weather or to those who were too thin blooded to withstand it.The quickly reforming christian army despite the burning of so large a portion of their new camps passed the first two weeks following the disasterous battle burying and burning the dead and now stillware erect ing new camps and more strongerpositions.

General „ivians orders that all prisoners abce to work should do so to the limit of their strength was carried out as far as o possible.

''The whole christian army is thankful''said general „ickmell, on the eighteenth day after when told of the arival of over 36,777,380 men and artillery and provisions from „orothy Gale City to the christian army at Big Girl Knool''We cannot make any statement too strong to the people of Dorothy Gale city.The whole army is thankful beyondthe expression of workds words.The people of „orothy Gale city are among the staunchest of friends and the strongest su porters of the nation in timelike these.Yes we'll reform the army again and like the others did after a disasterous battle, we'll make it a better army than it ever was.The whole army will never forget the kindness of the people of Dorothy Gale City in coming so generously to the relief ofour shattered army, and we all thank them from the bottom of our hearts, and ask „od and His Blessed Mother that the enemy will never gain a foothold on so fair and good a city.''

Major general „indernine arived at Big girl Knool City that eighteenth day with $15,000,000 cash from Emperor „ivian to be expended in hastening the relief of the wounded soldiers.The general however arived too late to place the money in a bank and for ninty eight hours rested in the safe in the abandoned headquarters of violet and her sisters who were now in Angelinia Agathia for a short spell.The money was guarded by Winkie Abyssinkilian soldiers.

Also arrangements were completedby the Abbiennnia, Bondinia, and Calverine Railroad where by it established new lines to „ig „irl Knool city from Kittens „iocherts.

This helped a good deal in getting relief supplies to the ar y for the wounded soldiers.Also one of the headsof the Red Cross League arived at Big Girl Knool City that day.General Roswell uster Jonston returned from a scouting tour of a days duration and reported that he saw the enemy leaving the region of Rosa, that there was signs of all kinds of general movements, and that portions of vanleys armyshowd showed either evidence of moving forward or falling back.He also said he saw great many bodies of the dead still unburied and believed by the way it looked the whole army must be turning into dead bodies as fast as they are picked up and burned.He said the enemy too had cleared large portions of the field of the bodies on their own side and buried and burned them at different portions, and were still at it at some portions.....After suffering for over a week pre privations and exposures, as a result of his ex eriences during and after the battle, which raged so horribly on the two long days, general Heathwick, P.Davis Davidsonia and what survived of his immense divisions there being six, reached Big Girl Knool on December the 8th most of his surviving soldiers being half famished, their uniforms torn and battle scarred, all their regimental flags torn to pieces, and blood soaked, the army being half famished, ne rly naked, and without without proper clothing and shoes, but overcome with amazement and joy at their mir aculious delivery and that they held their works to the end when the main army was lic liked to a finish.

shell fire and the force of the Glandelinian assault wrecked his divisions, annihilated the neighboring divisionsunder other great generals, wiped out scores of regiments, and destroyed every particle ofv Natures wonderful scenery for many miles around.Yet he and the survivors of his forlorn divisions passed through the terrible two days of the battle hell, holding their ground to the last, their many gallent officers raising their voices of commands, and entrat entreaties, and words of encouraggement encourage ent above the wild earsplitting din of the battle, the shrieking ''Devil Yell'' of the advancing Glandelinians that shook the air like a c c cyclone with their tornado uproar of blasphemies and curses.

And through it all, not oneportion of the christian line under general Davidsonia gave way beforethe at tack of the insurgents and the general and his staff, and every one of his officers though they were in the thickest of the fight, and though they led counter charge after counter charge through that fearful death inferno were not injured not to the extent of even a scratch though horses were so shot under them often.

when the terrible wave of yelli ng Glandelini ns assailants struck against general Davidsonias line the pressure of the assaultwas so furious and so irrestible for a time that at one point despite the tenacious resistance They met the Glandelinians almostpoured over the works before this section f the christian line realized their danger.

pushing up to the front the hu officers on horseback rallied the troops in the face of the enemys with withering fire and held the line firm though it was shot and torn to piec pieces again and again.However before they had rallied this portion of the line another column of the Angelinians under general turner came up to relieve them to give them time to rally, only to be demolished by the waves of insurgents before the very eyes of their astonished officers and their e general captured.however portions of them foc o fought so desperately to regain their general that they succeeded.

With the greatest difficulty the line was saved from being swept away and when rallied drove the Whinsie Zimmermannians and Scoudlers, half destroyed, half crushed, with the loss of manyofficers upon and over the works, surrounded and captured a portion, and hurled the rest back to an immense grove a mile distant with immens immeasurable loss.

During this Fracus general Da i Davidsonia lashed hisline to other points of the position.He secured a great number of cannon and pr i prisoners from the retreating foe and hurled his line into another position, and rode with dare devil reck e recklessness over the breastworks in the face of the rebel annihilating artillery fire cheered by his men.his horse then was shot down and his hat carried away by shots but the general was not injured.

While the hurricane of battle raged allaround on the second day, and a sea of angry Glandelinian soldiers dashed wildly and insa insanely against allpos tions his left clung tenaciously to the works they had re-captured on the first day with the support of reserves, meeting charge after charge of the fierce sc Schh Sch Scoulders while the center held fast to its precarious positions of snow forts and earthworks.The right held its trenches in thesame manner but with more murderous results and while the enemy raged insanely with their headlong assaults, they fought just as des-perately to hold them off.Every officer and his command found itself it precarious positions, but held allday wi while the main christian line was swept away.

When this second day of the battle had pased and the remainder of the christian army had receded, battle wrecks e, dead horses by the score of thousands, and the corpses of the soldiers surrounded the devoted divisions who alone were in their ocmpositions.They however were dan erously close to the new lines of the victorious enemy, their last rations had given out, they had nothing to eat, and nearly dead with exhaustion, and exposure to cold and burdened with their enormous number of wounded soldiers the general and his surviving a man recoiled toward pig girl Knool to rejoin the main line and seek assistance.Large mubers of the wounded were too weak from pain, and loss of blood and exposure to cold, and the weather to continue very far and man of them sank down upon the snow covered plain and fields and there fore had to be carried by their comr comrades or placed in the covered wagons. Time and again this column was attacked by persueing rebels in great numbers but finally when within five miles of pig girl Knool a portion of the main christian line on slow retreat was reached and the persuing rebel surge shattered.

For two days these soldiers with their general remained in the make up camps near the city and then the retreat was resumed the whole christian force- making their way over the snow covered fields, and down the roads to pig girl Knool point.In the fiercesness of the zero winds they plodded on through the deep snow, subsisting on what they could obtain, even mice which they killed and devoured raw untill finally they came upon the Yellow Brick Pig Girl Knool mad road.with a final remit they succeeded in reaching what remained of the main christian army.There because of lack of such provis ons they were unable to secure new uniforms and other clothing, although they were given a little food and the wounded transported to pig girl Knool city.

Clad in ragged blood dyed uniforms, covered with bloody bandages, wearing torn shoes without socks or stockings, with many wounded in worse plight than any one can concieve they all arived at the stations in the city, dirty, dirty, showing the most horrible wounds, weak, cold and half starved.

Here the most badly wounded were immediately sentvto hospitals, and cared for, while others were recieved into private hmes, and other places.gone were sent to Little girl knool City where they had friends and relatives who aided them.

One of the most rare as well as the most difficult and delicate operations kn wknown to medical science science was performed by an expert army surgeon and assisted by two other famious doctors at a hospital in Little G rl Girl Knool city.Colonel J.H. stantonin of general Dargars army in serviving to hold his Regiment from retreating during the first day of t e the battle was blown by the concussion of some big shell explosion about fourty yards, from where he hung hurled upon the highest branch of a po ular popular tree.In striking the branch of the tree he suffered the dislocation of his right arm and the fragment of the shell shattered his Cervical Vertebrae. Rescuers took two hours to get him down..His head had to le fallen forward on his chest and he had no power to raise it or move it from side to side.After great difficulty the army doctors operated successfully placing the broken ne k neck into a plaster cast, and said the officer will live for many years, even prob ably till he is an old man but never would he in any fit condition to serve in t in the army in the future.

The others of the Vivian Girls during the first day of the bloody battle who has stated before returned to their own home at Angolinih Agathia two or three days after the battle or after succeeding the disasterous christian defeat, told of their own experiences at the very moment of the terrible battles cutstart.The They said it was the most terrible experiences in battles in all their lives, the most awful two days any one fighting in a bloody battle could imagine and also of the scenes they witnessed the two or three days after the battle.

Gertrude A goline who came to see them despite her own injuries asksding how the theyhad come out so easily without sufferi g an serious injuries and their answer for the moment was indifferant as if it was nothing to them, also hard and almost offish -- "Oh we lost everything we had.We did not fare so good but think of others first Gertrude."

But Jennie „ivian who had by this time recovered her reason; said to Angelinia Aronburg:

"The night before that disasterous battle began when I and my sisters reached general „ivianamas headquarters the cannons of both sides extendin; for iles were thundering pretty hard, and a long line of flashes and explosion glares was light the glare of bright lin lightning du in during an unusually violent thunderstorm.

General „ivianamma noticing the awful amiture of of the night cannonade; said to me that I and my sisters were in for seeing a big battle, and I asked him if his lines were strongly entrenched as I knew Manle s armies were power- ful and he said "Well I don't believe the a ttack of the enemy will be quite as bad as all of my generals think, but I'm fully prepared just the same.

The action co menced little at little girl Knool between Jennie Wren town and Spencer Creek and the enemy that day drove Wienatien and others back but by the next day at the same time there were ov r overwhelming numbers hurled against our our line the left wing of ivianamma army had fallen back, he was crushed, another line of defense had been shot to pieces and soon all points in the r rear of the battlefield was crowded with immense swarms of retreating soldiers, who were streaming to the rear, not from fear or panic but unable to resist the irresistible pres e of the glandelinian attack.Late in that hour there was little hope for victory on w anywhere.Yet none of the soldiers realized the extent of the coming disaster.On the followin following morningone could walk on the battlefield and look in vain for the sight of the vanquished christian armies, so quickly and so far had they retreated.

On my return to Angelinia Agathia on the train we pased the small town of sperry and this once beautiful little palace was a sea of overturned litter of house debris, and outside in the fields were strewn countlessnumbers of horribly mangled corpses.We met on the swiftly running train one poor little old man who wept at the sight of the wreckage of his own home.He had lost his four sons and a brother, and other relativrs in the battle, and all the property in the world.Most of the refugees on the trainfor the most part were herefit of allthoir senses and nothing appeared more terrible to us, more solume than so many piles and windrows of cremated and burning bodies.

Thectales of horror, looting and the like.vy the glandelinian vandals are only only too true and as the train headed southeastward we heard many shots ring out every five minutes or so which made us suspect the start ling fact that some number of glandelinian ghouls were paying the penalty for some wicked deed.We hope that general „ivianamnas army willrise n a again from its terrible downfall and i give back it the blow it recieved sometime and give it good and proper too.

Most of the wounded will however return to his army.At least 25,000, at least 25,000,000 christian soldiers died or were killed in this awful battle, which was the most violent of the war so far."

Three to two fourths of the badly wounded who still continued to apply for relief were either mentally dull or on the verge in insanity.The army doctors said, with proper care all of them might be cured.A young officer was brought into the general relief station in the army in the next week.The soldiers of the relief corps found him with a bloody bandage, around his leg in an a empty army reed hut laughing ,singing, and telling stories to himself and to imaginary friends.The surgeons said, food, and the care of his awful wood were all he needed t r to restore him to reason.

It was over over a week afterthe battle before those from the outside really began to find out what the awful battle calamity was to the people and also to the armyin the region of desolation.The first shock of the dreadful dreadful horror and disasterous defeat was wearing off, the endless list of the dead and wounded were getting to be an old story ,and the sick and suffering non, combatants were crawling into all kinds of refuge and shelter to escape the cold of the coming winter.Thousands of them despite the cold had been sleeping in old empty box cars, even ever since the flight, most of them in fact, wounded soldiers with broken arms, and legs, lacerated and torn bodies, and also sick women, ailing half freezing children, and the like.

Many from fear of the victorious foe had cho chosen the risk of death from cold and famine and exposure than meet the rut t ruthless rebels.

Relief parties found many of these every day and brought them into the h s hospitals as fast as possible.

One relief party found more than fifty thousand people in the vinicity of Ca Chamberlane, homeless, hope less, helpless, and tearless.It was a sight indeed probably to cause the very fiends to weep.On the 17th day a soldier rode up to one of the Base hospitals and told the army doctors he had just come from the region of Rosa Tow Town.

"All the refugees there are facing starvation, and death from exposure" he said."there is not a thing left and the children are crying for milk and warmpth.where are now as many sick persons caused by the exposure that we don't know what to do with.Can you send some provisions and medical sup lies down to them?"

The officer in charge said he would sent supplies and divisions of t roops at once. eso;d The soldier on horseback then leaned over his saddle and tried to give the surgeons directions where to sent the supplies. something in his face frightened me and my sisters.I called to two other doctors who immediately ran out and caught him.He appeared to be in a dead faint.When they finally brought him to he laughed very sheepishly.

"I do not know what he agone wrong with me" he said "I have never felt this war before."

Th surgeois ln surgeons looked at each other with alarm and surprise, and our own arms were full of tears and we had to rush inside or we would have wept too much. It was found out that the soldier hadnot tasted food for 24 hours, his hands and feet were almost frozen for he had ridden twenty five miles in the cold early December air.

"ore troops are being sent still to reinforce the army at Big girl Knool, and also to relieve those on duty at the wrecked towns who were worn out by their hard work. he response is prompt and hearty."

AS SHOULD HAVE BEEN WRITTEN BEFORE", one of violet's sisters whose name I won't mention here wroth wrote a lengthy description of what she and her sisters observed and heard after the battle. he and her sisters arived at Angelinian Agathia City i on the morning of the 28th of December or November Imean and although she and her sisters were on one of the relief trains returning to porot y Gale City, they at first not being known had hard work to get past the file s of soldiers at one of the depots while bording the train but identifying themselves they at last succeeded. she wrote in this fashion:

"The engineer who brought our traindown from Big girl Knool City declared he never wanted to see another battle field again if he could ha help it. A soldiercait in sitting in front of me on the coach coach in which I was r ding had fought in the two days of the battle with his men nearapart of the Big Girl Knool Red.

He told s that the assault of the enemy was so fierce that he felt sure he would ha e to kiss allhis men good be buebye that it seemed the line of troops he was ghting with could not holdout any longer but they being in general davidsonline divisions did hold on untill night approached, and showed the victorious enemy that they were still there. He did not even know th that do so many of his comrades had died in the battle. every wounded soldier and refugee on the train there were many women and children there that had lost some dear one, a husband, son, brother, uncle, father brother or other lovedones in the terr ble and disasterous battle, and were re ur returning forlorn and griefstricken, and some of them warned me and my sisters most vehemently to flee from Angelinia Agathia and seek shelter in some other part of the war that from what they see they could prove to us that the war was lost for god and all already. As the train neared Little girl Knool and also Topsy town I saw far in the distance and on many portions of the battle field many big fires raging as if the world was ablaze, xand I said to one of the soldiers near me:

"What terrible fire fires are raging out there, some of the fields of wreckage is burning or maybe the towns are going, put the battle do all that too!"

A soldier who was pacingup and down in the middle of the car stopped near my chair having heard me.

He then suddenly a came rightbeside me put his on a his hand on the back of the seat and turning around looked into my upturned face but he laughed.

"Sure they are big fires alright" he said" and don't you know what is burning over there?"

"No sir I do not". I answered.

"Well it's the bodies of slain soldiers. My wife has lost her father brother and all her go grown sons. And now my littlest childrenare crying for them--such little children. Why the tallest is not as high as the back of this chair or your seat." he laid his hand on the top" and the littleone was just beginning to talkshe called my name before I left for the army and now they are far away and the other who bore them. My wife is such a delic delicate tender little woman, always so easily frightened frightened and now she is home all alone and I'm the only survivor. If I do not surely survive this war she will surely be left all alone in this cruel world. And for you princesses I'd advise you flee before it is too late. I'll tell you honest and square f before heaven and earth that our cause will never win that Glandelinia has already won the war and we are totally crushed."

The soldier then laughed again and then began to walk up and down the isle.

"That's right" said an officer sitting on the seat on the opposite side of the car taking off his broad hat and let ing the sunlight shine on his strong hearted face. "He is surely right. We arelosing the war. Big girl Knool and other disasters prove it. If you don't believe it you'll soon see for yourselves. And we had to cremate all the bodies. We hate to do it but there are too many to waste time for burial in any way. We have burned over 1,000,000 soldiers do to day and to morrow we shall burn as many more. Yesterday we also buried bodies in log trenches, but the ground was frozen so hard that we had to stop burying the bodies, and we had to even give the Glandelinian prisoners who were digging the bodies in the river and other water holes and also quick sands an the like whiskey to give the courage to do the work. They carried over thousands of the bodies at each trip for one party of workers, all piledup as he high as the long wagons or sleighs sleighs could stand it, or the horses could pull, but there are so many bodies to be pickedup that it does look as if the very workers were bringing them back again as fast as they take themaway."

"My goodnesslook" said the soldier who was walking back and forth in the middle of the coach touching my houlderwith his trembling hand. "look there."

Before I expected what I or my sisters would be forced to see, or before I or they had even time to think, we hadto be foolish enough to look and saw not far from the railroad embankments a perfect sea of torn and mangled bodies whose uniforms showed that they belonged to both sides. A little further on we came to the small town of Topsy and near by a smallwood allburn and scared by the battle. the train was forced to stop, at Topsy in the hush of that still day. I and my sisters looked atone ofthe streets. The ground and streets were covered with snow whitened debris.

While the train was stopping so long I saw working soldiers and rebel risoners clu climbing over the windrows of wreckage and picking their way through immens immense heaps of rubbish looking for dead soldiers and here and in the far distance in any directions could be seen large columns of smoke.

The terrible sic e sickening oder of burning bodies almost overcame me and my sisters and it was all we could do to shut our teeth and take in the horrible view somehow, while wishing all to impatiently that the train would start and feeling like ordering the engineer to do so.

Outside this town the forlorn looking soldiers were ca mping on the snow covered ground, many clothed heavily/ lying stretched, or sitting out on the cold snow, the hediously, hediously blood stained and blood streaked snow. Those that saw and recognized e al saluted respectfully and some volunteered to e pal place us under their protection during our homward journey.

In the town at every street corner there were six guards and every one of these soldiers wore a fourty five calibre revolver on a two sides, and had two cartridge belts strapped around their waste, one for the revolvers and the other for the rifles.

Soon the train slowly started again. It was going into theheart of the city. I do not know what the names of all the streets are or were, or where the train was just then going. I simply could not help observing masses of rubbish which scarred the beautiful wide streets of the once beautiful little city.

I or my sisters could not bear to look at those awful piles of rubbish. There were things there that pri oduce very hearts to see. I even saw a babys shoe for instance, a little white shoe with a jauntily tassled lace, an ermans coat and a hat and any other things. Still we were tormented by the stench that came from the vast windrows of burning wreckage and the oder of so many burning bodies was overpowering.

Down the battlefield outside of this town most of the dead soldiers have been removed but it will not do for us to look too far out. As the train crawled along I was startled by seeing a group of evil looking soldiers in a small ungarded by ally, andone appeared dressed as a woman, and another as a priest. They were allbig and strong. I observed they were digging in a big heap of wreckage and when the A oalition soldiers on guard saw them and approached with leveled rifles the men turned evil glowering faces u on them. These wicked Glandelinian ghouls attempted toresist the soldiers and would have worsted them too but a minute there was great noise and excitement, and I and my sisters lookedagain and now the rascals running with a are a crowd of soldiers and citizens at their heels.The crowd readily caught them and would have lynched them but more soldiers came tied the hands of the re rascals and led them roughly through the streets with a whooping rabid rabble of men women and even children at their heels.It surely goes hard with these disguised rascals when caught looting dead bodies these days.These vandals as I heard later were shot dead by the soldiers and left lying in the streets streets like many dead mad dogs and no one would give them even a look.The abomination of a wars devastation reigns on every side.The big houses of the town are dis antled by shellfire, their windows blown out, and windows shattered and roofs torn away.The little houses are gone either completely disappeared as if they were made of cards and a giant hand which was tired of playing with them had swept them all off the table and then put them away, or they ar lying in windrows of a mouldering smoking timbers and kindling wood, covering no one knows what horrors left by the shell fire beneath.

The condition of the surviving parts of the christian army is most pitiful in the extreme.Here and there are new camps goingup.One section of the christian line looks like an old dragons jaw with few teeth protruding. The enemy forces must have fairly rushed through the christian line as flood waters do through the houses, in an irresistible avalanche of soldiery that carried all before them.The wonder is not that so little of the christian army is left to survive the battle but that there is any of it left at all.

Every section of of the sadly depleted christian army has its story, its history of misery, and human agony bravely endoured endured among the wounded after the battle.The many eye witnesses of countless numbers of deaths haveetalked to me and my sisters and told us their heart rending stories, and not one of them has ever told of a cowardly death.

The brave Red Cross Nurses met their own fate as did the soldiers while attending to what wounded they could under the severest fire, doing their work bravely and for the most part with the most astonishing calmness.

A nun who also risked her life attending to the wounded told me and my sisters that she and the nurses, and other nuns and and even priests went into the battle cornfields in the face of a severe shell fire and knelt and prayed over the dead, and did what they could for the wounded.As they did all this the enemy began to advance successfully and carry away the whole christian line with it, and later on when the battle was at its height they went over to were they had seen an officer feel feel fall but found nothing there but debris covering the spot.

Later on after the battleone of them discovered the officers body twisted in the branches of a near by tree twenty yards from the place where she had seen him fall.When he was taken down she recognised him by the uniform he wore and by the Rca Rosary Beads he had in his pockets and a pair of goal gonpulars she gave him as her own brother.The nun told me all this without a tear or a trace of the slightest emotion.No one seems to cry over the effects of this cruel and mighty battle.No one cries here.They are too heart broken to do so.

many of the survivors will stand before us and tell us the most hedious stores stories, stories that would turn the blood in the veins of the most hardened and cruel savage with unspeakable horror without the quiver of an eye eyelid.

An officer stood in front of us during the conclusion of the trip the next day and told me and my sisters how he had lost two officersout of his command and some of his best friends too.He went into minute particulars, told how his divisions had been formed and how much effort it cost to raise them, and how they were strengthed and made firm enough to fight in any battle. He told how the enemy charges had swept the all away with intolerable loss destroying one of his whole d divisions and how he had during the fiercest part of the battle received a new column to meet the attack of the victorious foe, and found one of his officer friends lying mortally wounded on a ravine behind the stoutest part of a tree, and how they had grasped each other hands and what they saidHe told us just how long his divisions had taken to be formed by recruits and other men, and why he was so fond of his troops, and how how hard he had tried to save one of them from ann h annihilation but finally I said;

"you have escaped from finury.You ought not to complain you'll get a new army.Anyhow its the fortunes of cruel war to lose so many men."

The officer stared at me and my sisters wity with blank and unseeing eyes.

"Why I did not come off so fortunate"he said"My father, brother, and my three sons were allkilled.The shock of the news first overthrew my wifes reason and in her ravings she killed her daughters mother and then herself. I thought you knew all about that.I don't talk so much about it.I can't" go crazy too.If I have to say about it I'll never take a glandelinian skunk a prisoner you can bet your boots." the hedious horrors of the results of the battle has benumbed every one who either was in it, or saw it.Nearly every one seemed to have lost a male relative in the battle."

Catherine Vivian or Angeline Vivian rather arived at her home with her own sisters and she alwalso had a most thrilling and trying time during the battle as she ex lained.She told her own story in a most wonderfully graphic way.

"I had with my sisters reached general Vivianas army from Angelinia Agagh Agathia the evening before the big conflict conflict to hold a nightly council with the general and his staff, whose headquarters is situated near Kittens Vinchorts.We were too far away at the time of the first conflict to witness the dreadful catastrophe at little girl Wood and Jennie Wren Town but we heard enough about it to realize that even in th if the conflict would resume the day after it would have a more fearfearful end and we were right.

What we went through on the next day was exciting and stirring enough.

The battleraged frightfully all over on hills and ridges besides along the roads and fields making the scene like roaring exploding and fiery infernoes and for a time there wasno such a she we could see nothing whatever or the ensueing results but even then we heard enough to know the battle was going to be lost.It was not untill after the noon hour of that 25th fay day of novenber that we heard and saw what was coming on and became fri h frightened over the whole change over the tide of battle.Vivianas army was already crushed his whole force driving terrible and retreating tward Beppo Lennin with two hundred generals down in killed and wounded and millions of men.Vivianannas army was already crushed and the enemy was advancing so successfully that it seemed as if it was no effort on their own part at all.Within our own view whole lines of troops unaccountably strong and w oldie solid had been crushed by the force and speed of the foes attack as as if they were were a gabelle.About 1:30.Oclock I told my sisters that we must make our our way to another portion of the battlefield about half a mile away or we would beconsulted in the tide of the disasterous defeat that was ensueing.The enemy had advanced over five miles in two hours strewing the battle field with seas of slain and wounded, and as I hurried on with my sisters, the very concussion of a distant explosion killed my horse and tore off my hat, and I was blinded for a time by the cloud of smoke as I counted my sisters here sitting on behind her.

Then as we continued on I turned my eyes to the westat our hearing a dreadful cyclone of yells and blasphemies and the like and crash and roar of rifles and for thedistance as far as we could see there was not a christian column standing their ground any where, every every one having been swept away away from their works, a great swarm or line was approaching our way, and the advancing enemy could be seen beyond through the fog haze of smoke and cloudy puffs of countless explosions.

How we ever reached the shelter of a woods five hundred yards away without being killed by so many exploding shell allaround above and before us we do not know know.I counted 15,678 bangs and booms and crumphs during that mad dash across the fields and probably saw as many small white eruptions of smoke earth debris, and clouds of snow.And every few minutes or seconds even it seemed we were almostumseated unseated by the concussions of the blasts and struck occasionally by blizzards of earth, snow and everything hurled at us by the nearest explosions.

The woods we were headed for containedpine trees and it seemed the amount of trees kept out the exploding shells to a considerable extent.We hurried into the woods and stayed there for half an hour and watched the roaring battle from there.At last a force of retreating christian troops swept past in a roaring yelling surge many of the soldiers taking shelter behind the trees in the woods and brin i bringing the persueing Glandolinians down like flies from the blows of a fly swapper among a large bunch at a time, but the mad yelling waves of victorious Vlandelinians came up with the shoirking roar of a Spirian Tearian Typhoon and broke and cut their way through the retreating columns and so fierce was the scene that we our selves had to make a mad dash to escape the rebel rifle fire, and the swarms of retreating troops.Then though expecting every minute to be swept to our deathdeaths, we because we were taunted by the blasphemies of the Vlandelinians we ourselves strove to rally the Nationals but the pressure of the foe attack was too strong, they couldn't withstand it if they wish to.All of them that could took post behind trees and wand rocks and made the woods like look like a forest fire with their discharge of rifles and brought the foe soldiers down like corns before the tornado but they could not hold there for enemy artillery came up and began to fairly mow down the trees like the hurricane does.How it ever happened I or my sisters can never tell but this and one other large christian column about two miles in extent were the only ones seen of thevonce immense National line before our own view.

As it was inconsurable numbers of soldiers were killed or wounded before our very eyes.After a time I felt faint from witnessing such a horrible scene and from whole too weak from fright and nausea to seek better shelter and ove almost smothered at times by the dense powder smoke and horrified at the terrific explosions and falling of the trees by tens per volley of rebel cannon I told my sisters that we better retreat with what remained of the column and not take the chances in these woods.
We then rode far to the rear and as we got elsewhere I and my sisters againwitnessed sights that I pray our Blessed Lord will never make us or any one else ever see again.Rushing pastour now hiding place were morw retreating men falling to their deaths in numbers greator than I could ever dare to count some crushed or mangled vy frightful explosions, men and officers went by, some sinking to the ground every secon , the rest dashing on I knew not where only to rally every few paces, whih showed that they were not retreating for fear of the enemy but only because they could not withstand the Glandelinian assault.I wanted to close my eyes but I could not. Men were blown blown to pieces by the score, you could see everything inside their bodies, human thrunks were hanging in trees, and everything else a sight that no one wishes to see, which of course gives us a full view of the power of the shellfire.
At every stunning crash of an explosion I and my sisters cried al oud e we even shrieked, and we also made an attempt to leave the shelter but we were now surroun ed by stunning earsplitting explosions, and all we could do was to remai remain whereswe were at any risk of being killed too, and here we had to watch the most terrible scenes we ever observed i e in our lives if we wished to do so or not.
I was partly blinded byteara but I could still see through the smoke haze,..
How it allended after our terrible experience when later rescued by Evans we knew not but we do remember that at some point not far away we observed some signals from a distant signal station but on account of the severity of the enemy gire fire we were not ableto t kemuch chance to answer though we did so and failed almost most disgracefully and after a almost fatal incident.
However we must have been dazed by that blast that killed all but general Evans or us, for later I was awakened with''we are saved Angeline'' ringing in my ears.when after the conflic t we felt we were well enough to get out of the horrible region we decided to do so at all costs.I thought of home and my parents and I wanted to telgrah telegra h to Angelinia Agathia just like so many other refugees that we were safe but we did not for fear the enemy would under stand it or get hold of the message and cause more trouble.
It was two days before we could get away from the city however and then it was in the most terrible confusion in the coming of so many wounded woldiers.Eight hundred eighty eight persons crowded on the train we h ppene ha penod to take for Angelinia Agathia.The day we left the remainder of the soldiers or the army rather was out in atrong force gettingrid of the dead and there were more fires cremating all the bodies than any one could ever count and the smoke of these blazes made the very air dark like the approachof a thnder storm.Very often we could hear the sharp reoprts of many shots especially of rifles and some ofpistols and the loud wails of many souls as they paid the penatly for the ir ghoulish operations.
Later I and my sisters saw the soldiers with their glistening rifles leve led at hundreds of men and saw them toppled forward dead.Oh my God it was terrible, but they surely had to shoot those terrible Glandelinian beasts for they were robbing the bodi s ofour own officers and even soldiers.
As we passed through the battlefield we again n and againas far as we could look saw many great rolling clouds of smoke rising in the air as if they were fromas many big buildings allafire.Upon the tops of flaming winrows of wreckage countless bodies of slain soldiers of both sides were being reduced to ashes.
It was best but the odor that came from the burning bodies was awful indeed. And it makes my heart ache with a sorrow never to be equaled as we had to witne witnessthe total downfall of general Vivianannas army.Do you wonder we dry cry like babees.No matter which way we looked we could see the many dead bodie of both sides their cold eyes gazing at us with staring intentness, nd the sights we have witnessed after the horrible massacres of children was nothing when compared to allthis.I closed my eyes and tried to keep my face away rom from the window of the car hoping I might e c escape for the moment the sig ta sights of such an extensive sea of bodies, but non, the moment I would open y eues eyes a ain right at the edge, or on the outside tracks, I would see the forms of many poor mangled soldiers some with bayonets sticking into each t other or bodies mangled beyond description horrible by shellfire.
Coming to Angelinia Agathia on the train I and my sisters read h the Angelinia Agathia news.Their st atements are absolutely mistaken.Away below the the actual numbe number.They say only I5,000,000 Abbieanian soldiers are dead. It willsurelybe more than 30,000,000.I know I am right.Every one in the army talks of 25,000,000 dead, and 28,000,000 but it will be thirty million at the very least, a most horrible number at that.Why such an awful war.and Hu My god God when will it e end.I believed the worst si hts I or my sisters ever witnes witnessed was the i numerable bodies drawn away to be dumped into the deep waters of the Aronburgs nun River.Trainsu pon trains of huge se sleighs, and many hundreds of wagons, sometimes thousands of them at one time were seen passing by in long lines loaded as full as possible.As fast as one long train of sleighs and wagonswere drawn ut of sight, another came along loaded just as the others had been.

''Oh those eyes of the dead soldiers.''
I crien that I might put them from my mind.Why do we have to have such a scourage like this for wa a war.And why such a war where scores of millions fall every time we have a battle.!Why does even Heaven permit it. what are we coming to.Why does this hell rage upon earth just for the cause of such wickednessIs i it that God is punishing us instead of the Glandelinians.!And god onlyknowwx the suffering I and my sisters went through during and after this horrible battle.And every one tells us that the war even now is being won by the Glandoldiens.I do not believe it and neither do my sistors.It's all acts of insanty, fol foolishness and nonsense.They are either becoming low down cowards or are discouraged.wicked n causes do not win.Many millions, yes many mi llions died in two days for a battle so disgracefully lost. andwe girls saw the whole disaster from start to finish. And because general viviananna lost the battle they all say we are losing the war.Let them come and prove it.''

THE GENERALS READ THEIR OWN OBITUARIES. TERRIBLE SCENES WITNESSED AT BIG GIRL KNOOL.
THE CONCENTRATION AT BI BEP O BEPPO L N LANSIN.

MOST OF ALL THE SOLDIERS of the now steadily reinforcing christian army had up to now since the disaster, had been fed and their wounded cared for daily nearBig Girl Knool and other points with the supplies which was still pupouring in from all parts of the Calverinian country and other Abbie-anhian states.The estimated cost of aid extended after the first aid and first week of suffering and disaster was about $4,000,000 to over $4,400,000 and at time n nearly fivemillion dollars.The great bulk of the aid went also to the Angelinians at work in the snow covered fields, cleaning up the battle debris, remaking encampments, repairing the damage caused by the recent big fire digging for so many bodies stillremaining so thickly as if it seemed an endless job to get rid of them, n and aiding the millione millions of injured.
No able bodied Glandelinian prisoners was allowed to escape any of the work wiether he needed aid for his own wounds also or not, though most of the prison wrs were injured more or less, and did nees aid.Even those who had to be forced towork at the pointof the bayonet bayonet recieved the same rations as those who volunteered their services.
This aid was giving in the form of all kids of tools and other things for the army, mechanincs engineers, and so on, lumber for those who wished to build barracks, ar my houses, the framwork of the lower parts for tents etc.
Heretofore practically every able bodied soldier, no matter who he was, prisoner or not had been made to work no matter hoe tedious the job was or how cold and stormy the weatherewas, and unless he did his chores, he got no suplies no b mattwr how bad he needed them.The soldiers of the National armiy armies got wagesupon a cash cash bases the wages being $2: and fifty cents a day besides rations. All were paid for the full time they worked.However the recieved only rations and some clothing which were given according to the number and needs of the prisoners regardless of the amount of work he accomplished. Since other supplies also began coming in they were added and even the Glandelinian recieved a pint of whiskey and other liquies ' liqours a day provided they derserved it by workingout all day lng in the cold of the winter.And this work of distributing to thenoedy of the army was conducted systematically.As fast as the goods arivee from the towns they were placed in the provisional army qu quarter master stores, or in the provision wagons, even in newly doconstructed tents, any place needed, from which the qua quater master sergrant sergeant, and his assistant took charge of them and they weee were takenen then to the supply tents in the different sections of the tents. gven the refugre refugees from the towns and villiages got something.All day long durinb those two weeks there were no motly crowds of needy soldiers around every one of thesectents or near and by thecwagon trai trains.Every applicant had to pass in full review before the quarter master sergeant before he recieved anything. One of the most remarkable things attending the terrible Big Girl Knool disaster was the strange fortitude of all theofficers and soldiers.T Their loss in relatives, friends, and military property in the battle had been so overwhelming that it seemed too much be to be expressed or to be let go at so little a sentiment without desires for re revenge on the enemy..and it had been so overwhelming that it was believed no one would ever recover from the blo under any conditions.And ywt no one showed any outward grief.

Two general who had not seen each other since the disasterous battle met in Main street of Big Girl Knoo/ Ko Knool city.

' How manymen did you lose out of your divisions?'' they asked by common impulse.

''I lost all my army and private property to the victorious enemy, but I and my division came through the battle alright.I only lost one thirdthe the number of my men.''

''I was not so fortunate'' said the other general.''Over three quarters of all of my whole four divisions and three corpswere destroyed and many of my best officers fell, those whom I can deped on more than any one else.''

Then there was an expression of deep sympathy from the other, but nothing approaching a tear from either.

''Our army is making god progress in reforming and building new camps''remarked the general whoselosses were heaviest with a pp pleasant smile.The other then gave a light answer, and passe passed on.The soldiers of the army had seen so much war horrors, and death and on every side desolation that they were or seemed to be temporilary hardened to it.The announcement of the loss of another friend, or a near relation, or a father or son meant little to a soldier or an officer who hadcseen the dead bodies of so many of his comrades buried, cremated, or hauled to the river by the sleight sleigh train road.No services could be attempted for so many dead, not even memorial services, only short prayers and the like was enough enough.

One of the few surviving Catholic Priests in vivianannas army said;

''It was impossible.Even every surviving priest and la lay man had to join in getting rid of dead bodies.It was an awful battle worst in fury and results than even the craziest man in the world would ever believe happened. I n don't expect there will be memorial services untill we recieve reinforcements of priests.The reason why our armies met such a crushing defeat is because most of our under generals were either toorash or did not belie e the Glandelinian army were able to whip us.''

The army was rapidly impr ving in all its conditions.Yet the smellfrom so many mounds, and windrows, and mountians of burning bodies was stronger ten days after the battle tragedy than that whidh came from the burning debris heaps containing bodies days before.

when all these heaps werecbeing burned, nd the wind carried the dense clouds of smoke over the Big Girl Knool City andother towns and villi ges, the odor was worst than that wh c which would afflict Chicago when all its stock yards would be afire at one including all other packers concerns tanneries and the like containing flesh meats and so on, even probably worse.Every available wagon, and sleigh in the army and those sent from the city had been at work.

Every general in the army talked confidentally of the future of a better and stronger ar my than ever, though many of the under officers, announced their intention of going away from the army altogether if they have to see it disband.

' I'm not afraid of another such a battle''said an officer''But I'm sick and tired of so many defeats.We are losing or seem to be losing the war itself rather than winning it.Our armies must win hereafterand not suffer such disgraceful disgraceful defeats.''

General Julio Callio returned from Angelinia Agathia City through porothy Gale from the battle stricken districts two weeks after the terrible conflict there.He had seen all what had occured throu h out it all and he said;

''I left Little Girl Knool night before last and then things in the neighborhood were in a most dreadful state.Little Girl Knool is about 20 miles distant, and the refugee wounded were still pouring in the direction of other towns and villiages in great numbers and many of them looked as if they had gones through hn Hades and escaned they were so covered with bloody bandages. All in the army they say had lost all they had.Colonel W.H. Zannacsina and his entire regiment were killed in the highest fury of the battle and it was reported that general Alainey was also killed as well as thirteen of his staff.Another general who was well no known in the city of Angelinia Agathia was also slain, this general also having been a priest and having preached many times from the pup pulpit of St Vincents Catholic Church on St Peters, near Thirty ninth Street.

Emperor Vivian at Angelinia Arathia,recieved a letter from Big Girl Knool, from Colonel general Francis ,ivianamna saying that about fiftoen hundred officers and generals all of all rank high or low lost their lives in the battle, and that fully IO,000 others were injured or disabled. One officer and a large number of his men were cop cooped up in a house surrounded by enemy soldiers and it collapsed after being struck by a shell and they all met death inthe debris.The brother of this officer was dumbfounded when he recieved the first information of the disasterous defeat of the christian army, n and the loss of his own brother, for he had had no idea whichis brother being in general vivian annas army.The surviving brother, who was the son of general Mic, Cantler was i was in the moboliz t Mobolization camp s at Dorothy Gale City with the mobolizing arkies at the time mobolizinarmies at the time and therefore did not know of the loss untill he had recieved the following letter from Little Girl Knool City:

LITTLE GIRL KNOOL.
DECEMBER 8TH.I9I3.
LITTLE GIRL KNOOL.
VIVIAN-ANNAS ARMY.

We have just recieved a messge in special tel telegrapg of your brother being killed in the battle, and of the fact that we cannot locate his body. He first had been in general ,ivian's army but was sent with a large division of troops to general vivianannas to reinforce him at Big Girl Knool w ho was then concentrating upon the fcounder the Manleys and the other traitor generals.The division which escaped being engaged on the s twenty fourth, was shattered on the second day of the battle, and the survivors were forced to recoilwhen the victorious foe began to rush forward.

All at once the immense surges of the enemy, the crazily yelling, exultan h exultant enemy came over all portions of the christian works like an irrs irrestible flood, driving all before them.The division alone tried to stand its ground, but when it was forced to recoil it was trapped for before it could retre t to safty the Angelinian and Abbieannian insurgents began to surround it and press upon it from allsides.It yet tried to retreat to a ravine but had gone a short distance, when it was so shot to pieces and pressed to the center of the field.The officer and some of his men were in a s all house, and a shelldemolished it, killed all its occupants a d destroyed a regiment 6 troops near by.Witnesses saw no one escape as it collasped.

We do not believe the bodies have yet been recovered.We have wired definite news regarding the bodies.but have heard nothing more.

GENERAL BENLIGAN.
LITTLE GIRL KNOOL.....''

On November 25th a certain portion of the battle was central near Rosa city.The raging fury of thebattle set in early in the morning and was raging with increased severity in the next few hours.The enemy attacked with the pressure of heavy cyclone rollers at every point of the battlefield, sweeping in upon the christian lines, and a strong cannon fire was tearing all before it. All of the Signal Stations were blown down.During this time portions of the christian line commenced falling back.At IO.A.M. the enemy rushed forward with wilder fury and the christian fire of rifles and cannon was beyond all description and not only tore down the rebel lines or shattered them as they rushed forward but demolished everything formed by Nature herself.By another half half hour the enemy began to make the most splendid success at all points, advancing like as if they were eeting no resistance at all, and men on both sides were falling, killed or wounded like rain in a torrent.

The violence of the attack, andthe full measure of the Glandelinian assault, continued to increasecarrying all before it.

Heavy seas of fresh christian troops were sent against the foe in fierce headlng counter attacks, but it was all in vain.''

A correspondent telegraphed as fol/ows the same day;;;;;;;;;;

''From all quarters of Big girlbKnool and vinicity came reports of great devastation wrought by the tremendous conflict of Nove- November 25th the outcome of the worst conflict in the war so far. So far sixty five brig ade brigades are reported destroyed., and IOO more being demolished.It seems entirely too great, too horrible, and toovimeasurable tovbe believed but think of it all how horrible and tremendous the co ld conflict had been. Count/ess numbers of lies had been lost so far.This terrible list of battle fatalities is due to the fact that most ofthe divisions, corps, Bigades and the like have borne the bruntof the enemy's main counter attacks, as the nature of the ground was poss poor, and they were badly and terribly exposed.Many whole brigades and all their commanders are even missing however, and it is feared the death toll may be greatly enlarged.General Labradors divisions has already sve suffered severely, all his columns are being driven back by the pressure of the enemy's attack which fact added to the enemy's severe artillery fire m k makes the conditu condition of the desperately strug gling christian armies pitiable in the extreme.
Of general Herdrude Belleiles army the whole of two brigades out of six have been destroyed with alltheir officers, and his men have fallen like snow flank flakes in a bil blix blizzard.Along his right over fifty other brigades have been battered, ten of them on his right being a total loss.General vivianias army had been wrecked, and driven tward the villiage of Boppo Lansin with terrific loss.The Corps of general Paul Paulis Marcus is badly demolished like a wrecked train, the eneral is disabled, and his army like a sadly - wrecked derelict in a storm tossed sea.
At thie point the battle raged with the greatest fury.
Twenty four unamed enerals were brought to the rear later that afternoon, their brigades eu equal in numbe number having been like foundering ships, buffeting an overwhelming storm off the West Indies.These generals were allseverely wounded.The officers under them stuck to their post but were forced to die with the destruction of their brigades.The seas of re el assailants shrieking tnei their blasphemies like a thousand hurricanes at once, were constantly sweeping back all portions of the christian line, and indeed portions of thr smashed up christian armies were as wellas off as the crew of a ship lashed about the rigging or bulwarks, while the heavy waves sweep the decks, and threaten to en u engulf them.
The many reports shows the enemy's fire, and headlng attacks must have done awful damage tothe christian ar mies.Too many officers and generals perished in the battle to be believed and also too many men to be counted in a ye ars time.It seemed many certain many divisions of the best fighting kindcould not escape the distaster when the whole of general vivianannas christian army the finest of the whole nation almost succumbed.''

Angelinia Aronburg head of the Society of the boy and girl scouts wrote of the situation of Big Girl Knool on December the 9th.::

''It will be utterly difficult to exaggerate the awful scenes, that meets visitors, curious seekers, and everyone who observe it everywhere.The results of a battle like this seems incredible.The situation could not be exaggerated as great as it is not under any conditions whatever.Probably the los of life willexceed any estimate that has been made.In t o those parts of the christian army were the demolition and the destruction wasthe greatest, the loss of life is beyond any power of or means to estimate and that there still must be co untless hundreds of bodies of slain soldiers under the deep now.At little Girl Knool f where the first blow of the battle was struck, n and whose neighborhood was swept clean of every National Force under wienstien, as if an immense irrestible cyclone h d had swept through, immense toweringwalls of debris and dead bodies and being burned.
It is awful.This does not seem to be a war.It seemes to be the murder of a whole world of nations, or every man in the world that is living so great is the terriblo number of dead.The story that will be told when this mountian of dead is b ri burned up and all the remaining dead removed, may l muli multiply the horrors of the fearful situation.As usual in great battle calamities many survivors probably all of them are dazed, probably as the result of the noise of the firing,and dreadful crash and roar of so many fearful explosions, and all the officers of every rank speak of their great losses, with an unatural calmness that would astonish those who do not understand it.I do believe inspite of all the efforts in getting rid of the dead, there is great danger of a dreadful war epidemic with the approach of summer.But the nervious strain upon the surviving army,cand the wounded as they co e come to realize the condition may be nearly as fatal.All talk of friends and relatives that are gone with tearless eyes, making no allusion to the awful loss oftheir military property.A professional officer who calle upon me this afternoon, a officer of splendid military bearing, and human sympathies, and also of good re finement, who wore a soiled lavander uniform apologized for his appearance and said in the most casual light hearted way;

''Excuse my unusually untidy appearance.I have just come in from directing the work in the burial and creation of the dead.''
But all these soldiers willsoon break down under this awful strain, and the Red Cross Socie Socities and others are glad of the force of strong competent workers which it has br ught brought brought to their relief.Other relief is comings rapidly as the crippled transportai transportations of the railroads and other transporation facilities and the enemy foes will permit.
No one no matter who he or she is, need fear after seeing the brave and manl manly way in which the soldiers of the crippled army are helping them, selves that too much outside aid be given.

Through incestigation which I accomplished, with the help of my own boy and girl scouts, and also by other efforts I found out that a great incident had occured one of the most peculiar incidents of the war not altogether.
The battle just passed raged in two immense sections. One was under general Concentinian Aronburg who usually or always calls himself Whilliamsberger Zimmermann.The other section was under generals vivianannas and Vivinia and Francis Hansonia and othwr generals.The armies under the latter gener ls through some ones blunder were torn to pieces, and routed clear from their works, driven one to Big Girl Knool and the other to the city of Beppo Lansin and to Rosa and To s' town where they are now being reinforced.But just the same those who have been writing such statements, and making such reports that it really is a great gli glorious and sweeping Glandelinian victory is either telling lies, or are exaggerating things.vivianannas army and that of his assistancts were of the most x section of the christian forces engaged in this fightiest of battles. But to come to the peculiar incident.while the enemy under other Glandelinian generals were driving back vivianana and Francis Hansonia tward the city of Kittens Riecherts and Big Girl Knool and also vivinia tward Beppo Lansin in an altogether different direction, Concentinian Aronburg had swunf his own armies forward by carri carfying all the heights, and smashing the main Glandelinian armies to atoms recapturing Jennie Wren Town and routing the Glandelinian army so dis gracefully that it is not possible for it to ever recover for months.
So w while the enemy was victorious at one portion of the battle field us Nationasl won in the other.One advanced upon the ene y successfully, and the enemy advanced upon the other christian army successfully.At least if this is not a realy real christian victory than it is a mystery.V v vivianannas armies were driven northward, and vivianias were driven southward tward Beppo Lansin and Jessica, while general Whilliamsberger Zimmermann drove Man leys armies northeastward and captured one quarter of it. As general Whilliamsberger Zimmermann is the main christian commandee of this army it can be evident that we won the battle and not the enemy.

And t o those who have made the astatements that I have overheard that the war already is lost to us christians must have either been drinking or just been escaped from the insane asylumns.The war is far from being over yet, i in fact it has only begun to my own view.. So as I believe to my own view of the situation the battle has not been an a christian defeat even though Vivianannas army and that of vivianias has been demolished.The main christian army won the battle, Big Girl Knool and other towns dow not fear need th to fear the enemy for the Glandelinians just not long ago concentrat ed at th the other towns are now gone, having retreated as a portion of Whilliamsberger Zimmermanns army is coming or swinging around upon them here and it is best for the non combatants to take heart, t do not become so dfearsome over nothing and return to their homes bec before the main fury of the winter sents in. Mr. Saxon
In reply to the question; What is most needed? I would sayThe most imm immediate needs are surgical dressings, the ordinary medical supplies, and delicacies for the sic a sick and wounded soldiers.''

Reported dead in the general roll call, their veryobituaries painted in Big Girl Knool and other papers, generals Francis Hansonia and Hindernine, were found on the afternoon of December I2th after having passed through most thrilling experience.These two generals were the important persons in search of whom their relatives from Doroth Gale City went to Big Girl Knool from the army, hav after having gone there first.General Francis Hansonia's

ex e experience i this disasterous battle was a most thrilling one but he was with H nderj hindernine in general concentinian Aronburgs army which he himself even said won its own part of the battle crushing general anley good and proper which therefore confirms Gertrude Angelines words.with him were general Hindernine and many others all on horseback watching the outcome of the battle in the distance, especially when the storming clandelinian assault broke. Seeing his long line giving way before the rebel assaulting columns he ordered his officers to go and rally it and went offhimself to bring the reser troops.His generals remained with the sa ging line of troops until the main force & the enemy tidal wave reached or struck it and then just as general Hansonia arived the whole line broke and gave way and the pressure of the foe attack was so fierce that nothing could be done to rally them just then.Seven times general Hansonia had his horse shot under him and fell only to be helpled onto another h Hindernine.thenapparently victorious clandelini n assaulting colu,ns columns crashed fiercely against his own recoiling christian line soldierson all sides of him were being shot to death by the thousand during the persuit, many more were taken prisoners but with grim tenaciousness of purpose the survivors of the line made dogged stands every few minutes hoping to hold the enemy back untill night fall.the two generals and all their staff alighted on fresh horses upon which they now rode throughout the entire remainder of the battle clinging always tothe hope that the troops would hold untill night fall or till general Concentinian Aronburg bringsup the rest of the Federal forces.General Hindernine also had been unhorsed severaltimes by shells, but the generals presence of mind always saved him.With his feet almost crushed and bleeding, hisuniform torn from his body and nearly exhausted the general was finally taken from his perilous situatio situat on situatio j situation where he had fallon several hours after the retreat started.So fierce was the firing and so terrific tte the many explosions of cartridges that the uniforms of his companions and thatof general Hansonia were so badly burned that they werealmost denuded of their clothing and uniforms.some of the other officers also being wounded were delirious.After the battle when the main forces coming tothe rescue swept the enemy out of ex istance completely along this portion of the line, the woundee generals were taken to the army hospital where they tossed in delirium untill a week after.General Hansonia lost three fourths of his bestofficers was him self seriously wounded and his divisionspowerful in number before were now fright fully depleted but had finally rallied and held helped the reinforcements destroy their very attackers like grain before the flames.

The terrible scenes and happenings in the city of Big Girl Knool, the great amount of damage done, and theunusually intense suffering of most of the people also there as a result of the recent battle were vividly portrayed in a letter from general Walter johnston Harrison of general Whilliamsberger Zimmermanns army to his sister and parents in Angelinia Agathia recieved by them on the IOth of Dec.
It ran as follows;

BIG GIRL KNOOL.
DEC. 9TH.I9I3
DEAR SI SI SISTER:
Mu h Much has been written and stated about the awful damage and of the disgraceful defeat suffered by general ivianana alone at Big Girl Knool and whose army had been saved from destruction by the enemy from the effect that Whillia msber Zimmermanns army had crushed and mangled the main clandelinian army and prevented tit from going to the rescue of those who had defeated vivianana.And I suppose things there are really as terrible so terrible that little thought is givie given to the ruined towns elsewhere.
But right here the damage and defeat of general Vivianannas army alone is so great that no one would believe it providing the fact that Concentinian Aronburg won a sweeping victory elsewhere of the same battle, and it seems incredible that the army so far seperated from Whillismsberger Zimmermanns main armycan everbe reformed again and the portion of the enemy which had won a portion of the conflict is between Vivianna and Concentinian Aronburg and as all communication is cut off general Whillismsber Zimmermann and also general Hanson and obert vivian do not know of ivannas dag danger.further more the suffering here is indeed the greatest I ever heard of many countlessscores of thousands of the woundee are here from the hellish battlefiel and the city and hundreds of all other towns near by or far offare taxed to their utmost limit to findplaces and room for all of the scores of millions of wounded christians.vivianannas total loss alone in the battle o is over fourty illion in killed and wounded and temillion in prisoners.
The morning and night after the battle the first unusually immense contingent legions arived.There were about eight hundred thousand,800,000, horribly mangled and wounded, and a more forlorn dejected and suffering lot of wounded never yet were brought together.The wounded were cared for in all hospitals and private and public houses and also the greater number of the others were assigned to every place possible and still they were coming in as if the whole world of people were wounded or disabled.But they all could not apparently quiet themselves unless so cold and fatigued, and weak from wounds, loss of sleep and want of food that they practically fell down completely exhausted.

Even the people roamed the streets looking for loved ones among the wounded soldiers giving even their own personal aid, men women and childrgn even doing all they can for the stricken and trying to encourage them. ll the wounded were hollow eyed, csunken cheeked and on the verge of utter despair and the god little childrencheered them.Yet it is terrible to realize how many families have been broken up by the battle.I have been forced to listen to harrowing tales untill I am actually sick and broken hearted myself.
The reports of allnewspapers have not been exaggerated oneiota.There is really nothingone can say willexpress the sit ation.When I arived at home from Big Girl Knool at th ten thirty oclock last night there was not a light in the city, and the surviving christian troops did not even make an fire s ever everything was in total darkness.It also had been reported on the train that of general ivianannas army alone army alone over I7,000,000 lost t their lives at the battle but this we believed at first to be a gross exaggeration.But now I have changed my mind entirely.I think it is a most conservative figure.Right after the battles roar had ceased I grouped my way through the darkness on the snow covered ground, stumbling over solitary bodies to my little headquarters and after no little difficulty succeeded in reaching y little room..U on lighting a match I found the place cleared of everything, the pa er was torn from the ceiling and was hanging in shreds from the walls.It was damp and cold.That night with the enemy so near as he was I took the chances to sleep there, and slept in a fairly dry bed in a tolerably dry but cold room as all the windows in the houseshad been blown out by the concussion of shellfire and the building was so cold that I was almost afraid to sleep there.there was not a single room in the building that had not been cleaned out or damaged by the enemy .
There is scarcely a structure in Big girl Knool City which escaped the concussion of the fierce battle.Every church lost its steeple, and all were damaged to a great extent..The streets for two or three days and even longer after afterwards were filled with debris,, telephone and other poles and wires huge piles of bricks, and timbers, the roofs nd and all kinds of miscellaneous things such a furnutire trees and galss from all the windows.
The accounts of this big battle disaster is in no ways at all exaggerated.
The burning windrows of dead bodies and wreckage it is declared is thirty to fourty feet high.The battle is let for vivianaan but not for the main main army under general Whin whilliamsberger Zimmermann.

TO the relief of Viviania and vivianana big new armies were concentration at Beppo Lansin and reinforcing them and it was reported that portion of Concentinian Aronburgs army was coming to reinf orce him also.

A lt letter came to violet and her sisters from general Concentinian Aron-Burgs Zimmermanns army master or what is called from Whilliamsberger Zimmermann and it ran as follows;

TO THE DEAR PRINCESSES OF ABBIEANNA: AT ANGELINIA AGATHIA:
Dear vivian Girls;
I recieved word through the Gemini that you had been informed constantly that the vast christian army at Big Girl Knool had been throghoutly and soundly thrashed at the battleiust past.It may have been so with the disaster know to have happened to general ivianannas army but not so with the main christian army under me and the two great vivian generals.
We have crushed Manley and hearing of h what had occured that vivianana and vivianin had been driven to Big Girl Knool and Beppo Lansin crushed and mangled I have immediately bringu bringing up portions of my army to relieve them.so do not believe all the tales that you hear that our side is losing the war, that the christian army has been badly beaten and so o on. I claim that for facts which I can under any conditions demanded prove, our armies have won the first most glorious victory of the war and have put anleys army in such a bad condition that it will be a long long while before he will ever be able to reform it again.

Your friend and loyal servant.
General Whilliamsberger Zimmermann proper true name;
Concentinian Aronburg.

ROBERT VIVIAN, AND HANSO N VIC VIVIAN.
MAIN AR Y AT BIG GIRL KNOOL."

NOT withe and the fact that vivianannas army was crushed there were facts founded on the situation that it was only ivianannna and ivinnia and their armies that had suffered the disgraceful defeats and terrible disasters. mperor Vivian himself on the same day recieved this message sent by telegraph from general Robert ivian himself;

"BIG GIRL KNOOL.
DECEMBER THIRTEENTH.
I9I3.
YOUR GRACIOUS MAJESTY.
EMPEROR VIVIAN OF ABBIEANNIA:
WHAT kind of a victory is this;
I, genera Hanson ivian and Concentinian Aronburg who calls himself Whillimsberger Zimmermann crush and almost destroy Manleys armies pitted against us, and the enemy under other rebel leaders crush and smash and almost destroy the two christian armies uder genera general ivianannna and vivianin and drive one upon Big Girl Knool and the other tward Beppo Lansin!
Whether it is a real christian victory or not I cannot really say for sure, but what ever it is it is the most queer m ending for a battle that I believe ever happened in any war before.
Nevertheless as Manleys main armies have fairly flown from the field we three claim that the battle ended graciously and gloriously in our favor and that it is not a disgraceful National defeat as it was at first stated in the many reports.
vivianannas lo ss in the battle was said to be about thirty million dead, and over I0,000,000 wounded many mortally and about five million prisoners. What our losses are you can es easily estimate when I say the total christian loss in this battle is 66,654,789..
What I have heard the Glandelinian loss is about I05,200,000 in killed and wounded and prisoners. If true it is surely a great loss indeed.
Hoping to hear from you soon in regard as to how you think the battle really turned out I am/

CHAPTER TWENTY NINE.
INCIDENTS AFTER THE BATTLE OF BIG GIRLKNOOL

On December the first the situation of the battle of Big Girlknool was almost laughable. It had been some time after that tremendous fray however and though in some good degrees despite the downfall of vivianannas christian army the main christian forces under the Vivians and Concentinian Aronburg and others were victorious beyond measure. Yet the Glandelinian army did not retreat since those two most bloodiest days of the war so far. It was because of a dreadful situation called the "lost division." That division had been during the battle caught by an infilading fire and its generals to avoid disaster were forced to surrender, and the christian army was in that position. There was a good reason why the Glandelinian army did not retreat, and which was the laughable situation. It even couldn't, and did not dare to if it cough and was afraid to for the christian generals were watching everything. Manley decided if he could have hit at some portion of the army at Beppo Lansin ten miles west of the big battlefield he may be able to retreat safely but his generals would not listen or follow to his plans and therefore he did not do anything.
It was an awful situation to be in, and he hardly had means with which to treat his countless numbers of wounded, and had been by the christian generals refused an armistrice in which to have time to gather up their own wounded and bury their dead, so that many Glandelinian wounded were either captured or perished miserably on the frightful battle field.
Through the accident too of their fall from the signal Station the vivian Girls however had not been so severely injured as at first believed though they had been wounded enough. On this day Jennie was herself again, and all were able again to go riding and do experiencing but each one of them had some member covered with medicinal smelling bandages. Timothy Groveton and some of the girlscouts had taken care of them in their plight and so had Penrod who had already returned to the christian lines in time to see the whole disaster to his sisters. They had decided again this time that never again would they allow any person, not only themselves, but any person to ever go up on a signal station during battle, no matter who it was, not even their own father. If possible they would banish signal stations entirely.
However there was one thing which worried them. They had not heard from their father since the battle and they didn't know whether he was wounded or not. They had lost hundreds of their boy and girlscouts because of the battle and especially many more because of the poisoned food too.
Though this was December the Foist, Calverinia had summer in Decemtat ecember because of the Forest fires, and the steady east winds caused by the fires.
The injuries recieved by violet and her sisters were not serious enough to hand icapp them probably because of the "possession angels" and before this were able to go about had their wise doctor permitted it. ut to day they could do so.
Violet that morning was the first to be aroused from sleep early in the morning by the melodious piping of sparrows in a tree near their room in the Military Base hospital for wounded loyal persons only. She opened her eyes, stretched herself luxi luxuriously, and then slowly got out of bed because of her wounded right arm, and went slowly to the open casement leaving her sisters sleep peacefully on. Her bedroom window of the basehospital looked out on the hospital camp of many of the countless number of christian wounded in which all the trees of the evergreen were at their darkest green. The Heavens which had never been blue since the terrific Calverinian Eastern Forest Forest conflagrations started were gloomier than usual in color to day, the sun was showing through as if it was a big blood red ball through a black sky but nevertheless despite this sob sombre pall everywhere birds were pouring out their songs of praise and welcome to another day, as if there had never been such fires or such a tremendous conflict just past. The air was smelly of buring pine which however did not smell just then unpleasant, and to violet the whole world seemed a strange created planet in which she had gone into after having died, without going to heaven good as she was. That is it seemed so though she had far from died, and was very much alive.
Violet drew a long breath, and her red lips parted in a sad smile. She felt that it was good to be alive, and not have had fal fatal injuries by her fall from the signal station whose fragments still stood high in the distance , and all nature yet did not seem to smile in spy sympathy but seemed to delight in her accident and that of her sisters. Penrod was here however to her comfort, and was still asleep in his own room and she had forbade the night before before for any one to awaken him without her desire. Yet there was hidden sadness in her heart as she slowly turned from the window to accomplish her dressing, and though usually dreadfully hungry at these hours of the morning she felt now that she surely could go without even a bite. She was ill.

Less than a quarter of an hour, loo ing her customary way, not too slim not not too stout, boyish, and graceful in a smart riding uniform coat and breeches which sometimes she had to wear, violet without disturbing her sisters or Penrod ran downstairs, unbolted the hall door, saluted and gave orders to her guards, and went out into the strange red ish sunlight. he said to one of the guards;

"I'm only going to a canter. Tell my sisters I'll be home soon."

"It was barely ~~fiijtttttt anxiously awaiting a reply to a letter I wrote to general Dangar a friend of fathers and of us, and one of the Chiefs of the Gemini department requesting of him to sent out his members and to have inquiries made near Henry Henrietta about dad, and to telegraph the result."

"I hope for your sake and mine too that the telegraphic reply will relieve our anxiety."said Penrod .

"I hope so too"said violet, and gave her shoulders a shrug as if throwing off her worries."I'm not going to mope in the meantime."She added with a smile."come along .I'll race you from here to that tree over there.One two---off."

She dug her spurs into St johns sides and the horse leaped forward.Penrod spurred his big gray mare and drew ahead, but he was heavier than Violet and that began to tell after a time.Therefore Violet speedily drew level passed him and reached the pine three lengths ahead of the gray. he laughed heartily over her shoulder as she brought her horse to a halt.Penrod grinned, but it was evident from the sudden roughty way in which he reined in his mount that something annoyed him.

"Sure Penrod dear you don't see something suspicious do you dear?"said violet as she slipped from the saddle to the ground, and patted her horses head.

"Yes I thought I saw something suspicious, and I hate to see any of the Glandelinians get the better over us at anything."Penrod admitted, as he too dismounted.."We will manmanage to win in the end.The glandelinians have often persecuted you but you have often been able to beat them."

"I have often noticed "said violet, "that's its awfully galling for you see see us interfered with and ill treated by the Glandelinians, even when we have spied on them?" queried violet."but we can't hope to pay the enemy in his own coin either, and yet we often do get away because you must understand that over any distence when I and my sisters have our own horses I and they should beat them any time.I'm not suggesting that we may be better riders than others, but weight counts, and Glandelinian soldiers on horses weigh far more than we do because they're men and we're little girls, which makes all the difference in the world to a horse."

"Yes weight tells--and youand your sisters are exceptionally fine little horsewomen."said Penrod proudly though for some reason he smiled ruefully again as he met her wistful glance.

"Hateful of me to gloat at the Glandelinians isn't it Penrod."laughed Violet."I suppose you'd love to see me capture a dozen Glandelinian soldiers single handed."

"No "Yes that would be the berries, but you're appearing so good to day I feel as if I could give you the kiss of an angel"answered Penrod slowly."you and your sisters have been all the world to me, and I love you for even conquering me in this horse race.You've made me love you and your sisters since the day I first saw you, and I'm always oh so scared when you do these adventures and I'm not around. As much as I love you though I was sadly reproachful when you and your sisters cane chanced such dangers on that sit signal station. and you told me you wouldn't go near any danger territory and here you're out here where a Gland elinian battery could blow us both into the air."

"Penrod dear don't talk nonsense"interrupted Violet, with a pretended frown and pout.

"I mean it"said Penrod with sudden holy passion--and there was no mistaken sound in his earnestness."I'm crazy with love for you and your dear sisters, Violet, and I won't be content untill things can chance so that danger cannot threaten you any more.I could .have and almost did faint that day that shell hit the signal station and blew you and your sisters to the ground.I thought sure and surely you were dead then.but you're different from any other little girl that I ever met and youre sisters are too, for you're angel possessed, and I feel sure that is why you were only injured and not severely either.You've conquered every danger and so did your sisters.I loved you and your sisters to distraction, mia cara, and want you and they for the Love of God and His Blessed Mother, to oh be so careful in the future.That was the worst danger you faced yet."

He let go of the bridle of his mare and made a sudden movement toward violet --so sudden that his gray shied, and finding herself free from restraint bolted off for home at a startled gallop.The incident gave violet time to recover herself for Penrods declaration of his grave worry over the experience of herself and her sisters on that signal station had taken her completely aback.

"How foolish of you Penrod dear."she exclaimed."Now you must mount my horse and I'll be doing the walking.."

"I mount your horse and you'll goo go afoot"said Penrod."Say you stay on your mount and Ill do the footing.but let's not converse about that. and Violet dear and your sisters too.Promise me not to trifle with those dangerous signal stations.They're not safe for even men soldiers to trifle with.Remember the losses among our child scouts and the narrow escape you and your sisters had.I want your promise.say that you will stay off from them in the future.say that you will."

"I'm sorry Penrod dear, but that was completely out of the question for me or my sisters to realize what the danger really was."answered Violet, the color coming and going in her fair face as she met his burning glance."I didn't believe we would come to such a dangerous ending at all, and I am quite sure I and my sisters never meant to give you any reason to have to see us go through such a dangerous stunt as that.It did not appear dangerous at all as no firing then was in that locality.I'm sorry but we didn't realize the fact. It's awfully nice of you to consider us that way, but had we felt sure it was so dangerous we would not have taken the risk.Be sure don't love danger no matter what it is, and don't want to be married to it either."

"I suppose you saw some disaster threatening the christian lines at the time and forgot the danger!"Penrod remarked, making a poor effort to conceal his chagrin for what he had seen at that dreadful time.

"Certainly there was"replied violet.

"Did you not realize the enemy would aim with guns at the station?"

"Not at all."replied violet, with a vigorious toss of her golden head, which caused some of her hair to loosen and come down in curls."I told you Penrod dear I or my sisters are not in love with any danger, and I doubt if we knew what we would have met up there, we'd have stayed nicely on the ground."

"You will surely face dreadful dangers yet I can feel it.you certainly will" exclaimed Penrod impetiously."you and your sisters have faced lots of perils in spite of yourselves.A girl as you, and then girls as your sisters I'm afraid were never intended to go through life without dreadful adventures.I won't let the enemy get the better of you for we love each other too much for that.but sister dear if you persist in your dangerous adventures, I warn you!!!!--"

"Penrod dear"plead ed Violet you are almost talking nonsense", stattttpted We mean what we say when we declare that we mostly run into danger because it is unseen.That is our worse trouble.If we see it we avoid it.I and my sisters were brought up in a different way from other little girls, and love for danger, and sentimentality for it play no part in our lives--as far as danger is concerned, but if we meet with it how are we going to escape it.O Honestly the idea of danger repells me and my sisters, bus but we cannot b be cowards.We would love to live our own lives and be mistress of our own holy destttttt destinies but the enemy won't let us.Let us forget about this Penrod dear, and let's be ready to go home."

"She held out her hand impulsively and Penrod grasped it warmly. Hevtoo He too bit his lips, and scowlingly hit his leggings with his riding riding crop.

"I can't forget"he saidafter a pause. "I don't want to forget, and I mean to find some means to conquer the enemy in a way that they'll be scared, so scared of me that the Glandelinians will leave you alone and stop firing on you and your sisters no matter what you do.I always get what I want--and I want your safty more than I have ever wanted anything in my life.I'll win safty for your sisters and you yet.I can't believe that a love so strong and fierce as mine can cause me to leave you in danger when it is my duty to put your enemies in their proper places. Of course you're brave little girls; therefore you win the admiration of the world, but I'll win safty for you if I have to destroy the enemy to do so.I'd sell my life for you and your sisters, and if--"

"Oh Penrod dear, do be sensible"interruped violet most pleadingly as she again swung herself in to the saddle."come on Penrods do lets go home.don't trot it either but ride in front of me."

Penrod would not though.He leaped on the horse behind her saying;

"If the enemy pops at us, you'll be behind and exposed.Nothing doing.I'm scared something will happen.A beaten enemy is extremely dangerous."

Then smiling into his face she dug her heels into St johns sides and cantered off, while Penrod gritted his teeth in angry mortification, and silently vowing that he would yet make everything absolutely safe for her and her sisters, and master her enemies.Penrod had an idea that all glandelinians from their wickedness were really cowards at heart, and could be broken in much the same way as horses.

"I'll put an end to their enemies if I have to devastate every Glandelinian camp."he said through set teeth..

Violet was indeed very grave and thoughtful as she rode homwith Penrod to the base hospital through the Company Street. Penrods outburst about the dangers she and her sisters had so often gone through, and his worry about them had disturbed her and set her wondering------not for the first time--If she and her sisters were indeed constituted from other girls..... There were countless girlscouts of her acquaints acquaintance who seemed also to regard her and her sisters as the most daring and reckless little devil dare heroines in the whole world. As the many of them were literally hungry for them to remain to remain safely in the Christian lines and also admired them most immensely, they delighted in seeing them, boasted of their conquests, and seemed to spend their lives in trying to make the camps so attractive so that violet, and her sisters would not leave so frequently. Penrod himself was not the first one by all means, who had in his love for them proposed to them to partly give up their dangerous career in the mistaken belief and hope that the love of her and her sisters for him and them, and their frank friendliness implied encouragement and a tacit readiness to accept their plans in that line. As every other little girl of Abbiemnia, violet and her sisters loved admiration, good as they are, but they could not understand why no many persons loved them so well as this, for even Penrod their brother, and their other two brave brothers loved them more than a lover read of in love novels loves his girl sweetheart, and yet they lovenly tried to have them stop their dangerous adventures and yet never stopped doing them themselves. Even Dangar for instance. What would he give if he could persuade violet and her sisters to remain safely in camp. Once violet said-

"If Father goes home and leaves the armies to be lead by some one else then we'll go home. But not before. It's our duty to be sharing the perils with him. What will the world believe."?

"I and my sisters should have been born boy boys"she mused to herself. "Of course dangerous adventures does not appeal to me, nor to my sisters, and the thought of being captured and mauled about and ill treated by Glandelinian soldiery as we have been is revolting. I and my own sisters want to go on living our own lives, and doing the things God Loves us to do, and the thought of being tied to an army and being forced to do daring deeds to help the armies whip these foes of our Blessed Lord is positively hateful. But there is no way out. I have often been scared during these adventures and so were my sisters but we can't get out. If we knew what would have happened on that gosh hanged signal station during the battle we would have stayed miles from it, but it appeared safe enough, and no firing was in that direction when we first mounted. Oh why can't men and boys be content to let us go on our duties as we believe it should be instead of wanting to interfere with us.

What are we to them that we should be loved and protected so. If the Angels who possess us, really protect us why need protection from others. We often escaped when it seemed impossible. I can't even forget when we were literally captured by glandelinians who at that instant would have slew us had not that lightning flash hit them all and killed them without injuring us and the horses. One man grabbed me once when I was nude, after coming out from a swim believing no body was there. He attempted to dig a long blade into my heart, and was struck by lightning instantly while he had me in his very arms and only he killed. Yet those who really love us, because they're afraid for our very safty spoil everything by interfering, and make me and my sisters feel that we're heartless when we refuse to give in to them. Yet they do dangerous stunts themselves and go where I would dare not to go."

She signed but not loudly, feeling that she should be sorry for those who believe that way instead of annoyed, and a minute later she and Penrod caught sight of his gray mare cantering stablewards some distance ahead and that made both her and him laugh of spite of themselves. Yet she understood how angry Penrod was at the Glandelinians, and understood too for often she read in his mine without his being conscious of it, that he was never [illegible] forgetting what Fred Lowden had done to Jennie, and the misery H Jennie's sorrow had caused her and her sisters, and that he was long, longing in his heart to get even. A smiling boysc out aidecamp ran forward to take charge of her horse as she reached the Base Hospital, and she and Penrod both gave him an answering smile, and paused to chat with him for a few minutes before entering the building for her breakfast. All the boy and girlscouts and the soldiers and the generals idolized violet, and her sisters, delighted though horrified at hearing about their daring escapades and experiences when prisoners of the Glandelinian enemy, and would do anything for them...

At the hospital entrance door, violet, and Penrod were met by her sisters and Janie Nannie who had come to see them and wouldn't be parted from them, a dear old friend, and who incidentally flattered herself that she looked after violet, and her sisters. 2.2.2.

"Oh how good it is that Penrod was with you after all."said joice anxiously but with relief in her tone. "We saw his horse go past here riderless. I and sisters were afraid he had been thrown and injured. Penrod dear you know you ride so recklessly and------"

"I wasn't thrown, therefore therefore dear sisters you have no cause for alarm" Penrod interposed. "While I was talking earnestly to sister violet my little angel flower my gray mare gave me the little slip and to prevent me from going home on foot she made me ride with her. She'll tell you about it at meal time. I'm glad that you're discharged from the hospital to day."

purple short coat and a beautiful yellow uniform dress.

"I don't want to butt in my dear Princesses"said Jannie after she had heard the story about penrods love and protestations" at I believe you would be well advised to consider your decision"and Jannie said"this too very gravely after violet had confided to her and her own sisters the truth about Penrods supposed to be accident, and told them about his proposal. "I understand Penrod your dearest brother here, and my hero too"he blushed" is a very masterful young young Prince, but he is very well informed, and intelligent he knows the enemy far more than you do as he always was with the enemy as "Adelde'ob" and I feel sure he sees the danger far more than you do for one fact."

"What is that fact!"said Jennie.

"He understands how to do many things from being accustomed, while you don't."

"He could learn us his ways with the enemy."put in joice.

"put I don't want to remain in the enemys lines in that dreadful length of time, it seems as if serving them for real."protested violet."He does understand it better than us. But we can't fool the enemy. It's our beauty and our way of carrying ourselves which we can disguise that betrays ys us."

"And we have no affection for such a way od of doing things. The idea of living so long within the Glandelinian army even to discover plenty of information is altogether too distasteful to me."

"My dear Princesses to me that se me quite unetural."exclaimed Jannie. "I'll tell you why you get discovered. At your duties you perform to do it too suddenly. At your time now you should think of going about the business as Penrod does, and surely with your angels possessing you you should be greatly successful. You were not brought up as little girls should be brought up--at least in my opinion; but dear Princesses you can't mean to tell me you have been so long working against the enemy without having made up some plan where you and Penrod could cooperate within the enemy lines together and do it the way he does. If you tried this you'll find out why general Manley really is afraid to retreat."

"I hope sisters dear"said Penrod, and he couldn't help putting a little haughty tone in his voice"That you're not afraid to attempt it that way."

"I do slightly fear to try it" confessed Joice. "I assure you I and my sisters are still heart whole, and I don't understand the dangerous mission of doing things as you do when you're "Adelde'ob, Ned Parker, and what other. We have not the experience and you have. Before you told violet or scolded her and us for getting ourselves into this mess because of our foolish blunder on that signal station. Now you propose this adventure, understanding we can't dare back out no matter how difficult or perilous it is. It is sloppy nonsense that is thought of to accomplish this. In one way what care we whether we find out why the enemy doesn't retreat ot not. If he's content to stay where he is we can stay here too and for once in our lives have a decent Christmas and enjoy it. This disaster even frustrated our purpose for that glorious glorious furlough we were going to have. Perhaps I and my sisters should have been born boys or else something ought to have given us the hearts of boys or probably cowards, instead that we have hearts braver than tigers or lions."

"Really my dear sister Joice you musn't talk like that" Violet objected appearing and looking shocked. "Our duty to our country and God in this holy Cause is an unusually sacred subject, and you may regret having made objections to Penrods proposition, when you would dare attempt something that way in the end. Really sisters dear it is quite time we turned our thoughts to submitting to Penrods proposal and have the adventure and trust to God's protection through the angels. I don't understand what to make of you and really you're the only one opposed. Jennie's the eldest and she could give us her decision and what she says we'll do."

"Lots of girls in any country are far different to day from whatthey were long time ago"Joice continued. "But if it is a duty then I do not see where we should need to decline the invitation, but violet you said that when Penrod met you out in the road this morning he bawled you out and us too because we were so careless to go up on that signal station and get hurt. That is nothing for danger in comparison to his own proposal is it."

"umph human nature remains the same." retorted Penrod. "I'm not compelling you to do as I proposed but it was just a requestfly proposition is not one third as dangerous as the foolish stunt on the signal station which hereafter I positively forbid any of you to do. One of these days my dear sisters, if you do not do as I advise you'll find yourselves hopelessly in peril, in spite of all your boasted independence in what you do or else a great number of Glandelinians will come along and simply sweep you and your sisters off your feet, and it will be a great miracle if you're ever saved. Follow my plans learn a lot of you r foes and your foes won't never be able to get the best of you. you need some adventures as I have had and it'll be a good experience I'll tell you and will learn you a lot to get the better of the Glandelinians and cause you and your sisters to be safe. even all my fight training may not save you in the end. As much more ability as I have even than any of you, and though as you have seen I can still single handed clean the seven u of you up as easy as spic I'm not at o all over confident. I even in spite of all that may mee t my match match among the Glandelinians. I believe in getting the best of them by scchemes and stealth and not by so much close fighting as you do."

"That is what Gerald Starring and his companions once threatened to do mop us up but he won't laughed Jennie. "I'd just love to meet the Glandelinians who would sweep me and my sisters off our feet, and cause us to be prisoners for good in spite of ourselves."

Almost as she finished, the door of the breakfast room opened and a girlscout entered the room with a wireless telegraph.

"For you Princesses" the girlscout said. "Military post master brought it him self and says "it is a wireless telegraph, transp transmitted by international wireless whatever that may mean, and please Princesses is there any answer.////!"

Violet who was nearest to the girlscout recieved the letter and tore open the envelope and her face paled as she read the message it contained. The letter or telegram was from some unknown spot and read;;;

"Officials report dear Princesses that your father left Christian army four or seven days ago to try and discover why the enemy could not or would not retreat after the battle here so disasterous to them. Scouts report Emperor Vivian lost near enemy lines. Feared captured or dead but reports say he is within foe lines. Sincere regrets. Making further inquiries. Gemini...."

"Thank you maam" said violet, quietly to the girlscout after reading the message a second time. "there is no answer."

"Violet dear is it bad news" Asked Joice anxiously, as the girlscout withdrew.

"It is from Rodney Graves head Supreme Person of the gemini in response to my letter." replied Violet steadily though t tears were welling in her eyes. "He reports that Lazy Daddy had been missing since the battle and is feared to be captured or dead, but relates he is within enemy lines but cannot be vouched. They cannot tell for sure whetner he is a prisoner or not."

"Violet" gasped her sisters, springing up and starting to whimper. "Papa dead. Oh my God. Oh my God."

"Don't" cried Penrod sharply. "I don't believe it. I don't believe Daddy is dead. I feel sure I should know by instinct if he were, as I told Radcliffe yhis morning and who went to the foe lines to try and trace him. He may be missing but I feel sure he is alive, and I'm going into the enemy lines to find him, and you little girls my sisters are coming with me as I proposed. There's no saying no now as I command it."

Joice rose from the table as Penrod spoke, the boy appearing very determined, while her and her sisters lovely faces were pale and sa set.

"Going into the enemys lines to find him!" repeated Jannie blankly., wringing her own hands in distress.

"Yes" said joice, with an emphatic nod. "The earth nor the enemy cannot have swallowed himup and he didn't fall in battle. I and my sisters shall leave for the Glandelinian army and shall not leave it or rest untill we have found Daddy and discovered what has become of him. In The enemy isn't going to get the best of us that way. If he's murdered by them, we'll assume full assumes full command then ourselves of our armies, and won't give the glandelinians any quarter the same he would do too if any harm came to us."

"But my dear Princesses, that isn't work for girls" protested Jannie with tears in her eyes and feeling this was going to be a parting bewteen her and the, them them." you e can't go into the enemy lines alone with Penrod even in search of your father and maybe too he wouldn't be there."

"Why not"? retorted Jennie. "I and my sisters have been within the foe lines often and understand how to do it. I helped my our country as well that way, and I understand what districts of the enemys lines my Father may have gone to find out what he is searching for. I and my sisters helped Father in his spying at Aurande callio before we became acquainted with you Jannie and did our duty just the same as any of the men. I helped even our brothers James and Germaine in their search for information. We can also speak and read English which no one among the enemy can and so can our brother Penrod and Gertrude Angeline. and have a smattering of some of the German dialect learned by us from Joe or George Zimmermann, and we can do most things any boy or man can do."

"Yes, yes I understand my dear Princesses" said Jannie agitatedly "but it was a different matter going with your father and big brothers and going alone. The enemy as you say can soon recognize you too. you must have some one with you besides Penrod to look after you and take care of you in such dangerous

Violet and her sisters could help smiling, and violet went round the table impulsively, and gave Jannie an affectionate hug.

"I see what you are driving at poor little Jannie" said violey. "If we go away you'll be left all alone and you'll be lonesome. but---"

"You don't mean that you and your sisters want me to come with you violet" Jannie exclaimed. "I assure you that the Glandelinian camps are no place for you and your sisters, but if you went me to come I can cover you as I am well acquainted with the Glandelinian armies and their ways, their camp life and can do everything to warn you if you are detected. I can if disguised take care of my self as I understand Glandelinian army and camp life, being a slave so long among them and if you and Penrod let me accompany you you'll have plenty of fun within the Glandelinian army and live there for a time as a part of it and the foe will never be the wiser."

"We wouldn't leave you behind" said violet. We understand what you can do. Penrod dear. Get everything in readiness. I'm going to the Military local office with a batch of telegrams and letters to military railroad shipping agents and other branches as well as to my fathers military officials."

"Everything is in readiness" "said Penrod." and so she and Penrod went together and helped her dispatch her wires and letters, and then he paused before her the color deepening in his ruddy face.

"I hope you are not offended with me Violet dear" he said in haste. "I was terribly in earnest, and perhaps too impetuous but oh it was so foolish to do that on that deadly Signal station. It was only the possession angels that preserved you as you had a two hundred foot fall. but if I said anything to offend you put it down to stress of feeling. but when I saw you and your sisters fall and lay so still on the ground it made me go into a faint."

Violet gazed at him in momentary bewildement. Truth to tell, the news from the Gemini about her father missing in the Glandelinian army had temporarily driven all recollection of Penrods slight scolding from her mind, and she did not immediately comprehend his meaning.

"Oh let's forget it Penrod dear" she said. "I don't remember you bawling me out. You dreamed that. you only sadly protested" now grasping his meaning.

"I'll come with you into the Glandelinian army disguised as a Glandelinian boyscout captian." Penrod volunteered. "It's a mans job Violet, and both I and Jannie being acquainted with the Glandelinians and their way can shield you and your sisters and can help you and care for you. but you'll have to actually serve in their scout troop in order to gain what you're after and that is revolting but can't be helped."

"Than you Penrod dear" but we did always manage to do these things alone and if we you were with us it may cause a suspicion, and yet good as we are we are conceited enough to imagine we q are capable of doing any job." responded violet decidedly.

"For God's sake let me come with you and your sisters Violet dear" Penrod pleaded. "I can speak english just as good as you and your sisters can. I can be useful to you. You understnad you should have your guardians with you where ever you go on such an expedition, and surely you could not have any one better than a brother who loves you."

"I can imagine nothing more embrassing or disasterous than being captured with a good little brother whom no matter how he loves us then cannot render us any assistance whatever." violet answered in matter of fact tones."

"If I promise not to do anything rash" began Penrod again but violet only shook her head.

"It wouldn't work Penrod dear" she said. "Apart from anything else you should or seem to forget that if we were captured with our brother and guardian together than in that state there would be no hope for us. We are wise Penrod and know. We hate to do it that way, but we tell you it is the wisest plan. Otherwise we won't go at all."

"You can overcome that difficulty by pretending that you are little ragamuffins and that I'm your ragamuffin brother." persisted Penrod.

"It don't do to try it that way" said Violet almost impatiently. "surely I have made that sufficiently sufficiently plain once before that'll get us caught more than any other way! don't think me or my sisters re rude or ungrateful, but probably we would not dare have to accompany us. We probably can take care of ourselves. It would be a very sad party parting of course, but I and my sisters have often traveled alone among these Glandelinians and are safe yet."

Penrod bit his underlip and frowned as he listened.

"If you won't let me accompany you and have you do as I do, I shall forcibly refuse to allow you to go then" he said decisively after a pause." and you under stood Father said you must obey me or Evans. "Perhaps I'll go myself then and if I succeed in finding father then things may turn out. but I am determined to find some way of proving my love to you and your sisters by refusing to let you go at all, if you don't yeild to my decision. your idea of doing is going to be extremely dangerous. and I am in the right for I know it." 236

"Oh dear Penrod I wish you wouldn't persist in talking in that strain."exclaimed Violet. Violet with a sigh."If you would be content to let us go an ahead-- I might accept your help in another way."

"And allow me to act as your escort?"

"No that is quite out of the question and------" At that moment came a sound of a voice in her right ear;

"Give in to him Violet for your safty and that of your sisters.He is wise and what you fear won't happen. If you don,t and go alone you,re done for for sure and will never see your brother Father or freedom again.You,ll be even murdered."

"Say"smiled Penrod "what did you say about getting murdered?"

"I didn't say it"laughed Violet"but I do believe you're right.But if you do really want to accompany us and mean what you say now about disguising as Adelefob, and suggest that you have Timothy Groveton start the search for my father from the east wing of Manleys camp and follow the trails my father is supposed to have have gone on, while we start from Federals camp and try to trace my father from that place.We might meet later at an appointed place compare notes if we have been succesful or unsuccessful and set out again seperately for the search. and we may make a fool of the enemy in the bargain."

"I agree"cried Penrod, and held out his hand."I want to help you, and the only reward I want from you is that you and your sisters follow my ways and come through the adventure successfully."

Splendid."exclaimed Violet returning his grip, and regarding him with sparkling eyes."Now you are talking like a true sportsman Penrod dear.Come along to our Base Hospital.I want to show you the maps of the district where we believe we will have the finest chance in the world to find pad, and we can discuss plans. "

Penrod had gone up very considerately in her estimation.Frank and honest as the day itself Violet had not the slightest and remotest suspicion or fear of treachery among the Glandelinian armies, but Penrod de did, and she would have been horrified and astonished even astounded could she have guessed what was in Penrods thoughts had she read his mind when she conversed with him. So dangerous was her purpose that had she not given in to him he would have used force and aurthority in preventing her and her sisters from going to their destruction.

Penrod watched her lovingly a little later as she and her sisters pored over maps spread out on the table of the Base Hospital library, while Violet pointed out to him and her sisters and Jannie routes their father might have followed.As he listened to her silvery voice, he was admiring again the perfection of the profile of her and her sisters, the creamy smoothness of her and her sisters skin and watching fascinated the gentle rise and fall of her bosom beneath her purple silken uniform jumper. The touch of her golden hair on his cheek as he bent his head close to hers ostensibly to study the maps, set his pulse trobbing throbbing, and he had to curb the wild desire to hug her in his arms then and there and smother her with kisses. But he understood this was no time for that now, they must hurry, even though she would have lovingly returned his embrace.No lover ever loved his sweetheart as Penrod loved his beautiful sisters, and a holy love it was too His primitive instinct was stirred, and he was not tyi thinking so much of the possibility of finding His and their Father alive in some remote part of the Glandelinian army, as of the possibility of protecting Violet and her sisters as an angel protects a righteous soul from the snares of the devil, for he believed their father was really safe, but could not communicate with them or wouldn't for some good reason.He was reflecting that the Glandelinian army was absolutely lawless, and therefore they needed as much protection as an angel could give them.Little did he know what was really going to be. it was he who was to have the first narrow escape of his own life.

As we all well know by this time Emperor Robert Vivian(always called general Vivian because he only wears a generals uniform in battle) had been one of the first first to try to recognize the cause of the reason why general Manleys vast armys so sorely beaten at the recent battle did not retreat, and had therefore determined to find by spying on the enemy some way to force the enemy to retreat in spite of himself for he recognized the importance of the situation discovered since the terrific conflict especially in the territory between Chamberlane and Kittens Pincherts, and to direct the attention of all his greatest generals to these causes of the recent "Lost Division, and a disaster to that part of the Glandelinian army, which made the defeat of Neopolen at Waterloo seem as a tremendous victory in comparison. Violet and her sisters had often assisted their own father in his investigations of various great Glandelinian armies, or th of the remarkable reasons why inthe face of odds sometimes the Glandelinians really won,, besides acting as his special spies and assisting him to compile his massive treatise on his military discoveries discoveries, had themselves by now become something of a great expert in many good ways ,on many situations.violet and her sisters though it h ain't mentioned here had explored the most dangerous and massive glandelinian armies connected by various armies further off, opposing by their schemes and spying efforts the clever intentions of Glandelinian generals or other predecessors of them. Violet and her sisters had marveled at the beauty however of the Glandelinian tents, their size and height, constructed of finely made canvass striped red yellow and blue with gray on their roofs, and on those of generals the designs so precisely cut that they had the appearance of having been formed by the most expert of artists.It had been a sacrifice on their part to sometimes spoil things by setting them on fire, th but then they couldn't need to care when these belonged to their worst enemies.Violet and her sisters had often thrilled at the thought th too that by their prayers some day may come when their wayward brother Germania Vivian may become repentant which would be a greater blessing to them than if they had stumbled on a chamber containing gold and jewels worth a fortune beyond the dreams of averice..

The Glandelinian encampments despite the danger of being within them had always fascinated Violet, and her sisters on their many previous visits, and Violet and her sisters found it still fascinating in a way,when after two hours of traveling, they reached its outtattpatt outer portions in search of the news of their father with Penrod being in the lead and directing them(how they were disguised is a secret here).Timothy Groveton in accordance with their agreement and direction had traveled disguised by another route to start his search from Manleys lines, where so great were the Glandelinian generals, that by their own sinful following they were hailed hailed as greater Divinities than God Himself., and Penrod, and his sisters had arranged to meet him near P. D Crossroads near Chamberlane before entering the Glandelinian army.

At Vitla Junction not far from these roads, Penrod who investigated found several American Archaeologists to his astonishment, astonishment who in Canda and the United States had known him well and whom he had previously met in Ano Arazona, and he was warmly and sympathically recieved.The news he gathered, however was far from encouraging encouraging, but as he came and introduced Violet and her sisters to them, and recieved the news themselves, they however refused to abandon the hope of finding their father alive, though the Americans tried to warn them not to be too over confident and enter the enemy lines unless they were sure it was safe.They didn't appear so pretty now however but plain as Penrod had certainly fixed up disguises for them that had astonish them to bewilderment. However Emperor Vivian, she learned that is Violet and her sisters learned, had fitted out an expedition to get within a portion of the shattered Glandelinian division under general Seitra Madre Del sur, in search of information he was wishing for, and also in the hope of finding some means with which to be able to force the enemy to a retreat, and catch them goo and heavy on the retreat.The Gemini who accompanied him had drifted back to their places two days after and when interrogated later, they reported that Emperor Vivian had gone off alone one day into the deeper section of the foe lines sending them home and they had never seen him again.They had sent other members to search for him, but could not find him anywhere but could not believe he was either injured or made a prisoner.

"I feel absolutely that father is still alive, and I nor my sisters are not going to despair of finding him."said Violet, after listening to the report.

"I sincerely trust your instinct is right, Princess, but you must understand and recognize that the odds odds odds against discovering your father either free or alive is tremendous. "said the American Archaeologist, who had told Penrod and his sisters the story."How could any one spend days within thex these terrible armies and yet live or remain free. But evidently he is not within the enemy lines for they have been searched twice most diligently by our friends, and your christian gemini spies without result.Many of these Glandelinian encampments are unapproachable, and practically impossible to enter and the chances are your father didn't have a chance to enter the foe lines unless he got in by a scheme or recieved help from disguised friends from within. and that is the only way now you and your sisters could get in.By inside help."

"It sure seems to be a forlorn hope, but were going in search of him." said Penrod determinedly."I have always gotten in and can again."

One of the scientists volunteered to accompany them, but Violet and her sisters sadly declined his offer with thanks saying"You're a" Foriegner sir" and a Christian. Foriegners who are Christians are worstly hated by the enemy than we are, and that would cause the expedition to be greatly more dangerous. But there is one way you can help us.You can fit out our expedition."

"I can do that immediately"said the Scientists,"and their hopes arose when he succeeded in enlisting the services of some of the better hearted Glandelinian soldiery, who though faithful in their cause, didn't believed in hurting children of christians or even abhorred the idea, and who too didn't suspect who Penrod or Violet and her sisters were.Their preparations at last completed,Penrod set out with his sisters to follow tward the main Glandelinian encampments their guides having the pass and counter signs.Their way led along and through a sort of line format, which extended for over five hundred miles north from here.

Most of these woods as north had never been penetrated and probably, never be and probably never will be, but south of here the woods were thinner and had an end, and yet Penrod and Violet and her sisters were the first of all persons and children who had ever gone on such a journey--a venture which called for a superhuman courage and endurance of a high order, for these woods were in the path of a "savage" forest fire moving then 7 miles an hour. They were sweltered by untimely hear from eastern winds. It seemed as if the guides had deliberately selected the most difficult routes toward the foe camps--but the guides guides were following the way Penrod had decided to go by--despite the fact that his sisters had been slightly against it. But he had said it is the only way for him to do it safely and carefully. He understood where the foe lines can be entered without being investigated, and where entrance or approach was death. Often Violet and her sisters needed all their nerve to ride their horses over half worn out old wooden bridges on a path barely a yard wide, where a false step would have meant a fall of a hundred feet into a stream below full of a quicksands impossible for any one to be even rescued from. It would have been a horrible death ine indeed. However the Glandelinians began to complain after a time. One of them was suddenly shot by a lurking christian ambush scout and died, Violet and her sisters were fired on by others who thought they were Glandelinian child scout foes, and Penrod was slightly wounded in the arm, and this though they resisted by an answering fire, scared the others, who began to converse about evil spirits being less dangerous than christian dogs and to beg Penrod and Violet, and her sisters to turn back. Only by alternate coaxing and threatening could Penrod or Violet and her sisters induce them to proceed. Violet herself then in the lead was armed with two automatic pistols, and she said she would shoot any man who would attempt to mutiny or desert. And she said it with such force, and was so backed with determination by Penrod and her sisters, and they looked so determined that the glandelinians quailed before her, and carried on..... But they muttered among themselves that these foolish little "Glandelinian Girlscouts" and their boy companion would be seized by the "Christian Dogs" who had slew many pers ons on ambush before, and their fears for themselves increased obviously as at last they neared a small valley inn the woods some distance yet from the Glandelinian encampments. It was a queer but beautiful little verdant valley, now dusty and mysterious but a veritable beauty and through it ran a large and beautiful stream of water. On the further side there was a some distance ahead but within plain view, an enormous city of beautifully striped tents with gray tops seeming to shut in the place and bar all further progress for any one suspected to be christians.

"The great and mighty Glandelinian encampemtn lies there" grunted the guide in response to Penrods question, though he said again which words startled the Vivian girls "This valley is the place of the dead. It's entire floor is all dangerous peat bog and dangerous and impossible to cross anywhere. We'll have to go far around."

"Why is it so far around as that?" demanded Violet addressing the guide.

The soldier humped his shoulder and made vague gesture.

"It is a chosen place" he answered readily enough. "Our generals placed camps there before this dangerous valley so that Christian dog armies can't cannot surprise us in an assault here. The valley floor appears solid enough enough, but it is covered only by a very thin crust of dry ground which would not support the weight of a cat. An evil valley where no one who tries to cross will ever return."

"But how did you get here if you cannot cross that valley." Demanded Penrod sharply, noticing the mans expression. "Are you afraid of something that does not frighten me or my girl companions."

"I can lead you through a secret way, but which no one following me not can go" said the guide. "Follow me but don't travel too close to the edge of the valley. A misstep and you're in."

"I hope" thought Penrod to himself "That Father had not tried to go across that treacherous valley presumely to attempt to explore that Glandelinian camp and had got caught and perished. If so then the bog had captured him as it would doubtless do to others who dared to venture upon its unsound ground."

"He would not be that foolish" said Violet reading his thought. "I believe--" but she started violently and so did her sisters and Penrod as the guide at that moment halted with a shrill cry of alarm and pointed down toward a clearing in the woods.

"See there is a party of our own comrades waiting for us" he exclaimed, and Violet, and her sisters gazing in the direction indicated,, saw figures moving about. Hurriedly Violet, herself who was in the advance unslung her binoculars or field glasses raised them to her eyes, and a few moments later cried aloud in relief and amusement.

"It is my friend Francis Omaria" he cried (Timothy Groveton who for the duty had changed his name) "He and his guides have reached the woods before us. Cannot you tell the difference between a friend and a foe!"

Through her glasses she recognized Timothy Groveton despite his cleverly made disguise,, evidently engaged in directing a co crowd of some persons to pitch as it seemed a camp, and the sight surprised and delighted her and her sisters, but Penrod was somewhat doubtful until untill he had seen through his own field glasses. He recover her announcement as d seemed to dispel the fears of her guides, who showed no further reluctance to follow her in that direction and that was some distance beyond the dangerous valley. Presently those in that sector of the woods caught sigh of Penrod and Violet and her sisters, and from a distance Violet and her sisters saw them pointing and gestulating, saw the boy leader in their midst raise his his filed field glasses to his eyes, then wave his hands excitedly above his head, and start off at a run to meet them.

Violet and her sisters laughed aloud, and their blue eyes were sparkling with joy and pleasure and their lips parted with a smile as they urged their horses down the steep rough path, and now led by Penrod rode fora forward through the woods to greet Timothy Groveton.

"Princesses of god" cried Timothy breathlessly, as Violet was the first to reach him, and before Violet or even her sisters realized what was happening, the stout strong boy to even Penrods surprise had lifted her bodily out of the saddle and was holding her crushed close against his breast, while he kissed her repeatedly. Though she did not object nor did her sisters or Penrod the hot colour crimsoned violets face instantly, but she had to cry out in protest that he was holding her too tightly. Never since she had ever been embraced by any body had anybody embraced her so tightly, and she felt somehow surprised and as she got free she said-

"Timothy how could you. You could have crushed me. you're arms are too strong."

"Why Violet dear," laughed Penrod surely you're not going to be a prude here in the wilds, and grudge such a good boyscout friend of yours a few welcoming kisses and a few hugs."

"No" laughed Violet "but he could have crushed me." He's too strong.

"I am so delighted to see you and your sisters" exclaimed Timothy with a exultant laugh "that I hardly understood what I was doing or did not realize my own strength. Oh my dear good little Princesses, little angels of God in disguise but it is good to see you again."

He then caught Joice's hands and shook them heartily afraid to embrace them after Violet for fear of his untimely strength, and Violet felt that she would seem foolish and prudish if she felt offended because of Tims too strong an embrace.. After all" she reflected, Timothy Groveton was half Abbiennian and half angel himself, and probably could not help being too "Squeezing". However she and her sisters were more than pleased to see him--as they would have been pleased to see any christian after traversing a territory infested by unseen dangers. So Violet stifled her resentment for such a tight embrace which was not really meant and smiled.

Each had a hundred questions to demand of the other. Timothy explained that he had spent some time close to the Glandelinian army endeavoring without entering to obtain definite information as to the route believed followed by the Emperor on the expedition from which the latter had never returned, but with little result. Eventually he had joi journe t journeyed by the International railway of Calverinia state to this sector at a location he and Penrod had arranged arranged to meet on the time and date and which they had done somewhat ahead of time. At this spot more by good luck than anything else he had fallen in with a runaway child slave disguised as a glandelinian boyscout, who remembered seeing Emperor Vivian, and who had accompanied him on some expedition, but who had lost sight of him afterwards. This child slave had told Tim of the route he believed Emperor Vivian had intented intended to follow and had asserted that his followers had told him his objective was the part of the Glandelinian army in this very location near the Peat Bog valley.

Thereupon Tim had fitted out an expedition at the north of Hanleys army and eventually reached this valley from the southwest, whereas Violet and her sisters and Penrod had approached it through the woods from the east...

"This peat bog valley "Or Devils pit" as it is variously called seems as if it would defy any attempt to cross it" said Tim after a while. "I have been been down at the edge of the valley but have not found any place over which one might cross without any reasonable hope of getting over without going down in the mire."

"Yet my escort say they saw a man resembling my father try to cross this bog and did succeed, so we must find a way." declared Violet gazing down at the dangerously valley the middle of which appeared as a very heavy brown en brownish mire. There is a sort of prediction that a great portion of the enemy army is beyond this valley, but my guide says even if a great assaulting wave of troops tried to cross this valley they would all be swallowed up. I expect this is what attracted my father, and possibly other spies before him to this dangerous forlorn spot. We must get over to that camp somehow Tim and my guide said he would lead us [illegible] without needing to cross the impossible valley.

somewhere within those encampments our father may be.I understand it seems absurd to hope to find him alive or even free if not dead but if he is a prisoner we can rest easy for we will find a way to free him for I know my sisters and Pen rod are not going to desp ire."

"We can discuss better plans to morrow dear Princesses"Tim responded."Mean while you are going to enjoy a rest and a change.My big tent is all fixed up and there's a folding bath in readiness, just as if I had been expecting you Pen rod and your sisters,"

"I suppose you mean we appear as if we needed a good washing up, and I'm sure you're right,laughed Jennie."We have gone short of water since we started, and a bath will be a real luxury.We have not had our clothes off sin ce the dreadful battle started, and we understand we must appear a fright."

"You and your sisters couldn't appear frightful if you tried"responded Pen rod with a glance that made Jennie a little uneasy."Never say those things about yiu yourself Jennie.It hurts me and I don't like it. It ain't lady like."

"Since you didn't bring one along my tent and everything is at your disposal" said Tim."Have your traps and everything you need brought into it, and get yourselves as comfortable as poss ible."

Violet, and her sisters thanked him, and soon afterwards she and her sisters were were enjoying the luxury of a bath and a change of disguise garments. It was a relief to change from riding breeches and boots into a dress and jumper again, and to feel they need not need to be on the alert every moment with pe s pistol at the ready lest her guides should rebel.It would too be good to be able to sleep for one night free from the haunting fear of the guides discovering who they really were and of being murdered or deserted,they thought, as they made their toilet.... Refreshed and radient, they went out to find Tim and Pen rod superintending the cooking of the evening meal; andthettidantant and their own guides chattering to a group of Tims followers some distance away around another fire.

"Ah now sisters dear, you are indeed the little angels of Heaven I see in my dreams."exclaimed Pen rod his bronze face lighting up(not down) and his blue eyes glowing with love and admiration at sight of his sisters ."You are getting more bewitchingly beautiful than ever despite your disguise.I hope the guides won't get suspicious."

"Thank you my dear gracious Prince of God but I and my sisters would rather have something to eat than compliments"said Hettie"Though she thought to herself - "He's more of an angel that we are"Then she added"We're starving."

"So you are not"laughed Pen rod.""ot when you're with me you ain't.Supper is ready and you shall eat with your sisters as much as you can in comfort.You may have noticed that Tim our dear friend travels in style with a good number of folding seats and a good size collaspable table, and a big portable bath. I'm afraid h he don't believe in tobogning it more than nece necessary."

"Truly tim dear"said Violet in laughing tones"You have great possession s"

"No I have not" he answered."They're all for you."

The late December evening light was failing rapidly and it was close to five in the evening and nearly night when Violet, and her sisters sat down in the big tent to the evening meal.The lantern placed on the table between Violet and her sisters cast odd lights and shadows on the handsome face of both boys one who was their host, and it seemed to the Princesses as if it made the eyes of both boys to glow with an almost inatural brilliance. Violet, and her sisters were very hungry,,,, and they did justice to the fare provided, and when the meal was over they accepted some plum drops candy and lounged luxuriously in the big camp bench.Then for some time they and the two boys sat in conversation exchanging experiences.They conversed of home, and recalled the glorious spring morning in Angelinia Agatnia, when before the war Pen rod himself had been stolen from his father and them..

"It was wonderful of meeting you here Tim my old boy, and I can't tell how glad I or my sisters are."said Pen rod,after a time."We were beginning to feel a little afraid of our Glandelinian guides and escort deserting and leaving us to our fate because of fear of Christian ambus ambushcade. you don't know how good it.is to hear your voice, and to see a real friend again."

"I understand how good it is to see you again Princesses and to listen to your dear voices since that disaster at the signal station."responded Tim."I hoped you might recover and that we would meet somewhere in this region, and you have been constantly in my thoughts.I feel it was fated by God--predurined--that we should come together to night.You and your sisters needed me and I was longing for you.I'm glad your loving brother is here too for I had also longed for him."

Pen rod had sat between Jennie and Violet and his expression was so ardent and lovable that the two little girls could not help feeling blushful but happy des pite the danger of the adventure they had started upon. Joice had drawn from her chair.

"So we are all pleased"he said."It is good to know that I and my sisters and dear Pen rod shall have your help in the most difficult part of our duties. To morrow we must start to survey the Glandelinian camp, and decide upon the best way of conducting the search for our dearest father.Now I for one want to go to bed.I'm very tired and sleepy.Good night Tim du Dear."

She held out her hand, and Tim who had risen to his feet clasped it tightly and at a wink from Pen rod in his own holy love drew her toward her as if to kiss her.. his blue eyes were aflame with holy ardour and desire, and his whole expression surprised Joice, who though not resisting said;

"Please don't do it Timothy I'm not so worthy of it. You are worthy more than we are, and have done more for us than we have done for you."

"Why should I let go and reject such a holy opportunity of teaching you the meaning of holy love between me and your sisters and Pen rod."he responded said only and hastily."Don't say you are unworthy for you're unworthy of no one. very one of us boy scouts in our beautiful commands love you and your sisters you need our assistance, and you must surely understand you have done more for us than you believe, that you are the darlings of the nation worthy of our love--and to night;;"

"Timmy dear, stop stop I don't really deserve it"interrupted Joice breathlessly but it was seen she made to attempt enough to get free from his clasp and some of her sisters smiled or laughed."Oh please Tim you are more worthy than we are.Let us go to bed. Embrace and kiss my sisters if you wish but I don't deserve it.Let me go."

"I will after you for I can't let you go"cried Tim passionately; drawing poor happy Joice closer to him and flinging his arm around her waist."You have always been starving for the love of everybody, you and your sisters, and have met sorrows and disasters instead, and you have been craving for joy, happiness and the love of everybody who should love you and your sisters.It is foolish to resist our holy love for each other now, and it was fated by God that we should meet to night.Here in the wilderness we can fullfulfill our holy destiny.We can for once to night cause this to be our eden.We Abbieannian boys and girls too have been crazy with love for you and your darling sisters"he continued and you have done for us what you have forgotten.Here we are as good little brothers and sisters and as one.I swore I'd pull you and your sisters through all dangers if I have to destroy every Glandelinian fool that trys to interfere with us--and to night I'm going to kiss and hug you and your dear sisters a very good happy good night."

His sinewy arm tightened around Joice but gently as she spoke pressing her and then her sisters in turn against his breastst breast, despite their protest ations of not deserving it and then being done so by Pen rod longer.

Pen rod was just then hugging Jennie in the flame of his holy passion for her when she suddenly screamed;

"Pen rod for God's sake let me go"I hear something awfully strange outside."

He had forced her head back and was kissing her on the mouth and throat as she screames screamed this.

For practically the first time in her life Violet and her sisters seemed to understand the feeling of fear.They were assaulting by a pack of furious Glandelinians who had been secretly betrayed to them by the guides, and they all the nine of them fought desperately to escape from being captured understanding they were fighting for something more precious than life, and Violet and her sisters screamed wildly as they struggled, cutting down a foe, shooting then as fast as they could fire in the vain hope that some friends in the woods hearing the sound of conflict might come to their rescue.

Despite their strength the Gland,elinian assailants were finding it difficult to try and capture the nine, for Violet and her sisters were no weaklings and had learned from Pen rod some of the arts of fighting and self defense. There were a full regiment of Gland elinians against them, but their numbers dwindled rapidly before their fire, and before the fire of Pen rod.Most of the children seeing a chance to escape rushed to the rear, but a Glandelinian soldier got into the tent and made for Pen rod.They swayed against the table as they struggled overturning it, and the lamp was sent flying and was extinguished.At the same moment by a dexterious movement Pen rod succeeded in freeing himself from the Gland elinian soldiers grip hitting him on the head with a rifle butt and leaped through the flap of the tent into the open.

Two glandelinians running up sprang after her, but he crashed the rifle butt against their legs, and they fell with a crash.Before other soldiers could come up Pen rod was thirty orfourty yards away running as if he was a frightened hare fleeing from a greyhound.

Forgetting themselves Violet, and her sisters and the two boys ran blindly, down the slope of the valley headless of direction, head heedless of the bog unable to see which way they were going for the night was moonless and dark. they even stepped upon the treacherous ground of the valley, valley but in their excitement they went so fast the crust had no time to open up under their feet, and to the rage and surprise of the glandelinians they got safely across except Nettie, who suddenly broke through a crust, but three of her sisters from the safe side grasped her by the hands and had her out before she went down so far as to be beyond rescue. Suddenly then they found their progress barred by a sheer wall of slope on the other side, and realized they had reached the steeper side of the valley. They heard the sounds of exciting shouts behind them, the sound of running feet on the ground above the bog, and in sheer panic and esperation for fear they would open fire they began to try to climb up the almost perpendicular face of the cliff. Their breath was coming and going in sobbing gasps and their hearts were throbbing as if they would burst as they began to climb. They had happened upon a place where the valley side shelved and they scrambled up recklessly---up---up-. Violet tripped and fell at last and Joice grasped her, and only by clinging desperately to her hand did she manage to be saved by others coming to her rescue otherwise she would have gone slithering and hurl hurtling down into the valley again and surely go into the bog. Calc

Glancing down as Jennie and Joice helped her to scramble to her feet, she she the reflection of lights, and heard the Glandelinians on the opposite wall shouting, swearing and firing but blindly. These sounds only served to inspite inspire them with fresh terror. Heedless of danger, they began to climb desperately and recklessly again, scrambling over stones and sending a miniature avalanche of small stones clattering down the slope into the bog--and thus betraying their whereabouts. She heard the Glandelinians shout again this time trying to attract the glandelinians in the camp on the other side, but the camp was too far for its members to hear anything. A few minutes later they saw a light a fire signal light appear some distance beyond them, and understood they were trying to amuse those in the camp beyond. Again violet stumbled and fell, and when helped by her sisters she arose and went and blundered on once more, they found they were on comparatively level ground, and they surmised they had chanced upon a small save or fissaure or tunnel in the side of the high hank. Grasping hold of hands so that no one would be lost they grouped their way forward for a little distance through the inky darkness, then sat down, exhausted, praying desperately that the glandelinians if they did come around would not find their hiding place. Presently however, they heard the sound of voices from above as if they were coming down by means of ropes, and to their excited imagination it seemed that they were close at hand, and a sentence being heard from one of them saying- "We'll throw them into the bog if we catch them" caused them to give a terrified gasp, and they still holding hands leaped up and advanced further into the gloom of the tunnel, which developed into a sort of siz zig tunnel in which the panic stricken girls and two boys were barely able to stand upright, but still they struggled on, although their strength was spent, and they were on the verge of collaspe. The tunnel became still narrower, the floor of it slopping or sloping steeply, and suddenly violet found herself slipping. She didn't dare let go of her sister nearest her even though she still holding her hand clutched at the walls of the tunnel in an effort to recover herself, but the ground seemed to give way beneath her. A breathless scream burst from her lips as she felt herself falling through space dragging her sisters and the two boys with her. Then come darkness and oblivion.

Violet however was the only one who lost consciousness consciousness but she soon regained her senses, to find that she was apparently suspended in midair, and that her sisters also safe were striving to loosen herfrom something. At first she fancied that she must be having a sort of dream, but as her brain cleared she discovered that she was really hanging by her clothes from a sort of gnarled tree growing out of the mountian or hillside; and that her sttttttttttttttt feet were resting on a big ledge of stone, while her sisters were trying to get her free. Tim or Penrod were not in sight. Below her the hill side shelved away for about a hundred and fifty feet. pazedly and with the greatest difficulty her sisters managed to disentangle her clothes from the bush and enable her to escape from her perilous position, and she collasped on the ledge of stone. stone she thought at first that every tone in her body were fractured for she was suffering some pain and aching all over, but when she began to recover from the shock and to test her limbs, she was relieved to discover that save for bruises and scratches, she was unhurt although badly shaken. Her sisters grouped around her her appearing greatly worried and distressed. for a time she could not remember what had happened nor understand how she found herself so strangely situated, but as recollection of her frens frenzied flight from the pursuing glandelinians came flooding back to her, she realized that she and her sisters too had escaped death as if by a miracle. Instinctively she glanced up fearfully to see from whence she and her sisters had fallen, and saw to her amazement that she was sitting on a stone ledge on the side of cliffe sort of mountain which was sheer above her for seemingly thousands of feet (which didn't run) she could not even hazard a guess as to the distance she and her sisters had fallen but she recognized that something unusual had saved her sisters, and that the bush had saved her from being lashed to death. Violet then in bewilderment and not paying yet ant any attention to her worried sisters glanced downward, and an involuntary cry of amazement burst from her lips.

"Have I got mad from my fright and experience?" she exclaimed, putting up her hand to her throbbing head and staring wide eyed at the scene below her. "Oh surely I am dreaming."

"No you're not and you're perfectly all right" said Joice bending over her. "It's no dream. What you see is a real thing."

The dream was rising which proved that she and her sisters too may have been unconscious for hours but that was not what bewildered and astonished violet and caused her not to even believe her own eyes. Below her at the foot of the mountain and stretching for as far as eye could see stretched a great fertile country side countless miles in extent and in the center of it there was a great city of encampments built of glandelinian style yet unlike anything Violet and her sisters had ever seen in all their travels and experiences during the war. There were might tents in the formation of those used by circuses, the walls of which were stated striped yellow and blue, and many curiously constructed wooden buildings or barracks. The wooden buildings were also striped and the roofs of the houses and the tents were of a gray color, and viewed from that height the whole enormous city of encampments presenting an enchanting aspect.

"Sure Joice dear it can't be real." gasped Violet rubbing her eyes and pinching herself to be doubly sure she was really awake and not dreaming. "It must be a mirage we are seeing."

"No it isn't laughed Jennie. Violet sat gazing fixedly and gradually there came to her the realization that the city of encampments really was real not such a thing as a mirage of a fogment of a disordered brain, and she thrilled with some fear and excitement. Surveying the scene with eager eyes she saw that the great country scene in which the enormous Glandelinian encampment was situated was far in the distance apparently outlined by huge forests.

"This must be one section of Manleys army" Thought Violet, her brain acting good now."

"You are right" said Nettie. "In escaping from the Glandelinians fate led us to a tunnel which penetrates this ground wall and reaching the precipice slants downward. It seems impossible but that is the only explanation."

Suddenly there came a thought which brought her to her feet with a bound and set her heart throbbing with fresh excitement. Perhaps her father and his army as she and her sisters penetrated this strange wall, reached this section of the beaten glandelinian army and been unable, or possibly unwilling to leave until he could discover something. Naturally he would be anxious to explore the great encampment tho roughly, and obviously he could not from there communicate with the outer world just then.

"The days of miracles are not yet over" said Catherine. "If father is here what a surprise it will be for him to find us appear here suddenly as if we had dropped from the very heavens--and dressed as if we were chief Glandelinian girlscouts too. But where in the world is Penrod and Tim."

"I do not Know" said Baby.

It had seemed to violet, and her sisters that they had been quite close behind them in the tunnel when they made their way through it. Had they too fallen and gone to their deaths. Or had their fall been miraculously broken or had they gone headlong to their deaths deaths.. violet, and her sisters scanned the cliff side most anxiously and fearfully and peered down into the ravin at the mountain foot, but they could not see a trace of any bodies. Not without hesitation, they began after collecting their thoughts, and trying to steady their nerves to climb down the steep slope of the ravine. It was a most difficult and dangerous descent, but violet, and her sisters who were also quite experienced little mountaineers negotiated it successfully.

In the Their limbs were aching from almost ~~a~~ overwork in their toilsome descent, and their hands were smarting painfully by the time they had reached the level, at which like--their first thoughts was for their personal appearance. She, they tiit ~~did~~ tidied their dresses laved their faces in the stream that ran through the ravine, patted their hair into shape replaced their ribbons, then at last after resting for a time by the river shore, and praying that Penrod and Tim were safe they began to go slowly toward the city.

"I have never seen Glandelinian encampments appear this way before" reflected violet, gazing wonderingly at the buildings and tents at a distance. "Shall I find the camps filled with glandelinian soldiers or by soldiers of our side who may have captured the camp and used it for their own."

To approach this enormous encampments and face the unknown unknown alone and unarmed called for courage and bravery of no mean order, but violet and her sisters did not flinch or quail, although they understood full well that the camps may be populated by these most ferocious Glandelinians who might arrest them as prisoners at once and if recognizing them put them to death by horrible tortures. She always remembered that the scenes glandelinians had enacted [illegible] children were unpardonable bookers.

"At leasy anyhow we escaped last night from something worse than death."Jennie said to Violet, and they all shuddered involuntarily as they remembered how when Penrod had been embracing them good no night they had been betrayed by their guiless uguildes to Glandelinian soldiers,and their narrowe narrow escape from capture.

There were six gray uniformed soldiers standing on guard near a field on the surburbs of the city of encampments, and they were the first human beings that Violet and her sisters saw in that location, n and preparing to show their passes and give the counter signs they understood Violet timidly called to them.The guards stared at Violet and her sisters as if they were some supernatural being beings, but Violet and her sisters approached them,showed their passes gave the counter countersign and easily got past to their surprise.

"Well if they let us pass that easy, we shall have little to fear from these Glandelinians here."Thought Violet and her sisters as they continued on. They reached the city of encampments to find that it indeed was a wonderful place.The buildings were big and large and of wood but all red nd yellow andblue in color and the striped tents were high and broad. As The Vivian Girls passed through the wide company streets crowds of soldiers only glanced at them or stopped to give them "the once over" but did not pay any further attention.Violet and her sisters were both relieved and amazed but they found themselves rather at a lossto under stand how to deal with the situation.

"If they do not detect us as enemies indisguise we should not have difficulty in getting them to understand that we want food, and drink and a bed"Violet reflected, smiling in spite of herself as a fat soldier in gold embroidered uniform gray coat(not the goat) emerged suddenly from a doorway, and catching sight of her gave her a long and searching but not suspicious glance. She halted at length before what seemed to be an unusally large tent and not without some trepidation strode stride up to the flaps of the tents entrance at which stood two fierce appearing Glandelinian guards armed with rifles and bayonets.The guards instead of attempting attempting to bar the progress of Violet, and her sisters let them pass by.

" Will the chief Glandelinian generals of this unusally respectful Glandelinian army treat us this way or is it a scheme to cause us to fall into a trap."Said Violet to Jennie.

"I hope not."She answered."This surely must be some generals headquarters tent for the national flag of Glandelinia was flying over it.Maybe they do not know us and believe we are Glandelinian girlscouts.It is said they respect their girlscout girlscouts as much as our own side does our own..."""""""

They crossed a hall, if there is one inside an enormous tent, the floor of which was ground but covered over with large and beautifully designed rugs and carpets and and the roof of the tent was supported by a double row of big tent poles.They then passed through an inner section as if it was another big room and this was also guarded by sentries, then Violet who was in the lead drew aside a curtain and found herself and her sisters too in a great chamber in which many Glandelinian soldiers were gathered around an enormous round table.At the head of the table sat a "Glandelinian boyscout leader of high commission.He was man magnificently attired and was one of the handsomest boyscouts Violet and her sisters had ever seen in their life time.He appeared to be about the same age as their brother Penrod, was his height, and as well splendidly proportioned.Fair almost as any of the Vivian Girls themselves and with hair as golden as their own but short he had grecian features and luminous eyes the color of Penrods.He was stern and fierce in appearance and his gorgeous gray uniform uniform coat was heavily encrusted with gold designs, and he appeared indeed as if he would have been a emperor's son.He caught sight of Violet and her sisters almost as the tent flaps fell behind her, and started from his seat at the table instantly from with a cry of amazement.The officers surrounding him turned their heads to follow his glance, and at sight of Violet and her sisters they arose as if suspicious. The boy boy at first scowled but finally lost the slightest trace of surpicion. His expression showed only wonder, relief, and a great joy as he suddenly arose his from his chair and advanced toward Violet and her sisters with both hands outstretched ordering the officers to clear out and leave him and the visitors alone by themselves.Violet and her sisters were surprised at such a reception by so high commissioned a Glandelinian boyscout who in a deep musical voice which they recognized to a surprise of their own as Penrods he said something in a language Violet and her sisters did not comprehend, but they accepted it as a welcome and a greeting, and Violet was the first to give him her hands smiling up into his face as she did so.The Glandelinian boy scout chieftian clasped her hands tightly, gazing at her and her sisters so intently and lovingly and admiringly that the blush mounted to their cheels, then with a glad cry of profound relief he gathered her lovingly into his arms and kissed her again and again, straining her close to his breast.. Violet taken by surprise, ill mot resist, but as she collected her scattered wits she cried out in breathless protest

"Let me go Penrod.The Glandelinians may see us and be suspicious."

Instantly the boyscout released her and stepped back a pace regarding her with great wonder, and still greater astonishment.

"You escaped even from that disasterous fall from the tunnel and are alive and safe."he cried but in English."Now I really believe more than ever that you have been sent to me and father from Heaven as little Angels in human form. For you fell through that ground slide, and over the precipice down a thousand feet and are not even injured."

"You speak English Penrod dear"gasped Violet in amazement."You surely are not English too?".

"I told you before sisters dear"said Penrod"That I learned English over in the New World.I do not understand that you forgot that.How did you escape death in that fall from the precipice."

"Violet and her sisters told him as much as they could ascertain of their unusual experience."

"It is the possess ion angels which saved you."said Penrod."I have heard of these things before, but never saw it untill I came to be with you.You were miraculously saved and I,m almost scared of you and your sisters.I saw you fall after I and Tim escaped by grabbing strong solid ledges in the well believing at first you had saved yourselves.After you fell I tried to locate you believing to find your little bodies far below but not a trace.And now you come as you were before we were refugitives.Thank God."

Violet and her sisters gazed at him in astonishment and bewilderment.He said these things quite seriously and slowly in his customary voice.

"But--but Penrod dear how did you come to be in this custom."Stammered Jennie her mind in a whirl, her own lips still tingling from his burning kisses."Who how did you get down here and how did you get here dressed up this way and he what game are you playing now.....,,,!"

Penrod was silent for a few moments, wrinkling his brow as if he had difficulty in understanding the questions, then his face brightened again and he said with a smile;

"I am the youngest famous "Glandelinian boyscout hero" you soon will be well acquainted with"Famous Adeldefob"he answered at pretense of being proud."

"Surely you who were sent to me and Father from above so long ago will learn of that now!I am Adeldefob--a greater "Glandelinian boyscout"than Gerould Starring, and now I have you here with me.I am also Schofield Penrod son of the Greatest and best Emperor in the world, and Ruler of all the Glandelinian boy and girlscouts while here.I was trying to get plenty of information from those officers by pretending to have false information of my own.Come we will now toel toil together and find out why the enemy doesn't retrat retreat. The Glandelinians believe you are my sisters to the greqt "Adeldefob"but do not know our real identification."

He grasped Violet, and Jennie by the hand as he finished, and led h them to two chairs and bade his sisters to sit down too.Then to some of the soldier guards he gave an order in what Violet and her sisters recognized as their own tongue, and the soldiers saluted and left the chamber.Violet and her sisters sisters were still bewildered and confused. Which was scarcely surprising.

In what appeared to be an enormous Glandelinian camp, and after being seperated by the accident in the tunnel from Penrod and Tim they had found themselves confronted by Penrod himself in a handsome Glandelinian uniform of a boyscout, who had identified himself in two ways, had kissed her and her sisters and addressed them in English.

Adeldefob he had called himself-- meaning the "Chief of Boyscouts--and he had also mixed Spanish and English and French expressions with his well known English when explaining himself.Violet and her sisters had little learning of the Spanish language, and she had understood Penrods reference to Adeldefob.But she and her sisters sisters were completely at a loss to understand Penrods ability to speak English, and they were puzzling over his use of Spanish Expressions.Truly it was baffling and bewildering. She and her sisters turned their head to glance at Penrod, to find him regarding them, bright eyed and with smiling intentness, and they found themselves blushing again in spite of themselves.

"Where you here very long!"Jennie asked..

"I cannot tell"answered Penrod with a shrug of his shoulders."I have been here ever since I can remember you fall down the precipice.

"Timothy Groveton---wh. re is he?"persisted Jennie."How did he get here. ?"

"How can I tell."Penrod replied."He was seperated from me after you fell."

"I am tired and hungry and feel awfully faint and I want food and rest"said Jennie.I understand we're in the foe lines but we crave the hospitality of "Adeldefob."

A strange faintness came over Jennie as she finished, and she swayed forward and would have fallen had not Penrod caught her.She remembered faintly being lifted up as if she were a baby and carried from the tent room in the strong arms of her brother, then she lost consciousness again. Jennie came to herself slowly to find she was lying nude on a bed, and four of her sisters were bending anxiously over her. One Joice was holding a vial of some strong pungent perfume to her nostrils, violet and Hettie were massaging her limbs and body with oils, while Catherine was throwing a little cold water on her head. Dazedly Jenn Jennie submitted herself to their administrations, feeling as if she were in a strange dream(dont scream). Once more she had some difficulty in remembering exactly what had happened,,, but soon the mist began to clear away from her mind though however she continued to lay passive with eyes closed after telling Joice she did not need any more of the pungent perfume and telling Daisy that she wanted some sort of a strong drink. Dear Daisy brought a real strong drink which was a strong cordial and which indeed made her gasp as she swallowed it, but which had a strong wonderful revivifying effect, and within a few minutes Jennie had completely recovered herself. She allowed her sisters to continuing continue massaging her for the treatment was soothing her aches and bruises, but at length she motioned them to desist and slowly rose from the couch or bed, where upon her sisters looked relieved.

"Is there any chance sisters dear for me to have a good bath, food and then some rest."said Jennie.

Daisy handed to her a white whoolen woollen robe which Jennie wound around her. Then her sisters graciously escorted her down a flight of steps to a strange square apartment and thence toward the the stream. The bath soothed and refreshed her, and by the time her sisters had toweled and massaged her Jennie was herself again. She then donned a garment of fine cotton which her sisters had laid out in readiness, resumed her cloak and was conducted to the big tent again where food and milk were set before her on gilded stools and on plates and in vessels which appeared to be made of solid gold, while she half reclined on a couch. The meal over Jennie indicated that she wished to rest, whereupon her sisters kissing her withdrew. Jennie or even her sisters had not had any sleep for more than twenty four hours, and therefore she drifted into sound slumber almost at once, and slept the sleep of exhaustion for many hours.

In her dreams she again lived her struggle with the Glandelinian soldiers and the flight of her and her sisters from the, . Again she was blundering blindly through some big night mare cave with no floor on it, yet she seemed to go over the gluf as if she was a spirit, and yet it seemed to her that the Glandelinians had turned into demons and were on wings and were just behind her and that when she saw she could not escape she prayed desperately, and an angel appeared with a flaming sword and the demons deeps dispersed. She awoke with a cry of fear and started up from her cushions to find Penrod standing beside her couch ith with a lamp in his hand.

"Did I startle you dearest sister?"he asked gently"I beg pardon."

With the shadow of her nightmar still tormenting her brain, Jennie did not immediately recognize him, and stared at him rather wildly in scared bewilderment ,then she remembered, and heaved a sigh of relief.

"I was having a dreadful dream"she explained with a half smile, as she blinked the lees of sleep(peep in the deep) from her beautiful little eyes."Why is it so dark. Have I been asleep all day?"What is the time Penrod dear?"

"It is past eight oclock"Penrod responded ,in his best voice."Many times have I and my sisters come to watch you since sleep overcame you fearing you were ill and to assure myself and themselves that nothing wrong had happened to you. Now I am overjoyed that your little eyes have opened again. Arise sister dear, and come to the feast that is prepared for you and your sisters, and too if I have the chance I've some important infor inf mi information I wish to give to you and your sisters which I have discovered."

He set down the lamp he had been carrying as he spoke, and before Jennie could guess his intention, he had gently encircled her with his arms, lifted her gently from the couch on which she had been resting, resting and kissed her on the lips ere erre he set her on her feet.

"You must not kiss me or embrace me in front of any glandelinians"she warned him gently."It may cause us to be suspected."

Penrods Penrods eyes opened wide, then his lips parted in a smile.

"I won't she said."surely you are worthy to be loved by even them, and so are your sisters. but our love will be secret where they won't see us."

Before she could make any response he clapped his hands, and immediately into the room ran half a dozen child slaves, and to whom he gave apparently curt orders,(He had to use these orders as to prevent suspicion) and then said to Jennie;

"Your slaves will attend to sister dear.I and your celestial sisters shall await you in the outer chamber. Hurry we're all hungry."

He strode out, and Jennie frowning and disturbed, submitted herself to the attentions of the child slaves, who treated her with a respect ammounting to awe. Ut It was all very well to be treated as if she was a great Glandelinian girlscout chieftian Jennie reflected, but it would be intolerable of the Glandelinians discovered Penrod embracing and kissing her and became semi suspicious for no such thing is done amongst Glandelinians.

"We a will have to be careful of they'll arrest us" she decided as she made her toilet.yven"Even these child slaves could arrest us."

She made a request for the uniform clothes she had been wearing on her arrival, but the little slave girls apparently could not understand her language or meaning and laid out a variety of fine Glandelinian girlscout garments, from which perforce Jennie had to make her choice. She guessed they were the raiments of the highest of Glandelinian girlscouts, and experienced the sensation of "dressing up" for a peculiar masquerade as she put them on particularly when one of the child slaves handed her and an elaborate feathered round girlscout hat with a circlet of something like jingle bells around the outer rim of the hat of black colour after strapping a pair of soft girlscout uniform black shoes on her feet.

"I look like a dirty Glandelinian"thought Jennie as she examined her reflection in a hand mirror or varnished metal end of large size."Penrod will probably be more convinced than ever that I'm a Glandelinian girlscout, so I had better insist on being treated with respect due to a Glandelinian girlscout chieftian.

Presently she heard the throbbing of drums, the beating of gongs, the sound of bugles, the playing of an approaching band, and the tramp and shuffle of many feet, and while she was wondering what was going on Penrod reappeared in the doorway garbed in a very elaborate Glandelinian boyscout uniform, big gray feathere decorated hat and across his coat was an enormous cartridge belt while he held his sabre in military style..... A strange and almost barbaric fe figure yet boyscout leader withal.

"Now indeed you delight my eyes and those of my sisters Jennie dear."he exclaimed regarding his prettiest sister with great admiration."Come the supper is spread, and everybody not Knowing who you are absand believe you're their greatest girlscout await to do you homage !

He grasped Jennie gently by the hand and led her through a big opening of the tent itself to a large swuare shaped Glandelinian building in which many lap lamps were burning and around the walls of which stood many men in perfect Glandelinian sabreorate uniforms, all of which stood at attention immediately Penrod, and violet and her sisters entered. He was fooling the Glandelinians nicely. violet, and her sisters felt an off odd inclination to laugh as Penrod led them between the rows of Glandelinian soldiers to a strange appearing sort of dias on which a big table was set at the upper end of the apartment, but they experienced a thrill when at a word of command from Penrod the assembled company saluted and marched out.

Then a lot of child slaves accclaimed violet and her sisters with unintelligable cries, stretching out their hands toward them, as if for supplication.

"They know you "said Penrod "and will not betray you."They wish us to set them free and we promised to do so at the proper time as soon as we get the information as to where Father is."

For a few minutes violet, and her sisters stood erect,, and silent on the dias, gazing at the strange assembly of child slaves, and then instinctively they raised their hands in acknowledgement of the petitions.

"I do not understand howowe can do anything now"Violet exclaimed"Turning to Penrod"Tell them to go away for the time being untill we can settle plans."

Penrods eyes opened wide in surprise, then he laughed, raised his sabre above his head, and his voice rang out again, silencing the crowd of child slaves instantly. The children slowly withdrew. Then Penrod indicated seats at the table, and violet, and her sisters sat down with a sigh of relief, her b their brother seating himself facing them, clapping his hands together as he did so whereupon a number of orderlies appeared as if from nowhere nowhere bearing dishes of food, which they set on the big table. The servants some of which were attired in uniforms of white instead of gray were comely Glandelinians with glossy brown hair large expressive brown eyes, and tan in color. The dining hall itself was a magnificent apartment the walls being of mose mosiac work and the painted ceiling was supported by pillats envased in sheets of beaten gold showing it had belonged to some rich Calverinian before the war.

"I can hardly believe I'm not dreaming."exclaimed Violet impulsively, after helping herself to some of the rich foods proffered by one of the orderly waiters. "This reminds me of a scene of the " Arabian Nights."

"Arabian Nights!"repeated Penrod with a smile. "I did not believe or even hear that you or your sisters knew about such books.

"Why surely we have them at home"said Jennie."They are stories in a big book. Didn't you ever read them."

"Surely I did."said Penrod.I also have two good books written in French Language from which General Greatheart taught me to read.The other is called "Shakespeare" Sonnets."

"That proves that general Greatheart must have also understood English," Hattie exclaimed. "How did he get over to the United States? How did he get you here again!"

"Already I have told you though you may have forgotten, that general Greatheart brought me to the new world---the land of the United states of Americans and Canada and also Mexico" replied Penrod. "He did it because he wanted me to learn people plenty of things because he realized I was an Antiochian Prince though then he was not conscious of whom my father was. But let us drop that just now and learn of some information which I wish for your ears and your alone. "These child slaves some of which can understand our language told me that we're in a Glandelinian army far from those that fought at Big Girl Knool, that this one is a strange army altogether under a leader never heard of before, but which intends to join with the Manleys and start on the advance tomorrow. They told me that this general appeared with his army from a territory which they claim is heavy with the smell of blood from slaughtered children, and from which another enemy came not long ago to join. It is told that this army will stay in this location for only a short time, and then will move on to join with the Manleys bringing with them much gold and treasure which they stolen from Christian cities to offer as a sacrifice to the Devils whom they claim they only love. Two sections of this army is to remain to cover the advance of the main army. Whether these Glandelinians will become suspicious of us is now hard to tell but we are in the most dangerous Glandelinian army ever heard of and will have to watch out for our selves. We won't be able to get to Manleys army until this one joins, and when this one joins, Manley intends not to retreat despite his defeat, but will hit a blow at Beppo Lansin as soon as possible. So we'll have to watch our step and be cautious cautious. That is all I can tell just now."

Violet, and her sisters sat silent and thoughtful for some time. What Penrod had said indicated that this army was some of the new followers of general Manley, the supposed to be Conqueror of Big Girl Knool which had penetrated undetected into this east section. Doubtless it was these glandelinian armies that had stayed the retreat of general Manley. She and her sisters remembered that General Manley and his men had been hailed as divinites by his followers and that they believed he was greater than God himself. But Penrods account of the way in which this Glandelinian army had appeared undetected in this territory and hid its encampments near the high hills indicated something of much greater moment. It made it clear that there must then be a reason why Manley did not retreat, and it flashed upon her mind that upon their minds that their father had possibly discovered this army and had been lost in endeavoring to reach the the heart of the Glandelinian army.

"Are the child slaves sure no other man of whom they regard as a stranger has entered this Glandelinian army during the past few days?" Catherine asked suddenly.

"Our father must have been searching also for this Glandelinian army."

Penrod only shook his head..

"They have never seen another strange man," he replied looking troubled.

"Have you ever tried since you came here to find your way to the other Glandelinian army?" Persisted Catherine while her sisters appeared more troubled. "Do you understand your way through the labyrinth of Company streets Company Streets outside to the country."

"I understand of no other way than whence we came in." was the reply. "As for the labyrinth of Company Streets, the child slaves say that those who enter it and cannot explain themselves are seized as spies and go either for the sunset dance or be butchered. Certain it is that none who enters the Glandelinian camps through the outer limits from the company or country ever returns. We came in such a mysterious manner that the Glandelinians do not suspect us in the least. Tell Tell me Catherine, about how you came to get down here without falling all the way to your deaths."

Violet, and her sisters told him.

Then he said;

"Tell me sisters dear about that gu tunnel from whence we came. Is it any trouble to find it again. It may be our only escape."

"Do you really mean that you understand nothing about how to leave here again without detection and that you have never tried to penetrate the Glandelinian encampments?" Exclaimed Violet apprehensively.

For the first time it had occured to her and her sisters that it was of course utterly impossible impossible to leave the Glandelinian camps by the way they had entered, and if no one understood the secret way through the labyrinth of Company Streets, they might be doomed to spend so long in the enemy camps as soon to chance discovery as to their real identy and then probably die a terrible death. Their hearts contracted at the thought.

"I know of no other way out" repeated Penrod still appearing somewhat puzzled and greatly troubled. "Why should we try to penetrate the mountain!"

"There are for our safty a thousand good reasons" said Joice." This Glandelinian army is fabolously wealthy from stolen goods from our own christian countries, and believes through that it could become a great power power against our cause by Joining with Manley. And if we are discovered which may be sooner or later we will surely be in for it. These Glandelinians are more dangerous than Manley s, and surely we cannot spent too long a time here when we'll be in danger of discovery sooner or later. Surely we won't get what we are after here. Would not you wish to see some chance of finding Father in Manleys army he than here."

"I cannot comprehend the situation dearest sisters" Penrod replied with another puzzled shake of his his befeathered head.. "Tell me about what you believe you can plan."

As briefly simply and explicity as she could Jennie told him about how she and her sisters were more in Manleys army than here, of how their expedition in search of father wouldn't bring no results here. But that was all. Penrod listened intently with wonder in his blue eyes for a time, and when she had concluded he sat silent and thoughtful, as if pondering over what he had heard and that she explained. Then suddenly he began to laugh as if greatly amazed.

"Do you believe or expect me to believe such a fantastic fabulous story of an attempted escape as that". He demanded. "Surely you must have dreamed what you had planned. You understand yourself not no to escape so you have invented a story of wonder to encourage me."

"What I have told you is the truth." Retorted Jennie in emphatic tones. "There is a greater hope of escape if we can only find the way, and Manleys army is much safer to be in than this one , and there must be some way of reaching that other Glandelinian army instead of waiting for this one to begin an advance otherwise you yourself could not have won your way here as we did. I and my sisters intend to find a way out and you must help us."

Penrods laughter died on his lips, and he looked at her and her sisters gravely and stedily.

"There is no way, and if we're under suspicion and there was a way, the Glandelinians would bar it so that we could not depart." he said with grave deliberation. "Only an eagle could reach the country that lies outside the vast encampments---if there is any such a place as far beyond this. Had we the wings of an eagle we probably could fly from hence. We must for safty not try and escape now but wait untill the army advances. The slaves say it will advance to morrow or probably the day after. It understands the course from here we don't. We must be patient and bide our time. Don't worry. Trust in the angels that possess you. You may not regret staying long in this Glandelinian army and if we play the game good we may experience great things for it and come out with colors flying. As long as nobody recognizes us all is well. I only hope no Glandelinian soldier or boy scout meets us that may be able to recognize us despite our disguises."

These words struck a chill to the hearts of Violet and her sisters, but Jennie met Penrods glance unflinchingly.

"If the Glandelinians attempt to detain us here too long against our will the wea wrath of Heaven will fall fall upon them and evil will befall them" she said, with a brave lift of he her head.

"These Glandelinians who are so ill and sinful and who love not God do not seem to fear the wrath of God or of Heaven" responded Penrod, and smiled again."

Jennie and her sisters felt rather at a loss to find out how to answer. It annoyed her and her sisters, that Penrod told her of the impossibilities of escaping from this Glandelinian army, and should seem to believe that the Glandelinian armies would make such light of God's anger and power, but at heart she and her sisters were a little scared by his firm assertion that if they tried to leave the Glandelinian armies everything would end disasterious for them.

"We might remain for a time of course if we have to, and explore the wonderful Glandelinian army, but we must eventually return to the christian lines sometimes." Hattie said after a momentary pause.

"Eventually" Penrod repeated slowly las as if pondering on the meaning of the word.

"Perhaps if we put unusual trust in our angels and god First we may be able to enduce you to accompany us and see if we can't escape" Catherine said.

"Perhaps!" responded Penrod, smiling again. "Perhaps we may not have the chance to return to our own army if we do not use caution."

Faintly from the outside , of the big tent,,, there came to the ears of Violet first the sound of strange discordant music the beating of drums, and the sound of countless voices of glandelinian soldiery.

"To make it appear as if I'm some superior being, and to throw off all suspicion as to who you and your sisters are I have ordered a sort of fiesta for to night." explained Penrod, noting that the attention of Violet, and her sisters had been attracted to the sounds. "Without there is mirth and revelry. The Glandelinians are rejoicing that you have arived believing you are some great Glandelinian Princesses and the daughters of, an Emperor Price Procile. Let us pretend something to cause them to continue to believe so so we can obtain all the information we we are searching for, and we must show ourselves, then it will pre prevent any suspicion coming upon us.If we are afraid to do so they'll get suspicious."

Penrod rose from the table as he spoke, took Jennie and Violet by the hand, and bade bade the others to follow and led them from the dining hall through other strangely decorated chambers and passage passe passages to the outer hall, which was thronged with Glandelinian soldiers clad in all sorts of bright and richly a made and strangely shaped gray uniforms. All greeted Penrod and Violet, and her sisters with shouts of acclamanztion and did reverence also, and Penrod addressed them briefly before conducting Violet and her sisters to an open carriage in readiness at the foot of the steps..

"This is more as the Are Arabian Nights than ever."Jennie said smilingly as Penrod assisted her and her sisters into the carriage, and seated himself between them... Then Penrod gave orders to the driver and the horses set off at a steady trot... On both sides of the carg carriage ran soldiers qu wearing queerly decorated black hats, while ahead of it ran or rode gorgeously garbed officers with riding staffs.The whole scene was so strange and fantastic that aga in Violet and her sisters had difficulty in convincing herself or themselves that they were really awake and not dreaming. There were many lights inthe rows of tents and buildings, bonfires had been lighted in the great square before the biggest tents, and many of the soldiers were marching on foot carrying torches, On a large raised platform a number of girlslaves partly nude were busyat some sort of a toil.Around the confires many men were sitting eating supper and in conversation.The strangely colored tents and barracks reflected the flickering lights and gave the impression that the Vivian Girls were in Arabia for Arabians too have striped tents. It was a fascinating and beautiful scene and some of the excitement of the crowds through which she and her sisters passed in the big carriage communiated it self to Violet and her sisters who glanced about them with brightened eyes and smiling lips.

"Though it in it is in a foe camp it surely is wonderful" Penrod dear" joice exclaimed, impulsively."When we get back to the christian lines and tell the beauty and wonderm of the Glandelinian camps and so forth, the christian soldiers will believe we were having an unusal day dream"

"The beauty of these Glandelinian camps fades into nothing before the beauty of my seven little sisters."Penrod responded, and smiled into their eyes.

"Do you really believe we are possessed by angels?"asked Jennie as he clasped her hand."We seem always to get compliments, and are kissed and caressed when we feeltt feel sure we do not deserve it.You regard me and my sister sisters more as seven little heavenly angels than mere humans.Sometimes you are even a little afraid of us.""

"But among little girls you are the best friends of God, and I'll bet in secret when you were asleep and never were conscious of it that you may have been kissed and caressed by God and His Blessed Mother also"retorted Penrod smilingly."You have strange happy spells sometimes and that is why I believe it. And if you were not possessed by angels then explia explain your strange condition, the reason you have so many narrow escapes and go through perils which I would abhor.You have all the symptons of angel possessed children and who can deny it."

Jennie found herself at a loss for a reply, and as she was trying to think of a way to find it out, the horses had slowed up at the steps giving approach to a massive building decorated with great monolith columns.

"What place is this."Catherine demanded, as Penrod stepped from the carriage and offered her his hand first to assist her to alight.

"The headquarters of the great Glandelinian general"he answered."I wish by by this sort of pretense to gain entrance and if possible get some valuable information."

Violet and her sisters thrilled with anticipation as they went up the steps between the guards, while the throng acclaimed them and Penrod once more. Their thoughts turned instinctively to their Father.Here was a building ages old captured by the Glandelinians and the building was seemingly in good preservation in which possible could be found the records of what the Glandelinian generals intended to do here such a place as probably their father could have dreamed of discovering.

"By chance"thought Penrod to himself "I and my sisters have made the greatest discovery of all times."If we can find out why Manley really expects help from this Glandelinian army we can probably frustrate its junction with him."

At the entrance entrance to the struvture there were two huge stone images of human figures probably statues of long forgotten Abbiennian Rulers. The building itself was a series of big rooms the outer end largest of which was a great oblong chamber with massive columns carved in the form of serpents.Around the walls decorated with carvings and paintings were square recesses each containing a strange strange weird pat painted stucco figure in high relief. [illegible]

The air was heavy with closeness of heat but the interior of the building was well lighted with lamps and candles and the flickering lights revealed to Violet and her sisters the strangest assembly they had ever seen gathered around what she was used was a large table in the center of the big room. These were the Glandelinian generals themselves without the lightest doubts and they were mostly elaborately garbed in such uniforms as to appear more as if they were great monarchs instead of mere commanding officers.The chief officers wore towering feather covered hats but their hats were gray instead of black and carried golden handled walking canes as if they were something of great importance.A great number of men were hooded covering over their heads. As Penrod and Violet and her sisters appeared, the generals rose from the tables, and the effects of the scene was somewhat uncanny for a great number of Glandelinian soldiers wore hedious masks brilliantly painted, and Violet and her sisters shivered involuntarily, but there was no sign of awe or fear on their faces as Penrod led them to the tables around which the fierce Glandelinian generals assembled.One of them was general Richard Tamedine, and others were general Frank Hanlet and generals Tomas Fed deral Hindemine Federal, and others.In a clear ringing voice the chief of them which was Phellinia Gamerline gave some command which violet and her sisters did not understand, and all at once all y hubbub within the great hall ceased, and all present bowed in reverence before the great Glandelinian general and then stood at attention with rifles at arms. The one who appeared to be the chief general of them all begun a long speech of some sort, and Violet and her sisters guessed he was saying something about his plans in a strange language language. or he pointed in the direction of the christian lines.

"He is telling about his intention os joining with Manley and of striking a blow toward Beppo Lansin."explained Penrod in a whisper/.The unintelligable speech ended at last to their relief, Penrod said a few words as if of acknowledge ment, too the hands of two if of the Vivian Girls again, bad the others to follow, and attended by some of the others and a number of soldiers who took up some of the lamps from the stmc hee and led the way into the inner section of the building, the chief feature of which was a great platform of stone.

"The place of turture for captured christian dog children who try to get child slaves away from us."said one of the officers indicating the big stone platform. "There the heart and entrails of many a christian soldier spy too has been torn hot from their bodies to appease the anger of us generals when they s spies on us.We always move that thing along with us into other buildings during our advance."

Violet, and her sisters shuddered.They knew that the vengeance of the fierce and wicked Gland elinians had been marked by these dreadful sort of scenes and unspeakable and immeasureable horrors just to insult God and Christianity but it had not occured to her or to them that these scenes would be reserved in this Glandelinian army.

"Surely Penrod dear, these Glandelinian generals do not really permit such dreadful cruelties here too do they?"Jennie asked.

"No onecan stop them not even us"answered Penrod, with a surprized glance."It is not to us to see such sights, for these Glandelinian generals condemn even rebellious child slaves to the same fate, and if we see such a sight we cannot dare interfere for it would even be sinful sucide.The Glandelinian generals here are jealous of everybody they do not care foe.We got to be careful.If we were ever discovered Heaven alone could save us."

Again Violet, and her sisters shuddered.The realization came to her, that these fierce Glandelinian generals knew nothing of any love for god and His Fellow creatures save that of their own selves and cruel wicked following, and were practically worse than the demons themselves, although they appeared in all form as human beings, and strange to say none of them appeared to speak in a language called Glandelinian but in some foriegn sort of Spanish which Violet and her sisters did not understand.. They wondered that these Glandelinian generals did not regard them themselves as gods, and vested with the powers of life and death, and commanded reverance as such.

"Where are we going next"?said Daisy, after a pause.

The generals were in conversation again, and they had formed themselves it into a sort of prov procession to light Penrod and his angelic beautiful sisters down along flight of stone steps which seemed to lead to a dungeon.

"To the lonely quarters of the attending child slaves."one of the Glandelinian officers replied.

"After this "whispered Penrod"we'll go on the to return to the tent by way of underground galleries.You are not afraid with me sisters dear are you?"

"Why should we be afraid with you guarding us?"violet, responded."What is there to fear."?

She and her sisters had been trying to convince themselves that they had nothing to fear as long as their real identification was not discovered, but somehow or other a foreboding of coming evil possessed her especially, and at heart if not exactly afraid they were becoming uneasy and apprehensive.The steps they descended led to a subterranean chamber, the air of which as was dank and chill. but also sickly with the heavy oder of persons who had been murdered by Glandelinians,.

By the flickering lights of the lamps carried by soldiers and attendants they saw there were many hedious skeletons in chiches in the walls. They were of children who had died on the big slab of stone.One of the officers was conversing again, and violet and her sisters felt suddenly nauseated.

"Please take us out of this."Violet begged of Penrod."We have seen enough for to night, and we are tired.."

"We can't do nothing until the crazy generals change their inventions,"whispered Penrod."It's shocking to me too but I have to bear it.We can't make them suspicious."

Finally one of the generals turned and addressed one of his followers, who first saluted and then bowed to him, then he gave a command and the soldiers bearing the lamps lighted the way through the hall of the dead, where to their surprise violet,and her sisters and Penrod too found the main guards waiting with the same carriage they had ridden before. They rightly assumed that these had reached the place by way of some other subterranean passages, and they saw as they were borne through the main gallery that there appeared to be many passages branching from it, and that the whole camp underneath seemed to be tunneled as if it was some dangerous lay labyrinth.At length the carriage halted in what was appearing to be a paved court yard in which were many soldiers with lamps and flaming torches, and here Penrod who had been silent during the entire journey from the headquarters of the Glandelinian generals, again assisted violet and her sisters to alight.

"What we have witnessed have cast a gloom and dread upon you my dear sisters which I must try to despel."he said smilingly, as he took violets and Jennie's hands hands and led them up a bright or broad flight of stone steps followed by the other Vivian Girls, and which steps gave access to an inner hall of the place."Presently I shall hope to conjure the smile back again to your darling faces and the light on the return to your beautiful blue eyes, and we shall taste happiness s such as even the saints on earth probably never had.This shall be a night of joy and rejoicing and delight in spite of the Glandelinians."

In spite of the fact that violet and her sisters had slept most of the day or especially Jennie, she was feeling fagged, but she and her sisters felt it wouldn't be safe to refuse to take any further part in the rejoicings arranged in their honor. Therefore she and her sisters suffered Penrod to lead them to the main room in which she had first seen Penrod, and which was crowded now with gayly dressed or uniformed glandelinian soldiers.Again the whole company saluted as Penrod and his sisters seated themselves, then aclaimed them in unision before settling down to enjoy themselves.Beautiful child slaves in diaphanous garments handed round trays of sweetmeats, fruits, and small flegons of wine wine.Musicians played great bands, and at intervals the guests rose in turn to lay tribute at the feet of violet,and her sisters.some proferred ornaments of gold, others precisious stones, and ere long there was a dazzling heap which must have been worth many thousands of millions of dollars.

"Should we for our own countrys support accept all this treasure?"said Daisy of Penrod.

"Treasure"he exclaimed with a laugh."Those are but the poor tributes of the chief officers, and as dross compared with the Sacred Heart of our blessed Lord. His loving Heart alone is the storehouse of the treasures of millions of rulers and I know you only choose his Heart alone. We couldn't bring those witty dross treasures with us when we leave."

"This indeed"thought violet and her sisters together"is at El Dorado and yet again it is too much"and once more they had difficulty to imagine that the whole affair was not some fantastic dream.They wearied soon of the noise and clamor of the bands, and were glad when Penrod arose and gave his command for the entertainers entertainers to withdraw.Side by side, he and violet and her sisters descended from the dias, and again everybody was at attention and the salute.

"Are you weary sisters dear?"asked Penrod as he conducted his fair sisters to the boy and girlscout chief apartments after dismissing the attention guards.

"Yes the excitement is tiring on my nerves"said Hettie."I and my sisters too I presume shall be glad to rest, and think over all that has happened and reflect on what we have seen.I do not believe we love to be treated as if we were superiors to them.We don't belong to these wicked people. They are our enemy enemies and they would be dangerous if they caught on to whom we are."

"To night you can lay aside your hardships for once and rest up."Penrod responded slowly, and smiled at her bright eyed."Don't worry we won't be identified because all this is a strange army of Glandelinians.Of course there may come some one who may recognize us, but if he dares to beyray us I'll shoot him like a dog."

The child slaves who had attended violet, and her sisters earlier in the day were awaiting them in a richly decorated apartment furnished with an elaborately carved bedsteads and chairs of strange shape and design.There were skins and woven mats of rich colouring and texture on the floor, and the doorway was one curtained heavily by hangings beautifully embroidered in gold... The room was dimly lighted by three wax candles and a tiny spiral of reddish colored smoke rose from an incense-burner in the centre of the room perfuming the air. Penrod departed abruptly after wishing violet and her sisters good night.with a sigh of relief, but wondering why Penrod did not embrace her again(it was he would not do it where everybody could see and be suspicious) she and her sisters doffed their feathered head dress of a hat and their ceremonial uniforms, and submitted themselves to the attentions of the child slaves, who bathed their feet, massaged their white limbs, brushed their golden hair, and sprayed them with a fragrant perfume.The night gowns they had in readiness was surprisingly in the form of a childrens nightie being of white clothy material, sleeveless cut low at the neck and beautifully embroidered. One of the child slaves singly proffered a golden cup from which violet, and her sisters drank a refreshing beverage which seemed to be made of fruits and had a flavor much as if it was sweet apple cider.

Then violet herself dismissed them, and they withdrew silently after making obeisance.

Left alone Violet and her sisters except Jennie laid on the beds, but Jennie seated herself on the side of her own bed to think over all that had happened and mentally to review the amazing succession of events that had brought her and her sisters to their present position.It seemed days since they had fled panic stricken from the glandelinian persuers, yet it was actually a great deal less than twenty four hours. Yet for a moment her flesh tingled with happy delight as she recalled timothy Grovetons fierce but holy devotional embraces, and she wondered what had become of her loving friend, and if he was not now suffering because she and her sisters were missing from him.he must surely have concluded, she fel reflected, that she and her sisters had been killed in the fall through the tunnel or it might be that he was in disguise searching the glandelinian armies in the hope of finding her and her sisters alive. Perhenaps in one of those pitfalls in which she and her sisters fell and had a narrow escape from death the remains of her father lay and would never be discovered.Tears welled to Jennie's eyes, but she wiped them away and her thoughts turned to Penrod, the boy who so mysteriously could disguise himself, who spoke spanish, french and other languages besides his own, and was revered as the highest of all Glandelinian boyscout leaders and who was amongst a glandelinian army which had stolen wealth beyond the dreams of avarice. he recalled his many kisses, his embrace, his laughter when she told him of their dangerous situation, and there came again to her the disturbing thought that something might happen that would prevent her and her sisters to ever return to the christian lines. what if that Gerald Starring or any of his cronies ever appeared to be in this glandelinian army. Those little imps could discover any one despite their disguises. A sudden rustle of the heavy hangings curtaining the doorway of the bedchamber made her turn her head suddenly, and the next moment she had started to her feet with an involuntarily exclamanation--for she saw that it was Penrod who had swept aside the curtains and entered/

"She got scared so her heart beated very loudly believing something was decidedly wrong and she demanded breathlessly;

"What's wrong Penrod dear and instinctively snatched up one of the cloth covering of the bed to throw it around her shoulders believing glandelinians would enter with him.

"Nothing wrong."he answered.

"What do you want then Penrod dear?"

"What I want but you and your beloved sisters?"answered Penrod in a low voice."I had no chance yet to even kiss you and they good night."

He had divested himself of his highest commission uniform, and wore only a single brown garment in the form of a sort of togo which made him appear more as if he was a little Greek God. But he had his pistols and his cartridge belt on for any emergency. His blue eyes were gleaming as if they were blue jewels seeming moreover to vary in colour as if they were jewels of changing lights, his lips were parted in a smile and his cheeks were flushed. Jennie had never noticed till now the real beauty of his face and form, and his words had caused her heart to contract, with a thrill, yet yo joyful and safe feeling. If he was not her guarding angel in disguise then what was he.?"

"You are sure welcome as if you were my guardian angel "she exclaimed feeling greatly relieved"When you left so suddenly at first without saying good night we felt nervois but we forgot there were too many eyeing us just then."

"Penrod laughed softly, and came swiftly toard her with hands outstretched. "Would you rebuke me for doing what you commanded me to do my dearest sis"he retorted in his soft musical voice."Now there are no foes around to hearvor see, and I sure do long for thee in my arms.Would to Heaven we could leave this accursed camp.but I wish to find a means to frustrate their advance to join with stanley."

"Stop stop not so loud"gasped Jennie recoiling as if from the direction of and flinging out her hands as if to ward off something.Listen please."

Penrod stopped and heard outside these words-

"Ward General Thamerleene what am I going to do.What can I do.Not a place beyond the christian lines in the Big Girlknool districts where Manley and his generals can even so much as move.The battle made a funny and most astounding result. Est ees on account of zem Vivian goils in Emperor Vivians lines."

"What in w the world happened"cried another general."Stop the confounded English you poor foriegn Jackass and tell it to me in our own tongue."

"Well sir, manleys whole army is tied up, the whole situation is at a stand still.He cannot advance, and nor can he retreat.He is afraid the christian army will jump him if he does."

"To think that he has been brought to this by one of his generals who blundere blundered into that region."

"It's impossible for us to advance to his relief as soon as we wished"said another general."Maybe we ought to offer those christian dog generals a settlement.Satisfy their grasping demands and demand an armistrice so that crazy Manley can get out of that confounded trap.What's twenty millions child slaves to us compared to all this agony and uncertainty Manley has to suffer."

"NO I'LL NOT DO THAT2"said Phellinia Tamerline aloud"They won't get the best of me me confound them."I'll carry my army enroute to Beppo Lansin.I'll die on the ground as a maddog before I see them christian dogs get the best of me. I'm not manley.I'll get general John clancy to advane with his army. I understand he will stand by me.Manley must be saved."

And Penrod who had overheard every word saw the generals and the messenger astride away.Then seeing all was clear Penrod sat by the bed ,encircled her slim supple body drawing her close.He was strong, stronger than even Gerald Starring or Timothy Groveston-and had she been in the hands of an enemy boyscout this strong she would have been powerless to resist him, but she felt happy in his embrace.

"Will our Dear Blessed Lord, who sent these and thry sisters to me love me more for accepting His holy gift with gladness and love in return." he exclaimed breathlessly"his arms tighting around poor happy Jennie."Thou art the bravest and fairest of my dearest sisters, my beloved little sister, behold thou art fair and has the nature of the angels in thee, and thou and they your beautiful sisters have ravished my heart with holy love.Thy lips as are as a thread of holy scarlet and thy speech is that of the angels.Thy neck is as a pillar of ivory, thy head as the most finest gold and thy breath is as myrrh and frankincense.Oh my beloved little sister mine, thou art mine and I am thine for thou art she for wom my soul loveth next to God and for whom my body has been athirst and yet why do we have to go through all this."

His words were snatches of the "song of Solomon "perverted to holy uses and Jennie recognized this sub consciously as she almost feel asleep in his arms.

Seeing she was falling asleep he gave her kisses, burning holy passionate kisses which seemec seemed to cause her to dose off the more. Penrod himself was laboring for breath when at last he desisted for a time, and jennie almost swwo swooning with happiness, and her senses reeling into a sort of happy dream lay panting, and happy in his arms, her heart fluttering like that of a bird held captive in the hand, her white bosom heaving tumultiously, her every nerve quivering with happiness as that of a celestial child, for the happy spell came on her again and Penrod had produced it.

"your love and mine too pearest sister is far better than wine to the even ones, and your little lips intoxicate me and fire me with the desire that we and your dearest sisters were in Heaven with God where we belong my beloved little sisters, and if they were not asleep I would make them as happy as you"resumed Penrod with a beautiful sl smile and began to embrace her again with redoubled fervor.Jennie however was asleep as he lifted her up in his arms as if she were only a childs doll, kissed her little white throat, her breast and shoulders, and fondled her.She was so asleep as to be like one ar drugged or hypnotized when at length penrod let her down, and then there came a beautiful happy smile on her face. Penrods arms were still around her some hours later when at length Jennie came to her self as if awakening from a happy Heaven made trace and they tightened instinctively as she forgetting where she was stirred and attempted to rise.At first Jennie could not remember, could not realize what had happened, and why she was so happy. he still felt the happy spell, and she was dazed, and her brain seemed to be in a whirl.

"Jennie dear why not go to sleep",murured Penrod drowizly.

The mists began to clear from her brain, and realization of where she was and what had happened gradually dawned upon her, and she lay for a time silent and petrified by happiness and contentment.Then she fell asleep again and he left her to herself after imprinting a kiss on the foreheads of her sisters. Later Jennie had a horrible dream, a dream which suddenly aroused her from sleep. She saw something hedious standing in the bedroom and with a strangled cry, she jumped from the bed. She could have told how distractingly lovely she looked in her pose on and fright.

255 Her filmy night robe had slipped from one shoulder, her bright hair flowing, and her blue eyes were blazing..whatever it was tried to grab her but she struck it with her hand a resounding slap and thus evaded it by a hairbreadth hairbreadth and sped from the room in a sudden fright and panic pulling her sisters rudely out of their beds to get them aroused and join with her in flight which she succeeded in doing, and they all ran as frantically as they had run from pursuing Glandelinians.The strange creature stood dazed for a few moments, then with a hoarse cry started off in persuit, growling and snarling, but violet and her sisters paid no heed to its cries but shouted loudly for Penrod.Violet and her sisters only wanted to get away from that thing whatever it was, and was resolved to do so even at the cost of being suspected and killed. Though they did not see just then what it really was it as a huge ape which had belonged to one of the generals, and had some how or other escaped from its cage.It was fierce and savage too as dangerous as even a go Gorilla. The guards at the entrance to the apartments cried out in terrified dismay as violet and her sisters sped past them but instead of trying to intercept them fled with them when they told what was wrong instead of raising their rifles to fire at it. down a flight of steps fled violet and her sisters, and along another passage ending in yet another stone staircase staircase at the foot of which passages branched off in several directions.Violet and her sisters could not tell where any of them led, and did not pause to consider, but dashed only blinding down one of them.The passage through which they were running became as gloomy as erebus--as gloomy as the tunnel in the hillside through which they had fled from the persuing Glandelinians.Still they ran on with hands outstretched before them, but blundered at last violently into a wall and were compelled to stop, some of them bumping their heads and noses on the wall.Panting and breathless they strained their ears to listen for sounds of persuit, but they could hear nothing, though before they thought they heard shots but now they heard nothing save the wild beating of their own hearts.violet and her sisters feared no man or soldier, but those fierce Apes god help the one even the strongest man in his clutches.He was as fierce as a demon.Nevertheless violet and her sisters understood they could not be far from the headquarters, and fearing that the savage ape may persue in the passageway for Gin Monkeys are crafty and can follow you swiftly anywhere and did not know which way to turn .Vaguely they wondered as they began to group their way forward again retaining their hands on the wall whence the passage along which they had fled might lead.They prayed that it might lead into the open into some part of the encampment, where they could find a hiding place and be refuged from that savage creature untill it was either recaptred recaptured or shot.Little did they know that the sounds of the shots sh they had heard was from Penrod as hearing their flight he had come to investigate and killed it as it went for him.

At length they saw a glimmer of light ahead, and they advanced cautiously and apprehensively--to find that the passage led to a room of dead childrens bodies through which they had passed with Penrod an hour or two earlier.To their relief Violet,and her sisters found the place deserted, save for the hedious mangled bodies of the slain.The flickering lights cast queer shadows on the murdered children and to violet and her sisters it seemed that some of them were moving and the skulls leering at them. They felt inclined to turn and rush from the place the very atmosphere of which seemed to reek Evil but with an effort they conquered their terror, and their natural courage reasserted themselves though they never stopped praying once.

Surely the enemy generals headquarters is the only place in which to seek sanctuary from that demonish beast."said violet nervously to her sisters."Such a monster.where did that Gorilla ever escape from.We'd be helpless in its grasp. If those generals regard us as chief of girlscouts, we should be able to command their protection."

She caught her breath as a sudden wailing as of children and howling in torment broke out in the chamber above, and at the same moment she and her sisters fancied they heard stern voices and footsteps in the passage leading from the building Penrod had used as his boyscout headquarters headquarters.Violet and her sisters could not guess what was happening above, but the dread of being overtaken by that horrid demonical monster sent them speeding up the steps leading from the hall of butchered children to the inner section of the building, which one of one of the Glandelinian officers had called the place of executions and tortures.The thoughts flashed through their minds that they might escape through the building into the open or try and secure some fire arms to shoot the monster with, for if armed they wouldn't fear any dangerous ape. But at the top of the steps they halted with a sharp sudden intake of breath and with the greatest difficulty supressed a cry of horror. The place where executions sometimes are said to go on were thronged with shouting cursting Glandelinian soldiers, who seemed to be working themselves into a sort of frenzy in their desperate efforts to find places to see what they called a "Big show."

with sabres drawn and shouldered, and all eyes were fixed upon two figures on top of the great slab of stone.One of these was evidently an executor, to judge by the shape of hat he wore and that he was dressed all in black, the other was a little boy absolutely nude bound hand and foot and gagged.The man in black was bending over the prostrate figure of the child brandishing a big long sword.Violet and her sisters were brave, braver than most heroes and heroines ever read of, but this sight, being a rememberance of old appalled the, beyond measure. They were determined to cry out, to rush through the crowd and up the steps to the top of the execution block in the hope that their sudden appearance would strike awe and terror into the hearts of the assembly and give them time to rescue the little boy, but ere they could summon up enough strength and courage the executioner had plunged the so sword into the body of his little victim and the child lay still dead. The frightful scene that followed haunted them for long after and made them ill with horror and disgust, and a hatred for these murderers. Had they been armed they would have taken all risks by shooting the executioner where he stood. Amid the howls and blasphemies of the audience, the Glandelinian exed executioner cut out the entrails of the body, and threw it into a burning fire.Then he rolled the corpse down the steps, at the foot of which the frenzied soldiers flung themselves wildly upon it and cut it to pieces each striving with the other to destroy the body which then was flung into the flames. What happened immediately afterwards poor Violet, and her sisters could hardly tell.Faint and trembling with horror and fearing they'll be victims that way if allowing themselves to be seen spying on this scene they shrank behind one of the great strange stone images that guarded the steps leading down to the place of horrors below and covered their eyes with their hands to shut out the hedious murderousscene.Only by a most supreme effort of will did they prevent themselves from fainting. By the time they had recovered themselves the Glandelinian soldiers had dispersed. Only a few of the Glandelinian officers remained and these were forcing child slaves with pail and water and mop to clean off the blood on the steps. An overpowering impulse to escape into the open air seized Violet and her sisters. Praying desperately, and nerving themselves to the effort, they one by one se stepped cautiously from their place of concealment, sped across the big open square in the bi building their bare feet making no sound on the stone floor darted through the big curtained doorway leading to the outer section of the building, and Daisy who was in the lead ran almost into the arms of Penrod.

A convulsive cry of relief broke from her and her sisters who crowded around him for protsction, and before she realized what happened Penrods arms were around Daisy and Violet.

"Sisters dear" he cried."

"The Vivian Girl Princesses echoed some tall man in gray uniform with a strange gray beard who had been in earnest conversation conversation with Penrod when violet and her sisters rushed headlong from the inner headquarters section.

"In The Vivian Girl Princesses"repeated the old soldier recoiling a pace like one stunned by amazement. Violet, and her sisters were still too scared and upset to pay any heed to him and to find out whether he was a foe or a friend in disguise.Daisy had sobbingly placed her head against Penrods bosom.The shock of what violet, and her sisters had seen, of unexpectedly finding themselves saved again had been almost too much for especially poor tender Jennie.They were all trembling violently and on the verge of fainting.

"What as do frightened you beside that monster I slew my dearest beloved" asked Penrod, soothingly lifting Jennie up in his arms as if she were a small frightened living doll."Why did you not shoot it instead of fly from it."And what had blanched the colour from thy faces and lips my dear sisters.Come with me and I will take care of you."

To poor Jennie his voice seemed to be receding, then it was drowned by a roaring in her ears.She seemed to be falling through space, fancied she heard another voice that sounded as if her father was calling to her from the depths, and she cried out convulsively.Her body went limp in Penrods arms, for she had fainted again. When she finally regained consciousness she found her sisters applying restoratives much in the same manner as they had done on the previous morning after her collaspe.Again poor Jennie had difficulty in remembering what had happened, and when recollection came flooding back to her once more she almost wished that her mind had went blank remained blank.She was spent and exhausted, a violent fit of shuddering seized her, then she broke down again and began to sob hysterically burying her face and gently repulsing her sisters who attempted to soothe her with offered restoratives.The emotional storm spent itself at last, and she lay, limp her breath coming and going sleepingly now very little tears.She heard muffled voices, and listlessly opened her eyes to see a tall bearded man in the uniform of a Glandelinian General who had been in conversation with Penrod in the headquarters building, standing by her bed.

"Drink this Jennie"he ordered somewhat gruffly holding a cup of liquid to her lips, and forcing her to swallow the medicine.

In a dazed and sttttttt

"Don't let no Glandelinians see you doing that though"warned violet almost shep sharply."Oh Penrod you saved us when you shot that horrid beast."

"The fierce Glandelinians may make a mockery of us if they see us really loving each other."said Daisy."Be careful Penrod and Jennie dears."

Penrods smile faded, he glanced toard the entrance and his brow drew together in perplexity.

"No Glandelinians can see us doing this my dearest sisters. What would they do to us if they did?"he demanded quite ingenuously."Don't even boy and girlscouts who are brothers in the Glandelinian armies love one another.Of what are we to be shamed."

"The dangerous Glandelinians will cause us to me seen as fools."Said Joice cautiously glancing toard the door."If we are ever detected and you are not here we would be helpless and entirely at the mercy of these fierce soldiers.They would destroy us too, when they remembered that it was us who they believed caused Hinleys predicament at Big Girl School..The Glandelinians regard themselves as supreior beings, their generals regard themselves as Gods yet they are nothing but beasts and child murderers and we righteously can hate and despise them."

Joice was burning with anger and resentment, yet it came upon her odly enough, that she was saying things in a manner of the grown heroines of a great melodrama, and she would not have been surprised had Penrod laughed sardonically.

He did not laugh but stood still, regarding Joice and her sisterswith an expression of perplexed astonishment for a few minutes.

"So the bearded man who understands the language of three nations is right."he commented at last.."He has tole me that I and you my sisters should have considered first the perils before coming within these Glandelinian armies, but yet we or I could not convince him we came here not of our own free will.At least you my sisters fell here..I have not learned that if any necessary thing needs to be I should in acting as Adeldefob do the duty against the enemy alone..I took you and your sisters believing you could act as my confederates. I wanted to give you the experience as I have when disguised as Adeldefob. This is the first time you have ever seen me as Adeldefob.Did I ever need assistants before when I acted as Adeldefob? I sure did.I used Gemini spies to aid me and they knew long before Father and you did who I really was. I loved you, and wanted to gie to give you a chance of some of my own sort of adventuring so I brought you here just as I have taken any other f ollowers who had pleased me. The girlscouts of the enemy here are different from what you are and are proud and flattered and I cannotdo anything with them and they only obey me because they have to.If they learn who I am and betray us I'll shoot them all girls though they be.They would not dare to dream that I am Schfoeidl Penrod, but perchance you are different, and your beauty scares me for fear you'll be recognized in case somebody is within the for lines who may know you. I made a blunder in doing this,.Tell me sisters dear t did that bearded man tell me the truth when he said I must try to have you go throughthe adventure now as leaving is impossible unless the army advances. And was it on purpose through some scheme of an enemy who secretly recognizes you that that mad ape was turned loose and directed into where !"

Violet, and her sisters did not Know what to answer..Jennie's brain was in a turmoil, and Penrods questions and explanatal explanations had but added fuel to the fires of her anger and resentment.It galled her to imagine that somebody might have deliberately turned that fierce beast loose upon her and her sisters as evidently Penrod suspected was the case because some one may be suspicious of him and his sisters.Moreover it enraged her to find she and her sisters were apparently only seven of many millions of little girls who should have to go through many adventures of horrifying and thrilling sort and never get good results out of it. She could not have explained even to herself why, the last fact in rankled rankled so much, and that added to her exasperation.

"I saw you run away from that gorilla last night to the generals headquarters." said Penrod after an expectant pause."I was glad you did as it was your only chance. Sound asleep as you were did one of you hear it and awake on time.?"

"I cannot account how I was aroused"said jennie"but it was I first who saw it almost atthe foot of the bed foaming at the mouth..

"I do believe it was deliberately turned loose on us."Violet stormed clenching her hands and stamping herfoot in righteous fury."Somebody suspects us and didn't have the nerve to tell and so sent that brute into the room."

"It may be poss ible"said Penrod.

"What shall we do ,try to get away from here?"requested Daisy.

"No sister dear, as God has brought you by love, we shall with His help conquer these Glandelinian fools--as we have conquered them many times again untill the Glandelinian authorities are glad and eager to submit themselves and surrender to us."said Penrod slowly shaking his head. But we must not do things too suddenly sisters dear.By your bravery, by all you have already done and your lovely goodness and love of God makes me the more eager to possess you closer and closer and add to the fires of my ardour.Stay close beside me do not get out of sight and all will be well and the enemy won't conquer you ."

"The Glandelinians will never conquer us, never never,"exclaimed Jennie passionately."We have never submitted and never will.We would rather die.As for deserting our post even despite the danger of holding on, I loathe the very thought.Our love for each other and country is too holy a thing to make light of that way."

Again Penrods wrinkled his brows and appeared to be perplexed.

"So too the bearded man who seems to understand the ways of these Glandelinians is right"He said calmly"He insists that I should guard you and your sisters more closely, and have you appear as if you were only Glandelinian child scouts and not as my sisters, saying that if you are ever under suspicion the Glandelinians will go through such methods as to cause your detection.I will tell him that you loathe to give up the interprize perilous as it is and that he is wrong in saying that such as we should go together as plain boy and girlscouts of the Glandelinian army.But you have not told me sisters dear why you prefer to not chance the situation when after yourf rightful experience last night."

"It would not do us any good"burst out Violet chocking with fear and fury "f we do something to allow ourselves to be discovered those Glandelinians will drive us to madness, and if they do they'll capture us, and treat us as we saw them treat that little boy on the big slab of stone.I can never forgive those wicked glandelinian murderers for what they have done unless they repent. which they never will.If they are captured by any of our men I or my sisters shall never save them from the wrath wrath of the Abbiennia authorities."

"But you prefer to remain here as you are as my dearest sisters and not disguise yourselves as mere Glandelinian girlscouts?"inquired Penrod in the same calm patient tone he had used before.

"No, no neither way would do."protested Jennie, white with fear of the thin thing now."Neither that.We'd rather get away from this section untill the one who may recognize us is gone."

"Gladly would I sent you home"said Penrod"but it's impossible for us to get away. You must either remain as you are, bring my sisters or disguise as Glandelinian girlscouts, and it is for you for sifty's sake to choose."drawled Penrod."You need not be afraid.I'm investigation to find who turned that beast loose."

"Though we do feel scared we will never give it up."insisted Jennie, feeling inclined to cry in sheer vexation. "I and my sisters too hate the very thought of being afraid though we are.We want to be free-- free and within our own safe camps again but we cannot give up now.We must see it through."

"You shall have your wish."responded Penrod with a half smile. As"as hesaid the last word he had glanced out of the room and seeing nobody there, his left and right arm were around Jennie and Joice who were the nearest, and he was Kiss ing them hungrily.He took turns in embracing them all till Jennie came last, and he did it to her so good that she cried out in breathless happiness, and she was like a happy dove in Penrods arms, and he laughed off the fears of her sisters his arms tightening around her as though she was embraced by an angel.

"Why give up all hope when you have me?Jennie dear and your sisters?"he as Ked between Kisses.."The tall bearded man who understands the Will of God has said you and your sisters were destined by Heaven to not only be the best little sisters any boy ever had, but to be the most brave and wonderful little girls in the whole world besides the prettiest and the happiest, and that right here we must do things to make a fool out of thevenemy for what you have suffered at their hands. But what matters dangers since we have always escaped and you have me beloved sisters.

Jennie though happy in his arms glanced suslous suspiciously toard the door but naturally no one was within sight or nearing. All the child slaves had disappeared as soon as Penrod had entered the apartment to see his sisters.

"For the love of God we won't give up will we sisters dear?"asked Penrod again seating himself on the edge of the bed and still holding her in his embrace.So happy now did jennie feel that it seemed as if her strength had failed her, and her happy soul yearned for even Heaven and god at that moment and Penrods passionate Kisses and caresses had sapped away her fears of any of the Glandelinians even if they had seen this. She lay panting happily in his brotherly arms, feeling contented, dazed and yet protected as she gazed into the glowing blue eyes of her brother so close to her own.

Just from happiness her senses were swooning as Penrod Kissed her again and again murmuring low passionate words of brotherly love and endearment in his drawling musical voice, and the pleasurable half mischievious glances of her sisters made her remind herself that she really should be in the arms of one of the angels. His voice too was like a lullaby her Kisses were dragging her wits.

Not untill sometime after Penrod had left her did her strength of body and mind return, and then Jennie buried her burning face in the pillows and

...pt in their happiness at one recall of ... loving and protecting brother. She and her sisters really had.... she prayed that she and her sisters might have the chance to do a lot of good for him too, and cried desperately, to think of some way of putting things over on the enemy and gain his better love still by bringing through all his expectations. Then came a swift strange feeling and she sprang up, ashamed again of her weakness herself, vowing that she would find means of doing things as soon as possible. She found that a number of child slaves had re-entered the room, and were clustered together near the doorway, watching her and her sisters half fearfully, half curiously, and she flushed in shame and anger at the thought that they probably knew or guessed what had been happening, and would gossip among themselves about her agitation.

She reminded herself that she must maintain the high dignity and prestige of her race as she hastily blinked away the tears from her eyes, and drew herself up proudly."

"You may go"she exclaimed sharply."I wish to be alone with them"pointing to her sisters."And mind you tell no one what you seen or we won't help you get free."

The child slaves may not have understood the words, but there was no mistaking the gesture which accompanied them, and they literally fled from her presence.Left alone, her sisters advised her to wash herself, and so he laved her face in cold water, brushed her disordered hair, and tried to compose herself... She was trying to plan among her sisters what to do, when one of the soldiers appeared in the doorway, saluted, and made some announcement in the language of the Glandelinians..violet and her sisters did not grasp its purport as he did not voice himself very loudly but she understood the word"""Mysterious man" and while she was trying to figure to herself the rest of the soldiers form a tall man appeared at the entrance of the apartment.He was a very strange and very startling figure, for the reason that he wore a most hedious mask or hood of a very blue gray color with something in the form of a big moon on top which reminded violet, and her sisters oddly enough of the grotesque big hoods or masks worn by some of the pictured performers she and her sisters had observed in Arabian pantomimines or carnavals, and his long gray and black designed robes were heavily embroidered with gold and silver.He wore a double cartridge belt, two brace of long pistols, and a sabre.

"Hail little Queens of the Abbiemnian nation and of the City of God."he exclaimed exclaimed in English, and his voice through the ugly hood he wore sounded somewhat as if it came through an uncanny trumpet.

Violet and her sisters were startled out of his their wits by his announcements and were about to draw their pistols, when he suddenly raised his hand in a commanding posture and said almost sternly-

"Stop.I'm no enemy nor a Glandelinian"(in english.)

"Then who in the world are you and what do you want?"Demanded Angeline very sharply also in English drawing herself up haughtily."If you are a Glandelinian and trying to decieve us don't think you'll escape for we can------"

"I am what I am and knew all the time since you first came that you were here with your brother and have been searching for you."the mysterious man answered, and to violet, and her sisters it seemed as if there was great surprise in his voice at their attitude toard him."Here I am, known as the "Bearded Man Mystery by all Glandelinians, who am in secret in league with the Christian cause understands and knows all your intentions, and even many of the most powerful christian and even Glandelinian generals stands in awe of me, while whether they know me or not all Glandelinian generals fear me.How come you and your sisters here Princesses of Abbiemnia.Violet Jennie Joice and so on."?

Violet and her sisters were puzzled, frightened, startled and annoyed.

"How do you know our names!"she demanded.

"I know more things"the mysterious man answered, and again Violet and her sisters got the impression that he was somewhat uncanny.

"How do we understand who you are?"demanded Violet."No matter who you are we will die right here before we will satisfy your desire by giving you any information.Get out of here."

"Hold"said the man raising his hand again commandingly."I told you before it is not safe for me here to ref reveal even to you who I am but I said I was no enemy nor a Glandelinian.Ain't that convincing enough enough.And if you won't tell me I suspect anyhow.Can it be that you came here in search of information as to why Hanley don't retreat, and most important of all in search of your Father Emperor Vivian?You are absolutely Violet and her sisters, the daughters of Emperor Vivian."

"If you know that, then how did you find that out?"gasped Joice in astonishment.

"Have I not told you that I know most things?"?" retorted the mysterious man.

"What has also been revealed to me is how you entered the encampments here, and why because of the dangers here you almost gave yourselves to the full protection of Penrod your brother.Was it a case of unsaid and unspeakable danger at first moment?Yes. True Penrod is a great protector, but I cannot understand the daughters of Emperor Vivian so readily surrendering themselves, particularly to him even when it may happen he too could get into circumstances where he could not even protect himself.He can protect him more than he can protect you as you seven are immensely angel possessed and don't seem to realize it.You literally fell to that ledge of rock six thousand feet below and landed there in that hard stone and are not even so much as scratched.In the dark in running through that tunnel to run out entirely and stepped into empty space. And after that long dreadful fall you're here as if nothing happened.Are you now getting afraid of the Glandelinians as you were afraid of the the mad ape that stolen in to your room."?

The words stung Violet and her sisters to anger and apprehension.Their white faces flushed, Violet bit her lips and clenched her hands.

"Whether we did give ourselves to him or not is our own affair."she flushed out passionately."He is our brother and has a right to have possession of us as we have a right to possess him.He protects us, and too we never thought a moment that we wouldn't protect him if he needs needs protection.In fact would dare any one to try and harm him."

"Well spoken excuse my mistake then"said the man."God too has conquered you and your sisters by love as well as you love him"the muffled voice from inside the hood continued."We all believe you were sent by God himself, that you are His little spouses, and we are right or otherwise you wouldn't be the unusual little girls you are.No matter what you've went through you never had the slightest failure.It must have been preordained by God.Had these Glandelinians here understood who you were, instead of harming you they would be immensely afraid of you and run away so you wouldn't get information.They wouldn't do to you what you seen them do to that little toy because they're too cowardly to even touch you.They are ignorant however and that,ll give you fair play.I come to give you a mission I want performed.But I heard rumors you were becoming scared, and were advising Penrod to give up this duty you have here and that you and he should go to the christian lines where it is safe."?

"Yes---indeed---we will not"exclaimed Catherine passionately."I hate Glandelinia and even that ape couldn't make us give up our enterprise.We fled from it because it was possessed by demons, not by hydrophobia as some thought.We know a possessed thing anywhere when we saw it."

"IT was well you fled from him"said the "mysterious man." You would not have had a chance to get out again.The angels preserved you by making you and your sisters flee and by awakening Jennie first to the peril. But no one turned him loose against you or your sisters.The ape got out by himself.He was nearest to this apartment and therefore entered.The demons possessing him were scared because of you but the ape was not.The reason he persued not because from fear of you the demons held back."Are you going to give up the enterprise."

"We will not.We hate Glandelinia's horridly sinfuly cause."

The "mysterious man was silent for a few minutes, and violet and her sisters knew instinctively that he was studying them through the eyeholes of his grotesque grotesque hood.They wished that they could see his face for his voice almost sounded familiar(it was Gingigore the Head of the Gemini) but they could not see even his eyes, and he too had a power which though they were angel possessed prevented them from reading his thoughts, and they found themselves bewildered and awed, and a little frightened of him too. Once he said he was a christian and not a Glandelinian, and as his voice sounded as somebody who and her sisters were acquainted with, violet and her sisters wondered who this "mysterious man" could be, and who not only knew why they were here, but knew something about their Father. They wondered if he was the mysterious man who had been with Penrod in the generals Headquarters on the previous night, and who had they believed spoken in English to Jennie when he administered to her the sleeping draught.It seemed to violet, and her sisters, in their agitated state that he too was almost some strange celestial being in disguise if not an uncanny being, and that there must be facts even now that for some reason or other angels may appear to good persons in some disguise.They felt sure now he was not of the Glandelinians for he did not converse as one does and no Glandelinian in the world really can speak English or any other Language.

"If you have some important mission for us then tell it to us before any one comes"said Jennie.

"I'll tell you and I understand it'll go to your hearts"said the "Mysterious man."I hv have tried to rescue them but failed.I'm sure you can accomplish it in time.In a portion of this Glandelinian army unbelievable tortures rivalling those of the middle ages are being inflicted upon about a hundred child slaves it was revealed to me in evidence brought to me by a number of spies.Solowly details of the distressing horrors had began to seep out to me by or from my spies.Many of the spies and other child slaves admitted to me they had frequently heard the screams of children and cries of anger coming from a certain child slave plantation on the edge of the camps others told of seeing last winter these children absolutely nude standing at toil in the plantations in the coldest weather, and finally one of the spies a young brother of one of the Gemini who had apparently acted as an overseer for several months unfolded to his comrades a story of cruelty and deliberate torture that they found it difficult difficult to believe. What you have seen and suffered I'll have to say not intending to offend you is really nothing in comparison to what these went and are going through. On April the fourth last the spies opened a secret council in a abandoned farm house outside the enemy lines a mile away all shocked by what they had seen and heard and all that had already been told. Several of the children even had died. Every seat and bench was filled and those who couldn't get seats among the experienced spies clung to rafters and stood in the isles and at the rear of the room. The evidence they all gave was a tale of continued torture of defenseless child slaves, who never even after the most brutal assaults and cruel blows complained and who suffered in almost complete silence pain and injury that would have broken even you down to probable death. I'm not exaggerating what I tell you. If you believe I am just trying to work something on you Princesses you will soon see for yourselves. While one of my spies Edward Thom sat without changing his detail to me confirmed the reports as the details were revealed before the court Marshall, and joseph Hanson to give in firm and emotional voice of the things he had witnessed. A hushed courtroom I was leading as Judge them the silence only broken by the frequent sobs of the spies who heard the story told and as the witnesses concluded the testimony we had planned that only you and your sisters can rescue them. joseph Hanson told me he went into the Glandelinian armies to spy for information, and he stayed there until the end of Feburary when he said he could no longer remain and be a witness to the constant torture of children whom it was impossible for him to release or save. Many of the child slaves he said were pleasant children or are, some are small for their age and are very sad but it was not untill he had been there for several hours that he discovered the reason for their sadness. Many times in his presence he said, the child had been beaten both with a lash, and a wire rope, and at times other children had been whipped with a catonine tails or a scourge, and clubs some times were used, they had often been on hot days refused food and water and at night after unendurable toil had been fastened or chained to the floor of their child slave huts and forced to sleep uncovered on the cold splintery floor with some times a pail of water within sight to increase their thirst without their chance to obtain the water. Many times too he told me during his presence there the children pleaded for a glass or cup of water, but not only were refused but were whipped for the request. Many times they pleaded for bread but it was neiin denied them. At night in winter when the enemy masters and overseers and the army were in their warm beds the poor children were chained up to the hut walls, chains that are used for prisoners placed around their legs and forced to lie down on the bare cold floor to sleep. Not even a sheet or any covering was given them to keep warm and handcuffs were fastened on their wrists to prevent them from freeing themselves. Every day too the children were forced to go out into the cold and shovel snow and do other toil. Totally nude boys and girls they would toil there shivering and shaking sometimes even wringing out clothes in ice cold water. As soon as they had finished washing what little they had for their own clothes, they would be forced to put them on again not even being allowed to wait for them to dry. Some of them died because of this. One day last winter it was so cold that even the soldiers of both sides would not go out to do even any scouting yet the poor slaves were forced to do the toilsome work in the cold just the same. They were nude and barefooted and when they came inside they were frostbitten and some died. Their masters were there but just laughed, and beat the children for being so slow. Treatement of these child ren was worse than even the persecute ons of christians of old." the mysterious man continued. "One of my followers identified a strap that was produced by a child slave as one that was used to beat his little sister. The glandelinian Master frequently used to turn over a strong heavy chair and lay the child over it" he told me. "He would then tie the childs arms and legs to the rungs and back so that she could not move and would beat her unmercifully. Sometimes the child would scream but other times she would be perfectly silent tears flowing from her eyes. It was pitiful indeed. Their screams could sometimes be heard far away as some spies testified. Sometimes I saw myself one of them beaten when he was chained up against the wall and he would cringe into a corner like a whipped dog. One overseer I saw seize a child by the long hair and hurl her across the road and see her flop against a small tree. The childs hair was pulled out by the roots but she would never resist or cry out. Some of the little girl slaves were forced within buildings of the plantation to do the chores of a hired girl. They would be made to scrub the floors while a soldier stood over them with a rifle at the ready to either beat them or stick them with a bayonet if any of them paused to rest. Time after time these children were also refused a glass of water, and one day one of my overseers saw while a child was scrubbing the floor to drink from the pail that she was using for scrubbing. The water in it was filthi filty filthy. The overseer or guard caught her and beat her untill she was senseless."

Violet, and her sisters stunnded as this shocking story of the condition of these child slaves were unfolded were still however to hear the most dramatic and distressing part of the tale. It was to be told how one of these child slaves a boy weary and sore from many beatings, from constant strangulations and smotherings and other tortures starved and refused water to drink was in the end unconsciously to destroy his own life as the result of a cruel plot devised by her military masters... "One night" the mysterious man continued" one of the spy witnesses heard the master and one of the child slave overseers in some secret conversation. The spy overheard by eavesdropping that the two scoundrels decided to leave the child loose by himself that night to see what he would do. And on a table in the overseers room, where the little boy would be sure to see it they left a can of liquid which no one could at first tell what it was. In the morning when they came down they found the child crumpled up on the floor his ragged clothes wet through with the liquid and the can tipped over beside him. I will have to say "unfortunately" the little boy while he had been able to reach up and get the can had been unable to drink it from over weakness and had collapsed spilling the liquid which turned to be naphia over him. The rascals before the boy who was not dead could get to his feet set the clothing on fire and the boy met a frightful fiery death. One other of my spy witnesses called to the stand during that council also attempted as far as he was able to explain the cruelty that he admitted had occured within his own eye sight, but his face went white and he fell ill from what he had observed and has not recovered yet. Yet as far as he told he had seen eight children and when first observed by him they had been all equally intelligent and healthy untill recently when he noticed that for some reason or other they had began to decline. They seemed to have lost some of their brightness "he told the court," and developed a habit of not finishing their words when they spoke. They also had a habit of getting up in the night and searching through things in the rooms and upsetting them. I had seen Glandelinians give the children some beatings but at first it did not appear unusual, as landelinians always beat child slaves. The straps and chains produced the spy willingly admitted were those he soon discovered the rascals rascals used upon the child. They even used cat o nine tails to whip them with and had purchased at the masters request a padlock to be sure the children would not free themselves of their chains when left alone at night. He was then asked about the pleadings of these children for food and water, and the man without hesitation replied "He didn't remember seeing the children get a swallow of water, and recieved only one small piece of bread a day. He too at first never noticed any marks or scars on the children untill on one occasion he saw that one of the little girls had a bruised eye, and one boy was once thrown across the room. He had seen one man do this on one occassion to a child and in ambush had shot him dead. He admitted during last winter these with all other child slaves of the plantation had been forced to go outside on the coldest mornings and either sweep or shovel snow wash clothes or do other toilsome work but said that it would have been folly then to in interfere but secretly when not seen had grabbed the children and rubbed their nude bodies hard with snow so that no bad results would follow their being being out in such cold weather. Asked to explain why one of the children attempted to drink Arsenic and whether she had been forced to swallow it in water the man replied briefly-- That she was not forced to swallow it but she was decieved into believing it was a glass of water. The child had been left in a room unchained for it was said the Glandelinians wanted to see what she should do. The Glass of arsenic was left in on a table. When the Glandelinians appeared I saw myself that the glass lay on the floor in pieces and the girl was lying on the floor beside it. I believed she must have swallowed it, but when the Glandelinians were gone he found she was still alive, and had a chance to get away with her and care for her.

After hearing all this evidence the jury collected by me brought in a virdict declaring that some of these child slaves had come to their deaths after being tortured. Continual mistreatment by their masters was given as the direct cause of death. What had really brought us here into the enemys lines was because among so many of the christian soldiers there had been strange conversations of the mysteries surrounding the child slaves who had never been seen with the more classier child slaves of this district. I was surprised and suspicious because the conversations continued, in the tents around camp fires and where in the company streets soldiers gathered to converse of the strange deaths and sufferings of the little child slaves , the very child scouts paused in their own dutues to converse about these strange conditions and soon but vaguely rumors very startling began to spread throughout the whole christian lines. There was something very mysterious about the sufferings of child slaves in a particular plantation and everyone buildad up such an atmosphere of horror about that plantation that I suspecting some fiendish outrages and crimes had been committed there I decided to investigate, investigate with my following. We managed to capture if you call it capture, one of the child slaves and an examination of her nude body revealed a sort of emaciated form covered with numerous scars and bruises, and around the childs throat was a blue circle showing that she had been strangled almost to death half an hour before. You will know now do what you can to rescue the surviving children of this plantation" and he changed the language to "Abbiennian" and Your Father told me he commands it. It is not fitting that you and your sisters so unusally good and holy as you are and so brave would be willing to see this go on when it is in your power to rescue them as soon as possible. Fenrod who has taken possession of you as you did of him as you say will assist you. He is willing to do whatever you wish done--and you shall lay your plans before him to day--yes within the next hour, but don't do anything until I come again and tell you my own plans."

"But if that---that is the ---the -case" we don't want to delay just for plans" protested Hettie, bewildered and scared. "Who are you anyhow to detact to us who are the Vivian Girl Princesses? Are you Father or somebody else in disguise. Are you Rodney Graves or Gingigore. If not we won't accept no orders and will punish you for dictating to us if you had no right to. How is it that you can converse to us in English when we understand that no one else besides us can speak in English only Fenrod, Evans and Angelinia Aronburg, and who know who we are, and why we are here for?"

"That will be revealed to you and your sisters in due course" was the answer. "It is sufficient for you to understand for the present that it is the will of your Father and Uncle too and the will of your Mother and Brothers that she that you should conspire with your brother Fenrod to secure the rest of these cruelly treated children as soon as circumstances will allow allow. It will vex and grieve all those you love best if you refuse because you are afraid or believe that I am dictating to you as I am not only telling you and you're to do it or not do it as you may see fit. Fenrod too will be as responsible as you if he doesn't get you to do it. You love him and God too and I am sure you won't refuse under any conditions whether I dictate or not. In time you will glory in the fact that not only did you secure information here why Manley doesn,t retreat, but also in the fact that you rescued many child slaves and especially these I mentioned, and be proud to acknowledge it to your friends."

"Oo, no we won't refuse" gasped Catherine and Daisy together.

"Tell me" put in Angeline "what do you know about our father? Why do you say it is his will? Is he alive or here. Are you him in disguise and---!"

She stopped, unable to complete the sentence her brain in a whirl.

"Your Father despite the rumors you heard has never left the christian line, and when you return to the christian line you will see him again." said the Mystery man. "No I'm not your father, and would not be an imposter and force you to believe so. Have no fear. Get Fenrod to help you into your enterprize, then proceed to carry on the duty you had started to do. In due time I'll help you and your sisters with Fenrod return with all these child slaves in this whole army to your own but the time may be far distant. Meanwhile you will do what you can and just now don't leave the army here even though you can. It cannot be possible for you and your sisters that you prefer to hear what I told you and which is true and let it go by without doing something, as your interest in the welfare of child slaves is immense. You cannot fail fail in anything, you--- the Abbiennian Princesses."

Violet and her sisters found themselves now utterly at a loss to find out how to answer answer. It seemed to them that the weird hooded figure must be some disguised supernatural being or was a sort of military saint gifted with some ammount of supernatural powers.

"You will converse with him at once" resumed the "mystery man" in tones now of entreaty. "you can accomplish everything you set out to do."

"Of what use would it be for us to rescue those child slaves if we're condemned to spend too many days here and cannot return to the christian lines." demanded Jennie bitterly beginning to recover her self possession to some extent. "Why should I and my sisters allow ourselves to be forced into that perilous undertaking and have Fenrod do so when so many of your spies are afraid to do it themselves. why us all the time.?"

"It is because you and your sisters alone can do it."

"Oh bosh. But we will nevertheless."

"Fenrod your brother loves you" continued the man. "He alone from all the experiences had had understands more than even you and your sisters do how the glandelinians have wronged you. He is your predestined brother, and if you and he cooperate together you'll surprise the world from this adventure. It will be your duty to teach your brother the ways you do as he has to teached you many things in the art of defense against enemies. Your duty is plain before you. With Fenrod to help you will do the work your Father would have done, learning the cause why Manley cannot retreat, frustrate those generals intentions, rescue all the child slaves, capture unusual records and forming records of your own which which will not only astonish your own Father and nation but the whole world and be a happy joy to God is blessed Mother and the Angels and Saints."

Once again violet, and her sisters found themselves at a loss for words. The muffled voice from inside the hedious, barbaric hood seemed to Violet and her sisters like that of an oracle giving even them orders which must be obeyed.

"Tell me who are you?" Jolice demanded presently. "Are you man, or angel in disguise? before us?"

"I am no angel in disguise." he replied. "I am a mystery man who will direct you in your conspiracy to rescue those child slaves and free all others and will aid you and your brother. In good time you will----"

He broke off for at that moment, Fenrod entered the apartment.

"It is settled" resumed the Mystery man turning to the young boy Prince. "Your sisters will plan it with you at once. They realize the situation now, that it is their duty to themselves and their God. I will arrange for the council in a secret place where no one will disturb us as soon as possible."

He saluted and strode from the room without waiting for any response the skirts of his embroidered robes flapping round his big ankles. Fenrod stood silent for a few moments, regarding Violet and her sisters bright eyed and intently, and she or Violet and her sisters wondered if he under stood what the strange man had come to see them for.

"I do not understand what he told you sisters dear but it is well dear Princesses and I am glad and Thank God" he said softly at last. "That strange bearded man has great wisdom and understands and knows the Will of God. If we did not do His Will we would be losing our good reputation, bad luck and harm might befall us as he has said, and my heart would break if you went wrong beloved sisters or if you were a harmed or if you were taken from me by disaster. It is well that we should go forth with that rescue plan as he stated what it is though I cannot tell, but you can do it better Princesses than they can for you do not seem to be ordinary mortals. Perchance you will no longer feign to be scared of your daring adventures, and will gladly surrender to any deed of good purpose when we find we can fool even this Glandelinian army and rescue all the child slaves and secure the information we are after.."

He made a movement as if to embrace Jennie, but she flung out her hands to ward him off for she saw a number of glandelinian soldiers pass by.

"Don't not now" she exclaimed hastily. "Don't do it. We can't bear to imagine what will happen if we are discovered. I--I-- don't want to go on with this dangerous mission--but oh we,re so helpless, we can't bear to think of what those child slaves suffer. If it is our duty to secure those child slaves he told us about I suppose I must submit in doing it at whatever the cost-- although we have gone through adventure of same horrors before. Even if we didn't succeed then it wouldn't be out fault. But we must succeed."

"The bearded mystery man understands, and he has said that it was ordained that we conspire to rescue those child slaves and if we do succeed you and me and they too will be happy indeed and God Will Bless our undertaking." Fenrod said quietly and gravely. "He understands the Will of God and he has revealed many things about you my dear sisters that I didn't understand before, and there fore I know that no matter what the difficulty and peril you have never given up a plan you have formed."

"Who is he" Jessie Vie let curiousity temporarily overcoming her other fingers.

"I do not know" replied Fenrod shaking his golden. "It is said by the glandelinian generals that he appeared among them suddenly from the lower halls of their headquarters, in which child slaves are slain for not doing their work. Others say he came from the strange lay labyrinths in the hills yonder in which no one could enter and come out. He Speaks as if he was a great Gemini spy and it is said that he can do wonders. But I waste time." he added in altered tones. "We must prepare for a strange and mysterious shot journey. You must be garbed as the chief of Glandelinian girlscouts. I will summon your supposed to be child slaves and gives orders for a great procession. That is to throw off all suspicion. The whole encampment in this locality shall have some sort of rejoicing and while it is all going on we're form our plans."

He caught the hands of each of his sisters as he finished and kissed them, then hurried from the room. Violet herself sat down limply and tried to collect her thoughts while her sisters went to see out of some of the windows. The sensation of unreality still persisted for her. Everything seemed to her as if it was some strange night mare dream. The strange mystery man with his face concealed by a hedious Gargoylian Curde Hood but who spoke English as well as Abbiennian, and des pite the face that she and her sisters are unusual p angel possessed Princesses- commanded them to obey the command of their Fawther--who seemed able to read the thoughts of her and her sisters, and who c ouldn't read his, surely he was some strange figment or being in her imaginati imagination. nd all he wanted was that they save those cruelly treated child slaves.He had even commanded her and her sisters to do so to increase her "honour"with God and His Blessed Mother"and she and her sisters had tact tacitly agreed to do his bidding--why she understood not.That she, and her sisters--who had been always so sure of themselves--so convinced that they were mistresses of their own destiny, should do the bidding of a strange mystery man, and carry on an unusual adventure within a dangerous Glandelinian army and conspire with Penrod whose heart had possessed their own, when they should be commanding him to go and do it, seemed absurd and unbelievable.Why was it that every one said they alone could not it hat was the matter with these men of the Geminil Did they suddenly get cold feet or didn't understand how to go about it.violet bowed her head in her hands feeling humbled and humbl humiliated. She reflected bitterly and angrily that she and her sisters and Penrod were now it in little better position than the child slaves themselves. he yet revolted against the idea of letting the child slaves told to her about remaining in the hands of such cruel masters, while realizing that to refuse to do it too at any cost would make her and her sisters seem turning cowards in the eyes of the world.

"I and my sisters won't back out but God Dearest help us.I don't know what to do?"she whispered."That mystery man he seemed almost to bring a message from our father who is not here but in the christian lines after all bidding me and my sisters save those poor child slaves and carry on the duty of finding out why Manley don't retreat after being whipped in that terrible battle, which Father might have done here, but didn't.it does not seem to matter though whether we carry on that secret rescue expedition or not. If we do it by force we'll ourselves be at the mercy of those rascally brutes, but if we do it by stealth we may have some power,--yes power to even protect ourselves from them and probably make them beasts our prisoners.If we capture them we(will---"

A sound of movements in the room made her lift her hand and her sisters to retreat suddenly from the windows to find that at least a doze n child slaves all girls had entered their room, some of them bearing splendid girl scout uniforms and that all were waiting respectfully but expectantly to do their bidding.Violet, and her sisters realized they had been sent to array them--as befits girlscouts of the highest order as Penrod had said---for their mysterious journey and Jennie laughed ~~mirthlessly~~ mirthlessly as she and her sisters rose to submit themselves to their attentions. She regretted that so many of these slaves couldn't speak in Abbiennian or English. One of these could but they didn't understand that just hen.They robed Violet and her sisters in magnificent uniforms of blue gray in beautifully embroidered uniforms, and gave them such a wealth of ammunication ammunition and cartridge belts and weapons that they caught their breath and their blue eyes widened in wonder.Truly Violet reflected the "Mysterious Man" had been right when he said that Penrod had found out that they were to be arrayed thus, but what use was all this finery if it could not help them buy the freedom of those child slaves.They were crowned with elaborate girlscout hats covered with colored feathers set in a gray top, and when at last their toilet was completed and as they glanced at each other and looked in the mirror they could scarcely recognize the reflection as of themselves.

If ever they had in a sentimental moment tried to picture themselves as Glandelinian girlscouts, the mental pictures had been of girls in gray satin uniforms of plain form very different i vision from that they observed in the mirror.

Violet, and her sisters had never been able to understand how Glandelinian girlscouts of high commission ever attired themselves, simply because they had never met any of them who represented their ideal of them whom they could figure on in imati imating in disguise, but in their wildest dreamsthey would never have pictured them as they themselves were arrayed, and never too had they ever pictured any Glandelinian boyscout as anything like the magnificent barbaric figure she found as she and her sisters found awaiting them when they were escorted to his own room where stood Penrod, surrounded by boy and girlscouts of noble uniform.He wore an enormous feathered hat an elaborately embroidered gray uniform trousers and coat while from his shoulders hung a long black cloak made of satin.Beside him stood a gorgeously uniformed boyscout also well armed and uniformed whom they could believe was Timothy Groveton in disguise and beside and behind him were several attendants well armed.

Violet and her sisters together tought instinctively of of ole Solomon or Solomon in all his glory and of Sheba's Queen, and found themselves wondering confusedly if even Babylon, Tarshish, or Tyre could have equally equalled such a display of magnificence and riches for an army for practically every one of the men and officers grouped around Penrod were rich garments or uniforms great head dresses and were armed to the teeth..

But Violet, and her sisters were too bewildered to think clearly and the events that followed were but a confused memory....

All she and even her sisters recollected subsequently was being acclaimed by the assembly of the Glandelinian soldiers, who not understanding h who he was and believing Penrod was a big Glandelinian boyscout paid him homage as he took Jennie's and Violet's hand and led her and the others up the steps of his headquarters from which he addressed the gathering in their own tongue.Then a long procession was formed, and violet, and her sisters and Penrod, were escorted to the generals headquarters where they were greeted by many officers and boy and girlscouts, some with brilliant uniforms on, and also in high hats others wearing hedious hoods but all in their ceremonial uniforms and robes. violet and her sisters noticed that on the central square of the room something in the form of a cross had been set up, and Violet and her sisters wondered vaguely about th Fe. A hooded man , whom she and her sisters recognized as the one who had addressed her and her sisters in English, and ordered her and her sisters to rescue the child slaves who were cruelly cruelly treated took change of the proceedings, and began to recite what Violet and her sisters assumed was some sort of an oration but of this violet and her sisters were uncertain at first as he spoke the Glandelinian tongue. and his voice also sounded indistinct through the hood Then after a time he began to speak in English, and violet and her sisters understood that indeed he was telling them something about what only they understood and knew. As in a dream they heard their own names pronounced in English, heard themselves say "I will"in english heard Penrods voice repeating something after the strange Mylstery man, but the whole thing seemed unreal and most fantastic and to them it was as if it awas a a sort of strange underworld burlesque of a event, although the voice of the mystery man was solomn, and the crowd silent and attentive.violet and her sisters were thinlin g confusedly of some strange scenes they had attented by complsion in other Glandelinian Armies as she and her sisters signed their names at the bidding of the my mysterious man on a parchment before being conducted into the inner rooms of the generals headquarters, where at a big table a number of strange generals were in consultation.violet and her sisters were too confused mentally even to attempt to understand the meaning of it all.

Violet and her sisters heaved a a great sigh of relief when at length the great proceedings were over and they again found themselves in the open air, being assisted by Penrod to mount some veryb fine horses, which rode through the company streets of which were thronged with myraids of brilliantly attired Glandelinian soldiers wearing every conclevable decoration on their uniformed coats.Everywhere the horses and i their riders were greeted with lour enthusatisi enthusiastic cries of a acclamanation.Child slaves strewed beautiful flowers on the company street, and when the party on horses were halted from time to time magnificently attired men crowded about it to kneel and lay offerings of gold and jewels at the feat of their boy scout leader and his fair sisters. The shouting sevr served to only cause violet and her sisters to be bewildered and confused for a time, but as the horses continued on its triumphal progress, their brains began to clear after a while and they were able to notice their surroundings and of what was happening.They saw that the city of encampments were more beautiful and beautiful and wonderful than they had imagined.There were many large tents mostly tents and few buildings all striped red yellow and blue.Presently a portion of the city of encampments were left behind, and they rode onward along a broad finely paved road or highway, and which led led to a greater building, and a great strange circular Sink hole about eight hundred feet across with almost perpendicular sides descending to the surface of the water about two hundred and fifty feet below the level of the raised road.

"Here the Glandelinians punish child slaves by throwing them into the deep pit."said Penrod in a whisper as they halted."It is said that this is the one dreaded spot in this locality, and the water below is scalding hot.."

He dismounted from his horse as he spoke, helped his sisters to dismount and drew Catherine and Daisy to his side and allowed his other sisters to come as near as they dared without falling in.Violet and her sisters gazed down into the deep dark wa waters over two hundred feet below them, and it flashed on their minds that here was a horrid way of murdering child slaves hurling them down into it.Daisy unconsciously had stepped a little too close to the edge and slipped and would have fallen in but Penrod clutched her around the waist and drew her to him just in the proper time.

"You almost fell in Jen Daisy dear."said Penrod horrified."Here child slaves are thrown and if you had went down no one could save you unless the angels miraculously saved you."

"But I could have swam untill a long rope was thrown to me"said Daisy.

"You don't understand"said Penrod"See that steam rising.They tell me the water is so hot enough to boil a big cow. If you would have fall on you would m have

,e met a frightful death and you co.ld not be recovered either."
Violet and her sisters were trembling violently at Daisy's narrow escape, and Dais Daisy offered no protest as he led her to her horse, and mounting her mounted his own and rode alongside of her. She had been within an inch of a frightful death and had been snatched back from the brink by her good brother, and from her narrowescape she was shaken to the depths of her being.

Fenrod, and his sisters spoke to her once or twice as they made their return progress to his own headquarters but she was so upset that she scarcely grasped the meaning of his ords and sat rigid and silent on her horse as the crowds acc laimed her and her sisters and made obeisance. Her mind from her narrow escape was in a turmoil but even in her agitated state she realized that the th ong outside of Fenrods headquarters was even more excited than when she and her sisters left it and that as many eyes were turned toward the steps leading to the hall as did toward herself, her sisters and Fenrod. The very atmosphere for some some reason indeed, seemed suddenly to have become eletr electrical. The horses she and her sisters and Fenrod rode came a to a halt at the headquarters steps, the headquarters guards in their golden gorgets and with bayonets lined up with a precision that would have done credit to the Grenadier Guards, Fenrod dismounted, helped his sisters down from their horses, and the sight of them strode up the steps to the outer hall of the building--to find a group of scared looking soldiers and child slaves and also scouts around a very superior appearing boyscout who was cursing them, and whom Violet and her sisters recognized at once as Gerald John Starring. The Headquarters attendants whom Gerald was cursing saluted immediately and stood at str attention immediately Fenrod and Violet and her sisters appeared, and at sight of the "Adeldefob" boy scout chieftian far superior than himself, and his fair consorts Gerald cired out involuntarily in amazement. He did not immediately recognize violet and her sisters in their regal uniforms and feather headed hats, but when he did so his jaws dropped and he stopped back in event evident dismay and fear.
"The Abbiennian Princesses" he ejaculated recovering himself and taking a step forward his face red with rage.. "The Abbiennian Vivian Girl Princesses.
Violet, and your sisters---what the-- what the hell does this mean!"
Violet, and her sisters were too surprised and startled and apprehensive to attempt to answer. It was a sudden meeting of the worst enemy they had. They were staring wide eyed at Gerald, their brains in a whirl, their faces deathly white.

"Who are you black one and from whence have you come?" demanded Fenrod, who had been regarding Gerald in wonderment for he did not understand it was he, having heard of him and his companions but have never seen them. "Are you a messenger from general Manley."

Gerald Starring frowned in annoyance at being so readily addressed as the "black one.. He was sensitive about his black hair and had often lost his temper when his friends and enemies too had chaffed him about it. Yet Fenrods term was apt for Geralds naturally red face had been burned still redder by forest fire heats he had felt. He was clad only in a sort of L Khaki shirt and so forth shorts and he presented an unkempt and weather beaten appearance.

"My name is Gerald . Captian Gerald Johnson Starring, nauthy dressed one, and I did get sh ero from Manley to bring a message to you, Master Adeldefob.
I was always a messenger of Manley too. How did you get possession of the Vivian Girl Princesses."

"For Heavens sake say we're are prisoners and we'll be prisoners to you till he gets away to avoid a lie" whispered violet unseen.

"They are what you need not bother about." answered Fenrod drawing himself up proudly. "I Adeldefob claim these as my own prisoners and you have no claim to them"---he inclined his head toward the Princesses "They came into my head quarters and I have had them ever seen. How do you know they are Violet and her sisters. Is it not possible you are only seeing their double.?"

"Double of the Vivian Girl brats be hanged and damned." exclaimed Gerald Starring angrily. "They're mine. What's the meaning of this!" he continued address ing himself to violet and her sisters. "Why are you within our own lines attired this way? How did you get here? How did Adeldefob make you prisoners. here. What does he mean by retaining you when he understands Manley has a big price on their heads."

Violet and her sisters controlled their agitation with an effort, and Violet drew herself up haughtily as Jennie answered;
"We may or may not be prisoners of Master Adeldefob and that at leasts verifies verifies that we are safe from you."

"Safe from me." gasped Gerald Starring, paling slightly. "Safe from me! what fool stoey story is this you are trying to put across? You prisoners to this Adeldefob--and it is only two days since you ran away from me and my perseuers. Why he is treating you like guests instead of prisoners" and he eyed Fenrod fiercely.

"Whether we are prisoners of Adeldefob or not is his own business." said Violet coldly.

"If you're prisoners how is it you are armed."?

"We didn't say we were prisoners."

"That be damned for a tale." burst out Gerald with sudden fury. "You are spies going around fooling this popinjay after having been here only a couple of days, and if you have his possessing you count's for nothing for I'll report to Manley and he'll have to give you up. You can't tell me you have escaped from me and my soldiers two days ago, ran away from me, and then give yourselves up to this blue eyed boyscout leader."

Violet, and her sisters crimsoned in embrassement. They could not bring themselves to explain that Fenrod and sthey had entered the foe lines through that tunnel just as he and his persuers had attempted to capture them--and that what they were there for because of the exhortations of a mysterious man who conversed in English. They did not want to explain to him. They hated no one in particular but couldn't help destesting this boyscout lower in character than a crawling reptile.

"What means this Princess Violet." Interposed Fenrod who had see been glancing from violet and her sisters to Gerald starring frowningly and with plexedly. "Who is this? Is this the Gerlad Starring you have so often told me about, and claims you as his prisoners. Is he the Gerald Starring you are well acquainted with. Do you in particular know him.?"

"Yes I and my sisters know him" Violet replied. "He often tried to do us an injury even when we never had even molested him."

"He shall be arrested" interrupted Fenrod, and flung up his hand, at the same time calling out an order. Immediately a number of guards who had acted as an escort sprang forward with bayonets leveled, but as sudden as a flash of lightning Gerald drew his automatic pistols, and shot the foremost man, who crashed to the stone floor. The report of the pistol and its effect caused terror into the hearts of the child slaves who ran in all directions with cries of dead. It was probably the first time in the history of this war that Gerald Starring had ever shot a soldier of his own side, and naturally the soldiers were apprehensive. They feared Gerald Starring as he was a splendid pet. of Manley and could do anywhere he wished. Fenrod was not startled and would have drawn his own pistol but Violet detained him.

"You'll be the next Adeldefob if you interfere with me." cried Gerald Starring savagely, thrusting the barrel of the automatic forward to within a few inches of the boys face, but Violet screamed, and sprang at Starring like a cat hitting aside his arm and stepping between him and Fenrod with her own pistols drawn. "You leave Adeldefob alone" she screamed. "No monley tricks with me or my sisters. You're a Glandelinian too but I can order you to do as I say. Put up that gun or I'll shoot you down like a dog for what you caused Fred Lowden to do to jennie. Put up that gun I say."

"He'll understand it doesn't pay to meddle with us if he get's a bullet through him." said Jennie with a scowl."

"So you are an assassin and shoot down men of your own side." exclaimed Fenrod. "It is well therefore that we should have an explanation and an understanding, for I do not understand why you are here. We will go to the council chamber and have a conversation on the subject."

He said a few reassuring words to the frightened guards and officials, then gave curt orders, and marched into his headquarters, followed by Gerald, then by Violet and her sisters who kept him covered, though he scowled.

Violet, and her sisters were trembling and shaking violently, and indeed they were happy to be able to plump into their couch and try to control their fears and rising agitation. They realized that this situation needed all their best courage and determination, and would moreover require tactful handling. Gerald Starring was a desperate and dangerous Glandelinian boyscout who might not in the least hesitate to shoot their brother or even they themselves in order to prevent their getting information from the Glandelinian generals. Fenrod for his part, was also dangerous to the Glandeliniens, a better shot then any one they had ever seen and handy at any other weapon and seemed invested even here with the powers of life and death, and after what had happened to poor Jennie through Fred's dens treachery, would doubtless slay Gerald Starring without scruple if he decided the latter would attempt to get his sisters away from him and bring them to general Manley. Violet and her sisters hated all Glandelinians and recognized their danger, but she and her sisters nevertheless feared more for Fenrod, and wanted to prevent bloodshed though it was in some ways a sin not to slay a rascally Glandelinian if you had the chance and Gerald was one of the meanest.

"Now Master Gerald Starring----"
"I'm Captian Gerald Starring and---"
"You're Master Gerald Starring to me.Now Master Starring we will have an understanding"said Penrod, seating himself and motioning Gerald ungraciously to a chair"Why have you come to this part of the Glandelinian army, saying you're here on a message from general Manley, and go shooting one of your own comrades."
"I came in search of the Vivian Girls"replied Gerald abruptly and scowling tward them."They spied on Manley many times and therefore as prisoners they belong to me, and all this crazy bunkum about her being in possession of you isn't going to prevent me from claiming them.They have spied on me too."
"That is untrue."exclaimed Jennie tremulously."I do not belong to you as your prisoners I have not spied on you, and you have no claim upon us, and even if it was not for Adeldefob you'd never get us .We are seven to your one, you cannot shoot as suddenly as any one of us can. Even if you have had any claim upon us by Manleys orders by your conduct in causing Fred Lowden to do that treacherous act you forfeit any claim even as to any mercy from us unless you become repentant.I hate and despise you and even if Adeldefob did slay you it wouldn't cause us much worry, especially only for what may happen to him as Glandelinian cannot slay Glandelinian without sufficient cause."
"He had better not try it."said Gerald grimly fingering his holster significantly."I have shown that I can do some slaying of my own accord, and single handed have held at bay seven or eight of your best fighting girlscouts. Therefore Master Adl Adeldefob I warn you that unless you surrender these Vivian Girl Princesses to me as prisoners and cancel out this so called claim to them on your own part I'll slay you and raise hell through out the whole camp untill I obtain them."
"I do not comprehend Master Gerald Starring."said Penrod, very calmly but with an angry gleam in his eyes that showed gerald Starring it really was best not to mi meddle with Penrod too far."Violet and her sisters has said that they do not belong to you as prisoners, and that for no reason whatever you have no claim upon them, and even if it was not for me you couldn't make them prisoners.They could kill you any time they wanted to."
"That is true"Broke in Jennie again."Let me explain for myself and my sisters.Nobody can take us prisoners against our will no matter who it is. We have proved that often and again when it was necessary to do so and the .little boob understands that.He can't do it and is only bluffing.He's as treacherous as a serpent for one day during the battle of Cedarmine he gave us the Judas Kiss.I suppose he thought were were of his own side and at that time admired us.We have never interfered with his boy or girlscouts yet he has offered to see to it that we go through the worst times of our lives, and he is responsible for what Jennie suffered at the hands of Augustinia St Claire. and the plight Angeline was in at the same time with her wounds.It was he who shot her. He often tried to overcome us by force and found he couldn't do it.We never fled from him, he's a liar, he often flew from us--- don't draw that gun"she said to him looking fiercely with a frown or we'll seven shoot before you can male a move2" "We were persued by Glandelinians because our guides boy betrayed us--and I have told you how I reached here. I didn't spy on any one here."
"And you believe now I have found you again,I'm going to stand aside and see you become the guests of this Glandelinian boyscout Chieftian."exclaimed Gerald Sardonically."Is this all your conversation of being different from other crazy christian girlscouts, and not understanding our situation, and not leaving our Glandelinian generals alone, and all the rest of it ammounts to --that within a few hours of running away from a persueing party of goldiers you allow yourself to be the guest of a savage boyscout, who---"
"Stop why do you call me a savage boyscout?"interrupted Penrod still in a calm, but very dangerously calm--tone.
"What else are you in spite of being a Glandelinian chieftian of boyscouts boyscouts."responded Gerald rudely."I've seen plenty of Glandelinian boys and girlscouts--throw backs to the Christian Dogs I was told, who finally turned over to the christian side.These Vivian Girl Princesses are not your friends but your enemies and you harbor them which is against the law."
"You are wrong Master Starring."said Penrod."My father is a great, great soldier."
"Some foolish idiot perhaps who managed to get a commsion commission here "commented Gerald Starring."
"I do not quite understend your method of saying that but I tell you Master Starring I have slain fools for saying much less against my father than you have said."retorted Penrod."The Abbisannian Princesses do not seem to worry whether I kill you or not but---"
"See here"interrupted Gerald Starring, with sudden passion"If there is any slaying to be done it is I who will do it--and it is you who may be killed. See this!"---- he put his automatic pistol up on the table in his hand the muzzle pointing tward Penrod "Judging from the panic when I shot your soldier, you never did believe that though a Glandelinian would shoot Glandelinians who interfere with my plans.I can do as I wish as Manley backs me in every thing I do. I could change you and your followers with rebellion for harboring the Vivian Girl Princesses.There are still twenty six cartridges left in this gun in thisand I could slay you now simply by pressing the trigger.Will you give up these Vivian Girls as my prisoners---or die as your soldier guard died?"

Gerald was not bluffing for he would have murdered Penrod in cold blood, for cruel and wicked as the boyscout of the enemy was he was a daring and desperate boy accustomed to having his every wish gratified, and he was deeply chagrined and mortified to find that Violet and her sisters had escaped two days ago from the persuers only to become as he imagined the guest of a chief of boyscouts.
"I will not give up my charges and I will not die at your hands Gerald Starring"said Penrod deliberately, rising almost languidly from his seat as he spoke.As for your weapon---"
As he said the word weapon, to the horror of violet and her sisters he suddenly hurledhimself at Gerald Starring pouncing on the automatic swift as a strike from a serpent. His grip on the weapon caused Gerald Starring to pull the strug stricgger but the bullet pinged harmlessly against the opposite wall.Next moment both boyscouts were on the floor, grappling most fiercely in a life or death struggle fighting as if they had suddenly turned demons contending against one another. violet screamed hysterically, and her sisters sprang up violet's hands pressed convulsively to her breast for it seemed that one or the other of the boys must be killed and they feared it might be Penrod. They indeed were fairly evenly matched as regards size and strength but Penrod was hampered by his ceremonial uniform, and it seemed as if Gerald Starring, who still maintained his hold on the pistol and who was cursing and blaspheming fiercely, although his enemys grip on his fingers made it impossible for him to fire must eventually triumph.But Penrod was lithe as an eel and strong as a boy of his size can be, and just wi when it seemed that Gerald Starring got the upper hand, Penrod resolrted to some of his learned Indian tricks of fighting, and got some sort of a strangle hold on his enemys throat and almost chocked the boyscout into unconsciousness and forced him to release his hold on the pistol.
With the weapon in his hand "Adeldefob"scrambled to his feet(not retreat) panting, dishevoled his face crimsom with rage and exertion, his blue yeyes now almost black with passion.
"Now indeed I am lord and master of the situation."he gasped and pointed the pistol at gerald Starring.
"Don't shoot him they'll arrest you"screamed Violet, and she hurled herself at him."Don't Kill him here.It will make it worse for us."
She interposed her own little body between the two boyscouts, as she had done in the first instance when Gerald had seemed about to shoot Penrod.Gerald livid gasping and cursing, half strangled, was trying to get on his feet and making noises like an animal in pain.
"He deserves death for what happened to poor Jennie"said Penrod but the fury died out of his eyes as he spoke."It is enough that I have overcame him and I guess I'll imprison him for the foolishness of threatening one of his comrades with assassination."he added, and put Violet gently but firmly aside as Gerald Starring arose to his feet and made as if to rush at him."
"Stand still Gerald the Great or I will slay you as you slew my soldier guard."his voice ran out stemly and Gerald found himself covered by not only his own pistol but those of violet, and her sisters too,,,, and realised realized despite his mad insane fury, that the words were no empty threat and neither would even violet and her sisters besides Penrod scruple to shoot him as a dog for what he had caused Jennie to suffer.Daring, desperate and almost reckless and wild with passionate anger as he was, he realized it was hopeless to attempt to rush a boyscout chieftian armed with an automatic pistol or to surprise him as he had surprised Gerald.That violet and her sisters not only also covered him, but had been a witness of his defeat added greatly to his mortification.
"I'll get youfor this you accursed traitor"he snarled."I'll break you--Kill you---"
He strangled with passion and stood glaring from violet, and her sisters to "Adeldefob"opening and shutting his hands in impotent fury.
"What would you Princesses of Abbisannia to have done him!"Penrod askedwithout for a moment removing his eyes from his worsted foe."Shall I bid my servants cast him into a prison tent for insurbonation or order the soldiers to cast him into that scalding hot well two hundred fifty feet down.....,,,"

Now that the crisis was over, Violet herself if not her sisters were almost in a state of collapse, but her natural courage reasse ted itself.

"Give the very b ad, bad,bad,boy a little time to recover himself---time to c ome to his senses"Joice said trying to steady her voice, and glancing very haughti ly in the direction of Gerald Starring."He is a Glandelinian boyscout belonging to general John Manleys army---although he seems to have forgotten the f act, himself--and what would your subjects and followers imagine Prince Adeldefob if you ordered them to put into prison or put to death one of the boyscouts who is a c hief pet of the Manleys.!"

"They would believe that I had thought it very wise and just to destroy a rival Glandelinian boyscout, who dared to challenge me,far his superior in rank, threatened to kill me, assassinate me, slay one of my guards, and steal my charges f rom me."replied Fenrod."They would do my bidding, but they and their leaders might f ear the we wrath of general Manley and His Followers.Strike the gon gong that hands behind you Catherine."

Catherin e obeyed the command, and almost immediately a crowd of soldiers marched in military style into the chamber most of them appearing to be flustered.

"Sit down Master Gerald J ohnson Starring."ordered "Adeldefob very curtly. "Now that I have relieved you of your weapon,, and my charges here also are well armed, you are at my mercy.I could command my guards to put you into a prison tent, cut you to pieces or hang you for your meddling into my affairs and they would do it.But it is the merciful desire of your enemies the Vivian G irl Princesses that you be allowed to live because my men would after all fear the anger of your unusual friend General John Manley, though he is no friend of mine.Neither are you.Turn your evil glance f rom my face,I who have conquered you, and seat yourself as I command.

HOPE DIES... NEVER..

"Hang you and everything else" Gerald Starring snarled,but realized that he was indeed at Fenrods mercy, and also at the mercy of Violet and her sisters, and flung himself into a chair and would have swore but a menancing look in the eyes of Jennie prevented him. They were determined not to hear any more of those bad words."You little Devil Princesses"he snarled however you sure seem to enjoy seeing me humiliated by this boyscout g host of yours when you are suppose to be prisoners.Have you fooled him as you fooled th e rest of us before"he added suddenly."I can't stand it.I'll go crazy if you persist in this idea of fooling us and Manley any longer."

Violet, and her sisters did not know how to answer..They had averted blood-- shed, it was true, but they were still in as hopeless a position than ever especially if Starring got the upper hand.He was as dangerous as a reptile. Devoutely they wished they were in heaven and out of all this mer misery. Gerald Starrings taunts and insults hurt and rankled. They un understood it was true that Starring had many confederates who could also recognize them and c ome to his aid, and that what Gerald Starring said about Fenrod might also be true.They understood also that what their plans had been about the rescue of the child slaves would count for nothing if this Starring boy inter fered, even if Fenrod did seem to have power within this army by causing the Glandelinians to believe he was a Princely Glandelinian boy. In a measure they could understand Gerald Starrings f eelings.Violet and her sisters real ized that their own words implied good enough that they intended not to be his prisoners under any conditions that they would put him out of the way to save themselves, they almost hated Gerald Starring as much as they did old Satan h imself, were surprised at themselves too for allowing this situation to come upon them within a vast Glandelinian army, serving as if they were Glandelinian girlscouts, and revolted against the position into which they had been f orced by circumstances and suspected in their hearts that the devils had laid a trap for them.

"For our sakes and for our own safty you must not humiliate or harm him here in this army"Jennie said impulsively to Fenrod in a quivering voice, though she gave Starring the blackest look."Remember he is a chief of Glandelinian boy scouts and spies of Manleys army---and he is as dangerous as you are.Give the f ool time to realize his position and ours, and to under stand what has happened.Then we can bide our time and get him into our power later on.If we can bring him to the Christian lines a prisoner the better. Then what ill we ll do to him."

Fenrods anger had died down, but he looked troubled and g rim.

"It shall be as you wish Princess J annie"he said quie tly"I will tellthe Gland e linian soldiery here that he has been sent to me by General Manley with a sort of message.He shall not be humiliated Princess, but shall be our undesirable guest.I shall command that he be treated as a messenger sen t by General John Manley."

"I suppose the idea being to use me to enchance your own prestige con- found you Adeldefob." snapped Gerald Starring, who had no idea at all that "Adeldefob"was really Fenrod in disguise. Had he been able to find that out Fenrod could not have been able to carry this on.But Starring never learned that Adeldefob was Fenrod, never.

"But if he ever again attempts to oppose me or to assert that he has any claim upon you as his prisoners Violet, and your sisters,I shall slay him as he slew my guard--or --I may decide that such a death is too swift." added Fenrod ignoring Geralds inte ruption."He cannot fool with me Adeldefob."

There was such a ton e of fin alty in his voice, and he looked so stern and fixedly at Gerald for a few moments before turning that Gerald was nervous. Then " deldefob" turned with a sudden smile, to address the gay gayly dressed Glandelidian soldiers who had thronged into the council chamber..He conversed to them for several minutes occasionally indicating Gerald Starring with a gesture.violet, and her sisters who were beginning to regain their self possess ion, recognized that his words were making a great impression on the gathering, and when he concluded, every one acclaimed him and saluted.....

"I have command that you are to be treated as befits a messenger of general John Manley"Fenrod explained coldly to Gerald."My followers will provide you with everything you desire or requi e require.You are bidden to the celebration f eas , but remember stay as far as possible f rom these little girls or you'll wish you had never been born."

"Thank you for nothing at all."retorted Gerald Starring.."you need not believe you have me aerated or repulsed or that your threats scare me. I'll be shot rather than allow you to retain these little christian dog spies, and Princesses of Abbidahnia, and if I'm slain it will be they and not me who is responsible for my death."

"Oh Yeah."said Violet with a sneer."Well it would be good riddance."

"Oh hell"---

"There where you'll be if you die before you mend yourself"she added with a retort."Don't dare mention that word again."

"Come my guests"Penrod said, grasping Violet and Jennie by the hands"We must refresh ourselves before the feasting and rejoicing.My uniform has been defiled in my encounter with the "Devil Boy" and my head dress of a hat also also has suffered."

Violet, and her sisters unobtrusively avoided Gerald's eyes as Penrod led them away through a doorway giving access to the more private apartments.Well they understood how bitterly Gerald hated being defeated, and they would not have been surprised if he had lost control of himself again and hurled himself at Penrod, regardless of consequences. Gerald was grinding his teeth, and his face was distorted with rage but he had sense enough to realize that if he attacked Penrod it might mean further humiliation, and even death,--and in spite of what he said he had no desire to die, even though he was not afraid to die.It also had not escaped his attention that six guards armed to the teeth had suddenly taken up their position behind him..He raged at his own impotence, cursing himself and blaspheming At God for having allowed himself to be taken by surprise and disarmed , and for having failed to shoot "Adeldefob" instead of one of the soldiers.. His apparent helplessness was driven home when he was conducted into another room by a number of child slaves Penrod had ordered to attend him, for no child slaves served at all for real true Glandelinian boyscouts and they had no respect for him.A boyscoutwho also would interfere or meddle with Adeldefob was not much account they thought, and Gerald guessed what they were thinking and whispering one to the other.He could not tell exactly what Penrod had told the slaves and it galled him to think that Adeldefob regarded him as an inferior and could tell the Glandelinian soldiers anything he desired about him, and be believed while he Gerald Starring, and a Favorite of Manley could not explain himself.He relieved his feelings by cursing and reviling the child slaves and it gratified him a little that, although they could not understand him, they showed signs of fear, when after he had bathed and put on a uniform given him he replaced his own cartridge belt, and then lighted a cigarette.

"Yes grovel you little swine of heaven"he exclaimed spurning the nearest child slave with his foot."I'll force that "Adeldefob" to grovel as you do before I am through curses on him.He's worse than that brother of those Vivian Girls Penrod or what they call him. I'll bet that Penrod couldn't meet up with him either."and he smiled grimly to himself as he thought that not knowing Adeldefob was Penrod.

Meanwhile in another part of the building, Violet, and her sisters were trying to nerve themselves to face a further ordeal, trying vainly to find some way of escape from the terrible position into which they suspected they had been jockeyed by their fierce enemies the demons. They blamed the demons for every wrong that befell them and haughtily decided to be that much more good still. The thought that came into Jennie's mind was that it might be possible for her, her sisters and Penrod to escape from the army by way of which Starring reached it.But that would mean appealing to Penrod to help them escape, and to save them from Gerald Starring--who regarded them as his own prisoners--and she understood too that if Penrod did try to save them, Gerald Starring may cause such a hard pursuit, that they would be captured, unless a miracle helped them through--and the thought of surrendering herself and her sisters to that "Devil boy" was even more obnoxious now than the prospects of being compelled to surrender themselves to Manley or any of his dangerous Confederates. Jennie understood too that another encounter between the two boys one who desired her and her sisters for Manleys ends would almost inevitably result in the death of one or the other, and they feared it would be Penrod, and they felt that morally that they must do something to prevent any harm coming to their beloved brother.They couldn't bear the thought of him being Killed. They'd rather die in his place instead. However she or her sisters had arrived at no conclusion or decision, and decided upon no course of action, when "Adeldefob" even more magnificently arrayed than before before, and looking calm possessed, and sure of himself, appeared, to escort her and her sisters to their supper, supper.

For Violet and her sisters the banquet was a sort of nightmare experience. Jennie Violet and Angeline sat with "Adeldefob" the rest elsewhere on the same side of the table, and Gerald Starring on a sort of dais at the end of the great hall, while the chief Glandelinian officers with other soldiers of good condition sat at long low tables, all of which were laden with rich foods and with vessels of gold, silver and jade. It was indeed a great Kaleidoscopic scene full of unusual color and movement.Every one present wore his richest uniforms in honor of the occasion, and the brilliantly colored feather covered hats and other head gear worn by many of the guests(for Glandelinian soldiers never remove hats attable even in the presence of ladies) enchanced the Kaleidoscopic effect..2.2.2.2222""

But Violet, and her sisters themselves magnificently robed or uniformed and looking pale and unusally beautiful, had no eyes for the brilliant and beautifully barbaric scene as they hated in their hearts all things Glandelinian &. The only beauty that ever enchanced them was the tabernacle in a Catholic Church and oh how they missed Mass these days.They were determined at even the cost of death to be free fromthis army before sunday. And they had only six days before Sunday. They were also acutely conscious of the near presence of Gerald Starring and of his fixed angry and defiant glance, conscious of an atmosphere of terrific tension and the fact that Penrod was intently watching them, and their dangerous enemy.The thought came into their minds that they were now as two wild animals dangerously still and quiet, each prepared to leap at the throat of the other on the slightest provocation for the sake of their Country's causes, though of course Starring didn't know Adeldefob was Penrod otherwise Starring would have chanced any danger to get at him. Violet herself alone noticed also that five sentries armed with long rifles with bayone s attatched were posted both behind Penrod and Gerald Starring, and rightly concluded they were there to frustrate any attempt at violence on the part of the latter. Gerald Starring had distained the offer of Glandelinian ceremonial uniforms, and his strange almost European khaki shirt, and shorts were in strong contrasts to the magnificent uniforms of "Adeldefob" and the rest of the Company, and he appeared disgusting to Violet and her sisters who held up their noses high. Yet clean and fresh from his bath he showed no signs of his desperate but losing struggle with Penrod, and looked cool, capable, but not handsome--and were "British"then Glandelinian in Nationality.Many were the curious and admiring glances rinsed to him from the lower hall during the feast many the whispered comments on the big red haired blue eyed Messenger of Manley.Violet and her sisters could not help glancing at Gerald Starring occasionally, and more than once when their eyes met he scowled in a deadly manner, and they felt the colour tingling in their cheeks, and wondered within themselves uneasily what was passing through his mind.

"If only we could play the game and capture that dirty brat."Violet thought."What he had done to Jennie through Fred Lowden gives me the shivers to even dream of it."If I only could trust a number of these child slaves they might be able to help Penrod rescue me and my sisters from this ghastly position and capture him too.That scoundrel insists that I and my sisters are his prisoners--and if he ever had us again we might fare worse than we did before the battle of Evangeline st Claire.See how he scowls at us. He surely must hate us and yet we never done no harm to him."

It seemed as if Gerald Starring must have guessed her thoughts, for he bent forward slowly and scowled frightfully a and made an attitude as if he would have struck her with his fist had he dared.(Bif he had done it Penrod would have shot him dead)

Penrod had bent forward slightly to Violet.

"Have you and your sisters quite made up your mind to go through with this now since this devil boy is here and refo recognized you!"he asked In English."Are you going to give yourselves up to extreme sacrifice Sister? Are you going on with that rescue plan! Have you thought what it means since he discovered who you and your sisters are!"

"The fault is not ours brother dear"she replied, half tremulously, half defiantly."We have to playthe game now to the finish.If it had not been for the treachery of those Guides and ourfall throughthat sna slanting tunnel we should not now be in this position.He sneers at you and calls you a savage but what better is he than a save when he has caused us to go through what we have suffered.We'll see it through in spite of him."

"This situation is enough to cause a person to lose their heads."said Penrod."My love for God and you little girls is a consuming fire; and I have sometimes forgot everything else except that I loved him and you, and and wanted the ones I love.I(I'm still crazy with love for you and your sisters, and therefore I can't bear the thought of allowing ourselves to go through such a dangerous situation.I do not fearfory myself as he knows me not, but its you I fearfor as he recognized you. What will the world think if anything very bad ever happened to you and your sisters and I would be powerless to prevent it.You better return to the christian lines and let me work this through alone."

"What language is this!"interposed Gerald Starring, whose only knowledge to the headquarters, where for a time they sat at the table with Penrod and the Glandelinian officers. Lassitude overcame them after a time, and they craved to be alone with Penrod. To them it seemed as if the events of a full lifetime had been crowded into a few hours, and they had run through a whole tempest or gamut of fierce emotions.

"I am exhausted and my sisters appear as if they can endure no more." Violet exclaimed, suddenly. "We want to be alone for a time. But don't let Starring get into our apartment. He'll insult us and degrade us."

"You are pale dearest sisters, and need rest." said Penrod with a tender glance. "I in person will conduct you to your apartments but must return to be present at the rejoicings of the soldiers so they won't be suspicious, and to watch that Gerald Starring."

Violet and her sisters were again acclaimed by the throngs, as Penrod led them from the table and handed them over to the care of their child slave attendants in their own apartments. A queer calmness, borne of mental exhaustion had settled on Violet, and her sisters, their senses again seemed dulled, and they felt temporarily as if they had lost all feeling, felt as their hearts and brains were numb. They cast aside their uniforms, and flung themselves down on their beds with a sigh of mingled relief and figure fit fatigue, dismissing the child slaves with a gesture. Violet herself had closed her eyes put up her hands to her throbbing temples, and tried to get their thoughts in order. They had allowed themselves to be recognized by their little arch enemy Gerald Starring, and whether or not the discovery counted for anything as far as discovery in this Glandelinian army was concerned probably mattered little. What did matter was that Gerald Starring regarded her and her sisters as his legal legal prisoners, and would doubtless use every means in his power to prevent her and her sisters from escaping him, and she inwardly prayed to God to cause the "Possession" Angels to give them special protection from that little devil. Well did Violet understand the contempt however with which she and her sisters would recieve from even any of her best friends if she and they allowed such a boyscout as Gerald to be able to best them. "Little Vivian Girl snakes" Geralds scathingly scornful words came back to her and the flush of fury and shame rose to her face. It was true, she reflected bitterly --she and her sisters had to him because of his persecutions become dangerous reptiles, and even if she escaped with her sisters---

"So you're here and all alone by yourselves." whispered a hoarse boyish voice, and Violet raised her head to find Gerald Starring near her. Her heart seemed to miss a beat, her sisters suddenly rose from their beds, and Violet started up convulsively from the couch wishing she had retained her weapons instead of she and her sisters allowing the slaves to carry them away with the uniforms.

"What do you want you devil! How did you get here!" she gasped. "If Penrod finds you here he may slay you. Go or I'll scream for him. He's got ears that can hear a cat walk. Go I say or I'll scream for him."

Gerald stood in silence with brows drawn together looking fixedly at Violet ignoring her sisters who may have sprang at him from behind only it would be useless as he could easily worst ten of them together.

"So you and your crazy Christian dogs of your sisters thought to fool me." he exclaimed at last. "You once even pretended that Adeldefob was your enemy yet you begged for his life, you admit him in to your bed chamber and you were listening to his appeal that you seven should go away with him to escape from me and fool him. And you would call Penrod. Ie her he here too paying with you. Well I'd love to see him meet with Adeldefob. . you imagine that you can escape from me and that I shall allow such treachery to go unpunished! I will not. You are spies and will go with me to Manley and right now."

There was a menance in his blue eyes, but violet met his glance without flinching.

"Almost I wish now that I had let him shoot you" she retorted with sudden passion. "I was not fooling you, but would do anything to escape from cruel wicked boys as you are. You are treacherous not us for allowing your dirty snake of a boy friend Lowden pr play that dirty trick on Jennie. I righteously hate you, as I hate the devil--loathe you---and I'd rather die and so would my sisters than be forced to submit ourselves to you as prisoners. Go or I'll yell for Adeldefob."

The words stung Gerald to anger. He stepped forward suddenly gripping Violet by the shoulder fiercely.

"You shall submit." he exclaimed furiously his face white with rage. "I am a better boy spy than any of you, and you are my prisoners. I shall share you with no general but Manley who wants you mu most, and who tries to save you and your sisters from me shall die. I will master you and your sisters into submission as my prisoners and force you to acknowledge me as your boy master if I have to flog you as a child slave who disobeys is of English consisted of the few words and place names, which had been learned by him. "What is it you are saying. Why do you and those Vivian Girl Spies talk in a language I do not understand?"

"I am glad that you do not understand the language, and neither am I going to tell you what language it is" Penrod responded in Glandelinian, with an insolent glance. "There are many things I have to say to my guests which are not intended for your ears. And too there can be nothing to which my little guests should not hear, and which should interest you" and Penrods face darkened.. "But I should have been reminding Violet, and her sisters too that you have no chance for claiming them as your prisoners as Manley have not given you any arrest warrant warrant and if he had I wouldn't recognize it. All your own commission and the fact that you call yourself a chief of Manleys Glandelinian boyscouts does not justify that you can come here, on a pretended messange from Manley and claim these little girls as your prisoners and when too so far as I am concerned they have done you no harm but you have done them plenty and just because you hate them, and not for the cause of country itself. But I am Adeldefob, higher in commission, far higher than you" and Penrods angry gleam increased in his eyes as he went on "I am not so foolish as you are if that is what you mean by savage but am the son of a person of whom it is not my intention to tell, as you have no respect for Nobility anyhow and went to gain your own ends. And too Gerald Starring you would do well to remember that I have but to give a sign and the guards behind you will bury their bayonets into your body. "added Penrod. "It is not good to offend Adeldefob."

"Penrod dear don't precipitate another quarrel with the bad boy." Broke in Violet.

"Don't make things harder for us,"

Geralds hands clinched, he showed his teeth, and Violet and her sisters cried out involuntarily fearing he was going to hurl himself at Penrod, and were in the act of drawing their weapons to cover him, but they drew a sigh of relief when Gerald controlled himself and relaxed in his seat biting hard on his upper lip.

"So you care enough not to wish to see me murdered before your eyes, and care not for yourselves." Penrod exclaimed soothingly in English, after a tense pause. "If I thought I could strangle him even at the cost of saving you even at the cost of my death, I'd do it and die content, for I would rather be dead than endure the thought that that bray could capture you and hand you over to that dog Manley. It is worth while for any person to die for the sake of little girls as you are, who as me have give ours souls to God. I promise you if he don't leave you alone I will slay him."

"Penrod dear for our and your sake don't do anything rash here." said Jennie in distress. "It is too late to attempt to interfere. He's dangerous, and if we even justly slay him Manley wouldn't give up untill we were slain too. It's too dangerous. We must try some scheme."

"It is not too late." interposed Penrod eagerly. "We could sure have some excuse to be able to slip from his view, or scaring him to allow you and your sisters to be allowed to come along with me somewhere else. The means by which we got into the city are in readiness to enable us to leave, and we can get away together through the high mountain. I promise you you won't need to fear him or any permuit by him, and you will be safe with me. We are in a way master of the situation and have him disarmed and at our mercy. And now we will withdraw sisters dear where we can confer by ourselves." finished Penrod rising to his feet, and holding out his hand to Violet and Jennie. "Our followers await without to pay homage again to their high girlscouts." He glanced at Gerald Starring, who was still scowling at Violet, and her sisters. "A horse will be at your disposal if you wish to take part in the procession. she added sarcastically.

"It may be your funeral go procession and the Vivian Girls too." Growled Gerald under his breath.

"Remember not a word about our conference conference" said Penrod to Violet.

Violet, nor her sisters did not answer, and it was doubtful if Penrod would have heard her if she had spoken for the whole assembly acclaimed her and her sisters and Penrod with almost hysterical enthusiasm as Violet and Jennie took Penrods hands and rose from their seats followed by her sisters. They were agitated, and again had but a very confused impression of what followed.. They could not remember how they answered Penrods questions as to what Gerald Starring was saying, and during their triumphal progress through the Company Streets on their horses the prospect of escape was uppermost in their minds.. Dare she and her sisters trust to circumstances, and would the escape from this Glandelinian camp mean only final capture into the hands of the big red headed boyscout who was in a good measure responsible for what had so often happened to them in the past. would Gerald Starring slay Penrod if the escape was discovered. If the attempt to escape failed would Gerald murder them too?"

Violet had not succeeded in answering her questions or decided upon any line of action by the time the triumphal procession was over, and they returned flogged .I'll show you something and---"

As he spoke he tore violets flimsy waist from her shoulders leaving her nude almost to her waist then dragged her to her feet saying;

"A flail on your bare chest will teach you the folly of trying to resist me.You shall suffer----"

He broke off suddenly, his grip on violet relaxed and he took a step back wards for Violet had dug the fingernails of her right hand into his cheek drawing blood as if he had been torn by a phantom.The fury rose in his eyes his left side of the face paled, and he gazed devilishly at violet as she tried to gather her torn waist around her.

"You insed insedious brute.You lower than a snake"Storm Jennie coming at him with a long blade in her hands almost beside herself with indignation, and resentment."If you dare to attempt to flog any one of us we'll run our blades through your body.We're not unarmed."

Starrings hands clenched, and Violet screamed;"Go Gerald go.Adeldefob.Adeldefob". she broke off abruptly her voice suddenly strangled in her throat from the sudden relief of feeling for over Geralds shoulder she had seen the curtain at the portal swept aside, and Penrod step into the apartment his face black with rage . Gerald saw the fixity of her gaze, and turned his head to find Penrod glaring at him, his blue eyes glinting redly.He saw too that "Adeldefob" had his automatic pistol in his right hand ready to fire, and he realized instinctively that he was within an ace of death but wasn't afraid and didnt didn't care."

"I have heard her call for help"said Penrod, so quietly that he seemed only to whisper."You have dared to intrude into their private chamber seeling again to rob me of my precious charges in spite of my warning and tearing off Violets waist you dirty snake and threaten to flay her. I even recently even heard you presume to dispossess me of everything I own.Why should I not Kill you Gerald Starring, as you killed my soldier guard. I would be perfectly justified."

Geralds ruddy face paled slightly, and he found himself unable to answer.It seemed to him that his last moment had come.

"Oh shoot me and be done with it."exclaimed Gerald Starring bitterly."I'd rather be dead than endure this state of affairs."

"Adeldefob hesitated then he smiled grimly.

"Since you now foolishly desire death of little Red Head,I prefer that you shall live to endure the torment of knowing and seeing that you'll never obtain violet, and her sisters."he said."Will you go as Violet commands you to or shall I call the guards at the portal to drag you from this chamber you defile with with your presence.They wanted to be left alone and they will be.Get out."

Again Geralds hands clenched and again violet and her sisters thought he was was going to throw himself at Penrod.

"Go Gerald go or I&ll jab you in the side with this knife"blazed Jennie.

Gra gt gritting his teeth in impotent rage Gerald glared from one to the other, then appeared to curb his passion with an effort.

"Begone"brule in penrod before gerald could say a word.

Gerald saw nothing else but to obey and strode out of the room.

"Oh Adeldefob, Adeldefob"put in violet"I---I---"

"Peace Violet peace."Penrod interrupted sharply."It would have been a vile sin to allow that scoundrel to dis disfigure your little white body I love so well, and he will never be able to flail you. Call to your angels to even make him stay his distance and they will. He had no right to even touch you. Do not even fear or believe violet dear, and my other dear sisters, that even if you had not been able to resist him and had been tale taken away that he could have got you out of here.The ropes by which he had reached this city of encampments have been cut down by mychild slaves at my orders and Starring will have to go through the Company streets to steal you from hence. But I wish I could find a way to get away here and bring you with me. I've thought of one plan, and I've been exploring the generals headquarters.I've found a labyrinth of strange underground passages one of which leads to a small tent on the surburbs of the city in which we can hide untill it is dark then make our escape up the mountain side. We can climb. We can go to it now though for I'm afraid Gerald will be watching our every move as he is suspicious and will do something to prevent us.We can't go now."

"We must we must"said violet breathlessly almost passionately."you can't mean that he can watch us so closely.Let us go now Penrod dear."

"It can't be though"said her sister with a sad toss of her head."We cannot escape unseen"she added tremuliously"and if Gerald Starring overtakes us he will slay us all."

"I shall find a play to tale you away"he said."Be patient sisters dear and pray hard for our sucess success.If that fails I shall go for help."

His lips parted in a smile and after embracing them tenderly he slowly went out of the room, placing guards to keep Starring out.

Agitatedly Jennie vexed herself while her sisters sat down or reclined again on their bed s paced the apartment in a very fury of resentment. She felt that she and her sisters and especially poor violet was or were defiled and humiliated and was filled with a fiercer hatred of the Glendelinian cause, and a resentment against the glandelinian boyscout responsible.

"I hope to see the day we can capture that Gerald Starring ourselves" he muttered through clenched teeth."That O d Gerald Starring acts as a creature lower than any reptile and he was brutal enough to strip or try to strip Violet naked and threaten to flog her, but he desisted when she tore his face for him. Serves him right.I would have done the same ti thing to him for even only touching me.Oh I I Penrod and my sisters could only hurry to rescue those child slaves get the information and get away f rom here before he has the chance to ex pose us to the glandelinian generales.."

Her fury spent itself, and she at the urgent advice of her sisters flung herself herself down on a couch and unseen by them wept in sheer vexation as full realization of her own helpless ness and that of her sisters dawned upon her.Gerald S Starring too had caused what appparently as the only way of escape to be cut off, and unless Penrod could find a way they were seemingly doomed to spend the rest of their lives in the Glandelinian encampments or be discovered before they got away. Even if she secured possession of Penrods pistol and righteously slew Gerald Starring for their own safty, she recognized that the plight of her and her sisters would be none the less desperate for that would cause her arrest by the Glandelinians and her misfortune would be shared by Penrod, and her sisters... For a cowardly person death by sucide would seem the only way of escape, yet Violet and her sisters would never foolishly be the means of ending their own lives for no reason.Jennie however thought it despairingly, when the emotional storm had exhausted itself of making again for the labyrinth passages underground, and with her sisters and Penrod lie in hiding there untill escape was assured.The thought of losing themselves in the darkness and of dying of hungry and thirst did not come to her mind in her desperate mood. She however decided to try. Impulsively she aroused her sisters as to the plan, she threw a cloak around her shoulders, and they hurried to the door--to find as shenswept aside the heavy curtain that a number of soldiers were standing on guard outside, and a lot of child slaves were busy at some sort of toil or apparently awaiting her commands, and that other sentries armed with bayonets were posted in the corridors to keep Starring from going in there again. Flight therefore seemed out of the question in these circumstances, and Jennie's feeling of helplessness was accentuated.

Passively she allowed the child slaves of the older age to escort her and her sisters to the sunken bath and submitted themselves again to their tender attentions, Violet exchanging her torn waist for a new one after her bath, and she and her sisters returned to their room.The child slaves murmured what appeared to be compliments andgood wishes in their soft childlen voices as they withdrew at length and doubtless they marveled among themselves that violet and her sisters should appear so sad and troubled a such a glorious warm December night while awaiting the good night salutation of their brother brother Penrod.

"What if Gerald Starring should come instead.The thought made her shudder. Every foot step in the corridor made her start nervously and glance apprehensively tward the portal.Gone was all the natural courage and self confidence on which she had secretly prided herself.The happenings of the preceding hours had shaken her nerve, and the intripid Princess spy who had imagined herself the equal of any boy or girlscout in courage and endurance was for the time being just a nervious little girl, afraid of everything and every sound. The building seemed suddenly to have become strangely quiet.Her sisters were trying to sleep(peep peep) straining her ears for she was too agitated to sleep she could hear no sound of movement in the corridors--no sound at all indeed, save the unsteady throbbing of her own little heart, and the sound of a fountain somewhere. She had to struggle against a spasmodical hysterical impulse to scream and rush for the dimly lighted apartments again, and she cried out impulsively when the curtain was moved at last and a figure appeared in the doorway. It was neither Gerald nor "Adeldefob--but an elderly soldier garbed as a sort of Monarch, and he smiled sympathatically at Jennie after bowing low.

"Master Adeldefob awaites you and your sisters."he said softly."I will attend you to his chamber Miss."

Jennie grasped the meanin meaning of the words and stood rigid regarding the man wide eyed."Penrod had actually sent for her but she did not care to awaken her sisters and was afraid to go off and leave them.Jennie's whole being rebelled against the idea of it and she said;

"I'm afraid to leave these little girls alone.Tell him please to come at once please .I'm afraid Gerald will come in."she exclaimed breathlessly."I will not let them be humiliated again."Tell him, tell him--oh tell him-----"

She stopped short."he did not exactly know what it was she wanted "Aeldefob to be told, except that she wanted him to come in himself, that she was afraid to leave her sisters alone a minute, and would never willingly submit them to a fate she dreaded without sharing it withthem.The officer did not exactly understand the words, and was appearing troubled and puzzled, but he withdrew when Jennie wrote something on a piece of paper handedto him and told him to give it to Aeldefob. A fit of trembling she Jennie as if she had a chill, and she clenched her hands and teeth in an effort to control herself trying to convice herself that she was not afraid.The minutes passed.The tension was becoming unbearable again, and it seemed hours before the curtain was swept aside again, and Penrod himself strode into the room, at first frowning and wity with anger s mouldering in his eyes as he expected to find Starring molesting his sisters again. but his face changed as he saw violet and her sisters except Jennie asleep, and Jennie recieved him with evident confidence and a feeling of securioty as he advanced tward her.

"What means this Jennie?"he demanded."My heavens your note gave me an awful scare. Why are you afraid even of Gerald starring when my guards are posted every where.He cannot get in here now."

"You do not know I presume his crafty way"Jennie retorted."I was afraid to leave my sisters alone for he has threatened before to flog violet as he was cowardly and brutally enough to do."

"You would prefer perhaps that I stay in this room with you!"said Penrod, and the sudden realization that he was wild with fear as to the safty of her and her sisters came as a surprise to Jennie.

"He insulted violet by tearing her waist off."she responded coldly."I detest the thought that he might come in here again through a secret way, and I do implore you to stay in here to night.Surely I have suffered enough to day and wish an ease if God Wills it,"

"Penrod stood silent for a few minutes, gazing steadily into her eyes as if trying to read her thoughts, then suddenly started around the room banging on the wall to be sure there was no secret paniel through which Gerald could come in, and seen to it the windorws were fastened..

"you are my dearest sister, and so are your other sisters, my heaven on earth, my flowers, and the best little girls on earth and don't deserve this" he said deliberately his brow darkeni darkening threatoningly."At your request I will remain here so be it, and if he comes in he'll not come out alive. You are under my protection as well as I'm under yours and will obey your request as I vowed before the priest days ago.Better go into your bed and I'll remain here and watch the place."

"But the guards can do that"exclaimed Jennie passionately."You too need some sleep.I want you;-"

She got no further.Penrod with an impatient exclamantion, snatched her off her feet very gently lifting her up in his arms as if she were a little rabbit and gently put her into the bed.

"you surely must not lose your sleep over this my dearest dearest sister."he exclaimed abruptly, laying his hand on Jennie's shoulder and compelling her to look into his eyes, and smile in spite of herself."you have chamb changed since Gerald starring appeared, and so have your sisters, but you the most of all but you shouldn't worry over that for he can't do you no harm.I have the upper hand and the Glandelinians so bamboozled that I only need to say the word and they'll throw him out of the camp.He cannot come in that cannot be with these watchful guards a and so stop worrying and try to sleep.I am athirst with love for God and you and therefore I'll die before I'll let him harm you.You will kiss me and aclnowledge me as your best protector."

"You are too good to me"gasped Jennie throwing her arms around him as his went around her.Penrod lovingly drew her close to him, tilted back her head and kissed the poor child on the lips again and again, laughing as he did so. Thevmere touch of his lips and her smile now seemed to fire his blood with a holy desire and ardor flamed into his blue eyes.

"Thou art even fair in the eyes of God; behold you are as good as you are fairjand through my aid nothing will conquer thee, and if you cannot sleep my embraces will bring you into sleep."he almost chanted, but in breathless stttt tones punctuating his words with holy passionate kisses... "My love For God and Three and thy sisters is like unto a fiery furnace of fire which consumes me. Thy Lips are a sweet honey, but such honey that once tasted does butcreate an appetite for more.Thy little body is as fair as alabaster by my beloved sister and will not if I can help it be flayed by no one it is warm with holy heavenly life, and the beauty of your face is the beauty of god in it and fires me with holy desire to protect you and your sisters through all dangers.Thou and your sisters have ravished my heart--oh by beloved little sister mine, and you have as great a love for God and me as fierce as my own."

"I feel better now"said Jennie more happier,

"Lavish my heart Jennie dear by trying to go to sleep."he resumed, suddenly subsiding on the bed with Jennie in his arms. "Tell me that the god headed snails in the grass won't be worrying you out of sleep any more, for you must have confidence seeing that you are under my protection...your sisters are asleep or I would embrace them too."

"Jennie tried to answer, tried to muster up her energies to get to sleep, but her voice and her strength failed her. She lay quivering, trembling as a frightened dove in his arms, and hoped frantically that something would cause her to fall asleepp. She felt without Penrod being near incapable of offering any resistance against such a vile bad boy as Gerald.But it did seem as if Penrods loving lisses did slightly drag her senses, firing her with his own holy passion, but sleep wouldn't come. She realized distractedly after a time that what if Starring would have snot Penrod as he held her in his arms. She returned his lisses with a fervor equally to his own.

"I'm worried too much about him I cannot get to sleep."she said."Then she pleaded weakly at last" weaky at last stirring after lying passive for a time in Penrods arms"Stay with us till morning Penrod dear, don't go to your room now.We feel safer with you."

"I will stay with you till morning my beloved little sisters."murmured Penrod drowsily, smiling into her eyes."Surely you don't believe I'd desert my dear sisters whom I loveso dearly."

"I want to go to sleep"said Jennie slipping from his encircling arms""ut But I can't."Plea se please do something to get the worry off from me.Remember what I have endured with my sisters to day."

"YES and what I have endured."said Penrod in gentle tones."Had I felt this would be I would have thought twice before I would have brought you and your dear sisters into this Purgatory. That Starring. But there is always a to morrow many to morrows, when you and your sisters shall and will delight and transport ourselves with happiness as you have done to night.To morrow we shall try up some schems.I cannot bear to part with you and your sisters, even for a few short hours, but I also am weary, and will have a servant bring my own bed into your own apartment and stay as you desire.I may sleep soundly but the least will arouse me nevertheless, and I can hear a cat crawl."

He rose as he spoke, lifted Jennie in his arms, and laid her down gently on her bed, and kissed her good night."It seemed however as if he could not tear himself away, and after standing for a few minutes fast feasting his eyes on Violet and her sisters lying asleep in their beds(trouble sleep) he slipped down on his knees by Violets bed, fondled, caressed and kissed her, and prayed that Starring would keep his place the next day.

Then he rose to his feet with a sigh.

"Sleep well my eloved sisters."he said softly, with a sudden smile."I live but For God and you, when my dear little sisters shall come to me refreshed to show their love for the stranger"Aeldefob."

A good sob of thankfulness broke from Jennie as Penrod saw to it that the curtain fell to its proper place, and he went into the bed brought in and placed right close by that door so any one getting in would have to climb on the bed.Her brow was a clammy, she was burning as if with fever, and still trembling slightly.. Her brain was in a turmoil, and she buried her sun burning face in the pillows in an agony of shame fear and humiliation.....

The bitter realization that she and her sisters seemed to have been mastered by the rascally Gerald Starring was forces upon her.But she nor her sisters would never never allow that beast of a boy to conquer them, he could never compell her and they to accept him as a captor, to submit to them as prisoners, and he had aroused her feminine passion against him.It is true no girl whether big or little can really be trifled with.Yet that was not the thought that revoled Jennie. It was no consolation to her to remember that she and her sisters had gone through an adventure of this sort, even though every one in this Glandelinian army throi through ignorance of their real being save Gerald Starring regarded her and her sisters as chieftians among Glandelinian girlscouts.It did not salve her holy pride to reflect that Gerald Starring had bee but claimed and tried to enforce his unholy rights as the captor of her and her sisters because their old foe Manley sent him.To her the thought of submitting to him as he his prisoner--of giving herself and her sisters to any Glandelinian soldier as a prisoner, had always been so distat distasteful that it had been dangerous to try and capture the Vivian Girls, whether successful or not, and she had flattered herself that she was free from unusual incidents. What had happened shocked and horrified her..... and she shuddered in loathing, while at the same time hating the Glandelinian cause, and despising Gerald starring for coming here and causing this trouble, and making her realize her own weerie weakness. She felt that she would die of very shame to allow herself taken by Gerald, and not defend her sisters too from the bad boy, and the memory of Geralds sinful taunts that she and her sisters were reptiles added to her distress...

""I or my sisters would kill him rather than submit as his prisoners"she reflected, distractedly"But when he was in here we didn't even make an effort to escape or to get possession of our weapons ."

A pistol. suppose he came in.The thought of it made her sit up suddenly in bed as the idea flashed through her little demo temporarily disordered disordered mind.If she could only get possession of one of her pistols without awakening Penrod she could surprise the bad Starring if he tried to get in, safe guard herself and her sisters from further indignity or at least prevent their misery at the worst.To secure even one of Penrods weapons would be easy, and he wouldn't mind. But her love for him made it that she didn't want to disturb his sleep .Penrod she observed was asleep now, and probably one of the pistols would be somewhere by his bedside.If she could only muster up courage, still the trembling of her limbs, and the frantic beating of her little heart.Jennie slipped out of bed still with her brain in a whirl and tried to control her almost hysterical agitation. Her mouth and throat were parched, and she gulped down some water from a cup left by one of the child slaves on a stool by the bedside, then bare footed and on tip toes, crept with palpitating heart toward Penrods bed.

The dimly lighted corridor outside seemed deserted making more sure the danger of a Geral Geralds unwelcome coming. and it too was full of eerie shadows cast by the flickering lamps--shadows which seemed to menance Jennie, as she glanced out through an opening in the curtains.Once at the sight of something in the corridor her nerves almost got the better of her, and she turned to rush back to her bed. But she fought for self control, and in a sudden revulsion of feeling became strangely calm--almost unnaturally calm --and after a few moments, advanced close to the bed of Penrod.

Cautiously again she drew aside the curtain and peered out. No body was out in the corridor.Penrod was stretched out on the bed lying on His side right side, with his face toward the beds of her and her sisters. His eyes were closed, and he seemed to be sleeping soundly... For a few moments Jennie stood tense and rigid, watching him, then she let the curtain drop behind her, and stood by his bed.Penrods state robes, head dress had been hung up on the bedstead but on a small stool or table by his bedside within reach of his hand, lay his own automatic American made pistol, and at the sight of it Jennie's hattttt heart throbbed still faster and louder.

She crept forward cautiously, her eye eyes fixed on the face of Penrod.Even in her tense state she could not help but recognize how handsome a boy he was, and she noted subconsciously how his hair formed into little curls round his brow.

She was within a couple of feet of the bedside, and her hand was moving out to take up the pistol, so she could surprise gerald if he tried to get in, when "Adeldeoh" opened his eyes, flung out his hands suddenly, and drew her down beside him on the bed.

"So still you couldn't sleep and because you're still worried you came to be closer to me beloved sister."he exclaimed."you need not take the pistol. I heard you coming even though you came barefoot d and made no noise. So Starring could not surprise me and he may not walk so cautiously. So rest easy my dearest sister. I will protect you."

Not only was Jennie so taken by surprise that she did not even scream, but there came in her a sort of reaction for what she suffered, and suddenly that strange sensation that comes to angel possessed children came upon her. Something seemed to make her head more clearer, so strong a strange happiness came upon her that she emitted a hysterical laugh, and subsided limply and happily into Penrods arms. Afterwards she did not know when whether she fell suddenly asleep or collasped. She remembered nothing more untill she awoke feeling dazed to find the sun streaming into the room through the windows set high in the wall of the room.Penrod was bending over her, and she understood somehow that he had aroused her with a kiss. Her sisters were up already dressed.

"your child slave servants await you Jennie dear."said Penrod smilingly."you have You have slept as one asleep in an angels arms, and now even your beauty makes the very sun jealous, for you and even your sisters this morning are more radiant than the sun itself,and more lovely than the most beautiful of flowers."

Drowsily, Jennie arose, trying to get the sleepiness out of her eyes; and feeling again as if she were living in a dream(don't scream) she seemed devoid of any sense of feeling, and for a time could not remember what really had happened. Apathetically she went from the room , to find the child slaves in in waiting of awaiting her and her sisters in the corridor, and it was ot not untilll she had her bathed and ate the morning meal with her sisters that her brain cleared...2 Her toilet completed,, she dismissed the child slaves, and sat for a time thinking, thinking, thinking , draing d a draining the dredges of her cup of bitterness and humilia humiliation while her sisters sadly shook their heads.

She realized how completely she and her sisters had been trapped into this army.Her thoughts turned to Penrod, and she wondered if he was in waiting ready to come to her aid if anything happened and she called to him for aid....

She wondered if Penrod in the time may come when she would have to call for help wonder what would happen if she done so, for for her sake and that of her sisters Penrod was dangerous to those who would molest them. Her thoughts reverted to the hoodad Mystery man, who had conversed with her in English and persuaded her and her sisters into going through with their duty, and she remembered his injunction to carry out the work her father would have wished them to do.

"What's the use to try and gather any important information, attempt to record the history of this army, describe its encampments, and the customs of the soldiers, who the generals are if Gerald Starring is here to interfere, and he can prevent us from rescueing those child slaves too"thought Jennie despairingly."Yet I suppose I and my sisters should do it, and The sooner the better.I must do something to prevent prevent myself from thinking of what has happened to me and my sisters or I shall go crazy again., and was that say two or three times.There must be some way of escape--some way out of the camp the way that the Glandelinians alone understand--and I and my sisters might find it if Penrod has courage enough to explore.I wouldn't ask him to do however what I and my sisters might be afraid to do.I wonder what Gerald Starring will do to day to interfere."

Violets train of thought was interrupted by the appearance of two Glandelinian girlscouts, who was accompanied by an olive complexioned handsome little girl slave of about Violets own age, and both she and her two companions bowed bowed low and greeted Violet, and her sisters with the deepest respect.....

Violet and her understatiates sisters understood by their explanation that Penrod had appointed them to be their personal attendants or little Ladies in Waiting, and although the Vivian Girls did not not want personal attendants, they did not like to refuse the gentle child slave with the child scouts.

"I and my companions went to get out into the open(to prevent suspicion she could n,t dare say my sisters)"she exclaimed."I would wish to take a hike through the Glandelirian camps if it is allowed.

The child slave herself only partly understood Violets meaning, but the child slaves said;"The camp ie too large to go for exploring and we do not understand now to go.We ,i might get lost and never get back here."

The child scouts however escorted her and her sisters to the wall in building gardens, which in the summer would be veritably ablaze in color, and which were extensive and beautifully planned.In the summer exotic flowers of every hue grew in profusion, and there were many fruit trees, flowering shrubs and shady walks between rows of giant palms, while the lawns would have done credit to the most beautiful of Americ American Jennie clubs, so smooth green and velvety even now ther they were.violet and her sisters realized that in the summer birds of gay plumage sang in the trees, and hopped about the paths, displaying no fear of the human beings, and Calverinian lizards colored as if they were covered with living jewelry basked in the sun on the massive walls..

The beauty of their surroundings and the magical melody of the bird voices soothed the troubled spirits of violet, and her sisters,,, and calmed their jangled nerves.They too had no fear of Starring now for they were in their uniforms, and were armed as if they were little girlish brigands. They wandered for a time in the pine scented air, and especially violets thoughts turned instinctively to their ow her own once fair home in Marcuelan where she and her sisters lived before the great war came on...2.2.2.2.22

The beautiful moor would be ablaze in the summer with golden gorse and purple heather; she reflected, the corn would be starting in the fields, and everything all green. and when the now comes "oh how they dreaded snow". she believed now that the mother and aunt of she and her sisters had been continually busy answering questions, and they could fancy the dear gentle mother sighing and shaking her head as she answered;;;;

"No there is still no news of my dearest daughters"and perhaps wiping away many a a tear.every Royal personage at home would be anxious. Their guides who had betrayed her and her sisters had probably returned to the Glandelinian armies, and some of them would doubtless return to ganleys army to report that she and her sisters a had disappeared much in the same mysterious manner as they had often done before.Geralds Starrings followers too if he had any might disperse also.Search parties of Glandelinians might perhaps be organized, but what danger was there of any search party if finding her and her sisters in this strange well dudish dressed Gland e linian army, and of reaching where they are quartered..

"Better we had never come here"violet mused, mournfully."It was mad ness and overweening conciet on our part to imagine, that we should succeed in finding Father, after the Gemini had failed, and then only to learn he never even left the door of his headquarters and was still in camp now worrying why We don't come. and what have I and my sisters accomplishedfyes we have by pure chance discovered a glandelinian army in most wonderful gaudy dressed uniforms, but such information is nothing at all.I and my sisters it seems have ruined our lives and unless we do something soon for those child slaves, and get away from here, we'll soon be discovered and either be doomed to spent the rest of our existance here as little tetters than child slaves themselves ot be mud murdered in the most brutal fashion possible.By Starring we have been sinfully outraged and humiliated, our pride is bent and broken, what little pride we did have, and even if we did succeed in returning to the christian lines without the information we were after I feel I or my dear sisters or even o poor Penrod could never hold up our heads again.I loathe and despise these glandelinian soldiers, and hate the devils who are responsible for this sinful nation, and feel that the christian world see pines them too and none might put reons to have any sympathy."

The thought came to her too that the situation would spoil Penrods life if he too was doomed to spend the rest of his days within this vanity Glandelinian army.True is was Geralds unbridled sinful passions of hate and anger against her and her sisters which were responsible for the plight of her and her sisters, but she understood he would put the fault on her and her sisters, and that if Penrod slew him she would feel that Geralds companions would put the blame of Starrings death on them. She found it impossible to believe that Gerald Starring would resign himself to the situation, and felt sure positively, that he would not resign her and her sister vto "Adeldefob" without another struggle. What saved her and her sisters was the fact that Gerald thought Adeldefob was a superior Glandelinian boyscout, and having never seen Penrod face to face, without a disguise therefore did not recognize him as her brother.Had he been able to do so nothing would have saved them from him.

"Oh I wish this dreadful war was dead"she exclaimed aloud"and flushed with embarassment, as she raised her eyes to find her girlscout and child slave attendants---whom she had forgotten, and also her sisters--regarding her in plex perplexity.

Her sisters were able to read her mind however and understood what she had thought off but said nothing. But she and even her sisters felt greatly relieved when they saw "Adeldefob" approaching them from the headquarters and the embrassing flush ebbed away quickly leaving them even paler than before,..

"Greetings my dears"exclaimed Penrod, smilingly."You and your sisters Violet dear"he said in English are fairer children than any flower in the world, and the songs of all the birds are not sweet enough to praise the beauty of you little angel sisters."

"He took violet's hand as he spoke.

"Please Penrod dear stay here with Jems."violet responded."I and my sisters are utterly wretched, and only wish we were birds so that we might fly out of this ghastly Glandelinian camp and be free again."

"If you flew my dearest sisters,I'd have wings to and fly also."he said quite gravely."I'm afraid it is my fault that you have had to go through this.If I had known I would not have had you come along with me.But you are also worried for my sake.There's an unseen danger you feel that you cannot explain.It pleases you to arpu arouse Geralds fury.But sisters dear be careful.He's dangerous, and treacherous."

He seated himself between Violet, and her sisters under a gaint pine tree, and and especially looked at violet questionigly. The attendents had withdrawn to a discreet discreet distance, but they might as well have remained within all easy gearing for all they could have understood, for they understood no language save Glandelinian, and naturally so they wouldn't be understood Penrod, and violet,and her sisters conversed in English.

"There is some sort of a danger which I cannot see"retorted violet, with a slight sigh of impatience."I am only telling the simple truth.I and my sisters would give anything to be free, and with you in the christian lines again and be ableo t to blot out the memory of what has happened. And also you should not blame yourself. All was well with us here untill that Starring came here and butted in."

Penrod regarded her gravely and in silence for a few moments.

"You are slightly rebelling against your destiny Violet dearest"he said softly. "Did not the wise mysterious man say it was preordained, that you and your sisters and I should see this adventure through, and that we will win in the end.you love me and your sisters, but you're somehow somehow or other scared of that Starring boy, for fear he mayconquer conquer me and be able to capture you and get away, and it is your fear of him that males you say you would wish to fly away.Don't lose courage sisters dear.I will aid you, and help you win in this adventure, and then you will glory in your sweet success and so your father and the world will marvel."

"I suppose there are no limits to these adventures though."Jennie herself commented in vexation, and she sighed too as she realized that no good purpose could be served by giving vent to her resentment.

"We wished to explore the Glandelinian encampments in fact"said Catherine, and so to do some of the duty Father might have done if he had gone to do it.I suppose

Your greater greater Glandelinian generals have no objection."

"I have great information to show you and I myself shall act as your guide" answered Penrod readily... "Come sisters and I will show you something which I believe is why general Manley cannot dare retreat.If I had my way however this whi whole encampment and all it contained would be belonging to you and your sisters to share with the Christian lines.I'll show you some of the treasures.The greatest treasure of all however you have seen is when you glance into your mirrow mirrow.

"You my dearest brother certainly need no instruction in the art of telling us how beautiful we are."remarked Jennie smiling in spite of herself."To us you also appear more beautiful tna than we are."

"How can I compare or overdo. seven little celestial girls who are so fair and lovely that the best story author groups in vain for words to describe their beauty."Responded Penrod also smiling."In the Abbieanian tongue I cannot to save my life find words to tell you and your sisters how you charm the hearts of every christian person, and delight even the eyes of God Himself whom you love so well, and even the language of the angels and the Saints has not words to express the love I have for you and your sisters.The hair of every one of you little girls is as spung gold, your eyes are purple pools of light into which when I gaze my heart is almost charmed from my body.The skin of you beautiful beautiful little girls is smooth and sweet as the petals of the fairest flower in all the world world, and your crimson lips were surely made for kisses from Our Blessed Lord Himself.Fair are your pure beautiful little bodies oh my lovely sisters, and shapely your white little limbs. When any oneof you lie in my arms with your heart beating against my breast my un worthy breast and her lips on mine!!!"

"Oh Penrod dear oh please stop we're not so worthy as all that."Interposed Daisy suddenly but smiling in spite of herself. She and her sisters had nevertheless listened fascinated to Penrods strange but well meant eulogy spoken in a soft drawling sort of voice, and were not surprised with themselves for having listened so long.The thought flashed through violets mind mind that only a few years previously they would havelaughed to scorn such unusual even if beautiful and well deserved compliments and ridiculed ridiculed the persons who made them.

"Surely"we're nothing"she added hurriedly, for the ard gur in Penrods eyes surprised her and made her anxious to change the subject."Your wording however show that you have a wonderful command of English, considering it is not your own language."

"Somebody teached me English the same as they tr teached you sister dear.That is a good advantage for us."

Almost as he spoke Gerald Starring came hurrying tward him from the direction of one of the headquarters building looking hot, flustered and angry.

"I give you greeting."exclaimed Penrod but sarcastically, rising to his feet, and violet,and her sisters noticed that his hand went to the butt of the automatic pistol of his own however.

"Greetings be hanged."enapped Gerald Starring."Some of your cursed child slaves mind you child slaves, have caused the officers to recieve orders that I am not to leave this camp under any conditions, and so that it is utterly utterly impossible for me to leave for general Manleys army.By your orders I suppose, or perhaps you did it yourself because you overheard me trying to force those brats to come with me as my prisoners to general Manley.You have my way cut off so that I cannot get to Manley."

"Yes you planned to try to force my charges to go away as your prisoners, and also threatened to come with an armed force, and to strip and lash them in spite of me, so I ordered all the child slaves to see to it that you cannot leave the lines."said Penrod calmly meeting the angry boys glance steadily."That don't mean though that you cannot go any time you wish.You can any time you want to but empty handed. It would please me to let you go but the thought that you might steal away the Vivien Girl Princesses whom you claim as spies, and that you may return with others of your sort and bring them away by force by starting strife here decided me that you must not be allowed to return to Manleys army untill this army advances to join with him.I overheard you say too that if I ever met their brother Penrod I would not be no match for him."He looked at violet and her sisters and unseen by Starring gave a knowning wink then continued to Starring" You will remain here Gerald John Starring!!"---

"I'm captian John Starring and I' m----"

"Don't interupt me when I'm talking to you Master Starring.You're not a captian to me. You claim that Violet, and her sisters spy on Manleys army.That's His sorrow not mine. As I said before as you're a Glandelinian as the rest here you may remain here Gerald Starring, and all of us will treat you with the respect due to a boyscout of your rank as long as youdo not challenge the authority of Master John Adeldefob.I'm supreme commander here of all the boy and girlscouts, and you have nothing to say here.I'm higher in commission than some of these generals here even and can order you arrested if I so choose.But I Adeldefob will treat you almost as one would treat a guest if you are reasonable.But leave my prisoners alone.They have not spied either on me or you and therefore you have nothing to do with them."

"Curse your condescension."snarled Gerald Starring and then checked himself recognizing that violence of language would serve him little, and that "Adeldefob" was making him look helpless and very foolish in the eyes of his enemies violet, and her sisters."You will suffer for this"he added after a pause.I'll double cross you and notify their brother Penrod where they are, and I'll bet you cannot hold them if he comes here..You have no right to make me a prisoner even with the little gutter snipes"said Gerald. "I have notified Manley what has gone on here by secret telegraph and an expedition will be sent in search of me, and when I am found and they are proven to be your guests instead of prisoners you will pay the penalty."

Penrod glanced at him severely, and then smiled grimly.

"Nudging violet without being seen he said to Gerald;

"So you'll have Penrod come and fight me eh. and you are my prisoner did you say."He said slowly nudging violet again and she glanced at him as if she understood."I have told you that you are merely my guest---and you understand the Vivian Girl Princesses here, are mere guests too even though slightly prisoners.But I claim them and no one will take them from me.What penalty should a host pay for detaining a guest and insisting upon him enjoying his hospitality?If you wish to go away from this camp you may, but you'll go empty handed and no one with you.If you wish to stay you may.Others may search but Manley knows me well and wouldn't dare interfere with me here so I do not fear on that score.As for your double crossing me and getting Penrod to come here, I'll just dare you to try it.I'm the mighty proud Adeldefob and I'll challenge any one man or demon to try and get the Vivian Girl Princesses from me. And if you try it you'll get a bullet in your head.Just stay away from them and don't dare strip them to ship as you did before."

Gerald glowered at him, biting his lips untilll blood came.

"you may defy Penrod, you fool but if you ever met him oh my.He can lick even in blade drills even his sisters who are experts themselves."

"What do you know about Penrod.Have you ever seen him?"

"No I have not.but I've heard--"

"Enough"said Adeldefob." You can't scare me that way.I told you I'll challenge man or devil to try and steal Violet and her sisters away from me."

Gerald again bit his lip for he understood that Adeldefob was making mock of him, and there was murder in his heart.He decided really to betray Adeldefob to Penrod.Ha.Ha.If he only knew.His impulse was to leap at Adeldefob to stab the boy who had beaten and frustrated him from securing whom he claimed his prisoners to fasten his fingers on his throat and strangle him, but it had not escaped his notice that "Adeldefob was watching him closely, and he understood fully well that the boyscout chieftian would not hesitate to shoot him to death if he did anything rash.When two Glandelinians become mad and fight they always fight to the death.He understood also that what. "Adeldefob"said was true---that Manley wouldn't be able to do anything as Adeldefob had high respect amongst all Glandelinian generals, they feared him as if he was a mysterious Glandelinian prince they knew nothing about. and the thought of being compelled to remain in this glandelinian army against against his will and submit to seeing violet and her sisters resigning themselves as guest-prisoners of Adeldefob drove him almost to madness.

Violet, and her sisters were conscious of the tension and guessed of something of what was passing through Geralds mind as they could read his thoughts.They understood acutely how Gerald accustomed to having things always his own way in almost everything, and a boyscout of violent passions must be feeling his helplessness, but for what they had suffered in the past because of him and as he was worse to them now how could it be possible that pity could fill their hearts.He did not deserve their pity.

"since you are still persecuting us"said violet hotly"I am not sorry for what has happened Gerald--and it is best for you to accept the situation as it is.Consider yourself Lucky Master Starring, that you're his guest, and not our prisoners.If you were, what we would do to you."

"Yes Princess Violet there seems nothing but for me to accept the situation and content myself with being the unwilling guest of Adeldefob untill the army moves"Agreed Starring,"but I'd kill myself before I'd allow myself to be your prisoner. or the prisoner of your sisters. I understand the fate in store for me for your Father would give anything to capture me.After all too this army has its attractions.I realize it is useless for me to rebel against my fate, and since you are the prisoners of Adeldefob I do not care much what befores of me but I will not give up.I can bide my time"and he squared his not see or suspect that in the least Penrod did it so cleverly..He showed that the Glandelinian army was so massive that if it once did join Manley it could sure cause plenty of trouble for Emperor Vivian and his armies.The sight of the encampments that was revealed made even Gerald Starring gap and gasp in wonder. He saw that the tents were as numerous seemingly as the sands of the sea, and batteries were in position at every big road.Penrod pointed them out, and told violet and her sisters many important things in English, and violet and her sisters couldn't help being stirred to wonder and admiration.

"My if all this army is yours you must be one of the wealthiest Glandelinian princes in the world."violet exclaimed impulsively as later he showed them in a big vault filled with jewels of many sorts some in their rough state, others cut, and others again strung into necklaces or set in ornaments of fine gold.Penrod poured them out from bags and boxes as if they were so many pebbles, picked them up and let them fall through his fingers, the cut gems appearing as if they were of liquid fire.There was plenty plenty of gold too-gold in ingots and in nuggets; golden images of certain strange gods, great vessels of gold, golden armour set with jewels, or with fine enamel, inlaid, curiously fashioned fastened chairs or fashioned chairs, and steps encased in gold, and gold ornaments, rings and head dresses by the thousands. The whole collection represented wealth almost beyond compute.

"This is more wonderful than Aladins cave and could be used for our Cause" said violet in English laying her hand on Penrods hand in her excitement.

"It is ours if we can get it by a raid to share with ourselves as it is all stolen property."responded Penrod grasping her hand and pressing it."When we obtain it we may use the treasure as we may.It's a great place to raid at present.With this wealth--if we get it outside, you and I could use it for either the wars progress or if the good owners are living restore all to whom it belongs. And with God's help I'll get it--By God's help I'll get it."

"What are you saying?"interposed Gerald Starring with an almost suspicious glance."

"The conversation between me and the Vivian Girls is strictly private." retorted Penrod.

Violet and her sisters were a trifle dazed and bewildered by the sight of such wealth stolen by the Glandelinian armies, and they left the treasure department with their brains in a whirl. When assisting other Abbiennian spies in their work against the Glandelinian armies they had often thrilled at the possibility of getting possession of some Glandelinian treasure hord with which to use to carry on the christian armies in this holy cause, but never in their wildest dreams had they thought of stolen treasure such as Penrod had displayed and told her and her sisters they might used as they wished to when it could be ever recovered.However Gerald Starrings suggestion in secret to Penrod but overheard by them that it was the treasure for which she and her sisters allowed themselves to be the prisoners of Adeldefob for rankled, and his vow that He would yet get possession of the little girls disturbed Violet and her sisters greatly, and gave them a forboding of coming evil and disaster.They knew Starring, and understood he was not to be trifled with, and that he would avenge the scratched face violet gave him most bitterly.

Violet and her sisters were never hated by any Glandelinian as Starring hated them them, and their beauty didn't touch him one little bit either. He was even envious and jealous of them, because they were beautiful, and because they were better spies than he or any of his Glandelinian followers could ever be, and had often frustrated every one of his followers and other Confederates with the most perfect ease.

"Even if all of the treasure and the whole Glandelinian army were captured it would not purchase my freedom or that of my sisters if once We're captured by that T Starring."violet soliloquized"of what use does it do these Glandelinians to steal all that wealth from the christian cities and towns they raid.it would be of use only if we ourselves could escape with it to the christian lines and see to it it was restored to its rightful owners.We ourselves do not care for jewelry and gold."

As in her thoughts turned to the forlorn hope of escaping from this Glandelinian army with Starring watching them, and it occured to her and even her sisters that all of the great treasure hord hoard must surely have been brought to the Glandelinian army in big raids into christian cities, or from christian cities and towns captured by the enemy.That meant there was or had been some way of reaching this Glandelinian encampment, a hidden way which the Glandelinians had discovered, and which probably still existed. to carry off that treasure in sight of a christian army would only be disasterous.The possibility that the secret way may be known by Penrod to Penrod or the strange Mystery man flashed into Violets mind and she impulsively determined to try to persuade Penrod to make some of the Glandelinian general by a scheme or something to give out the secret, and therefore they could,.

shoulders . He had suddenly resolved to pretend to resign himself, to lull Adeldefob into a sense of false security, and then immediately opportunity presented itself to attack, and vanquish his successful rival, and take possession of Violet, and her sisters. If such an opportunity didn't arive then to drop some deadly posion into the food of Violet and her sisters when nobody was looking.

"It is wise and well Gerald Starring."said Fentod gravely. "You need an attendant and therefore I'll give you a girlscout to wait upon your every wish."

He glanced around, and called to the younger of Violets girlscout attendants ,and the girl ran forward very quickly and bowed low before him.Fentod said a few words to in glandelinian, pointed to Gerald, and the girl blushed deeply, flashed a scared glance at him but gave herself up to do his bidding though it was evident she didn't like Gerald Starring.

"She is your waiter now."announced Adeldefob.

For once ina way Gerald found himself embrassed, and at a loss to know what to say or do, and Violet cried out an impulsive protest in pretension.

"Us boyscouts do not accept child scout attendants that way."Exclaimed Gerald. "You have no right to offer a girlscout to me as an attendant. We are supposed to be their attendants."

"No right"repeated Adeldefob raising his eyebrows."I am the Mighty Proud Adeldefob Prince of all this army and all it contains is mine to do what I will.If Prince Adeldefob bids a girlscout to be your assistant, she does not dare question my command.I have given her to you as an attendant and you can accept or refuse as you will.Then you'll have to do your duties here while you stay alone."

"He won't take her"objected Violet with a wink which only Fentod saw.

"Master Adeldefob though I'm partly your prisoner I must admit you do not understand the ways of boyscouts in Manleys army.They do not accept child scout girls without questioning their wishes."

"Oh no"said Fentod."I was often in command of certain divisions in Manleys times.I am Mighty Adeldefob the Supreme Prince of Glandelinia and I took you and your sisters as soon as you entered my headquarters."retorted Fentod, whereat violet covered her face tightly with her hand as if she was suddenly crying bitterly, but she wished to avert her face to hide its expression for she was convulsed with laughter.Fentod had made the funnest remark she had ever heard and it doesn't take much to start them laughing that is her and her sisters no matter what situation they're in.

"Well then why shouldn't I accept her."added Gerald Starring, to whom it had occured that violets pretended protest might be caused by a feeling of suspicion that he might tell the scout who she and her sisters really where were.However he saw in what had happened an opportunity in wounding Violet and her sisters and causing them more apprehension, and took it."As you have allowed yourselves to be the treacherious friend of Adeldefob and to fool him so he won't give you to me as prisoners why shouldn't I accept a girlscout as an attendant "he added.

A passionate report of the severest nature arose to Jennie's lips, but she checked it back although she felt humiliated and insulted and could have slashed him across the face with a whip had she one.Fentod glanced frowningly from one to the other, obliviously perplexed and a little annoyed, then he shrugged his shoulders and his face cleared.

"Come violet and your dear sisters "he said in English"I promised to show you something important"he said taking violet and Jennie by the hand and bidding the others to follow."You Gerald Starring may come if you wish."

"Much obliged"said Gerald, and flattered himself that he had succeeded in fooling Fentod.But violet and her sisters had read his thoughts and watched him secretly as an owl watches. He was tempted to spring at Fentod from behind, and try to overpower him as he followed him, and to do so only when they were going to the pal headquarters, but to his surprise violet and her sisters placed themselves between him and Fentod and realized that they understood his intentions for some of the little girls showed their long dangerous knives with the "dirtiest dirtiest sneers".

He had been accepted the girlscout by the hand and she walked beside him in docile fashion with eyes downcast... What was in her mind he could not guess and he didn't wish to ask because he didn't want violet and her sisters to hear anything.He was as it seemed too, literally their prisoners prisoners. The girl scout did not interest him much, although she was pretty and shapely.He however forgot whatever intentions he had, when attended by guards and officials he followed Fentod, and violet and her sisters on foot down along side company street, and secretly showed Violet and her sisters something they would give a world to find out.Gerald did

"why are you so silent and thoughtful Violet dearest?"demanded Fentod in English, smilingly, breaking in on her thoughts."Does the idea of the enemy holding so much stolen treasure weigh heavy upon your mind."

"I was thinking of what good use to which such great wealth stolen by the enemy could be put if our army got possession of it, providing the owners couldn't be traced or were dead."answered Violet."Do you realize that if we could secure that treasure, rescue all the child slaves, and outwit that scab Starring, we would make our army of great historical worth, and grandeur for accomplishing something as that for our holy cause.The money is our own country's property, the Glandelinians stole it and it is our duty to recover it if possible. The images, ornaments and thrones would be hailed as the greatest recovery of our treasures of the century if they were recaptured, you would become famous, and our own army would become the Mecca of every christian general."

"What could all that wealth purchase in the other section of armies that I do not possess here in you and your sisters."responded Fentod."what fame do I need, beyond that which I already have as your loving brother and the chance to act as if I'm a great Glandelinian boyscout and help you get all the information necessary.Would it make for happiness to see you get captured, and yet at the same time secure all that stuff.That is a most terribly dangerous suggestion you made.That hoard is guarded as nothing else is guarded and even the enemy army could be routed in battle and yet not lose a hold on that hoard.If we do succeed in that it would be a more wonderful achievement than you said, as it seems the impossible."

"I believe it is our duty to reveal all this to the christian generals."said Jennie herself earnestly."Surely the thought of becoming world famous does not attract us but to be able to secure that and restore to their owners is our duty. Surely we cannot be contented to spend too many days here now that you have learned to us the information we're after, and after discovering all this, when our best and beautiful christian armies lies beyond this dirty Glandelinian foe.We will be captured sooner or later if Starring finds a way to betray us and he certainly will."

"Here I am ,as Adeldefob, a Prince to thee silly Glandelinians"replied Fentod slowly and thoughtfully."I have not yet even discovered the main things I'm after here.Here now that you are here with me on this adventure,I have all that any person could desire, save only that my longing to hear that you'll be always be safe from harm is not yet gratified.Why then my beloved sisters should forsake this crazy Glandelinian army too soon, even if that were possible when we have not had the chance to rescue those children yet."

"You should not be content to stagnate here when it is getting more dangerous for you and us every minute."persisted violet."We could never love anybody who would be afraid to venture from any glandelinian army he had entered into to aid those he loves to escape with him to fight if needs be to assert himself."

"The words stung Fentod.This was the first time violet had spoken thus this way to him. His eyes flashed, his face flushed severely, and he drew himself up proudly.

"I fear nothing"he said sharply in Abbigennian."Have I not proven already what brave things I can do, and have not fought one of the most dangerous Glandelinian boyscouts--and conquered him with my bare arms, wresting his weapons away from him."

"Yes you took me by surprise."snapped Gerald Starring who overheard the words."I'll fight you again as boy to boy without weapons for Violet and her crazy sisters so they'll be my prisoners--here and now if you like..If you are not afraid of the Confounded Christian dogs, and of leaving the army here for a short space, why did you destroy my means to get to general Manleys army .You dare not leave this Glandelinian army yourself for fear of the christian dogs and you had my own way of leaving the army out off because you were afraid if got away either with them, or then if not and alone would tell their crazy brother Fentod on you and he'd come and make you give them up. and he could do it too believe me."

The atmosphere had suddenly again become electrical.To Violet and her sisters it seemed that the two boys might spring at each other at any moment, and she and three of her sisters intervened as they saw "Adeldefobs "eyes blaze and his fingers again close on the automatic pistol.

"I did not mean to accuse you of cowardice Adeldefob"she violet said in English"I did not intend to stir up another quarrel."she flashed an angry glance at Gerald Starring."Get back to your proper station"she sneered or I'll shoot you like a dog or I'll do worse I'll tear your eyes out with my finger nails."

Starring quailed before her pistol and her looks, and she then appealed by a look an appealing glance at Fentod

"Don't let him catch on that I'm trying to find a way to get out of this Glandelinian army without discovery if there is a way so that we can escape escape from him."she said to him in English."violence will spoil everything."

"A boy Prince doesn't wish to fight again with an enemy he has vanquished and whose unworthy life he has spared returned "Adeldefob haughtily."A prisoner who would turn upon a victor who had granted him quarter, deserves to die."

"Are you referring to me confound you!"Growled Starring."Am I to regard myself as a prisoner.If you you'll never succeed in holding me and--"

"I have told you before that you may regard yourself as my guest but see to it that you do not abuse my my hospitality or I may repent of my clemency" "said Penrod coldly."you're not my prisoner or I'd have placed you under arrest.If you don't care for my company you may leave any time you wish."

"As for being afraid to leave the Glandelinian army"he resumed addressing violet and her sisters"surely it is foolish to accuse one of cowardice for not accomplishing the impossible just now.We have not even seen those child slaves yet"he spoke in English.

"There surely must be a way."exclaimed violet impulsively."My angels will help you you find it.Seek it Penrod.Seek it."

"If there is a way Violet then I will find it."Penrod responded his face clearing."I'll find out too if the Glandelinian generals have a map or plan of the underground passages.I believe too there must be a secret tunnel through the mountain wall.

Gerald Starring glanced suspiciously from one to the other, his brows drawn together together in a frown.

"Why do you two speak in a language I cannot understand"it demanded of violet. "I have told you and your confounded sisters. ----"

"It's all right Penrod dear"interrupted violet."I don't pay any attention to him and I don't care whether he likes it or not. What language he we speak is our own business. We had the idea of remaining here so long especially when that little fool is here.If you believe we we ourselves give trust to God and our possession miracle they will help us to discover the way of leaving this Glandelinian army."

"you or your sisters cannot find the way""responded Penrod."It is only known to the Glandelinian generals and to whom one whom I------"

"He broke off abruptly, shrugged his shoulders and laughed sheepishly.

"go there is a way."exclaimed Jennie, her eyes lighting up

"There certainly is a way."said Penrod."but those who find it go it is said get lost forever in the labyrithian passages and starve to death.There's only one way in and no way out.I wouldn't let any one of you into that ttttttttttt dangerous tunnel for you are sure playing with death, and in spoiling you may get lost and return no more.And I couldn't bear that.."

"Starring understood some of the words at this time however and said to himself; "If I could,d chase those little brats into those labyrithian passages and cause them to get lost.You can take it from me that I will find a way."

Starring only whispered very lightly to himself but Penrods cat ears as it is called detected every word. He grinned fiendishly at Starring, but there was a dangerous look in Penrods eyes as he took violet and Jennie by the hand and said to Pentadt Gerald to the surprise of Violet and her sisters;

"Though you whispered so lightly I overheard every word.So you would be happy to see them lost in those underground passages.Take warning before it is too late.I might have you driven in there."

"You would be wise to console yourself with your foolish little guests and the delights of the Glandelinian army Adeldefob, and to count for them as lost for all time from the christian lines"Gerald starring said quietly over his shoulders after a pause."The christian armies under their father is pressing close on Manley.you wouldn't dare leave the safe confines of our armies.Yet to have those little Christian dog Princesses as your guests are not everything.They may learn plenty of military information from you and sent it off secretly to the christian lines."

Violet and her sisters understood the significance of the last fewwords words and she flas and violet flashed a side glance at Penrod, who was looking grave and thoughtful.

"That oh red headed boyscout"he said slowly."But then that is my sorrow not your."

"This army belongs to my country"declared Starring "as well as it does to you.you're a fool to retain them dangerous brats as guests and refuse to give them up when they're your worst enemies.I don't care them.Let them do to you what they did to Manley.I'll not bother to try and get them from you any more. But if they do anything to you I'll sure give you the horses laugh."

Gerald had quite forgotten the girlscout and he glanced at her now, as she trotted lemurely close by his side. She of course understood with nothing of what had been said between Penrod and Violet, and during the dispute she had stooood silent, regarding Penrod, Gerald Starring, and three of the Vivian Girls, with mingled wonder, awe and dread.. She was rather overwhelmed at the thought of becoming the girlscout assistant of Gerald Starring and she regarded herself as having been honored.

"Well things will turn out for the best"laughed Penrod."Would that I could get much more love from my dearest sisters than even I do now"added Penrod in a whisper to Jennie, pressing her hand."

"We love you as much as we can, as much as is in our power now, but we would give you yet a better reward if you would agree to hurry up this distasteful adventure and take us back to the christian army."responded Jennie in a low voice in English. Her brain had been acting quickly and she had decided that her one ray of hope for escape for him and herself and sisters lay in persuading Penrod to try and find an exit out of the foe army. Once thus outside the Glandelinian army and within sight of the christian army they could give Gerald starring the slip.It was hopeless to expect Penrod to let them go alone with so much danger in the air, for he would accompany them for their protection, and she determined to use all her arts and love for him if need be to achieve her object and gain for him and her sisters as well as for herself some of their liberty.

Gerald starring himself had decided to play a dastardly part.He intended to lull Penrod into a sense of false security by pretending to resign himself to the situation, and then when the opportunity presented itself he would overpower Penrod, capture violet and her sisters, and drive them to a fate fatal losing of themselves in the dark death labyrinthian passages.

"The christian army."said "Adeldefob thought all,""You have told me my beloved sisters thatyou had faced all sorts of dangers, and that you are dead to the fear of any sort of adventure, and that you have neither fear nor disgust of anything within a Glandelinian army.What reason it then that you so ardently desire to return?You desired to come here, and declared that your place was beside your brother.Are you getting scared of the Glandelinians now because of the factGerald Starring is here now.?"

"If you had met us in the christian armies, and were a good Glandelinian boyscout instead of our brother would you not have wished for our curiosity to show us the wonders of the Glandelinian army?"violet herself countered.

"Would you not have wished to show us to your soldiery and to show your soldiery to us"added Catherine?Would you have not thought us cruel and selfish had I refused to accompany you and doubted our love.?"

Penrod was impressed and nodded his head...

"Verily beloved sisters."he answered gravely.

"Then dearest brother do please prove your great love for us by going to find a way out so we might can get back to the christian lines..There you can give forth the information we desire the generals to have, and you will become more famous than you are now, and will be welcomed by the greatest living scientists, yay even by other Kings and rulers. The whole world will ring with your name and fame.Say you will endeavor to get us out of this vile Glandelinian army before our true identy is discovered."

"I would do much to prove my love for you my sisters dears, but you ask the impossible"said Penrod looking troubled. "It is impossible now to be able to reach the tunnel high up in that mountain through which you and your sisters and reached this camp, and through which no doubt Starring followed you. And all other ways are so guarded that no one can get past the pickets. They're instructed not to even let any of their own following past them as no one is allowed to leave camp because the army may advance on short notice."

"There must be some other way."Jolie said"There must be a way--some sort of a strange passage. some one must have found a way.The strange Mystery man who spoke English and our own language must surely have come from some place brother dear.He seemed to be gifted with almost supernatural powers, and he may possibly know the way of escape.Ask all the generals if you can I beg of you."

"It shall be as you wish sisters dear."said Penrod"If there is a way the strange mystery man who speaks English may be able to tell us.Him I will question and abide bid advise me.But my heart is troubled sisters dear.If I depart from hence, what will all the Glandelinians do.They'll sure become suspicious. Will they not get wise to something turn against me and capture us.?What If through Gerald Starring they'll discover who Adeldefob is, and allow our cause us to fall victims to enemies we do not see.Maybe they'll capture us and chase us into the deadly laybrinth.The wrath of the great Glandelinian Generals may fall upon us if I try to find out such information by questioning them.It might be sisters dear if we even reach the outer world beyond this vast glandelinian army we might find ourselves lost in a wilderness forever."

"You need not fear that"said Hettie."You could tell the Glandelinians or show them a false note that you have been summoned to General Manley to confer with him, and then you and we could return to the christian lines armed with greater power than we now possess.I cannot believe that you are afraid to venture out of this Glandelinian camp."

"I'm not afraid but my heart is greatly troubled."Penrod said gravely."Yet it shall be as you desire beloved sisters.I will ask the main scout patrol leaders for information and guidiance, and find out if there is a secret way out."

"Thank you brother dear"we claimed violet, while she and her sisters smiled up into his face and violet gave his hand a little squeeze..

The thought that her plan might succeed thrilled her and her sisters, and the prospect of escape made their hearts beat faster.She did not hate the part she was playing, did not hate the thought of fooling Gerald Starring for she and her sisters consoled themselves with the reflection that the end justified the means.

"Why do you call me brother dear!"he inquired smiling."Be careful.Glandelinian soldiers may understand that word."

They sat down together in one of the "Commission apartments Violet and her sister sisters and Penrod and also Gerald Starring--all in better spirits, and as they are Gerald Starring played the part for which he had cast himself, pretending not to pay any more attention to violet and her sisters in the hope of causing them them to lost their caution.His plan succeeded but not in the way he had expected. Violet and her sisters knew and understood him too well for him to be able to cause them to lose caution, so catching them unawares was out of the question, they had no respect for him, but as violet herself out of the corner watched him to see what he would do, the thought occured to her that he was only pretending to ignore them her and her sisters, and that he had not abandoned the idea of trying to force Adelaefob to give her and her sisters up, and that the Vivian girls could trust him as well as a rattle serpent, that his passion for their capture and destruction had not died down, and that if he overheard their plan he would do all in his power to prevent their escape from this Glandelinian army, or follow them in secret and capture them by a treacherous move. Since the sad incident with Fred Lowden and Jennie violet and her sisters suspected more treachery in Starring than even in his two Confederates.

Violet also to try and trap him also played her part.She talked to Penrod about their plan of rescueing the child slaves, what they too had discovered about this Glandelinian camp its vast population of soldiers, its strange magnificence, its wide company Streets, the beat beauty of the tents told him about her discovery as to the number of provision and ammunition wagons, tepe telephones baloons, aropalesnes aeroplanes and wireless telegraphy among other things, and he listened entranched as a child might have listened to some fantastic Fairy tale. She spoke----with a catch in her breath as she saw Geralds suspicious glance because she conversed in English--of the reason she found out why now Manley was afraid to retreat, and her eyes filled as she told of the situation should Manley discover the way out tward Bepoo Bepoo Lansin.She told of the progress of the war, and now men of all classes on the christian side had fought so far and died for so holy a cause and for the Freedom of all Child slaves, and saw Penrods eyes gleam as she told the t story.

"So would I fight and die if needs be for our great cause--and to preserve you and my sisters"he said simply"Verily you come of a race of Angels my beloved sisters."

"You will come with us Penrod to discover more of the enemy camps before we try to go away?"asked joice eagerly.

"Yes if Circumstances permit, and the way is made plain"Penrod answered plainly and slowly glancing at Gerald Starring."But I will have to say we'll have g to get rid of that scamp for he 'll see to it that if we try to depart from here we'll surelu be caught andbrought to Manleys army.I read in his words too even though in a whisper that he planned if he captured you to force you so far into the laybrinth caves as so you'll be lost and never get out. I warn you watch him."

"It was on the tip of Violets tongue to say that she and her sisters would shoot starring now if that was his dastardly plan but then it wouldn't have been safe and therefore she refrained.

"Before we go Penrod dear we should wish to explore the whole camp in this section-the whole encampment in fact so we can discover more things." Jennie said after a pause"I wish surely to accompluw accomplish the duty we came out here to do, learn the history of this vast Glandelinian army--study its positions and batteries, find out the numbers of the divisions, how many men the army has---everything of importance for our generals.."

"I myself will be your guide dearest sisters."said Penrod."You shall surely find that this army is one worth fearing, and when you have seen all be careful not to say anything even amongst yourselves or it may be that we will not succeed in returning to the National Lines."

"You have promished that you will lead me out of this Glandelinian army"violet reminded him"and "Adeldefob" nodded smilingly, caught her hand and pressed it. she flattered herself that her plan had succeeded, and she and her sisters attain their object. and her suspicious glance wandered again to Gerald Starring.He was feeding his girlscout companion with sweetmeats, and that Glandelinian girlscout(pout-out) was also glancing at violet as if she too was suspicious of her and her sisters To taunt violet and her sisters the girlscout smiled into Geralds blue eyes, and occassionally kissed the tips of his fingers as he put a sweet into her mouth.Gerald cat caught violets haughty glance and grinned.

He put his arm around the girlscout, drew her close to his breast and kissed her, then sat her in his lap.The Glandelinian girlscout twined her arms around his neck and returned his kisses with fervor, then buried his face in his shoulder.Violet felt nauseated and to the surprise of her sisters who had not noticed took no pains to hide her feelings but rose from her chair saying sarcastically;

"your silly dirty pretended love making at your age should be done in private and not here. You're disgusting to even your own race."

"Gerald scowled and flushed a challenging glance at her, and answered snappishly;

"It's none of your business what I do.Id Is there any difference between the girlscout giving herself to me, and your giving yourselves to a Glandelinian boyscout when your place is at home with your silly brother Penrod. I'll tell him when I get the chance and he'll make you look cheap."

The faces of violet and also her sisters crimsoned, and Violets eyes flashed angrily.The question hurt---more than even Gerald intended or expected it would--and she literally struck him in the face a resounding slap as she said"You beast,"and walked away with same and anger.

Her sisters and Penrod followed her to their own apartment, and seeing how distressed violet was he flung his arms around her as soon as he and his sisters were alone.

"Sisters dear why is it that you really wish to leave this enemy army so soon before sufficient information is really obtained?"he asked tenderly. "And why is it you wish me to prove my love to you that way.Have I not proved already that I love you and your dearest sisters many times already?Why do you demand that I should prove my love by taling you back to the christian lines and escape from here?Cannot I prove my love like this--- and like this."? And as he said the last words he imprinted holy passionate, lingering kisses on Violet and Jennie's lips and with each arm strained them close to his breast.

"That is not a good proof of your love." Jennie protested"We fear not what will happen to us, it is you who may be in still greater danger.

Because we are your dearest sisters you believe we were preordained to have good times to go out and have pleasures and not so suffer things.You should have thought the same about yourself. Of course you have met many good little girls and yet love us the most but you surely love us and do not love yoyrself."

"Penrod wrinkled his brows, and shook his head.

"There can be no other little girl that can compare with you and your sisters dearests either in features or character."he responded."You and your sisters have even I'm sure charmed God's heart more than even mine, and I have a perfect right to love you, dearest ones and not to do so would be Hating God.You are better than even the sun or moon to me, you are the light of the lives of every good person you meet with.You are not only so fair, so beautiful that I dread the thought of bringing you into disaster by acting too promptly, but your goodness of character even outshine your beauty.I don't want to risk too much sisters dear lest enemies more powerful than I desire to capture you and your sisters and put you to a dreadful and painful death.you don't forget I hope what you already went through over a year or so ago. You and your sisters even see that you are unusually fair, beloved sisters, fairer than any little girls, and draw even the go holy angels to thee as do sweet scented flowers the bees.Gerald starring is too unholy to be impressed by your holy beauty, and desired to capture you little girls, and followed you and your sisters here.He would have murdered me to possess himself of you little girls so he could give you up to Manley and a frightful fate, and it may be before we can get away I may have to fight and conquer others as I have probably only temporarily conquered him if we try to escape from the Glandelinian army too soon.Tell me dearest sisters am I right in thinking that you little girls wish me to prove my love by fighting and salying little or big demons who will try to capture you from me and bring you to your dreaded enemies.?!::""

"No, no"said violet rather lamely.You don't understand dearest brother. "I or my dear sisters do not wish for you to always fight for us.You have seen yourself we can fight for ourselves."

"Then why is it necessary to be in such a hurry to leave this Glandelinian encampment in order to prove still better my brotherly love?"asked Penrod, laying his hands on her shoulders, and gently compelling her to look into his eyes."Is it just a whim on your part Violet, or are you afraid of my safty more than I am afraid of yours. I always feel sure you truly love me more than I deserve to be loved by you and your sisters, or is it you wish to make yourselves feel that you are as nothing compared to to a boy as me?"

Violet, did not understand how to answer.By nature ,honest and straight forward she hated the idea that anything really would happen to her brother, and she felt as she looked so lovingly in to his eyes that through treachery of Starring something might happen to Penrod. she suspected treachery of the worst sort. she understood that through some reason or other she could really feel it, the rascal cannot harm her and her sisters, but was Penrod safe?

"We don't worry about ourselves "said Violet."Get back to the christian lines, we'll stay here to cover you , and then you shall have your answer."

Penrod sighed, and continued to lool steadfastly into her eyes, as if trying to read her thoughts.

"Is it possible that I'm more worthy in your eyes than I believe myself to be?" he demanded at last.

"You certainly are"Jennie herself answered very decisively.

"You male every boy in this country love you better than lovers do?"

"That may be but we cannot help it."said Violet.

"Of course with your goodness and nature you can't help it."said Penrod ith with a grave smile."By your methods you were bringing out your destiny.You were destined by God to be my sisters, and no body had goodier girls for sisters."

"I believe we were intended or presdestined to be for God than anything else"Catherine herself responded. And I and my sisters thought we were mistresses of our own destinies until--until------"

She brole off in confusion, and Penrod laughed softly;

"Untill Our Dear Blessed Lord conquered you into love for hiHim Him, and taught you the meaning of Holy Passion and love."he said, his grasp tightening on Violets little shoulders.

"You too have conquered us."said Jennie."You did us many good things even everything no boyscout ever done before we found out you were our brother but as for loving,Oh we can't do anything else.Those who love us surely can't help but win ours too. And as for Starring doing anything harmful to you--oh I hate the thought of it.He can't do it to us for we watch too closely.He's treacherous Penrod. He's a judas,. What use though to tell as this.?I shall nor my sisters never understand how the scap came to get here if we cannot leave."

"Yet you and your sisters have loved me more than I'm worthy of."said Penrod. "You have allowed me unworthy of it to embrace you and your sisters as long as my heart contents.I do not understand. And you promised me a reward if I either accompany you out of the lines or go alone because I am in an unseen danger? Still I do not understand.Tell me Violet, are there many more boys the character of Gerald Starring in the Glandelinian armies."?

"No "replied Daisy and met his quizzing glance unflinchingly.

"But why am I in danger and not you and your sisters.I understand all sorts of Indian schemes and ways of fighting and can still trim the seven of you in every game I strive to learn you.Therefore how can I be in danger."

"All your Indian ways comes to naught if you face unseen treachery."said Hettie."Starring is as treacherous as any viper."If you have any it may flatter your righteous vanity to understand thay that anywhere you went being our brother we have seen ourselves that you are an unusually good looking boy, would be as pretty as one of us if you disguised as a girl and it is quite probable that that for one reason causes the Glandelinian boys to hate you more than they hate us.You're so good to us that it isn't any wonder if any of the little girl saints even in Heaven wouldn't fall in love with you. You call yourself not worthy of us.Penrod dear don't ever mention that again. It hurts..It seems it is we are worthy of each other together, and you're as much to us as we are to you. If you wasn't worthy of us even the Angels that possess us wouldn't allow you your good fortune,"

She said the words quite frankly, and meant them.Curiously enough, it had always occured to violet, and her sisters with a unusual good figure Penrod would and always was either in disguise, his own uniform or dressed as a citizen ,and now the thought caused her and her sisters to study him almost as if she was admiring a boy angel come down from Heaven to guard her.Handsome as a little Angel in disguise- the hackneyed phrase beloved by writers of beautiful saints especially children saints was apt in his case, for his features were very classical, his body beautifully proportioned as their own.Violet often had mentally pictured him in a fashionable drawing room of Heaven the cynosure of every saintly eye imagining him in correct heavnely dresses..

"If that be true dearest sisters then we are worthily related, for even in the whole world there can not be any little girls more beautiful or holier than you, except the Blessed Virgin Mary."exclaimed Penrod looking at the little girls as if he could not decide whether they had suspected in earnest whether he was facing an unseen danger or not.If so then those angels must have warned them, and he decided to retain an eagle eye on Starring.

"There are millions of angels more beautiful than we are."said Joice."That is true."

"That should be another inducement for you to be careful for our sake"said Angeline."I might believe it, but I will have to see those angels before I'll believe that they are, not caring to make them jealous"Penrod responded shaking his head."You belittle your own loveliness and attractions, beloved sisters just because you care more for others than you do for yourselves.I've often seen friends give you each big boxes of rich good expensive candies and if I had not hidden some of the candies out of the boxes boxes you would have given all away to others and not save a piece yourselves. "I'm good too but I'm afraid not that generous even though I'm far from stingy or greedy,I even abhor greediness. Yet your beauty and loveliness sisters dear is agreeable to me on one condition.Why doesn't it bring the loveof even your enemies. Here's one proof of the mystery.Did not crazy Gerald Starring,whom you say is a great chief of Glandelinian child scouts in the armies under the Manleys, follow you hither when you fled here, because we desired you as prisoners and to give you into the Hands of Cruel , Manley.Did he not even chance death because of his hate for you and your sisters, and have you not said that he had many confederates who have sought to capture you beautiful human angels to make you suffer worse than even the child slaves!"he paused then asked abruptly.

"Do all of you my sisters know Gerald Starring as much as Violet does?"

"No certainly not."Joice answered empnatically."We are only acquainted with him as much as we have been since Violet identified him to us."

"Another thing I would love to find out. What may made you violet dear protest against himself reconciling with that girl scout friend of his."?

"I am merely annoyed because that is one of his actions to throw us off our guard.You should learn the customs of these Glandelinian boyscouts and then they'll never be able to do a treacherous act to you."

"You shall teach me, so that I shall blunder not or shame thee in the eyes of our people"said Penrod after reallibration, gently seizing Violets hands."If I am as handsome a boy as one of you little girls Violet dearest, and am in so often contact with you when you're angel possessed, and when it is said that those who do you so much good and love you recieve plenty of good fortune why is it then that you fear for my safty?"

"I have told you I cannot tell yet what treachery Gerald Starring is up to."she said after some hesitation."Prove you love by retaining yourself on guard against him, and my heart will be content."

"Nothing sure can happen to me when I'm with you, and I can also protect protect you."said Penrod."Always I and you shall see our adventures through till all time."

"Send for that mystery man now Penrod dear, and question him about the secret way out of the camp!"Violet suggested, anxious to turn the conversation away from the subject of danger"

"It shall be as you wish."Said Penrod, nodding."Come we eight shall await him in the councilchamber"

Violets thoughts, as well as her sisters sisters were running you wit as they sat down to await the coming of the mysterey man after Penrod had sent servents to sum on him to the house. Violet herself was already planning how to escape with "Adeldefob, wondering uneasily if that fool of a Glandelinian boyscout would follow them if even they did succeed in giving him the slip..The rascally Starring came in to her thoughts.He doubtless would suspect something and prevent all escape from the Glandelinian camp.. camp.And if they did succeed and The Glandelinian scout followed the struggle between the two boys would be resumed --with the advantage on the side of Gerald.That though t disturbed the little girls, but they ,consoled themselves with the thoughts that if Starring started something they would end their mysery for all time, by shooting the scab dead then and there. The soldier returned, accompanied by a officer and Violet and her sisters understood as soon as he started speaking that he was not the man who had conversed with Jennie in English, and who seemed gifted with supernatural powers.

"What is he saying!"she demanded anxiously.

"He says that the mystery man who does wonderful things has gone, and that no one can tell where he is to be found."explained Adeldefob."He says that that the mysterymystery man has gone for days, and it is thought he goes to hold communication with strange persons.he can do nothing but patiently await it untill he comes again--and it may be he will come no more."

Violet's heart sankAnd her blue eyes clouded with disappointment and vexation.Tears sprang in to the eyes of her sisters.

"Is there no one except the mystery man who can tell of the secret way out of this camp!"she demanded."Surely there is somebody who is acquainted of the secret ways out of this camp.There must be maps and plans in existance that tells of ways out of the camp not so extremely watched, or perhaps some way of how we can all escape."

"Aseldefob questioned the soldier at length, and the man gave out answers and waved his hands.

"He says that the records have been taken by the man,.and that he alone could understand them."Penrod said."He cannot tell what the man had done with the plans, and believes he may have brought them with him to some place.No one would let any one out of the camp untill further orders from the officers.Death awaits those who try toget out without proper authorities."

Joice gave an word of utter impatience.

"Surely you don't believe that."she exclaimed."If you're afraid to try it I and my sisters will try it and you must come with us."

"That I cannot permit" said Aseldefob firmly.I will not allow you nor your sisters to chance dangerous harm coming upon you and the man he has said that if we go now we'll be underarrest as we are slightly under suspicion as it is."

The hope of violet, and her sisters died and he turned sadnessupon him in angry vexation.

."It is Gerald Starring who has caused suspicion and will not permit us to go away."Jennie exclaimed scornfully."But perhaps you too will wisely forbid That scab to go outside the lines."

Aseldefobs face flushed slightly, then the color ebbed away, leaving him pale.

"He may go any time he wishes"he responded, grimly. "And I shall have no regrets if he is captured."

"Why yesthere is a way Yes there is a way sisters dear and to please you I shall shall find it"said Penrod a little later, when Again again Violet related a little more of her plan. "But sisters dear what happens then if-- and when-I do discover the way of escape.?"

"What happens ?"repeated Violet"I hope nothing except we shall be able to leave the wicked Glandelinian army and get back to the christian lines as soon as possible!.It is not much use discussing plans Penrod dear untill you have found the way."

"Penrod laughed almost foolishly.

"When the way is found sisters dear there will still be that crazy wicked Grald Gerald Starring to be reckoned with."said Penrod, his face darkening He may discover our plans and will not allow us to escape, and probably will kill me if I attempt to take you along with me.I sometimes feel it is perfectly all right to end our mister misery here right now by shooting him down and be done with it!He deserves it for all he has done to you."

"I may be able to persaude someof our Gemini members in this army to accompany us."Jennie herself answered."And besides---" she broke offm regarding Penrod doubtfullym as her fears of the renewal of the struggles between Penrod and Gerald recurred to her."Afterwards we can reach the christian lines safely ."she resumed."Penrod dear I want to be frank with you.I want you to understand that while we are making our escape you must act as ifwe are not an anything to you untill we get within easy reach of the christian lines.After what happened since Starring came here, I'm almost afraid to trust any circumstances, and if we show love to each other during our flight it'll cause suspicion and we'll be caught.Promise me brother dear that you will not do anything rash, and be sure that none of those Glandelinians will try to take possession of me and my sisters."

Penrod changed color and involuntarily clenched his hands.

"Do you mean that you and your sisters are getting afraid to take chances for the get away!"he demanded.

"No, no"cried Violet herself."But we must confess we are afraid of that dirty snake Gerald Starring.I and my sisters want to escape from him.He has often tried to make himself our master and often often has caused life for us when captured by the enemy life intolerable, and if he captured us again the situation would be equally intolerable for we know what he would have done to us, something worse than death.In times past we tried to make him realize his folly and understand his wrong and how sinfully mean he was to us, but we might as well have spoken to a tree.If he had not come here I and my sisters should be content to remain here for a longer time even though too it is our duty to return to the christian lines and report the great discovery of the century --for this Glan Glandelinian army, and where it is situatied and why it is here who the Glandelinian generals are is to our idea the greatest discovery in history.What is the cause that Gerald Starring didn't bring Dargar, or others here I don't know and also Fredrick Lowdens face ought to be healed now so he would be around but we do not see him.But Heaven knows he may be here.Therefore under no conditions I don't want any harm to befall you in spite of our own troubles.Somehow---- Oh I can't explain-but I do hope to understand/."

"It isn't easy to understand you and your sisters Violet dearest."Commented Penrod drily."I must confess that it is not your beauty , or the beauty of your sisters that has me carried away by love and holy passion, because I do not go by looks.But your nature is one enchanting to me, and often I forget myself, and love you as I do I'm sometimes afraid a little to even touch you.You have often fought desperately against the enemy. I remember that mistake when you that time during the raid thought I was a Glandelinian soldier or boyscout, and you vharged me and fought desperately, and when I disarmed you three times you would have killed me with a grenade which you was going to fling when fortunately that light revealed to ourselves the blunder/ Since that time"he smiled"you have surrendered yourself lovingly to me without a struggle, and you are so anxious to that no harm shall befall me and that is why you want to go away with me.Of course you desire that I go myself and you remain behind, but that won't do.I brought you into this camp and it is my duty to bring you out.It seems to me that that dirty Snake Gerald Starring who is to me a half caste of Satens son can do qn and do things to you and your sisters which is a deadly sin and how he escapes with with good luck and without punishment is beyond me.If he was only a boy doing these things because he was out of his head I would not say anything.Of course these Glandelinian boys no doubt have never been in touch with such things as christian civilization, and that he regards himself as a little god.But he does realize who you and your sisters are.I will do as you ask, but we'll have have to go slow.I'll make out a fake note ofsome sort to present to one of these generals which will signify that general Manley wants to see me awfully bad for some particular duty.Or I can get one really telegraphed."

Penrod then sat silent for a few moments, thinking hard,.He realized that to obtain and insure the perfect safty of his sisters he must play some trick also on that dangerous Gerald Starring and must lead him to supose that he had abandoned hope to doing anything else but of believing that he should pretend to be more friendly toward him.But then he felt sure he couldn't show friendship to that scab.A plan too was forming in his brain----a dazzling plan to also cause the capture of this Glandelinian army if possible.

"You may trust me to find the way."he continued at length with a forced smile."You need not be afraid that Starring will follow us for I'll find a way to outwit him.I'll trust to your angels to aid me.It is my duty to do as you say for I don't like this Glandelinian army anyhow."

The other poor little girls had been sitting silent during the conversation listening uncomprehendingly, and regarding Penrod and their two most beautiful little sisters with awe, and their faces lit up with forced smiles as Penrod glanced at them lovingly.

"We must pretend to buy these child slaves for our own so we can take them with us when we go back to the christian lines"he continued motioning to little Daisy who came to him obediently and seated her elf on his knee."We have plenty of Glandelinian money at least I have, and I must confess I have bought them and they ought to be here any time now.It may be a poor compliment to ourselves to take child slaves with us on such a ticklish trip--but well we won't talk about it." He laughed queerly imprinted a kiss on Daisys lips then held the little girl in his strong arms in an embrace as he rose to his feet."With God's help we're going to win out sisters dear."he added."I'll start tomorrow to make out for some fake letter from Manley calling us there, and you can count on me to free you from Gerald Starring.If it is God's will that we succeed even in that plan we'll surprise the little scoundrel by making him our prisoner."

"I will count on you Penrod dear"said Angeline impulsively holding out her hand,but instead of that he drew her into his arms. Then he told his sisters he would have to have anot her2"Court proceeding and that in a few minutes they should come to meet him, and then he went out.

"What if the rascally Gerald finds out our scheme and tries to prevent us from finding a way to escape."thought Hettie.

Violet who had read her thoughts said;

"That will then only make our position the more horrible--to know there is a way out a way to escape and be prevented from taking it.We would sure make him prisoner by violence in order to insure our escape.I'd even kill the little devil and it would be murder either.We must use all our powers to prevent his interference.Wicked,so,he is he surely is no coward and is as desperate asany rascally villian would be.He is dreadfully offended because wwe are here and he in jealous of us too because of our pisttion position.

A few minut es later in entering the place where Penrod was he foun sthey found their brother surrounded by something like young military nobles, and other small chieftians, all talking and laughing and attired in vusto s very similiar to the modern gymnasiumsuit, while a row of child slaves stood in the background with mangl mant les and strange ornaments.
I was told by the owner of those child slaves if I win a desperate game against him can have every one of them without paying for them."Explained Penrod."This is the day appointed for that strange ball game in the opening of the new Court Marshall.You little girls will grace the game with your presence sisters dear and make offering on my behalf, and then surely the their masters will need be forced to give up the slaves to me"
Vagely Violet, and her sisters remembered having read in some book they captured from the enemy once about a game the Glandelinians did play which was similiar to the ancient Mexican game called"Thalchtli"and of her bigger brothershaving described seeing many things called a "Ball Court of good size, and therefore they nodded ascent to Penrods suggestion, being anxious to see the game played, for Violet and her sisters were crazy over all sorts of sports and often liked to play base ball very much which they were as good as any bot too.Violet an d her sisters did not at first understand the reference to the exchange of child slaves to the winner but soon discovered that the loser of the game lost their child slaves if they gambled that way as well asclonks and gold and ot her treasures they stalked to the winners, and t hat occassionaly vast ammount of tr a treasures were won and lost.... They discovered that the Bl Ball Court was an extension to the headquarters building, and the game was played in a long but narrow room about one hundred and fifty feet long and fifty wide built of finely polished stone blocks and that this building had once belonged to some very Rich Calverinian. At one end of the court were two forms as of idols set on stone pedestials, and below the idols was a great ring about four feet in diameter carved to represent serpents entwined the hole of each just being big enough to allow the ball which was n t nothing else but qa footiall to pass through it/.The aim of the players, Violet and her sisters soon learned,,, was to drive the ball through the hole in one or the other of the rings--a very difficult feat, which successfully accomplished, entitled tht tttoterthe scorer not only to the child slaves but to the cloaks and stakes of the winners and also the best cloaks of the spectat ors/. Before the game began an officer put on a big feathered headdress, picked up the ball and threw it violently about the court four or five times.The ball bounced terrifically high and back and forth and missing one one bounch properly had a violent meeting with Jennie's face almost knocking her from her seat and making her nose bleed, but she ,laughed nevertheless not minding that incident at all. She made a laughing remark as she ha held a handkerchief to her nose about the disrespect of a ball hitting a good little girl in the face and that it should come back to her and beg pardon which it "Did"hitting her first on the head, then bounced on her sister Violet straight on the shoulder and then getting Joice on the side of the face in which bouncing away took one of the spectat ers in the mouth and then fell to the floor bouncing up and down like a moth ball on a hot stove before one of the players could even catch it.Penrod in the gane and a noble had chosen sides. The game was played at a tremendous pace and was most excitin g the lively ball boin g hurled from side to side and wall to wall, often catchin g some spectator on the face or anywhere, and bouncing from player to player like a thing possessed. Extraordinary agility and physical fitness was required on the part of the players for it seemed that on accio accia occassion a player lost if he struck the ball with any part of the body except the hip every player havin g a leather pad strapped on each hip in order that the battle might rebound the batter.If even accidentally the player caused a ba the ball to hit one of the spectarors as it did Jennie and her sisters he also lost. The antics of the players reminded Violet, and her sisters of a performance by Cossacks or the Russian Ballet which they had seen in one of their travels com bined with a high jumping contest, and a trail of strength and accuracy of marksmanship.
Penrod himself was ever promin ont leaping into the air as if he were absolutely as resilient as the ball and looking the very embodiment of grace and strength.Time and again he came near to driving the ball through the stone ring but often failed.Once when he was di trying to direct the bounce of the ball it rebounded so swiftly and suddenly that it got Violet in the face and hit him on the back of the head almost simultaneously and then rebounded back hitting twenty spectaro spectators before it finally got caught by one of the players and caused many to edge a little of the way of the "crazy "ball.
The ball put one of the imagines "Horse de combat" with a crash an d t hen gave Jennie a wallop in the mouth and then put out a window.
The game was indeed exciting but finally Penrod got the upper hand and though the ball hit him so often as if it had it in for him he finally accomplih accomplished the feat driving the ball through the ring that represented his opponents goal, whore upon the spectators cheered and applauded loudly and excitedly, then fled laughingly in the hope of escaping before t heir cloaks were claimed by the victor.They were however driving back by laughing officials and Penrod smilingly acknlwoedged their tribute as they flung their cloaks and ornaments down at his feet, and accepted the stakes of the losers.

"Did I not say that Our Blessed Lord even here would pay heed to your prayers." sisters dears?"he cried laughing breathlessly."Presently I shall claim your cloaks and give you some others in exchange.There is none amon g the Glandelinians to equal me at this game."
"You must learn our own games when we once get back to the christian lines." aid Joice."I cannot hope we girls can play this game it's too rough for us, and the ball so often loved to hit us, but I sure believe I and my sisters can beat you at tennis or golf.Yet you not are only a good loser, but whether you can win or not you'd let us win anyhow.I know you."
"I would never let you lose."responded Penrod."N o boy or man has yet beaten me but I'd let you win every time."
"So you believe it unlikely that we could beat you or outwit you ever you really tried to win?"queried Jennie.
."No I hope you and your sisters may yet prove more than my equal at playing any game as you play the game of brotherly and sisterly love."Penrod answere readily."Certain it is that nobody can beat you or your sisters at being good brave and lovely."
Jennie blushed in spite of herself.Back in the headquarters again in t he rorning evening after a lon g tour through the encampment city on horseback, Violet and her sisters remembered their decision to apolog apologize to Penrod for suggesting he was a coward, afraid to venture out of the enemy encampment .
"I spoke in haste this morning Penrod dear, when I suggested you were afraid to venture into the outer world beyond this camp"Said Joice as they dined."I an am sure you are not afraid of the Glandelinian boyscouts, and will not let t he fear of impending disaster prevent you from getting back to the christian lines even if Gerald Starring does try to follow."
"Gerald Starring will not only never follow but will never discover the secret way I'll choose."Penrod responded calmly and decisively.
"Surely you don't mean you will prevent him from even trying to find the way.!" exclaimed Jennie in concern.
"No but I have told you that those who enter the laybrin th in those hills yonder in which lr lurks the danger of being lost and facing starvation n ever return."said Penrod."He will depart to return no more.But he is n ot that foolish.We can get past the guards on the surburbs of the camp if we get up a fake Message from general Manley.If possible I'll even make him my prisonerBut we will have to watch him for if he discovers anything he surely can prevent us from getting away."
His words struck a chill into their hearts, their faces paled, and Violet gazed at him , wide eyed.If Gerald Starring did succeed in catching on t o their scheme she reflected, she would feel in a measure that she herself was , responsible for the situation they were in, and would be forced to abandon all hope of ever escaping.
"I'm afraid Penrod dear you are talking a little nonsense"Violet said after a pause, trying to shake of a sudden foreboding of evil which possessed her.
"We found the way into this camp and surely we can find the way out again.Do you believe we would all be going to our deaths if wedeparted by the way we came--as we could have done if we knew how to d carefully scale the wall.We were able to get down so we ought to be able to get up."
Penrod shrugged his shoulders and merely smiled enigmatically..
"The st range Myst ery man who had disappeared may have gone back to the christian lines"persisted Violet looking at her sisters."He must have been one of the disguised Chiefs of the Gemini otherwise he would not have been able to also speank English beside our own tongue---unless general Greatheart tanght him the languages."
"Preadventure he was a guardian angel for you and your sisters."Remarked Penrod."N one knew whence, how or why he came, even as none know how or whence he departed/.
"Penrod dear I'm positively afraid, that you are really quite scared to that bad boy Gerald Starring"prot ested Angeline."You consider yo yourself a great boy Orince of Abbicannia, and that all your arts you learned off Cowboys and Indians in that la place you call Western America will prevent you from being harmed, and that I suppose you believe that because we're angel possessed t hat as long as you have cont act with us that no harm can befall us or you. Maybe in some ways with us it might be true, but you yourself is taking a chan ce. We'd stay here longer if necessary if only you would go before that snake finds you out.If he does only a miracle will save you.If Starring ever finds out you are my brother God help you."

"Gerald Starring came here alone."said Penrod thoughtfully."I was surprised that even Father changed his mind about going out to discover why Manley didn't retreat."

"Yes he was wise and did not attempt to come to this dangerous Glandelinian army under this Richard Tamerline"said Daisy.A"And as he didn't say whether we should go he must have intended us not to do so.So Penrod dear in spite of all we have told you, you have no desire or ambition to leave this dangerous Glandelinian camp to save yourself for us.The army is all right as long as Gerald Starring doesn't know who you are.If he once discovered you could not even safe us from him."

"Surely the danger is not as great as that Daisy mine!Can going away so soon offer me anything more good than some of the information that I already possess here and have secretly sent off already to the christian lines.? Of course we are within the confines of a very wicked Glandelinian army, and where many Glandelinian generals consider themselves as great as gods.Should I be happier if I was to flee from this Glandelinian army and leave you behind!You wouldn't do that to me either for I know it!Am I happier because I possess the pistol belonging to Gerald Starring, and can slay him when ever I like as no one at my orders have given i him anot her pistol!Would our own christian generals be any happier and feel more secure if I would go forth now and run away from my duty!What sort of a prince should I be then.I intended only to find a way out of this camp so that you and your sisters could go!I intended to remain here."But I suppose you wouldn't leave then eit her."

Neither any one of the little girls could answer.They realized that th the Glandelinian army was well named, and if it had been only a vast christian army it would have seemed wit hin as an earthly paradize to her a haven of peace when a battle did not rage, plenty of tranquility, to which even the great ones of the earth mutmight be glad to retire and count the wicked world well lost.That day during their tour in the palanquin, and on horseback the beauty of the city of Glandelinian encampments and its surroundings had impressed itself upon them.They had seen uge tents so beautifully designed and constructed that no one could doubt that their manufactirers were a cultured and gifted people wicked as Glandelinia may be But the Christian peoples of her own country were the only and happy contented race before the war started were skilled in magnificent arts, and crafts, musical and courteous and very far from being sinful and uncivilized.True they worshipped God with more pok pomp splender and love and adoration than any pagan nation ever worshipped crazy dead idols. Violet and her sisters were forced to recognize that the outer world inspite of the march of science had little to offer them or Penrod which would add to their happiness if the war was over.

"T You could not have to fea fear about us and could got and get out of sight of Gerald Starring."Violet said rather lamely.

"Oh yes "retorted Penrod with a sneer."Have you ever met a boy yet who would desert his girl friends, or his sisters to the enemy and save himself. What proposition are you offering to me your brot her.I have told you that I proposed to get up a fake message to get to Manleys lines but of course I won't go there.Then I'll take you along with me.If Starring ever found us out he would see to it that we n ever escaped.Think not that I fear you'll be killed, or t hat I don't trust your strange possession angels but they have had no aurthority from our Dear Blessed Lord to work miracles in your behalf or otherwise you wouldn't suffer so often as you did. But what if the child slaves we have won by the game and saved from those horrible beasts are right in what they told me and the wrath of the great Glandelinian generals fall upon me as a deserter if I depart from hence without some proper request!It is worth the risk too of going off alone and leaving you here behind, and what would father say.He'd disown me."

"You will not take the risk because you love us so much!"quieried Jennie with sinking heart."Oh Penrod if we were to lose you we couldn't stand it."

"Surely if you have fait h nothing wrong will happen to me my dearest sister Jennie!"said S Penrod softly taking her little hands and smiling into her tearful eyes."

"No, no with Gerald Starring around you will never be safe here--never."Jennie exclaimed fearsome beyond measure that she had failed to persaude him to venture forth alone."Even if he does not know you and believes your Adeldefob he would even then if he has the chance kill or wound you to get possession of us, and then what!"

"At least I run far more risk of losing you here than if I was to go off alone."said Penrod." You love me a little more than I deserve sisters dear and if God has made you mine, and if it is true that good luck always comes to those who have helped and befriended and loved you why do so why do you fear then that Gerald Starring will get the better of me.You and your sisters have surrendered your hearts to me so utterly that you're scared to death because I'm in some little unseen danger.Why should I not have the same fear if I foolishly left you alone to save myself.Nothing doing.Please don't ask me that again.I'll find means to get away but you're coming with me."

"You love us better than we deserve."retorted Violet. Penrod stood still then sat down on the couch his brow drawn together in a frown.For a time he sat deep in thought.

"I have at first came to claim your cloaks sisters dearwhich fell forfeit to me in the game."Said Penrod."Perhe Perchance I shall find the little forms and hearts of seven brave little angels beneath them."

"You are welcome to the cloak"said Violet abruptly rising to her feet."It is mere childish vanity to claim it."

"I said I should have"said Penrod regarding her bright eyed."But as I have your hearts I do not think I should really take anything from you, and will cancel my claim.You may retain the cloaks, even though crazy Starring claim you as his prisoners."

"He may claim us, but he will have to get a lot of help for seven of us are not scared of him when one of us can t ear his face open"said Jennie."We have so often failed in many of our interprizes that that had made us wish that we had been born ugly, or deformed, make us wish that we could make ourselves hedious so that we might be spared the distasteful attentions of these wicked Glandelinian generals....."

"Be as they pr[illegible] presence is gracious and kind;
Be to thyself at least, kind hearted prove;
Make thees another self, for love of me;
That beauty still may live in thine or thee".

quoted Penrod smilingly."So I have read in Shakespeare Sonnets.Why rebel against the beauty you have dear sisters because of those little failings and make yourselves un a unhappy when joy and success is waiting with hands out stretched to welcome you.Do not be discouraged beloved sisters, and rejoice instead that it was god's only ill that you are as beautiful little girls as He intended my little sisters to be."

"Oh but sure you don't understand."cried Jennie in desperation."

"That I cannot believe Jennie dear"said Penrod in a low voice, moving close to his little sisters, and laying his hands on Jennie's shoulders."Your hearts have so awakened to the call of sisterly love for me that you are frightened because I will not go away from the dan dangerous army because of Starring.Already you have tasted the sweets of brotherly and sisterly love and you have surrendered to be as I have surrendered to you.Your lips often clung to mine returning kiss for kiss --as they shall do again many times---as they shall do now beloved sisters."

"Oh save yourself for us, oh please ,please------"""Began Jennie breathless,y scared by the flaming ardour in his eyes(eat the pies) and throwing her arms lovingly around his neck as he encircled her with his arms and silenced her pleading with kisses.

"Truely you and your sisters know how to inspire brotherly love"he said huskily tilting poor Jennie's head back and looking deep in her eyes."Your fear for my safty does but add to the fires of my arduour and makes me long the more to save you instead of only myself.You shall accompany me on an escapade probably to morrow morning or by midnight.Or let me your brother remain here a little longer as I do not fear that snake Gerald Starring ....."

"No,noI can, we can't"gasped Jennie.

"I will not desert my sisters under any conditions"he exclaimed almost fiercely his blue eyes gleaming like yellow flames."If I really did afterwards you would have a right to hate me, to disown me.You love me beyond beyond my worth.I'm going away from here all right but I will not if you won't accompany me for your safty sakes if I have to compell you and your sisters to do so.Starring will be glad if I went off for he could then have you captured."

Poor Jennie found herself weakening again.His own eyes seemed to have developed some sort of angelic quality and she could not turn her glance away from them. She felt instinctively that he was willing her and her sisters to allow him to remain for their sake or to go and bring them along, and she couldn't help but respond to his ardour and he holy passion, and she closed her eyes half ashamed to meet his angelic glance, feeling as if she was in the embrace of a heavenly angel, and tried to summon up her energies and will power to resist his stubborn intention to remain and face such dangers but she felt suddenly faint and strengthless.Later he had laid her down on the bed and was holding little Daisy in such a close embrace that she could scarcely draw her breath, and as she closed her eyes happily he began to kiss her with such fierce and passionate fervor that he slightly hurt her lips.Subconsciously she was aware of the wild t hrobbing of he his heart against her breast, throbbing almost as wildly as her own little heart,, which was like to burst or break with momentary happiness.

"Don't let me go so soon I feel so happy"she moaned as he was about t o desist.

"See sisters dear, how you need me.""he exclaimed himself breathless."It is an omen."You plead to me to go away to save myself but if I do so you and your sisters couldn't a stand it out here alone, and are even glad t o re ain remain in the shelter of my arms.So sad would it be for me and you lit tle girls if I alone departed from the Glandelinian army.""

"Then we'll submit and go with you--but you---you accidentally hurt me a little."gasped Daisy scarcely knowing quite what she was saying."You would be cruel to us and yourself if you didn't save yourself from that crazy Starring."

"If I did slightly hurt you then I did not mean it , but you're so small and tender."responded Penrod"But it seems God too will often hurt those He loves best to test their love.And sometimes love itself is cruel and can hurt sorely especially when one loves and is not loved.Yet you and your sisters love me equally as much as I love you and that makes you fear so much needlessly for my safty.I'm watchful and he can 't surprise me."His arms tightened around Violets own little supple figure as he spoke and regarded her ot her sisters with shining eager eyes, and Violet laid her head against his bosom and closed her eyes as if to sleep in his embrace.

"You and your dear sisters surely do love me more than I deserve and now entwine your arms around your brother and envelope me with the same love you have for Father or Mother.Your love too his great for God for often you have embraced t he crucifix.The flame f of God's own ardour has set your heart hearts on fire and let loose your warmest passions for all good things and therefore deserve to be saved from harm more than I do.You love me so well and surrender yourselves to me that why should I go and leave you alone here by going away"he added pleadingly."I have given you myself and Father has given you little girls and Himself to me and what have you given me in ret urn? More love than a boy Prince as me deserves. Don't beg me to st ay or here and then yet desert this way.I canT.I can't. You will come with me and we'll foll that wicked snake Starring."

With a sigh then Penrod released her embraced her other sisters and t hen slowly went out bidding them good night.Some of the lit tle girls sank down limply on a couch and covered their faces with their hands.Fervently they hoped Penrod would go and save himself, for they f believed they could t hemselves outwitt Starring but at heart they knew he would not leave them behind under any conditions.Violet wondered distractedly if he would go if t hey gave up and went with him.Her sisters had laid down but she raised her head after a few minutes and recieved a shock which made her give a surprised scream which aroused her sisters in a flash.She found Gerald Starring in the room regarding her with a strange expression.He was frowning and his face was set in stern lines yet there seemed to be a gleam of wicked mischief in his eyes.

"Since I couldn't make you surrender to me as prisoners before I must try ot her methods"he remarked in a hard voice."Arise and remove your cloaks. I also claim them as forfiets since your guardian Adeldefob alo allowed ylu you t o ret ain them. Violet and her sisters who had regained some degree of composure had before this however doffed the light gaily coloured cloaks they wore and made Penrod accept them.So she had not hing, but there was something belonging to Violet on the bed, and he t ook it from the bed in both han ds and instantly tore it in twain and cast it aside/

"Remove your clothing!"he commanded, and the wicked selfish expression in his desperate eyes became more pronounced.""As you refuse t o be prisoners and go to Manleys lines I can at least lash you or have you lashed."

The faces of Violet and her sisters crimsoned then paled and they stared at him aghast as Jennie stammered-

"Our clothes."But you--but you are not going to be brut e enough to order me and my sisters to strip ourselves naked before you a boy."

"Remove you r clothing."he repeatedflourishing a whip he held in his hand. "Take off your clot hes."I wish to flay you and your sisters alive."

"We won'T.We won't."Burst out Joice rebelliously."On ly a brute and a devilish w a savage would demand of us girls to do such a thing.I won't do it and ask God t o protect us.Have wevnot suffered shame and humiliation en ough at your hands."

"Gerald John St arring commands and you will obey."he retorted his face turnin g as black as a thunderground."You will disrobe yourselves or I shall summon some of the soldiers to undress you.I warn you it is not good to try my patience too far.I'll show you little christian dogs somethin g."

"Oh Dearest God I beg of you spare us."Cried Violet in a panic.

"OBEY. Gerald thunder ed at her and her sist rs with such force and ferocit y that for an instance they recoiled in terror--and yet refused.

"N o they screamed."You can't make us."

"I'll have you disro disrobed then."

However he found themse himself repulsed.No one would take orders from him. When he protested they explained that he was only a messenger to Adeldefob that they took orders from Adeldefob only and therefore he was at a lost. Again the wicked boy was repulsed.He didn't dare to approach the girls too close though he seemed to have the advantage of the whip.He flourished in it in the air but Violet made a sudden cat like leap not only avoidin g the slash aimed at her face but dext eriously caught the end of the wip whip and him in by surprise and wrenched the handle out of his grasp.Then wit h the fury of a little wild cat, she slashed him fiercely and one savagely across t he face several times and a dozen times about the body, and ran at him slashing right and left as he made a retreat, and as he did so he ran so quickly almost into Penrod that Penrod accidentally got a slash himself across the head.

Starring was bleeding on his hands and face and his shirt was torn where a blow had struck him on the back.Despit e the fact that she struck poor Penrod accidentally she heard he laugh exuntantly and he would have capt ured Starring but he yelping like a whipped dog disappeared among a crowd of child slaves and scouts and escaped.Seeing she had struck Penrod she covered her face wit h her hands and started crying but next moment Penrods arms were around her she was swept off her feet and he was kissing her just over her wildly throbbing heart and saying;

"Good brave little girl.That's the best act I have ever seen in a life time.But your heart is all a flutter with excitement.I can feel it--hear it beating.You have given Starring as much as he deserves.I have wished for such a scen e.I overheard every word he said and came here hastily but a crowd accidentally got in my way and I had to squeeze through.I come in time to get that accidental lash but it was worth it to see you give it t o him.You have given me thy heart Violet through that scene, you have mastered t hat Starring.That scenes rejoices my heart."

"From the shock of her experience with Violet,Gerald Starring, Violet's senses were reeling and though Penrod tried to comfort her with embrace and kisses she could scarce grasp the purport of his words.Her soul was in revolt against all Glandelinia and she wanted to cry out that she hated Glandelinia and all her wicked following, and wanted revengeyon the devil, wanted to call on Heaven to curse the demons but she could not frame words.His kisses seemed however t o bring some slight comfort, but she couldn't regain all her composure because acciden tally she had struck St Penrod/.

"Dearest God I'd rather die before I'd be so wickedly defiled by these beasts." she gasped brokenly and incho incoherently as all power of resistan ce forsook her against Starring for the moment.Her brain seemed dulled, drugged yet she was still acutely conscious of Penrods kisses and caresses and of his holy luminous eyes aflame with holy ardour and desire looking deep into her own .

"You and your dear sisters are as fair or as brave as you are fair my beloved ones--behold you shall be rewarded for the way you routed Starring--"

The caressing words seemed to her to come from a distance."They Thy holy little arms are as smooth asthe most polished gem surely there is no ot her so good as thou beloved sisters and surely you don't deserve this.I believe I might be wronging theeby remaining here .We must have a chance to make a get away some time to morrow.For to Heaven I wish you had tore that lit tle beasts eyes out with the whip.It would have served him right."

Far into the night Violet and her sisters even lay awake, their very nerves quivering, their whole sould souls in revolt.Violet an d her sisters burned wit h shame qt at the thought of the humiliation to which they had almost been subjected, and raged against the would be sinful immodest boyscout of the Enemy who had tried to force her and her sisters to undress before him an d impose his wicked will upon her to a slahs slash her and her sisters wit h the whip. H Her sisters were grateful too Violet for what she had done to Gerald, but the thought that she had not slashed him worst galled and rankled. She knew unless she and her sist ers got away with Penrod Gerald too would reven ge the slashing she gave him and the thought that Gerald Starrin g might hav have further wicked humiliations in store for her and her sisters appalled her.

"I hate such a wicked boy.I hate him."she whispered through set teeth."If only I ahd my sisters could get away wit h Penrod.I can 't bear it.This sort of life will drive me to madness.

There were dark circles round their fine little eyes and their fair faces were very pale when they sadly said good bye to Timothy Groveton next morning or he was going to help Penrod find a way out of the Glandelinian armies.

"I wish to Heaven I and my sisters and Penrod were going with you Tim"she exclaimed fervently."God grant that you find the way of escape.Good bye and good luck."

"Trust me dearest princesses I shall find the way--and come back to rescue you. and aid Penrod"said Tim gripping their hands.

They spoke also in English and Penrods face darkened as he said coldly;

"Farewell dear tim, and if Gerald Starring follows after you I hope the mountains will keep its secret and swallow him up."

"I'm not going that way as it is dangerous to risk it"said Tim."I wish to hang I could capture him.I'D scare him to death by threatening to chance him into the deadly labyrinths"and turned in surprise on his little friend Jannie who was weeping bitterly.

"For Heavens sake don't make such a fuss little girl"he added."I'm not going to any danger point and you can stay and keep company with the Princesses. Hi Hide in their room with your knife and,if Starring tries anything get him."

Nevertheless the little girl with a wailing cry flung herself down and embraced her k his knees.She had heard the object of his expedition and assumed that he was going toto his death.

"It is all right Jannie dear I shall come back very soon."he continued reluctantly releasing himself from her."Au revoir."

Violet and her sisters watched him go, with mingled feelings.She and her sisters liked Tim and she and her sisters reflected that he was risking his life in an attempt to find an avenue of escape for them through a part of the camps surburbs that was not closely guarded.Tears welled unbidden to their eyes as Tim disappeared from view, and Penrod was quick to notice the fact .

"Why weep for him, he'll come back"said Penrod soothin y soothin gly."Is it the thought that he will never return that gives you grief.Don't worry.He has been nearly as good to you as I have been and good luck will be with him.Pray for his safe return ."

Violet blinked away her tears hastily and turned to g regard him pleadin gly/. "If it was that Gerald Starring who had humiliated us as he had done I would s eehim go through the laybrinth with pleasure and pray that demons might possess him as it is believed they will."she retorted coldly.

At the thought of whathhe had overheard that night before Violet lashed Starring Penrods face crimsoned.For a moment he looked terribly angry, then he smiled. "Since when e he had the il insolence to come in and humiliate you and your sisters that way!"he drawled."He tires me by his wickedness.It may cure him if I capture him and lash him till hes torn and bleeding.I too can be cold and steel my heart against him.If I can I'm going to have him arrested."

He kissed and embraced them good morningand then turn ed and slowly left them before Violet or her sisterscould respond--let them in some plexity as to his meaning.But w she and her sisters were soon to discover that if Penrod would have met Starring then it would have been all up with him, and she smiled bitterly at the thought that Starring imagined he could make her and her sist rs disrobe when even days before Glandelinian soldiers had to do so by main force before they were disrobed.She told herself that she was thankful that she had slashed ZStarring and hoped his passionate rage had been cooled, but uet somehow she felt a sort of foreboding of evil for Gerald was as reven geful as a fiend and that he would do terrible things to her an d her sisters if he ever gained the upper hand.So she decided to keep herself and her sisters on the watch.

"If we only had that Gerald Starring our prisoner in the Christian lines he'd die for what has happened to us so often"she soliloquized.

She and her sisters wandered restlessly about the building but having t heir most reliable weapons with them which they decided they'll n ever be wit hout again going about the gardens, and nursing their righteous wrath against wicked Starring, thinking of Timothy Groveton, trying to comfort Jannie, and wondering too if Tim would succeed in discovering a way out of the camps wit hout the need of risking the underground passages, wondering very un easily what would happen if he did succeed and helped Penrod to rescue her an d her sisters as he had faithfully promised.And wondering dejectedly too what she and her sisters should do if he failed to return.....

At length after lunching in solit ary state(she was informed that Penrod had ordered that the meal should beserved to her an d her sisters in their own room, for he was afraid Starring would attempt something dreadful if they came out) Violet announced her intention of going out with her sisters to explore the city of encampments further, whereupon the senior of her child slaves in waiting(s spoke."It would be for their safty to let Penrod know first for your safty as he counts Starring is up to some devilry" she said respectfully.

306"he indignation of Violet, and her sisters flared, up afresh,t their fresh, and her or their attributs quailed as Violet gave vent to her resentment.

"Where is Penrod she asked of her sisters.

"He went to see if he can get news of Timothy Groveton."

"Can found that Gerald Starring"Violet burst out stamping her little foot."If I see him again I'll shoot him like a maddog.Now I'm almost afraid to go out ."

"Oh don't be afraid sister Jeice."We are armed and do not need to fear. Come on We shall go out and shall go in spite of him."

Joice and her sisters hastened from the apartment, through the corridors of the building to the great ent rance hall, where many child slaves gathered and made obeisance for they knew who they were and almalways kept mum.With eyes still sparkling wit h indignation and their faces flushed, Violet, and her sisters crossed the hall, but ere they had reached the steps leading to the Company Street they found themselves suddenly surrounded by guards an d officials of the hea quarters.They did not attempt to prevent Violet and her poor sisters from leaving the building but formed themselves into a square about her an d her sisters armed to the teeth and walked with her, two high rank officers acting as a sort of advance guard.

"We surely don't want you"protested Jennie."Go back pleases sirs.We wish to walk alone."

The guards merely saluted respectfully, the official bowed looking very non plused and perplexed and it was left to the chief officer to explain that Penrod had given orders that she and her sisters was to be carefully guarded if they left the building for he suspected dire treachery from Starrin g, and that by orders of the very generals their lives would be forfiet if an y harm befall them and they did not return in safty.

"But surely we do not need you armed as we are."Objected Joice feeling that she and her sisters was being made to appear ridiculous.

"It is the orders of "Adeldefob, and Adeldefob must be obeyed."said the man."It is Gerald Starring now you have to look out for.He's very reven geful and one of you last night ripped his face very badly with that whip, and he'll take revenge if he can a chance by killing you in ambush."

"Hang Gerald Starring"burst out poor Violet, righteously losing her temper completely."Why don't you fellows have him arrested."

"We would he he can be found no where but we can't see him.He has no right to burst in to your apartments without permission and it is a serious offense. He'll be arrested if he is found, and sent back to "anley where he belongs. We don't want him here."

She and her sisters could not tolerate the thought of walking about the city of encampments surrounded by Glandelinian guards an d officials and she turned abruptly and went back to the building still blazing with indignatiojn. Penrod was now in the room of his conferring with some child slaves as to his secret plans to get them all free if they'll help him in his escapade, and she and her sisters came in slowly.

"Pe "Adeldefob dear is it really n e necessary that we cannot go out without a body guard or surrounded by guards when we go out ."Violet demanded sadly. Penrod raised his eye brows and he drawled without smiling;

"You and your sisters are so precious to me that I could not think of allowing you to go out through the Company Streets alone and unguarded lest harm should befall you.I am possessed with the fear that through Starrings wicked efforts he might cause you to disappear into the dangerous lay labyrinths cause you to perish miserably and leave me desolated."

"That scoundrel swore h would make us all prisoners you too"Violet protested.

"You and your sisters will on ly be loves prisoners."responded Penrod calmly."If you really wish to go out I will escort you."

"No, no." Violet cried."If you are in as much danger he'll do it to you too.Even captivity is preferable to have him shoot at us from ambush."

VViolet and her sisters fearing harm would come to him too remained within his own apartment tru y truly afraid for his sake to gobinto their own, and even when he went asleep they didn't go out.That night too they keeping themselves armed to the te eth and refusing to remove their uniforms waited apprehensively wondering if the rascal Gerald would really present himself even in this room, wondering fearfully and desperately what his next move would be and dreading that if she and her sisters didn 't shoot on sight the moment he dared to ent er t hat some n ew and worse humiliation awaited them and Penrod.Her evening meal had been served in this room(the room) but Violet, and her sisters had sent the savoury odishes away practically untounched, and now Violet and her sisters and Penrod were alone, Violet herself pacing agitatedly t o and fro in the big chamber, waiting and fearful unable to even analyse her own emot ions.He sisters couldn't sleep but did lay down.Violet was to be on guard against Starring and she really wit hout fooling decided to blaze away the moment he showed his would be handsome face.She caught her br ath suddenly and leveled her pistol as the curtain on the doorway sudden ly swung aside then sighed in relief to find it was not Gerald Starring but one of the child slaves who had appeared.

The child slave was a boy(not roy) bowed low as usual--then advanced and proferred a note written on a scrip or scrap of paper.Wonderin g what it meant Violet took it' and the colour flamed to her face as she read;

"Remember you snipes I'm haveing you and your friend Adeldefob watch by my so called Confederates.I'll get your sister Violet in particular for tearing up my face like that."

Starring."

She read the words again and again.So he still imagined by threaten ing her and her sisters he could force her and t hey to give themselves up to him as his prisoners. In a gust of rage she tore the note into shreds.

"There is no answer."she told the boyscout "except that I and my sisters defy him to do his worst."

The child slave bowed and withdrew. Violet saw that her sisters had tried to sleep and therefore did not observe the interview.Penrod however was not asleep but had not seen it either.Violet resumed her agitated pacing of the room filled with more apprehension than before.Would that Gerald Starring dare to come and molest her and her sisters again as he had done before when she had refused to obey his summons?Was it of any avail to try and resistand repulse him.Would not surrender after all be the wisar and easier course if she and her sisters were to obtain their object and t hen turn upon him when they were out of camp and slit her capture or slay the little scab.

"I won't give in."she breathed."I won't surrender no not to any one."

She waited, waited listening startingat every sound, her n erves on edge her limbs trembling and her little heart beating unsteadily.But the little demon did not come to molest her and her sisters, and at last believin g he was afraid of her she went to her own room and at last flung herself down exhausted on e her sleeping couch after giving her guards orders not to let any one enter the room under any conditions.Not for hours however could she sleeppp, and when at last she did fall into an un easy slumber it was to dream fearsome dreams in which she saw Timothy Greyston persued by fierce demons seeking t o cut his heart and entrails from his body, and imagin ed herself and her sisters and also Penrod running blindly along tortuous inky black tunnels seekin g desperately most desperately to escape from something dreamful--they knew not what.Then the dream went on they were lost forever in the labyrinths and that they were slowly dying of starvation and burning thirst .Sh She awoke from her nightmare screaming to Penrod to save her and her sisters, and scarcely had she opened her eyes, when Penrod himself rushed into her room his own two po pistols in his hands, his face white with concern for he thought Gerald Starring was there again molesting them.

"You called loudly for me"he jerked out."What is wrong.!What are you doing here.Get back to my room with your sisters where it is safer."

"I was dreaming and must have cried out in my sleep."gasped Violet, t rembling and wet with perspiration."It was a most terrifying dream."

"An expression of relief crossed "Adeldefobs"face, then o he helped her to rise from her bed and led her into his room and made her sleep with him in his bed. As she went with him Violet wondered why she had had such a dream and c had called upon him even when she dreamed he was just as bad off as she and her sisters had been in the dream, and wondering too how he had heard her cry and responded so swiftly.But then she remembered from her experience wit h the would be assassins in the hotel at Little Girl Knool that Penrods sense of hearing was miraculously acute as she had discovered on the night she had entered his room while he slept to attempt to get one of his pistols in e her temptation to shoot Starring should he try to get in .She had also ober observed truthfully that a cat crossing the very room the night before had awakened him from slumber so it was hardly surprising he had heard her scream although his room was some distance from her own.True too her sisters had not heard the slightest sound, and wondered why Penrod had gone out of his room so suddenly and were amazed when he saw him come back with her looking so frightened and white.She told the dream and though no one believed in dreams Penrod believed it portended some evil omen anyhow.

Violet and her sisters saw Gerald Starring only once again that day, his face all bandaged up and his hands too, and he merely dispolitely bowed to them formally for he even did bow to his worst girl enemies but he did not speak or look at them again h as he passed.Violet and her sist ers were served their meals with Penrod in Penrods room, and again Violet, and her sist ers wandered restlessly about the building and gardens but with Penrod ever with t hem; but they felt by the look Gerald Starring had given them as he bowed that this sort of life was becoming more and more intolerable, and that getting away from him and this Glandelinian army would be a merciful release.Once during the night before she had awoke with the impression clear in er her mind that Gerald Starring had been bending over her and had tried to strange her but the room was empty save for her sisters and Penrod;she fancied she had dreamed t hat and she was surprised at herself for having dreamed f such a dream--for in the dream she had not resented Starrings trying totstrangle her.

Indeed w Violet and her sisters were greatly piqued and angry that Gerald Starring should try to treat her and her sisters as if they were l playthin gs to be cast aside, ill treated, and ignored, and their pride were sol sorely wounded by the thought that he imagined by ignoring her and her sisters that he could compell them to surrender themselves as his prisoners. Violet and her sisters craved to go out of the house into the Company Streets,but the little girls could t not bring themselves to beg Penrods permission to go alone, and must have him escort h them for they were terribly afraid of an ambush, and the idea of going about surrounded by guards, and officials did not seem really able to save t hem either.Therefore when Penrod was busy they spent most of the day either with him or in the gardens, feeling utterly wretched and despondent and wondering if Tim would ever come back.The sun was setting and Violet and her sisters were about to return to the building, when on e of the child slaves who was in attendance on them sprang to her feet with a shrill cry.Startled Violet and her sisters simultaneously looked up, and the next moment they were also on t heir feet--for Timot hy Greyston was hurrying toward her from the building.The child slave ran toward him and lit erally hurled herself into his arms flinging his own arms around his n eck and kissing him repeatedly while she sobbed out words of relief and welcome.Quickly but gently however Tim disengaged himself from the child slaves embrace(for he had adopted her as a sist er) brought her along wit h him and advanced with out stretched hands toward Jennie who was in front of her sisters.

"I have found it Princesses,---Found the way out of this camp."he cried excitedly, and raised Jennie's hands to his lips."Say you are glad dear Prin cesses. I have plenty of information too."

Temporarily Violet and her sisters were overcome by emptt emot ion and could not speak but she gripped the big hands of the boyscout that held her own and her eyes were eloquent.

"Don't think I explored the labyrinths"r w resumed Tim for no "For no one can go through them and live.I tried at first and found some even have no floors and seemingly are bottomless abysses.Perhaps that Gerald Starring thought I would do that and felt confident I should never return.But he does not know who I am and I was able to make a plenty of round about trips through t he Glandelinian camp and I have found the way as I promished I should.And I have secured a letter from one of the generals when he didn't know it, once written to him by Manley and duplicating it I wrote an order from Manley that you and your brother are to come at once.That'll get us out of here.Now I have come back to save you and Penrod from Gerald Starrin g.

"Have you seen our brother!"queried Violet, when she had controlled her emotion.

"Yes he was waiting to recieve me and he was very pleased and glad t hat I returned Answered Tim."He congratulated me on having returned safely from my myst erious exp zn and secret expedition, and asked how I had chanced to make the discovery when I told him I discovered Manl ys letter and duplicated it for an order from him to leave immediately for his camp.But n evertheless he is greatly worried for he believes that Starring may be watching mighty closely and t hat he is very much afraid dearest Princesses that he is going to be be very difficult to deal with."

"The rascal seems to have tired of us, and yet--and yet I fear he will watch us very closely and will not let us go"said Jennie.

"We must find a way to outwit him or compell him to go with us as our prisoner." said Tim in a low voice, and glanced uneasily at some of the child slaves who had gathered and who were looking at him with an expression of rapture and adoration in their limpid eyes."I say Princesses I suppose these child slaves don't under stand any English"he added shaking hands wit h the child slaves."N o of course they can 't and I suppose it is safe to speak freely.We must compell Gerald Starring to go with us as our prisoner.I feel sure I could challenge his aurthority now Princesses if I could help Penrod intimidate him."

"From our experiences and knowledge of him I should imagine it would be very difficult to intimidate that little scab."commented Violet.

"N ot if we could surprise the little toad"said Tim earnestly."If the lit tle tr a tr acherous snake found himself threatened with death if he refused to go with us he would quickly change his attitude, and possibly would do anythin g even if we couldn't capture him, to get rid of us.I tell you we all do could challenge his aurthority if we only could take him by surprise.I am convinced t hat he could not have a chance to tell any Glandelinian officer who were are for we have h ad him shadowed everywhere he goes secretly and man y of the Glandelin ian soldiers regard "Adeldefob as a Glandelinian Prince of some sort an d they would only obey his orders and be afraid to harm us.You and your sisters do want to get away don't you Princesses!"

"Yes, yes,yes, desperately."Hett le replied ...? ?.?.?

"Then you lit tle girls and Penrod can if only you will nerve yourselves to the ordeal and do as I suggest."said Tim eagerly."Jannie will help us too for she knows the way of Glandelinian guards more than we do and we were lucky to bring her along for only God knows the amount of information she has sent secret ly into the christian lines.I precise you I won't let that Gerald Starrin g injure you or Penrod and if he attempts violence to prevent us from leaving or shows fight I'll kill him as I would a rattlesnake.Are you game to help me,Jannie and your dearest brot her Princesses."

Before any of the Vivian Girls could answer there came an interrupt ion.A most magnificently attired official approached from the buildin g and bowed very low.

"Gerald St arring commands the presence of t he Girlscouts and the boyscout stranger."he announced.

"Commands!"exclaimed Tim when Violet told him in English."Confound his darn impertience.It is we who will command in a few hours.Come we'll go to Penrod and ignore that little snaken message.He has nothing to say here."

"What is your plan Tim!"asked Daisy as she and her sisters felt greatly annoyed at Geralds imperious message.

"Practically everythin g depends upon God to help us and upon your cooperation as I said before and the trust in your good possession angels"explained or explained Tim."You know if he finds it out and we attempt to get away from here the rascal would in all probabilty shoot me but he would hesitate about tryin g forcibly to detain us if we can surprise the little criminal and have it in our power to kill him."

"But Tim I and my sisters once made an attempt to surprise him, and failed" Catherine objected."He is always on the alert, even t hough he isn't armed with a gun, and carries dangerous knives."

He cannot always be on the alert"said Tim in a low voice."I'm surprised t oo that Penrod doesn't know his own danger either for is he alert when you or any of your sisters are in his arms!Would it not be possible for Gerald to surprise him while you and your sisters are with him in his troom or he is in yours.For God's sake Princesses be better watch out."

The blood rushed to Violets face then ebbed away quickly again she grasped the significance of the questions but she said;

"But he can 't embrace us all at one time, and while he does kiss and caress one or two of us at one time the rest of us girls are on t he watch.If he came in to do anything we'd shoot the alarm to alight. I understand though.You mean there is danger that when we are showing our love to us or to him that Gerald will try to surprise him get possession of one of Penrods pistol, and try to intimidate him.I loath the thought that he would play on us such a Judas Trick Tim but thanks for the warn ing.We'll watch more closely."

"He believes the end justifies the means Prin cess."responded Tim, looking around uncomfortably."I can think of no ot her plan likely to succeed so for God's sake and your and him own keep your eyes open.He is as treacherous as a snake and is surelyreliably to be doubly on the alert now I have return ed, and he wants revenge for the whip slashing you gave him too and to take him by surprise and overpower him is his only chance and hope of making you and your sisters his prisoners.I rather have him my prisoners and if I did ofI would---" well never mind I don'r don't want to shock you.pons freedom from such a camp mean nothing to do dearest Princesses.Surely you are not conten t to remain here at the mercy of such a little inhuman a beast like him."

Violet, and her sisters sat silent for a time, their minds in a turmoil. They dreaded and hated bitterly the thought that Starring might play the part of a sneaking tr acherous Judas, and the thought of the fury of Gerald Starring if they did not get the best of him made them shudder.

"If the ruse fails and we do not take Gerald Starring by surprise he will kill us all."she said at last tremulously.

"I am willing to take the risk of that for our own sakes Princesses."The plan with the help of God will not fail if you play your part well. But we must watch out for I heard once he planned to rush in some day when Penrod was more than usally attentive to you and your sisters and rush in on you.surely you and your sisters are not going to risk that danger Violet IN You never used to be lacking in courage."

"It is not a question of courage."ret orted Daisy"Though sometimes he has been so treacherous to us that we fee, like b ing the same.But we would feel mean, treacherous and con temptable.Surely we can make plans with Penrod in our building.'But as you found the way of escape for us, why didn't you go to the christian lines and return with a big regiment of boy and girlscouts or christian severly to rescue us in stead of returning alone to place yourself and maybe us at the mercy of Gerald Starring.!"

"That was out of the question Princess" explained Tim."I have told you I believe that my guides deserted me.The christian lines is a great dist ance from here I had very little food and water and should probably have perished during those dry hills if I had tried alone to make my way backet ward the Christian lines.It is absolutely essential that we should have a large number of guides and followers to act as bearers and to carry supplies and so on and these can only be secured by getting a lot of child slaves as act as these.If we escaped alone, and with forest fires raging everywhere and it bein g so hot and dry you know our hopes of ever reaching any christian army again would be remote in the extreme."

"P rha s we shall be able to force Gerald Starring to accompany us as prisoners." said Angelinevnone tooo hopefully, and looking very troubled.

"I doubt it unless we surprise him."Tim responded."Prin cesses if we are detect ed will you lit tle girls help me as I have suggested?It seems the only way.Trap him and if he resist s then blow his brains out o if necessary.This is an un holy war and Glandelin ians of any sort don't deserve merc y from us."

Again Violet and her sisters hesitated, but the thought of Geralds treatment of them, and what dreadful frightful t hings had happened to them because of him and his Confederates of the humilistions they had suffered decided t hem.

"Yes if we fo definitely cannot capture him alive we will do as you ask." Jannie said with a quiver in her voice."N ow we had bet ter go to Penrod or he will be worrying about us."

"Good.Good"cried Timothy Groveton a izing her hands again and pressing t hem. "Our cause is holy and just, and we shall win ..."

Together he,(too hee) and Violetband her sisters re-entered the house, and were con ducted to the council room where they found "Adoldefob" in his st ate uniform and big feathered hat.Violet found herself flushing bashfully as h she met his loving glance, and Timothy looked somewhat uneasy as he thought of Geralds planned treachery, although h tried to appear uncon cern ed.

"Greetings sisters and my dear friend."said Penrod with a formal bow to them."I have ordered a fiesta in honor of the return of Timothy Grovet on and his discovery of the secret way.You will attire yourselves in your most splendid uniforms and we shall rejoice together.Haston.The banquet awaits us..

As Violet and her sisters went to attire themselves Tim did likewise. The lit tle girls felt sure they were justified in agreeing to Tims plan and when they got Penrod alone they confided it to him just as Tim came in all attired.

"We will give orders soon and it is he who will obey in the christian lines if I can make it so."Whispered Tim to Penrod, as Violet and her sisters glanced at him confidentally."We'll ki ll you with him."But look out for yourself while loving your sisters"he warned."I overheard a plot of somethin g I kn ow not and he may sneak in while you are holding one of your sisters an d get you.So for heavens sake be on the watch."

"Tell us exactly what you wish us to do Tim"said Violet quickly and glancing fearfully at Penrod."That scoundrel is danger us I kn ow and if he catches Penrod showing love to us when he believes he i s a Glandelinian and is supposed to be our enemy may make matters worse.If one of us is in his arms and no one sees him come in how are we going to signal a warn ing."

"Better not call my name or he would instantly recognize who I am and be on his guard."replied Penrod."I have it. If you fear he'll sneak in when I'm hugging and kissing you good morning or good night keep your eyes open in every direction and let go of me suddenly he if he does so as not to hamper me and tell out "Beloved."That shall be the signal of my or your danger. Then get out of the line of fire is shoot ing occurs---but I hope n ot hin g like that will happen.."

"You promise Tim not to let Gerald do us any in jury if it can be avoided" whispered Violet anxiously.

"Don't worry about that lit tle Princesses and your dear sisters."respon ded Tim reassuringly."You and your sisters play your part, and I promise to play mine and win out.Don't forget.We'll try and trap the scoundrel and make him out prisoner."

Within an hour that whole section of the Glandelinian encampment was en fet e. The headquarters buidl buildin g was a blaze of light, and lights gleamed in the barrack barracks and in most of the tents and army houses(n ot mouses) The Company Streets and the approaches to the headquarters were t hronged with joyious crowds of soldiers gayb s school children on holiday, singing, dancing and making merry rejoicing at the command of Penrod on the return of Tim from the dangerous expedition of search.There were brass bands, minst rels, musicians, singers and m n dancing in every square, while in the great hall of the building it self Glandelin ian officials and chieftians all in t heir most resplendent uniforms and head dressed camps and wearing their most high rank decorations and ornaments feasted, and drank, and made merry.

At a high table Timothy Groveton almost as magnificent a figure as "adoldefob "Adoldefob"himself for he had discarded his well worn Glandelinian uniform and donned a more magnificent one give to him by "Adoldefob, sat in t he place of honour, with a number of child slave attendants, facing Violet who as well as her sisters looked pale and nervious always secret ly glancing here an d there for fear of Starring bursting upon them, and they looked very beautiful even in their queenly like Glandelinian girl de dress uniforms.

"I feel quite flattered though I ought not to be."remarked Tim, still a litt le ill at ease."I didn't expect this as I do not think I am worthy, and hardly antiscipated that any one would rej ice at my return.I kn ow Gerald Starrin g if he does know it does not rejoice at my return.On t hé contrary, I fancied that he would be pleased by the thought that he would be sayin g "Farewell"t o me forever."

"No doubt he would."answered Penrod, frankly and smiling"But whether he likes it or not that you returned doesn 't prevent me from rejoicing because you have discovered an unguarded way out of the Glandelinian camp and that you had made the duplicate letter for me as if I was summoned for some import ant duty to Manleys army.The soldiers rejoice with me, and if we can get away I hope my sisters will be safe from Gerald Starring forever."

Tim and Violet and her sisters regarded him in plexperty and aston ishment .He did not appear to be in any high spirits, even though Jen nie did notice an elfish gleam had crept back in to his eyes.To h r and her sisters it seemed almost as if he were en joying a secret joke.

"I don't understand"said Tim."how does my discovery make it seem disast erious. I can see your thoughts in your eyes."

"Why if Gerald Starrin g discovers that secret path through his C onfederates he will block up the secret way so that we would not get out by that way."explained Penrod calmly and almost mischievously."You may think I'm saying this bec ause I like to see how you'll loook or that I'm up to some mischief because maybe to you my eyes look it.But I tell you here that no matter how much adven t ure you my sisters here had I know Gerald Starring more than you do as Adeldefob" an d he too kn ows me but not as Penrod. N o matter where I have been or met him we always got along peacefully, as peacefully as we do now.He's as dangerous as a mad dog and as treacherious as a snake and as crafty as a fox.If he discovers anything secret about us he will also have the way by which I and Violet and my sisters entered guarded constantly, and would give orders to the guards to slay at sight any who seek to reach t his Glandelinian camp by way of the mountain side.I seemed to be the only home was that if t his army advanced and joined wit h Manley.Then when we got to Manleys part we could escape easier."

Tim and Violet and her sisters exchanged glances and Jennie uttered an in v i invul involunt ary exclamanation of con sternation.

"You mean t hat if he discovers anything he is not going toallow us t o leave under any conditions!"Violet ejaculated."Oh Penrod you promised t o outwit himall you can ."

"Th t is what I crace crave for."said Penrod. "If there is no ot her way we will have to chance t he labyrin t hs an d t rust to God and your possession angels"

There was fin alit y in his t one, and Violet and her sisters felt t hat persausion or argument or protest would be useless for Penrod knew Starring and his ways well.He and they were doomed to st ay there long en ough to be discovered un less-----She and her sisters glanced across at Tim again, to fin d him smiling with an inscrut able expression in his blue eyes.

"So that settles it."he exclaimed, adding then in English"We must carry out our plan.Lost lose heart Princesses and Prince.We will play it on him and don't let him suspect.And whatch that he doesn't do anythin g t treacherious. If he tries to kill him on t he spot."

H e turned an d put his arm around Daisy's waist lookin g at her lovingly.

"We'll succeed in our plan"he said laughingly, and Daisy blushingly but willingly gave him t he kiss for which he asked despite the fact that t hat she knew many eyes and that of her sisters were watching.She and her sisters were proud t o have such a boyscout as a frien d."You my dear Prince will at least allow me to have t he companionship of some of your good brave lit tle sisters when we secretly leave!"he resumed in English, addressing Penrod, who n odded assent.

"They will all give themselves to you as lovin g companions."Penrod answered. "You have been as good to them as I have been, and doubt less t hey will be glad to go wit h you in to the unknown as they too love to remain wit h me."

He glanced quizzically at Violet, and her sisters, who collected t hemselves and forced a smile, remember in g that they had a part to play and must t ry t o disarm suspicion against Penrod and themselves.

"I have not said that we may succeed in our adventure."Violet remarked with heightened colour."Later we may discover how glad or sorry we are when we fail or succeed.""

CHAPTER THIRTY ONE(GET THE HUN)))

ALMOST A DREADFUL TRAGEDY.
A UN USAL SURPRISE.
PENROUS COMMAND....".".""#####_A'())(('^^__#####

"Later when we fail or succeed."!repeated "Adeldefob wit h a search ing glance."Is Gerald Starring as dangerous as that despit e t he acquaint ance I have of him."

"Much more dangerous than you imagine perhaps"said Jennie looking him in t he eyes."We know his treacherous ways.Before we came to your f ast here he gave us a summons by command.We tore up t he not e and didn't come."

"We'll try to get that lit tle skunk by midnight.To night certainly"Said Tim with a fierce scowl."He will not int erfere wit h me."

"I am intrigued"commented Penrod obviously perplexed by Jennie's and Violets unusual manner an d t heir whit e faces."You my dearest sisters have not lost the art of keepin g me int erested--and puzzled deares, do you mean----? But I can wait.I'll be on my guard like a Kinttttttt Kin g Fisher."Come on let us fool the foe by making this our last night of pleasure and rejoicing for out gett in g away.We will show ourselves to our child slaves and not to the soldiery and Tim you get Jennie t o make all t he child slaves ready to accompany us in our flight.We'll t ry the Labyrin t hs."

He rose as he spoke, and the assembly of child slaves did homnage to him, shout ing t heir acclamanations and making obeisance as Penrod took Violet and Daisy by t he hand and followed by his ot her sisters and Tim led t hem from the high table through the dining hall.At the foot of the headquarters st eps nine good horses were in readiness, and seven of these Violet, and her sisters mounted, Penrod mount ing one beside that of Joices, while on the ot her Tim was seated.The journey through the Glandelinian encampments reminded Violet and her sisters of the first night in the place.How long ago it seemed.Again she and her sisters and Penrod were acclaimed by the multitude of soldiery as t hey rode on.They went to the generals headquarters and Penrod presented the fake message to one of the highest generals who greeted him in his fantastic uniform and Penrod was told that Manley needed him and therefore they would let him go forth wit h his seven girlscout companions.As for Violet and her sisters they again had the impression that everything was unreal, yet at the same time t heir very thoughts were busy with the part they had l pledged themselves to play lat er in the night, and their nerviousness increased as time wore on.Penrod spoke but little--but often violet or any one of her sisters found his eyes upon her after they returned to the building, and once it occred to Violets excited imagin ation that he had guessed what was passin g through her mind for he leaned forward t ward her and whispered;

"To n ight we may try to get off."

"How do you kn ow we will succeed!"asked Vio let breathlessly, her face blanchin g.He smiled wit hout answering, and appeared to become int erested in many of the beautiful little girl slaves in disgpanous garments who were huddled before him to have t heir own roll called which was the Glandelin ian custom.

Did he know, guess ,suspect that their enemy Starring was up to somet hin g? Violet wondered, agitatedly cont rolling herself with an effort. At last when the evening was well advanced he rose arose t o withdraw t o t he private apartments, and bade Tim and ot hers a formal good night but winked at the same time.In silence he escorted Violet and her sisters to the door of t heir room, then suddenly stood in fron t of them and takin g Catherines hands in his own and smiled int o t heir eyes.

"I shall await your comin g sisters dear with eagerness"he said in a low voice, then turned away and went quickly to his own apartment .Violet and her sisters were trembling, as they submit t ed t hemselves t o t he att ent ion attentions of their child slaves, who divested them of their best uniforms and prepared t hem for sleep though they retained their weapons.Sleep..... The very thought seemed absurd.Sleep.... when the next hour would probably dec ide their fate, and that of Tim and their brot her--when t heir every nerve seemed to be tensioned up almost to snapping point , and the brains of two of the little girls Violet and Jen nie were in wild t urmoil.Jennie herself dismissed the child slaves as soon as possible and sat down t o fight for self con t rol and she and her sisters tried to n erve themselves for the ordeal awaitin g t hem.No thought of breakin g t heir promise to Tim occured to t hem. Violet and her sisters had con vinced themselves that their on e hope of e cape from Starring and this Glandelin ian army lay in carrying out Tims plan .

After a t ime ca'mness born of sheer desperation---came to Violet , herself but her heart was still t hrobbing most sadly, when she stole from her rook room followed by her sisters and went cautiously out int o t he corridor fearful of meeting Starring in that now dark hall and which was in semi darkness.

Near to t he ent rance t o Penrods bed chamber a shadowy figure lurked but t hey did not observe it.Only for a moment did Violet and her sisters hesit at s and t hen looked in t hat direction but then t he shadowy figure was gone.T hen with a sharp int ake of breath fro relief Violet motion ed to her sisters parted the curt ain s of the doorway, and entered Penrods room. "Adeldefob" like themselves had doffed his uniform, and was attired now in a single white t oga like garment.As Violet, and her sisters appeared he sprang up from t he couch on which he had been seated, and held out his arms eagerly.

"You have come my beloved sisters."he exclaimed joyfully his eyes lightin g up"Love for me has always conpired you and your sisters since you first knew me.At last you have come t o set ready for our well laid scheme."

Violet cast a lightning glance around her.she saw that Penrod had left his aur automatic pistol lay on the pillow of his couch several yards away from where he stood, and knew that if Starring came in and was as quick sight as she he could not fail to see it and would be able to s ize it before Penrod h ad a chance to reach it.Before she ran or inten ded to t row herself into his arms and throw her arms around him she said"Penrod dear.Foolish of you t o leave your pistol behind like that for God's sake get it ."

He did seein g her whit e face and also ed it in his holst or.For fear of any danger as she had heard her throat had dried up, and she feared she would be un able to give the signal if danger did threat en .Penrod was kissing her lovin gly her lips, her cheeks, her brow.

"My good brot her"she whispered I---I--- she heard a strange noise and her eyes turned inst inctively tward the door, and she to her horror saw t hat Gerald Starrin g had already sneaked into the room, t hat he had found a pist ol somewhere an and was darting behind t he bed."My God Penrod! Ad ldefob look out he's in the t reacherous fool"she shrieked.Penrod saw t he int ruder t wo seconds too late, cried out and hurled Violet aside, but ere he could reach Gerald or draw his own pistol he fired point blank without a word, then fired a second time as Penrod reeled back wounded.Wit h a sobbing cry Penrod crashed to the floor, writ hed convulsively for a moment ,and then lay still.

In raged Violet and her sist ers sprang at him wit h t heir pist ols drawn but he dropped every one of the lit tle girls except Jennie who managed t o reach him and wit h her pistol butt l knocked his from his hand.she would then have shot him but he darted between two columns and ran out of the room.T hen poor Jennie seeing her sisters wounded and Penr d apparently dead was dazed an d ad and petrified wit h horror and could not immediately grasp what had happened.With eyes dilated and hands pressed con vulsively to her breast she stood rigid for a space of a dozen wild heart beats, t hen an ecre st rangeld st rangled scream broke from her, she dashed across the room and flung herself down on her knees besides Penrod first whose whit e robe was already stained scarlet wit h blood.St St arrin g was standin g within easy sight of her but seein g her look at him he ran.

Just then Tim having heard the shots came run ning in.

"The dirty coward.He has killed him and my sisters."she sc reamed at Tim."

"Oh Penrod Penrod, i slayers sisters.I'll get even with him for killing you. OOh Penrod and my sisters don't die."

"Don't act so please don 't said Tim lifting her sisters ont o the beds first ."Where in the world did t he sn ake go.I feared this.Why didn't you and your sisters watch.Confound t he luck anyway.If you had killed the snake in the first place this would not have happened."

As he spoke t here was a rush of feet in t he corridors and the soun d of many voices.Pist ol in hand Tim swung round to the door as t he scared guards and officials began t o crowd into t he apartment wit h cries of consternat ion when they saw Penrod lyin g apparently dead on t he floor and Jennie's sisters also bleeding from wounds, while Jen nis on her knees besides Penrod, sobbing hysterically as she tried to stanch the bleeding of t he wounds in his breast while Tim had been attendin g her sist ers.

"Probably Adeldefob is dead"exclaimed Timothy Groveton ."Gerald St arring may have killed him and untill we fo find out whether he is dead or alive I am temporarily in his rank now.Un derstand that!I Tim Grovet on am now in his stead and the guardian of his charges(indicating Violet and her sisters). Then he grinned."You shall capture that lit tle devil Gerald Starring and any one of you who comes back to me without him shall die.Un derstand"he added fiercely.

"Come back to me without Gerald Starring and you shall die."

They all understood his words and when he brandished his pistol some of t hem fled in terror while the other s saluted.

"Remember what I have said."resumed Tim."Get that Gerald Starring.He shall answer for this shoot in g.Oh for Heavens sakes angel girls pull yourself together and don't weep so Jennie.Your sisters will pull t hrough and I'll see to it that Adeldefob does too.If he doesn't and I have Gerald Starrin g he'll die right in this camp before the n oose.You wan ted your freedom from t his Glandelin ian camp and this is what you got.Anyone would imagine that you and your sisters should have hat ter luck than thin.Go some of you fe lows and get a doct or.what are you standing gaping like statues.Get a doct or do something."

"This is awful.This awful."cried Jennie dist ractedly."I did not kn ow this would happen--did not realize it, and now it is too late.That Gerald has murdered them and I probablyam to blame for not watching the cut rance.Oh why did I t rust myself."

"For Heavens sake get up Jenn ie dear, and don't talk hyst erical nonsen se." ordered Tim brusquely."everything that happens you or your sisters blame yourselves. The whole fault lies with Gerald Starring and he'll pay."Leave the attendants to attend t o your sisters and Penrod.They're not so badly wounded as he and if he is still alive I'll do all I can to save him.You've t o get t o make it clear to these soldiers that for the time being I'm the leader in "Adeldefobs place now, so that if St arring did kill your brother I will be able to take ven geance on Starring."

Jennie was t oo distracted to pay any head to him.Then t oo she had seen poor Penrods eye lids flicker and heard a faint moan break from his bluei bluish white lips, and the realization that he still lived, and her sisters also for the attendants predicted they were more unconscious than urt hurt stirred her to action and caused her to con quer her hysteria.she and Tim lifted Penrod onto his bed and presently the room was full of flustered servan t s and t wo elderly officers, reputed t o be very ski skillfull in medicine an d they bathed and bound up Penrods wounds first, for he was seriously wounded and Jennie's sisters were only scratched though Violet Joice and Angeline had been hit ex ctly in the same places Penrod was.One bullet however had penet rated his left chest dangerously near the heart but did not go through, the ot her had gone throu gh his right shoulder but fortunately failed t o injure his collar bone as it missed that part.Jenn ie had some kn owledge of first aid and was able t o assist in dressing the wounds of her sisters and Penrods too.Her sisters were brought to their senses, and would have arisen but t he servants wouldn't let them.Penrod was unconscious, but he was st ill alive and Jennie prayed silent ly and desperately and wit h desperate fervent ness that his life might be spared for her sisters proved by t heir actions that t heir wounds were more scratches and finally were allowed up by the doctor who said they were not hurt much the wounds were more scratches and t hey must be around to attend Penrod.The physicians were not surgeons and had no kn owledge how ti draw out a bullet, and they shook t heir heads gravely when Violet and her sisters sickened an d horrified asked if they t hought Penrod would recover.

"I fear little girls that your best friend will die"said the physici n but if the mystery man o could be found he could sav e his life for he is a well experienc ed surgeon."

"The myst ery man .Again that strange mysterious christian spy who seemed to playon part in their destiny.The wise mystery man who had caused t hem t o save the badly treated child slaves by winning them forPenrod in the one who spoke En glish, and seemed to have something near supernatural powers who was reputed to in know the ins and outs of the Glandelinian camp who appeared to disappear mysteriously ,and who alone could save the life of their brot her.

"Let the city be searched for the mystery man "violet ordered."Go everywhere and tell all ot her generals and offic ers what happened and have t hem seek everywhere for him.Say that I and my sisters so order and that "Adeldefob has need of the wise one, and will richly rea reward t he man or soldier who brin gs him here.Hasten."

Violet and her sisters ordered the servants and scared officials from t he room and seated themselves by the bedside, Violet and Jennie takin g Penrods hands in their own and claspin g it tightly.The hysterical storm had passed in Jennie leavin g her strangely calm but her heart waslike lead within her.

"Have every one of you t aken complete leave of your sisters Prin cesses!"asked Tim, who had been standing silent, scowling but watchful."yo you want t o spoil everything and let Gerald Starring get the best of i you!We have brought off our great coupe, and now it seems as if Gerald Starring will have us all at his mercy--unless we capture him.One of you must come Prin cesses with me and play up to me so we can rejoice in capturing that snake so we can be rid of the little devil who tries to make you suffer so muh much.One of you surely can sacrifice and come away for a time and leave your sisters t o take care of him.There is still much to be done over this affair and I need your help."

Jennie was so and she did not even turn her head to glan ce at him. Her eyes were fixed anxiously on Penrods ghastly face.

"My place t oo is here with my sisters--besides my brother whom I love"she said tonelessly."God's curse will fall on that lit tle snak e Gerald St arring for what he has done to "Adeldefob"and us.Even he had long ago betrayed our trust, played us false, and bet rayed Jennie to the enemy by gett in g Fred t o disguise as our brot her"added Violet.

"I doj don't blame you but don't be a fool Jenn ie"protested Tim."Confound it there is no understanding that Starring"he contin ued angrily."For your sakes then remain wit h your poor brother and to help o you I'll see the t hing through alone.Here's an extra good pistol I'll give you Jennie.I've got other good pistols of my own and a lon g cartridge belt, and it will go ill with any one who don't try his best to capt ure that snake.I't 'll be as bas n bad as if they challenged my aurthority.I will se t in your brot hers place now till he gets well so I can do to Gerald I like best, and if he persist s in his foolishness I'll put a bullet in his head and finish him.That he can't torment you good little girls any more."

"He nearly put a bullet through my h ead when I struggled with him"said Jennie.

Tim said something under his breath, and strode from the room but placed guards to watch carefully.He was determined to kill that Gerald Starring. In the sad hours that followed, Violet or her sisters did not attempt to analyze their feelings(if they hardly had any after the awful shock) and emot ions nor t o account for their strange change of heart.They too knew only that at the moment rascally Starring had fired t on times they had realized that they loved their new found brother Penrod much more than before, that he in t ruth for from his kindness and loving care of them had in trut h con quered their hearts.

Bit terly they repented not having watched t he door more closely.They lost hod and despised t hat rascal more than ever for the part against them and t heir brot her he had played it was t he same to them as if Starring was a Judas Iscariot and mingled with t heir sorrow and regret wf r for what had he pened to Penrod was a bit ter hatred of Gerald Starring.

"Penrod darlin g I didn't realize what the snake was going to do."sheet hat is Jennie whispered, brokenly and bent to kiss the hand she held in er own her own and while her sisters sat as if in a trance."We always loved you but we didn't realize we loved you so much as we do n ow.We love you Penrod dear love you my dearest brot her, and if you die then we want to die t oo.Don't die please dearest brother asked our possession angels t o preserve you.Live my dearest beloved brother.Oh I didn't believe the devil boy had nerve t o sneak into our room and try to kill you.Oh my dearest brot her if we could on ly do something to save you."

It seemed almost as if the emotion laden words penetrated Penrods consciousness. He stirred, moaned then his eyes opened to gaze dazedly and without any sign of recognition, at Jennie, who uttered a breathless cry of relief and thanksgivin g to God, and brought her sisters out of their trance.

"Penrod dear"she gasped."Oh Thank God you have regained consciousness.Penrod dear don't you know me !It is I Jennie your sister."

For a moment the light of recognition came into Penrods eyes after a lapse of four minutes, and his pale lips parted in a faint smile.

"Beloved lit tle sister Jen nie"he breathed and tried to raise himself from his pillows only to collapse wit h an agonized moan.He lay with han ds pressed to his breast and gradually realization and recollection of what had happened to him came t o his mind.Jennie, bending over him read it in his eyes, saw his whole expression change and his face con t ort .

"You, you ---accursed little demon"he gasped out painfully."You're not my sister Jennie.You are holdin g me so that your Glandelinians can slay me and now--now you have come to gloat over me.You're Gerald Starring."

"No, no Penrod dear"c ried Jennie in dist ress while her sisters were shocked. "I am not Gerald Starring, I would give my life for you.I did not kn ow dear brot her, did not think------"

Her voice was strangled in her throat, and she could not con t inue.The scorn hatred and loathing in her brothers eyes made her quail and seemed t o turn the blood to water in her veins.She could not bear to have him look at her so, and turned her eyes away------to see the mystery man ent ering the room.He st ill wore that hedicus mask but never had the sight of anyone been more welcome to Violet and her sisters. Jennie herself sprang up to meet him, and clutched his arm.

"Oh save him, save him, save my brother."she stammered out almost incoh erently."Thank God you have come.He is badly wounded, and it is my fault not for not watching more closely---but oh -don't let him die please don 't ."

"For the love of Heaven control yourself Jennie"said the st range on e in English."It is unlike you a Vivian Girl heroine to give way to hysteria."He approa ched the bed swiftly as he spoke and bent over Penrod.

"What in the world has happened Penrod!"he asked."Are you badly hurt !Let me examine your wounds."

Penrod again t ried to raise himself in the bed, was suddenly s ized wit h a fit of violet coughing and flecks of blood appeared on his lips.

"Summon the guards, I command you Mystery Man"he panted, looking past the pri sonat Jen nie very coldly"There's Gerald Starring he played me false and tried to slay me and my sisters.Yes that's him right over there(poin t in g to Jennie) "Let him be flung into a dungeon.I will have him and his followers flayed alive in the Company Streets for shoot in g me down so he can steal my sisters from him.I'll show he can 't get me I Schofield Penrod.....""

He chocked and fell back exhausted his grey face contorted wit h pain and passion.

"Penrod dear listen---listen"began Jennie dist ractedly, but the strange man interposed.

"Don't make a scene."he commanded sternly."You and your sisters go to your room and compose yourself or you'll be down yourselves.You can explain t he meaning of all this later.He thinks you're Starring bec ause he's delirious.Go for H eavens sake and rest yourselves."

Somehow or other it never occured to Violet and her sisters to question his rights to give orders or to refuse to obey him.Her sisters went first but she stood for a few moments wringin g her han ds dist ractedly, t hen rushed from t he room.The corridor was t hronged with silent child alnves who made way for her instantly, and made obeisance, and Jennie sped along to her own apartment flun g herself down on her knees and despit e what her own grief at riches sisters tried to do to console her gave way to tears.

"Oh Dearest Blessed Lord please let him live if it is Thy Will.."she prayed desperately"please let him come out of his delirum..."

Again however with the help of her sisters the emot ional storm spent it self quickly, but left her feelin g weak and helpless, but despite what her sisters tried she could not rest.She rose from her kn ees and began to pace up and down her mind in wild t urmoil.The minutes lengthened int o hours but t he strange myst ery man did not come to her and her sisters, and that alone made Violet, and her sisters fear the worst .The suspense became almost unbearable. Once someone in the corridor gave vent to a wail of sorrow, and the Vivian Girls tottered to the door faint with horror and foreboding, fearin g that the worse had happened and that their brot her Penrod was dead.They could not bring themselves to ask the meaning of that cry, but at least Violet controlled herself suffic iently to summon a servant whom she sent with a message to t he strange Mystery man to the ef fect that she and her sisters wished t o see him.It was another long while however before he came, and when he did he sank wearily int o a chair without asking permission--a fact which Violet and her sisters noticed despite their agitation, reflecting that he was the first man within the Glandelinian army who seemed to fail t o treat t hem with any reverence.

"Adeldefobs" condit ion is critical, but he has a magnificent constitution and may pull t hrough"he said hoarsely."I have operated and extracted t he bullet from his chest and taken good care of his shoulder.He is unconscious ag in again and will need careful watching and nursing."

"I guess I will be his nurse."said Jen nie sadly.

"N o I think n ot , not now at least."t he man said."He's in a sort of delirious st ate and as he thinks you're Starring your presence would excite him when he regains consciousness, and excitement might be fatal.To soothe him I had to in form him that Starring will be cast int o a dungeon as he commanded, and believe me he'll get worse than a dungeon if I lay my hands on im him.What exactly happened ?"

"That old sneak Gerald Starring shot him."explained Hettie herself tremulously."I-- Oh I suppose we were to blame for not guarding the ent rance.But we never t hough oh Dearest God----"

"Gerald Starring the chief of Manleys Glandelinian scouts"int errupt ed the man."Do you mean to say for real that Gerald Starring really is in t his comp!Explain yourself."

Hettie complied explaining how in t he first instance their friend T imot hy GvovGrovetch had volunteered to help her and her sisters in t heir s arch for their father when they believed he had gone to the enemys lines seeking information, how she him and her sisters and Penrod had escaped from the Glandelinians when they tried to take possession of them, how unkn own t o t hem Gerald Starring had followed them to this army;and told what happened through and through.It did not occur t o her or either her sisters until afterwards that it was at range the "Mystery Man" seemed to kn ow who Gerald Starring was."We did not know that he would sneak in to our room and shoot at Penrod--I swear we didn't--but if Penrod dies we shall feel we are responsible for not being on the watch against that snake who also slightly wounded us."she concluded after pouring out the whole story."We were planning t o make and an escape from the little snake, he must have suspected our plan and now it is too late and we find we now love Penrod more than ever.Oh I don't know what to do.Say you will help us Mystery man man.You seem to have angelic powers.Tell us what to do."

"Well Princesses for the first thing go to bed and leave me to deal with the situation"said the "mystery man rising to his feet."Have you who are usually so unaturally brave and even almost reckless in your daring now lost your nerve nerves comple completely!Just now you lit tle girls are very different little creatures from the Vivian Girls who were almost the equal of any angelic brave persons and could be in the past be trusted to meet any emergency. Of course I'll admit you have had an unually very hard ordeal here.You lit tle girls are overwrought and hysterical.Better go to bed."

"Do you think we can sleep knowing that Penrods life is in danger!"asked Violet.

"You can leave me and Tim to take care of your good brother."was the abrupt response."I have also given orders that no one leaved camp untill that Gerald Starring is found and arrested.And in your present state you are incapable of doing anything useful.When you little girls have rested and recovered your nerves I will tell you what to do.Go to bed now girls, and if you can't sleep I will send you a sleeping draught."

He saluted, turned and went quickly from the room leaving violet and her sisters wondering again if he was indeed some angelic supernatural being in the disguise of a man for once in their lives it happened that they did converse with such a being.It had eased their minds to some extent to tell him ever thing poor Hattie, and she and her sisters felt that they could trust him to take care of Penrod and could count on his help, while as their wounds were slight they could take care of themselves.They in their hearts were glad Jennie escaped the shooting.The little girls knew he was right, that they just now were incapable in their present nervous and exhausted state of facing a crisis, so they swallowed the sleeping draught which one of the child slaves brought to them a few minutes later.Soon they had fallen into a deep dreamless sleep(pppe peep peep!-) which lasted many hours, and from which Jennie herself awoke somewhat earlier refreshed in body but rather dazed in mind.Her first thought when her brain cleared was for Penrod and as she made a hurried toilet she sent a servent to inquit inquire as to his condition.

"Adeldefob lives Little girls but seems to sleep the sleep of death, and demons seem to possess him."the girl reported. Perplexed and anxious, Violet and her sisters hurried to Penrods room to find him feverish and delirous.One of the Glandelinian physicians and not the Mysterous man was in attendance, and he shook his head forlornly, when Violet and her sisters flashed a questioning glance at him.Penrods eyes were open, but the light of reason had gone from them although they were unaturally bright.He did not recognize Violet and her sisters as they tip toed to his bedside yet they were on his lips.

"My beloved sisters)....Behold you are fair little angels, and that Gerald killed them so I'll be lonesome in the world, oh Mysterious one"he babbled in his delirum."Their little selves how like angels they were by Stharring their skin has been flayed from their holy lit tle bodies.....They will come to me in spiritual forms to night my dearest sisters now dead.." False Accursed devil Glandelinian boy spy.He is their---Murderer.... He is a black snake that spits death hell and thunder.Kill him.Make him bring back my sisters to me.... I command. Beloved sisters are in my heart....I am consumed as by fire---...He shall die by torture.Oh my darling sisters gone from me forever. And there he stands"pointing at poor Jennie"Begone you lit tle devil.Come to gloat over me.You killed my sisters.How I hate you.Oh my sisters gone forever.I am I am athirst ...."

Violet and her sisters could not bear to listen, and they rushed from the room, feeling that their hearts would break. Oh that Starring.If they could get their hands on him.It was with difficulty that ant any of the poor litt le girls could control their agitation, but they remembered they must control their nerves, as the Mystery man had said, if they were to face the emergency. Neither poor Violet, nor her agrived sisters did not know what quite what to do, and while they were deliberating deliberating wondering what had become of Timothy Groveton, and where they could find the Mystery man one of the child slaves appeared.

"Your friend Tim desires your presence Princesses."the girl announced.

"Is Groveton?"Queried Violet looking at her sisters.

"Yes"said the girl."He says you must help him in his plan to overcome that very bad boy Gerald Starring before he becomes master."explained the girl. "For your sake he is on the chair or throne of Adeldefob and he wishes to see you before the bad boy comes back."

"Before the bad boy comes back."repeated Jennie with a sort of foolish smile. but with an angry glint in her eyes."Aw he wouldn't dare come back.I'd kill him."

With anger and resentment in their hearts Violet, and her sisters accompanied the girlscout to the Council Room, to find Tim gorgeously garbed like Penrod had been seated on the chair haranguing a group of boy and girlscout Glandelinian officials who were standing at attention before him.

"Understand you brown uniformed swine,I am Adel defobs temporary successor now"he was saying as Violet and her sisters entered.Until Adeldefobs recovers you will take your orders from me and the little girls, and my orders is get that Gerald Starring and bring him before me, and any one who fails because he is a friend of that boy who is lower to me than a snake I will shoot like a dog.Get that snake and---"

He broke off at a sight of Violet and her sisters and their distressed faces, and sprang to his feet with an exclamation of relief.

"At last"he cried."I have been wise to your room lit tle girls but they told me that the man they call the Mystery one has given orders you were not to be disturbed. Come up to me little angels try to control your grief.Please Princesses don't for Heavens sake look at me that way I can't bear it it cuts my heart.Come Jennie and talk to those child scout a bout how I am doing this work for Adeldefob that I command that Gerald Starring must be found and captured and my orders on that line must be obeyed.

Jennie hesitated for a few moments, then at the advice of her sisters, she nodded to the stairs to the big chair on which Tim sat, her lovely face white but resolute.

"Aris and her on to me Genitrix Vivini"she said, slowly but clearly addressing the Glandelinian child scout chieftian as."This Gerald Starring is neither a really high ranked boyscout or a chieftian.Adeldefob still lives, and is still "our leader? "and master, but that Gerald Starring has tried to come here. He may have plenty of authority to do as he likes, but he has that hurt horitory only in Manleys army where he came from.He has no any here.He said he came here with a message to deliver to Adeldefob and instead of delivering a message he shoots him, and wounds us. It his your duty to take your orders from us and Tim Groveton until "Adeldefob"is better.You must try your best to capture that Gerald Starring so that "Adeldefob"can punish that red head for his wicked treachery."Then to make matters matters at rest she first slyly winked at her sisters and continued;

"He is not satisfied with persecuting the Vivian Girl Princesses with his Christian lines but he comes over here in "our"army to make trouble even for us and to threaten to get their brother Penrod to set us away from Adeldefob"so he can say to Manley he arrest ed the Vivian Girls.What does he know about them.Nothing at all.He's a traitor to us and them.He thinks now he has conquered Adeldefob and in tends to make himself master of our army."he added."He want s to usurp the power of our Guardian "Adeldefob".Go forth and tell the whole army what I have said--that "Adeldefob"still is our boy scout chieftian, that he will live to punish treachery, as it is a grevious offense for any one to shoot a fellow soldier or a fellow boyscout in this army, and I and these girls(indicating her sisters-and Tim Groveton will command in his stead untilll he recovers.I have spoken.You may goy my child scout officers."

The child scouts made obeisance, and with drew hurriedly, whispering one to the other and glancing back half fearfully at the splinded figure on the the big chair/.

"You certainly have made an impression on them,Jennie"exclaimed Tim with a forced smile"It surely surprised me for what you did say to them.Why they have all gone off to do my bidding.You surely told them that "QAdeldefob is still our leader, that they will take orders from me and capture Gerald Starring.When he is captured"added Tim as his face darkned, I'"I'll do to him accordingly what happens to Penrod.And I promise you that will not be much in the way of what he'll think.As for the child scouts and slaves taking orders from you and your sisters that is right enough but Starring will have a sad day when he meets Glandelin ian generals for he told me when he did not know me"That "Adeldefob"can be had officer of as much as he will choose to leave him and that it would not be much in the way of treasure.He would take what he can grab and give it to Manleys generals."

"So against even his own Glandelin ian armies he aspires to be a thief as well as a murderer."Commented Jennie scornfully."Not satisfied with having tried to murder our brother, he means to rob the very Glandelin ian generals of what they themselves raided from christian cities."

"Oh don't talk rot Jennie, it 's impossible he can't do it ."Tim exclaimed impatiently."We need not adopt this absurd attitude!We've got to work together and get that little rat.Our coupe has only really succeeded through his folly and if we can capture him we'll be master of the situation and then we'll surely be able to get him into the Christian lines, and then you and your sisters can do as you like to the little rat.If we can recover all that treasure too it will be restored to their rightful owners--and we can get away with it .The mystery man who spoke English and who knows the ways out of the camp has returned for I have seen him--and we can get him to act as our guide."

"He will not need to act as our guide--of that I feel sure--but as you t old me you discovered the secret way we will not need a guide."
"I discovered"said Tim regretfully"t hat Gerald Starring has seen to it that that open road is also guarded by his own Con federates.I thought it was pure bluff at first .I had t hought out my plan beforehan d.I guessed t oo that if I announced I have discovered a secret way you and your sisters and Penrod would be anxious to escape with me and Jennie and would agree to help me get t he better of Gerald Starring. But he outwitted us."
"So he fooled us about t he way of escape!"exclaimed Violet bitterly."Is there no limit to his duplicity.!"
"I suppose not, but for us the end will justify the means Violet "said Tim decidedly."I for your sakes was playing high stakes and I'd have won if it was not for his interference." overtheless if we do win out it'll be on e of t he greatest coups in history.Your little arch enemy disposed of, and all t he stolen wealth and this Glandelinian army at our mercy if we spill the information we obtained to your father.You have only to help me you and your sisters Violet -- and all---"
"We will help you, against that thief and murderer"Broke in Jen n ie in sudden righteous fury."I hate and despise such a wicked boy for what he h as done for having even tricked and fool ed us, and I shall do everythin g in my power, and so will my sisters to help you t o stir up all the Glandelinian girl and boy scouts against him.".
"But be cautious in what you do and don't be rash or rash and take leave of your senses."Cried Tim."Be so careful.He's as cautious as a fox."
"No, I or my sisters won't t a e leave of our senses, and I'm going to help you fight for him."retorted Jennie passionately."We are going to fight for " Adeldefob."
In a very fever of anxiety and impat ience to checkmate Gerald St arring Jenn ie at the advise of her sisters armed herself properly and hastened from her building to the generals headquarters but found no one there.But she found out side of the building a lot of child slaves.She was greet ed wit h rever nce reverence by the child slaves, who at this part could understand her own lan guage but not English.
"where the Glandelinian soldiery do not see you if you're christians pray for "Ad eldefob" Invoke Our Blessed Lord to save him, and t ell your child slave companions that we cannot rescue you unless he recovers as we can n ot do anythin g without his help.And be careful for the wrath of God will surely fall upon any one who proves false to Him and us."
On of the eldest of the child slaves bowed low.
"We will even make sacrifices t o God so that "Adeldefob" may be healed."she said gravely."
"It is well"said Jenn ie."Where is the bearded man whom every one here calls the Mystery Man!"
"I kn ow not Princess"The boy slave answered."Tothe Glandelin ians who are out wicked masters he comes and goes like a spirit ."
"Who is he and from whence did he come to this Glandelin ian camp for he is n o Glandelinian!"
"I know not Princess.The Glandelin ians are afraid of him believing he came from the spirit world.They believe he is a demon in disguise."
"Let him be found."ordered Jennie."Tell him I and my sisters n eed him an d await him in "Adeldefobs"headquarters."
The council room was deser ted when she passed t hrough it on her return t o the headquarters of Glandelinian boyscout s, deserted save for one girl slave whowas crouched on the steps with her face buried in her hands and sobbing.
"What ails you little girl!"asked Jennie pausing"Why are you weeping!"
"Gerald Starring has threatened to kill all of us child slaves." said t he little girl slave broken ly."Look out too It is you and your sisters he desires to make prisoners and you are as the dirt beneath his feet."
"You are talking foolishness."exclaimed Jennie impatien tly."Where is Tim Grovet on now.!"
"I do not know but I saw Gerals pass Adeldefobs room a few minut es ago."
This unexpected answer startled Jennie and contracted her heart.Recollection of Gerald Starrings threat to make an end of her brot her flashed through her min d, and she sped along the corridors to Penrods apartments, and almost precipitated herself in to his bed chamber.Penrod still lay babblin g feverishly and deliriously and at the foot of the bed stood Tim Grovet on looking with great con cern at th e wounded boy.
"Good God I thought you was Starring.What brought you here Tim!"demanded Jennie breathlessly.

That dirty Gerald Starring I overheard threatened to come in here when nobody was around with the purpose to finish him off."Tim answered."I hate the idea of killing a Glandelinian boyscout even, but I'll do it if he doesn't keep t o himself and get out of this territory.It's a shame those nutty culprits can 't cate h him.He even threatens to prove who you and your sisters are and cause your capture. To prevent you from harm I'll let nothing stand bet ween me and t he attainment of my object .I've sent for t he "Mystery man."
"My beloved sisters....betrayed by the devil t o that Gerald Starring his human son."broke out Penrod at that moment in his delirium.
"You h and your sisters have got to decide som thing low Jennie."reminded Tim.
"We are mast ers of the situation, but we should not take any risks.As lon g as i as it seems he cannot be captured that Gerald is dangerous.We'll have to accept the situation, lay ambush for the little snake an d do away wit h him.It is just, and too it is a sin in these cases not to kill any Glandelinian if we have the opportunity. "
"I cannot let you go away dearest sisters and meet an awful fate in the power of the Manleys."broke out the voice of the wounded boy again, and the cry brought a lump to Jennie's throat.
"I can't t alk here"she said shakily."Come to my room where my sisters are--- anywhere out of this--and I will t ry to discuss t hings cl calmly."
Tim shrugged his shoulders and followed her out and along the corridor t o her own apartment(orders ordering guards to let no Glandelinian boyscout in Penrods room) where Jennie seein g her sisters lyin g down and weeping silently seated herself on a couch.
"Well queried Tim standing before her, and looking down at her searchingly"Are you going to be sensible and try to get that Starring by a good shot."
"I s certainly would for he tried to murder my brot her in cold blood."Jennie exclaimed meetin g his glance unflic i unflinchingly."I---I and my sisters love him."
"The very fact that you and your sisters love your brot her makes me regret I didn 't kill Starrin g outright when I first saw him."interrupted Tim."He will probably die inany case if he is caught, and Penrod dies, but sin ce what happened to your brot her I shall not let Starrin gs worthless life to stand between me and pr the prospect of winnin g a vast army in to the hands of the christi ns-- and for the sake of you and your sisters and God.You and Penrod have been awfully good to me more than I dorse deserve and therefore I won't let Penrod suffer this and let Starring get away with it ."
There was just ified ruthless decision in his tone and expression, and Jennie kn w that G erald n ever did bluff in anything he said, and was more in deadly earnest now than ever before.
"Leave us out of the question of having been good to youTim"she said"You must know it was you who have been good to us, and that we were everythin g t o you and we are the ones not worthy.You are worthy yourself and Glandelinia dreads you for what you did for us.Remember you said once you would not tell us ou are unworthy.Remember your promises."
"Maybe not but I hope you were n ot such a fool to imagine I meant to content meself with being a plain boyscout, and surrender you to Gerald Starring."Exclaimed Exclaimed Tim impatiently."On e tyi thin g I did was sheer bluff t o t hrow dust in Geralds eyes and in duce you and your sisters to help me get even with him.I want you safe within the christian lines as well as the treasure all recovered and the child slaves wit h us, Jennie. Your brother would n ever recover if you were in any danger and, he desires you more than all the treasure in all theworld--and I mean to have you and your sisters safe for him."He stopped and looked at her sisters who were now lying apparently asleep. But t hey were not andwere taking in every word he said."Even if you and your sisters were captured I should still want to save you and take you from the en emy underany cost.I said I'd get you safe from harm if I had t o break through all obstacles and I mean it.."
"I kn ow Tim but don't do anything rash even for our sakes."cried Violet herself suddenly rising from the bed."We can help you checkmate Geralds plans but we are not worthy so much for you that you'll do t oo much and t hrow your life away recklessly.Be careful of Starring for if he sees an advantage he can stir up the wicked Glandelin ians against us all and instead of obeying us t hey'll make us prisoners."
"When they discover that they'll have to kill me first before you're their prisoners"said Tim and touched his automatic pistol significantly.
"We may be able to kill a few but when our ammunition is ex exhausted we will be helpless and they will then kill us "Joice retorted."Besides remember Tim as good as we are we must not be daredevil for that doesn't pay.We can do practically not hing now without God's help since Penrod is wounded."
"All the more reason for making a petition to Him t o help us."

Listen Tim dear, we believe we could make a bargian with you.We could help you t o get away with a part of the stolen treasure and the information that Jennie secured for you!I will ask the Mystery man to guide you through the strange labyrinths to the outer world so you can reach the christian lines, and sent men with you to act as servants or carriers so that you may get saftly back to the christian army.Be But because Penrod has been wounded we will not need then to accompany you.Our place is here, and here we shall remain and accept what ever fate may have in store for me."

"Tim Groveton was silent for a few moments, then he shook his black head and gave his big shoulders a shrug.

"Why should I be content with going off with half the stolen treasure, and leave you and your sisters behind, when since Penrod is wounded I have it in my power to protect myself---including you and your sisters Jenn e Jennie!don't look so sadly at me an d start to cry.I couldn't do that and desert you.What would your brother think of me and you t oo would regret it in the end.Don't cry so now Jenn ie for I' sure he will get better"and to stop her depressed feeling he suddenly encircled her with his arms.The close pressure of her little t hrobbing body again st his own fired him with holy desire.

"He's here he's here let me go" quick"she sc reamed struggling fiercely to break from him and use her pistol."Starring is sneakin g in"He let T im let go of Jenniev t hrust her aside and instantly drew his pistol again crying in a sudden harsh voice!

"So you thought you could catch me like "Adeldefob"Ha.Ha. Fling up your hands Gerald Starring.You're under arrest."

Taken by surprise Gerald released Violet who he had grasped instantly- st arted with an oath--to find Timothy Grovet on within a few yards of him and wit h a fourty five calibre automatic revolver in his han d.

"Out them up you little undersnake or I'll put a bullet t hrough you." snarled Tim.

Geral! however leaped suddenly to one side snatching out his own pist ol as he did so and fired quickly but the bullet passed Tim and c rashed into a lamp smashing the glass and shade to pieces.Before he could pull the t riger again Tim fired and Geralds pistol clattered to the floor, for t he bullet had smashed hi s wrist .

"N ow indeed I ought to shoot to kill."said Tim with a sneer."Get back into the left corn er there, you blackguard of Satan and quick about it or I will shoot with fatal results."Are you hurt Violet "he added fur h he had seen Starring grab her.He remembered he had h ard somet hin g like""t isn 't any use struggling you and your sisters must surrender.You can 't get away from me t his time and in releasing Jennie at her sc reams, had seen Starring force Violet backwards down on t he couch while she sc reamed and st ruggled frantically with the purpose no doubt of scratchin g her face as she h ad his.He had all but overpowered h r with Tim interv ned.

Violet and her sisters t ogether were dazed by the unexpected turn in event s, while Violet was pantin g breathlessly, and disheveled.she rose unst eadily to her feet, and stared with dilat ed eyes at Tim whose glance was st iil leveled fiercely and wickedly as you call it in expression of words at Gerald. Her sisters had about rushed to her assistance when Tim int ervened.

"N o, I--I shall be all right present ly"she faltered"You --you were just in time to save me.....Oh you cowardly brute, you snake and dirty t oad."

The last words were flung at Gerald, who had obeyed Tims command and backed in to a corner, where he stood his bandaged face con t orted with pain and rage, gripping his injured right wrist which was bleeding copiously with his left hand, and writhing in agony/.

"Pick up his pistol Violet"ordered Tim."Shoot himdown if you like I don't care--although shootin g is too good for him.In any case keep him covered and--oh good her comes the "Mystery one.He'll take care of the skun k."

Violet ov obeyed tremblingly, her brain in a whirl.she had difficult y in t akin g her eyes fron the fantastically hooded man , for as he spoke now it seemed t o her that his voice, when e he addressed her had been the voice of Jack Evans.

"Why not shoot the little snake "he said carefully."He'll not be able to bother you any more."

"Bet ter shoot me and have done with it you little snakes yourselves."Gerald snarled at Violet and looking daggers at her."Dam you little guttersnipes I'll get you yet in spite of all your hooded mysteries."

He took a few steps to t he door, but Violet and her sisters suddenly drew their own pistols, while the masked man who had been shoutin g orders to a scared group of men and officials who had come rushing along t he corridor, swing around, and the nine of them leveling pistols at him cowed Gerald.

"I regret t o say"said t he masked man in a very sarcastic voice "That the Vivian Girls as you call them despite how you have treated them do not just now want to kill you.Well then I will have to submit t o t heir wish.N ever theless you are under arrest for the attempted murder of "Adeldefob" and I will leave it to him t o deal with you as he desires and as you deserve.Take him and l t him be imprisoned in one of the apartmen ts of the building"he added t o t he guards who came flocking into the room in response to his summons."He is here only to interfere with "Adeldefob"and I got a message from Manle/ that he never sent him here.And he it is who has tried to slay Adeldefob, and now has tried to harm his guests."Take him prisoner and guard him closely.It is Manleys orders."

"Is it your wishes girls!"asked the captian of the guar s, glancing unc ertainly at Violet and her sisters.

"Yes it is out wish."said Violet drawing her: lf up and tryin g t o speak steadily."Let him be imprisoned as t he wise one commanded.Whether you get a physician to attend to his wound or not is not our affair.He do sn't deserve even out consideration no matter how badly hurt he is"she added as an aft ert hought as the guards closed around Gerald, and marched him out of the room. For a few minutes there was deadly silence."Violet sank down exhausted on the couch and her sisters crowded roun d to console her sturin g half fearfully at thepowerfully built half masked man who stod wit h both his hands limply by his sides an his bearded chin sunk on his breast, apparently t lost in thought.

"This is some great advent ture you little Princesses are having."the protensely masked man exclaimed suddenly, voicing his thou ts."Merciful H aven, t o what lengths lust for victims thy he hat es will drive a Glandelinian boy.Gerald Starrin g a real -orinan boy of Irish birth, joining t his wicked cause as a boyscout, and behaves in a manner in which the meanest Glandelinian would be ashamed.He played you false Princesses, had Fred Bowden t o betray het ray to you to the enemy so you would believe it was Penrod by the clever disguise he used, and now t his.If it had not been for Time intervent ion he would have overcome you lit tle girls by force and carried you off.He deserves no mercy and can expect none.He can't do not hing here for he cannot prove to any one of the gen erals who you are and they won't believe him.We will smuggle him t o the Christian lines and----"

"Jack Evans"broke in Jennie, almost screaming in or her excitement ."You are our Guardian Jack An brose Evans."

The voice had been unmistakable, and she and her sisters were no longer in doubt as to the identy of the "Mystery man" Despite his beard(which was false) his horrid hood and strange garb, t hey now knew him to be Jack Evans.

"It sure has taken you a lon g lon g time to recognize me Irin casses"said Jack Evans calmly as Violet and her sisters crowded roun d him and on e flung her arms impulsively around his neck."There is no occassion t o give way t o hysteria, my dear lit tle girls.You are safe here as if you were within a Christian generals army.You and your sisters were not formerly so hysterical and sentimental emotional. Pray con trol yourselves."

"But Evans dear, don't you understand.I thought you were far away within t he Christian lines and heard reports you were wounded."strummered Joice her brain in a whirl."Why did you not reveal yourself to me in t he first place and to my sisters?Why are you masqueradin g as a ghost .What does it all mean!"

"My dear little angels of Heaven it would take too long to answer your questions."replied their holy and lovin g guardian ."Let it be said for t he moment to declare that circumstances compelled me to pose as a semi supernatural bein g, and I have more power in t his guise than I should have as an ordinary pose of a Glandelinian general.Explainations for our own safty must wait. If you were found out these Glandelinian generals would be more dangerous t han any of the Manleys.You have been t old on of course but nothing will convince them that you are the Vii Vivian Girls, and that proves your possession angels are guarding you well.Penrod needs attention and mine in particular, and I must see that our orders regarding Gerald Starring have been carried out .Do please calm yourselvesvand try to face the situation in a manner befitting the Vivian Girls as you are.You had better keep your hand artillery in readiness in case of circumstances ."

The rush of event s had been almost t oo much for Violet, and her sisters, and when their guardian had gone they all sank limply together on the couch bewilderly trying to get their thoughts in order.It all seemed indeed like some fant astic night mare; Gerald Starrings t hird attempt upon them, t he dramatic int ervention of Tim and of t he arr st by t he Mystery man who turned out to be Jack Evans--Jack Evans whom they thought wit hin the christian lines lyin g wounded in a base hospital--Gerald Starring now a prisoner in the army camp of which he had boasted he was master--t heir brot her Penrod wounded, perhaps dyin g, and babbling their names in his delirium mingling words of love, and t hen of t hreats of t orture for Starring.....Yes surely it seemed like a night mare dream--and yet it was actual and real/.!!.!.!

However a fit of shuddering shook Violet as she thought of her struggle with Gerald, and what might have happened had Tim not been in the room with her and her sisters, and trying to cheer Jenni e by loving caresses.

"I would have killed him as a snake afterwards."breathed Violet to herself nervously fingering t he revolver she still held in her hand and which had belon ged to Starring....."Perhaps it would be better to kill t he snake now and end all this horror for us.With him at large for he'll escape again we dare not face the future.If Penrod lives he will kill him anyway for shooting me and slightly wounding me in his arms."

The morbid thought of ending the little scoundrels life, which she was perfec tly righteous and justified in doing was dangerously fascinating.It would be so easy too"she reflected, fingerin g the pistol.Sneak up on him, just a good aim at his head just a pressure of the trigger-- and t hen all is over.A good way to do, but perhaps oh well it's best to let Penrod deal with him. Shootin g is too good. But if Penrods dies I'll surely kill th the snake and---"

""ardon Miss Violet"--- the voice of one of her child scout comnn companions broke in on her thoughts, and she and her sisters l too looked up with a start.

"There's a message from the highest general that a procession to t he big hot well is about to start"the girl continued."Will you wish to see a great show.It will take your minds off of your woes and grief."

"Yes"said Jenn ie after a moments hesitation."If I and my sisters offer sacrifice to Our Blessed Lord He will un derstand and grant uocur request."she t hought. "God knows I'd gladly ma e good sacrifices to save poor Penrod and make amends for what Starring did."

Be scene that presented itself to the surprised eyes of Violet and her sisters when they left the building a little later was in many ways remarkable and some thing which they had not expected to see in a Glandelinin camp.And what st ruc k them most forcibly was the absence of any religious atmosphere but then such thin ge can be expected in a Glandelinian camp.There were many officers in gorgeous uniform raiment and great feathered hats, hats black and feathers coloured but the air seemed to be one of rejoicin g for some event that was going to occur.Bein g in a Glandelinian camp Violet or her sisters had never expected any o sort of ceremony of sacrifice and inter cession for anything and they found what they expected to be a sort of military festival in progress. A procession was forming outside of the great headquarters building, headed by milit ary bands, and followed by a long rank of Glandelinian held child slaves.They were boys and girls from eight to ten.T he scene was more like a big military carnival rather than anythint anything they had exec expected, and the great square out side the headquarters buildings was thronged with soldiers in their best or holiday uniforms, while two straightbroad elevated Company St reets leading to the big deep hole containing the apparent nerpetual pool of boiling water was lined with soldiers on both sides at "attention.Little did any one know that the hole was a water volcano and every year hulred steam and hot wat er upwards to more than 10,000 feet with great noise and devastation. A special array of horses were in readiness for Violet an d her sisters, and they mounted t hem and rode along immediately behind all the child slaves when the procession started. The loud bands playing unintere i uninteresting music jarred on them and they were regretting have cont en consented to take part in the progression .They were little girls indeed music crazy as to call it, but Glandelinian music, good night.It would jar on even a music professors nerves. T hey wondered at the depressed faces of about eighteen smaller child slaves and little dreaming that t hey were going to a horrible boiling death.Even deep dp depression settled down on poor Violet, and her sisters themselves.The feeling was strong upon them that Gerald Starring had made shipwreck of Penrods and t heir lives by this act of treachery, that it was futile to hope that they would ever again be happybas long as they lived, and that going straight to Heaven from here would be a merciful release.Slowly the procession wended its way to the headquarters buildin g of the Great generals, above the great big strange well of dark greenish scalding hot boiling water, two hundred and fifty feet below the headquarters out side platform.The water was unusally boiling to day and great clouds of steam rose obscur obscuring the view at times, and far below there was a great re rumbling sound..Here the procession halted, and Violet, and her sisters slowly descended from their horses . The bands ceased their music, but the eighteen now frightened little girl slaves were lined up on the platform above the strangely activ acting rumbling pool.The officers began to tell t he soldiers of some serious offense these eighteen children committed against Glandelinian aurthority, the soldiers crowded forward and some to see why the pool acted so strange threw in some heavy rocks.There came a dull booming reverberation around the whole great cavity and an enormous cloud of rolling steam came up scorching hot .There came a hush at this sight, and the air seemed suddenly to become tense with excitement.Violet and her sisters realized what the Glandelinians were going to do to throw these eighteen children into the boil ing pool and an involuntary cry of horror broke from t heir lips.The Glandelin inns appeared inten sely int erested at what was going to happen. However Violet and her sisters knew that in one way they could prevent t hat. If they offered to buy the slaves and as they had plenty of Glandelinian mon ey they detained the Glandelinians from t he act and offered to buy the slaves say ing they needed all t he slaves they could get.This for some reason or other did seem to satisfy the Glandelinians more than anything else, and Violet and her sisters to their relief were able to buy the eighteen slaves.

"I'd give my life gladly to save those poor things and I'll do it."Violet had thought to herself numb with horror. Violet and her sisters h ad remembered how close it came that Day Daisy had come n ear falling into this boiling Cenote, and impulsively they kept aw ay as far away from the edge of it as possible, appalled too at the crazy ly acting st eam clouds, but even as they edged away from it, there came a terrific loud thundering report, which caused the Glandelinians to hastily retreat from its edge and away altogether, and at the same time some one caught Violets arm, and she t urned her head to see the masked man she now knew to be Jack Evans."He was pantin g as if he had been running.

"Good you saved those child slaves from a horrible dot death.But don't stay here too long.Have you become reckless, and why did you not inform me what was going to happen!As it is I did not even have an opportun ity of wit nessing this procession.But come away.I know these kind of waterholes.It's a blow out and if it erupts we'll all b e scalded to death."

But doubtlessEvans himself would have prevented the salughter of th e child slaves had he been able to do so but by buying them Violet and her sisters had been ahead of him.

"I did not know what was going to happen."said Hattie feeling as if she had suddenly been awakened from a dream."Somehow it did occur to me and my sisters to try and prevent it, and the only way we did was to buy them.But if the enemy know who were are t hey'll throw us down there [illegible].

"Don't talk like a lunatic pleas e--please"snapped Jack Evans."I kn ow you and your sisters have endured a great deal, a great deal more than you h should but you need not let the cruel t ragedy prey on your minds.Get back t o the Boyscout headquarters as quick as you can for your brot her is in a most critical condition, and is callin g for you girls."

The last words caused a revulsion of feelin g in the Vivian Girls, and banished the thought of the danger of their being t hrown in if discovered t emporarily. Violet was the first to turn quickly from the platform overlooking the sin ist er erupt ive water hole, her sisters followed, hurriedly mounted their horses bade the child slaves they bought to follow and rode back to t he building wit h all speed. Violet, was the first to enter and she found Penrod still delirious and in high fever constantly reiterating their names.

"Sisters.sisters.sisters."he was moaning."He has taken Violet and her dearest sisters awar from me. My dearest sisters.My beloved sisters....Oh my sisters."

"We are here Penrod"Jennie herself exclaimed, the second t o rush to his bedside and with a catch in her breath."I am here beloved brother, and no Glandelinian boyscout shall take you from us."

Penrod seemed to underst and some of the words, and as Jennie t ook his hand he gripped her fingers tightly, and the crazed look died out of his fevered eyes.

"I thought Starring had the Glandelinians t hrow you in t he boiling pool sisters dear."he said weakly."Stay with me sisters dear, and do not let him capture you."

"We love you our dearest brother, we sure love you more than."Jenniealmost sobbed, and bent her head to kiss his hot lips."We will stay wit h you brot her dear.Gerald can 't harm us.He's a prison er."

"It is well."murmuring Penrod sighing heavily as he sank back among his pillows and closed his eyes."

Ten minutes or more later, when Jack Evans entered the room, he found Penrod sleeping with Jennie's hand still clasped tightly in his own and her sisters seated around his bed.

"Iraculous"e xclaimed Evans."His con dition had underbone undergone a sudden and remarkable change.I feared greatly he was going to die, but now the fever has almost left him.By the way Prin cesses you might writ e out in Englishbe full account of what you have discovered here, as soon as possible for inclusion in the information for the christian lines I am preparin g, also describing describing the c Glandelinian army and its position."

Violet and her sisters could have told him that they had seen a child slave murdered most brutally before their very eyes but they werevin no mood to discus the dreadful event at the moment.She and her sisters were con cerned on y for Penrod, and were conscious of a sensation of great relief and t hankful neas to God.Penrod had needed her and her sisters and nothin g else seemed to matter."

"Penrod will r [illegible]"gr [illegible]ed.

"He certainly seems to have taken a remarkable t urn for t he better but t he delirium may return for a tim e."Evans answered."I t hink I can safely leave him in your care n ow and get back to my work.I will give instruction t o some of the physicians who are really very competent and will look in and see Penrod again in an hour or two.We must decide incidentally what is to be done about t hat little serpent Gerald Starring."

Jack Evans as the readers may remember was a great christian soldier of v aried accomplishments and with some of t he great eccentricities of genius.He was only a young man and had hard as nails and stron g had from even boyhood days endured hardships which would have killed many a man, was q was a dead shot as many Glandelinians had found to their cost, and could on many an occassion be ruthless to foes, although he was at heart humane.He had also studied surgery and medicine and saved the lives of many officials and friends of his.His remark about Gerald Starring, set Violet and her sisters thinking after he had gone.For t he first t ime since the beginning of this awful experience Violet or her sisters ever spoke to each other.

"What was to be done about Gerald and where is he Jennie!"asked Violet ro rubbing her throbbing temples."

"Evidently he has been imprisoned w somewhere in the building and we need not fear any danger from him but if he is kept in captivity untill Penrod recovers our brother would surely seek vengeance."Said Jennie.

"If Penrod does kill him Starrin g h is alon e to blame."said Hettie.

"Should we relent and persuade Evans to send him away back to Hanleys lines before Penrod gets better just to show a little mercy."asked Daisy.

"C ertainly not"said Jennie decidedly."I will not do anything of t he sort and we'll hold the guards responsible if they let him escape."

Penrod slept peacefully for hours, and Violet, and her sisters never moved from his bedside. The Glandelinian physicians came in, nodded t heir satisfaction at finding their patient asleep, and stole out again.Darkness was falling, when at last Penrod stirred, moaned, and opened his eyes to gaze dazedly atJennie, who smiled at him t remulously.

"You are better Penrod dear."she said gently. "The fever has left you and you will soon be well again."

Penrods expression however changed, for the look of angry loathing, and contempt which Jennie and her sisters had seen before came back into his blue eyes, and his pallid face crimsoned.

"You here you little snake."he exclaimed hoarsely."I gave orders t hat you were to be cast into a dungeon.Am I no longer "Adeldefob" that my orders are not or obeyed.Have you you dirty snake usurped my power and place!"

"Penrod, Penrod, brother dear don't look at me like that."cried Jennie als almost beside herself with grief and terror." Oh list on please listen I'm your sister Jennie, Gerald Starrin g is not here--he has been prevented from takin g your place and is imprisoned.I did not realize what he was going t o do Penrod--did not kn ow he would sneak in n and shoot you.I love you Penrod t ruly;---"

"Your mouth is filled with lies."interrupt ed Penrod bitterly. "Get t hee gone you dirty Glandelin ian boyscout.You have come again t o gloat over me.Where are my sisters.You killed t hem I suppose.Your presence offends me."

"Penrod, please, please"began Jennie in distress, just as Evans ent ered t he room.

"Hail Myst ery man"cried Penrod at t he sight of Evans."Have you too lied to me or has this demon in the guise of a Glandelin ian boyscout bewitched you also.He You tole me he had been made a prisoner as I commanded.Why is he here!" Evans did not answer, but glanced at Violet and her sisters and motioned t hem t ward the door."

"Go Prin cesses."he said."Leave me to try to get him out of t he delirim. Better keep away untill his minds becomes clear or he may kill one of you yet.It 's a vuser effect of delirum but he has it bad."

Her sisters left first, but Jennie rose stiftly, for she was cramped by her long vigil, cast an appealing ,sad despairing glance at Penrod, but read not hing but hate hatred, anger and resentment and deadly fury in his eyes, t hen wit h a sob in h her throat, she hurried from t he room to her own apart ment .

"I am glad any where he didn't really mean it for me Violet dear she said sadly"as Violet caressed her and t ried to dry her tears."But his delirum cut s me."

"He has a sort of temporary dementia"said Violet ."I believe hewould say t he same t o any one of us.I'll try myself and see if he does.He thinks's your Starring.That shows he'll be awfully dangerous t o Starring if he ever gets him."

It was some time before general Evans came to Violet, and her sisters, and he shook his head dolefully in respon se to t heir eager questions.

"Jennie dear I have tried to con vince him t hat you are not Gerald St arring but his sister, but not only do I fail at that but now he had me driven from the room thinking I'm general Manley. This is hardly surprising"he said."It is rather difficult t o convince any body in that sort of dementia that you are his sister when it is rankin g his brain the ot her way.I believe he would accuse any of you his sisters as Starring if you present ed yourselves before him.He is furiously angry even in i his delirum at Gerald Starring, and bei believing you have been murdered thou t hrough him and thrown in t hat scalding pool he vows w vo ww he will take vengeance on him as soon as he can.I have finally succeeded through some means or ot her that you are not dead, and t herefore he seems t o have given orders t hat on no account for your safty are you to be allowed to leave the building.The sit uation is decidedly complicated, but you litt le girls must recognize Starring himself is to blame."

"I know, I kn ow"exclaimed Violet ."Can not hing be done!"

"No, but if you are humane and fear for the awful result s to Starring I might at your wish, smuggle Starring out of t he camp."said Evans t houghtfully."

"Nothing doing"said Jennie very hotly."If he shows up here I'll kill him even .Don't let him go.Let him face Penrod and us.But what have you accomplished"she added more gently.

"I have explored the laybrithns all of which are the worl work of man t he work of these Glandelinians and I know of the ways of which it is possible to reach the ot her side and tward the christian lines or vice versa.Bot h are very difficult to follow and some are now without ground or floor but are bottomless abysses, and it is evident by the large number of skeletons in the maze of passages that many children have been murdered by Glandelinians and then their gutted bodies hidden there."

"How did you get here in t his Glandelin ian army Evans dear!"Inquired Joice curiousity temporarily overcoming her distress.

"More by luck t han u judgement."Evans answered."I lost my bearin gs while scouting on t he enemy in t his location, a dangerous windstorm came up and I took shelt er in what se med to be a big cavern .I found a t unnel leading from the back of the cave.I blundered about for many hours before I eventually found my way out .T he Glandelinian camps are on a great part of t he underground tunnels, they are well construct ed, and not formed by nat ure as some many may believe, and amon g some of t he Glandelinian offic officers papers I found plans of these armies, together wit h a plan of t he construct ed tunnels giving access to the army from t he mountain country.There is another t hin g I found out said Evans contin uing."I couldn't help it .I always since I first heard of it strictly doubted doubted that Penrod was your brother and that there was a mistake."

"A mistake"Gasped Violet in horror"I--I--"

"Hold on don't get excited.Wait untill I finish.I don't want to contract anything against him. To him and you brave little girls is due the credit of the discovery of why Manley won't retreat and also of t his Glandelini n army.But My doubts were so strong Emperor Vivian ad me invest igate the whole t hing.I gather from many dairies, which I found deposit ed among t he records of t he great Royal Tribunal at Marcudian , that your lovin g friend Schfoild Penrod is certainly a brother of yours and that my doubts have been banished completely.It chanced t hat the ones who had stolen him when he was a baby has been captured and they too proved to save their lives t hat His name is not Schfoilf of Schfoild But Francis Penrod Vivian your youngest brot her.General Greatheart confessed that when he first got Penrod he bought him from some Glandelin ians who were selling him into slavery, and to prevent the Glandelinians from discovering a christian had brought him fled t o America and stayed there untill only t hree years ago when he came back.Of course Greatheart did not know then Penrod was a Prince.He told your father he has no regrets whatever for having taken his son to America as he believes you and your sisters will soon be happier when you learn all the tricks he knows.But surely as there is a Good Loving God in Heaven Penrod is wit hout t he slightest trace of doubts reallynyour brot her."

"Penod."exclaimed Violet with a gasp."You mean that after all he is.We loved him immensely but somet imes did have a little doubt ourselves.He really is then our Fathers little son."

"Yes of course"responded Evans calmly."I thought you would sooner or later have guessed that.Do you mean to say you have never aked asked him who his father was?The good loving little Vivian boy everybody now calls him and he is Francis Penrod Vivian, and you are really his darling sisters.Do you thin k I should be anxious so much to even crush Starring if he had been anyone else but Emperor Vivians son!If I can get him smuggled away from here in to the christian lines I'll deal with that little serpent as he deserves."

"Francis Penrod Vivian!Oh.I had hoped after the first news we heard it was true.And he too can speak English so good.Oh how good God is to us."burst out Angaline.

"It sure is good luck for you."int erposed Evans."His Father is your father an Abbieannian, and so is His mot her, and Penrod was born in Sacramont o c ity Abbieannia when your parents were there on a Vacation.He is your good loving little brother all t hrough, and y that snake shot and wounded him."

"T hat Gerald Starring taunted us by calling "Adeldefob" a savage and said we were "supposed to be Christian dogs"giving ourselves over to a Glandelinian boyscout, and I t hink that helped to turn us t hat much more against t hat little fiend."explained Violet wringing her hands in distress."Og Of course he didn't know he is our brother in disguise, but that's an insult just the same calling our brother a savage."Og Oh what a fool I have been not to tear his eyes out when I scratched his face or lashed his face with the whip.What a mess I have made of our lives.Come to get information and got only this.Gerald Starring has broken our hearts, and now---"

"Don't talk sent imental hysterical non sense and be yourselves please." interrupted Evans sadly."Younnever acted t his way before for all the time I've know n you.If you have lost your nerve and four f for Starring gettin g away and doing something dreadful I will have Penrod moved t hrough t he Labyrinth and guide him and you lit tle girls through it, and leave you to make your way to the christian lines, where you can await me untill I complet e my spying work."

"No I and my sisters will stay and take t he consequences--whatever they may be."said Catherine, with sudden decision."We're not afraid of t hat litt le human s r serpent ."

"If you like though I could smuggle him out of the camp and brin g him to the christian lines."said Evans.

"What .Suppose he should escape you which might be probable"said Hett ie.

"And give him t he opportunity of forstalling us in what we have discovered by t lling everything to Manley.Cert ainly not .We shall not allow t he s little reptile to escape us, and shall leave it either to ourselves or t o our brother t o deal with Gerald Starring as we think fit .He shall suffer as he made him suffer. "

It was a litt le later than ned by Violet and her sisters t o see how t he effect would be if another one of themwould go by Penrod.and Violet choose to do so hoping that she would be able to stop his strange delirium. S oShe went in her heart throbbing wildly.to find Penrod alone sitting up in bed and seemin ly lost in glo omi' gloomy thought. He jerked his head around as she ent ered and uttered an exclamination of astonishment and great annoyance.

"What in the world do you want here!"he exclaimed sharply. "How dare you approach me in my condition after you shot me and my sisters.Get out of here.Are my guards all blind and useless?What develt ry is in your evil mind now.Where's my sisters.Threw them in t he boiling water hole I presume.I'll t hrow you in t oo when I am able."

"Penrd Penrod dear, don't, don't t alk like that please don't "faltered Violet falling on her knees by his bedside and t rying to take his hand, which he snatched away as if her touch was loathesome."I am your dear sister Violet Penrod.You are tort uring me and my sisters by not gettin g well and in your delirium which makes you persist in believin g I'm St arring and Jennie too.Starrin g is a bad boy dear, and we did not realize he would shoot you in so cowardly a fashion.Gerald Starring even fooled us, cheated us,.He is not hin g t o us at all now merely the dust under out feet I righteously hate him for having harmed you and us.Penrod dear, please darling Penrod please try and come to your right reason an d believe me I'm not Gerald but your sister.I love you love you dearest brother, and it's hard to live if you cannot get well.Oh darling brother come t o and believe that I'm not Starring that we did not realize that he would sneak in and do that and that we are your darling sisters, and that we are all yours body and soula!"

She scarcely realized what she was saying.The words c me out with a rush t ears blinded her eyes, and again she caught at Penrods hand but he snatched it away and would have struck her had not she dodged the blow.

"Ha ha"he shout ed."Why don't you disguise as my sister Violet and shoot me and then make me believe she did it you snake.So you think you can fool me again and trap me so as to st eal my sisters from me.You imagine you can disguise as Violet and persuade me to believe you while you'll get far away and turn them over to that dirt y dog Manley or balk me in my vengeance by pretending you're Violet .Your voice sounds like Starring and it is.You hv hav discovered perhaps since you were arrested that you will ALL h e sorry for what you did to me and my sisters die at the hands of your own followers, ha, ha and flatter yourself to escape and that I'm glad to have in your wicked cruel hands.G et thee gone serpent.You shall suffer a t housand fold wha for what only my sisters suffered, and I shall mock at your misery."

"Penrod, Penrod, for God's sake believe me."burst out Violet hysterically."I am not fooling you.I swear I am telling the truth.I'm Violet , I love you."

"Begone you little Satan."broke in Penrod harshly."To morrow I may let by gones be by gones an d sent you only away to Manleys army in disgrace if you tell me my sisters are safe and not thrown into that boiling water hole."

Poor Violet rose from her knees and tottered dazedly from t he room.How she got back t o her own apartment she never remembered.She came to herself t o find she was seated with her sisters surrounding and tryin g t o cheer her, sobbing wit h her fa e face in o her hands, at her own be deside.To Jennie seein g Violet s plight and hearing Violet had the same experience s she had, and that Penrod would think any of her sisters was Starring a full realizat ion of what had ha pened dowmed upon her.Jennie if aroused was the fiercest of the Vivian G irl Prin cesses and her face pretty as it was always showed it.There was always a strange glint in her eyes, somet hin g as that of Hannon Vii Vivians.On her t here came a reaction and a strong revulsion of feeling.Fierce righteous anger shook her, again agaer again at the Glandelinian boyscout chieftian, who had shot her brother slightly ali valightly a wounded her sisters and who had been respon sible for her own sufferin g at the hands of Augustinia St claire who had died at the hands of a firing squad just recently.So she hated Satan morevt han ever hated Gerald Starrin g as one of them too.In her distracted state of mind her one desire was to pun place Gerald St arring where Penrod was, punish him for wounded the boy brot her whom she loved, and the wild idea possessed her that she could hurt him most by shootin g him down like a dog, forgetting by that she may accidentally balk her brot her of his righteous vengeance.Scarcely conscious of what she was doing, for she was as fierce as a phantom when aroused to fury, she drew out from its holt er her dangerous pistol, and wit hout t elling her sisters what she was going to do aped from her room along t he dimly lighted corridors t o t he apartment in which she knew Gerald Starring was imprisoned.There were two armed guards at the doorway but they shrank aside if some alarm at t he sight of the mad little girl with t he death dealing weapon.

But no one was in t he room except T im and a litt le girl, and a win dow pane was broken.

"Why Tim"called Jennie breathlessly, st epping int o the room, which was dimly lighted.The little girl who was crouched beside Ti T im sprang up with a startled cry at seeing Jennie's blazing eyes, her contorted faceand the pistol in her han d, and T im who had been standing by t he broken window turned round with a convulsive start.

"Where's Gerald Starrin g!"she gasped.

"I scoundrel got away by sprin ging through t he win dow glass and wal and all."he stammered."I heard the crash and came in."Some guards.We have."

"Then we'll be in a fix.Get in to your clothe Tim and come with me at once.We must persue him before it is too late.I Penrod intended to kill him to morrow but I was so mad that I was going t o kill him now.But he has again cheated us and got away.I'll report the guards responisible for this.I have a plan of the labyrint he among Jack Evanspapers, and if he had secured those he'll escape t hrough the labyrint he confound him.If we persue we'll leave a message for Evans telling him to follow us with supplies.Quick Tim quick, there is no time to lose."

It took Tim a few minutes to grasp t he meaning of t he agitated words, but once he had done so he lost no time."

"My pelot has Mable"he said."Help me to dress.Won't the guards try to st op us."?

"They will not dare--and I and my sisters are well armed."answered Jennie.

"Are you going to try to capture him?"

"No I'll kill him.He is impossible to capture alive once he escapes.But hurry."

"I am ready."

"First "said Jennie I must see what her the papers are gon e."

They were out in the corridor now.The guards did not say a word.

"Come to my room first--the plan of the labyrint h was there--but if it's gone we'll have to chance some other way.I wouldn't go t hrough those labyrinths for any reason.We may never get bout ."

Tim with the ot her little girl following at his heels and looking scared and distressed followed Jennie in er her room.

"Qy Quick two of you my sisters get ready for a persuit"said Jennie."Gerald had escaped.I was going to shoot him t oo but he's gone."

In feverish haste Jennie began to search for the plan of the secret way among the man y papers but could not find it no matter how she searched and her sisters helped it .The papers t umbled to t he floor and she put the pist ol in her holster to and bent to collect them, when a cry of terror from her sisters brought her upright with a start . Violets eyes were the first on the her sisters t co ord in the doorway looking wild and dangerous was Penrod while two guards were trying to get him t o go back to bed.The sight was so totally unexpected that Jennie, Tim and even her sisters st ood temporarily temporarily paralyzed with horror and amazement , and before any on e had quit e recovered, he lunged forward snapped out an order and a dozen boyscout s who evidently had been following noiselessly in his wake sprang into the room, seized Tim, and surrounded Violet and her sisters t hen Penrod staggered up t o Jennie fury in his eyes."

"And you swore by the Heavens you were telling me the truth."Exclaimed Penrod his eyes blazing anger, hatred and contempt at Jennie who was at ill stn standing ridig livid and wide eyed."I t hought you would come in here .Not content wit h stealing my sisters away from me after shooting me but now at ealing their plans and with Fredrick Lowden wit h you"pointing to T im.I caught you.And I took t he precaution of bringing guards in case of treachery. For doing so much harm t o Jennie and my sisters take that ---"

"Penrod began Penrod"Began Jennie cowardly but he struck with the full force of his fist against her jaw, t hen suddenly somet hin g seemed t o snap inside her head, t he room went ba black before her eyes, and she crumpled to the floor in a dead faint , while her poor sisters shrieked. But they n knew Penrod was not to blame.He was still delirious, and he was led away by his attendants crying, bitterly and swearing that he would get even with Gerald Starring to morrow.

When poor Jennie recovered herself or recovered consciousn ess it was to find herself lying in bed her face drenched with pungent perfume and water and with her half weeping sisters around her, while Evans looked on giving gruff orders.

"Drink this you poor little girl. "he said, and Jennie obeyed swallowing the cont ents of the cup he held to her lips.The draught revived her speedily, and her brain cleared, and sh cried out in concern as she remembered what had happened and begged her sisters for his sake not to t ell Penrod he struck her in his delirium when he came t o or he would die from the shock.They promished heartily t hey wouldn'tand wished it had been Starring, for her jaw was slightly swollen.ajoint edly she began to try to explain the situation t o Evans and he listened with ill concealed impatience.

"Yes I have heard "he interrupted"Gerald Starring has sure made a pretty mess of things and if Penrod could stand it it would be better he should know of his un intentional blow for it would put Starring in danger which he deserves.But we'll find out later what to do.Penrod is still delirious and is more convinced than ever t hat any one of you little girls is Starring.Just now when he apparently say you girls in t he room he believed he saw seven Starrings.But why did you go out of your room after Starring.somebody spilled the beans that w you were going to kill him and to save himself he t hrew himself out of the window.Have you taken complete leave of your senses Jennie?"

"But Evans dear"Don't you understand"she said in English."Penrod thinks we're Starring and he would have killed the skunk to morrow anyhow."

"And youse expeect mee to straten ouit ze en ferngel tangleel ze Supouse" Evans said."I wish y to heqven you and your sisters had not come her e."

He strode from the room, and Jennie gave way weakly to twars.She realized bitterly she had foolishly ruined everything by putting her mad plan into practice and must have succeeded in deepening Geralds resent ment and hat red and brought herself and her sisters int o greater danger.Exhausted nature finally exert ed itself at last and she fell into a fitful sleep haunted by t errifying dreams.

But t he dreams were scarcely more terrifying t han t he reality she and her sisters had to face, when she awoke at sunrise, jaded, pale, with a sore jaw and with dread and despair in o her heart.She found a number of soldiers which never were in her room before, posted aroun d her bed, and when she demanded an explanat ion of their presence one of them haltingly informed her they had been commanded by Jack Evans to t ake charge of her"To see that she and her sisters did not come to harm, and remain in the chamber untill Penrod himself was bet ter and out of his delirum.That meant that she and her sisters were almost like prisoners.But they did not care.Nothing seemed to matter.They refused the food t he servant s set before them , and list lessly made their toilet .Her friend Evans finally came into t heir room.

"Things will be desperate Princesses."he announced in tones of great con cern. One good thin g is Penrod is bet ter this morning and out of his delium. He seems determined to kill Gerald Starring, and he doesn't deserve t o live. But you little girls will have to remain in this Glandelin ian camp unt ill Penrod is well and Heaven only knows how long t hat will be.I gently broke to him the news that he struck you accidentally and he is greatly upset and is afraid you won't forgive him."

"Why I'm not even angry about it."Laughed Jennie now a lit tle hysterical at the news."It was really meant for St arring.But can we see him."

Even as she spoke an official appeared in t he room, spoke to t he guards saying Penrod was bet ter, bowed low.

"Adoldefoh"wishes t he presence of the Fairy girls."he announced. "You are to conduct them immediately t o his sickroom."

"Jennie"said Evans in English "I implor youse to eep youse nerve, and do not loose what you call heeds in ze Kenglesh ze heed.I shall be at ze han eef ze worse comes t o ze woist."

"I thin I am prepared for the worst Evans"said Violet st eadily, and with heads erect and attended closely by t heir guards, t hey walked from t he room the armed guards stalking ahead with an official, who led t he way to t he sick room. For a time Violet and her sisters were horror stricken, then as they entered the room, and Jennie was t he first to glance about her wildly, she saw Penrod in a sitting post ure on or in his bed.His face was ghastly pale but his blue eyes gleamed like live fires, and his lips t wist ed int o a smile.. Violet and her sisters wanted to put t heir arms around him but he waved t hem off.

"Sorry dearest sisters u but remember my chest and shoulders"he said. "but don't worry that I am wounded for I can be t rusted t o keep my word"he added in a with a mocking note in his voice."Gerald St arring thought to fool me by shooting me and you little girls, he was willing t o sac rifice you and me killed but some day he'll be captured and it would be ju justified for any one t o see his wicked heart torn from his body."

N ausea and faint ness seized Violet, and her sisters, especially Jennie at the sight of Penrods face, and his bandaged covered chest , and it was only by a supreme effort that she and her sisters shook them off, and retained their self possession.

"Dearest God if it is Thy Will spare him t o us."she gasped, and fell on her knees before Penrod clasping her hands together.

"Poor Jennie"he said stroking her hair with his left good hand."Ad in my cruel delirum I st ruck you last night.And yet I don't hardly remember a t hing what happened except t ill I found myself in my bed this morning. And yet you love me st ill more for even thitting you accidentally bec ause they said I believed you were Gerald Starring."

"I do not regret it because it was meant for him."cried Jennie desperately. "When you have seen t hat cruel litt le beast slain, you and your sisters may feel at ease. "Penrod responded."I was sorry t oo I imprisoned Tim and ordered his release t his morning.I heard I arrest ed him for Fredrick Lowden.He forgives me too for he kn ows I acted out of delirum.I even dreamed in my delirum if it was delirum that I was standing on t he brink of that boiling water hole and saw your parboiled little bodies floatin g in that scalding hot water.He sought t o murder me to capture you"con tinued Penrod doggedly.You litt le girls kn ow it is in my power to do with him as I like and t herefore you must hate him for you have it in your power to plead for his life if he was a prisoner, and yet Evans told me t hat had he not escaped out of the apartment last night you would have placed him in my st ead.But t hat would have been a dangerous move Jennie dear and you would have placed yourself in the same situat ion he would be in for shoot in g me.Wait Wait untill we once get to t he christ ian lines and if we have him our prisoner I'll make him suffer more t han you suffered."

"Jennie dear don't worry much about that Gerald Starring"cried Tim who was in t he room too."Don't blame yourself.T e The fault was min e, for I should have killed him when he attacked Violet in your room.But he'll pay."

"Try to get well please brother dear"said Violet pleading"And I will give my life to you."

"Don't distract yourself"answered Penrod almost frowning."I am all right now and--

"Stop you little culprit "Burst out Evans suddenly and st ornly."Don't yo dare t o shoot.Get from that window or I will shot you and I'm quicker."

Evans had followed Violet, and her sisters and their att endants in silence from t he room, but now as he spoke to t heir con sternation, he had stepped forward his automatic pistol leveled at Gerald Starrings head his eyes gleaming wit h resul resolut ion for the little devil was leveling a rifle at Violet through the open win dow.There was silence for t he space of a dozen heartbeats, then Gerald laughed suddenly and scornfully.

"Shoot then."He howled."I'll get her anyhow."

"N o, no you won't screamed Jennie sprin g to her feet n and hurling him herself at him striking his head wit h the butt of her pistol.There was a report of t he rifle how ever, Jen n ie staggered swayed, and sank to t he ground wit h a sobbing cry wit h blood wealin g from a wound sc ratch in er her whit e little neck.Her sisters screamed and rushed for the window t o open fire f but t he litt le wicked brat was gone.A frenzied cry broke from Penrods lips, and despite his injuries he left t he bed and t hrew himself down on his knees beside Jen nie, and t ried to raise her in his arms.

"My God has what has t he little devil done now!"gasped Evans as Penrod cried-
"Jennie, Jenn ie beloved sister.Jennie darling."he chocked with emotion and bent and kissed Jennie's lips.Sh e had not lost consciousness, and she lifted one litt le hand and touched Penrods face.

"Do not fear for me now Penrod dear"she said pa faintly her voic e almost in audible.If I am dying you will remember I always loved you even t hough when we never kno knew you were my brot her.But I'll be all right."

"Let me att end to her."interposed Evans, recoverin g from his shock of horror and kneeling down to examinetViletJennie."I hank God it isn't serious"he exclaimed in great relief."In fact it is only a scratch.It wou won't even leave a scar."

He had taken from a toc box he carried some bandages, and bandaged the wound.Penrod tried to rise, but the exertion and excitement had been t oo much for him and he collapsed with a moan beside Jennie, who did not lose consciousness, and t ried t o get to her feet but Evans picked her up, and also Penrod, wi and with their weeping sisters followin g, c placed t hem both in t he same bed, and for t he next half hour Evans and some of the Glandelinian physicians were kept busily employed in reviving t hem,, and attending to their wounds.Jennie came to herself in a reek of iodoform t o find her sisters and Evans bendingover her.

"You'll be all right now Jen nie"he said soothinly."You are not badly hurt , and t he wound will so n heal.I'm sorry dear that t his had to happen.His aim was perfect and I believe it was only t he angels t hat saved you otherwise it would have gone through your neck and severed both you ju juglar vein and widepipe.Had I been earlier enough I would have plugged him the moment he appeared at the window i with that rifle.He's gone but thousands are searching for him."

"Is Penrod a l right!"asked Jennie faintly, as her brain cleared.

"Yes he is all right.Try to rest now and don't worry.Everything is going t o be all right ."

Jennie was not conscious of any pain, and felt strangely at peace--which was explained by the fact that Jack Evans had given her a morphia innection.She lay passive, won dering vaguely at her own composure, smiling faintly at her worried sisters, and presently her eyes closed, and she drift ed int o slumber.

The day was far advanc ed.when she awoke again, and gratefully accepted the cool ing drink one of the child slaves proffered and found herself in her own bed in er her own apartment.Jack Evans reappeared a little lat er.

"I have explained fully to Evans who I am, and also who he is for real."he said smiling after testing Jennie's pulse and t emperature, and expressio expressing satisfaction at her condit ion."I rebandaged your sisters slight wounds.Penrod I fancy is elated though a litt le stunned to discover t hat all proofs shows he really is your brother, t hat his Fat her is Emperor Vivian your own.He seems Jennie to almost think he really is unworthy of you because he learned he struck you t hat night, and he is very depressed and filled with remorse."

"Oh but you needed not to have told him."said Jennie."He did it in his deliruim and I didn't want him to know it."

"Well it was for the best as it is Starrings fault "said Evans."I't will make it worse for that wicked little brat."

"May I and my sisters see poor Penrod!"asked Jennie after a thoughtful pause.

"In a few days perhaps."he Evans answered."He is feverish and in some pain, but I believe I have brought him to some good joy.If you wish you may leave this Glandelin ian camp and he willcsay as Adeldefob untill he gets better. I can give you every assistance to get back to t he christian lines if you have no objection."

"I and my sisters are not going back without Penrod."said Violet quietly.

"Not going back!"Evans repeated, and stood gazing at her in t houghtful silence for a few moments."You are braver than even what I thought .But I've qa good myst ery t o tell you.But first is that what you wish to tell Penrod!In spite of what has happened you no won 't leave here. But I have some news. The chief general in command of this army is general Phaline T maerlin e.J He is t he fellow whom you only kn own ad as "Boobhead."He knows you're here within his army, he knows too who Penrod is for Starring has been able to prove it to him.But t hat man remembers the day you and your sisters saved him from death by t hat dangerous Calverinian geyser and in st ead of wishing t o expose you to the other generals, he told me he'll do all in his power to run down t hat Gerald Starrin g for you.If he can't catch him he will at least run him out of this camp.He's coming to see you some time and believe me though he is a Glandelin ian general he is more Humane than you thought and is now your friend.As for Penrod for what you little girls have done for him he won't regret he is your brot her.I believe your decision is a wise on one for this Glandelin ian army is a humane one and your safe whether they know who you are and you may go any time you wish and they will only help you.After all since he is wounded your place is by Penrods side, and it is something indeed to be as brave a bunch of little girls as you are, and despite what you suffered at his hands you have outwitt ed that Gerald Starring grandly.This is a great big Glandelinian army it is true, and a wicked one, though for general Boobheads sake it will befriend you, and Starring has not a single friend among them, and they'll turn t he camp inside out to capture him or run him out of camp.He finds he can't do here as he can at Manleys army.Tinot hy Grovet on was completely bowled over by the way, when he learned t hat it was you litt le girls who brought t he freedom of so many child slaves, t hat Penrod really is your Fathers son. This general Boobhead told me t hat for your sakes he won't make no junct ion wit h Manley.He doesn't care for Manley and will st art a retreat in about a week.He won't even fight against your fathers armies never.That's the greatest discovery of all and shows what happens when Gerald Starring could not leave you little girls alon e.Boobhead gave orders to shoot him t o kill if he does not get out of the camp."

It was a great news for Violet and her sisters and it made them more at ease. Through t he long night watches, Jennie here lf lay thinking, thinking, t hinkin g, doubting fearin g, hoping, praying that Penrod would get well for next t o God and her Father and sisters Penrod was the very orbit of h r her being.

Poor Penrod was too ill from his wounds to be seen.The days passed, and Violet and her sisters also suffering from their wounds w re desperately lonely and forlorn .They themselves because of their wounds, and the hard t rials they had gone through were practically "Bed prisoners".in the great building, although although they were treated with the greatest respect, and time hung heavy on their hands.Jennie was wounded a little worse than her sisters, for a neck o wound is pretty painful.Those who could be up later out of bed tried to have poor Jennie occupy her mind by revising Evans notes into En glish for his great work on why Manley did not ret rent, but her heart was not in the task. Her thoughts(as well as her sisters) were incessantly of Penrod, whom they had not been able to get out of bed to see.Daily they had h news of him from general Jack Evans their Guardian.He was making a remarkable recovery but they were in n o condition then to leave their beds to see him, and he was in no condition to see them.Little wonder that black despair settled do n upon t hem. Violet and her sisters too could not understand what had happened to t hem or account for their feelings.All they knew was that they craved for the presence of Penrod, longed with all their hearts to be with him again, and that he was well, for t hey loved him dearly.At times they despised t hemselves for their own weakness.It seemed unbelievable to even themselves, that they, t he greatest little Princesses Abbicannia ever had, who had prided t hemselves on being the best girl spies in the world, should be almost outwitted by G r Gerald Starring and woun i wounding badly almost to death t heir brother whom they would eat their hearts out.The train had told upon Jennie most for her sisters too had been wounded with Penrod.Her lovely little face was without colour, and d dark shadows round her eyes told of sleepless nights.At times t he strain and suspense became almost unbearab,e unbearable, and more than once Jennie was tempted to go into Pe ro Penrods room without being advised to, but her natural Instincts revolted against doing what was not right. Day after day had dragged past with maddening s slowness, and Jennie felt as if she would lose her reason as she o had done three times already, if she was kept longer in doubt as to the situation.A sudden impulse to see Penrod possessed her this sixth night after the shooting, and she did not attempt to resist it and told or sent word t o Penrod that he must let her see Penrod as she could not stand it any longer.Without waiting for him to come she sprang out of bed but he cam in and gently detained her.

"I think you are well enough to get up Jenn ie dear, and Penrod is sufficiently recovered to see you, but you must wait untill morning"he said."Get yourself som e sleep and let him sleep too."Then to morrow I'll lead you and your sisters in ."

The next morning Evans came in yo to dress their wounds.

Then he said"I will take you to him as soon as you have dressed.But Jenn ie do what you can to cheer him.I'm sorry now I told him he struck you in his deliruim.He kn ows he meant it not but he can't get over t he r mouse."

Jennie in the lead of her sisters was trembling violently and t he colour was coming and going in her face(no disgrace though) as leaning on her sister Violets arm, she and her sisters were led into Pe Penrod room by Evans a little later.Penrod was sitting up in bed and absolutely lost in very gloomy thought. However he turned his su head suddenly at their entrance, and he caught his breath sharply, and t he hot colour stained his white face at t he sight of poor Jennie.

"After I had struckyou so cruelly you do me too much honour."he said shakily"I not worthy to be t hy broth er and---"

Jennie forgot her weakness, forgot everything except God and the little brother she loved, and followed by her sisters she hurried across the room with hands outstretched saying;

"You was delirous when you did it thinking I t. was Starring.Oh I wiw h it had been."

"My beloved sister Jenn ie"cried Penrod gaspingly, a great joy illuminating his eyes."My dearest Jennie you mean--you mean t hat you have found it in your heart to forgive even what I didn't mean to do.I love you enand your dearest sis sisters---"

He got no further.With a glad cry Jennie was the first to fling her arms around him kissed him again and again passionately,'t hen her sisters followed and Violet last buried her face in his shoulder and wept in sheer joy.

"Thank God you are bet ter."she murmured as Penrod encircled her with his sound arm and straig strained her to his breast."Oh my darling brother I feared-- "

Jack Evans saw and heard no more.He tip toed from the room.

"Truly t hey have suffered and done a great deal of good for the cause."he said to himself as he dropped the curtain of the doorway.

Intending to remain also within general "Boobheads"army Quarters were assigned to Ti o Timothy Groveton in the headquarters of Penrod and violet and her sisters.For the first time in his career or life too he was to live as to say with violet and her sisters, wit h whom he had never expected to associate untill half a year ago.Since this pleasure had n ever been denied the boy because Violet and her sisters loved him very well, he welcomed t he lucky incident all the more joyiously, esi especially as the recentchristian victory at Big Girlknool promished a few weeks if not a month or t wo of rest from terrific fighting.His expectations however to be with t hem without further rotten adventures was s sadly disappointed.Penrod in his bed recieved Tim most court eously courteously but with the sad politeness that is rather a sign that some danger still lurked in the air as Gerald Starring his chief enemy was not captured.Then Tim was ushered into his selected room, where he was attentively and hospitably servedbut he allowed himself no sort of contact with the Glandelinians of the house.Besdi s too his secret military duties claimed his t ime so entirely t hat he percieved that even amore generous hospitality would have availed him nothing.

Jennie was the only real Vivian Girl Orincess not wounded enough to remain in bed, and her sisters from their experiences and hardships had taken ill and were still confined to bed.Therefore he resigned all hopes of pleas pleasant times with them or Penrod, and evenings spent in cheerful conversations, and conten ted himse f with sayin g a few words as he passed inner out of the-house, and watching the wounded Vivian Girls and Penrod, and keeping an eye out for Gerald Starring whom he meant to kill the moment he dared to show himself.In spite of t he frightful record breaking war, visitors from afar came to see their soldier friends and relatives in the Glandelinian army andhourly.Violet and her sisters Tim saw occassional occassionaly but only in their beds, came to see how they were, and gave t hem a loving friendly g e greeting, n and in his heart prayed desperately and devoutedly for them.Tim had always noticed that Violet or her sisters were much more good and dmoestic than he found mostly in Abbieannian children even though all Abbieann ians were astonishingly good.They had often been seen when within the christian lines passing to and fro in the kitchen of their headquarters or of the mess halls and even performed some household dut ies with their own hands, uncommon indeed for little girls who were supposed to be Princesses.But if you can find a lazy person in Abbieannia you can also find your way to the moon by walking it from the earth, in two minutes. Jennie was now the only one up and around despite her wound , and she had always been graceful and easy and to Tim her unassuming manners were astounding.However by Glandelinian generals Tims pretended civilities were recieved wit h co cordially cordialit y but even t his led to m n o more intimate social intercourse.When he paid his call to general Phelan Tamerlane(Boobhead) the general kn owing he was a christ ian boyscout and not wishing t o show enemity because of violet and her sisters who had saved him from the geyser recieved him l alone.After a short conversation confined strictly to conventional limits, and a warning not to do any spying work against his Glandelinian army for his own sake and to attend more to t he littl girls and bring t hem out of their misery Tim t ook his leave without obtaining an invitation to come to the generals drawing room again.If he happened t o b in to be in the house at the dinner hour, the general always invited him to dine with him, but he alone bore the boyscout compan y. He made a guest out of a boyscout enemy because he liked him for being a friend of t he litt le girls who had saved his life .

Tims knowledge of the English language though not very well, and only l arned from his contact with the Vivian Girls and his occassional dangerous methods against all the glandelinians had long before won the speedy good will of Violet and her sisters and an absolutely brotherly love from Penrod, and after his doing so much for violet and her sisters, they took him too into their hearts of hearts.When Tim first got acquainted with the vivian Girls he couldn't hardly believe they were Princesses for any one of them any day had been seen bustling about in their headquarters if not out scouting, up and down stairs all day, witwith a bunch of keys jingling at her belt , ordering, arranging and assisting generals who should work for her and her sisters, and would undoubtedly have been capable of supplying a whole battalion with anything useful.Violet and her sisters were always held in the highest esteem by vevery one and many wondered why instead of acting their princely ways they acted at times more like a servant. But despite their high office they were never lazy, and were willing to help anybody.Jennie herself a dainty little child slave also rescued by "Adeldefob especially had clung to violet, and her sisters.And now Jennie ,ivian clung to the besides of her sisters taking care of their wants and cheering t hem.Tim noticed that she sought her sisters beds whenever she could, and often heard the seven jesting, and whispering familiarly together. Often Tim had seen poor Jennie pat violets feverish cheek with her hand, gaze sadly at her, and kiss her on the forehead or cheek.Jennie no doubt was acting as her sisters nurse, but she as often went in to see how her brother Penrod was getting along, and the cruel war which summoned every one, had probably drawn other chosen ones of their hearts into the dreadful thunder of battle.

The first morning when Jennie and her sisters had been permitted to see their brother by Evans's permission Tim had remained in the house more t han usual ,and had noticed that something unusual had happened.He heard t oo t hat t he Glandelinian army general who was to be in main charge of his army had shown up and that other Glandelinian generals had arived with him.But poor Tim could not explain at all to his satisfaction why at the news of these generals ariving Violet and her sisters should be particularly agitated, and that Jenn ie seemed to find more household duties or occupy her attention than usual in order as Tim facied he distr destict destin cti ely perceived to avoid being noticed by the generals or to spend any time with them.The latter had gone to general Phelan Tamerlines room.If however Jennie chanced to see Tim near t hem, Jennie tried to beckoon Tim away, though she did not betray any emotion of any kind, and at such times he could not help secretly laughing at his vivid imagin ation, which proved so treacherous.But that very morning after the Pen Princesses visit to Penrod Tim was to be initiated into t he tissue of a veritible adventure which in some measure was not going to be t o his liking, but which he seen through nevertheless to the very end.As it d grew lighter, he dressed to join the breakfast party that always assembled at the generals, but on his way downstairs met Angeline Vivian herself, who to his surprise, asked where Tim was going.As she was in full ativatt ire as a Glandelinian girlscout Tim not recognizing her as Angeline and believing she was one of the Glandelinians would not answer her buthpushed her aside,and merely telling her t hat he wished to spend the evening or morning alone,and wished to find t he girls taken care of h by "Adeldefon."

"I'm one of them"laughed Angeline demurely."Don't you recognize me.You can have a seat at our table.There is to be a good breakfast to day.Won't you come in?"

It seemed as if the little Princess was acting on her own respon sibility,not at the request of her sisters, but what cared Tim for that.He instantly resolved t o accept the invitation and was about expressing his thanks, when he suddenly heard steps behind him."

"Don't hesitate Captian Groverton you'll be welcome."He heard little Jenni e say from above. He turned, saw t he familiar hon est little face, and followed Angeline Vivian wit hout further ceremony.She opened the door of t he drawing room and ushered him in .The Company consisted of about thirty persons, sitt ing in groups, conversing eagerly together.They were apparently grave and very much excited, but the cause nevertheless was east easy to Tim.It was some rumors as to the results of the bloody battle of Big Girl Knool.The generals were claiming that Manley had been compelled to fight against a greatly superior force and that was t he reason the christian armies had forced him acrosss the Chamerline Road.Of course nothing seemed true except that even now some little fighting was still going on there.The lively Glandelinian imagination added to all the r st rest. Maclicus glances and morning smiles greeted Tim as he un expectedly entered--but the boy evidently appeared to remain as calm as if nothing concerning t he battle of Big G irl Knool had hppe happened.General Phelan Tamerline was kind enough to rise and advance some paces tward Tim Angeline vivian explained the cause of his coming to her her sisters and t hey uttered a few words expressive of their pleasure in his visit. though he could see that it greatly amazed them and perhaps was not even agreeable as they feared he was placing himself into some grave danger.Singular impressions took possession of Tim at that moment .The unudual incident of again findin g himself after a ,ong time in an elegant drawing room had some little effect, and his broken English gave him some trouble.General "Boobhead turned tward his officers saluted and walked away while Jennie whispered t o Tim in English;

"Come.Angeline you especially take care of her guest.Jennie is busy spending time with us and poor Penrod and therefore Angeline it will doubt lessbe agreeable to our boy friend to speak of the situation to you in English."

Angelines sist ers instantly moved away and returned to the table, so that Tim stood alone b s besides Angeline.He now gained courage t o look at her more closely and saw that she was very prett y too and a little resembled Jennie.The fact that she and her sisters spoke EEnglish both surprised and delighted the boy, but as he was away out of hearin g of t he officers he wished her that she and him would be talking in t heir own nat ive tongue. she seemed somewhat trouble d and fearso s of something.They both sat down and before Tim could commence a conversation, she began to talk hurriedly, about what she and her sisters had discovered.Her childish prattle was more t han charming yet t here appeared to Tim to be a great deal of apathy in her words.

The strict education she had undertook upon her self despite her young age, the training of her magnificent parents--was clearly apparent in her language though she was only nine-so instead of listening to what she obediently related he gazed at her.She attracted him more and more, it almost seemed as if she must really be an angel child come down from heaven to visit the earth.True she possessed all the pecularities of the Abbiennian Natios.

Though at the utmost only n ine years old, in external appearance she was some sort of a little angel angel, and the fact that she was possessed by them showed itself upon her.He could see it in her eyes, could see it in er her manner of speech and t here was astrangeness in the atmosphere about her. Her manner too was certainly strange.Her thoughts did not appear to be fixed on what she was saying, and Tim was naturally interested in discovering the cause.Therefore being suspicious of something she dreaded, his attention became more and more earnest.He soon noticed that the little girl was trembling her heart throbbed rapidly under the gray silken waist her fin gers played restlessly with the gilt tassel of her hat.After a time Tim fancied he had discovered the source of her agitation.Her eyes often wandered tward t he table around which several Kingly uniformed Glandelinian generals were sitting.Indeed violet and her sisters if discovered as to their identy might well f ear them, for they looked, fierce, and as gloomy and as sullen as some certain portraits on t he walls.One of the guests, the general who had arrived that very morning especially attracted Tims attention.His figure too seemed unusually muscular for a Glandelinian general his hair and beard were of the deepest red, and he had two peculiar wicked looking eyes.He wore spectacles and looked very professional.This general appeared to be the spokeman of the whole circle.Unfortunately he spoke so low Tim nor Violet,and her sisters could not understand him, which they greatly desired to do--because while t alking he stared flox fixedly at Violet, and her sisters, and more particularly at him and Angeline his dark eyes falshing with an angry, supcious passionate light.This persons whole appearance was most unpleasant to Tim though he did have a remarkablely handsome face. Somebody whispered to him"Be on your guard.That is general John Manley."

Who When out of the corner of her eyes Angeline looked at him,I fancied she trembled with anger.No doubt Starring had escaped and brought him here. Something had undoubtedly occured.The general wore a purple coat however in st ead of gray but had Glandelinian ensigns on it, and Tim did not hesitate for one instant which side to take when he learned who he was.Too there was such unmistakably m melancholy in the little girls manner that one could not help knowing p positively that she was unhappy, deserted, unprotected, for Penrod was ill wit h his wounds, her sisters were handicapped too by their own, she too was in no fighting cod condition, and true too Tim himself could do nothing--- and wo whose sympathty wou d not be aroused.General Manley talked eagerly, and when he paused he seemed to have reached a final conclusion that satisfied all lparties.One of the generals who sat in such a position that Tim could see his face distinctly and recognized him as general Phellinio T emerline did not even try to conceal this, t hough he uttered a sigh of relief as if his mind was now free from some strange uncertainty, a and gazed inquiringly around.In so doing his eyes rested upon a young villainous looking general seated atva side table with several other generals, andvho almost instantly called;

"Your Excellency general Richard Tamerline . . . ."

Angeline started, and her sisters a little distance away looked suddenly in the direction of the one called . Tim was looking at Anb Angeline this very moment ---her eyes were fixed upon the floor, and she was more congu confused and restless than ever.The young general had arisen from his seat, and quiely quietly ap roached the general who had called, who held out his hand like an old friend, then both generals went into an anteroom.As Richard Tamerline walked beside his father Tim could appreciate the grace and elegance of the figure of the who was going to be one of the most dangerous and cruelest of Glandelinian generals, Richard Tamerline.His father, the very pattern of a military aristocrat would other wi otherwise have cast him more into the shade.Strangely enough Angeline had risen at the moment , her hand on the holster of her pistol.Of course it was done involuntarily but being unable to remain seated without her, Tim arose also, and it did not escape h his notice that she tottered.After a few seconds she sat down again, and like a little despairing wretch, who seeks to stupify thought, again talked r pidly and hurriedly.But now she no longer spoke of her plans and what she and her sisters had discovered or how Penrod was getting along but suddenl y turned the conversation upon t he war.Tim too fancied he understood what was passing through her mind,,, and he described various battles he had seen and tried to show her that the danger to soldiers is far less than is supposed by those who have no experience of war, if they're not careless and reckless. She listened to this more quietly than she had previously done, , leaned back in her chair and folded her litt le arms across her breast, her ,lashes drooped low over her eyes and her delicate lips often quivered, but she did not interrupt him.The general and his son returned to the room, but this time Angeline did not look up and remained depressed and silent so that Tim had time to glance tward t he first two, and then the a main general Manley again.T im started as he looked for the three of them, Manley, Richard T emerline and his father and others were gazing quizzdly at t he lovely little girls seated at the table as if they were some prey that could not escape them, then directed their gaze with a more suspicious glare at Tim and Angeline.

Directly after the guests changed their positions, and after polite profound headboys left their seats, walked chatted, and laughed---the important matter seemed to be settled.Angeline's sisters remained in their chairs by t he table continuing their breakfast, but Tim too was drawn into the general conversat ion and accidentally lost sight of his companion, though he would gladly have remained by her and her sisters, but he wished to learn whether they were rec recognized or not.To pass away the time for a while, some one began to play-- this was a pleasure that had not yet fallen to Tims lot on or within a Glandelinian army, and which if they were christian sog songs he would have greatly enn enjoyed.In harmoney with the mood of the times, ev either very solemn or very Glandelinian war songs were executed, and marches were tuned in.Tim listened with apparent int erest, and for a few moments lost entirely all consciousness of his position in the enjoyment of the melodies of which he had so long been deprived, but in a short time one of the officers roused him from his reverie.The singular idea had occured to him of asking himbo to sing a Glandelinian song.Tim knew no Glandelinian warsong and frankly admitted it , but he was then asked to pl y play any tune he knew.He reluctantly yoilded, for he did not know whether the company desired to make sport of him or really to listen to t he music, and only consented cordially when violet,and her sisters added t heir ent reaties to the courteous words of the Glandelinian general violet saying in En glish in a whispar,

"You'll brin g suspicion on us if you don't comply.That is Manley who asked you to play."

Tims fingers glided over the keys.The Company vanished from his sight and his thoughts wandered swiftly back to his beloved home.As he ply pl yed Home Sweet Home"a song violet and her sisters never had heard in imagination he was once more in the circle of his family, surrounded by faces of his parents and brothers and sister! sisters who once smiled upon him, but were no more. Words of the song gushed almost involuntarily from his full heart.When he paused at the ending of it, he felt moved more than he had expected, and the than s which with every one(except Manley) loaded him affected the boy almost unpleasantly .his eyes sought those of violet, and her sisters, Jennie who was nearest spoke English to him, and then he soon discovered t he little graceful figures of Joice Angeline and Catherine in the recess of a big window, wh with their little faces pressed against the panes and it seemed as if t hey had tears in their eyes.They were gazing steadily in t he dark morning smoky atmosphere. Were they perhaps listening for the distant thunder of cannon, and t he rattle of musketry.Moments like these always conti contain much t hat is painful.As their frigh friend he had plenty of right to mingle in the secrets of these dear little girls, and yet he knew they were evidently un eppy evidently unhappy.He then with a sore heart remembered the selfish co ard who had once unceremoniously deserted these brave little girls, and he decided t o make resit u resititution for it by watching every danger threatening t hem.They

They had not ta s taken the trouble to conceal from him ho o how greatly they were agitated.But it was dreadfully difficult to find a clew t o loosen t he knot--what should he say to them when every eye was watching him and t hem! Careless and meaning words would cause more suspicion, and he knew nothing of their inner life, or why Manley and his generals were there, for he recognized, Manleys Father, and some others also.Tim was filled with grateful admiration, when perhaps guessing Tims dilemma Violet came forward and held out her hand.

"What a devine gift that song was."she said gently"Cultivate and honer this en dowment of nature and of God.Tones can con vey more comfort to the hearts than words.In them dwell the harmony of the soul and spirit--in words only reason." Tim could not help smiling,.

"You think only little girls like us have such opinions"she answered quickly"but believe me we littie girls can not only ent er into this sort of feeling but find it the means of looking in to other souls, and reading ot hers minds."

"What am I to understand by that Prin cess?"

"I'll explain"said Jennie herself coming forward."Since I and my sisters have heard you sing that y sou song "Home Sweet Home" we know you better than if we have lived together in this house for a life time."

She said this wit h a touch of irritability, and he could see that his smile at Violets frankly expressed opinion had slightly vexed Jennie.Of course T im did regret it.

"And no2w "continued Violet herself"I too will tell you that your slight mockery of my youthful ent husiasm was not sincere it did not come from your heart, only you thought it would be more manly and dignified to smile at me t han to agree with me.That is not well, be frank as I am and say that I was right."

"I can' tquite do that because I wouldn't be t ruthful."Tim answered quickly"But if it will please you we will have no further discussion about which of us is most n early so and instead conclude a peace.I know now you will still more than before trust my friendship in the future."

The two children had retired into the recessed window and Tim gazed earnestly into her beautiful and childish eyes.

"Yes "said Violet.

"And may I perhaps make amends for the annoyance by proving this friendship in further deeds in your behalf."?

"She cast down her eyes forva time because she didn't want Tim t o read in them what she had a fear of.

"If I need such assistance I would find good courage y to ask you for it for you have been a great he lp to us and Penrod."she said slowly looking at him again.

"That is enough---here is my hand.

She held out hers without hesitation.At this moment they were interrupted. Generals "Boobhead"and another general appeared or rather approached, and behind t hem Tim recognized t he face of general Manl y Manley gazing at t he t wo sullenly and angrily, but with an expression of scorn scornful security.

"Exult.I shall know how to settle with you, mighty Glandolinian chieftian t hough you are."A voice seemed to mutter within Tims heart, and host ility was declared between them at this moment .

"Why if Adeldefob knew this he would be jealous."Cried general Phelan forcing a smile, though it was evident he was annoyed.

"Oh we two were not quarreling but found ourselves in a sort of childish harmony from the beginning."replied Violet in a tone of which there was a ring of bold defiance, t hat Tim understood when he saw her enemy's eyes flashing with anger as he scowled on her and Tim.Without t roubling himself about t he two children any further, the angry bearded general turned and walked away through the guest general Phelan following.Violet's features dist inctly betrayed her satisfaction at this success.After a very short conversation on indifferent subjects, Tim was left alone, Violet being led away by Jennie who came for her.

For good reasons however it was Tims wish to be un disturbed for he wanted to consider what her his suspicions about the destiny of Violet and her sist ers were merely visions of imaginations or had a tangible foundat ion. He t herefore wandered through t he long suits of apartments in t he headquarters went to see Penrod but found him asleep and not wishing to disturb him took a seat in one of the most secluded rooms, and t hen without knowing exactly what he was doing looked at al album on the table.A screene twined with all sorts of flowery design a concealed his chair, any one approaching from the drawing drawing room would not have noticed him.Tim soon heard steps advancing and what instantly attracted his attent ion Jennie's voice, and then some of her sisters responding.Jennie was talking in a low tone, but very quickly and passionately.Tim looked up and saw with t hem a Glandolinian boyscout whom he h d had never seen before.He could not hear what they were saying, but t he subject must have been an im important onefor t he little girls voice trembled.

and he was en deavoring to comfort her.Why would a Glandolinian boyscout do that.But surely he did not talk like one.It was Radcliffe but he did not know it . Tim was of course chained chained to the spot .Motionless without thinking how dis honora dishonorable it might be to listen he stood straining every sense to at least understand a portion of what they were saying.Tim now caught a few sentences--t hey related to a sad farewell as Tim believed--a life long farewell. Tims attent ion became st ill more fixed but just as he was on the point of penet rating still more deeper into t he secret to try and find out what was eating their hearts out , t he con versation suddenly ceased and a deep silence followed.

Some intruder must have appeared .

"Well litt le girlscouts of Adeldefobs troop how did you like t he boys strange "Home Sweet Home"song."?

A harsh voice uttered the words with so scornful an accent that Tim could scarcely control himself and he went on still harshly;"

"I suspect the Vii Vivian Girls are here in disguise and maybe they're you. I have no influence here my little christian doggies but if I have the chance to betray you I will.Of course from evidence collected from Gerald Starring, you have not spied here, but you have double crossed Adeldefob by pretendin g up to him, and also you have acted like the gutternips I thought tw you were by on e of you tearing his face with your finger nails and then slashing him over the face with a whip.I too know Adeldefob and I'll reveal t o him who you are and can prove it.Then see if he'll be as friendly as you think he'll continue."

Tims fury increased as he instantly recognised t he speaker.General John Manley was standing between the Vivian Girls and he could recognize any one despite their disguise."I found out"he cont inued "because Starring wired me by telegraph.I hv Hv Have recieved all t he details.You learned information whyI wouldn't retreat.But that information is all wrong.I'm not jeopardized and I won't retreat .But if I can help it I'll not let you get away from this army and to prove it I'll not refrain to tell you my plan.I'll strike at Beppo E Lansin two weeks from now."

T hat was all he said for his watchful glance had doubtless discovered Tim who sat in his chair and made pretense of being asleep.The boy hated this Glandolinian general for he knew all about him, though this was the first time he had ever seen this general . The general however acted as if nothing had occured, and evidently gloated over t he apparent terror of the little girls.He began an inf indifferent con versation--and t he seven little girls doubtless with bleeding hearts--were at last obliged to seperate one by one while Radcliffe was almost instantly summoned to the large dining room, and the sullen general remained alone wit h Angeline.Perhaps t his was done by design and the Glandolinian general did not notice that Tim was an unwelcome witness here.It seemed as if Tim must protect the beautiful little creature against a tiger.He heard the general say;

"As you Princess Angeline, and your sisters are not within my army I have nothing to say.I cannot do things here against you because the fool Boobhead as he is called is your friend for once saving his life.If I had the say I'd bring himbt o his senses.That is all I have to say for the presence.I'll see you little reckless sprit es again."

Suddenly forming his resolution Tim arose t he approached the pair un oed ing t he scornful threatening expression wit h which t he great Glandolinian general surveyed him.His manner however was perfectly calm, and ignoring Tim after a s sort of polite bow he began doubt lessly intent ionally to speak of "Adeldefob, declaring that he too suspected he was t he brother of t he Vivian Girls in disguise and meantime st staring contemptiously at tim with his right eye, keeping his left sort of squintingly closed.Angeline turned away as he uttered the words so Tim could not read in her face whether he was decieved or not.But her behavio behavior seemed still more singular when without speaking a single word, she hurried out of the room.She did not even give Tim a single glance.Tim could not understand this untill it occured to him later that she had been weeping.

"So general Manley recognised her ,and her sisters" Tim had not expected this but there was no reason to doubt this for tim had heard every word for the general certainly seemed not a bit afraid of speaking as loud as he could.Yet though showing such open hostility yet the general despit e t he names he called them apparently at t he same time t reated t hem with profound respect. For an instant Tim felt as if he had dropped th from the clouds, but when he reflect ed upon the mat ter t he blood suddenly rushed to his heart.If General Manley was also suspicious t hat "Adeldefob"was their brother in disguise, than evidently they could have also dr n dreaded some malicious act on the part of this high commissioned guest.Tim had a right to oppose this enemy for the little girls evidently hated and despised him, but Tim had been warned by some instinct t hat it was utterly impossible. He was a dangerous man despite the face he had that appeared more as that of a "Sissy."

"Well then"Tim said to himself resolutely."I will outwit him somehow."

When t he visitors were preparing to leave the house, Tim fancied that he saw that Jennie Vivian wanted to speak to hem.Therefore he approached her, and her sweet trembling voice thrilled through his very soul.

"If you my dear friend are kindly disposed tward me, protect us and our brother when the proper time comes."she pleaded."Secretly shadow us and our enemy if possible."Then before he could assure her he would do anything in his powers, she had vanished as if she was a spirit.What did it mean."Protect and shadow us and shadow us and our enemy."Jennie could have referred to no other than Manley as the enemy she might dr a dread.But a little girl pleads with such an anxious soul only for hher brother and sisters.Thus again he was plunged int o st range suspicion, and this mystery tortured him more and more.There was a general l ave taking. The company broke up, Tim himself called by a special duty couldvremain no longer.General John Manley alone appeared to linger, and the other Glande linian generals t reated this wicked person with marked consideration as an old and valued friend except general "Boobhead."He was no where in sight.He did not like Manley and had nothing to do with him. Yet the other generals being friends of Manley troubled Tim Wh n When Tim reached his room without undressing he threw himself on his bed.Then confused thoughts darted t hrough his brain they carried him to the hours backwards he had just spent, the stars in the dark sky grew blurred before his eyes, and amid their silvery light, appeared t he radiant figures of Violet, and her sisters and also Penrod, and he seemed again to hear the beseeching voice of Jennie.A feeling of intense melancholy st ole over him and he st rained his nerves to catch t he sound more dist inctly.

Was the sound he heard a delusion.An icy chill ran through his veins.He w a sat erectly and listened intently . No there could be no deception, it was an absolute realit reality. He exactly distinguished the smothered sobs of t he little girls even amid hurried steps, and the cautious opening and shutting of doors.The next instant his resolution was formed.He suspected that t he moment moment when Jennie was to probably be parted from her sisters or Penrod had arived.Tim hastily sprang up, seized his sabre and cap, and seen t o it his revolver was loaded and rushed out.But he started back when in thecorridor.He met meit her Violet and her sisters noy any one else but general Phelan Tamerline, coming tward him with a candle light in his hand.Tim n ot iced that the general looked very pale, but not a muscle in his face moved.He stood before Tim, quiet and as cold as a statue.

If it had been a real enemy, if general "Boobhead"had angrily forbidden the boys interference, Tim should have known what to do.But the calm quiet court esy embrassed the lad, and only after a lon g pause did he succeed in stammering a confused apology, saying he heard the Vivian Girls as if in great dist ress.With perfect calmness he reminded Tim to be very careful, not to let Manley suspect who he is, and th that to wait the proper time and t hat he general Boobhead w ill ren nender him all the assistance possible to save them from Manleys clutches.Therefore Tim was obliged to return to his room, whether the general lighted him.His first thought as he entered was that he again heard the sound which had so stirred his heart, but he strained his little ears in vain, t he sobbing and weeping seemed to have wholly ceased.

As Tim knew of no excuse to remain, he hurried downstairs bowed courteously to the general who though a Glandelinian was befriending violet and her sisters, and who with candle in his hand s whocat first sice silently watched his movements without any visible em.t emotion.He returned the salute with cold formality and retired to his room, which was at the end of the hall.T im passed one of the doors, close by the main entrance, whoch stood half open as if some one had just entered, and forgotten to shut it .The room was very dark, and unless he wished to appear impertinent, he was obliged t o pass though he gladly would have looked in.The iron bound outside door was already creaking in his hand, when suddenly it appeared as if a figure appeared in the half opened doorway.Tim started and instantly drew his revolver, but could see nothing distinctly, and tree trembling with an incomprehensible chill--nay urged on by a dr a dread of involving himself still deeply into a ghostly mystery which almost seemed like a delirious dream, entered the garden. The door closed behind him as quickly and heavily as if it had been violently pushed from within. But at the same moment he distinctly heard words muttered in a low angry tone;

Out with you you little scamp into the darkness of night--you are grouping in darkness here too."

Tim heard it so distinctly too that he turned on d was already preparing to call for an assemblance of boyscouts to break in the door by force and arrest those within hand if necessary procure admittance admittance by force.But the next moment he reflected he could not h lp violet and her sisters nor Penrod by an open conflict and should merely prejudice his own designs.

He therefore continued on his way through the large garden.His hot blood and fiery thoughts were gradula gradually cooled by the sense of knowin g t hat if Violet and her sisters really are angel possessed n o harm can befall t hem even if he was not able to help them, and he grew calmer.In order to com pletely regain is composure he determin ed to take a walk, and examine the whole house and garden hoping too to see a chance to capture or shoot Gerald Starring.Everything out of doors was dreary and desolate and though it was December and should be cold at this time of year it was very hot and the atmos atmosphere smoky and a hot wind was blowing st adily from the east.Here and there soldiers passed back and fort h and patrols also t hrough the company street . The headquarters building Tim had just left stood gloomy and silent.Not right away he could not possibly return may he preferred to go farther ran than reenter that house.Just at that moment one of the orderlies trotted by.Tim called to him, and learned that the general on whose staff he served as "Glandelinian boyscout" wanted to find a boyscout officer for a long and rapid night ride.Thisexcuited Tim exactly, by this he hoped to gain some mili tary information, his horses were close by so he hurried to the stable, roused one of t he attendants, and ordered him t o saddle them.The boyscouts had long been used to these hasty departures and therefore everything was quickly ready, and he was soon trotting tward the generals headquarters.His way led him by the wall that surrounded the house where Violet and her sisters w re were.Of course he could not fail to look in and gaze at the house, which was half concealed by tall leafty pine trees, and dark tall evergreens.Everything was still and lonely.There was some light however as a great ruddy glare was seen along the eastern horp horizon.Then he glanced into a little Company Street , which led t hrough a surburb of the camps to an ormormous forest beyond.There T im now perciesd at some distance two horses standing, one black,and the other gray.At first Tim learned from one of his comrades that they were no one owning them though Tim had first feared that one of t he Glandelinian boyscouts had anticipated him, but this conne ture speedily vanished, because he saw no rider near, only some one holding the animal by the bridle, so that at any rate Tim had the start .

Tim now glanced over t he garden wall again, and this time his eyes were keener.He saw two figures ormerge from the shadows of the evergreens and walk in the direction from which he had just come tward the street where t he hous horses were waiting.Inv91 Involun tarily Tim drew bridle, and watched with pistol at the r eady.The two were now standing still again, and seemed t o be talking earnestly.One evidently desired to return to t he house but the other held hi him back.A minute elasped without any decision.Tim was becoming impatient for his duty called him and his heart began to throb every quickly. The voice of reason urged that he ought not to devote himself longer to this vague game of illusions lest he might at last surely forget the claim of his duty--a duty in which days like h these ought to engross every thought. Therefore Tim rode hastily away firmly resolved to leave the house the very next morning, and see some other shelt er--he dared not even see Violet and her sisters again or his plan would not work.His deter mination grew firmer at every step his horse took forward and it seemed strange that fate did not seem willing to release him for when he had proceeded a short distance and saw the wide Com any Street he distinctly heard the creaking of a rusty gate behind him.This efforded egress from the camp in another direction, and in spite of his resolution Tim could not help glancing h hastily around.He percied the samefigures he had seen in the park ofbthe camp and noticed that they passed noiselessly acrosss the road and entered a narrow company street. Tims first impulse was to turn his horse and hold them up to find what t hey were doijg doing here, but he remembered in time t hat he had not a second to lose and hurried on.Ten minutes later he was gallpo gallopping along anarrow path the dispatches of which he had charge in his pocket book--through a small section of the Camps open square.When the genera general mentioned this lpaticular road Tim had started but he smiled at his own folly and felt ashamed of having yeilded to his excitemet excitement.Besides he remembered that also at all the route to all troops led through the famous fore st beyond.

The farther he left the house and narrow streets of t he camp behind him the happier and freer he felt.Everything he had exp rienced n ow seemed like a vision so that he began to reproach his excitable nerves.His horses sharp hoofs dashed more and more rapidly over the smooth road, and t he trees flitted by like ghosts of dark colore stretching t heir arms imploringly tward Heaven.Here and there was a glade in the camps and then the road led over a portion of the battlefield of Big Girl Knool.The blackened empty houses and shatt ed shattered farm houses looked really uncanny, and darkness also stared out of the vacant window frames.Shadows glided along the walls--the unfortun ate people who a few days before had lived here warm and safe.Tims situation did not seem wholly free from danger in the midst of the great forest for wearing gray he could face the peril of being attacked by christian cavarly or child scout patrols for in the midst of this great forest with an embittered dangerous christian enemy near , and for Tim only one Glandelinian boyscout behind. He pressed his bay closer with his knees and swept swept on faster and faster, down a street which was lin ed with burned houses, fields of buried corpses and through woods and undergrowth. However they met with nothing remarkable on the way, and Tim reached his destination very swftly, delivered the dispatch s, and received equally important ones in e xchange which he was going to du- duplicate and sent on to t he christian lines while delivering the important real ones.When on his return he approached the Glandelinian camp the moon had ri sen and also the glare of the fires far away had increased tenfold and therefore made every object gin gigantic in its strange shadowy outlines.Tim believing him self safe from christian patrols paid no heed to his surroundings listened carelessly to t he beats of his horses hoofs and in imagination saw violet, and her sisters.He was the more careless because he had noticed that his companion with his hand on his musket was constwntly was constantly gazing watchfully in every direction his attention amply made up for Tims deficiencies.Hin hitherto he had really remained silent and had not disturbed Tims reverie.But now he was startled for he heard him put his horse to a mad gallop.Something unusal had doubtless occured, and t he next and the next instant he was close beside Tim.They were upon t he edge of a clearing along one side of which the road led.The darkened plain was bordered by rows of immense pine trees standing near enough to the road to form an impenet rable shade.Only the outermost line of the big trunks could be dimly seen by t he light reflect d reflected by the moon.

"What is it ."Tim asked in surprise.His companion greatlyboxcited, pointed toward the edge of the forest, where stood the highest of all t he tree s and where several crosses roads seemed to meet at the spot(not so hot fot) but Tim at first could discover nothing else.

"There are six horsemen."continued his companion hastily.

But Tim st ill saw only the dark forest, t he bare clearin g, and the very tall trees.

"It's a patrol"Tim said to soothe the boyscout.But it was really indeed absolutely very possible that some of one of the Glandelinian reconn oitering parties was wandering about here seeking for stragglers or sharpshooters, who still occassionally harassed the wagon trains following the army.But t he boyscout shook his head.

"No those are not Glandelinians.I can see distinctly."

"Who are they then?"

He did not answer immediately.Tim too could not understand who t hese people were for t hey evidently were even not dressed like soldiers either.Christian scout patrols or boy and girlscout scouting parties would have fired long ago, the distance was not so great that a good shot might not have asily easily hurled the two from t heir saddles.Suddenly a strong suspicion dawned upon Tim.One of the Cross roads led to general Phellinia Tamerlines army camp, the others the other road toward the building where Penrod was confined because of his two dangerous wounds. General Richard Tamerline and Manley returned to Tims memory; the two figures he had seen in the garden, the waiting horses, and all these circumstances suddenly became connected in his imagination with the scene before him and a strange comin g fate of violet, and her sisters which he could not shake off his mind. Therefore Tim drew his pistols and suddenlyb to his companions surprise turned his horse aside and was over the long ditch at a single boun d.His companion followed.Tims eyes now suddenly fell upon t he group that had occupied his attention and he started for he was much nearer than he had expected.He had looked fart her beyond for the horsemen.The two boys struck into a rapid gallop.The six horsemen did not seem to notice the two swift ly approaching boys but were eager do consulting.So Tim approached very n ear them and in the clear moonlight o could recognize their figures with perfect distin ctness--general Richard Tamerline, Manley and a few ot hers who were soldiers.Manley was a tall powerful person.Tims excitement was completely mastered, and he shouted"Halt" At tims cry they hastily seperated--two vanished as if they had sunk into the ground, but Manley and the ot hers reined in their horses drew them back, then Manley stopped, and Tim fancied he was looking wcornfullynat him.Tim no longer doubted he was in the presence of the persecut or of violet, and her sisters.He now st ood as he had so ardently desired face t o face with general Manley, and the decisive moment had come.

"Miserable scoundrel."Tim halfvgasped under his breath.Spurring his horse violently, he thought he could draw on his the next instant, but from somewhere a shot rang out, then another one, Tim felt his faithful mare sink under him and the boy was thrown over her head.The last thing he heard was a loud laugh that rang shrilly on his ears.When he regained his senses, his boyscout assistant was busily engaged in restoring him, he had propped Tims back against the steep side of a ditch and was rubbing his temples and forehead with cold rags soaked in water.When o vhe perceived that Tim had recovered his senses and was looking at him the boyscout began to express his compassion and sympathy.

"I hope you surely hav not met with any serious injury Captian!"Tim heard him ask anxiously.

""No I believe I am all right.But what in the world happened."!Tim answered.

This boyscout whom Tim kn ew to be a fearless fellow, shrugged his shoulder."It doesn't seem to be safe here--the fellow wq was up and away like a ghost.They must have been christian dogs."

Tim stood up.At first he still felt the consequences of the dreadful fall so violently that Tim was unable to spoke.And too the shock had jarred every bone in his body.He l also felt giddy, and was obliged to lean on his companion.

Th The strange ohot weather for a winter season and the frequent epplication of iced water failed to produce the desired effect as soon as hoped for, and t herefore it was some time before Tim gradually recovered himself and found that though he had recieved some very slight wounds, there was no serious injury. Fortunately the second horse he had brought along with him was safe.Therefore Tim soon gained strength enough to resume his journey, slowly mounted an d rode away. And also Tim could not help shaking his head at his own folly, and much out of humor humor persued his road.He did not exchange a word with his companion after cordailly thanking him for his faithful assistance.They moved along tward the west end of Big Girl Knoal City

Dawn was breaking as Tim rod rode into the wrecked city but the streets were as desolate as before.The hoofs of the horses echoed loudly on the pavements pavements, and Tims way led him past the beautiful statue of The Sacred Heart of Jesus who stood before the huge pile of the wrecked cathedral.Tim gazed for a moment respectfully at the statue, which no matter how often T im passed it, he never saw without emotion.What feelings must have irrestibly inspired every christian who sincerely loved his native land at the sight of this statue which had escaped the ravages of shell fire while the cathedral did not.How his heart must have trembled with hope when he thought that a wicked enemy had already once before enom encamped before the city city of Big Girl Knool and yet had been driven vanquished from the soil of Calverin in without even a battle.But what sorrow must have surely followed when confronted with the naked reality, which told the dreamer that the times of miracles had passed that neither the glowing enthusiasm and brave deeds of thevVivien Girl Princesses nor that or many whole christian armies could supply what had been neglected during long years of peace before.

Every morji morning the Statue of the Sacred Heart was found richly decorated wit h garlands of flowers of every description, and women, and even men and soldiers and flocks of prettily dressed children were often seen kneeling there, deeply agitated praying for the deliverance and safty of Calverinia.But the ardent desired hour did not appear, defeat followed defeat.Only Big Girlknool seemed to have only temporarily stayed the enemys advance, and the Statue remained immovable his bro bronze eyes apparently gazing coldly on the petitioners.

Tim too glanced at his feet, and suddenly percieved that he was not alone, as he supposed.The slender figures of little girls seven of them in number were clinging to the cold stone, their lips moving rapidly in prayer and t hey had their Rosaries. Tim wanted to go nearer, his heart stood still for he suspected who they were.But they had noticed his approach, and starting up with a low cry hurried away.

"Princesses"Tim cried, dismounting from his horse, and starting to follow them. They did not look around, but one of them waved him back with her hand.After a short hesitation Tim determined not to leave them, and before they could reach t he headquarters where their wounded brother was confined, he was standing in their midst.Violet with her hand already on the lock of the door paused and looked at Tim, but her sisters did not.He saw that she wqaxwas not angry with him for following, her dark blue eyes, whose expression seemed even more sorrowful than the day before, rested upon him with a shade of resignation---the glance was inquiring, and very sad.And yet the look, expressed decision, changeless resignation.

Tim felt that his interference in the destiny of her and her sisters would be too late.

"I thank you my dear boy"she said quietly in so sad a voice that it made Tims heart ache"I thank you for your sympathy.Your intentions are kind but you only halff know our fate, and therefore are ignorant that my heart commands me to bear alone whatever is allotted.You richly deserve our confidence and love but we must be silent .Show yours by not questioning me, and never seeking to cross out paths now or otherwise you'll be discovered and won't never be able to help us.We pretended to run away from you so in case you won't be detected, and will be supposed to be a Glandelinian and our scheme worked. To save us disguise yourself, and secretly cover us, and our enemies and get child scouts to help if necessary.We cannot tell what is wrong but do this or it'll be farewell forever for you and us.We're trapped."

Tim stood as if a thunderbolt had struck him.

"Curses on t hat Gerald Starring."he thought to himself."I'd like to hang the little snake."

Violets words were the words of a sick, desperate little soul utterly un turel unatural from the lips of so young a little girl, who has not yet lost self control y so much bitter suffering but who sooner or later might.

Tim wanted most badly to detain her, comfort and soothe and even reproach her. But she and her sisters hastily entered, and vanished from his gaze.Tim fancied that every one of t hem waved their hands to him, but the door closed heavily and Violet and her sisters were alone with their fate. I Tim soon passed again the statue of The Sacred Heart.On the spot spot where Violet, and her sisters had knelt he saw an immense wreath of beautiful flowers.He hailed the treasure wit h secret delight, and would have paid for the flowers in t heir weight of gold if he could have succeeded in outwitting Manley and taken the Vivien Girls away. Then t oo standing at a short distance away t here were several people, and Tim could not escape their notice.Yet he could not help going to t he statue again a few minutes later.His min d was bent on having the wreath to prevent it from being taken by Glandelinians and his heart trobbed with anxiety lest he should not find it .Meantime he decided that he was not to see violet, and her sisters again.General Phelan Tamerline had not invited Tim to any dinner that day, but sent the meal to his room The doubt concerning what ought t o be done completely occupied Tims thoughts and his attention was so absorbed as he walked the streets that it was some time before he noticed two tall men in front of him constantly chose the same direction.Not untill the boy finally overtook and was obliged to pass them, did he observe them closely, and a single startled glance was enough.Anoexclamanation suddenly escaped Tims lips, for Manley was one of t hem and the other was a stranger.Tim started back that he might not be observed for he desired to watch them without being seen , perhaps even hear what they were saying. Both were talking eagerly but not loudly and too they seemed to be concluding some very important plan.When they reached the Statue of the Sacred Heart, they had probably just completed it, for Manley held out his hand to his companion, and the latter who he could now see more distinctly clasped it.He was General Ambrose Edwin Fuller.In striking contrast to Tims evil genius he had reddish brown hair, and a long red beard.He seemed to be a veteran Glandelinian Turmerannian general.Not h suddenly turned tward the pedestial of the statue.The wreath, still remained there.The next instant the general, Manley stopped, then he st ooped and Tim saw the treasure in the generals hand.With a half muttered curse at t he st statiue he flung it far away upon the ground.It encircled Tim.He hastily got out of its ring, raised it and then hurried after the men.But Tims unlucky star did not desert him and the obstacle it thrustvin his way was not even a great impediemtn worthy a vi l violent struggle.Nothing but common place incident barried Tims way.A group of comrades talking eagerly turned the corner of the next street and Tim had hardly time to hide his treasure under his cloak.There was news to tell and Tim allowed himself to be detained.He could not find his enemy Manley again immediately hovthought.Miserable etiquet tes gains t he victory even in such circumstanoes.When e found himself alone he drew a long breath and hurriedly persued his way.But he hastened up and down street after street in vain untill at last he percieved that he had lost every trace.The mystery remained unsolved and tortured Tim He believed he had now lost Violet, and her sisters through his own fault. This reproach began to ech e more loudly in his heart, and he vainly strove to excuse himself.Therefore it almost seemed a deliverance when he was compelled to leave Big Girl Knool before daybreak and enter the army compe.A great battle was raging at Bepopo Lansin and the army was hastily advaning to the aid of general supple.Glandelinian hopes too were not entirely wouthout hope of foundation.General Vivianis of the Christians too was offering a more successful resistance at Bepco Lansin than could have been expected after the long and bloody fray at Big Girl Knool.The excitement and fatigue of the record breaking war claimed Tims attention so entirely during the terrific contest, that he began to forget his experiences with violet and her sisters.Tim was not in the battle but only watching it as Glandelinian boyscoutswere not allowed in fry freys.So during the morning he threw himself down to rest on the hard cour couch his servant had prepared on t he floor of some deserted house near thevbattle, and the boy gazed out of the window, then his thoughts were buried on his quiet rides, and then did the whole story rise again before his memory.Thus the dreaded conflict progressed. This was a severe struggl e for the brave armies of both sides.A portion of the battle raged wildly and ragavely in a labyrinth of hedges, plantations gardens walls and farm yards, the christians contesting the ground foot by foot.The losses was dreadful.Not courage, but strength, threatened to be exhausted and the heat of the CDecember day was terrible where usually at this time there's d foot of snow on the ground and below zero weather.Wonderful that the forest fires prevented winter for Calverinia this year. An hour after the conflict started some officer sent a column of Hungaboos to take a line of broken farm houses that obj obstructed the way of advance, and which surrounded like all such buildings by walls and hedges was obstinately defended by Abyssinkilian Volunteers and Angolinian soldiers and a t eemping line of cannon which firing was so steady that advance to the attack in this locality seemed annihilation for the Glandelin ian troops.

Tim had seen that the Glandelinian troops had often attacked this position but always in vain.It was not t hat these troops were drive.n back, they never came back.

"Captian"Tim heard a Glandelinian soldier say to a Glandelinian officer"There's a young christian dog officer urging on his men like a perfect fiend.If he were gone we should have had the place long ago.We have fired volleys at him repeatedly, but he seems to bear a charmed life, nobody can hit him, and he hits everybody he aims at."The one who had spoken was a lieut enant, and he was an excellent shot."and I can usally depend on my gun"he added shaking his head as a shell exploded among the hedges.Tim had not yet seen the brave man mentioned but this honest compliment by a bold and experienced Glandelinian soldier inspired many Glen delinins around with some respect, and the captian imself was in t he act od ordering his men t o spare him, when the sergeant beside the captian interrupted him.

"There's the man the lieutenant told you about, now he is climbing on the wall waving his sword to encourage his volunteers to charge--he wants to set them on us."exclaimed the sergeant in an excited tone.The next instant Tim himself from his place of observation percieved the slender figure of an Abyssinkilian officer amid the leafless bushes.He fearflessly exposed himself to the bullets, his ringing shout V vive El Abbieannia"fell upon Tims ears distinctly above the noise of the desperate conflict.Tim looked intently upon him and for an instant the smoke near him cleared away and he emmerged entirely from the protection of the bushes to lead his men across the narrow space that still divided the contending parties but he couldn't recognize as ever seeing the man before.His own wave was only a portion of the whole entire christian surge which was moving forward to the attack, yet this young officers appearance hastily att racted the attention of all the Glandelinians within Tims view, shots rattle on all sides more lively than if a whole s city full of firecrackers were exploding in a perfect fusslade of noise.The Glandelinian sergeant shook his head, the young officer really seemed to bear a charmed life for he still stood out."Forward.Forward.vive El Abbiennn"Tim heard him shout .This scene and the terrible veveny event that followed occupred more rapidly than the flight of thought can follow in memory.On the wall behind the youn officer appeared a second man with a bearded face framed by thick red hair.Tim had never seen i him before, but he fell before he could jump down.Tim watched the whole scene with the greatest suspense.suddenly he thought he heard a shriek.

"He's gone now"cried a voice from somewhere.

"A shrapnell laid him low"Tim exclaimed to himself breathlessly.But a dozeon other she,ls already crashed on the air, and the christian troops were still coming on.Tim thought it best for himself to move for it was evident the Glandelinians were not going to hold the position. "Forward.Forward was the cry.The smoke of firing concealed the scene for a moment and the crack and rattle of musketry deafening the ear.Now it was that the Glandelinians seized the bayonet.but with a loud yell that shook the air the christian wv wave like a swarm of wolves sprang from cover, and dashed forward over hedge and ditch.The nest instant the Glandelinian position was stormed.Tim saw somebody like a christian boyscout fa l near the hedge, and as soon as the battle had reci receded in the direction of Orleander Farm Tim soon found the spot he sought, and despite the risk of shrapnell fire he found a christian boyscout whom he knew lay death white at his feet.He didn't know Tim because of his Glandelinian uniform.Tim gazed thoughtfully at the corpse.sincere compassion seized upon him.He lay there as quietly as if no sorrow had saddened his young life, as if he were asleep on the battlefield dreaming of happy hours.But after a few moments Tim noticed that his breath still moved slightly.He was bleeding, his lips even quivered, and as Tim bent over him he opened his eyes, seemed to collect the remains of his strength, and strove to speak.But he doubtless felt too weak, and on ly pointed mutely to his breast.He carried something there he desired to give Tim.Tim opened the coat and took out something like a small bool, which he hastily examined.Besides a quanity of papers, cards, and bank notes Tim found a note addressed to Violet, and her sisters.The solution of the mystery wascin Tims hand.He gazed at it with the deep st interest, and turned it over several t imes. The rustling of the paper must have recalled his consciousness, for he again raised his eye lids and with the greatest effort f l faltered a few words that were rather breathed than spoken, and which Tims ear caught with great dic difficulty.

"Though you're a Glandelin ian boyscout, you look honorable--give it to them if they're still prisoners within your lines.To violet, and her sisters alone." he said.

"Tim t hen revealed and proved who he was, and promised.His dim eyes thanked Tim, and bade a fond farewell.The next moment he was lifeless.Tim could not immediately discover the mortal wound the boyscout had recieved, his coat was soiled wit h blood and dirt.Tim involuntarily looked around to see if he could not find that other corpse.If the read headed Glandelinian officer had fallen from the wall, he could not be far away.It would be easy to dingiodistinguish the uniform.but there was no body or officer of any sort in sight, save the young boyscouts only.The suspicion which has flashed into Tims mind when he saw this boy boyscout fall again awoke.Tim hastily searched the little open space strewn with the dead and wounded of both sides.After a few at one Tims foot struck against some hard object .He stooped and raised it, it was a revolver in which there were fourty four fresh cartridges, one of them had been discharged.The muzzle lay with its muzzle tward the dead christian boyscout.The bodies of the fallen of both sides scattered near were all of tprivate soldiers, each of whom held his guns firmly clutched in death, not one carried a revolver though he had them in his holster.From the spot where Tim found the revolver revolver drops of blood guided him in the direction in which the Glandelinians had retreated.The pistol must have belonged to the red headed man.Tim no do longer doubted his guilt.

He too evidently had been severely wounded, but retained strength enough to drag himself away.Tim kept the revolver having an idea it might give him valuable assistance in tracking the assassin.A little later when the battle was raging at some other distant point Tim buried the boyscout marking the grave with a cross, that he might be able to find it again.It was the only thing he could do now for the sake of violet and her sisters.conflict and anxiety wholly engrossed Tims thoughts during that whole dreadful December day.

How often that even half day Tims fingers fairly twitched to break the seal of that boyscouts letter, and yet it was his duty to guard it and take it safely to Violet and her sisters.but he was unable to go thither right away because of the terrific battle.Then when there was an opening through the line of battle and the Glandelinian soldiery allowed him to pass, he hastily hastened to the headquarters building where Violet and her sisters and Penrod were confined but the first glance told him he should find it empty.But it was not.It was all in flames and many of the tents of the camp were burning or smouldering.

But he met Jannie, and in her sad face Tim quickly percieved that something was decidedly wrong.Tim felt a strange foreboding that this was not the only misfortune which had happened.Tim asked breathlessly for Violet and her sisters.

"Oh the poor Princesses!"

"Dead.Are Violet and her sisters dead dead!"Tim asked hastily his face growing deathly white.

"No Violet and her sisters are alive, but very unhappy, and would far rather be better off dead!"

"For the love of Heaven Jannie talk Sense!"stormed Tim."Tell me truly.what ails am I to understand by that! Speak."

"They have been forced to come along to general Manleys army as prisoners, and Adeldefob was sent away to a Glandelinian Base hospital."

"That crazy old Glandelinian general who visited here."

The little girlscout nodded."Oh the poor Vivian Girls.They are in a very unhappy state of affairs."she repeated with a heavy sigh."

"And the general"Boobhead"who was to defend and save them!"

He has been severely wounded in the battle, and he is gone in an an abulance."

With trembling hands Tim took out the boyscouts last letter."I have this for Violet and her sisters"Tim said hastily, feeling a very deep pang in his heart as he uttered the words."Oh I could kill that general Manley."

"A letter.A letter from whom, perhaps from George Greene, the dead boyscout!"

And the little girlwept bitterly for she anticipated Tims reply.But when she had calmed herself, she took Tim by the hand and said quietly;

"Come Captian poor Violet and her sisters spoke in so friendly a way of you when they took leave of us, and that burning house forever, that they will doubtless tell or figive me if I tell you all I know.I must tell you so you can do something for them.Follow me over into the woods captian where no one will be able to hear us.The air here stifles me ;I feel as if I could not beareit, and if I should tell you what is weighing on my heart I would be afraid of hearing some Glandelinian soldier or officer behind me.I should die if I heard anything like their footsteps.Oh they would surely shoot me if they knew what I would tell yet I cannot be silent for their sake.A dim hope has always hovered before me that if you should come, you might perhaps help little Violet and her sisters.Violet , and her sisters told me lots about you Captian Tim they gave messages of remembrance toyou and hoped you would cover them."

While saying these words, which the little child scout poured forth in a torrent ever and anon interrupted by tears and sobs, she led him out of the smouldering camp into the woods.Strange reddish sunshine glimmered through the trees.Beetles out of season hummed to and fro and amid the branches sparrows sparrows were singing and the sky arched reddish brown overhead as if he knew no other color.Nature seemed war crazed.Tims heart throbbed quickly as the little girl remained silent , while walking steadily on ward.Only once did she address Tim to ask for the letter, but Tim told her he could not give it to her untill convinced that there was no prospect of seeing Violet and her sisters again. She reflected a moment then begged Tim to keep it.At last they reached a log under a pine tree which overlooked a greater portion of the forest, a lovely scene, apparently created for a spirit that desired to seclude itself from the world.Tims imaginations told him that this had been the favorite spot of opoor violet and her sisters and conjured up the lovely vision.how beautiful the fair little girls must have looked amid the perfumes of the flowers.

"Violet and her sisters always sat here, during the few days she spent within this Glandelin ian army before Penrod was wounded by Starring"said Jannie. "When not busy they played here with flowers and pebbles.Can Tim not this spot and the memory of these sad days are my only consolation."

THe Vivian Girl Princesses gave you messages of remembrance for me!"Tim asked quickly.

"Yes, and repeated them most warmly.Next to Penrod of the boys they loved you best.Oh believe me captian, violet and her sisters have the power of looking into the souls of men and children and quickly recognize the good as well as the evil they were as pure as angels, and therefore being possessed by them possessed prophetic gifts.

"But how in the world could they be carried off by Manley then?"

Jannie suddenly looked at Tim very gravely, almost angrily.She felt in deed the doubt of these darlings implied in the words, a doubt which Tim had only expressed to urge her to speak more quickly.

"It would never never have happened if the most terrible compulsion had not forced them to this circumstances; they were obliged to go away because there was no help for it.Gerald Starring had caused Manley to come here, and Manleys cavarly took them away, and sent Penrod to a Glandelinian base hospital thus seperating them probably for good."

"Was there no one to protect them?"

"No one captian, for sin binds the strongest arm holds the stoutest heart in its clutches.Only two could have defended them, Penrod captian, and you.But Penrod was not present he was sent away or he would die, and they think he is Adeldefob.And Manley took care that he would be sent where violet and her sisters would never see him again."

A flood of tears again choke h chocked her words, and it was sometime before she could recover her composure.

"I know ever since my experience of being a child slave general Manley almost rules the nation as well as the Glandelinian King.He's the highest in rank nearest the king--that is the misfortune of the situation.I'm I am telling you strange things Captian, but you are a boy soldier, you have witnessed enugh that is grave and sorrowful to guard the secret I trust you and which will enable you to bring them out of their sorrow and I will help you as I have a way.You will also use the secret only in case you can accomplish some good."

Again a short pause followed.

It is all caused by Starring.Violet, and her poor sisters are too beautiful, too very beautiful little girls to be able to disguise themselves so they cannot be recognized by Starring, and were very much admired by Boobheads generals themselves.Boobhead knew who they were but he claimed they saved his life from a geyser near Mt Calverine and would not harm them.I always know that among all their Glandelinian enemies Manley is probably the worst and the most dangerous and the most damanet.He came most frequently though at first we did not see him, and Boobheads generals favored him.Boobhead didn't like him and seldom came to see him.Besides while here general Manley lived in more magnificent style than any of the other wicked Glandelinian generals--a style that never seemed to be exhausted.Violet and her sisters had often trust rated Manley in his military plans and he wanted revenge. When it was reported that general Boobhead was wounded the vicomit o general Manley thought he would claim and withdraw the Vivian Girls from their attentions upon Adeldefob for fear of their winning him to the christian cause, by claiming them as his prisoners and bring them over to his own army and have them met the deserts of spies.It was a blow to them and the worse of it was before their eyes, Penrod was taken away in a Glandelinian ambulance probably never to see him again.Alas the poor little girls thought they could never live happily without him again.At that time before the departure they often took me into their confidence, for I was their dearest friend.I did not know how to aid them, but they confirmed to me their secret wishes.The news of what was to happen was very unexpected and very crushing to Penrod, and when after he was gone, Manley in entered the apartment of Violet and her sisters, we trembled at his looks, and I was afraid he would recognose me.In the early days of the war he was not the gloomy sullen man he is now but had many traits of character to win love.Trembling with anxiety who looked at him, but he merely said coldly"You'll be my prisoners before long. I have told Adeldefob all about you and will take you away to morrow."

Jennie said to me afterwards "Is this the result of our brave deeds for which we have sacrificed everything"The feelings which my mistress had so long repressed burst from her heart, and said torrents of tears she threw her arms around my neck, and vowed she and her sisters would always love Penrod, and begged me to have you locate him for them, for they would try to get away when Manley brings them tward his lines. I promished y would do so. Thus the germ of a great misfort une of this war was planted I feared their very souls were weak and wavering."

A sighb interrupted the story. This too was silent, the dark picture unrolled before him moved him deeply. Then the little girl continued "I had no other thought. Captian Tim than that some thing would happen to outwit that wicked Manl y but instead his captians urged on his plot with feverish haste, as if they wished to stupyify thought, and break down the bridge behind them. Violet and her sisters never mentioned the subject of horror to me again from a timidy which I could easily understand, and I wondered what was going to happen soon. Most of the Glandelinian boyscouts here did not cherish any suspicion of whom Violet and her sisters were, not seeming to ni notice their manner which was often then confused and absent. You can imagine how all this tortured my heart, Captian for I saw fate slowly but surely approaching. I must speak the terrible truth, Boobheads generals were glad at the coming of Manley, for they thought they could easily decieve Penrod, and did not shrink from it for a moment. I myself secretly trembled at the strength of their love for their noble brother Penrod for I looked upon them as if they were my own sisters. The thought of going to their brother and confessing everything of Manleys plot flashed through my mind but nobody would let me see him, and too the dread of what might follow sealed my lips. Besides I seriously doubted whether he would really believe me that the danger of secret seperation was so great, and not repulse me for a dreamer. So I was forced much against my will to let everything I dreaded go on and saw things become more and more entangled in the net of wrong. Besides fortunately for Penrod Manley thought he was a Glandelinian boyscout chieftian, and Manley clever as he usally is did not suspect it, Penrod, and violet, and her sisters had been too cautious. They had often met without the least embrassment. Meantime Jennie had been taken sick before her her neck wound. I had covered her with my tears for I thought I foresaw her fate--the little girl being thus ill could not be moved and would too be also seperated from her sisters, and would fan Manleys hate and envy into a brighter flame. There came a most terrible day. General "Boobhead" had gone away on military business it was supposed he would stay a long, long time, and general Manley expressed a desire to speak to Violet and her sisters on my matters of importance they did not wish to hear. At first he did not know how to gain access to her for Adeldefob had made orders that no one under any conditions was allowed to disturb them in their condition. Manley therefore wrote to Adeldefob to grant him a secret interview with them for which purpose he appointed their apartment room. There they could be entirely unobserved. Violet and her sisters seemed wild with fright Angeline threw her arms around my neck, and exclaimed that after a year or two of torture they were getting it still worse and wished they could flee away. Their loyalty to their brother made them suffer for what soon came. I had a strong presentment of coming evil, and wished I could hide them where they could not be found. They were forced to await at the appointed hour the general in the room for he made up his mind to come anyway as Adeldefob did not write back an answer. Twilight was shrouding the fields, it grew darker and stiller. At last one of the orderlies lighted a lamp. Then I sat silently into a corner, while violet and her sisters covered over in their bedships badsh coats were weeping silently. Oh it was a wicked thing to decieve poor Penrod but Manley would do it. At last we heard steps on the stairs. A sentry soon ushered in the general. He looked grave and gloomy and stood thoughtfully by the bed of one one of them and seemed to be struggling with some desperate resolution. Oh wicked as he is he appeared a remarkable man."

"I have seen him but very little, yet I know from the first that he was a fiend." Tim exclaimed.

"Wickedness and passion made him so. But that evening in that sick room, he looked at Violet, and her sisters so fiercely that they would gladly have fled only their helpless condition and their anxiety about their wounded brother withheld them. He said gloomily to Violet by whose bed he stood;"

"The game you and your dratty sisters are playing with Adeldefob is a most unworthy one to our cause, no matter what it seems to yours. He is too noble too good for our country to endure it, and I will no longer allow you to fool him. I'm going to burst this plot all to pieces. I'm going to send him away and you're comin g with me on stretchers to the Glandelinian commands under me. Never again will you gain your freedom."

While utterin g these words he had paced hurriedly up and down the room. Now he paused and looked earnestly at Violet, not paying any attention to her sisters.

"I will pospone your fate though" he continued "I will even con ceal it for good, and send you to the Christian lines safe and sound under one condit ion."

"What do you mean you master master!" Violet asked in astonishment.

"What do I mean!" he cried almost fiercely. "Give up your career as spies and go back home where you belong and stay out of this confounded war."

"We cannot. I wish to tell you sir, that we love out Country and God as we do the salvation of our souls, and cannot live to see our cous cause go down in ruin before your cruel armies. I wish to tell any of your generals al t a so t n that too."

"And wicked as it is" added Manl y Manley fiercely "I wish to tell you and your sisters that I love my cause more than the salvation of my Soul, and cannot live to see it go to ruin either. I wish to tell your very Father that too and will send you back to him dead then before I'll let you do your work against me any further. My cause is just as important as yours is, and I'll win. If I tell him what I will do perhaps he'll do anything I'll demand to regain you. No matter how long this war rages I will fight against your country to the death." Captian Tim "here Jannie turned directly tward Tim, "Captian everything is still before my eyes as distinctly as if it happened to day. It was the most terrible scene I have ever witnessed. My knees trembled with fright. Violet herself uttered a pi rcing shriek, her sisters wailed.

"Horrible man" she moaned that can never be---I should die first. I and my sisters are willing to suffer for years for an et ernal happiness in Heaven."

The general looked at her with a gloomy imperious glance, that any one would have gladly avoided. An expression of bitter scorn hovered arcund his lips.

"No" he said firmly as she had finished the sene sentence. "You then will be my prisoners, legally and honorably. You shall be seperated from your friend Adeldefob whom you come to love even though he is a Glandelinian foe of yours and will be frustrated from the deception you propsed to do."

"I cannot bear it I shall die." she wailed, weeping and pleading. But he obstinately persisted and thus the hour passed---I grew anxious for it seemed as if Manley was calling Heavens judgement on his head. I could not help think ing of poor Penrod, and every minute became more eager for the general to go. But I did not dare venture to express thes these feelings, and also he made no movement to depart. But my dread was to become a reality. We heard footsteps and while discussing whether it was possible that general Boobhead had come back the lower door was heard to open. General Manley I saw turned pale--he had recognized the generals step. Violet and her sisters seemed to show a feeling of relief but general Manley laughed scornfully.

"See" said he. "Providence is guiding us into the right path. It bars ret reat--lets me defy danger---all shall be decided on this spot." His eyes sparkled with dreadful gloomy fierce fire as he uttered this terrible resolve to make them his prisoners. The stairs were dark, general Boobhead grouped his way up slowly we could hear the scraping of his feet--but the precious seconds were passing--the dangerous general did not move. "Violet who was the least wounded with the strength of despair threw the window open declaring it was the only means of escape but he scornfully told her to go ahead and jump out it was thirty feet above the ground and there was a hard pavement below.

"Oh you are a devil" Violet cried" to "to ruin and expose us to everlasting disgrace for some thing we never did."

No" replied the general sharply "I did not desire your disgrace you're too great a heroine and so are your sisters I would save your hon or but you'll be prisoner s anyway and I will send Adeldefob to a hospital to be cured. But you'll be prisoners in my own headquarters untill you are well. And then untill then---farewell." and with these words he was gone. It was the last moment, when he finally left her and her sisters. I shuddered Captian" said Jannie interrupting herself "when I saw the composure with which the Princesses met their coming fate but my heart rebelled still more at the skill they displayed in trying to face the dangerous experience. They could escape yet and wouldn't because they wouldn't leave Penrod. No one could doubt for a moment what might have occured had general Phelan and Manley met. At this time Penrod did not yet know of Manleys plot, in fact didn't know Manley was here. Violet sadly went into his apartment to see how he was.

"I should not have expected to see you out of your bed dearest." I heard him say wonderingly for I had followed "It has been so lonely without you. I was amazed when I thought I heard voices and saw a light in your apartment. I had no other thought than that Gerald Starring had come again to do you anyinjury."

Violet cast down her eyes so sadly for a moment and then told the whole story and she did sootoo. We commit all sorts of follies and that brin gs us into this state" she exclaimed sadly. I don't know what to do I miss you everywhere. I had a prolp prophetic knowledge of Manleys arival. He threatens to sep r seperate us. You can't interfere Penrod dear for we're helpless. Only Tim can save us now." Penrod smiled sadly, and pressing a kiss on his little beautiful sisters mouth he stroked the bright golden curls from her face and said;

Don't worry dears. When I'm well I'll find you. God will direct me to where you are and Tim can do wonders." suddenly he paused and listened. My heart stood still, and Violet begged me to go to the window and look out. I prayed to God and invoked all the Saints as I did so, Violet with tearful eyes stood like a statue. I uttered a sigh of relief and so did she as I at last drew in my h ad.

"I thought I heard con versation under the win dow." Penrod had said gravely. "I thought therefore it wasconly the creaking of some bough. I had heard sounds like that repeatedly for once before that same noise had decieved and frightened me so that one night before I opened my own window and listened. I was however a tf trifled scared and Violet seeing nobody around t hrew her arms around her brot her. Like a good lit tle angel she clung caressingly about him, and he loved her far too dearly was too much cont rolled by her holy fascination t o be able to resist her. The two were chatting sadly about the awful situation. The minutes seemed to me like eternity, and ever and anon I fancied I heard conversation outside. What was to be done. Were spies under the window! At first I felt like going to t he window but was afraid to do so. At last poor Violet arose and went sadly back to her apartment. When she went to bed, I rushed to the window t rembling with anxiet y and tore it open. Long I listened to hear some sound but in vain. I could not hear anything, the silent night surrounded me. I now closed t he window and as my hands shook so I could hold nothing hurried down into t he Company street, where I again st ood a long time listening for at the slight st sound the fall of a withered leaf or a sleepy bird stirring about the boughs I feared the ap roach of the Glandolinians. After an o hour had passed, I ventured to go around to t he window where I had heard low voices. What should I find there! I imagined the worst and was forced to cling to the wall to save myself vrom from fallin g. At last I reached the spot but it was empty. Nobody was there. I grouped cage rly around to find traces of footsteps but nothing was there. A load fell from my heart and I hurried back into the Company Street dot ection we was no longer feared. I now really set about the work intrusted t o me, and then tru returned to the house. A light was still burning in t he Vivian Girls sleeping room for a faint glow shone through the dark curtains. My heart ached as I looked up, my unhappy friends wer were probably now prayin g for safty and guidance, while their enemy Gerald Starring cherished t he blackest t r t reachery in i his hea t heart. Oh I felt as if I and th ey had lost heaven for just being good, and yet was more firmly bound to them than before for the fetters of their holiness chained me too. Violet who alone could be up and was not so ill avoided meeting my eyes the next few days. I knew she could not bear to do so or should bot ray me to her enemies by pr being too friendly to me when I'm supposed to be disguised as a Glandolinin Glandolinian. To avoid any suspicion I tried to avoid her as rarely or to meet her as rarely as possible. What would it avail, why should I remind her and her sisters of their danger, when I was firmly convinced they thought of it hourly! We passed each other silent ly each intent on o her own affairs. But she gave no outward sign of what was passing in her heart. On t he cont rary she appeared gayer than before more affectionate to her sisters and Penrod. That time now when I mentioned about general Manleys leaving an officer came in and told me that one of the Glandhlinian generals fighting with the christians at chancy was shot and wounded, and would lose the sight of one eye. I was in thi their room when the guard told this story wit h visible emot ion, and instn instantly added that he should go and see the general for it was "Boobhead. Of course I felt as if I must sink into the earth with terror and confusion, but despite t he shock Violet and her sisters retained their self con trol and with the a rt to which I had now become accustomed showed t he utmost surprise and alarm. As t heir anxiet y about the general probably really came from the heart, everything seemed perfectly natural to the reporting officer. Boobhead in t hese trying days meant a whole lot to violet, and her sisters and therefore t heir sincere compassion could not appear at all strange. For their own safty hoping he would be well they urged the man to go at once, give the general their kindest remembrances, and assure him of their sympathy. The soldier left us, and did not return for four hours. Then he reported the particulars of the bad even ts. The patient was improving but the doctor said the injured eye was hopelessly lost. Though a Glandolinian general he was the friend of violet and her sisters. He bore too his misfortune with the dignity of any brave soldier" said the soldier concluding his story, and the news depressed t hem greatly. Violet bent her beautiful head and she too sighed sympathizingly. Penrod was saddened t oo my by the news but he suspected less than ever how he had been decieved and they t oo as to t he fact of the situation and the Glandolinian rascs rascal Manley con tin ued to play his ga te with h the same terrible skill, but now with gr eat greater calmness and deliber tion thereover.

Two days t hen had passed. As usual we began to breathe more freely believing Manley had forgotten the incident and did not come and therefore we forgot t he unalterable. However Violet, and her sisters became more silent, and I believe the longer to see their brother was gradually overcoming them be but he had been sent secretly away. The next morning a carriage drove up, the bell was violently

Soon I heard one of t he Glandolinian officials call impatiently to the servants, he had evidently seen the arival from the window. As t here was no one at hand I myself rushed forward and opened the door. The next instant I regretted my foolish officiousness and would gladly have slammed the door in his face as if some dangerous wolf was trying to enter the house. General John Manley stood before me. He held one of his eyes half closed the other flashed upon me with the old evil light. And also he looked so angry and so imperious that I dared not utter a word and wondered how a man so handsome looking could look that way. Cold gloomy and pr u proud like the incarnation of drea ful e drea ful misfortune he approached one of the Glandolinian generals. The general greet ed Manley with real pleasure, embraced him as was the custom, congratulated him on his discovery who Violet and her sisters really were, and promished to try to make amends in some degree for the mistake of not knowing who they had been and for harboring them. Then the two Glandolinin Glandolininn generals entered the drawing room and I heard no more. Not even what violet and her sisters said. But it wasenot long err ere Violet herself came down stairs on some pret ext and whispered t o me "You must get Tim to follow and protect us Jannie. "From that moment of course I did not leave her or her sisters an instant, but followed her and her sisters at every step. Nevertheless she wanted to speak to me about Penrod and tried to find a favorable moment but it never came. I saw Violet press her hand upon er her heart and fairly gasp for breath. I t oo almost fainted from fright. I heard she being the only one up and around was probably to be seperated for good from her sisters.

The general Manley accompanied the other to the garden gate, and then returned. We saw him slowly approach the house. You can imagine our feelings emptian. We heard his steps upon the stairs in the ante room, and t hen close beside us. At last he drew aside the curtains of the doorway of their apartment, and he st ood before them as if he was a statue. But I instantly perceived the true stab state of affairs. His eyes flashed with anger, as it rested on Violet who stood defiantly before him, and a terrible scornful po expression a very sinister one played around his lips. Rage had completely gained the victory over every gentler feeling. Violet however gazed at him as the lamb looks at the wolf which is about to tear it t o pieces. She seemed to implore mercy with her eyes, and he understood her but it only seemed to increase his fiendish delight.

"Princess Violet of Abbiesnnia" he said with icy coldness, you have spied here, learned all information why I did not retreat, and double crossed Adoldefob by tricking him into believin g you love him and by playing up to him. That shows even that you have been faithless t o your own brother, cowardly to me.. I first will tell you I have sent your sisters offto my headquarters. Now I first before telling you more have come to express my contempt."

Violet uttered Ad l Adoldefobs name and that of her sisters in an imploring tone but he only laughed hit terly at the sound of her voice, which had aroused him.

"Let that pas" he said curtly. "I did not seek to argue with you, or to forgive you. I only wanted a clear understanding bet between us. You will not pay a death penalty because after all you are too pretty a little girl to die. But you shall be a slave to these generals her e and remain here unt ill I send for you. But when they recover your sisters shall be sent on to Glandolinin t o be a slave of King Procile my King."

"Stop hyou devil" cried violet trembling "I'll die before I'll be your slave--" but he silence her by a haughty imperious wav e of his hand, and bon tin ued calmly and quietly;; "My presence shall always remind you that you are in my power. Never again will you see your beloved brother Penrod or your Father again. You shall see me all the days of the war, that you may be reminded of your folly er of crossing my pathence too often. You shall pay for tearing Geralds face with your fi finger n ails and with the lash. The torture of self contempt I have slotted to you. They say you are angel possessed. Well let them save you if they can."

With these words he bowed curt ously to her but with a sneer on his face, t hen stepped back, the curtains fell behind him, we heard him walk slowly into the music room, quietly open the piano and strike a few notes as if nothing had occured. poor Violet gazed steadily for a time at the spot where the general had just stood, as if she surely saw him still t here. Then uttering a piercing shriek she stretched out here little hands tward me, but ere I could clasp them sank faining on the floor. When I at last restored her to consciousness she looked anxiously into my face as if to convince herself that the whole scene was notva a dream---but terrible truth. Her sisters gone, and Penrod too.

"Now I have lost the last thing in this world." she wailed. "Oh t hat I had the courage to end his worthless life. But t hat won't bring t hem back to me. Oh God help me. " Never before" Continued Jannie after a pause "Had I believed that such t errible things could be survived. But I was to learn it. Human life is tenacious, the t hreads do not break of their own accord, even though t hose for whom they are spun ardently desire it. We again became accustomed as before to bury our s ecret in our hearts l live on, and conceal from each other our real condition.Besides during a part of that day to my surprise and even hers too general Manley was more considerate than we expected, after that one outburst of fury he never reproached Violet again.But he was more infuriated nevertheless for she stubbornly refused to do anything he requested even t hough no harsh words were spoken betwe n them and he treated her with apparent indifference.Nay this went so far t hat some of his friends were a little vexed for t hey not yet knowing Violet was a Christian Princess always wanted her to be admired and t reated with more attention t han any one else since Adoldefob and her sisters were gone.

"You are beginning to be a girl hater my friend.War has robbed you of good loving emotions for your kind entirely."I heard a general say to him when Manley had been sitting for a long time at the piano playing so that every ones eyes were filled with t ears.

"Well I must say that war has not made me a girl hater"replied t he general"Of or you will accuse me of being unjust to my own kind.But that little girl--" he smiled bitterly as he uttered these words and st ood a long t ime at t he window absorbed in thought, his face bore an expression that distinctly betrayed anger, suffering, scorn and grief.His friends noticed it, probably t hought they had wounded him, and I never heard them say anything of the sort again. Thus this one day elasped.General Manley came and went, and took possession of t he place.Poor Violet I noticed here her sad underser deserving fate with great submission, but if she remained alone at night, and I occupied the adjoining room,I often heard her weeping bitterly nearly all night t hough in my presense she had cont rolled herself.I wondered why she never permitted me to see that she was sad.This quiet endurance of suffering aroused my comm compassion, for though she deserved it not, this punish punishment was even too severe for any one who would deserve it.I hated Manley like I hate a poisonous snake.She was op compelled to see t he general and others together constantlynot an our could she be safe from discovery.Fate ever hung over her head like a t hunderbolt .She lay down to rest at night in sorrow and fear, and awoke in sorrow grief and fear and longing for her sisters and brother in the morning.That she grew paler and thevroses gradually left her cheeks was only n atural, but this even on y made her more beautiful than in bo blooming health--when one saw her walking so silently through the rooms but under guard, she looked like a celest ial child being a prisoner of evil spirits to me.The fact that her old exuberantly gayty was gone could not be concealed from me hard as she strove to do so but she always said she was not ill but only broken o hearted.Manley would not lose sight of his victim.To me she was most devoted may t he most tender of friends I have ever seen.Yet I noticed that even I could not warm her heart. The consciousness of being seperated probably good from all she loved poisoned even this happiness and then I began to wonder where you were.Matters were to grow still worse.She mentioned often to me that she and her sisters loved her brother and parents with the passionate fervor I knew only too well in Heavenly creatures. Penrods noble nature even could not fail t o produce an impression upon my own heard Heart.She confessed to me t hat evening with tears of agony t hat she could not bear up with it any longer and was going to try to make an escape if it even cost her her life.

"Oh Jan nie, Jannie"she cried"to be compelled to endure this is worse than t he tortures of Hell.I wish I could make an escape n and if I see a chance I will.I have devoted my whole sould to God, but dare not try to escape because that evell evil general has too many secret spies watching me--my evil genius who wit h one word could destroy our happiness and seperate us forever. When you can find our beloved friend Tim and see if he can 't do something for me and my sisters or I shall be con demned to bear this loneliness for all t ime. It's too much Jannie for it is true, I'm angel possessed, and so are my sisters and we can't die without being killed.Oh do somet hin g after I'm gone.Please please please, and we'll love you as an only sister."

I promished faithfully I would, but how could I console her.I knew not what advice to give..But she told me dear Tim to tell you my own life story and tha through t hat course you will be able to help her through me.If you can form your plans Tim I'll give you all the assistance I can but you'll have to go to general Manleys army.Let's start off now while I continue the story.I'll tell you about myself first and tell you how I became a slave.I need not tell how I was freed for you heard that so often from me and Penrod."She paused and Tim looked at her and saw she too was a charming little girl a pretty black haired brown eyed child then it was a pleasure to see."She con tinued"I was an orphan, and when I became one I was two years younger than I am now.I am seven and a little over now.My father and mother had died and I was stolen by t he Glandelinian boyscouts and sold sold into slavery.General Raymond Ric hardson Foddoral though a wicked man hated Manley, and yet was fond of child slaves and did not wish t hem ill treated.After half a year in the foe lines he sold me to Mylotze and Doldon stole me and brought me back to Manleys lines where Q Adoldefob and Gin gogra brought me away to t he outskirts of t he enemys camps disguised sort of funny and where Angelinia Aronburg rescued me finally.She kept me and learned me the girlscout ways named me Angeline in onor of herself. But you know all about that don't you T im."

Tim threw his arms around her neck kissed her and holdin g her hand led her out into the park."Continue with your story now Jannie dear."Said Tim."W 'll ant as t wo coverin g confederates of Violet and her sisters. I can get plenty of help and as soon as you t ell me all I'll find a place to signal secretly to the christian lines any if I can get response get many girlscouts to enter t he enemy lines and find t races of Violets sisters and rescue them.I'll try to find Penrod, and if any one interferes with me I'll kill them.God brought poor Violet and her sisters and Penrod together and H'll help me protect them for he and they belong to us t oo.."

Tim looked in the direction of Manleys headquarters in this new army defiantly measuring the building with his eyes from top to bottom."No"he said angrily to himself"This won't do.Violet's sisters must be found and Penrod too."Then he turned to Jannie."Come "he said imperiously."I see a Glandelinian scout patrol."took Jannie by the hand, and they ran deeper into t he woods together.Jann ie continued withnthe story;

"Miss Angelinia Aronburg took care of me as if I was her own little sister-- and then for the first time introduced me to the Princesses--and oh how beautiful t hey became since then you know captian.Jennie, Angelin e and Violet are the prettiest.Yet I could not look at t hem without fee'ing sad for I always had a presentment of coming sorrow.Angelinia Aronburg directed my girlscout education herself.I was t hought to be a foriegner because of my looks but I have a recollection of my beautiful Abbisannian Home a beautiful house surrounded by woods and mountains, which now I would try to find in vain.Angelinia Angelinia Aronburg often t ook me out on scoutin g tours and in er winning way told me what she had learned about me from Penrod, and Radcliffe and ot hers and in doing so she probably paint ed the picture of me in somewhat brighter colors than t he reality but who would nothweave a'l t he charms of earty earth around t he recollections of me.

But to return to Violet and her sisters.My eyes saw how dearly they loved him and also each other t oo and it still more became evident aft er Penrod had been sent away as he was.From that hour I always noticed when she t oo was all alone that violet hun g her little head, was sad, grave and t hought ful, walked about the garden as if seeking something, and I often heard a faint half supressed sigh.The longing too to return to the christian lines t ook complete possession of her, but when I asked her to tak the chance of an escapade and that at any cost I would help her she only answered"N o one is going to keep her seperated from her sisters long nor from Penrod either.And she said that with such heat and decision that she terribly frightened me.She talked constantly about her sisters and Pe r Penrod, not at ll all about herself. She t old me how once before the war itself her sister Angeline had been stolen away by Glandelinian child slave traiders but that t hey had failed to sell her int o slavery because the possession angels struck t hem.However she was then left alone by herself.Angeline told Violet and her sisters how she by herself had found her way back home.Any one who understands a little girls heart kn ows what sudden changes mean .After her return she clung to her sisters more affection alt affectionately than ever.Yet Angeline had had lots of trouble to get back after she had been stolen away.Angeline urged on by t he longin g to see her beloved home and sisters had alone gone to the vinicity of Heidi Junct ion, and t here little as she was tried to find relati relatives or friends or ot her person who could either tell her something definite about where her home, sisters and parents were.One man who knew something about whom she belonged helped her without having the slightest suspicion of what was before t hem.They had gathered enough from Angelines story of her experience to gather some clue.They went on and soon came upon a hut, and when they looked in to get some furt her information and as they crossed the threshold t he little girl clung tremblingly to her companions arm. Poverty, dirt and wretchedness confronted t hem, a sad browed man looked at the lady and little girl at first suspiciously, a ragged woman half starved crawled tward them to beg for food, and in reply to poor Angelines timid questions t he poor miserable creature declared that she should go t o Marcucian , chrilly praising the little prin cess for coming to visit them and especially the noble lady.This ladys father had been a poor farmer who brought brought home from southern Calvordnia a beautiful saintly woman whom he made his wife.But because of the enemy it seemed as if fortune did not favor them. First the mother then the father was robbed by Glandelinian raiders and killed. This woman before them so ragged had been when a little child adopted by t hese people, who then owned a fine farm, but afterwards t hrough misfort unes and the thieving Glandelinians they sunk to their present low estate.

Angeline though kidnapped had not been dr deprived of the beautiful princely garb and e jewelerylshe wore, and little Angeline trembling violently froo from grief over their wretched condition gave them every article of value she possessed, money, beautiful watch, chain jewelry and to t heirlittle wretched girl she exchanged o, cloths putting on t he childs old ragged clothing in return.Then t he lady astonished at Angeline's charity was obliged to lead her away, she was almost fainting.On reaching t he hotel at Angelinia Agathia she wept convulsively.Night and day at home when she returned t hey tried t o soothe her she vasconly comforted when the emperor from his own kindly heart gave the poor people a big farm and lots of money.Long after when she had ret urned saftly home as Violet told me poor Angeline had t hrown her arms aroun d her mot hers neak sobbing;"How much I owe to God and you for having been such a good mot her to me and my sisters, and saving those poor people from living in such a den any longer."and from that time on she and her sisters t oo clung together with much deeper affection.The child knowswell her bigger brothers share in the destiny of her and her sisters, and loved them and showed gratitide. Though he had deserted his father long ago because he had been born a Glandelinia they had never seen their wayward brother Germania.It in said he is not exactly so wicked as some say but that he believes his place is in t he Glande linianxarmy.Now,matters have come on since this crazy Manley came here.General Phellinia Tamerline and Richardson Tamerline couldvhave saved t hem but they wouldn't.Misfortunes through that dirty Sn ake Gerald Starring pressed unceasingly on us like a heavy stone rolling down a mountain.After a few days no one could fail to see that on'y only death could part the Vivien Girls from the wounded supposed to be Glandelin ian boyscout "Adoldefob" and Manley said he could not understand Starrings report that though He's a Glandelinian yet Adeldefob and violet and her sisters loved each ot her with the fervor of lovers.Manley was an gry but as for a time Phelan Tamerline interfered saying t he prisoners belonged to him Manley could do nothing, and yet suspected Phelan was harboring the Vivian Girls.He was angry at Phelan but was afraid of him too. Phelan is dane dange dangerous if any one crosses his path.Phelan knew who Adeldefob really was all t he time and obeyed the voice of his noble nature, and made no on objections to t it--nay he rejoiced at it, for he knew the admirable character of the Vivian Girls since they risked every danger to save him once from the Mt Calverine Hot Water Geyser.General Richardson Tamerline did not kn ow what was to be done but he did not oppose Manley, in fact was his friend, and therefore poor Violet was somehow warned of impendin g evil and yet she felt a faint hope that Richard bein g Phelans brother would turn t o Phelans side, and that the brave interference of t hese two would free her and her sisters from Manleys evil power.So poor violet she foolishly let thnih t hings take their course.But general John Manley saw most clearly of all and he instantly resolved to make his arrangements accordingly before Richard would become soft hearted and act with the superior general of this army."Jannie paused for a moment to look around to see if no one was following them and as if to gather strength before commencing t he story of the decisive hour."It was during those days, Captian T im that you ent ered our house after Penrods being on the road to slow but sure recovery, and general Pl Phe,llenin Tamerline very unexpectedly recieved an order from the Glandelinian general Raymond Richadrdson Federal to advance on Beppo Evans and to move the army at once.He was not even granted a short time to arrange his military business, for the situation at Big Girl Knool was so pressing against the main Glandelinian army there since t he battle that to linger a single day would have brought disaster to Manley and neit her Phelannie Tamerline or Manley could have endured I supposecuch such a well deserved defeat.He might as well have said that the christian armies already were surrounding Big Girl Knool and under the circumstances it was impossible for Manleys army to push forward on a safe retreat, but who in such times would have followed so cowardly a course!Besides being here general Manley interfered and agreed he would make an effort to get Phelannies army saftly through t he dangerous territory and strike at Beppo Evans or Lansin imself and as he was just the man to keep his word no objection could be made.T hat was the plans you tried to overhear and failed.All this occured t he very evening you dined with the Vivian Girls and Phelan Tamerline.We poor little girls clung to the hope that your presence might avery avert the dead destiny.Yet oven with the best intentions would could you do to aid us without causing yourself to be made a prisoner.And if you were then hope to save them would be gone!When you had gone, o heart rending scene began.They were in Penrods sick room and Jannie wanted Penrod to try and go away with them out of the lines before Manley could seperate them but Penrod was unable to get out of bed.Phelan tin T amerline who did see so clearly and understood the necessity for so hasty a st p step for departure, tried to do something but Manley put his foot down He being the superior of all generals and expressed his open o host ility.He had discovered who violet, and her sisters were and asserted his aurthority.Phelan would lose his command if he befriended the Vivian Girls and he could not allow such a Phelan threatened to shoot Manley and there was a t errific scene.Manley after that lively intercourse decided to secretly outwit his enemy and get away with the Vivian Girls by a se secret scheme. General Manley dealt one more blow to insure the safty of his plans.He managed to secure a moment alone with t he older general Phellinia Tamerline, and frankly told him who Violet and her sisters were, t hat by rights they were his prisoners, that they had hoodwinked him and Adeldefob into believing they were Glandelinian girlscouts, and t hreatened the general and his two sons with disgrace and shame, and swore that he would sunder t he tie that bound him in high rank to t he Glandelinian government if he did not obey him and turn Violet and her sisters over to him and sent Adeldefob away to a base hospital somewhere far off.Oh if violet and her sisters could have fled from this Glandelinian army before it was too late.But they couldn't t hen bear to leave Penrod, and had to leave him at last by force.Before she was taken away poor Violet threw herself at my feet, think of it a little queen, implored me to find you and both of us to save her, and her sisters, sacrifice ant anything. She reminded me of all she and her sisters had done for me how she had raised me into so nice a little girlscout and gave me better favors than any one else. Poor violet's heart then broke with the cry"I have done all this, yes done all this,I will owe you more than the sacrifice of my own happiness can out weigh if you will save us through Tim.You Jani Jannie know all Glandelinian camps by heart .Follow us with Tim to Manleys and shadow us." She embraced me and then weeping bitterly like a soul to be lost bade me farewell.T he abyss that opened before her eyes had made them dim, although she st ill walks among the living, and unless she and her sisters are rescued she will bevhenchforth be dead to the light and joy of the world.Poor Penrod if he had not been wounded would have persued a different course, would have battered down the whole dhameful structure of treachery and cunning so cleverly devised by his enemy, and a and not allowed them to be ensnared by such wiles.When t hey heard their brother was gone first then t hey cried bitterly. Thus they're gone and to cover all t raches by which way they have gone Manley had the building and this part of the camp fired.The end you know Captian Tim."

Jannie was silent, and Tim was so much moved, and fiercely angry that he could not speak though he was filled with a terrific determination.

"But I have one thin g more to t ell you Capt ian"continued the little girl."You have doubtless anticipated it but I can confirm the truth.I have faith in the possession angels and feel you'll succeed through them because you were so good to them.As he had everywhere showed misfortune and rep reaped advantage from it he thought to gather some benefits for himself by the devastation caused our poor native land by the battle at Big Girl Knool.He is now moving for the right of the battle linevat Beppo Lansin.You know how things are there Captian.If he gets Beppo Evans into his hands t he most terrible things may happen for he is a man of blood like t he devils.I have not heard from violet and her sisters or Penrod since.But I have a suspicion ofvwhere t hey were taken."

With t hese words the faithful little girl concluded her story and for a moment Tim silently left her to her grief which he had no words of consolat ion, and then he suddenly laughed.

"If Manley thinks he can get away with it "He's making the biggest mistake in his life"said Tim controlling himself. "I'll bet you Jan ie I'll have Violet and hersisters beside me within less than two days.I can 't do nothing untill I get through the bat tle line into Beppo Lansin and I'm going to do it."

PTims fingers twitched to break t he seal of t he letter, but p violet and her sisters still lived, and he dared not commit any theft upon er holy legacy. Tim laughed again as he looked up.He climbed the pole and came back down. A telegraphic line traed the christian lines without a break."He said."You did not kn ow it while I was up there I signalled to t he christian lines and got Angelinia Aronburg connected on the phone by this little device I hold in my hand.She'll have a whole troop of disguised boy and girlscouts into Manleys lines in a hurry.She said that she told them not to spare any one who inter feres with them.Kill who all who resists.I will myself Jannie go into the enemys lines and if possible seek any one of the Vivian Girls first.I will first if possible give her this memento.She will find comfort in the words of the letter of the dead boyscout.I wish you to help as you promised Violet ."

Oh "Oh pray do, Captian and I surely will give you all t he help I can for poor violet and her sisters are very miserable.God will reward your good deed."

"He will reward you too"Tim said smiling though inwardly his heart really was heavy though he couldn't help laughing when he thought of Manleys folly.

Both made a firm resolution to save violet and her sisters first and then locate Penrod.

Making a firm resolut ion Tim contin ued on with the little brave girl, and after walking through the woods with the little girl suddenly turned and changed h is direction. She wondered what he was doing t hat before but he ceasing her questioning looks said;

"Ther There s no time to be lost .Come.I'm going to start proc eedings right away. Very soon after T im and Jennie was again within a portion of the army concent rated before the frightful battle of Beppo Lansin . where t he christ ian army seperated from general Vivian, and under Vivianis was making its des perate struggle against general Phellnina Tamerline and others.The combatants along the cent er had resisted the enemy most desperately and savagely but had been pushed to the last defenses, but many of the regiments of christians were resolved to die rather than to yeild and sealin g t heir fall by a majestic ebd end offered themselves a terrible sacrifice to death.The battle raged fiercely also in the shattered houses and streets of Beppo Lansin, in the fields around Jennie Richee, and Groveton Junct ion along a ten mile front and every on- slaught along this sector alone alone caused both sides t he loss of t hree hundred t housand killed. The various declarations of plans had been buried under ruins of buildings shattered by high explosives perishing in seas of blood and flames, with which the christian government of that town during t he first part of the seige had inflame inflamed t he heated fury of the very inhabitants against the ruthless enemy were now bearing their brave and righteous fruits. The Chicago Fire, could not look as severe as the burning of Beppo Lansin.

Forts fell before the Glandelin ian assailants, waves gave way before terrific explosions and yet the christian defenders declared no Glandelinian soldier shall t hread the sacred st reets of their city.The disaster however began to roll forward andcould not be stopped.The Glandelinians rushed forward tarough JennievRichee and turmer Fields in long waves, crossed long st one walls, fought their way through many fields in spite of dogged resistance and made a thousand Gettysburgs and Waterloos seem to be one.And who could con ciliate the t hree million hapless people shut up in t hese towns.Men women and children standing on the barricades with arms in t heir han ds, who saw before them only destruction fought like fiends against the Glandelinians and who had no object which they could obtain no compensation t hey could venture to expect if the enemy won a foot hold on these town s united solely by t he one great passion of inextinguishable but righteous hate of a cruel wicked enemy, and the firm resolution never to let t he enemy get into t heir t owns while t hey still were able to fight and die.Their own deeds of bravery had already opened behind t hem an abyss into which they would be forced because they could no longer advance. Therefore these hearts longing for vengeance only strove to do as much injury against the Glandelin ian besiegers before death and destruction overwhelmed them.Had general Vivianis failed along his right wing t hese t owns would have fallen.But his right wing held through the whole stubborn battle.From t he Height s of St John nearest Beppo Lansin, where the army of general Walter John Harrison was concentrat ed shot and shell poured upon t he Glandelinian army like a torrent of rain and t he strangest and fiercest battle t hat has probably ever taken place since Big Girl Knool raged.There were many battle visotrs visitors too for battles always brought crowds from afar to see battles and these were standing on hilly soil calmly gazing down at a furious extensive struggle taking b place before their eyes before the two armies.The advance of general Howards Glandelinians under general Tappypoo advanced across the farms tward t he east of Beppo Lansin like the waves of the sea.The country in t he west was peaceful, the region east and south a tremendous battle field.At the foot of St Johns hill the scene of the first struggle that was to decide Jennie Richee and Beppo Lansin surrounded in a wide curve by the Aronburgs Run wherever t he eye wandered, appeared long waves of troops approaching in fierce onslaught and yelling like demons, while from gardens, fertine fields, small villiages, rises of ground, wooded edges, hedges peasant villias, and proud Country palaces, farm houses, farm yards, long walls of smoke from art illery and musketry arose and the noise was dreadful.To be sure ruins everywhere rose above the t-ses, burned walls peered from amid hedges and plantations ot was the only first fleeting glance t hat could be decieved.At the right rose a lon g low ridge from which angry rolling t hunder echoed without ceasing and dense white smoke encircled the hills every broadside or barrgage sent terrible death and dest ruction into t he magnificent charging columns in gray.

CHAPTER THIRTY ONE.

DURING THE BATTLE OF BEPOO LANSIN VIOLET AND HER SISTERS ARE RESCUED. NO TRACE YET THOUGH OF PENROD.

ON the left st ood also menancing mistorftune misfortune the positions under general Phellinia Tamerline now t ransformed by the desperate christians who had captured it into a fortified works frowning with active cannon.Meantime elsewhere along Groveton Creek the enemy had been slightly successful but the fighting here was practically over on the left of this close by St Denis Hill also in possession of the enemy and here all was at illHowever that the decisive time was close at hand for such a bloody morning the condition of the assailants and t he defenders plainly indicated.The Glandelinian batteries how ver which had been shelling Beppo Lansin were almost completely silenced by christ ian batteries on'y at long intervals a cannon ball or a shrapnell shell roared ov t he blaze of musketry or machine guns flashed out for several munit ox minutes or an hour.Barricades along t he St jean of Arc's stream were carried and here a hundred thousand and one felt t he shock of t heir last moment s as a great explosion rended everything to fragments and sent a cloud of smoke dirt and debris ten thousand feet high with a report heard at Calverine city t hree hundred miles away.During this time of the battle Tim with Jennie with him had vainly endravored to find some trace of Gerald Starring first capture him and force him to take him to Manleys lines or kill him one or the other.But there was no means to do so and he was on the poit of giving up the quest and finding his way into Manleys lines himself w en he heard Starring was near by some place and being treated for his wounded wrist, and face.Then he also heard of the news of a Glandelinian "Noblemen whom some st range life struggle had driven into the arms of the christian side.Tim discovered this in a long lett er in an en velope which he took from a dead Glandelinian officers uniform coat pocket.The o opening lines attracted his attention, and going to a secluded spot with Jennie he found it was writt en in Abbieannina and therefore hastily t ranslated it in En glish w on another piece of paper and wrote as follows;

"This man also is one of those noblemen whom sickly ambition for t he crazy dirty and in u inhuman and indifferent christian cause, disordered affairs or rage at baffled hopes, have drawn int o our ranks, and who not only failed to aid our Glandelinian cause but did his best to actually injure it .He is a dangerous Christian spy called by some name of which we cann ot pronounce.A short time ago he helped t he Vivian Girl guttersnips double up to our famous boyscout Adeldefob, caused him and St arring to have a fight over them, in which Gerald St arring shot and wounded Adeldefob and t hen yet the vivian Girls almost killed him, and tore his face open with finger n ails and lash.T he Race of their gosh Darn Naughty Christian dog a of an Emperor was certainly distinguished enough t o ar adorn the fools t hey displayed, but mysterous rumors concerning the young black haired girl they had also befriended org origin soon arose, hewhich became st ill louder, when t he litt le girl though seeming to be one of our Glandelinian girlscouts showed a marked preference for Christian affairs, loved those dirty Vivian Girl snipes which seriously compromised their boy friend Adeldefob, as well as Gerald St arring in t he eyes of the whole Glandelinian army.It has been said that these girls were disguised as Glande linian girlscouts made pretended love to Adeldefob which has again showed how we cannot trust all girls within our lines who are strangers, even t hough they t hey are Abbieannina beauties.True in t his case it will be said"If this continues t hey'll convert Adeldefob to t he Christian cause, so Manley after arresting t he snipes, sent Adeldefob off to t he Base Hospital in his own army and will convey t he Vivian Girls t o some ot her spot.But Manley is deeply chargined because it has been proved that t hey are angel possessed. To disguise them so t hey won't be discovered by christ ian spies he gave orders that their hair should be cut off from t heir heads.Can any one do it.? N o.Nobody can touch t heir hair without for some reason or other getting their hands or fingers burned, mysteriously or the cutting appliances in their hands turning red hot at a touch on the hair.Manl y Manley can't do with t hem what he desired either.He decided to seperate Violet, from her wounded sisters soche'll never see them again, and the fury of battle enabled them to get away, and they are hiding somewhere now seeking t he help of some boyscout who is disguised within our lines and whom Manley thinks is a accomplise of their brot her Penrod, or may be him in person.Whether unpleasant thin gs which happened to the Vivian Girls or unpleasant disclosures speedily made their brother Penrod what he is or whether grief at the misfortunes of his sisters and his no account Christian Country really took hold upon that Orince, suffice it to say he is a dangerous foe to us, and can obtain anything he desires.When ever the least thing happens to one of his sisters hecns because of us he descends upon our army at an unexpected spot in a raid with the fury of a tornado.It happened again to day at Manleys lines and 10,000,000,000 worth of military property went up in flames and everything is taken away by t he raiders who massacred out prisoners they took, and carried off two million child slaves. He and his boy and girlscouts are dangerous.His activity in this depart ment may become important for he is superior in intellect and may be angel possessed himself."

Tim and Jannie after reading it st ood rigid with amazement, holding the paper written in Abbieannian in his hand, and t hen read t he lines a second and third time to be sure there was no deception.This wicked untrue slander undoubtedly concerned Violet, and her sisters, but that they really escaped Manley was a blessing.But they were still fugitives within the foe lines.

"When will unjust misfortune be permitted to go its way silently without having t he worlds con tempt and mockery at its hells"said Tim fiercely.

Jannie was too upset o t o say anything, and Tim put t he papers inside his inside vest pocket and paced hastily up and down his room.What was to be done now.That t hat strange man talked about was really still within the christian lines or foe lines rather and had been the cause of their escapade and occupying some prominent position there, while aiding them and frust rating the enemy admitted of no quest ion.Tim thanked God He had shown such consideration to poor violet and her sisters, and then t Tim remembered the words; "Man wickedly imposes, God just ly and fiercely disposes." But howewe Tim to find, how to reach him.How easily he might vanish in the confusion of fighting in the tremendous battle, probably fall on some barricade, his name forever unknown. He alone could help him get violet and her sisters safely out of the lines.For Tim to find Penrod that was as easy as eating pie for now by this note he knew where he was tak n and Jannie knew too.Yet though yet now free from Manley and at liberty but in hiding within t he dangerous foes lines, yet terrible uncertainlty was their lot.They had never been in such a predacinent in their lives before, and Gerald Starring was to blame.Time eyes gleamed wickedly. He told Jannie to remain in the house till he came back and went hastily out . He came back and when she asked him where he went he said gruffly;

"I was desperate.I was going to kill Starring but he is no where around.I am resolved to find violet and her sisters at any cost and rescue them."

"But just now it is dangerous."said Jannie.

"I'm not afraid of danger.I'm afraid of their fate"said Tim wit h a darkened face.I'm going.You must accompany me as you kn ow more about Glandelinian armies than I do.I hope you're not afraid.!"

Jannievonly giggled.

"My love for the Princesses makes me desire dangerous experiences"she answered.

Tim and littleJannie, had their quarters in a big Hess Hall directly beside the main officers tent some distance off from the roaring battle field----where there were always some visitors--officers military magistrates or even Glandelin ian soldiery and spies,(pies punch in the eyes)--- and in this way Tim and Jannie obta ined the earliest news of any event.

"The army of Glandelinia cannot press on tward Beppo Lansin.The christian army is in Beppo Lansin.Great loss along our Glandelinian troops."Tim heard some one explain at that moment , and a loud discussion instantly followed t he announcement .Tim too at Jannie's advice opened the door.It was really t rue a courier had just brought the news to headquarters.Ever since the beginning of the battle that early morning the christian troops had been in the city that is a portion of the christian army, even though elsewhere the attacking Glandel inian columns had penetrated the strongly defended trenches at the left two hours earlier.Elsewhere for a time the fiercest attacks of the Glandelinians seemed to be quelled sooner than any one had expected, and no one foresaw t he after events of t hat bloody morning.Hearing t hat general Turner who also had some thing to do with the Vivian Girls being taken away by Manley had been mortally wounded and would not live three days(Those always that those harming the Vivian Girls do not have any luck for Manley too was severely wounded) Tim instantly hurried to headquarters, determined to risk everything to gain i his object.Of course withthe savage a battle raging, nearly as severe as Big Girl Knool, this would not be accomplished without difficulty and danger.Tim was dissuaded, but at his earnest entreaties, plans of giving him and Jannie a safe conduct were discussed for Tim could not risk being stopped by t he first sentinel, and too t he officer to whom Tim Petenpetitioned also said that to do so the boy must also carry with him in display a white flag, so that the "Christian dogs"won't fire on im him. Tim did not know what he really wanted, but at Jannie's advice some secret impulse urged t hem both above all things to seek this wounded Glandelinian general before he died.Mountain country to all expectations, the battle of Beppo Lansin in t he vicinity of Beppo Lansin renewed after a short pause with redoubled fury.The enemy was not going to allow himself to be worsted, under any conditions whatever, and the christian side was equally if not more deter mined to win, and it raged as savagely as a battle could ever rage, and the noise along such an extensive battle line was beyond all description and fearfully shock ing to the nerves.The Glandelinians had recovered and rallied after their first repulse and swarmed t he outer city streets of the town, while t he defendants the christian army and even the pu population men women and children fought like fiends and resolved to sell their lives dearly.To force an entrance int o the cities of Jennie Richee or Beppo Lansin was as easy as for a man to walk across a lake of water with ten ton shoes tied to his feet.Irritat ion rose to blind fury.The Glandelin ians pressed into t he outer surburbs of the city in wave format ion along a extensive front .It lasted two hours, and regiments only came back to tell the tale.General Monrouge of the Glandelinians was mort ally wounded, and Richardshion Batigollos was kille n.Western Jennie Richee was in t he hands of t he christian troops, and t he resist ance against the foe progressed with immeasurable speed.Long waves of ch istians defended walls of out houses, palaces and gardens in the country, and ditches, pouring an annihilatin g fire of artillery and rifles upon the Glandelinian soldiery. The Glandelinians were reckless and attacked and attacked.Their own artillery covered the attack but in vain.But t he Glandelinians were successful in t he battle territory somewhere near where Tim could see the titanic conflict though the Glandelinian losses were dreadful.Yet t he Glandelinian troops st eadily advanced.though the christian fire was as severe as if Mt Pelee had exploded upon the enemy here.But their advance ed was resisted as doggedly as if the christians were only there to waste their own n ammunition for sport and shooting at nothing.Ten Glandelinian generals were killed in this territory fourt y wounded and whole divisions of Glandelin ians swat away.Their attack was mowed down in waves, yet the strong columns of troops worked their way unweariedly recklessly and bravely t hrough the walls of shattered houses, and trying to surprise the defenders in the rear but from elsewhere met a withering fire from women and even little boys and girls that annihilated their attack at this quarter.In the ruins of a shed general Phaeton was killed also bylad laid low by a hand grenade tossed by a little girl. On the main right of t he battle line general Hindernine pressed twrd the works before him in a counter charge against the enemy, on the left general Pn P under marched on the t own of Aldro.But the Glandelinians had thus gradually surrounded t his sect ion of the christian works, and the resistance of the christians it was believed would soon be crushed as soon as the central portion of the Glandelinian army under general Dargin followed through the center of the christian position. General Francis Groveton and his generals led a simultaneous line of I,500,000 under the cover of five thousand cannon against the christians in this territory and the battle raged with the fury of t he World War.everywhere on t he surbords outer outskirts of Jennie Richee batteries of cannon of every kind were fired, and along the whole battle line everywhere rose the fiercest and most steady uproar of musketry and machine guns ever heard in battle, the noise in creased a thousand fold by the countless ad echoes.Shrapnell tore the air with the dreadful din and high explosives made the landscapes look like a gigantic volcanic region. Manley big conflagrations raged.At ten oclock the great position defended by t he christians in front of Beppo Lan ain but half a mile away was taken, and t he sot storming waves of Glandelinians pressed forward upon the vinicity of Calls farms and glens but met here stouter resistance than expected. In the north of Beppo Lansin at the same time the war a near Aldro fell after most bloody fighting of over five hours.Then the Glandelinians pressed on but their advan advance was disastorously chec ed by the severe fire from every outskirt house garden and other placesof the town, the christians and even women and children too rushed forward to count or attack and t he Aldro works were retaken. Tim too heard the terrible news that Beppo Lansin was in flames.All of those who were near rushed to the observatory, and the first glance showed thatbt he news was true.The biggest and smoke dense clouds of smoke Tim and Jannie had ever seen in their life time rose above certain sections of the city.One could see many big buildings burning and slowly and je majestically t he sullen v l volcanic like masses of smoke spread over the sky above the city while here and t here a forked tongue of flame app eared to leap up t he consuming element raging in more than a dozen places and from the Glandelin ians batteries poured voll y volley after volley into the burning city, while petroleum bombs and clouds of searing liquid fire added to the conflagration.The hollow sound of hundreds of explosions, and falling walls was p a plaint y heard. The Glandelinian generals had kept their promise and were now having their batteries send their terrible war messengers, bearing the torch of incendiarism through t he city hoping to drive out the defenders that way .

Tim and Jannie saw that there was no time to be lost.He determined to take advantage of the confusion of the battle and try to find that wounded Glandelinian general. The Glandelinians would be constantly be pressed thinter thit her to move against the christian defenders, for the main christian positions were in Jannie Richee, and in this direction it was possible the Glandelinian generals would attempt by having their troops bursting through in dense crowds of attack to break up the unusual desperate and record breaking record breaking christian resistance.Therefore therefore this quarter of the Glandelinian position and commencot yet under fire would earliest afford an opportunity of inquiring in quiring among the Glandelinian officials for the general named Turner.As Tim and Jannie disguised more so as a Glandelinian boy and girlscout hurried through St Denis Farm at about eleven oclock so much smoke poured from the conflagrations that at first it grew nearly as dark as night, but the glare of the fires soon makde it so brilliant that one could read by it, and a constant stream of sparks and burning fragments whirled through the air.Half scorched bits of paper was strewn everywhere.At a distance it could be seen that Jannie Richee also was burning, the t he conflict howe however still continuing in the blazing streets, and on the smoking heap of ruin.As Tim and Jannie rode through the Nelsonia Territory still not touched by battle he learned from a Glandelinian officer that several gr at columns of christians had tried to pass the Horse Shoe Bend of the Aroniverge gun but had been driven back with fearful loss.A painful necessity so the enemy officer said. In the remainder of the city of Jannie Richee still possessed by the great number of christian defenders the fury of deadly battle still held inexorable sway.The point in quiest ion with each individual division was to the fact that no Glandelinian army will capture the city, except over their dead bodies.It was indeed a massacring, and most destructive battle.Tim asked first for wounded Glandelinian soldiers, and at last stumbled upon an enormous row.These prisoners These wounded soldiers knew their doom and there were thousands upon thousands of them here.They were all mortally wounded.In reply to Tims questions of one of them all denoyed that they belonged to general Turners command but heard nevertheless that the general had fallen at St Jeans Creek.

One very young Glandelinian soldier only boasted with a defiant smile that he had fought against the "Christian dogs" in the barricades with his regiment saying that he had only left home a few weeks ago bidding farewell to a sister ling at Glandelin in City."I want ed to die for the cause."he cried proudly.

"you'll soon die soon enough now for you're mortally wounded in three times" said a Glandelinian officer sympathetically."These christian dogs murdered you."

Tim and Jannie could not help shuddering at the sight before them of so many wounded with dreadfully bloody bandages on any member of their bodies with parts of heads shot away, sides of bodies torn open or shattered, hip and dreadful back and chest wounds faces torn away, abdomens partly torn away and dreadful wounds, of a thousand different cases too hi horrible to explain here.How low this nation and its government had sunk, thus to rend itself before a powerful christian foe which in the long run could never even be worsted by the Gates of Hell.Tim despite the fact the he wounded young man was a Glandelinian almost liked him, told him for whom he was looking, and mentioned the name of Turner, told about Manley capturing the Vivian Girl Princesses in general Phelans headquarters, and of the wounding of Adoldofo.

"Are you looking for general Hendro Lecrocque Turner who fell at St Jeans!"he asked after a few moments reflection.

"Yes he is the one sir."

"Well he commanded at the Abatis works near St Jeans creek, and the christian troops sure got it hard from him."

"Is that true no mistaking the name!"

That is the general sir.He has only three hours to live sir."

"Three hours."!

Yes."

"Where in the world can I find him."

"At Base hospital tent number ten.It 's some distance from here boy."

So one clew had been found.Tim asked other questions and recieved furt her information which made him almost certain of his prize.The young soldier was humane and expressed his sincere regrets that violet and her sisters were in Manleys possession but looked relieved when Tim told him he heard the girls escaped.

The poor young humane Glandelinian soldier.His life too was gone in a few hours. His hip and a part of his abdomen had been torn away and half of his big bowel with it but he had not suffered much because morphia had been injected into him by the doctors she he could die painlessly. Tim and Jannie now had a definite goal, and hurried toward Vincennes creek where a great part of the extensive battle was raging with insane mad fury.It was evident from the obstinacy of the christian defense here that brave officers commanded the Nationals, the firing was terrific and the greatest columns of Glandelinians could not make the slightest headway and whole waves of troops went to their deaths in that attack.

General Button, , Caillia, and Goublin had fallen on their side, and with the fury of the resistance all the whole left bank of the stream at this point was in danger of being captured by the fiercely counter charging christian troops.The Countar attackers continued their reserves were and more to this spot.The Glandelinian resistance was terrible beyond description but did no good.Tim did not pay out any attention to the battle however.Several times in reply to Tims questions the news that general Turner and not Turner as was supposed to be his name had fallen mortally wounded and only had three hours to live was confirmed.At first he had been variously reported dead, a prisoner, wounded, and also safe and at liberty.Nothing because of the confusion of the battle at first could be ascertained the only thing certain was that the general had played a most conspicious part in the squab l squabble and exposed himself the christian fire recklessly.

The noise of battle disturbed Tim but nothing could be done, and poor Jannie was shocked by the noise and put cotton in her ears to keep out the noise.

Sometimes close and sometimes distant fresh discharges of miskatry were certainly heard.The christians were getting worsted, so was the report, but the pitiless vengeance vengeance of the defeated defenders was sowing horror and flame along the battle line.Tim hastened toward the base hospital with the next courier.From there while on the way Tim could see with the help of his field glasses the scene of boundless devastation.Half demolished houses of the town, broken barricades on the surburbs, wagons and cannons overthrown, weapons and furniture scattered everywhere.Small bands of christian prisoners were being brought in from every direction most of them ragged and wounded and covered with bloody bandages.Yet the battle was still in full course.Zeal for victory on both sides, and fury in man many conflicts savage in the extreme shared in the work.Anxious terrified faces of child slaves peered at Tim and Jannie.Numerous bodies of fresh troops were were moving forward, and Tim was forced to admit the impossibility of finding the base hospital in all this confusion and devastation.He was greatly depressed and so was Jannie, when a christian spy officer whom Tim had become recently acquainted acquainted with happened to be passing, and recognizing Tim despite his disguise for he knew knew Tims way of disguising turned and called to him!--

"Were you not looking for a wounded Glandelinian general named Hendro Lerocque Turner! "

"Certainly.Is he here!"

"A mortally wounded Glandelinian general by that name has just been brought here by some of the Turn ercommion National Guard."

The fact that this officer knew Tim was so eagerly seeking a wounded Glandelinian general had of course att racted attention, and to this fact Tim owed the information now obtained.

"Where is the wounded general!"

"In the ambulance ten Number TO.See the tent is right over there(pointing) It's pretty far but you can reach it .But don't let him know who you are."

Tim than thanked him and went to the ambulance ten and gathered his horse.A nurse wearing the Glandelinia"charity"design met Tim at the door of the tent.

"Is there a Glandelinian general of the Turnercommion National Guard here!"

"He certainly is.General Turner."

"Where are the man who brought him!"

"They went back to fight the enemy at the front , the wounded man was only recieved here because he could not have stood it being carried further."

"May I and this little girl scout see him."!

"You may but it won't do you any good.His condition is very critical, he will scarcely life another hour and a half."

Th"Then it is far more absolutely necessary for us to have an interview with him.

Not on our own account but somebody elses. "I im host ily added half forcing his way into the ant erroom and Jannie following quickly.The wounded general lay on a cot in the cont er of the tent .A nurse and a doctor was bending over him and the ap apartment of the tent was lighted.The first glance removed every doubt .General Turner lay beforev them.The life blood was streaming from a frightful shell wound in his breast, the shadows of death already rested on his bearded face.even one of his arms was gone, and half a leg.Tim and Jannie stood still unnoticed.The soldier asked Tim what he wanted.Tim begged him to tell the wounded general that a boy scout and a little girl whom he had known in Phelans headquarters wished to ask general Turner if he had any message for General Manley.The soldier looked at Tim and Jannie in surprise, but when both insisted, then did as Tim requested.The general reflected a moment, then answered in a perfectly heard tone"Yes.I'll interview-----them." He turned toward Tim and Jannie, scanned their figure, and his memory seemed to awaken.A wave of his hand invited Tim and Jannie to a seat beside the bed, and he requested his nurse and the soldier to leave him.The next moment the two brave children were alone with him. Tim had wished even despite his small boyish size to confront this general with the full strength of his scorn and fury.Now he saw the justifiec vengeance he had desired to wreck fulfilled without his aid.,very feeling of hate for the general vanished.Tim and Jannie sat down silently and gazed into his dim eyes.

" Despite your disguise you two children I know you, and you have come t o settle accounts with me, it does you honor for your cause I suppose, but you are too late a christian shrapnell has anticipated you."

Tim made no reply, for he apparently grasped the boys thoughts.

"You know that "Adoldefoh "fell wounded in General Phalanx headquarters."I

"F i Fell!"I in rep i replied involuntarily in a loud ringtoning t one.but the words had hardly escaped Tims lips or ere he repented.Although it was now his most dei dire wish to know the true history of the dark deed, those unwilling witness Tim and Jannie too had been, it was cruel harshness to insult a dying man even though he be a Glandelinian soldier.But he seemed to have almost an expected it---he was perfectly unmoved---as unmoved as if he was innocent.

"Did you have that suspicion!"he asked after a pause."Could the a scoundrel have declared me.Tell me all you kn ow of t hat shooting g done by Gerald Starring."

Tim then related how it all happened and described what he had seen.He listened quietly and seemed satisfied.

"I was sore afraid eyes might have more to tell me."he remarked calmly after a time."Since I am n now dying, instead of exposing you to my soldiers as I would have, I won't if you'll forgive me and tell you everything you wish to know."

"Tim answered:

"When a foe falls and is dying g we're supposed to be enemies no longer .Why should I not forgive."

"All right my boy.Here's my hand, an"and both shook hands heartily.Then he shook Jannie's hand and then said"It will not now be difficult for me to free myself from the horrible doubt that otherwise must rest upon me.Listen I have on y only a few words to say."

Tim was silent and he began i his story.

"I tell you honestly though you know it not I did not side with Manley and tried to aid General Phalanx Tamerline.That skunk Manley would not have succeeded in taking them had not general Phalanx been wounded.We knew through investigations t hat happiness through the war has not ended upon the Vivian Girls during life and it astonishes me that they are not willing to lie and save themselves future sorrow horror and misery.They endure more than any of your listed Christian Saints do, and I hope for my sof s sparing this cause God will forgive me.Those Vivian Girl Princesses for the sake of their cause have strove to reach ideal goals.You have doubtless heard that I was a staff officer of general Phallinia Tamerline.I do not know why but secretly I always watched those girls and that boy Adoldefoh, and the Vivian Girls to his were like litt le sweet hearts of sisters.He did love them so ardently that those who knew of it were suspicious.Starring did not mind any message he knew no chance to. But Phalanx Tamerline didn't--- "he paused and only after a long duly cot continued wit h great effort---

"Fate did not suffer t hem to be unto united, , it was good in a way for t hey shouldn't be that friendly to a Glandelinian because who is their enemy.By the degree of Manley they were forced to be departed, I thought both sides were to blame but couldn't understand to save my life why they grieved to be parted from him until I was surprised to learn t hat he was their little prin c ely brot her in disguise.Is t thank God not to t heir safty I told never a soul and strove to frustrate Manley all the more but to no avail. Because of that sad scene I always felt juste responsible.However know where Penrod was taken and can give you directions by this envelope(which he handed to Tim) who opened it and looked at it)I know that Gerald Starring was a rottenly bad boy, that he possessed a passionate nature, not of love, but of unconcerning raging anger and fury against them, t hat that boy had often been cruel to them who because of it righteously once betrayed him, and made t h him t hem feel their power over him.I saw them once face to face, and from t heir deep soulful eyes a heaven looked forth at me.I dr ried one night that they might once more have joy in life.The boy Adoldefoh watched and treated the little girls like the apple of his eye, treated them like statues." Again he paused to take breath and control his agitation."

"And yet I blame myself that they were taken away by Manley for I believe I did not watch them carefully enough"he continued"I thought they were too sure of security because they're said to be angel possessed.The tragedy happened, Gerald Starring shot and wounded Penrod seriously, slightly wounded his sisters, now t hey were captured by the general Manley, the rest you know or have guessed. I'm or was fully at heart of my cause but I couldn't cond help condemning such an act of treachery.Can you blame any boy for furiously defending his best possession against t hat little snake.Who can't help hating Manley for attemp t ing to seperate the Princesses from each other so t hey would never see each other again, and to cut off their hair so no rescuer could recognize them! God was good in preventing that plot.Their hair t oo is possessed thant heaven s . No one could touch t hair hair without their hands being mysteriously burned.

T hat brave boy "Adoldefoh"saw their brother in disguis e.His love for his sisters though caused all the trouble.Starring was that and took reven ge.Starring was captured by me but got away again at Manley,s orders.When then Manley questioned him as to t he shooting he told the general"Why should I yield when I t hought my right grantor.Through foolish love of t hose Vivian Girls Adoldefoh retains them and won't let me take them as prisoners.I have a right to shoot him because he attacked me when I t ried to recover my pistol." And yet how much better for that rascal to have committed the situation than to have destroyed his own and others hap i happiness.He'll be afraid of those Princesses now.Yet you will understand that everything to general Manley depended on t he outwitting of general Phalanx Tamerline and me.Yet had general Tamerline not been so reckless in the early on part of the battle he would not have been wounded.But grief over the plight of the Vivian Girls who once saved his life, and rebellion made him t ake greatness shunsen."

The wounded general paused .''' His suspense or Tims suspense increased after he must loved the wounding g of general Tamerline.He soon continued:

"Meantime some of thevother generals though they were in favor of Violet, and her sisters were forced to give them into the possession of Manley, and in fact I was oneof them.Blinded by fury against them Manley t ried to exercise a t errible compulsion upon their decision, but Heavens knows I never saw braver little girls than they.It was a great error for him for he couldn't get nothing out of t hem, they wouldn't obey any of his wishes, and as t hey were armed too he didn't really take them as you say good.When the right time came seeing Penrod was gone they set fire to t he building and escaped and fired the tents.That is why you saw t he conflagration.So crazy Manley rudje ruined everything himself.I helped t hem to make the escape, and that envelope I gave youthen a letter telling you where to find them.I was going to send it to Adoldefoh"but since you're here you can use it and you'll easily trace them.Poor Jannie is nine almost insane because of t he seperation of her brother, and thinks sometimes she sees him.The news of the seperation arrived throughout the whole army, and I clearly perceived t hat I too should be looked upon as also guilty of their untimely sorrow, especially by the Vivian Girl Princesses whom they are at first I defended.Their brother and they loved themselves with the whole fervor of their passionate hearts and t hey cannot st and t he seperation long.They'll die of grief and Jannie will lose her reason for life.Go to them t o day if possible.I sought another of the generals who had also befriended t hem.I feared he had misunderstood me t hat a most terrible blunder had really made me that people and the army thought me.You see horrible as his face is yet general Phallinia Tamerline is humane and also secretly opposed Manley.I and he managed to help t he girls escape and so knew where Penrod was taken.I found that general severely wounded as he believed at the point of death.A bullet had shattered t he left hand, and an ot her pierced his breast.He swore that he was innocent, t hat my suspicion that he gave them up to Manley was wholly unfounded, t herefore I became convinced t hat he spoke the truth, especially when he had witnesses brought before me, who declared that Manley was secretly frustrated that he did not have the chance o to carry out his threat after failing to have their hair cut off and t hat at midnight they escaped from Phalanx Tamerlines headquarters, t hrough him and Fathers help by a secret underground route."My soul was now free from a t errible burden, but I t old myself that I should not be believed especially by t he Christians if I ever was captured, the suspicion resting on me made it terrifically dangerous for me to become a christian prisoner.So t hrough that danger I sought for what I have found,---death, my minutes are numbered .''''''/ ( )

Again there was a long pause.

"You b ing a disguised christian boyscout captain by the name of T imothy Groveton "were only my enemy as duty to your country demanded but I had seen at times too t hat because of the Vivian Girls you also were bound by my personal foe not understand me.But death and the truth of what I say regarding everything, it extinguishes hatred but not love.You will not refuse to grant my last requests I wish you to take my last message to those poor little tykes who have suffered so much through Gerald Starring and Manley.Your presence too will cheer Jann ie and your news as to the whereabout s of her brother will prevent her from losing her mind though Heaven knows they may all go insane.I hope tod your presence may hope for them some slight consolation."

"I willingly promise"said Tim.

"Thanks to my own efforts and Phalanxs Tamerline, Violet and her sisters though still within the Glandelini n e my camps are free once more.Disguise them well as well that Manley or Starring won't be able to recognize them, as to getout of the enemy lines so far is p impossible but account of P rsods condition for I know they won't leave him just for that.Tell them I give my blessing, that I earnestly beseech t hem to forgive me for fighting on this side, t ell them they must try to get the best of Manley for nobody even on our side likes ov him though they fear him.They are st ill young, and their lit tle hearts are strong enough.They must do it. for my sake; that my guilt may be removed from me and that I through their angels intercession I'll be pardoned in Heaven and only go to Purgatory if not to Heaven right away.and through your help, the Vivian Girls, poor little souls, they will now find rest , they have abundantly suffered for what they didn't deserve, something misdemeanors them freedom and more happiness.Remember me to their noble brother Penrod whom I also attended when he was wounded, and ask his forgiveness also in my names I have no other Christians near me, and therefore such address my request to you Capt Ian Groveton, whom a fortunate accident has brought here."

He held out his hand, which Tim grasped in a strange tumult of feelings.Then he held his hand to Jennie and she too grasped it.Then he seemed relieved, closed his eyes and motioned to Tim.Then after a few more words Tim left the room and called the nurse.Both he and Jenn ie were deeply agitated for a long time.He felt a emotion of remorse remorse, that he had executed only orders of Phelel n Phellin ies staff against the Vivian Girls, while they tried to break up the danger of their lives being made wretched and ruined by Manley and finally by the Grace of God succeeded, for no not for who they are who befriended Violet and her sisters luck was with them.These Glandelinian generals enemies of Manley certainly deserved compassion and credit more than reproach even if fighting on the Glandelinian side.There no were more of these kind too.Accountants, Francis Adeldegarbo, Leonin Maldenin nicknell, Frank Manley, Josephine Jensin, Unimannie Shoemannie and others who had fought their superiors for the safty of violet, and her sisters, and these generals never had a stroke of bad luck even in battle.

God was more good to the big general Turner than expected too.The next hour Tim believing the man was dead went to seek the wounded man again to say some prayers in secret for the repose of his soul, and inquiring for his health recieved the astonishing remark that the general had been removed to the Base Hospital and that the surgeons were absolutely able to save him life, but that the general would never be in a condition to serve in the army any more.When he entered his own home he found in the anterooms a party of Glandelinian military police; they wanted to arrest Gen Gerald Stirring shouting "Adeldefob" whose presence had not long been concealed but the little brat had escaped to Manleys army by now where he was safe.A warrant from general Phellinin Tamerline gave them the necessary authority no objection could be made, and Tim knowing where Stirring went happily and without objection gave the necessary information.To cause him arrest would give him open play in favor of violet and her sisters.

"We'll get him there"said the Military police."We'll even make him answer for what he has done to these Vivian Girls.They didn't say on us only were here as guests, and therefore though fighting on opposite sides we're friends. But"and he whispered to Groveton"" , or must look out for Big lord Tamerline. He's their enemy and has sworn them to the general Manley.That is how he knew who they were and tried to take them."

Grob Groveton went to his room to read the note the general had given him.It gave details where violet and her sisters had been secretly shelt ered. Tim decided to go to that spot as soon as the battle would slacken up, he could not go from sildiely.The wrathe of Elecara which hung over Tims reeling table reminded him of the cruel fate that near came upon violet and her sisters and so he sent immediately his investigations desperately, and finally learned from a Glandelinian boyscout of Phelen Tamerlinen army that Violet and her sisters were in Barracks No 11 but the distance was three miles toward the south. Tim got the desired permission and pass from Phelanmin Tamerline who gave his express wish for Tims success, and hast en ed toward that locat ion.He suspected wit h a fear at first that Violet and her sisters urged by the longing for Penrod had wished and probably tried to find their way to that spot by examining base hospitals, but soon learned they had not dared to leave the spot for fear of running int o Manley.Tim then first occupied a room in that barracks building number 11, made himself as comfort able as he could, and det ermined to wi wait at his post relying on his good luck, and sent Jennie to try and find them.Intercourse with N ature too was very sent hing after so much excitement and anxiet y, painful expressions gradually faded, the noise of batt le was not so near and loud here, and Tim began to t hink more calmly of what had occured.

How could Tim expect, that after such dreadful unjust trials, Violet and her sisters would everrecolve to begin a new life and seek happiness.True the supposed to be dying generals had given his blessing upon them, but the only one she and her sisters loved most of allwho alone could exert any influence on their hearts had been forced to pa tpart from them.Loyalty to brot her and parents was their sacred duty, from which death alone could absolve them, and which would not absolve them, because they never go forgot those that died who had loved them. Because Penrod too had suffered all this w for their sake they loved him all the more.Tim told himself these things, and determined to prevent a furt her disaster upon them by also getting their brother.T im was determined to keep his promises and do this ge properly so he would not have to blunder and bid an et ernal farewell to all his hopes and wishes.Tim t oo was no lon ger able to banish all anxiety about their welfare and it was doubtful now that all t hese circumstances were looking, they would ever recover from t he shock.And too th e t he peculiarly romantic circumstances under which Tim had so early before made the acquaintance of the Vivian Girls had undoubtedly produ produced the strongest influen ce upon him.She and her sisters too had the same impression, looked upon Tim as an angel in disguise.Thus armed wit h a number of sensible reflections, he quietly awaited the chance to locate violet and her sisters. By dinner t ime a card came from a secret Glandelinian girlscout friend and which informed him t hat seven lit tle girls probably the ones he was seeking, were to be found in Barracks room number A 70.Tim also learned t hat they were in deep sorrow and not expecting his or Jennie's chance to help them.T im laughed at t hat remembering what he had said to Jennie"I'll bet you I'll have t hem beside me within two days.He said that only three hours ago.And now he was to see t hem before the third hour was up.What kind of a boy am I he thought t o him self and what will Jennie who was now leading him hurriedly t ward the room say when she thinks of it .They both hurried toward the room with throbbing hearts and t o a guard standing at the door handed his name.

Joice herself came to the door, and received t im, formally it is t rue, but with cordiality.She did not know him, for he had disguised himself so t hat he looked entirely different before the sad even ts.he thinking he was only a humane friendly Glandelinian boyscout came to either express his sympathy or give news held out her hand and let him kiss it , without even trying to conceal her emotion or her sorrow.The memory of Adeldefob being seperated from her and her sisters could not fail t o be freshly and painfully cutt ing at sight of Tim.

"You are welcome sir though you're what we may call a friendly enemy."she said sadly."Days like these I and my sisters have experienced t ogether oft en united human beings more closely together than usual.We have not forgotten that you were coming, you are a gendrems and no'le enemy, and yet try to be a friend nevertheless .I suppose Tim Groveton sent youmand Jennie."

Tim was surprised by this and understood his disguise fooled her.After a pause she added"I am particularly glad t o see you, to be able to express my thanks for what you had those humane Glandelinian generals do for me and my sisters."

Tim looked at her inquiring gly.

"You brought wit h you too a little friend of ours, t hough no one imposed that duty on you."

"Any other right thinking boy who had been received into your presence, and witnessed the horrors I did would have done t he same---"

Joice did not let him finish the sentence.

""T im Groveton "she gasped recognizing t he voice and putting her hand on her chest ."I didn't know you.How you have disguised yourself."And before he could think what was to happened she threw her arms around him and hugged and kissed him wi while the tears of joy ran down her cheeks.

"You were present when they took our brother away."she exclaimed quickly weeping as she laid her head against his breast."You"You spoke wit h him.T ell me what you kn ow.The misfortunes overwhelming us and our holy country have been t oo great for people to remember every even t.I have never heard the part iculars. "We planned to hunt for him.And poor Jennie and Violet.They're almost insane. They'll be glad to see you.""

"she spoke very eagerly, but just as T im was about to begin to t ell t he story, the door opened and Catherine and others appeared and Joice motioned T im to be silent for a moment to see what the impression was.

Joices sisters st ood before Tim and Jennie. They did not recognise him and looked on him at first kind of coldly, but when Tim gave forth his voice t hey surely did recognise him.

"Oh Tim T im"cried poor Jennie weeping on his shoulder."You found us so soon.We couldn't expect such good luck.They t ried to cut our he hair off and two Glandelinians are dead for it.Come inside, and you Jennie dear and be seated.Oh this is too good to be true."

As Tim and Jennie did so Catherine who was the most composed told their experiences how they got away and how long they were in hiding here.They t hanked him lovingly, and wished Tim to tell of all his experiences but obeying Joices sign Tim for the moment withheld those relating to t he boyscout Adeldefob or general Turner.As t hey t old of their sad experience and how and why Manley failed to keep his t hreat because t hey were armed, and could defend themselves, and how they shot and wounded him and then got away Tim had t ime to look at t he poor little girls.suffering was distinctly visible in their features yet t hey expressed a calm repose, their language was more musical, smoother than even a half day ago before the sad thing happened. Jenn ie too had altered very little ext ernally but she was grave and somewhat taciturn..

Any keen sighted stranger who did not know her history or the history of her sisters could have seen that t heir hearts were broken.Tim could not doubt it an instant.But he could easily speal of what at first moved him most deeply, and he t old them that he had somet hin g secret for them, that for a time he must leave them as he wished to secure some very niffie disguises for t hem. When t hey at arted to demure saying they wouldn't leave under any conditions untill they saw their brother Tim answered;

"We n eed not leave.And believe me you're safe.I've connected wit h Angelinia Aranburg and she sent or is sending enmy spies here to t race you.But now since finding you I'll have tp prevent them from taking you and you warn them to remain and not to go.I'll tell you my secret when I come back.It's a pleasant secret."

Then t hen rose and very rel reluctantly took his leave but l aving Jannie with t hem as he wished to get the disguises so as to fool Manley and Starring.

Violet and her sisters with their eyes still dimmed with tears accompan ied him to the door, and Violet tryin g to smile through her t ears, and oh she looked so piteous as to cut Tims heart told him she and her sisters would expect him that afternoon.It took Tim some time to obtain t he proper disguises he wanted but a goodly and kindly Gln Glandelinian quarter master sergeant whose heart was only one third in the Glandelinian cause, and who was going to st ep out if he saw a chance to resign, helped tim out and got him t he required disguises he needed.The sergeant said;

"The main thing you must see to it is that they disguise their voices.That is the main detection.And disguise their looks if possible."

Tim thanked him warmly, and then went to the building and was again admitt ed to t heir apartment.Jennie who recieved him invited Tim to ta e a seat bet ween between her and her sisters.Jennie herself sat half in t he shadow so Tim could not see her sad face distinctly.

"I and my sisters----are now -- alone and need fear --no interruption--she"she half sobbed.And Tim began.He t old Violet and her sisters all he knew about the sit uation, how he had seen the rascals of the enemy gen erals working for Manley in spite of Phelans protests take poor Penrod away, described the Princes bravery and how he t ried to bear up under the awful cross of sorrow of parting. The little girls wept, but Jennie covered her eyes wit h her han d, but her deep emption did not escape Tims notice.Pride for her brother, and deep sorrow at his partin g and overbearing loneliness was struggling in her breast .Tim could see by Violets face that she was nearly crazy for she suddenly exclaimed"Insee Penrod.There he is.Don't you see him sisters."and they had a hard time to cont rol her and she burst out into passionate weeping.Then when T im paused in his efforts to restore Violet to a calm a long silence followed, a deep sigh escaped poor Joices lips.Then she said;

"My dear bravest brother to suffer all this for us.I and my sisters always know him thus.He did things worthy of his name and nat ion.If Abbiomnia had had many such boys, we should not have experienced Abbiconn, Cedornine Big Girl Knool and Evangeline St a Clare and we little girls would not have suffered su so cruelly.Accept my thanks once more my dear friend.You are like a new brother t o us."she said.

Tim gave her the letter addressed to them by t he dead boyscout , and she and her sisters(except Violet) gazed at the familiar characters with deep emotion. Violet had fall into a sort of troublesome sleep.

"This is a precious proff t hat t he last thoughts of our scouts are always for us."said Joice."Oh my sisters deserved to be happy.Poor Jennie and Violet . They're almost out of their minds and will be soon if Penrod is not found. Unfortunately I did not suspect our l ve had taken such deep root or I and my sisters would have fought for him, but we have atoned for the guilt of others like our blessed Lord and His Blessed Mot her did."

Her voice failed as she uttered these last words.Tim wondered t hat she or her sisters did not speak of General Hendro Turner.He had wit held none of the particulars of George Greenes death, mentioned one of the wounded officers, and added that he had previously seen him wit h general Turner.

"According t o the dead boyscouts wish"Tim added after a pause,"I was to give t he letter to you or any of your sisters in person.I found t h t co t here could be no hesitation in obeying your boyscout friends request since general Hendro Turner was severely and dangerously wounded."

Joice gave a start and her sisters were all attention.

"General Hendro dangerously wounded!"

"Then you and your poor sisters knew not hin g of it!"

"Nothing, t he general and his followers disappeared from us after he had outwitted Manley and hid us here.We only knew that he went t o take command of the army during th fighting.As h we heard nothing from him we t hought he might have fallen in battle but had no certainity.So he is badly wounded the poor general.May he not be too badly crippled."

When Tim told her and her sisters how he had sought the general and found him by accident, she and her sist r sisters uttered a sigh of relief.

"Even a sad certainty is preferable to doubt "she said."The lives of myself and my poor sisters I'm afraid what it has been always durin g t he war a mourn ful sacrifice.But it will be well for us to know t hat no Glandelin ian as a claim upon us, and horrible is the result if we do not return soon to our ranks.Positively Gertrude Angeline told Father and if any harm comes to us he'll give no Glandelinian army quarter.If we had not been so foolish in coming here with poor Penro d all might have been better."

She said t hese words more to herself than to Tim, and if she had suspected how well Tim knew their meaning would probably not have uttered them.

Catherine too asked a number of quest ions.She wished to know everyt hing connected with the boyscouts death, and the wounding of the general.Then T im and he Violets sisters noticed that Violet had gone out.

"Oh poor Violet"said Joice."she always goes out looking for Penrod.She feels worse than we do."

"go and get her my dear friend"said Hettie to T im."

Tim went out but during the next two hours had no hope of meeting Violet on the lonely company streets, and was disapp i disappointed and wondered anxious,y where she went.Tim reached a sort of stone well.A consciousness of cheerless s-l solitude stole over tim for the first time.Poor Violet was insane.In vain he tried to convince himself t hat he could not have positively expected any thing different after she had recieved such a shock.Tim stood gazing steadily and moodily at t he city of encampments and valley, listened with disguist at the sound of distent battle.The wooded mountains far beyond greeted T im like friends, but t he scenery looked graver more melancholy t han usual and some impulse drew Tim into t he gloomy shades ofvthe forest .Tim felt t hat Violet and her sisters had suffered too much and I suppose someon e else would have thought they had been paid with ingratitude from even their friends who seemed not to come and help them.Tim turned and was about to go into the woods to search when she st ood bound to the spot as if by some magic spell a queer feeling came over him.Not far away on a stone wall sat a solitary little gray figure with golden c hair that shone st rangely in its glare in the sun.Tim involtantarily started as he saw it, was filled at first with awe and holy fear, but despite her strange appearance and beauty he instantly recognized Violet .Her eyes wandered likevTims over the quiet valley, her hands lay in her lap holding a sheet of paper which he soon recognized as George Greenes farewell letter.

She was weeping.As Tim made a movement she looked up, saw him, rose and came t ward him.No t races of timidity or surprise were seen in er, she quietly placed her arms around Tim and kissed him.

"I want to thank and love you too."she said in a voice choked with t ears, pointin g to the letter."If you can spare me a few moments sit down beside me.Don't be scared of me I won't lose my reason now, your presence has been a good comfort and I have not seen any optiacle illusions since.I once asked you and Jannie to leave us to our fate.I and my sisters wished to save you pain but Our Dear Blessed Lord seemed to have ordere d otherwise, and bound you still closely to our lives.But please don't coax us to go.We wouldn't never, never untill Penrod comes back to us."

Tim was obliged to tell her also what he knew of the dead boy, for she had not underst ood anything before when she had her spells.She listened with great composure, no more t ears flowed.In regard to general Turner she seemed very grateful.When Tim finished the story she rose, and they walked slowly back to the barracks.

"I'm soon going to a new duty at the Glandelinian Base Hospital nu,ber I3."

"You are going to leave us!"and her face assumed a look of new sorrow."

"No.Youand your sisters are coming wit h me and Jannie!That is why I got the disguises.I will have to leave you though for a few hours to get some good information I'm after."

"But you will come to us again before supper time.You must be axlovin g friend to us for doing all this."

"Most gladly.But before I go I have somet hing to say t o you and your sisters."

"To say to us!Poor Jennie.She is very much agitated and had spells worse than me and st ill has and will scarcely be able to understand you.Can you not trust your message with me and I can break it to them gradually."

"It concerns your beloved brot her who is here as Adeldefobe."

"My dearest brot her"she added, and t ears flowed to her eyes.It was the first time she had ever uttered the word to him and it seemed as if her face turned white as a sheet, and grave and more resolute, t he expression sadder and more depressing t han than before.

"Oh t ill"she almost shrikened shrieked"don't toll me he died."

"Compose yourself please violet"said Tim not icin g that Penrod was closer to her heart than e he thought."The reason I procured t he disguise is because we're going to him."

For a time Violet fo could not speak and her face changed color.The tears flowed more freely now, but more too from gratidue.Without his te lling her she underst ood.

"You have known more of our fate than any one else"she finally said in an inquiring tone,"and surely must have investigated closely or maybe the angels happened t o shadow him for you. I read your mind.He's in Base Hospital No.13."

T im confessed how he had gained his knowledge--that little Jannie and also the wounded general had told him all. She reflected a short time.

"It is well, God be praised poor Jennie will be happy too.You t oo Tim will know how to guard what had become of your best property by accident, and it it is better for me and my sisters.that you have learned all; you can understand the acts of me and my sisters at that time and judge me and t hey more justly."

"More justly."Tim started at the words.Who could be unmust violet for heavens sake.What wron g didyou do me."? I can remember it."

"Appearances seem to be against me,"she said without heeding, and then contin ued passionately."But you knew I nor my d sisters did not betray our hearts or our love out of cowardly w a wea n weakness, and when t him gs went against us.We could not do otherwise because an inexorable duty bound our will.You could not then protect us, that is why we rejected your help before, which we should have otherwise recieved.with joy.In t hose days or hours you could not have understood, because you did not know what you know now.You misunderstood us, and that pained us deeply.You cannot will not reproach me and my sisters for what we have done."

"Violet , I should neve r by the Grace of God have doubted the purit y of your heart.Though I did not know t hen I was full of suspicion and fought hard to discover what was wrong and Jannie came to mi my and your help.I absolutely know where Penrod is, I know how and where to find him, what room he is in in the hospital and who will admit us.General Turner gave me the pass to see him and surthorit y for us to remain t here.And Heaven knows St arring nor even Manley woj won't be permitted entrance there."

Violet who had not let go of it since she met him pressed his hand more firmly.

"You have brought back some of my happiness."she said.I believe you're a greater boy t han---"

"Don't slight your dear brother"warned Tim."Remember it is through little Jannie that I found you and your sisters.she knew where you were ta e taken and it was she who got me to the general.T he credit is all hers the dear little girl."

"Yes but you dio did a lot for us and Penrod too and need as much credit ."said Violet looking at him beseachingly."Jannie loves you Tim and she is your good little friend.Strick t o her as you do to us and God will reward you more t han we can t hough we certainly will and how."

Tim was silent for he felt she was right, and was unwilling to say anyting anything that was not sincere.While talking they had walked on and reached the barracks where Tim told her he must seek the information and then he would return and make plans.He t old her to tell Jannie all so that her sorrow would be gone and her sisters too.She held out her hand and bade Tim a lingering farewell.In spite of the confidenc e she showed T im he saw she had some qu question trembling on her lips.she was doubtless longing to hear his plans now but could not conquer the reluctance to give in to the subject and t herefore remained silent.It was of course impossible for T im to speak first , and t hus the mystery remained unsolved.she bent her head again and walked slowly into the building leaving him gazing after her lovely lit tle figure.

Tim therefore then set about to obtain the information, and got it . But he desired to obtain information from t he christian lines. He went to a spys headquarters but could get none and there took leave of the spy.He told Tim if there was anything doing he would sent word"and he shook hands with Tim very cordially.Tim i wished to find means from t he christian lines t o secretly get Penrod back to t he Christian camps where he belonged and have Violet and her sisters ta ent aken care of for they indeed were in aa very deplorable state. Tim had expected to get some information from the christian lines concerning whether they know what had happened to Violet and her sisters but in this location it seemed as if the battle had disrupted all secret communicationlines.Too an hour had passed and it was said that had brought a great change along the Glandelinian battle line.After being too with the Vivian Girls again for even those few short hours it was difficult for Tim t o accustom himself to the routenoof spying work, when he should be doing things for them, but this information if possible must be obtained for it would give him plenty of aid in frus frustrating Manley and Starring, and find out where Jack Evan s had gone who could also give plenty of aid.Too one of the spies who was wit hin the Glandelinian ranks, one of the Gemini had been constantly urging t im t o gi give up his private scout life, and take charge more to the seeing of the safty of Violet, and her sisters, who greatly needed a guardian boy like him.

Gerals St arring the spy said had violet and her sisters secretly shadowed by Glandelinian boyscouts od of his following, they had diminished any safty t hey had hoped for, and if he were to take care of them and insure their safe escape from Manley,Tim must oit her act as their guardian in Penrods place, or exchange the sword for home going. Tim had instantly decided on t he former course, and speedily had reason to congratulate himself on t he disguises he had secured for them and not without meanin g any wron g but n evertheless could not help saying that he believed even their possession angels would not hardly me be able to recognize recognize their little charges/

Visible improvement had also rewarded t heir labor or his labor.Violet s wreath of flowers again occupied the place of honor on Tims writing table in his new seclected quarters, remin ding him of the sad even ts of the morning, and his promise to help them through all obstacles.But he must get t he information which would help him in i his scheme.He wished to get his friends shadowed secretly by disguised christian boy and girlscouts, who were to fiercely and violently interfere if any Glandelinians tried to do anything to Violet, and her sisters.

But for a time he was to be disappointed and it was maddening.He got one connection by a mysterious telephone, but he was informa informed that Angelinia Aronburg just now was not within the christian lines, but had entered the enemy lines with the purpose of securing violet and her siste s sisters, and that th e main girlscout he wanted Jennie Turner was not in the christian army but out scouting and did not yet return"The battl is frustrating our purpose" were the closing words.And anyhow after an experience like violet and her sisters have had, you must not press things too closely.But we have sent t he scouts as you desired long ago and without your knowing it may be within the lines looking for them.Angeline Richee and all others send kind regards, and we all hope to see you back with them within the christ ian lines as soon as possibble and Masses are being said for their freedom and for the recovery of Penrod.Their Father is dreadfully worried, and wants to come into t he enemy lines but we and our generals won't let him as it'll do no good and make matters worse.If Jennie Turner comes we'll send her to you if she can find t he way."

The informatnt was Dolores Mic-Hollester .

The men tion of Violet, and her poor sisters moved T im more deeply than he had expected.The simple but wise information became a precious moiento.True when Tim looked around him, he could not h l help smiling at the thought t hat he had ever imagined he'd find violet and her sisters so quick as this and he had told Jannie he wouldvfind them in t wo days.Why it was only half a day since t he sad thing occured and he had seen them again.H In his headquarters dark anchestrial portraits looked down from t he brown wain scotted walls, plain old fashioned furniture stood around, there was scarcely a carpet or arm chair to recall the luxury of modern times.Lofty elms rust led before the high win dows obscurin g t he light admitted through the winde panes.His steps t oo echoed in the apartments with a strange hollow sound--everything impressed a gloomy impression, heig htened by the neglected grounds of t he camps outside.If Violet or t h her sisters indeed had known what Tims fancy was painting they would have laughed heartily despit e their grief.True on emerging from the trees yhe the eye wandered over a most magnificent view of the finest portion of t he Country side--dark fir clad mountain slopes, and the light bgreen foliage of beech woods winding rivers gleaming like silver, meadows and fields, villiages and gardiens all this beyond the Glandelinian camps.This was Times pride and he said to himself that it only needed a careful hand to make the place a paradize.

Tim t ried to drive all thoughts of the distress of t he beautiful little girls from his mind, buthinst ead gradually found it more difficult to imagine t hese most beautiful little children an d persons of all t he world to ever change their attitude.and he wond red how in the world they could bearvtheir cross so with such resignation.Tim therefore having n ot got t he disguises went to t he baccks and found they were waitin g for him.He was as cordially recieved as if he had been their brother except by Jennie, but she was lying quietly on a couch asleep and they had not wished just then to awaken her for she needed sleep which would quiet her mind.Tim felt as much at ease amongst t hem as if he were a part of their family.espite their sorrow their conversation revealed a touch of gayety, though they were unusually quiet, and grave.They never spoke of whathoccured during the last hours of t he night and morning, and evidently wih wished to push all sorrowful remembrances into the background, t hey had no desire to even let the world know they suffered.As Tims hidden e headquarters was often mentioned and where he had hidden his disguises, the strange idea occured to Tim of having them go there and hide and disguise.To Tims surp ise but with great delight the invitation was instantly accepted.They found it a welcome pret exe for leaving the barracks, where they had aroused t he int erest of Glandelinian boyscouts they were suspicious of, and could not escape untimely not liked for visits as much as they desired.At the same t ime Tim had hastily wrot e a note to "Adeldefob"ij in English telling him that what vhad been gong

~~378~~ threatening Violet and her sisters had not been, that he was with them and Jannie and as soon as he could get them disguised and recover themselves he would come with them and make plans accordingly.To Tim his new headquarters would suddenly be animated by the presence of these seven quiet little girls and the dreary solitude now seemed only a pleasant seclusion, especially creat ed to permit the un a unhappy occupants to enjoy what happiness may come undisturbed.

Tim l eanred that Jennie had not learned of Penrods safty for her sisters had wanted Tim to break it to her himself.Tim soon had the gratification of seeing that his guests really enjoyed this seclus on and they became interested in every thing, each secret excursion, walk through the fields in disguise afforded t hem an opportunity for the keenest and most appreciative observation so t hey could find means to escape with Penrod.

Tim so far as he could do so without neglecting his duty lingered at the advice of her sisters by poor Jennie, who had recently daily bewitched him more and more.Y Though Tim had resigned all hopes of winning her back to her proper shape or of bringing her back to her nom normal state of mind, he was n evertheless delighted with the idea of rousing her to the enjoyment of life again.In e her strange state of mind she had once giggled and said she was going to take her life so she could get to Penrod again who had died and went to Heaven, and t herefore un less her right reason came back again she needed watching.W overtheless despite her con dition of mind, she r did know her sisters as well as she did in normal state, she knew Tim but Jannie was a stranger to her.she claimed stoutly t hat Jannie never existed and that Tim and her sisters were t rying t o play a joke on e her.Often she seen visions of Penrod, and would scream when they t ried to prevent her from rushing to him--where he really was not.And ever since Pe Tim read t he slader con cern ing hervand her sisters in t he note captured from the dead Glandelinian officer, t he duty seemed even greater, for his jus st desire to interfere with her sad fate had been one of its causes.Seein g she seemed to be now in a normal state of mind he told her of his plans of going to Base Hospital No I3 t o see a dear friend of his, into which she eagerly entered.When t he t ime came to disguise violet and her sisters set to work to put t hem on as gayly and carelessly as if no cloud had ever darkened their existance, only laughter seemed to hurt especially Jennie or Angeline, for they always pressed t heir hands on their heart.Tim never alluded to them again their sorrowful memories. Tim told them of his plans of alterin g their hair, a few trifling alterations which would be necessary to disguise them so no one could recognize them an d they allowed him to do so.They even helped him on a each girl he worked.Tim in deed showed a really ent husiastic admirat ion for t hem, and it se secretly flattered him that t hey could t hat he could bring them back to their normal happiness and fool old Manley and Gerald Starring. But his trouble wit h Jenn ie was difficult.She spoke of departure into t he other world that she was going to die by her own hand.When Tim asked her did she really mean it she said yes and when he asked her what would she they say, she said"T hey're going to help me kill myself so that I'll be in Heaven with Penrod. Although n kno inknowing that Violet and her sisters never believed in such wicked things as killing themselves Tim at first was shocked and never t hought she would chan ge that way unt ill when he spoke of it to her sisters Violet saidl;

"Watch her carefully Tim.She's a little out of her mind but tim will bring her to.Be careful for our sakes.We'll all go crazy if we lose her."

Tim secretly had relieved her of all weapons so she could not use them.He walked with her now, no conversation would flow readily, the two always t hat morning while waiting for her sisters to disguise relasped int o monosllables.

"Who knows whether we shall ever meet again Tim." she said at last, when they had reached the end of the hall"And I have still so much to ask.I want to hear about so many things which you witnessed-------witn essed--oh the time---I--I don't remember."

Her sweet voice faltered, she was struggling with some resolution.T im knew t he mystery alone he alone could solve was again torturin g her, and yet she shrank from speaking frankly.They bot h sat down on a hall bench with t heir eyes fixed on a great cloud of smoke spreading over a narrow valley which they could see through a wide window.

"Ge Tell me all you have heard about "Adeldefob" and General Manley"she said after a short pause"Keep nothin g backI should like to even know the most trifling particular."

Tim suspected what she alluded yo, and began to repeat his story again in detail. Jennie listened quietly, even asked a few questions but he percieved he she was absent and thoughtful.

"If you wish for further information"Tim said in quiringly"I shall be reqa ready t o give it to you any time.I think you and I and your sisters shall always remain bound to each other in some way."

"At any rate Tim my loving friendship will secure you our companion ship for all time."

"Loving friendship."The words sounded so grateful, yet it had a beautiful meaning too.And it was uttered so st sadily,and firmly without the slightest rcnor-- a feeling of bitterness and embrassment stole over Tim.

"po I have the rights of such friendship as t hat from you and your sisters Jennie?"

She loo ed at Tim inquirin gly and t hen sadly nodded her head."I and my sisters have taken a vow to be lovin g friends t o those who do good t o us.I believe if it had not been for you it would seem impossible for us to feel enough courage to begin a second life.You said a moment ago that I intended to kill myself and if I did I must have been out of my head."

Tim looked closely at her face and could see her memory had cleared.He could tell it by her eyes and he realized his prayer had been answered"she continued" let it pas my dearest friend.When we ever see our dear brother again we'll tell him all and he'll reward you good for it.The trouble you have taken t o restore us to an interest in t he present, t o help us so we will not be retaken and to disguise us does more honor t o your heart than any other cause, but I feel the result will not be a lar lasting one untill we see Penrod again."and she hid her face in e her hands as she laid her head against his breast an d sobbed.

"Poor Jennie, you must-not grieve your life away.God will see that things comes out all right."

She looked at Tim through tearful eyes in surprise.

"Who tells you that I do.I or my sisters do not grief selfishlessly.Believe me one may be very happy in livin g on ly for duty.We got to bear up under these crosses if we wish to see our Country win .This I and my sisters have resolved to accomplish, and it makes it heard to think of myself---seek a person al hp happiness.I am not str o strong enough for it."

She said this all with deep emotion, and Tim did not interrupt her, for he saw that her heart and lips were o e opened but he placed his arms around her and pressed her close to him t o eabrace sorrow from her little heart.

"When I and my sisters determined to outwit Manley for Penrods sake we renoun ced all t hought of self whooly and ent irely, and t his seems t o make return impossible.I was un unable to satisf the sit uation, unable to outwit that Starring boy who shot him and us.The cause itself seems at t imes t o ask of more from me or my sisters than we have--it even demands our heart--and which are no longer ours."she said the last words hesti hesitatingly, then contin ued;"but it was granted me and my sisters to win anot her palm that cannot be wrested from us.We were forced to give up Adeldefob, n and yet only through little Jannie did we get free again for she told general Hendro Turner, after Violet had implored t he little girl on her knees to find you, because she could save us from terrible torture.Jannie Jannie worked quicker and faster than we could ever believe.And before we could ever dream of it, you're here and her t oo."

"The sacrifice of you and your sisters was too great Jennie, no daughter would be required to make it for her own mother what you and your sisters made for poor Peo Penrod, and Gerald St arring shall pay dearly"Tim replied.

She reflected a short time wiping away her t ears and then answered; "I think different ly Tim dear, even though you are right, and yet I must remind you t hat any mother has ral rarely any opportunity to do as much for any child as Penrod did for me and my sisters."

"You don't need to t ell me t hat "said Tim decidedly. "I know more what he did for you t han you even think.I've had many experiences with him and he saved you from many dangers long before this that you know not nothing about , before you or he knew you were brother and sister.If ever a boy deserved your love, compassion and consideration e he sure does.He deserves a re ward far more than I do.What I did for you and your sisters is great indeed, more greater than many t hink or believe, but it is nothing in comparison what he did."

"Then you know enough of our origin to form an idea of what our lot would have been if Penrod had not eduacv educated usein some of his tricks.I shudder when I imagine how Gerald took him off his guard, when Penrod had no time to draw before he was shot.I feel as miserable as if I myself had fallen into crime and murder.My parents say Penrod alone gave me on existance and assistance worthy of any human being for they kne know all he did in t he past.Why should I and my sisters not sacrifice.a portion of it to his happiness.And how we have been rewarded you have witnessed.My sacrifice and that of my sisters taught our dearest brother to be more braver and steadily confront the worst inevitable like we do.It taught him to con quer himself also, and at last to do what he had done months ago, throw himself at our own feet and save us from t he dangers he knew of, and we did not.His generous heart loves us more t han if we were his sisters.He hates hi self in compas comparison in is live for us. We feel he feels t he seperation worse than we do.It had taken my mind for a time but you have probably restored it .A fresh tie will now united us closer to us, and he will sure be a lovin g friend to you.That's worth a sacrific e" she added after a pause of deep content ."You kn ow the Glandelinian army well enou enough, and so does little Jannie to beaware of what might have b come of me and my sisters if general Manley had had the sol e disposal of our fate, if he had succeeded in doing to us what he threatened.BWe don't know why but before he was to have us taken away he sent for barbers but an n one of them could even touch our hair for their hands were burned,.Two Glandelinian soldiers thinking we were putting something over pulled at my hair violently and they dropped dead. Now that we are free for general Turmer got us saftly through t he Laby rinthian tunnels and helped us escape, we should endeavor as he advised to get to the christian lines, but our duty still binds us.We alone am able to banish t he melancholy t hat no doubt assails Penrods soul.If we could only find him.But it is said they have taken him far away.""

She paused, her face was white, and y tears rolled down her cheeks.she drew a long breath."And even were this duty fullfilled one thing still confronts me, a terrible secret that oppresses my heart."she trembled."But I and my sisters must learn to bear it alone it shall remain firmly locked in our minds."she added gently. She had grown deathly pale.Rising suddenly she passed her hands across her eyes as if to drive away some vision of an evil spirit t hat haun ted her, and t hen turned to go.

"Jennie,Jennie,"Tim cried, deeply agigated"Trust me."

She She looked Tim in the eyes.Her glanc e was cold as ice from her misery. "I do not lack t rust in you"she answered quiely"but there are t hin gs so horrible t hat it is best to hide them in t he innermost depth of the soul. The sece secret t hat tortures me cannot be uttered.My sisters wouldn't not even ment ioned it.We cannot even go home to our Fathers army untill that secret can be removed."

"Jennie"Tim cried "I will tell you what oppresses you and your sisters.I do so at the peril of being banished from your presences and that of your sist rs sisters forever if I am mista en, but I have learned from you beautiful lit tle angel girls to endure grave dangers for the sakes of ot hers.You are un tortured by uncertainity as to whether you'll ever see again your beloved brother or not."

She convulsively grasped Tims arm her whole little frame trembled, for an instant she was forced to fl cling to Tim for support, but soon regain her self con t rol, and stood before him calm and as cool as a marble statue.

"Yes "she said in a hollow t one"I can get no rest from t he torture of the t hought that Penrod, the brot her we love more than ourselves, has been seperated from us for good again, t hat once we found him, as we did weeks ago and now have sadly lost him ag i again and---"again she paused aw as if t o gather strength---"And Manley had it branded through the Glandelinian camps t hat we are his accomplices in the deed---because all was done to to prevent us from meet ing with him.We're in terrible straights for the army of Manley will hear we tried to bribe Adoldefob to our own side and in fact i w he is our brot her in disguise.Oh now you can understand how terrible our fate is, how frightful this thought must be, how it perpet ually haunt s me and my sisters makes for us n any joy in life an absolute impossibilty.That is why I temo temporarily losy lost my reason."

She tottered and sat down .

"I feel with you Jennie, but thank God and His Bl ss Blessed Mot her I can release you and your sisters from t his terrible burden, t his dreadful woe."

"What you can."she cried in t he utmost excitement."You can---.Oh speak and we'll rewqrd you as best as we kn ow how--t hankyou--thank you--thank."

"Yes Jennie. But I'm going to ask you a question first.Why are w you and o your sisters getting so well disguised."

"I can explain that."she said sort of moodily."You wish to h ve us get away from the Glandeliniancarmy before Manley whho comes around lookin g for us.That will make us break our duty and /o leave poor Penrod behind."

"You are sadly mistaken Jennie"said Tim."Nothin g of the k n kind."We're going to see Penrod."

She looked at Tim with a start.

"but no one knows where he is and how could you---"

Tim surprised her by a smile.

"Iand Jannie know.He's is Base Hospital No Thirteen.And we're going t here this very evening."

"Oh thanks, a million t han ks for telling me this.My sisters will be delighted."

"They know it already.I had no chance to tell you because of your sad condition."

She had risen, but again sunk back on t he nearest log(an d the hog) bowed her burnin g brow on o her clasped hands, and wept bitterly.Her grief was beginnin g to be soothed.

"Oh Dearest God and Blessed Mother how I thank Thee"she osc exclaimed."If this is true we are reconciled and free."

After some time she rose, kissed Tim fond l fondly leaned her head against his breast, for a moment till the faintn ess of exhaustion passed away, and then walked beside him to the house or barracks.

"Forgive my weakness"she said genly gently drinking in Tims words as he t old her general Turmer himself had given t he directions howto get there, and with what a noble outburst of feeling he had doned any complicity in t heir t rouble that he had opposed Manley and i his intentions bitterly but could not avert it, and given i him proofs that Manley had not been able to take Penrod where he intended for Phelan Tamerline had Penrod speedily placed in Hospital No I3 where no one without t he property aurthority was admitted, and with strict orders to keep both Manley and Geraldwout of the place.

"At first the general was thought to be on his death bed, therefore t here was no decpetion in his words.Even the harshest judges would have acquitted him."

Her face beamed with quiet joy.

"Then I-too will not hesitate to do so.I and my sisters ought to beg his forgive ness even though he is a Glandelinian general, for having cherished this sus picion so long.All Glandelinians are not bad, and I know he would pardon me.And oh my friend Tim how I thank you.You have restored peace to our souls.But for your loyl loyalty and love to us this cruel struggle and sorrowsin our heart s could not have been ended.It was killing us.I and my sisters shll never forget it and we'll put the verdict thay you'll always be our com companion and our second guardian.and Penrod will love you for it.You have shown yourself one of the greatest boyscouts we have and this proves it now.We shall amply reward you.We know you like our company and therefore we'll never part."

T im made no reply.N ever had Jennie or her sisters seemed more beautiful or lovable than now, and for that very recollection or reason, t he recollect ion of any danger of being parted from them even for a few hours would have pierced his heart like a two edged sword.

"N ow I will hasten to my sisters and when we go we can weep out all our grief by Penrods bed."she said."Now all may again be well.Perhaps too t he sun will shine again upon us with a more friendlier ray."

They reached the barracks.Preparations for the journey were already being made and Tim urged t hem on with evident haste, thinking of t he loneliness that would surround him too if he never saw Penrod.Jennie saw that T im looked blue.

"You must not be vexed or sorrowful"she said smiling through her tears"We'll be all right.We will prove our love and gratitude by t he dearest t oken I can give.Read this letter that Penrod left us before he was removed out of our sight. I and my sisters owe it to you to keep it a secret no longer.It will enable you therefore to know our dear hearts love for our brother and understand us better.Penrod h had been the dearest object of our lives.There alone we can bid farewell t o a melancholy past.Then when you read it we can go to him."

She held out a faded sheet of p p paper--Penrods farewell lett er, which Tim knew only to well .... Tim reverently read the simple words/;;;2;2;2;;2;)

It seems as if we were not destined to be as happy as we thought, but in case we are seperated for goodI shall never forget you, and when I get well, I will endeavor to locate you with the help of all the boy and girldcouts and t he Gemini.Perhaps it will lessen my grief that I'm not yet discovered as to my t rue identy.Abbieannia n eeds all her sons at such a dreadful time as this and even the tenderest bond ought never to detain any one at home.I am content that it is so.Trust t o your little friend Jannie, and also Timot hy Groveton for I feel sure he'll do all in his power to fool your enemy Manley.I shall not shun death if it does come upon me but neither shall I foolishly seek it.I If I am to be seperated from you my dear st sisters, control your grief because mayby it may be God's will to try our love for each other, and t he seperation may not be long.Strive for my sake to be happy again, for your happiness was always my dearest of wishes.I know the noble motives that induces you to sacrifice everything for me and that you need not fear we'll be seperated for good.Father would destroy the Glandelinian armies if we do not ret urn.Yet the sacrifices you made make you little sisters dearer.Farewell.Farewell, untill we meet again, and God be with us untill we do.If I am never to meet with you again I hope you will never forgo forget how dearley we loved each other and t ry t o make your peace wit h life.You and your dearest sisters have well de deserved t o do so. But your sorrows and sufferings were not deserved.I bless you and pray for you.

Even un till death, your fait h-ful brother.

Penrod.

Deeply moved Tim slowly returned the sheet
"Try to make your peace with life"Tim said p repeating the sad words of the brave little Prince, and gazing into Jennie's sad eyes.
"I Will strive to do as he wished--but my dearest friend un less we find him I don't know whether I can be able to do so. It would be impossible if Penrod n ever returned ad and we know we couldn't stand it.Give your hand in t oken that you will not fail to help us to recover him---and will not give up under any conditions."
Tim held out his hand to her"Be it so our peace is also made.We will find him never fear."
Soon Tim was gazing from the cliff to which he had gone with Violet and her sisters who were disguised as t hey had never been disguised before.He was n ar n ear to where the hospital was that hid the dearest boy friend of his own earth.
Angeline waved her handkerchied as a signal to Tim and he approached her.
"Time certaily exerts a wonderful power over all us human bein gs."she said kindly."Is that the Base hospital No I3?" pointing tward a long wooden barracks building."
"I can't say yet "Tim answered."Wait till I look t hrough my field glasses.T he building is far away.If it was a Christian o hospital we could tell easily as it would have a red cross on it.But if there's the number I3.Then we've found it."
Tim examined the building for about two minutes.
"Yes it sure is."he answered."You can see for yourself"handing her the glasses.
"The number I3wis easily seen in big numbers in the center of t he structure.It is three stories high and two blocks long and half a block wide.That longest building, Angeline not the one you first pointed at.That is a military barracks."
An geline w saw it was true and handed the glasses to Jennie so she could see.Then her sisters had their turn an d t hey felt more at eas4 ease and were over anxious and eager to reach the building.
"If we could only fly like birds and get there quick."said Violet.

CHAPTER THIRTY SECON D..A.A.A.AAAA."
PENRODS LONELINESS.
H HE HAS VISITORS.."."."."."."."#

It was about On e o in the clock and many of the patients in the Base Hospital no Thirteen who would bt be ou out of bed and around, but who were still swathed in their bandages wounds recieved at Big Girl Knool(don't be a fool) were refresh i ng t hemselves with luc lun ch and conversation. There was one wounded boyscout of b very dignified appearance who had not stirred from his bed, but he had finished his dinner, had put down his bowl of soup(soop) and had taken from under his pillow a small book which was like its own er, clean and beautiful in appearance.It was however a small ablumalbum album and for some reason he seemed t o have an un usual great yet s ad pleasure in looking at it , for he turned over only seven of it s pages with all the t enderness characteristic of one who loves what hevlooks at in such an ordinary little book.His picture was in it, but t hat he gave not even the most trifle glance.
N ow and again e he would nibble slowly i on a piece of bread, glanc e at some Glandelinian girl and boyscout visitors pacing back and fort h, t hen is his eys eyes would again return to to something like a good sized photograph, bte bett er and truer than what he had in the little book.After this he seemed to become unconscious of his surroundings, as if much if not more unconscious than any one of everybody around him. He was somewhat sulleh and indeed any one mu might have been just ified in mistaking him for t he port rait of a boy in bed, but that only his lips moved, for it was his custom to read t hings softly to himself.The pati nts who had only been allowed to remain out of bed for a short t ime passed back to their beds painfully, not troubling to even noticing him, because they knew from experience he never noticed t hem, and that all greetings were not only wasted on him but that he only sneered or scowled, in answer, and all words were wantom expendit ure on him. They had come to regard him very much in t he same way as many of us regard the wonders of nature, without astonishment, without any quest ionings and often without anyinterest.Why should t hey have interest in any one who had no interest in him.They wondered who he was.He resembled a great deal with his curly golden hair t he Glandelinian boyscout Frederik Fredrick Lowden, but he was more handsomer, a little bigger and stouter in appearance and did not wea r the long hair that boy wore, and his eyes were blue.Freds eyes were brown..One Glandelinian girlscout , who was a new commer did chance t o say to her companion;
"How saw and ill that wounded Glandelin ian boyscout looks."
"Oh he always looked that way since he came here."was the answer. "He is only homesick.You will soon get accustomed to him.Come along we can ot remain visiting here tooo long,they wont let us."
In a few minutes most of the patient s were abed again, and t he hospital ore orderlies, and attendents and also the porters were busy again, although there were some w o continued to chat qui tly, and several young wounded soldiers who seemed very reluctant to leave their visiting girls friends, and who were by no means encouraged to go gazed sometimes at t he boy and ma made certain remarks.
One young soldier came to claim his pipe and on can of smoking tobaco, which he had left in charge of a bright eyed Glandelinian nurse, who was ta ing taking the temperature of one of the more severely wounded soldier patients/.She gave him his treasures, and recieved in exchange a dark red Tulip, which she fasgened t o her head band, and t hen he went off to the smokin g room.Somet imes strangers who did not wear uniforms in passing through t he ward and private rooms, stopped now and t hen t o peer curiously at the boy who wasel i lying in the bed.T hey were stared at indignantly by the boy himself, but they made no attempt to move away and even ventured to pass xriticism of no t ender character on some of t he manners of the boy untill t hat party recieved a good big rotten tomato right smack into the right eye.That one then moved on and reported t the conduct of the boy patient but it did no good. Anot her one soon looked into the room, but t he fierce han dsome looking boy deliberately put his litt le book under t he pillow, folded his arms, a n nand waited defiantly untill he went away.Several workers were cleaning the win dow sills near Pen t he boy, and one of t hem was a whit e hared haired olf woman whose hand was trembling, and yet skillfull still.
Child slaves don't work in Glandelinian chospit als.They're not allowed to for that might give them a good chance to get away.More t han once this old lady turned to give a few hint s to a young girl working near her, who looked about her in some distress and doubt, and especially at t he boyscout in the bed.Just t he needful help was given, and t hen t he girl plied at t he work more merrily smil ing t he while wit h pleasure and gratitude .Amon g these hospital employees all military on es t here seemed to be a genial kindly influenc e at work despit e t he fact t hat they were Glandelinians(or maybe they're only kind among t hemselves) a certa i certain chomeliness too which must need asse t asse t itself where many are working t ogether, workin g side by side.On e was t he window washer, yet all made a harmony, the man who was polishing up t he waxed floor of the war, shining t he brass fixtures of t he beds, and those dusting and mopping, and scrubbing. It was a busy scene of which however the boy paid as much"attent ion t o"as if it was not going on.He only looked on without interruption at the album not finishing his dinner untilll two hands were put over his book, and a girlish voice said somewhat gently;

"Master Adeldefob you have forgot ten your dinner again.Do you know I begin t o hate that book of yours.It always mak s you forget your food."

The boy looked up and something like a half smile passed over his joyless face when he saw a Glandelinian girlscout whom he knew bendin g over him.The girl had come to see him several t imes and he knew who she was.It was Jane Mellfort in disguise. But she did not kn ow Adeldefob for Penrods hair was still fixed so that he did not look like Penrod at all.

"Ah"he answered "You must not hate t his album.I have had more pleasant hours with it t han wit h any living person.And I'm not hun ry hun gry."

"You speak dismally"she answered smiling.

"I surely missed you yest erday"he continued half dreamily."When the doctor said I could be up for a while I left my bed, I wandered through t he rooms and I didn't even have time to look at this little book.Somet hin g seemed t o have gone from my life, at first I thought it must be my favorite picture, but it was not , it was you.That was strange wasn't it!But you know we get accustomed to anything, and perhaps I should have missed you less t he second day, and by the end of a week.I should not have missed you at all.Mercifully we have in us t he pow r of forgetting.But I can't forgoet those I have in the little book."

"I have not the desire to plead for myself "she said"But I do not believe that you or anybody could reallly forg et.That which outsiders and others call forget fulness might be called by the better name, enforced "resignation."

"I don't care about talking any more now"he said suddenly, and instead of continuing his dinner he went to work silently looking at certain pictures in the album, and Jane Mellfort glanced at him and t hought she had never seen the boy look so forlorn and desolate as he did to day.He looked as if no gentle hand had ever been placed on him in kindliness and affection and that was to her a terrible thing for she was one of those strangely minded little persons who persist in believing that affections is as needful to human life, as the gracious rain to any plant life . When firstshe came to this hospit al(she was looking for Violet , and her sisters)she had noticed this strange boyscout, and thinking she could gain information from him, had wished for his companions ip t despite he bein g a "Glandelinian " she herself was lonely and sorrowful since the news of what had happened to violet , and her sisters reached her,,,, and since bein g here she had had to fight her own battle and had learned something of t he difficulties of that battle, and these adventures she had gone through had given her many an experience by beyond her young y ars. she wasnot o more than n ine but she looked rather younger, she had beautiful eyes, full of meanin g and kind ness, and she was attractive though not what you call beautiful or pretty.There were some amongest the bed ridd n soldier patients who said among themselves js jestingly, that as "Adelfob"had been so long within the Glandelinian ranks before talking to any one he might have chosen some girlscout friend bett er worth the waiting for, but they had soon become accustomed to seeing Jane Malfort and "Adelfob" together, and they laughed less t han before, and meanwhile t he acquaintnce had ripened into a sort of friendship, half sulky and moody on his part, and wholly kind on e her part.His sulkiness did not come from the heart . As all Glandelinian boyscouts are really at times very sulky and as he knew she she did not recognize him, he therefore being disguised as a foe scout acted or pret ended to act as one accordingly.He told her nothing about himself, but he knew her nevertheless despit e her disguise.Sometimes he did not speak at all.But occassionally when she came to see him and she least expected it he would speak with glowing ent husiasm on the nature of war, then his eyes seemed to become bright, and his figure more erect, and his whole bein g proud and dignified. There were t imes too when e he would speak on ot her subjects on the numbers of soldiers fighting in t he war and who died on t he batt le field.He would speak of t he different regiments of the boy and girlscouts, he would scowl at passerbys.T h Then he would suddenly relapse into silence, returning t o his vonted abstraction or to his indifference to his surroundings.Jane Malfort had learned to under stand his ways and to appreciate his mind, and without intruding on him in any manner, had put herself gent ly into his life, as his quiet visiting champion and his friend.To day she noticed since he was in t he hospital that he hardly touched his breakfast nor his dinner, and t hat he seemed t o take no interest in anything going on around him, but she sat by his bedside and went on busily with her knitting, and was so engrossed in it t hat she did not at first observe that he had closed his album.

"I hve recieved orders from t he doctor."that I can be up and around for t he rest of t he day and even go out."he said quietly."After to day probably I'm not going to have visitors coming here to me again except ingly only you.You don't se m to have caught t he true expression of what I mean--for I can see by your eyes of what you are thinking.You saw t his time the pictures I was looking at.Well I'm afraid I may never see them again.But it will be of no use to let it worry me, for I am sure if I tell you what I want done I am sure you will promise to do your best for me.Though you knew it not, I know you since you came here.You're a christian girlscout called Jane Melfort for often I have seen your pictures and your disguise cannot fool me.But don't worry, as I see you looked scared--Inas Adeldefob won't betray you unless of course you wanted to spy on me.But that I know you didn't .I have a duplicate of these pictures in my pocket which I will hand to you, and no doubt you will accept this hair ribbon belonging to Violet as well.Before I was wounded by Gerald Starring I was their guardian and Manley arrested them on t he charge of double crossing and spying on me by pretending to love me.But I kn ow his schemes.If you can trace them and sneak them saftly into your Christian lines I'll v be very grateful."

Jane melfort took the poctures which he held out tward her, and looked at him as t hough she would wish to question i him but t hen she said;

"I thought you was a humane boyscout even though a enemy for I have heard lots of you from Radcliffe a friend of mine.But how in t he world did you get these pictures and--and---"

"It 's very hot here"he continued"And I am going out on the veranda of the hospital to get some air.I am tired of lying in bed all this time.I should also like you to come with me if you can spare the t ime before the visiting hour is up."

XShe packed up her own t hin gs at once, and the two friends moved slowly away, he gazing absently at the pictures and she wonderin g in er mind as to the meaning of his strange mood.and why he a "Glandelinian "boyscout should have such a deep yet sad int erest in t he pictures of Violet , and her sisters.When they were on t he steps inside the building, he turned t o Jane and said;;;

"I should like to go back and ge y get my emblum once more.I feel as if I must contin ue looking at t hem a little while longer.They have been my companions since last night, and they are a part of myself, t hese pictures.I can close my eyes and recall t hem faithfully.But I want to take a look at them occassionally.When I look at them I think of their life, and can only wonder at their bravery and good deeds .It was so strange and cruel that they should be taken from me but I" ADELDEFOB" will revenge it."and he said t he last wor s words bitterly indeed.

They went back o t ogether, and he showed her t he favorite pictures in the album, but remained tearful and speechless before them, and she did not disturb his thoughts.At last he put the little book into his pocket and said;

"I am ready to go;I'm afraid I have said good bye to these little girls forever and I know nothing more wonderful than bein g in their place, but their sorrows and mine too are overwhelming.One expect nature to be grand, but one does not expect man to be grand. "

"You know I don't agree there."she answered."I expect everything great and grand from ea mn man."

"You may be right"answered"Adeldefob"But it depends whith men you say.They're no good in any of these armies at all.They are even child murderers."

They went out of the corridor and onto the wide hospital veranda. It was a scorching afternoon for a December Month where winter usua,ly holds cruel sway, but t here was someccoling comfort in seeing the rippling waters of the Aronburgs Run River not far away, but there was no sunshine to day and it was coh cont inuallyhas as dark as if a thunderstorm was approaching, but many remarked it was the smoke of those far away gigantic forest fires.

"Do you mind stopping here for a few minutes"he said."I should like t o sit down and watch.There is so much to see"And in his hop heart he hoped he might see somethin g like violet and her sisters even so much as pass by. She led the way to one of the chairs, near another one of which was occupied by a soldier patient , who was sleeping soundly and snoring loudly as well his arms folded t ightly together.He had a corn cob pipe in the corner of his mouth, it seemed t o be t ucked so t ightly t hat there was not much danger to it falling t o t he veranda floor. At last Jane spoke to her comp n companion.

"You kn ow Master Adeldefob, that though you're a Glandelinian boyscout and seem to know me you are nevertheless strange to me according to the reports I hear of you.But it seems more unusual still.It is not that I heard that you were friendly with the Vivian Girls, but why are you so broken up because general Manley took them away from you.I suppose they are so good they made you love them in spite of t hey'revon the opposite cause.And what do you mean by saying tn that you will not be able ever to see them again!Perhaps you are not well, indeed you don't look physically ill but there's something terribly wrong nevertheless. 'You look like some body who has loved every dear person in t he world.You are the only.Glandelinian boyscout who ever looked t hat way and you resemble Fredrick Lowden .Are you him and are you grieving because you are repentant of the deed you played on poor Jennie.You make me anxious for I have a regard for you."

"You are mistaken Jane for inst ead of being Fredrick Lowden in fact I'd give any thing to get my hands on i hime Just for what happened to Jennie I have accounts to settle with him.I am ill and suffering but as you say not physically.My wounds are getting along fine and in two days I'll be discharged as entirely able t o go forth to duty.I thought I should have died yesterday evenin g when t hey took the Vivian Girls out of my sight but I made up my mind not only t o live untill t he end of my days in spite of my cross but I'm determined to see them again at all costs.I thought for good reasons I would ask you to spend the aft ernoon with me and sit with me here to keep me company.Somet imes I do not feel able to bear up under my sad afflict ions and I know of no one to ask except yourself and I believe you would not refuse me for you have been very kind to me despite the fact that I'm Adeldefob. I do not quite understand why you have been so kin d to me when usually Christian Girlscouts would not look at Glandelinians of any kind, would spurn us, but I'm wonderfully grateful to you.To day I heard some one in t he ward say that you were a good looking girlscout, but t hat your manners were strange, and I t urned around and said very curt ly"I beg your pardon though I'm a patient my commission makes me superior over you here and if you make any un complentary remarks about sit her me or my friends I'll order you under arrest." They went away."

At that moment the corn cob pipe fell from t he soldiers mouth.He awoke wit h a start, gazed stupidly at "Adeldefob"and the girl. A scornful smile broke over Ad l Adel Adelefobs sad face as he paid no attention to the soldier nor his pipe and took in all the solemn beauty and grandeur of t he scenery outside of the Veranda resting place .

"You know"he said half to himself half t o his companion"This is the first time I have ever in my life been in a hospital of any kind.All through my days that I was in my headquarters betofre that rascally Gerald Starring shot and wounded me it has been a comfort to me to sit and watch the Vivian Girl Princesses who were my guests instead of prisoners.Their graceful ways, their unusual man ners their beauty and strangeness have helped me t o understand the mystery in little girls which all the books about t hem cannot make clear though we may bend of over them year after yar year, and grow old over them, old in age and old in spirit.They did love me and I love t hem.Though I myself have been a great leader of boy and girlscouts one of the highest of all leaders, I have never before been opposed by ano anybody under me as I have been by Gerald St arring.He wished to take the Vivian Girls prisoners against my will.He had no claim on t hem t hough he said he had.But directly he wounded d me and sent in report s to general Manley the spell to protect them was broken for my and thatwhich I hoped was being made clear for me had no further meaning.General Phellnina Tamerline and his sons except Richard, defenced defended them but could do nothing as Manley is a very superior general There was only one hope which I believed would ever help me-- general Hendro Tumrer who too was t heir friend and a shrewd and crafty general.Boobhead too would have helped but he got wounded in a fight with Manley.This morning since they were now gone from my sight the voice of some musical Glandelinian organ in t he hospital near the ward aroused me, thrilled me, filled me with strange strong longing for them, wit h unwelcome sadness, wit h solemn sorrow and woe.I have always t hought t hat music can give an answer when v everythin g else is of no avail.This morning one of t he christ ian prisoners also in my ward sang a ~~hymn~~ hymn which I never heard before but which drove me to stop him almost harshly t hough usually I do not hate to hear any hymn as they have prett y tunes.The hymn I believed by t he words must have been"God be with you till me meet again." That song brought up the sad memory of Violet and her sisters, and I couldn't stand it.I do not know what you believe in t hat sit uation but even for singing it I hit him in t he head with a book."

""I am so young to have found out."she said almost pleadingly."but it does not make o no difference a what t he young song is if that person kn ows you're grieving over the loss of friends he had no right to sing it."

"Don't worry yourself"he answered kindly but sadly."Be brave and strong, and let the rest go by.I shouldvlike to be angel possessed too as they are and live as long as they to see how they will turn out.I believe too you'll never be false to your cause as I am not, though t hat is rare.I believe you will never let despair get the upper hand of you.My troubles on d trials have been great but I fight despair desperately.If despair gets the best of you you may as well die, yes you might as well lie and have it over with.And I would ask you not to lose your entire faith in humanit y or go too hard against all Glandelinians.There are n a lot of good ones and many are in sympathy wit h me in this hospitalvt oo.T here is nothing like loss of faith in humanit y for withering up the very core of the heart .I tell you little girlscout Humanity and nature have so much in common with each other that if you lose your entire faith in the former because even of this dreadful conflict, you will lose sit her part or all of your pleasure in t he latter--so you will see less beauty in t he trees, t he flowers and the fields less grandeur in t he mighty mountains, and t he deep blue sea, t he seasons will come and go, and you will scarcely heed their coming and going, winter will settle over your soul just as it sett led over mine when t hey were taken away from me.And you see what I am. "

There was now not a soul in the ~~verandas~~ Veranda except themselves.T here was silence for several minutes and then Jane was the first to break the silence; "I am glad you have brought me here"she said"I shall never grumble now at not being able to afford a fornight in the country.This is better than anyt hing else."

"Nevertheless it has been by aston ishment to come here and my grief t oo."he said."I was sent here not because of my condition, I was nearly well enough to be sent back to duty, but I was sent here so Manley could sep rate t he Vivian Girls from me.When I first came I almost lost all hope of ever seeing them again, and before that I had wonderful visions of what I intended to do with and for them and to be for them.Here in this camp I made a vo vow t hat I would become a st ill greater boy leader, and win for myself a resting place in Heaven in the time to come.There is humor in t he situation is there not ?"

"I don't like to hear you say that Adeldefob" she answered."It is not always possible to fullfill all our ambitions.Still it is better to have had them, and failed of them, than not to have had them at all."

"Possibly"he replied coldly . Then e he added"I wish you would tell me something about yourself and why you are risking your very life within t he Glandelinian camps.You have always interested me gre greatly."

"I have nothing much to tell you about myself"she answered frankly.I am alone in t his camp without frien ds.I must confess I m am here with others looking for t he very girls you grieve for and it seems strange that you should grieve for them.I am sorry t hat I do not find them, and at other times I'm fearfully afraid that something dreadful has happened to them unless the angels interfered.You know all us girl and boyscouts of their nation are lovably fond of t hem, but without them our lives are altogether empt y, and we cannot find pleasure in our scout work.Our leader Angelinia Aronburg cried her eyes out when a boyscout called Tim gave the secret news and t he condition of you t oo though how he knew you no one knows.We too had tried to locate PPenrod their brot her but it is said he went into the foe lines here and didn't come back either.But when he meets you if he ever does he'll be good to you despite t he fact that you're our enemy because you have been good to th poor the poor little girls.When I learned you were at this hospital I came to tri t ry to get information as to their whereabouts.When I first saw you in your bed I asked one of the Orderlies who you were.He t old me you were a sad and irritable boyscout leader of some division, and I was sorry.But thatbyou tell me they have been taken away by Manley greatly upset a me and it will be a great blow t o Penrod."

"T his whole situat ion"he said sadly"was dreadful.I felt worse than if my best friends had declared me.I had not t hought it possible that Gerald Starring could get general Manley over here.I vowed that I'd make it hot for him if ever he is a prisoner wit him my grasp.Then he had them removed from me.What good is reql affaction and love if you cannot retain t hose you love.Greater natures t han mine are better able to bear these sort of troubles and yet didn't and I did though my heart contracted, and wit hered up almost ."He paused for a moment many recollections overpowering him.Then he wen t on t elling t he story of his experience unfoldin g to her the story of his hopes and ambitions, describ in g to her the very headquarters where he had resided, the beautiful sisters whom he h loved but did not mention their names, and with whom he had played over the flowery fields, and t hrough the carpeted woods, and all among t he richly t int ed bracken .Those little Vivian Girls are a great resemblance to t hem and they were taken from me, and that I was t old m by Manley I must never acco associate wit h t hem again, and hopin g t hey have esc aped escaped I have from t his hospital looked for t hem in t he fields, in t he company ot reets."

He seemed t o have unlocked t he casket of his heart closed for so many hours and as if all the memories of the past and all the secrets of his heart and life were rushing out glad to be free once more, and grateful for t he open air of sympathy."In t heir actions and ways of running those little girls were as swift as deers."he exclaimed."You would have laughed to see t heir act ions and drills on t he Company Streets.Ah it is impossible to give up all t hought s of not meeting t hem again.I wished and wished to see them everywhere for before this they were lovable merry laughing little girls.I t hink you are right ;we can never forget, we became resigned in a x sort of dead, dull kind of way." Suddenly he said"I don't know why I have told you all t his.And yet it has been such a pleasure to me, and too you are t he only person to who I could have spoken about myself, andvt hem for no onewhere but you would would have cared."

"Don't you think "she said gently"That you made a mistake in letting your sad experiences embitter you.fBecause you have been unlucky in guardin g those whom you became friendly to it did not followthat the whole world is against you. Perhaps to you unconsciously put yourself against all t he world, and t herefore saw every one in an unfavorable light.It seems easy to do that.T rouble of the most severest kind comes to most people no matter how good or bad they are doesn't it, and your experience should have t hought you to make t he best of it.And too Master Adeldafob you must remember you were not destined to have t hem litt le girls for good and all.They belong t o the great Emperor Vivian, an d their mother, Penrod t heir brot her has a full right to claim t hem more than Manley would, and what could you say if Penrod claimed t hem.Could you resist him who has a right as t hey're his dearl and dearling sisters.At least t hat is my not ion of the value of philosophy.

" he spoke timidly and hesitatingly, as though she gave utterance to t hese words againt against her will .

"I am sure you are right, but I'm not holdin g myself against the world but against these wicked generals." he said eagerly ."but as to whether I and Penrod agree ot disagree is only an affair that might be between us.As long as I'm in the Glandelinian army only Manley can and did take them from me.But Penrod and I for some good reason are as great a friend as if we were one.And therefore t he Vivian Girls have a great right to show me as much affection as the y did and do Penrod."

He put his hands to his eyes, but he could not keep back the tears.

"Long before I knew them, I have been such a lonely little boy"he sobbed"No one but I can tell what a l-n lonely loveless life mine has been before I was rosdu rescued from my enemies and brought back to my own.T hen I recieved this new woe, this new and Heavier Cross which was or is just as heavy a cross for t hem if not heavier.If I had not been wounded, and if Gerald Starring had not double crossed me I should like to begin all over again.I will get even with both Gerald Starring and Manley and all his generals."

He sobbed for many minutes, ad she did not kn ow what to say to him to comfort him, and also wondered why he claimed that he and Penrod were as great friends as if he and Penrod were one, but nevertheless she took his hand within er her own and gent ly caressed it, as one might do to a little child in pain.He looked up and tried to smile t hrou'h his t ars tears.

"You have been very good t o me"he said,"And I dare say that t he way I might have spoken tou might have thought me very ungrateful.You min ded one of my t orn uniform coats early this morning; and I have liked to remember you have done it for me.But you have done far more than this for me;you have put some sweetness and hope into my life.Whatever becomes of me hereafter, or of Violet, and her sisters I shll never be able to think of my life on earth as anyt hin g but beautiful, because you was the only one here who thought kindly of me and acted kindly for me.Last night when this terrible pain of sorrow and loneliness came over me,I wished you or the Vivian Girls were near me,I wished to hear their voices.There is very beautiful music in their voices, t heir voic es are prettier than those of the prett iest sin ing birds.I had wished younwere n ar me too."

"I would have come to you gladly"she said smiling quietly at him."But if you are so good a friend of the poor Vivian Girls you must make a promise t hat whenbyou are well enough to leave this hospital you will send for your own friends and have a search made for them.Then youwill see what a splendid reward you'll have.Now will you promise to have them located and outwit Manley whom you say you hate."

"Yes you bit I will and for my sake more t han anything else"he said fiercely and he raised her hand reverently t o his lips.

"You are not angry at me for doing that!"he asked suddenly."I should not like t o vex you as you are not of the Glandelin ian side."

"I'm not vexed, especially when a Glandelinian boyscout tries to act like a christian."she answered kindly."Were not foes at heart, only military foes."

"Then perhaps I may kiss it once more!"he asked."We may not even be military foes for all you kn ow"he added under his breath, but she happened to over hear.

"Yes you may"she answered wondering again at the strange last remark, and again he raised her hand to his lips.

"Thank you"he said quietly"That was kind of you."Do you see t hat forest fire glare over yonder!It is golden is it not like a golden and reddish sunset I find it very pleasant to sit here watching such a glow, but if I was only happy and free from mental pain.But you have cheered me considerably, and I'll do all t hat you asked me, and now again I feel so st rong that I believe t he doctors will soon let me go back on duty to morrow."

"Of course they will."she answered cheerily"and I shall have to confess that this is a grand hospital even if it' is a Glandelinian one.I am quite willing to yeild t he palm to you if you'll lend me aid in locating the Vivian Girls."

"I must after the expression of the mouth"he replied."That is the part which has worried me.I don't think I t old you that I have had q a commission t o go forth to Manleys army when I have recovered.Yet I hate to go and rather stay here."

"But you have to do your dut y here as well as I do within the christian lines" she laughed.

"You must be generous enough to lend me some assistance" he said smiling."By the way I must give you special prot ection while you stay within t hese lines for ot herwise you may be detected and arrest ed.I believe you do not do any i ng like spying here and I warn you not to.That is a pity that I have to warn you as it may have been your duty, but try t o locate Violet and her sisters on y and I will help you as soon as I get back on duty."

"I should like more t han anything to find them"she said, wonderin g to hear him speak soreservedly.It seemed now as if some great barrier had been rolled aside and as if she were getting to know him better, ha i having been allowed to glance into his past life, to sympathize with his past and present woes and and sorrows, and with the failure of his ambitions, and with t he deadening of h is heart .

"You must find the little Princesses at all costs."he continued ent husiastically" and if I mistakenot t hat adventure will mark an epoch in your life.You will find t hat all t hese adventures will serve to enable your own character, and you will be able to put mind into your work, and not merely form, and reluctance. Do you kn ow I feel so well that I wish I was on duty already.But t hat remind reminds me"he said fumbling into his pocket"I think Imhave dropped my small Album.It would grive grieve me to lose that lo little book."

"Let me go and look for it.."she said, and she advanc ed a few steps and then came be back.

"You a Glandelinian have been saying many kind words to me"she said as she put her hand on his arm,"Qnd yet I have not t old you t hat I value your friendship and m am grateful to you for m letting me be more than a mere stranger to you though we fight on opposite sides.Thave been very lonely in my life untill I joined the christian girlscouts, and it has been a great privilige to me t o talk to you a good Glandelinian boyscout.I want you to know this--for if I have been anythin g to you, you have been a great deal to me and you seem to be more like a christian than a rel real Glandelinian.You see although I am a litt le girl I have long since learned myself a great deal of sorrow.I have had hard times, but have met with sy sympathy because in our country we sympathize with each other in our sorrow.All of my followers have passed through many sad experiences, and know about failure or success.Yet though all t he boy and girlscouts were very friendly to me I had withdrawn into myself and should probably have grown more isola isolated than I was before, but that I once became acquaint ed wit h the Vivian Girls and know what they are and do though I have not yet ever seen t heir brot her Penrod.Yet I shall always remember your good advice, and though all the world may laugh,I will keep to a high ideal of life, n and always do my duty and I will never let despair creep into my heart nor lose my faith in humanit y.You have borne yourself well under your own Heavy cross, and n ow as it is getting night and the moon is rising I bett er go and get your Album before the time of the visiting hour is up."

As she spoke a lingering ray of light from a hospital window on t he verdanda lit up her face and gently caressed her soft brown bobbed hair, and she seemedca gracious presence, beautiful and gladdening, because of her earnestness.

"N ow"she said" "You You rest here untill I come back with your little Album and t hen I t hink I must be getting on my way to where I reside."

When she had gone gone he walked or paced the empt y veranda.There was a very hard sad look on his face .His eyes were fixed on the moon rising in t he sky looking strangely yellow in the smoky sky.

"Hello you old man in t he moon."he said with great bitterness in his voice. "God, the Blessed Virgin and you above all t hings about me remain constant and lovely and unchanging--you Three beauties looked down on me withthe same expressions a year ago when I had happiness,--my advent ures, my experiences, and t hem upon the fact t hat I found out I have lovely sisters seven of them and great comfort with them over at my side.And you mist er moon to night look down on me again, on the veranda of a hospital within n the enemys lines, you look down on me in must t he same way, but when I have lost them all.What wisdom you the moon h must have acquited watching the silly cruel antics of t his dreadful record breaking war, and now when for me t he do comedy is b t ended growing wise, and always too late, too late.and this is t he end that love of my sisters has brought me to, for those seven bright blue eyes, those golden curls of t heir beautiful little heads, and seven soft red lips, t heir Heavenly loving ways--for you my dearest sisters--I 've given up everyt hing else that life held for me---and most tragic of all I've given you up t oo because I had to.Oh if I had my hands on t hat Geralds neck.I'd strange him like the snake he is and---" His eyes were fixed on the ground; but he fin ished and saw a white cat creeping t ward him.It came and rubbed itself against his foot and was purring with all its might, seeming determined to win some k'n kind of noi notice from him.The boy stoop ed down and picked it up and stroked it carefully and then went back to his chair sat down and holding t he purring cat in his lap cried himself t o sleep.Meanwhile Jane Melfort was looking for t he Album and found it lying near t he edge of t he wall, and was just going to take it to her "Glandelinian friend" when she saw some boyscout who seemed to recogn ize her and she him.They gave a act of recognition and h e came t ward her.

"I've been searchin g for t he Vivian Girls everywhere"he said."but no one can locate t hem."

"You should go on'e the veranda for a few minutes."she said kindly."I have been sitt ing there comforting Q Adeldefob."

"I should like to see the boyscout by that name."said t he boyscout."I know him well.I became acquaint ed with him since my little sister died and left me alone in t he world"

They went together into the Veranda and as they came near t he recess where Penrod rest ed Jane said;

"Why he has cried himself to sleep and is holding a sweet little kitten in his lap and it t oo is sleeping.I will watch by his sidevuntill he wakes up.I don't suppose he will sleep long, and---"

An orderly came up from an open door way and approached Adeldefob to shake him and awaken him but paused as he saw Jane.

"What is it "she asked anxiously."What is the matter orderly?"

"I must awa en Adeldefob.Visiting hours is up but eight girlscouts and a boy with t hem has a special pass from general Hendro to come at this hour and must see him.They won't be t urned away."

Jane therefore saw that she must leave but promishing to come the next morning left . The orderly had no time in arousing Penrod.

"Yes,"said the orderly after Pen Adeldefob asked the meanin g of it" There are eight girlscouts and they must see you privately on important business."

"I won 't see no eight Glandelinian girlscouts at any time."retort ed "Adeldefob" severely."I'm going back to the ward and;;--

"But my boy t hey won't go untill t hey have seen you.Come brac brace up. If it is not a n ecessary visit I'll only allow them a few minutes and then they'll have to go."

Adeldefob protested still further, but when the man t old that a boy also was with t hem Pe Adeldefob went with him into the ward and thence into his own priva e private room, and then, af after sitting down on a chair said;

"Let t he visit ors see me t hen.But t ell t hem they'll have to make it short."

The orderly!The orderly bowed and left the room. He was gone for about five minut s minutes and then the door reopened and eight littl e girls unusually beautiful but absolutely strangers to Penrod entered the room.They were not hasty however for t hey noticed he recieved them cordially but coldly, very coldly, for above all t hings he was more hostile to Glandelinian child scouts than he was to even most of the Glandelinian soldiery, because t hey were usally the main foes of the Vivian Girls and did their hardest to betray them to the wicked Glandelinian generals. And the fact that Gerald Starring was the leader of them made his enmity the more greater.

"Well"said Penrod, curtly."T here's a number of chairs you may sit down .You can occupy mine t oo"he added to the tallest of the litt le girls.But remember visitoin g visiting hours are over so make your visit short ."

They obeyed.He looked around .

"Wher e's t he boy who was with you?"

"He's wait ing out side.He wished us t o ent er ourselves first ."answered one of them."

Penrod looked at her as if he couldn't hardly believe his eyes. He certainly did recognize that voice, or was he out of his head and imagining things.

Then he had some misgivings and to make sure he asked;

"Why didn 't he come in?Is he afraid of me?"

"No"answered anot her of the little girls smiling despite her passing grief at Adeldefobs confusion.

P"Adeldefob got up closer and looked her squarely in the eyes.

"Well I'll be, my sisters in di disguise"he cried passion ately lift ing her up and holding her before him.

"They sure are "said a boy coming in just then and saluting Penrod most respectfully,."Through General Hendro Tutmer Jannie and I were able t o bring them here.Hendro helped them escape."

Ine Indeed at the sight of Timot hy Groveton, his hopes t hat the litt le girls in disguise were his sisters were now confirmed, and no words could express his joy, and how h and oh how they hugged and kissed each other(the door being closed.

"My dearest sisters, so our prayers were answered far quicklor t han can be expected.And you Tim did all this.How good of you."

"No, no,"not me" Timothy said excusing himself."It was all Jannie's work. "If it w was not for her I would not have known what happened.She got me to only help her to trace you.Then too it was general Hendro T urmer who t old us where your sisters were, and where you too were P n Penrod.That helped a lot too you see.Your poor sisters were dreadfully upset at this cruel thing, and vfor a short time poor Jennie and violet were slightly insane.It was too much for them."

"Tim always praises me more than I deserve"pipedvin Jannie."I only gave him a description of wh what had occured, and he did all t he work, of having your dear sisters traced(the story at first didn't mention this before but it happened as she says)While we were hunting for your d ar sisters"she continued; Starring ran across our path and seeing Timothy Groveton he ran and T im shot andbadly wounded him.He escaped anyhow but I don't kn ow where he went. But we won't see him again for a long t ime."

"He wouldn't stop when I yelled at him to"said Tim."I don't know whether I mortally wounded him or not but I did hit him in the breast.He shot at me t wice first and I answered..I had tried to catch him, as he is supposed to be under arrest for having shot you down Penrod, and your sisters.He'll be now I know for he's so wounded he'll be in a hospital."

"My dear sisters would be relieved of one fool if he had died"said Penrod."put t hen I and t hey hate the terrible idea of one losing his soul.Instead of revonging on i him if he was repentant i'd be glad he became better.But he's t he biggest of the fools and will pay.He's not a war enemy of my sisters but also a personal foe."

"He's jealoi h jealious of our position and nature"said Violet."I overheard him tell that to his followers one day.I don't see what he wants commissions of our kind for.He belongs to a rebellious part of this good nation and non e of his following deserves a commission."

M"Many of t he enemy en vy you and your sisters"said Tim."Manley envys your Fathers position and would love to kill him and be King in this st ead.He believes by that he could get Abbieannia to be like his part of t he nat ion wicked Glandelinia."

"Let him try it "said Penrod fiercely "And I'll surely kill him."He'll let us alone then.In deed I intend to kill him for that anyhow.He'll do it if h e is not out of the way and it's sinful not to do it."

"I and my sisters planned to put him out of the way long ago but didn't have t he chance"said Jennie."But we won't let the opportunity escape us.We'll get all t heir high ranked wicked leaders.It 's the only way.We intend t o trick them into an ambushcade.We and our child scouts will form it."

"What happened to you and your litt le girls friends"asked Penrod of Tim looking closely at the heads of Violet and her sisters as if he could scarcely believe his eyes."I thought the Glandelinians were going to cut their hair but I see they din't."

"Oh it was horrible it scared me at first "said Jannie before Violet or her sisters cou'd explain themselves. Fearing "Fearing t hat your poor sisters would be rescued, for Manl y suspected child scouts would disguise and come to his lines looking for them, he sent for two barbers to cut their hair as short as those of boys.He int ended to also have them dressed as boys.At first I t hought t here was a supernatural phenonenom of some kind when the barbers came.The room to me was sort of strangely lighted up though the lamp didn 't make t he light, and I t hought I heard a st range far away voice say-"They won't cut the litt le girls hair or touch t heir heads. The barbers couldn't do a thing for they told Manley t he scars turned awfully hot in their hands.It was so for one of themwas close to me and I felt a strange heat.I secretly t ouched Violet s curl of hair and felt nothing, but the Barbers looked and felt as if they were getting eletric shocks and wouldn't touch t hem but kept a great distance from Violet and her sisters in terror.Ain't that so Violet .?you tell t he rest." She added."you have more right than I".

"It is t rue"said viol t, b"but Jannie we let you have the privilige.We like t o hear you tell it.Though it's a fact it sounds now like an interesting story to us."

"I must say I was afraid myself"continued Jannie, but then in the excitement Jennie fl flurished a stretch of her hair and it hit my face and yet I felt nothingunusual nothin g unusal and thought the barbers were superstit uious.

I know it is true dearest Penrod. The Glandelinians are mostly superstitious or whatever you call it"superstitious"corrected Violet" Well I t hought t hat t he barbers were, and I couldn't help telling t hem that t hey were crazy and that they just imagined it.But I happened to feel of the scars myself and really I surely dropped them in a hurry. Manley was incensed and thought t he barbers were crazy and he grabbed from t he walls a scourage and threatened to lash them severely if they didn't get to work and cut the air, but they were so terrified that they told him to go ahead, they would die by the lash before they would dare touch a hair of their heads again.Manley Manley called them a bunch of names I abhor of using, and grasping one of the siccors which was hanging on t he wall grabbed Jennie by the a hair and pulled her tward him roughtly but lo he let go very sudden withha mighty yell and is now laid up with a badly burned hand. Two soldiers seeing what had happened to Manley struck Jennie with their hands across the face and fell dead..That was all that occured then for all the ot her Glandelin ians became so scared that t hey left your dear sisters to themselves locking them in the room t hough, not even taking t he pains to drag their dead comrades out.They were afraid to t ouch them.I managed to get out by a window and climb down a rain pipe which poor Violet and her sisters couldn't do because of t he wounds they had recieved by St arring.After that I do not kn ow what happened for I went to lookvfor Tim and t old him the story."

"It was true"said Jennie."We did not kn ow what t o make of it ourselves and were surpriced.Those barbers too have burned hands for t he siccors burned t hem. They now suspect we practiced sorcery of some sort and are magivians but we are nothing of the sort.At first we didn't realize what was really going on because our impending fate so distressed us.We did escape afterwards but that did not lessen our misery any way because we did not know where you had been moved to, and it took us four hours to get here from t he start, and on fast horses. Tim too had a hard time finding this place and we got lost and off t he course t hree or four t imes."

"And did you escape by your own selves!"asked Penrod eagerly.

"No.We were helped by a general called Hendro Turner who had befriended us and op osed Manleys designs.I believe Hendro fell by design and not bya christian bullet because Manley swore he would have revenge both on Boobhead and Turner for "butt ing in."

"How did he help you escape!"

"Throughnthe Layb Labyrinthian passages."

"Through the labyrint hian passages!"demanded Penrod hardly believing his eyes."Why they said that was impossible, and all who tried to go through would be lost forever as they had no end."

"Well some of t hem did"said violet, "and t he general knew them.He absolutely led the way.As he alone knew it was disasterious for any one else t o follow after us as they would be lost. We passed a terrible numbervof skeletons skenetons which proved a gr a great number of persons once had perished of hunger in getting lost in t hese horrible caverns.There's no way in but no way out e,c except to those who are acquainted with them.Hendro is with two and knew the way to them t oo easily.Therefore he got us through and saved us from Manley.Otherwise our escape would have been impossible.That shows brother dear all t he Glandelinians are o n ot bad wheth er the t hey're fighting against us or not.He said he had nourthority to help us get away from t he christ ian lines, t hat we must try that ourselves.But we were going to stay here forever if we were seperated from you."

"God has indeed been good to us"said Penrod."Terrible as our sorrow and misery was it has been short lived.As long as Manley is laid up and Starring wounded we need not fear the rascals any longer.But I can't leave here for a long time, because if I do without some reason I cannot again act as Adeldefob and my fun would be spoiled.Othertimes I got away again by getting myself sent into t he christian lines for information, which I pretended to get and only sent du plicates which were no good whatever.But it is such a situation now that no one will be allowed to leave to enter the christian lines.I may be confined here a long long, time sisters.I know you do not wish to leave me behind, but I had to see you suffer any more.But of course you can take your choice as I know you're not scared to do anything.which will you do."Go back to the christian lines or stay."

"By all means atwhatever the chost we'll stay untill you can get away."said The girls.

"And oso will I"said Tim."

Jennie seconded the motion and so it was decided.No sorrow or suffering could sk shake the Vivian Girls of their purpose to crush wicked Glandelinia. During these days of stay wit hin t he enemys lines unkn own at first to Violet and her sisters the battle had continued to rage at Big Girlknool

After they had gotten over their distress, and now knowin g what was happen ing either Violet, or her sisters nor Penrod nor even Groveton could not under stand the situation of the battle at Big Girlknool, its extension ,its immeasureable fury and what not. Penrod had said within this t ime while eating supper, (As their pass permitted them t o be with him permanently) "I don't understand the situation of this awful battle to day.The enemy are being victorious at or bet ween the towns of Jennie Richee and Beppo Lansin. Vivienia makes a stand at Beppo Lansin but it seems in vain and Phellannia Tamerline is his opposer and general Johnston Jacken Manley another.The batt le is fearful at Beppo Lansin and near Jennie Richee and Wiesnstien imself is hard pressed."

"I've heard all about it"said violet ."I don't know how it is turning out near Corrozane near Bushy Run but t he battle there is equally as violent as this conflict at Beppo Lansin.I'm afraid we're going to lose. Even at Big Bet h l Big Bethelt he enemy seems to have good luck.I wonder why.."

"No one kn ows said Penrod I---I---"

There came a loud knock at the door.

"Come in"said Penrod.

A man walked in.He looked around cautiously and then gazed at Violet and Her sisters pretty sharply suspiciously and then made a signal at Penrod which the boy alone underst ood.Penrod understood he was a high member of the Gemin i in disguise, and said to the man -

"They're perfectly all right Gingogore.They're my sisters in disguise."

"You must get out of this army you and your sisters as your christian smiles need you awful bad."said the Gemini."I got a permit from general Phellinn ia who said he'll pass you secretly out of the lines on pretense he's sending you into the christian lines for informat ion.He adores your sisters for their e nd endurance and bravery and therefore will grant you this favor.Here's the pass.He says you must go even disregarding doctors orders.T his note is a duplicate but it'll pass you so the doctors will have to let you go.He asks you for information about the christian generals during this battle which he kn ows already and t hat'll have you the chance.N ow for God's sake Prince and your sisters go while you have the chance."

"Thank God we have a good chanc e but ho will we get through."

"N ear Big Bethel"said Gingigore.The batt le is not so severe in that locality now and you must go.Hurry.I'll direct the way.N o body will hinder you."

They sure did not let the opportunity slip.They all were ready in an instant Penrod having finished supper.He desired t hem to eat but they did not want to delay saying they can obtain supper within t he christian lines. soon t hey were out of the hospital by a back way the doctors being forced to permit him t o go but saying amongest each other that general Phellinia Tamerline was crazy to be sending him on such a mission for informat ion from t he christian lines when he was not yet discharged from t he hospital but t he girls piped in saying t here was no "disputing the general.The doctors thought that is why t he girls and the boy came for for they had not seen Go gingigore who had been waiting outside. They were mounted on good fast reliable horses and they soon went off at a good pace through the Company St reets.M n Many of the Glandelinian pickets of general T amerlines staff knew who t he litt le girls were, but did not detain them. Howev r it was a very long distance to the region of battle from here, and Gingigore had to pickhis way carefully.He knew just the spot where they could get through the War zone without danger from shells or bullets and therefore must find it . And they had to go through big battle Bethel too which also was in t he hands of a Glandelinian army and not of Phellinia Tamerlines either.It was a part of Federals Glandelinian army.

However t hey made it after some difficulty, but Gingore told them what t hey do when t hey ventered the town so they would not make themselves under suspicion for he must leave them there. T hey saw many Glandelinians passing down t he streets and knew they were moving off t ward the battle lines. When they reached a certain square of the city they were halt ed by a group of Glandelinian generals on hors ba horseback and one of themwas general Calman Shosman.

"Where are you girl and boyscouts going"the general demanded.

"We are supposed t o make a visit to t he Christian lines"said Penrod."Here's my identification papers.And he presented them to the general."These are my girlscout companions.We're spies, and general Phellinia wishes us to gain this sort of information."and he showed the letter from Phellinia to general Shosman.

"What's the matter with Gerald Starring, Fredrick Darger and others"snapped t he general."Can't he sent one of them.It is always you t hese generals sent.T hat is a dangerous mission."

"It 's impossible for t hem t o go."said Adeldefob."according to information I've heard both Fredrick Lowdon and Starring have had their faces scratched by one or two of the Vivian Girl Prin cesses, and Gerald was shot a little lat er twice by some angry Glandelinian boys sent in a quarrel over t hem."

"Ha so those reckless little fools are meddling with those Vivian Girls again." said another of the generals who resembled Lo Leonin Maldon Bicknell."Well I have no sympathy for them.It will teach them brats to mind t heir own business and leave the Vivian Girls alon e.T hey're enemies of our side but they're Princesses and brave and I do favor t hem."
"So do I "said ghowman."If I met them here I wouldn't arrest them."
And he evidently meant it .
"Well boy"said another general who seemed to be general curran"If you have to go on t he mission I guess you will have to do it.I'll detail a number df my soldiers to lead the way.But be careful.They're more dangerous to be spied upon than we are."
He ordered a number of soldiers to come forth and when t hey obeyed he gave them orders, and Penrod, and the eight little girls and T im were soon being led on.
The soldiers got to talking about the battle and then one of them said;
"I'm a bad soldier it is true for wished as I am I love my wicked cause st ill more more but if I ever met those Vivian Girls I'd give them my hand.For t heir sake this war ought never to have occured.I hope I get wounded so I never need to return to t he army.I don't like it any more."
"The same here"said another."Then turning to Adoldofoh and looking his companions over he said-"Listen here boy, and you girls, when you go within the christian lines, for Heavens sake if you see t hem leave the Vivian Girls alone.Treat t hem with respect and don't be enemies.They don't deserve it."
"T hey'll certainly get all t he respect that is in my power"said Penrod "But just t o keep the soldier guessin g he said further t hough"but suppose they guess my intent ions and attack me what t hen."?
"That I suppose is a different thing, but there are other ways in fighting them then by using violence.Use craftiness.Outwit t hem some way but don't fight t hem with guns.If you won't draw they won't neither.I know them. If you fight with fist s they'll only try to do so too.But God help you if you draw ch on them because noone in as good as they except their brother Prince Penrod.and for goodness sake look out for him or those boy and girlscouts.T hey are said to be terrible."
"There is no doubt to t hat"said.Penrod kn owing it is t rue."I'll look out for that though unseen he winked an eye at his sisters."but how did you get all that information."?
"All our patrol scouts find that out .T hey won't clash with a party of christian child scouts for t hey're afraid.Why my boy they're too fierce to meet with.You look out for them too.Their scouting parties are as numerous as a swarm of bees."
Penrod promised he would be careful, and soon they reached the spot the soldier was to take them too.The soldi ers being really humane t he min e of them did shake hands as a farewell to them and t hen rode on.But just as the soldier said.They had of course not thought of removing their disguises and they had ridden on ly half a mile when a large party of Abbleonian girlscouts came rushin g on them from two direct ions. nd a moment before not a one had been in sight .There was nothing bet ter to do than to halt for they were the old Fashioned t errifying Vivienites of the Burrough Divis o Division and Mildred Manning was in the lod lead.
"Halt you nin e scouts"she shouted.YouRe caught.Good t hing you're children or we would give you no mercy, no quarter.surrounde them."
T hey were immediately surrounded but Violet knowing Mildred would know her voice amongst a thousand strangers spoke her name and so did her sisters.
It would take too long to describe the joy of the scouts.They had been waiting for t heir comrades to come from t he enemys lines with hopes of success in obtaining the Vivian Girls and had liberally captured their friends.
"Thank God we have found you"said Mildred Manle Manning."
"How did you escape"asked another one whose name was Susan Farrol.
As t hey rode on Violet and her sisters told t he whole story of their horrible experience.
"That shows some Glandelinian generals are really good"said Mildred Manning. I hope to God they become converted in t ime and save their souls."
They were now within within the christian lines safe and sound but far from Emperor Vivians lines.T hey were in Vivianias army.
In t he meantime the awful battle raged on savagely and most furiously at every dreadful section ment ion ed before.The quest ion was thoret he w r were the christians going to win..Where Violet and her sisters had gone the enemy were were advancing in great columns u pon general Wienstiens mighty battle line and coming on as fiercely as if the battle would be won.

Thousands of shells with their fiery wakes seemed to tear every assaulting column t o pieces while the Angelinian machine guns ; poured streams of canister an and grape shot like water from the nozzils of a hose. All trees within the region of this fierce four days action were shattered and downed by the shells. As the desperate battle was progressing, Weinstine threw his whole line in action and by evening had struck Tamerline a terrible blow, shattering his whole line to fragments but though he was victorious he failed to force him back very far. The enemy had failed to win because Zimmermann had held so successfully with Baldwin also, and because the enemy had failed to carry that pass. Has had they succeeded, in crossing the path, of forcing the lines back under Zimmermann and Baldwin they could have swept the whole girls fan line from the fields.
Yet despite his famious victory general Weinstine f earedt that the christian cause was lost for he had learned that through great manouvers Federal and thre Glandelinian Tamerline generals had paralized general vivianias advance and that a force of of the enemy had also started a drive for Angelinia Agathis (Calverinia) with the intentions of capturing the city and laying it in complete waiste. T he battle had now reached a ter ible stage of fury and fearing the danger general Vivianis endeavored to make a movement to meet Manley who was moving forward on peppo Lansin of Randall Run defeating general Ludan at Big Girlknoll but in a reaction at Big Girlknoll was defeated himself and defeated he drives or northward by one of „ulsum Manleys wingswhich prevented Vivianis's comma communications with general Robert Vivians army moving on to give battle to Manley that is ving Manley at Jennie Niche.

GENERAL VIVIANIA'S RETREA Tk, AND HANSONIA'S DESPERATE STAND AT BEPPO LANSIN.....

The results at Big Girlknoll can never be imagined. And neither could the fury of the battle. Storms of fire,s he hells supreme slaughter, and God knows what. It had been known that nothing what ever escaped in to the bath of the earthly hell lasting fourty hours. After this battle had only lasted a day before the second action the worse than had seemed to come. Never before had the world seen such bloody actions. The best generals of all had fallen and general „ivianias army had been crushed and badly mangled with the loss of 20,000,000 in killed and wounded.
Big onslaughts making the battle lines seem like advancing forest fires had swept the broken christian armies from their sources com plete f ail complete and utter defeat had been possible. It was a barrowing day for Th Thanksgiving day itself and violet and her sisters sick at heart and sorrow over the results of such a frightful carnage and of the sight of one thousand generals buried without f uneral made them almost fel fe l like dying themselves.
Everywhere was desolation. Never before was general „ivianis in such a pitiful condition as now. The whole co r country where the battle raged had been devastated and everything in ruins ruins. All he could do not was to gather the remainder of his armies and flee before „ulsum Manley could persue.The retreat began on Thanksgivinin Thnaksgiving morning and being covered by general Weinstines armies. Every band played mourn mournful marches while all the generals rode with their armies with down cast eyes. Many felt within their hearts that the war was lost indeed as the action at Girlknoll had been a disaster instead of a battle. General Zimmermann was able to ride with the officers and his face was sad indeed ovethe outcome of the titian t titanic struggle. General Vivianis also worried about his daugters and about their whereabouts for several days after the battle he n had not been able to find them. The campaigns of Calverinia in the east operated by three different Glandelinian commanders with about the same names as those in the south of Angelinin were some of the bloodiest ever seen in Calverinia. Johnston Hushnum Manleys campaigns against the town of Big Girl Knloll was the bloodiest in the eastern drama of war n and though the christian armies in the west of Calverinin were hurling the enemy back steadily back without any battles Manley himself was victorious in his own campaign having compelled general Vivianis to retreat.Hansonias army alone which had stood the terrible strain at Big Girl Knoll was still in good condition and covered general Vivianias retreat by standing his ground at Parobeck Plainsand after making three desperate onslaught each lasting over four hours with an hours lull between Galions divisions all this time being under a scathingfire along the christian front finally withdrew.
Taking advantage of Hansonias stand general vivianias army retreated without disorder. General Gannon was at the center of Hansons lines on Hansons left and he did his utmst to encourage his troops to stand firm and drive back the advancing foe wh who were at times so near that the cannons could not be sufficiently depressed to reach the desperate assailants and became utt erly useless, the artillery men being compelled to light the fuses r fuses of the shells and bowls them by scores as they were too heavy to throw.
During the action Jennings massive columns were viciously thrown unon the left of the assaulting lines and reestablished a part of the broken christian line which finally moved forward and rolled back the Glandelinian attacks.

The fighting had been very severe and bloody on both sides. The struggle had extended in an easterly direction with steady and determined attacks upon Gallions army but the christians had repelled every effort to dislodge them and so finally he had won the decisive action.

THE BATTLE OF BEPPO L'HERIN(CALVERINIA)

Several days after this fighting at Parslock sun to cover general Vivianias retreat general Hanconia following far in the rear with his army was so hard pressed that he himself was compelled to make another stand and this he did at Beppo. The first unsuccessful of the glandelinians fell with the greatest force upon Gannons lief left but the line had held firmly overlapping the right wing of the attacking force, and rolling u it up crushed and mangled the many panic stricken survivors retiring incomplet disorders. Among the guns where Hannonia had been standing with folded arms during the action storms of bullets flew. For many hours this battle had raged and toward nightfall Hannonia withdrewhaving again covered general vivianias t retreat ... only with a loss of sixty five thousand in killed and two hundred thou and woh wounded. The glandelinians who had attacked Hansonia lost at it three hundred and sixty five thousand in killed and wounded and five hundred thousand in prisoners. This made the enemys loss in this battle total to eight hundredand sixty five thou and in killed wounded and prisoners.

Learning that general vivianias was retreating from Girl Nklo Girl Knoll Violet and her sisters who really were with Hansonias xcommand made hasty preparations to go to him and ael asked Starring to go along and take all his boys as they were needed..... Wainstine and Aronlurg aided them in their preparations and on the day they rode off they were cheered by thousands of soldiers.

Violet and her sisters were worried over the news stating that general vivianias defeat at Big Girl Knloll and kept on their wa even without stopping anywhere to get a bite to eat. They had also heard that Hansonia having fought two desperate battles to cover general ,in ,ivianias retreat was preparing to again cover general Vivianias retreat by waging another and a general battle at Corotsaine and so headed in that direction and within three days reached his army just as the battle had begun.

THE FRIGHTFUL CARNAGE AT CORROSAINE.

Hansonias army was far from genera Vivianias army but ad itional recruits had come in from the north east n and west and when the little girls had reached Hansonias army they fought the fearful battle b... Big Bushy Run.

The left wing of one of the christian armies under general Vandelin wynns had resisted a furious onslaughtmade by the enemy in heavy force, the glandelinian glandelinians attacking in full fury and matters for a time had looked very serious for the Angelinians but now heavy columns of infantry with their guns well c closed and no straggl ers had come to the assistance regardless of the confusion all around and the enemy who were pushing their steady way onward like an avalanche were was finally checked at one point with frightful losses, but general Negro Mc-Whirther s columns had moved obli quely to the right and met the left of the advancing columns of reinforcements which had swung around in that direction and the Angelinians despite their stubborn resistance were thrown backupon their line of works the landelinians charging furiously in whole divisions.

The Glandelinians amid the christian storm of fire were advancing with a parently reinforcetil an force and about n ine hundred thousand Omarians dashed directly upon the works and for hours the musketry crashed like the din of the warfare of thehe were mingled with the wild yells of the com b... After t ... than four hours nearly one half of these devoted columns of the Omarians were ... on the field dea or wounded together but the proceeding columns of Omarians dec delivered a staggering blow though for a time the advan ce of the center was checked, amid tremendous slaughter. Th edivis divisions under Meldon, ,endings, Hart and Iason came promptly to the support of the center and again the mass swept forward together amid the storm of gunsmoke.

The advanced columns of the wildest yrelling ,landelinians were re rudely recieved and driven back with ter ible loss but at the same time the repulsive defenders were attacked in front and on the right, and Bendons glandelinians yelling like demons reached the first line of works and gallantly strove to take itbut a furious impetious counter charge drove the assailants back with more frightful loss and two of their leading generals killed..... The main columns however still kept up the determined attack and Mc-Whirthers positions extending across the Bendons roads by reason of movements of general Sanderburgs glandelinians troops became untenable and they were compelled to retire their left wing under general

Good will having been crushed to pieces and rolled up in great confusc confusion and with Good will mortally wounded. Bernard Hinderninas forces of Glandelinian ... allies at the same time ... attack on the north of Little Oak Creek forcing Be goods brigades into surrender. Lovefriend's divisions also met a part of Hinderninas assailants but he himself ... repulsed the attack the retiring Hinderninas troops back mangled and crushed. While this was going on an unsuccessful attempt ew was made to turn the left of Hinderninas purple coated wedge and heavy assaults made upon these lines also met withterrible slaughter.

On the front of Greatheart's divisions and thoseunder general Great Heart also persistent assaults were also kept up untill other troops were brought up in the rar who hurled a portions of the enemys wings back, with a staggering defeat but the other columns pressed on with tremendous fu fury and overlapping the right of Great Hearts corps crushed the wing by a sudden and determined attack upon it taking the Angelinians by surprise and driving them from a large part of their works with a loss of over two hundred ten thousand prisoners, among them being three generals who were also captured.

As they pressed on the glandelinians under general Gonders threw themselves heavily against Great Hearts left and assisted by t the timely arrival of Phils brigades threw them back with horrible slaughter. At the same time general Baldonia Bach with Mahomen and Butlers divisions made desperate and vehement efforts to break through the christian lines confronting t them. These serious attacks met with complete and bloody repulses, but again and again with the most horrible fury imaginble the army columns pressed to the attack, and though brigade were sent back torn and like ding with the ground covered with their dead and wounded, the survivors came on anwe anew.

As the attack continued the christian fire became so terrific that before the pitiless storm of bullets that met them whole lines dissolved, but the main columns in the rear pressed forward furi u furiously, rushing over their dead and wounded comrades and reaching the main line of great Hearts works attacking it furiously.

The whole of great hearts center despite the ter heavy odds stood manfully to their works fighting furiously in their rear, with clubbed muskets, bayonets, pikes and pistols, and the fighting became so fierce that over three thousandbad fallen in a minute before general general Joseph Callens badly mangled 11 brigades had already its own front and turned a portions of its wing upon the flank of the assailants just as the hard pressed christian line was beat backwards driving the glandelinians out with many if their dead and wounded ... ... the works.

At the same time Greatheart's right which had been ... reinforced recieved an attack quite as determined under Baldwinson and Dellion and after ... hours stern resistance was broken and event ... out of its works with the loss of nearly one half of their number. A terrible rep was made which enabled the attacking ... through in overwhelming numbers but at this time general Vandelin divisions fell upon its flank, while another brigade was hurried ... the rear n and thrown across the front of the assaulting columns, whole assailned now on three sides at once were forced back to the works they had captured, and over them where they broke in disorderly retreat.

This ended the three days battle of corrazone of big bunny Run which had raged all that time without a pause the losses on both sides in killed and wounded bein being nearly seven hundred thou thousand.

Victorious on the christians were they were forced to continue their retreat for they did not wish to leave general vivianias army ... too far away.

Four days later as Han sonias army was was halting for rest in the vinicity of Big Bethel rumers came that Hansonias right and eastern wings which had a narrow front and extended as far as eye could see suffered a disaster.

THE BATTLE OF BIG BETHEL

Hivans battalo battalions of parks of artillery after a fierce duel of two days with the Glandelinian batteries, and which made a shell fire as to ... tear very Nature to her destruction/ was suddenly ... by nearly nine million glandelinian Gargoiles and taken after a bloody hand to hand fight inwhich three million were killed and wounded in that wild overwhelming rush. The infantry who defended the guns fought fouroulu fouriously for four hours against the overwhelming surge of green coated yelling devils in human form untillhun dreds of thousands had been killed or captured but as they were deprived of the assistance of the artillery which was the chief strength of the position, they could do little to check the terrible onslaught of the glandelinian columns who amid a pandemonumn of hand to handin fighting soon overran the whole line of works, capturing nearly three thousand three hundred guns and almost an intire division of prisoners about five hundred thousand in number.

No one not even the officers could for an hour realize the extent of ... the serious disaster though thewhole ... ... pened within two hours.

Hallidvons and Madge Evans's troops which made this sweeping assault had extended their double lines across the whole two lines of works on both sides and as soon resumed their advance attacking Bull's brigades with storming fury forcing them to rapidly draw back to the rear every die of the enemys lines pouring a galling fire upon them. Sanders right wing under Poe checked the advance of the assailants along its own front and finally threw the assailants back with severe loss while the divisions under General Loveheart which had been held in reserve were [illegible] thrown infront of the advancing Glandelinian columns which at their appearance charged as furiously as they knew how and the struggle became so exceedingly fierce that many multitudes fell dead or wounded. The two Generals [illegible] Gargl Gargolian Ohmardians after a fierce struggle swarmed over a salient and as the divisions under Love heart did not cover their wholefront this enabled the Glandelinian columns under general Ross to connect the with the divisions under Gargolian and the attack after a two hours gory hours lull was again renewed with fruitful determination. Despite the fearful hellish carnage Phils brigades the whole length of th their a already shattered lines swept the trenches as far as Great Hearts front but as a gap was made on account of some blunder Love hearts front was not covered and so his right was exposed to a terrible withering fire from the works then by the enemy and his right was thereby threatened with annihilation. Three brigades , more for the enemy, came up and the first to arrived rushed forward through a fearful storm of withering fires and captured another line of works on Loveheart's left but with the loss of of two hundred thousand in killed and wounded. Their leader general Marcus Rueboum fell dead from his horse just as he leaped over the work works. General Dane Daniel Moor had also been killed and [illegible] and general Phil Clough recieving a painful wound remained in the trenches he had captured with his men.

Rosses right grand division was hard pressed by columns of Mac-Hollistinians and though the brigades under Harvest and Mc-cowen came to the support they met a blinding storm of bullets and canister, and suffered a terrible loss as they made a firm stand. The situationnow for several hours was at a standstill, and even when night came and the battle ceased for a while the Glandelinians still held a greater part of the works and though in the morning all the reinforcements concentrated upon them were unable to drive them out they could advance no further though Pugnoseinies corps had arived with Despairs divisions and a division of the seventh corps and one half of Alfreds corps and these tried to attack the battle as the day progressed increasing with tremendous ferocity. On both sides during the still night parks of artillery had been brought up the christians alone using every piece upon the line of Glandelinian trenches a while at the same time other christian leaders by the orders of Hansonia brought every man that could be spared and it became a matter of enduran ce with the men themselves.

With a fury that beats everything [illegible] the battle of Birlknoll ~~the battle~~ raged all day within the space covered by the captured works and those still held by the christians and even the adjacent works many attempts to advance on either side being met and repelled with merciless slaughter of whole brigades and hundreds of battle flags swed back and forthover different portions of the same works it being war to the ki knife and the knife to the hilt. Both sides fought like millions of fiends for thir possession and once more the very mouths of hell seemed to open all along the whole battle line ri roiting in its fumes the smoke becoming so thick that nothing could be seen, and during the deadly conflict both sides made strong diversions to relieve the strongest pres. pressure that would occure here and there.

At another point of Hansonias lines Hallies sixth corps a of Glandelinians made an attack upon Sheltys lines in purple and also upon Thoams Lloyd general Hopkins lines and moved also with a part of Pickadees corps to strike the flank of an oncomming force of Athisamnians and these engaged in a whole sale slaughter one part of the christian line defeating Ponhesdueins corps which had been advancing advancing fouriously at the same time to attack Clickadees corps and here without misunderstanding the conflict attained such a fury that within four hours nearly two million fell. A fire of nearly 4 four thousand pieces of artillery swept all the approaches to villalonas lines which was soon driven back torn to pieces and in disorder before it came within reach of the christian infantry but the main columns of assailants continued to press forward making one heavyattack after another upon the divisions of Clingmans and Hawkshaws divisions Hawkshaws left being torn to shreds by the fire of the attacking graycoats which gave way and then Woodroffs on Hawkshas on right being turned was also forced tacl back. The assaulting columns swept on line following line until in front of the christian line still holding there was a mass of writhing w twisting human being beings upon which the christian artillery and musketry played with cruel effect. The firing had become so heavy that many of the divisions of christians had exhausted their ammunition before the attacked ceased and wr were forced several times to take to their bayonets and pikes, and Hansonia had sent orders time and again for supplies of ammunition to be brought up and several times himself had went into the very trenches to regulate the firing and through the storm of bullets that swept about him his coat tail being torn to shreds. On reaching the trenches the third time he found to his surprise that despite the critical su situation

j his men were in fine spirits, continually laughing and talking as they fired. He also saw more plainly the terrible inconceivable havoc that was made in the lines of the advancing columns of Glandelinians in grey. It was more like complete bloody murder than simple war. Over more than one million three hundred thousand had fallen all along the battle line, but where he stood already thirty thousand graycoats lay in front of the works either killed or too badly woundedto leave the field. During the severe action the christian artillery was handled furiously and general Sanguine cheif of Millions artillery hadcooperated with the almost energy in strengthening the christian line and directing the fireof his own guns with great skill tearing and shattering and mangling, not only the front of the advancing forces but deciminating its flank also, as well as the supporting troops. For all this while they were busy with the artillery on the center of the general line of action a sound of battle both on thenorth south and on the right and left could be heard it being a general advance of Longmans Hoomannias division. Here was the fiercest action of the batle. Diemanns corps recieved a severe attackbut without succeeding in holding their ground, while on their right where the line extended toward Busey munit was broken to pieces but at once restored by Michals Sanguines brigades with heavy losses to Gardens corps which made a furious demonstartion.

The result of the bloody action along this point was a grandadvance, a desperate struggle and a bloody crushing success for the christians. Afterthis the christians were able to retain [illegible] for several days and even for a week but not long after the enemy were following so closely that general Vivianie was again endangered by the fire she was trying to move around Hansonia on [illegible] general Vivianias badly crippled lines. The vain columns of Pendons veterans [illegible] Glinian Gargolieshad pressed forward in overwhelming numbers and three or four times had made desperate attempts to go around Hansonias right and get at Vivianie and s the Glandelinian advance was now more resistless, the foremost columns of the enemy having succeeded in getting around and Hansonia becoming aware of the feint of the enemy and fearing a disaster if he did not do something efore li long decided to give serious resistance once more and crush the enemy if possible. General Cannon by orders of Hansonia hi hurried troopsto Powd wing from Neldon to the right and norden on the left and center and these were sprung upon the region where the Glandelinians endeavoring to flank Vivianie were believed to be moving.

The Glandelinians however attacked with such a fury that these christian divisions were driven back crushed and mangled.

The Glandelinians seeing their apparent success now made desperate efforts to manouver around in another direction so as to be hindered by Hansonias protecing army and ge at Vivianie in full force but at this point Hansonias forces hastily retired and after three days marching and forced marching formed a general battle line right in Federals way.

CHAPTER [illegible] THE BATTLE OF MADGE EVANS

Federal was enraged of being barred like this and endeavored to manouver the christians out of their positions but in vainand then being cannonaded severely by some of the christian batteries he was complel compelled to hurl an fierce onslaught on Hansonias front in the vinicity of the town of Madge Evans.

Though the Glandelinians advanced in fearful odds it was really marvelious how the assaulting columns failed to meet annihilation from the sharp fire that met all along the line from thousands of cannons and millions of musketry which poured upon them incessantly. It was a fire so keen thatit split the blades of grass and mowed down myriads of men simultaneously. The minnies and stor storm of canister moaned and screeched like a furious hurricane as it picked victims by the thousands per minute. Some of the christian or Glandelinian columns [illegible] formed over the christian trenches scores of thousands going down mangled and bleeding. After these Glandelinians however were repulsed there was an lull for about three hours duration and about ten oclock that morning the strong battle line of Hanlon's appeared, the Angelinians recieving their terrific storm of assaults with hellish fury and amid a hell of terrific slaughter, General Boswell lost nearly sixty hundred thousand out of his gallent brigades and he was killed as he tried to rally the columns which were rolled up in that mighty battle furance. A part of the trenches however had been taken by the Glandelinians under Henry Evans and a part of the purple line had been swept back right and left with every division or brigade reduced only to remnants. The struggle was more desperate and pertinacious than ever. All the while amid a sea of smoke the Glandelinian leaders desperately pushed forward large bodies of troops, being determined at all hazardous to force Hansonias lines and get atGeneral Vivianie to prevent his escape. Many times the Angelinian officers r from the fury of the enemys assault doubted wither the r lines could hold untill more came to their aid from the other wings.

Soon other brigades came to their support and thus reinforcened the whole line redoubled their exertions the dense smoke becoming so intensified by coun storming discharge of musketry and cannon that he nim of the christian was almost uncertain, yet regardless of the exceedingly fierce and murderous withering fire that tore one line of men after another to pieces the Clandelinian columns a continued their attacks andcrawling and leaping forwardun der cover of the smoke they ra ised their horrible "Devu Davil yell'',and ten times amid a sea of almost preternatural slaughter, charged gal antly upon to the very muzzles of the Angelinian cannon. The series upon series of hand to hand fights that occured, was fearful, and both sides writhed and twisted back and forth forty, before the eny enemy succeeded in occupying the line line of christian trenches.....

As they swarmed over the breastworks the landelinians made excellent a use of their rifles and the captured cannon and Abbiesandians and Angelinians for twenty miles whent down fifty thousand, en and as all the artillery horses and even the drivvers and the cannoneers were shot down the Angelinian survivors could not prevent them from being captured. All the officer generals all along this line were killed and wounded and dismounted but noe now the open ground in front of the works were [illegible] Under cover of the sce sections of batteries depending the second line of main works about two thousand in number were put into action, and these [illegible] short range with double charges of canister annihilated all the Clandelinian in the open, and increased the awful carnage moving down hundreds of thousands of graycoats at other points of theline. Blowin [illegible] with storm of hi h explosives and staggering the apparently exultant enemy and hurling them back their whole line badly mangled and cut up and in utmost confusion and consetearntion at each fearful unexpected reception.

The fresh columns of Clandelinians rushed forward at a sweeping assault to silence those fatal guns if possible the Angelinian gunners firing their guns a for a hundred times upon the desperate assailants and when all these drivers and cannoneers had fallen others took their places the works being chicked along this point with many scores of thou ands of dead of both sides. The battle was now at white heat the Angelinians sticking to their second line of works like leeches despite the fury of the landelinian assault and the Clandelinians soon suffered exfr exf excruciating losses and abandoned the assault for a brief spell.

Hundreds of the brass pieces of the fir fifth artillerybad been disabled in a few hours and cut and hacked by the bullets of both enemies having unworked with their muzzles por projecting over the works and horrible to say their wheels were half sunk in mangled flesh, and blood whie bw between the recently furiously surging linesin gray, and beside the christian lines lay the thousands of horses of the artillery men completely riddled by bullets and mangled by exploding shells.

any horses belonging to the christian officers had fallen and thousands of the dead and wounded themselves had been literally torn o pieces by the storm of canister as it swept the ground where they had fallen, while at the same places it seemed as if the gore was knee dp deep and many thousands of the fallen by the constant movements of the troops were almost buried in it.

THE FURIOUS STORM OF ONSLAUGHT RESUMED.

Along the second line of workthe Clandelinian offensive was soon resumed and with such bl-ody fury that the Angelinians were compelled to back off from the breastworks but soon other brigades came to their rescue and went hard at work and whole brigades of the enem in onslaught after onslaught going to pieces and being rolled up in great confusion. Twelve brigades under general Cosoph arlow being sent to arlow assistance held their ground at one angle of the worksand t the brigades also under general Buckwick went hard at work, going deep into the bloody struggle, which increased with terrific fury the roar of firearms and cannon being redoubled and the whole christian line appeared like a long wall of smoke from some great con flagration of the grassy plains.

TheThe second and thirdo divisions of the enemys sixth corps were already in shreds, and ranks of men crowded in some places fo fourte n deep were decimated by a rapid and continuous fire which was poured upon the assaulting columns at all points the Clandelinian losses being frightful. The Clandelinian brigade under general Penry in camp in making a roaring assault was torn to piecesand the general, with his assistance general Charlie Diebiemann were killed. General Carlies divisions met the heaviest fire but to their leader was also killedand their columns threatened with annihilation were compelled to withdraw.

What remained of the many Clandelinian divisions who e joined in the assault were now only sma ll regiments, and the survivors who had receded from the christian works were also shot to pieces by a storm of bullets. Nearly every Clandelinian standard or regimental flags w was mere rags torn to shreds and blood soaked, , and along the whole line of battle millions of trees were cut and torn by the storm of minnie balls, shells and canister many bing completely knowed off by the fire of both sides, while the two lines of trenches fairly ran with blood and thirty times were cleared of the dad bodies.

Hundreds upon hundreds of thousand of dead dying and wounded lay piled over one another In front the line the fallenlay five or six deep, all the dead and even be wounded being lad y badly mangled hundreds of thousands of arms necessaries, ammunition, cannon shot and shell and mes s of broken clothing was strewn about it being the most horrible sight ever witnessed. The Clandelinians finally abandoned the assault bynightfall having unfortunately drew the fire from other batteries of cannon, whole lines being ablaze for the distance of fourty miles.

In the morning Jensens divisions of Hendons Hendons resumed the assault on the christian lines, advancing in long lines the full length of the christian front but Stsily arranged three more new batteries which greeted the assailants with a terrific curtain storm fo of shells. Everywhere the air was full of the screeching shells and whizzing bullets. The Clandelinian divisions under general Judas about I,200,000 strong had a fearful struggle of over two hours duration losing over t two hundred thousand men. The other divisions coming to itshelp made furious onslaughts to capture and secure a part of the new line of trenches but while its center divisions were counter attacked and repulsed,heavy columns came surging around Stsielys left whose battery men and infantry did wonders but the whole line of these Guarians was rolled u up and crushed like Wellingtons at w Waterloos and their leader killed.

A lull of an hours duration followed this great christian success, and then general Bloomington who arrived in time brought up Whites brigades as quickly as men could march and run and the rolled up portions were thus succored before being destroyed by the christian columns who now came on yel yelling with confidence that their superior numbers would bring them success. It did. As the christian columns came to within fifty yards of the new battle o line of the foe there came a sheet of fire scores of miles long followed simultaneously by a of deafening earsplitting roar and the countless numbers of dead and wounded lay piled up before the works but the survivors surged over and drove the Clandelinian columns back mangled and shattered in return. The Landelinian color bearers were chargrined at the defiant yell of the Angelinians and swinging their tattered flags to the breas n breast urged their comrades to rally and come on at a counter charge. All along the line the Clandelinians who tried torally met continous and deadly vi volleys. Again and again the positions taken by the christians were assaulted by the Clandelinians who dashed forward in the face of the storm of lead only to have their very main line torn and mangled.

The Clandelinian losses from their tremendous assaults and from the terrible artillery fire that raked down their co umns as they advanced were frightful alalong the line the fire along the Abbiesandian and Angelinian front being as fierce a storm of musketry that ever raged along a battle line before under such serious circumstances.

Parknotre Digion a observed his per on when they were forced to stop and made a vigorious effort in which he fell mortally wounded and with his columns two million strong crushed to fragments and rolled up in great confusion. David e made a similr similar effort simultaneously, meeting the same withering fire that tore his line to pieces and was dangerously wounded with general Salamanderinie simultaneous/y both generals recieving a wound in the same place.

It was impossible for many to stand the [illegible] of artillery and the crushing enemy mound of musketryas the christian continued to repel the assault of the enemy the many continueing untill nightfall with the fury of desperation to take t e second line of trenches, but time and again the christians put in a fire of artillery and musketry that decimated them and organized an attacking force that swept away the bold Clandelinians in double line, but with terrific yells the Landelinians would come back o the sa me attack.

During one of the last desperate assaults of the every that day many of the Clandelinians had passed beyond the christian line.Five divisions of fresh troops were sent up by d Hodge, while Inspector general Corbin and general Stronger led thiter two from Pisir armed with repeating riflesand the chief of artillery placed nine batteries so to sweep those exposed flankers.

These arived at the right moment and after a series of rapid discharges all the re group of of Clandelinian flankers were cut down by the galling fire of repeating rifles and cannon.

Night came on and still the battle co continued to rage and the increased sound of firing i indicated a sharper conflict where Pardees right and center joined between Vendinas brigs e n brigades who were holding that point the fourth corps of Manleys left att acking it with great determination but suffering a loss proportunate to their courage. The assaults were vigorious and resolute and were made at the same time on Amiles Abbiesandian line the Clandelinians being fully exposed suffering heavily and then it was a fact that the Clandelinians could never be driven back without severe losses.

The spirited fighting was at midnight after a lull of an hour, when a furious attack was maintained by the enemy on the whole fronts vigorous and bloody attack ben was maintained by the enemy on the whole fronts vigorous and bloody attack ben being made on windmans divisions of Peppos corps. Millions of the assailants pressed up to the trenches hindreds of thousands to be mowed down. Stewarts divisions also was fiercely attacked, Kallicos troops simultaneously, the action again continueing without a lull of pause the canister shot of the Angelinian field pieces and the musketry of the infantry at short range tearing the assaulting brobrigades to pieces.

Shoemeyns armies of Glandelinians assaulted the center of Pannonins main line or left wing at least while the first grand divisions went against the othe.
Although suffering losses our out p of proportionation to those suffered in the other recent battles with Pannonia the Glandelinian troops pressed up to the trenchments in monsterous waves maintaining the unequal conflict with the perrevering courge of angels themselve, while all along the whole christian line a furious fire of musketry and artillery was kept up without intermission.
n great force and determined courgae the Angelinians met the columns in grav n d many scores of thousands of the assailants fell against the parapets of the christians and masses thousands in number that swarmed among the christian trenches were killed or taken prisoner.
As steadedily and as irresistible as agreat tidal wave, the survivors came on imditing that furious bloodcurdilling "V Devil yell", the great human waves sweeping along with frightful fury.
The first main shock came upon two misplaced brigades which had remained in this position through some ones blunder until too late to retire without serious dunster. When struck by the irrestible sweep of rosmannins and federals divisions the brigades were reduced to fragments, the survivors making their way as best as they couldand in that wild rush for and christians were interminled in desprate hand to hand fighting of the most ferocious character the piercing devil yell of the enemy rising high above the din of conflict nearly seventy thousand being made prisoners.....
Worse of all for the christians Bisily and s Stancks men had moved to the rear of the christian fighters and the guns loaded withgrape and canister mowed the a panic stricken christians down like the fall of snowflakes in a storm.
he victorious Glandelinian army became now a resistless striking mob and swept up on to the very line of main works withno check from hardly any quarter the rush being so fierce that numberless Angelinian officers and men who fled dropped exhas exhausted and lay there as if dead while the most terrific hand to hand contest ever seen raged over their heads. The tremendous onset, the wild pandemonuimn of yells, of the Glandelinians t e whole infernal din of the slaughter unerved Tricklands columns who on seeing their comrades from the advanced main line rushing to the rear tried to cover their retreat but they themselves were soon flooding the contagin contagion soon spreading elsewhersin a few minutes and dis orderly streams and swarms of anad wave of Angelinian soldiers poured from the trenches the guns being abandoned and nearly the whole line of works being deserted only to be occupied a moment later by the Glandelinians who swarmedover these works.
/t this critical juncture general Morson saw the fearful peril and ordered forward his well disciplined brigades which was soon involved in the fiercest hand to hand fightingas ever soldiers engaged in but of no avail. The divisions of Seldonia vans army which had remained steadfast also rallied to the work and gave the enemy a hot reception but the human torrents soon poured on Seldonia vans was killed and his divisions also thrown into confusion Morson was soon fighting on foot his horse having been shot from under him and also general Caldwellis doing all that brave men could do but thesetwo generals were soon painfully wounded while some of Emersions men who manned the abandoned guns fell under a withering fire which was incurred.
ew reinforcements filled the gaps on Tricklands right the christian muskets made more fearful havoc the new batteries cutting furious through the Glandelinian columns by hundredswho time after time scrayed to for ce the line more then twenty color bearers of the enemy having f l fallen and to most of the regimental flags nothing was left but the t staffs only.
Despite al, this slaughter the Glandelinians continued to throw themselves a dnst against the christian works with a fierce outcry that was impossible to describe even to exaggerate, fighting with whatseemed the very madness and frenzy of despair. Through all the blinding medium of smoke and hells blast of musketry and cannon the Glandelinians made assault after assault with ight and main and the christian generals received to annonia that they recieved sixteen bloody attacks withthe los of hundreds of thousnds per hour Along this point fell most of the Confederate officers who on that fateful morning in a seething inferno of an earthly hell and damanation of horror gave up their lives Buebaum and Guarries and Stewart ptiched headlong into the christian lines lines and Cookre ll of the same corps was mortally wounded and general Costellios Rae Bach severely wounded. Bernard Parsons and Buebaum Grandberry, Strieben Michael, and Gist were killed, and Tomas Federal the main head who led the assult was very dangerously wounde, while general Raymond Richardson Federal himself was severely wounded.
mersons brigadehaving captured Pognose who was wounded a having fallen inside the works.....The heaviest loss on all the Glandelinian divisions was in Federald right rih right wing where the christian line hadheld its ground the most stubbornly but with indescribable loss to themselvesmany of them hamp officers.
Tames operationale cavarly force was also in this bloody action against the christian lines it being one of the bloodiest gridironsthe forces of G

Glandelinians under Patchingtonia and Mc-Thr Mc-Whirther Henryannonand Croston had ever recieved their Glandelinian Angelinian columns recieving Operationsale cas cavarly forces with such vigor thathis lines were demolished ad and he himself killed. Federals right wing had surred through the h woo s against Pagnos fiercy lines which stopped the front att ack but whole left wing of prayscns went far north of the christians and only recieving some ill meditating fire from c- Hiethers guns which remitted terrible in on the flyiers leaving last in a pandemonuim of confusion.
In quick succession, Cannon, Wardenia, Palmer and Mc-Hollester recieved the oncoming human waves under general Noblinia and though their lines were shattered and crushed and driven back they each being reinforced made a very strong resistance and so repulsed their assailants back shattered and mangled. eneral alis and Lorettes divisions who also charged the christians were cut to pieces and their leaders killed.
At other points the christians after very severe fighting in the trenches had soon drove steadily forward the christians sweeping forward in close formation, fearless of heavy losses and victorious of th by means of their overwhelming numbers.....
By four o-clock in the afternoon of the third day in the battle they had dislodged the Glandelinians from the first lines of works they had recently ca captured from the christians and forced them to retreat in good order to reserve lines between which there was a stretch of ground and rolling surface lined and zig zagged with double lines of trenches used for shelter by the Glandelinian troops as they fell back. By o-clock that evening the christian had occupied this entire area capturing the last line of trenches and driving back the Glandelinians in full retreat leaving the ground strewn with their dead and wounded..
uddenly a thick solid wall of gray and black smoke rolled indes dense convuluted billows over a section of the rear trenches and sur ou out of thi leaped tongues of red and blue flame from a terrific burst of high explosive sand further down the line came similar sections of smoke and flame from bristing high explosives with open spaces between but these space closed up very quickly untill presently the curtin of Glandelinian artillery fire from thousands of their biggest guns was contin ous over the whole extent of the rear trenches Christian soldiers by thehundrd thousand rushed back from this peril, but as they ran fiery explosions started up with sarenlitting crashes at dozens of places before them in the newtowkr of ditches and spreading with rapidity w that was incredible forming a sea of fma flaming barrier of explosions that shut off their ways of escape.
Within a few minutes this whoe whole regions many miles in extent and width that had been occupied by the apparently victorious christians was like a great gridiron of hell fire or lie like a city of firery explosions with streets and avenues and broad diagonalls of flame, as all the ditches and trenches suddenly belched forth waves of black smoke with blue and red flames darting through them, and fiercest of all burned the fire w walls close to the banks of the Angeline River.
The horrors f the ensueing hour could not be described.
The region of this part of the battle field was indeed a sea of bursting shells and high explosionce so many goo going off so constantly as to form smoke like from so me great conflargratio
Thousands of those who escaped from the fiery explosions and tried to cross the river on pontoons were caught and destroyed naid stream by fire floods that roared down the ol oil spread river It was announced inestimates and not denied by the Angelinians that one million one hundred and thirten thousand lost their lives here and about seventy thousand that escaped at the sides were made prisoners.
/t the very start of this several of the Angelinian officers hadmanaged to escape though their co clothes were in shreds from being ignited fre frequently.
Pannonia had no hope of winning a complete victory when he made thedesperate stand but despite this dis disater that occured to his armies he had struck Manley a series of staggering blows that af er this battle he was failing to continue his advance and so had in the largion suffered a satggering defeat.

VIOLET AND HER SISTERS COME ACROSS A [illegible]

In this engagement which lasted over three days the Glandelinian losses had been considered as seven million five hundred thousand. The christian losses were about five million and three hundred and fifty six thousand all in killed and wounded alone. Not only had he succeeded in standing his ground at least in for desperate battles each severer than the one past, against nearly three times his number but Pannonia had also won four sweeping victories n and fearling that his army was finally much larger than it really was Manleys army was soon in full retreat.

The day after tethe great battle of Mauge Evans Hansoni a sent this telegram to general Vivianiа;

8th Your excellency eneral „ivianiа;

I have successfully made a series of stands against Manley in order to cover your retreat and Manley himself is now retreating his armies moving southward. To keep up the success I would advise advise t you to hasten and reform your armies and make a junction with me or Tamerline having escaped Gen. „ivians army is hasting hastening to join Manley with their other Federal general.

GENERAL HANSONIA

When general Vivianiа got the news he was dumbfounded with astonishment astonishment. He had when he learned of Hansonias successfive offenses against Manley, expected the great Clandelinian general to crush him and his army. This was the most stunning occurace of the war. He rode to battle a force four times, and which was three times his size in strength. This made a sensation throughout the whole of Calverinia and startled the nations of theworld and ithad been the f ur four litterest defeats that Manley had ever suffered during the war. Both in the east and southern Calverinia the Clandelinians had suffered staggering defeats and Gen Manleys career seemed not to be ended.

All the best generals he could rely on had be killed over Federal the main head of the armies in the east was lef t wounded in the Clandelinian hospital ambulance and Stuart, Pickett, Forde and Stonewall Jonston were ill or wounding, the last as

For general „ivianiа this was the best thing that could have occured during the frightful war I t was a general reverse for the christians since the bitter defeat for the christians at Big Girl Knoll and giving them some hope of driving the Clandelinians out of Calverinia. It took many weks for general „ivianias army tomake reformations but Hansonia had no fear as he his own army was rapidly growing lrger larger by additional Abbiesonian and Calverinian recruits and by all the wounded who were able to ret return.

Unfortunately however general Tamerline and his his chief Aid general Thomas Federal had eluded Gror Vivian and general Weinstine and also Arohr Aronburg and rejoined Manleys army thus reinforcing his already cripuled army to such a n an extent that Hansonia fearing to be overwhelmed made a hatl halt not far from Chamberlane and Ophelia. Ha nsonia was for makinga drive at Manley, but his staff was against theplans as they loathed to have another such terrific slaughter so soon.

One day when Hansonia was concentrating upon Opheila „iolet and her sisters out scouting entered Gnieders barn which general Vivianiа had been driven from during the battle of „ig Girlknool.

On the eastern walls of the two rooms occupied d by the general during the big battle were strewn over a hundred pictures of children of different kinds and as it seemed different nationalties. Thelittle girls had noticed these befoe during their admittance here while the battle was on but had not payed much attention to them.

It was the only part of the barn not in tl total ruins. The northern wall was gone, and and also the whole roofs but the rest of the eastern part had remained, the western part t still standing also but had been burned till it was charred back black, thelangelinians no doubt having checked the fire somhow before it had been abandoned. Violet and her sisters were mysitifed by these picture pictures several of which were christian and Clandelinian generals besides three batt le scenes.

Two large boxs were standing against the wall in either room but when the klittle girls tried them found them both to locked. The table which had been in the northern room was in wreckagebesides a large shelf made from a door the many kinds of things lying in piles on the floor.

Every picture seemed to be looked looking at the litt le girls and not a one had its eyes turned away.

''This is the strangest barn that we ever came into.''Laughed violet; ''' regular art gallery, and my goodness look, there are the pictures of me and three of my sisters.''

''I have noticed them. 'Said voice;''All this has got me puzzled to thelimit. I wonder who all those children are in the pictures, only a fw being named.' !!''

''Here is the fragments of some shell.''Said Jennie picking up the fragments; ''And the floor is littered with paper cartridges.''

''This was the heart of the action at Big Girlknool.''Said Angeline; ''Maybe general Berge used these two rooms. He always carries pictures of children withhim, as he adores them very much and had thre little girls of his own who were slain by Clandelinians.''

''What shall wedo?''Said Violet;''Show this to Hansonia or kep the mysest mystery or to ourselves? What do you think Starling?''

''It is wiser to let him in on this. 'Said Starling;''I see what these pictures are now. See that sign on card underneath! I wonder what it reads?''

He pulled itoff carefully and read as they gathered about him;

''These children, pictured here, are the leaders of the recent child labor revolution, who were murdered also with Jennie Aronburg near Calverine. It is the wish of generals, Scheleder and Darger, for any one who by happens to find orenter here, to solve the mysteries com confined among each, and to avenged their deaths upon general Aronburg , Raymond „ichardson Federal and Thomas Phellania Tamerline who are their main murderards. Thomas Aronburg Federal regent governor of Calverinia is also their murderer for refusing to punish he murderers when he had the power.

hese requests are not from these two generals Darger and Whilliam Scholeder but from the Angelinian governments themselves, and those those who may come upon this parn and see this will recieve the reward of one million dollars in gold, if successful and death if unsuccessful, for the attempt attempt id is exceedingly dangerous on account of the fury of the three Clandelinian chieftians. Don't fail for it is certain death as these clandelinian generals mean all they threat upon those who shadow them in any way.''

THE BATTLE OF OPHELIA

''Nothing doing for us. ''Said Violet;''We won't do it unless commanded by papa.''

The little girls examined everything in the place and then stepped outside and behild a terrible sight. Hansonia was in action again with the enemy and seeing general „ivianiа dash prat knew he had j i joined Hansonia. After suffering mutual losses the Clandelinians had taken by storm the christian works on Vivianias right and then carried all before them. Hansonia threw them back however the enemys attack failing to be general. his was the battle of Ophelia.

n the afternoon while the little girls were still in the place keeping in shelter everything after the roar of battle had become very quiet not even a single breath of air could be felt, not even a single leaf stirred on the trees. Indeed they were as still as a picutew picture. The weather had been exceedingly hotall that day and all the while though it wasquiet violet and her sisters had noticed strangely colored clouds in the southwest which attracted their attention s Suddenly Violet uttered a cry, of alamm whicj which caused her sisters and Starring to spring to their feet and as they gazed in the direction of her outstreched arm gave expressions to exclamations of alarm.

Along the surfaces of a distant rolling surface of ground and plains and woodland extended a thick roll of cloud wreathswhich was in creasing in volume and density lo king to every one of them like the far off signs of someextensive approaching forest and prairе fire, but was too plain and had to palpable an appearance to be misteken for anything like a conflargration.

The little girls knew what it was and so did Starling.

It was the distant warning of the approach of one of the most dreaded bat tle drives, as the christians which had her formerly victorious bed now been receding toward their way again the attack of the enemy as the litt le girls could observe through their glasses being simply terrible and the Angelinians could not stand before it. Along the so southeast clouds of peculiar colors and shapes so fan tastic and unusual that their likeness to the ordinary clouds appeared or were immediately to be observied to gather across the plains some resembling the color of smoke from burning haystacks, , some glowed with a paleyellowish light which seemed to emanate from their broken surfaces. Their appearc that were strangely livid, t their iridescence ra ing from purple to blue or to a dark and light green.

All this was suspicious to the little girls who knew indeed that these columinous clouds on the surfas of the plains were from ex-plo exploding shells of all calibre and h wyfrom where they were they could hear their dull booming crash they being fifty miles away from this surge of battle. battle.

Suddenly a sharp whi ff of yelling smote upon their ears, a loud irregular crash of musketr sounded in the distance which increased to a dull unearthly roar, which made the very ground seem to tremble. The dul' roaring became louder, walls of thin white clouds appeard among the nearest trees fle floating swiftly into the air.

''Gracious look at those mas of men in the south. 'Gasped Catherine;''They are the pr purple coats being driven back. We must rally them ourselves no matter what happens. Their officers all seem to have fallen.''

''It's the irrestible charge of the enemy that is doing this and they are coming fast too cried violet.''

An hour had passed after this scene and a fearful fearful slaughter raged all aover the region and the little girls lookn looking out from the sh shed doors could hardly see anything so thick was the smoke of battle.

Every noe now and then the little girls could hear some of the officer shout and yell;
"Hold the trenches men at all costs."

Every now and then the little girls would be shocked by blinding shuts of scors of flashes ullimunat i ulliminating t e the approaching darkness as bright ad as darts of fire could make it. Never before had Violet and her sisters seen such bright flashes tre wside ride of the barn seeming to be lighted up in a dazzling manner and the little girls were almost blinded by the flashes and almost stunned by the tremendous thunder rolls of the shells which resembled the discgar discharge of thousands of perks of artillery the concussion being terrific, and the larn trembled so in that some the the boards remaining on the roof pillars came dow narrowly missing the little girls.

At his moment a man came dashing u up all excited.

"The enemy is ov rwhelming Hanscnia is right wing" he shouted to one of the christian generals;"They are moving their way through his or christin wedges c like the teth of a saw."

In the glare of a strangely livid red light that suddenly appeared flaring could se that the whole of the christian line fighting at the point where the barn was was beginning to make steady progress, white columns of clouds spreading far overhead with astonishing rapidly spreading out along the whole batt le line in thick coten ship shape sheets, while an immense wall of clouds seemed to rise from a line of hills far to the right spreading to the north and east with terrific rapidly pierced by innumerable flashes of cannons ardmusketry, the tops rolling like convulsions of volcanic eruptions, while many le slarge puf y clouds extended along the still lat le artillery fields, the pillars of red and crimson flashes flames shooting upward, the undersparts of these fantastic col com vulitions of the explosions and smoke clouds being as red as blood.

The furious volleys and broadsides of cannon and crashing roll of musketry continually made the barn walls and the windows in the barn to leap against their casements, and at times there was such a burst of volleys as seem to split the earth asunder and the flames seemed to be falling.

Some shell explosions among the christian lines made the shape of red and blue arches the onslaught of the enemy indeed being tremendous.

All at once there came a furious roaring clashing sound of bayonets and pikes pikes spikes against sabre, and firing at point blank mingled with a far hor ible yelling sound and the terrific irresistible Glandelinian columns tore their way through the shattered christian columns. While at the same time a huge mass or line of christians at another point seemed to se writhe , bend backwards and disappear, a terrible and appalling sorsplitting crushing roar coming from that direction enough to stun all who heard it, while almost simultaneously came a frightful shrieking yells mingled by a redoubled roar, and everything in that direction seemed to be dissolving into death and destruction before the furious christian fire.

All this became an intense and most a appalling roar which almost resembled that at Big girlknoll, and at this moment the whole christian line was shafted as wisely by sheets of flame an earthrending the hunderous rolling roar following almost simultaneously. The generals were rushing back and forth among their lines to keep the Angelinians from giving way before the furious onsl onslaught the whole scene of battle seemed on fire.

Many of the Angelinians were time and again seized with an indescribable panic and many of the officers had ben deprived of their lin lives as teir forces collasped before the force of the enemy's onslaught. Two general dashed among the men striving to rally them but weresuddenly buried under a maelstrom of debris and timbers blown about them by some mighty and fiery explosion.

Hundreds of officers sperry among the panic stricken men maid the showrs of debris and destruction butnthe onrush and avalanch of Glande linianspresse prevented anything on the line of a rally at thispoint, thousands of the panic stricken Angelinians striving desperately to climb over the mounds of their fallen comrades but were borne down maid an an avalanche of Glandelinian troops. The avenues of escape for the christians at this point was blocked so effe effectually withthehaps of dead that the others could not get away in time and were overwhelmed in a mea maelstrume of carnage. General Sisterinia was crushed to death by a rock thrown at him by the explosion of a shell and it happened that through all this seemingly preternaturla slaughter that a little girl girl eight years old who was greatly frightened mad her way unhu unharmed outside from a farm house near by but was killed by being dashed against the house with terriff terrific violence by a concussion of a high explosive near by.

Apalling was the universal uproar of the battle andmany living in the country near the region of the batle either came out of their houses to watch it or to flee. The Glandelinian assailants were screaming, and yelling, like a million furies, the shells and cannons making a tremendous volumneof earsplitting crashes continually and like the drum rattling by many sticks.

General Hanscnia was struck by a heavy tree that was flung at him by a heavy shell balst he being vaught in its entwining branches which carried him off his feet and pinioned him under its b branches until several soldiers could rescue him, he having been hurled and thrown about with terible violence by the concussion of the exploding shell but not injured. TheThe roar of battle had now redoubled that of before and everywhere ensued a maelstrome of roaring devastation and carn carnage, the deafening chrashes of shattered beam, the roar of the swirling clouds of musket battle against musket battle, the ring of steel on steel and the crashing of cannons and firing at point blank ran making a pande monium of sound never to bewill be forgotten.

The christian fire fairly stormed with incredible fury, and now anbel exploded in front of a doorway of the barn and his face was cut and scratched by the flying fragments of woods that flew everywhere the fragments of the shell fort unately missing them. The battle was a veritable crash of hell.

A farm farmer and all of his children standing outside their doorway watching the battle in awe were dashed for a thousand yards and hurlec hurled into a narrow lane by the concussion of a high explosive and then thrashed by a storm of flying debris thrown allabout bythe great explosion. Violet and her sisters wererendered almost senseless from the din everything being in the greatest uproar ever ever heard and now a big volley of wreckage and dirt and grass was blown against the barn by a high explosive near by the flying fragments of wood from a tar icaded fence stri, striking each other like battering rams. Debris and utensils of a every dw description flew inside the barn also thrown by the same shell and the little girls and starvin had been thrown to the floor by the concussion.

Thousands upon thousandsof big trees were scaly ared for several rods by the blasting force of exp, explosions and now if the Glandelinians did yell or if the wounded skrie shrieked the increasing noise of the batle drowned their cries. Right in front of theharn three hundred soldiers had ben killed and a thousand injured, and despite their rough treatement by the concussion of the shell the farmer and his wife and children had recieved no injury whatever though they were ba badly shaken up. Furious and dangerous as was the enemys desperate onslaught it soon abated as suddenly as it had come the ful length of thin battle line being fourty miles and Hanscnias center had been rolled up twice and his other wings also only to reel reel forward again and retake their trenches maid the most dreadful carnage.

So so often since the frightful carnage at the battle of Big girlknool the enemy had kept the christian armies very busy and there had been an alreg already stated battle after battle with varying fortunes on both sides. Generals Hanson and Rovert vivian with their own armies had alone remained at Big Girlknool all this time without making a single advance or retreat and the outcome of the series of battles following Big girlknool and of the results of the battle of big Girlknool itself was astonishing to the whole world.

It indeed as reported did put general Manleys armies out of commission but the fact that the one Manley himself and that is johnston Buchanan Manley was able to not hold his own but worse the other two overwhelming christian armies ten to his one pitched against him and even crush them and driven them back in a ors crushing defeat was astonishing in the eies of the world.

These kinds of battles were indeed very mysterious in their raging, and were the fiercst conflicts of the eastern threatre of the war. The christian nat ions were also apprehensive over thesituation because all was seeming to g be really lost on the enemys side altogether though for real to the enemy it seemed as if the war was in their favor.But not so.Despite all the threatening conditions soon the enemy had recieved a staggering blow at Big girlknool and the other places, and the enemy were at many points of the astern part of Calverinia fast receding southward a broken and disordered mass.Violet and her sisters who had felt sad over the outcome of the battle with vivinnia and Hanscnia however felt better [illegible] to [illegible] it apparenelty was no enemy victory, and that general vivian and their father and Hanson their un cle had been completely victorious over the two main Manleys and that all advances against Angelinia Agathia had been met by disaster to the enemy. It was inortal folly for the enemy to think of capturing Angelinia Agathia, and they ought to have known it.They did succe succeed in capturing Anna Aronburg and Evangeline St Glaroby severe artillery fighting but generals Hanson and vivian had thrown half of their forces upon the enemy at these places several days later after their fall and they were again in the possession of the christian armies.

In the eyes of the world the fury of the Kintergarten massacre as the Eastern Region of war is called was fast waning. The enemy at this point was fast waning in their success and it was believed that if the other forces under Federal who were fast advancing to lay seige to Evangeline St Glair to reduce it once more did not succeed in his purpose all would be lost for the enemys cause. Indeed to all the war indeed did not seem but had a most shocking horror and ferocity that no one cu could hardly comprehend it and the nations did not know what to make of it. The st storms of forest fires, and other horrors was also beyond comprehending. The whole country ove there was becoming to the enemys of the world ax a raking hell. And the sorrows of children in their nations was already greater as two Christmasses had passed and none had recieved even a box of candy.

All the other christian nations especially the people women and men were aroused to a frenzy of fury against Glandelinia and her vile blockades and at the request of their governments ships of those countries were sent out to help the Angolinians and Abbiccanians to reduce the fortifications of Mc-Whirther in the effort to open the seaport of vivian Wiskey. It is really hard to say how the sensation was over in those nations. Prices in every thing on account of the war was rising sky high because of the scarcety of the materials and food and not by profiteering as is elsewhere just for th the profity made on war. Two sad and horrifying christ masses had passed awny, and the Masses said those days were not of Thanksgiving or cheer and joy but of offerings to god that he would cause the great sorrow of the nations to cease.Children never smiling, and unhappiness everywhere, and horror also of the dangers of a coming famine altogether.

The horrible Christmas battle at Evangeline grania had also shocked the people of those nations who heard it, and the children had hoped that news would come that the fortifications had bee been forced but no such good news came as Hanson had failed as already written. For two years no new presents of any kind had ever reached the hands of any children or persons not even one candy or fruits, and children have even sorrowed unto sickness & and death over it. Even grown persons felt the lack of the presents but they do desired more for the fall of glandelinia and did not carry on like the unhappy children who even did not show playfulness any more and were quiet and sorrowful despite all means to cheer them up. They did not know howve however that the enemy were crushed at Big Girlknool and that the enemy were at some points receding in eastern Calverinia, and that the enemy had been shamefully beaten again and again in the western part of Calverinia and that a menace was coming for glandelinia though just now neither one saw or knew it.The enemy forces were concentrating already at Gretchen and forces of the enemy were laying upon Evangeline St Clare and Anna Aronburg. Despite the sorrow of children in the other nations the sorrows of children in the path of the advancing or retreating Glande linian armies was sevenfold worse and even horrible. Of course the nations of the world knew it and mostly the sorrowful children did fell more sorrow for those in the war stricken countries and only hoped that all would soon cease.

Indeed war has its unsee unspeakable horrors. As already described the enemy either advancing or retreating has committed horrible massacres, spreading desolation far and wide and also has terrorized the whole world with the shocking losses.In all the war the greatest murder of battles alread occured during the Kintergarten massacre. And the wars worse conflicts also. And the wars greatest massacres of children and priests and religious of allxsock sects. Is it any wonder that the glandelinians have no luck. M? Many children used to play and sing the songs of ''Londons Bridge going down, and indeed no one could count the bridges that went down to ruinand destruction during the frightful violence of the war in the east where even during the third yearns of the war the worse of theentire wars conflicts were seen.Glorinia and Francis Atlanta.

Not long after the series of battles raging at these places, and which had made the world world startled and astonished there came a bullentin which was read by many persons;

''MC-WHIRTHER AND COAST LINE OF WESERN WESTERN CALVERINIA SWEPT BY GREAT CONFLICT: GIANT CHRISTIAN FLEETS RACING FOR THE FORTIFICATIONS OF MC-WHIRTHER AND ARONBURG AND FEDERAL.

BULLETIN.

ANGELINIA AGATHIS.ANGELINE VINE. DECEMBER. NOVEMBER ITH.
All trains scheduled to leave Angolinia Agathia since nine oclock last night have been anulled. The supretendent of all transportations of the Mc-Hollester and Pandora reported at eleven Oclock that the glandelinian fleets were racing up the Mc-Hollester Run River and tward Bayner Tp Topsy , Handondon and Francis Atlanta with the intention of helping the fortif ications to hold off attacking christian fleets. Many trains loaded with Mc-Whirther coast re refugees bound for Angolinia Agathia were stalled at Francis At lanta, by the effects of forestyfires started by the enemy, and the attempts to take passengers over the burning bridges in any way thinkable failed as all bridges are going. The battle at Kintergarten was reported to be raging with exac exceedingly great violence.''

ANGELINIA AGATHIA.ANGELINE VINE. NOVEMBER ITH. The Angolinia Agathia Signal Stations at 10:30 Oclock tonight notified the Angolinian governments, to warn all persons Calverinians, Angolinians and all other christians, in outlying suburbs that the hurricane of Glandelinian advances would strike upon the fortifications of Angolinia Agathia within three hours, if enemy advance is not checked at their concentration upon Gretchen at Mc-Whirther Run where a great battle is raging. With the enemy attacking like the wind blowing a steady gale, and their attacks coming in tremendous gusts and waves like the advance of the hurricane lashed storm surges upon the shore christian armies, fugitives from burning towns, and the people in the outlying districts are beginning preparations to flee the Glandelinian hurricane war storm, fast approaching upon the Mc-Whirther Run.
All christian forces advancing southward in that location is being heavily reinforced and wherever ammo available, all munition stores and places wreare being hastily emptied so they will not be blown up by the enemy and the thus by their concussions cause disasters. This especially true in the old Angelinia Agathia quarter. Many ammunition dumps at this point in the last few weeks have been blown upn into the air like volcanic eruptions and i in one section a couple of ammunition storehouses and factories or plants have razed towns by their explosions.

With the rising tide of bloody war and growing battles, and great disasters, and immense floods and fire resident and pleasure seekers of the other nations caught in the path of war are commencing to flock northward with the hope of finding refuge in Abyssinkile.Driven by the increasing fury of this gigantic war the fugitives began coming over to Angolinia vine and many other points like great floods of humanity demanding refugee, food and shelter especially for their terror strick x stricken children. From the Erminie river resorts every train still able to run despite the wars ravages,w were crowded with refu goon and foreign vacationists seeking safty from the main fury of the approaching war storm.All towns not believed in the path of the advancing or retreating enemy armies are filled to overflowing qwith panic stries stricken refugees, and even refugees are located in all postofficers of towns and cities, common houses, and other public buildings.
All shipping in the Angolinian ports remained in their ports and river ports also all this time during the war without once venturing out. At Port St Trecia a large fleet of passenger an and provision ships have been anchoe anchored behind even breastworks and breakwaters and other points of protection guarded by strong christian batteries.Several vessels which cleare cleared Sunday did not sail, and some of those which did try to soon put back. Two large fleets of Tankers from the north Angolinian seas en rout to Port Aurthor of Angolinia Agathia also put into some other protecting port of Eastern Angolinia for shelter from enemy rovers of the sea.

Fra ncis Atlanta.Eastern Calverinia.November Ith. A complete exodus of approximately of about 4,500,000 people, many of them out of town visitors , the shifting of all cars and trains loaded with wheat and cotton, and provisions, and explosives, and an ammunition to Abyssinkile, the vacating of southern parts of Calverinia, and the securing of a ll shipping in every harbor in the east, marked Francis Atlanta's preparations to day in antispeation of the Glandelinian war hurricane, believed to be sweeping onward and northward along the whole shore of the Mc-Whirther Run.
While the battles raging in this location, with some christian successes the reports of signal stations all along the Mc-Whirther Run report that there is a gradual rising in the tide of enemy success and an approaching war swell.A twenty mile length of battle is raging at Evangeline St Clare being mostly a bombardment.Every resident and foreigner have been warned of the approaching war storm.

Camp St Ann where for over three months without action with the enemy the Angolinian national guard troops in duty in connection with the recent raising of the Angolinia Seige at Angolinia Agathia have been bivouacked' this morning was dismat dismantled and the militia moved to fort St John. Thi was done upon the invitation of the Angolinian government, with the inten tion of having Angolinia Agathia more strongly guarded.''

This gave evidence that the enemy were indeed making a strong concentration with the intention of preventing any attempts of the c'r christians from capturing Mc-Whirther and so indeed a storm of hell was threatening at Gretchen.

While the enemy were doing all that in threatened violet and her sisters had with the christian armies helped to threaten the enemy and arriving upon the town of gretchen they stayed there for some time and viewed the scenery. One night when violet and her sisters were preparing to go to bed as there was n no signs of danger yt the little girls were astonished to discover within an hour after retiring that their whole room seemed lighted with an intense lurid glow.Horrified and believing that the house was on fire Violet and her sisters leaped out of the beds and hastily grabbing their clothes rushed out into the street and behild a most astonishing sight. Bright as a million suns was an intense bright rousing glow in the western sky that made a reflection in the streets as bright as noon day and the shadows of passing men and others was plainly audible in the streets.The glow extended along the whole horizon as far as eye could view, and the sky was clouded in rolling smoke of a reddish and black, colors mingled with pink white and yellow. At first it was believed by those viewing the scene that the city was on fire.Violet and her sisters had never in their lives seen a brighter light in the sky never even during the brightest display of Mt Calverines eruption, and they asked every soldier they saw pass them what what it was:

''It's a dreadful fire somewhere.''Was the answer.

''Is the city afire.''IIAsked Jennie.

''No the fire is ten miles away from the city.''Answered the soldier.''The enemy have done it but what is burning no one knows yet.Why I don't even believe that a forest fire ever makes a glow so bright .''hy it's even increasing.''

Violet and her sisters desired to go up on the roof of some higher house and see if they could see it more clearly as eye from here they could not see the flames.So they at once went back into their house dressed themselves and then scurried for the tallest building within their view. They were easily admitted by the people and soldiers and taken to the roof where a great crowd of people were observing the fire. Up here nothing also could be seen but the glow was still more brighter and covered nearly the whok whole sky over head to a carmine reflection and great clouds of smoke rolled high into the air in three because pillars and spread out in an umbrella fashion as if three gigantic volcanoes were in eruption.

Fearing that something was wrong as the scene was increasing steadily and the light growing so bright as to almost hurt their eyes Violet and her sister decided to warn the main christian commander, and so retired from the roof and were again in the street and scurrying toward the direction of Hannonias headquarters. They were easily admitted and found that the genera and his staff were already up and also observing the fire.General vivianda had left to see if he could find out the location of the great fire, and see what it was that was burning.

''Ain't it a bright glare.''Though ''Said the general.''It's so dazzling that it hurts my eyes to look at it.And the smoke makes a scene as if the w world's afire.''

About fifteen minutes passed and then general Francis Vivianauna came riding up f furiously.

''We'll all have to withdraw out our armies from here right away.''He shouted.''Where's Vivianna?''

''Gone to investigate the great fire.''Answered Hannonia.''What is the matter.''?

''Great conflargration advancing on the city .''Answered vivianauna.F''

''Forest fires are burning for scenes of miles in oceans of roaring fire.Great seas of flames are sweeping across the Mo-Hollester Run and catching to whole stretches of woods many menguas distant in a few minutes.It's the biggest forest fire t have ever seen.The enemy did it to stop our advance on grotchen and down them they have succeeded.I'll retreat a certain distance, manuever my armies and strike them a blow. But out of this region we must go or be trapped by the fire.Its coming like a storm.''

Vivianda soon came up as the armies and people were fleeing from the city, the glow having now become so bright that it was like a sea of light dazzling in its intensity. Vivianda gave hasty instructions, and as the streets were being filled with all provisions and house hold goods the retreat of the christian armies was started. So thus far this retreat was real really the cause of the frightful carnage that soon ensued. The armies got out of range of the fire, and closing in one on the foe prepared for battle.

CHAPTER THIRTY FIVE.
INTRODUCING SOME OF THE CHARACTERS.
CASES AS IF ON T HE SEA, AND ON THE ROCKS.

"THESE children pictured here, are the leaders of the recent child labor revolution , who were murdered also wit h Jennie Aron urg near Calverine. It is the wish of Generals Schloeder, and Dargar, for any one who happens to find or enter here, to solve the mys teries confined among each, and to avenge their deaths upon general Aronburg Raymond Richardsonia Federal, and Tomas(not Thomas) John Phallinia Tamerlane who are their main murderers.Tomas Aronburg Federal, not Raymond Richard Federal, recent usurp usurper Governer of st olen Calverinia is also their murderer for refusing to push punish the murderers when e he had the power.T hese requests are not from these two gen rals Dargar and Whillien Schloeder, but from the Angelinia governments themselves and t hose who may come upon this barn and see this will recieve t he reard of one million dollars in silver ifsuccessful, and death if not successful, for the attempt is exceedingly dangerous on account of the fury of these three Glandelinian generals.don't fail if you make the attempt for it is certain death as these Glandelinian generals mean what they threat upon those who shadow them in any way."

For the third time since the battle of P Ophelinia or Phelia or Ophelia whatever it is supposed to be named, violet and her sisters r ad the note they had found in the barn, and looked the pictures over which t hey had taken out.

"It is strange t hat their Gemini members couldn't do t hat themselves" said Violet ."I suppose it 'll have to fall for our lot."

"We won't do it under any con dit ions unless---"began Jennie.

"Unless what"said J i Joice.

"Unless Penrod and Timot hy Groveton helps us and has us covered by all out boy and girlscouts.It's a dangerous attempt .If we do succeed believe me" continued Violet I'll kill t hose murderers."

"You bet we will"said Hattie.

" What if Penrod either objects on the matter or won't go"."Declared Catherine.

"what he won't do, we won't do."Then said Jennie."The idea. We have lots of famous spies, we have the Gemini, we have milit ary detect ives, police, and ot hers, we have strange and powerful scientists of all sorts and of nature and to solve thin gs we have to do it ourselves. We make wizards out of ourselves when these men should do it ourselves.Why t hey couldn't even discover t he cause of t he destruction of Abbiecon,it was left for us to do so.If we have to do everything, why we might as well discharge t hem all and do the work ourselves.This strange mystery written here, containing the pictures we discovered in the barn seems a simple matter.And yet no one can solve it. I don 't like to be sarcastic and say so but they make us sick."

"Anot her thing"said Violet"Don 't you ever remember we sometimes had to go t o them for help on some matter when they supposed t o do t he things t hemselves. I believe the whole bunch is afraid of t he enemy."

"Yet it is strange t hat Father said when we wrot e to him about it , when he answered, that it is up t o us t o do what we will.So I suppose we will to lay t he matter to our brother.If he objects then we'll force the gemini to do it or discharge them."

"I believe we're spoiling some of our generals"said Daisy."We done so much of t he duties ourselves that now t hey deliberat e ,y deliberatelybask us often to do things when they should send spies.We'll have to cut that down. Our last ex e experience during t he the battle of Big Girl Knool certainly showed t hat we're even getting a little reckless.Even Penrod that t ime couldn't save us or himself from t he threat of t he cruel fate.If we m et with st arring again our hash may really be cooked.He 's dangerous."

""But who in t he world are those generals."asked Angeline."We n ever saw or heard of them before except Aronburg Federal. But he is not Raymond Richardson Federal, and as he is humane b despite his hedious face we never t hought of ever going n ear his lines and once when his men t ook us prisoners he treated us as guests and set us free sec e secretly. Therefore t hese generals are a puzzle t o us, and not only who are they, but where are they and t heir armies.That's the quest ion."

"If general Darger or Schlockler wrote this notice"said Jean ie"Then t hey should n know where t hey are.But we'll find out from Penrod.Walt or Starring opposed us and said he wouldn't let us even do it for fear of our safe y.But if Penrod don't object we'll draft Starring to accompany us, and Angelinia Aronburg will accompany us too She's a dangerous gun girl against t he enemy and could be our protector and so is Jennie Turner and Angeline Richee.We'll even include dangerous Dolores Mic-Hollester, Mildred Maxwell, and Dolores sister.We'll disguise as Glandelinian girlscouts as doing so as boys does not help us any."

The morning courier had just arrived, and he was distributing messages signed in person by Violet and her sisters and with t heir identification seal mark on them which no one in the world could even try to duplicate.Walter Starring who was in conversat ionwit h his friend Jack Evans recieved two messages 'ut by some mist ake as bot h contained the same wording and t he signing proved they were t rue and not duplicat es, bot h from Jean ie Vivien , who with her sisters, were at general Vivianne headquarters, and one also from An gelinia Aronburg, the best and most dangerous christian girlscout the enemy had ever experienced, who had the day before been off on a long scouting excursion, and who had returned wit h more lengthy and ast onishing information for t he general than could be taken t ime to writ e, or which could find no words to describe hee here.The enemy feared her as a little girl fears a snake.There was also one for An gelina Rih An gelina Richee, who had her h eadquarters at Army cott age row, and was as fashionable a spy almost as Angelinia Aronburg herself.These girls t hese days were nothwith the girl and boyscouts, as though often with them they're not girlscouts though t hey oft en lead t hem being awfully high in rank. Timothy Groveton, the highest capt ain of the boy and girlscouts next to Angelinia Aronburg had a letter from violet and her sisters combined but each contained at only orders or requests to accompany them but high praise and honor for all he did for them in t he past, and their love from them and their desire for his c constant companions i companionship and words too t hat not only t hey but Penrod was lonesome fro for him.T hat sure made him blush red but nevertheless he smiled.He did not read them hastily for according to the lett rs t here was no need of haste, but he st ood before the courier as he read them, then for a moment st udied the subscription of the other, which was a mystery one and soiled and travel worn and born or bore a post mark showing it was a letter and not a message, a letter from afar.

""From general Concentinian Aronburg"He said to himself forgetting the courier was waiting to be dismissed."I beg your pardon"he said to thecourier but I'll answer some of these and so you'll have to come in with me and t ake them."

And they both went inside tin thinking to himself;"What does my friend the general want I wonder.And ipening opening the lett erhe read as follows;;2;2;2

"Headquarters----At city of Calverine November IIt hi

To Mr Timothy Groveton ;

Dearest boyscout of Abbiecunnin; You will an doubtedly be surprised to hear that I'm starting an advance of my army scout hward.Once I expected to take Mildred Greenburg to my own keeping, but recently with the enemy said to be again threaten ing An gelinia Athatis there has come over me an insane longing t o force the an enemy into a battle with me.It's a long t ime since I've been active and I feel like a volcano extinct t oo long. After an quesence of nearly t hree months it will seem almost strange to me to make a sudden advance, and stranger to my M'sic e Angelinia Aronburg.But I have heard of some doings which I did not know what to make of.Angelinia Aronburg my neice recently wrot e the letter to me and it seems as if some of the Genin i and their following came ot solve a certain mystery.She is so anxious to solve t he myst ery as I am to see it solved, and she had plan pa planned to engage the att ent ion of t he Vivian Girl Princesses to that strange mystery, of which ofid evidence was left in a barn n ear t he town of Ophelia from which the ones who lf left the evidence fled.I have no idea whether t hat old barn was ever habitable or not before that but-t he way it was found by general Darger it seemed as if some strange half half mad,Glandelinian spy occupied it , and had all these strange childrens pictures.All important changes and repairs of course should be left to t he Vivian Princesses themselves after Angelinia Aronburg has decided what she wants done, but if possible I am com ing to see and int erview th m myself if possible on the subject, and t herefore I wish you would have some particular rooms made comfortable for me t o hold t he meeting in .We could occupy the headquarters near Chamberlane, and t he large room whose big window looks toward the town and t he river t hey should design to suit their own taste, and will you see t hat it is made pretty and attractive? If I remember rightly there used to be in it a sort of mephony painted older t han Christ opher Columbus I believe.Remove it, and put something light and airy in its place.The Vivian Girls do not like mahogany.Put simple muslin curtains on t he windows, and have nothing but mattings on the floors for they tell me Violet, and her sisters don't like dust y carpets/.

.And if you know of a fine pair of fast riding horses, and special Prince ly saddles have them ready for inspection, and if they suit the Princesses they will accept t hem.If you choose t o hear of a [illegible] middle aged woman suit able for to accompany t hem, retain her untill Violet , and her sisters can see her, and on the particular day of the convent ion please have the rooms full of flowers. Violet, and her sisters are passionately fond of flowers--few foj fond in fact of everything bright and pretty,(though nothing can be as pretty as t hem themselves or as good and holy) It is their request to me , to you not mine.And for a particular reason t hey too wish for some good cats nand dogs, so I suppose you must do it, but for heavens sake don't fill the house with them--two or three will answer.I must now close.Whatever Violet, or her sisters may in tend to do hold them off untill I come for Heavens sake.Have Penrod withold their inten tions as it is dangerous.On the day t hey discovered t he art icles in t he barn they sent me a hasty telegram about it at the advice of Walter Starring.I must close.Shall i elegraph to you by wireless from Pandora, as soon as the trains running in this locati-n location arrives, and will follow on conn ection train .Have biggest army already on t he advance.

T ruly your friend;

Fredrick Concentinin Pet er Aronburg.

Have child scouts help you make the place comfortable.They deserve a beautiful headquarters, for they decided to join my army."

Timothy Grovetons face was a puzzle as he read t his letter, from general Concentinin Concentinian Aronburg.

"Cool upon my word"he thought as i he folded thevletter and put it in his pocket ."A nice little job he has given me to do as if I did not want it.Who wouldn't want it when it is to do it for them.I'd clean any house t hey're to occupy any day,K'I'd make their bed chamber look like a litt le heaven to sleep in.T he old worm eaten furniture ought to be made for t he stove.He says I should place something light and cheerful which Penrod and his sisters would like, and I'll surprise them and the general.I'll put the best muslin curtains on the windows I can get ,I'll get up a lot of horses for their inspection if I have to raid a Glandelinian cavarly camp to get t hem, and as for flowers t hey like Roses and Carnations t he best and the rooms will be gardens.

But t here t he quest ion is there t o get dogs and cats.I also am passionately fond of them and I can remember my own beautiful Collie T owser, whom that snake Fredrick Lowden once poisoned on me.I'll get him for it ..And whoeare violet and her sisters anyway.!little girls who astonishes the world.I never heard before t hat general Aronburg had a ni n eice and that Angelinia Aronburg was his neice what an honor she has to have such a great general for an uncle a general that fights hardly no battles, because the enemy run away from him.Let me see.For some reason or other general C oncentinian Aronburgs letter has been delayed.His advance has already begun so I have no time to lose, if I get everyt hing done catsand all.I'll get the cats and dogs if I have to buy them.I know the kind of dogs they like best and I'll get them and woe to those who refuse me t he dog.He likes me best I suppose that is why he wanted me to do t his for them andhim.Somebody must have told him what I did for them.But I'll have t o have help.I can 't employe the Greenes for we have no boy scout by that name ant more curious on t he enemy.Jack Saunders now is just the chap to see it through.He would know exactly how to loop the curtains back, while as for dogs and cats I have actually seen t he boy fonding some in is arms and h e may know where to get them.I had a good cat once but it was swiped on me and I suspect a spyUgh if I catch some one at stealing things from me."and the most scout leader made an impatient gesture with his right hand, an indication that he was shaking his fist in the air.Just at this point of his soliloquy Jack Saunders, who had been leisurely re- reading his two letters inside the office, and remembering that he was a connection by the will of violet and h er sisters to the surroughs Tim detained him for a moment by laying a hand on his arm and thus making him stand still(get your fill) while he read the letter to him and asked what he thought of it ?"

"T hink"returned the boyscout captian lo- looking his companion steadily in the eye"I think it is unusual.I'll be now in t oo big a hurry to comply with your wish Captain, n and you must excis excuse me if I may happen to feelin little proud over it .I really will not waste a moments time.The Vivian Girls really have a good right to anything their hearts desire---a perfect right . I know all about Gerald Starring.I like him as much as I like a poisonous snake that bit me--a reckless dare devil stuck up sort of a Glandelinian boyscout, who thought the Blessed Lord made the world for wicked nations to live in , and not a christ ian nat ion should survive in it.Indeed yes, I'll be in too great a hurry to do it for you.Go also to the Jennings girls Tim also, they're sure to be posted, and so is Jean my little girl friend.By t he way she's returning from a scouting tour.Consult her, he's just the she is just the one t o help us.And now really Tim let's start going at it .I've spent a most uncommon lengt h of t im time talking with you when we should be busy.I'll quickly get ot hers to hel .Hurry friend Tim.We'll make the old house look like their Home palaxe palace."

And so saying Jack who among his many peculiarities numbered that of always being in a hurry to start doing good for somebody, start ward tward his headquarters at a rapid pace as if resolved to make up for the time he and Tim might have lost in unnecessary time of time.Tim looked aft er him a moment with a broad smile on his lips, and then remembering what he had said of Jean Sanders decided to pos pone his visit to the old abandoned mansion untill he had seen the young girl. Ten minutes later(laughin g) a cahvacade of girl and boyscouts stopped at a small signal station, and leaving them there ti report and dib disband Jean Sanders rode up the long hill at the usual rapid swinging gait of her horse, sc attracting a good deal of attent ion among many refugees within the camp in er her handsome riding girlscout uniform, which became her so well.The first person to accost her was Angeline Jennings, who insisted upon o her at opping for a moment as she had a favor to ask of him her.Jean was the best natured little girlscout of her own regiment, and accustomed of having favors asked of her, but t o day h she was tired and hot. having come back from a long scouting tour, and was also in a hurry to reach t he quiet and coolness of her own tent which was far pleasanter and more suit ed to her taste than t he stuffy close a a apartment into which Angeline Jennings led her, and where her sister Dolores sat working on a uniform dressss.

Dolores who had been called for by her elder sister was two years younger than Angeline and a little blue eyed brown haired child, who would have been very pretty but for the constant smirk about her mouth, a and the affected military air she always assumed in the presence of her superiors.Even wit h Jean Saunders she was never quite at ease and she began at once to apologize for her hair which had not been combed that morning, andfor her appearance generally for she had been so busy she had not had t ime to even make up.

"My dearest sister ought never to have asked you int o t he sewing room, and me in such a plight."she said.But Jack assured her that or Tim rather assured her that he did not mind t he sewing room.But he wanow but Jean wandered whatvdi Angeline Jennings want!She was in something of a hurry to get home, and Jack her friend was expecting her, and would wonder at her delay.she was truthful at that for it was certain that just now Jack would give anyt hing to see her, for he wanted her sistance very badly for the sake of violet, and her sisters! What Angeline Jennin gs wanted was whether she had ever heard Miss Angelinia Aronburg or any others speak of a spy operating at Martha Fords camp, called by the name of Miss Margery La rue but who was a Glandelinian boyscout in disguise, who was a dangerous spe a operator against the christians, and who to hid suspicion had written to Jane L w Lee asking whether she was to sell out her own camp equipage, and if it would pay for a first class new girlscout to come to the Vivianite camp.

"Here's the strange letter read it for yourself if you can" Angeline Jenn ings said."Dolores, Anna, and me found it hard work to make it out the writing is so finfind.f"

Jean took the let t er, which was written in that line peculiar to t hat known as broken En glish at which was a little difficult at first to decipher.But the language was in good englich, and well expressed, and the writer"miss Margery LaRue"wished to know if there was a way an opening for her in the Vivianite camp, and if Miss Jane Lee wished to accl sell out her proi provisions, as Miss La rue had been told she would.

"I wish t o mercy though, Violet and her sisters would get out of t he hateful business of spying and accutin g on t he senseless enemy, and get over going through so many of those horrid and trying sorrows and experiences.I'm always sick with distress when I hear what they go t hrough."Dolores said petulantly, for at t im s times she was rash enough to ascrip ascribe all the sorrows of Violet! and her sisters as if she suffered that herself.Angeline Jennings however did not share much in this feeling and reprimanded her younger sister somewhat sadly, while Jean who knew how sore she was upon the point asked her if she really thought the nation would be better off with t he Vivia Vivian Girls gone home and out of the army, and all the boy and girlscouts out of military business and the army left to fight it out alone against the Glandelinians..

"Of course they wouldn't be any better.Those Vivian Girl Princesses are the bravest girls in t he worlx world at that."Dolores retorted, with n t oss of her head."ut you kn ow as well as I that most of the army don't think it is right that t hey should ! have to suffer so even for our sakes and the nation, and at t imes they don't seem to get any credit for it either.In stead now sometimes the generals even as t hem to do some thing when ain't what t hey have done en ough for them.I hate the whole thing, and I hope I shall live to see the day when some of us or even they will be putt ing some of those highest Glandelinian generals out of the way.There's the bell now sombody looking for aid I suppose." and Dolores flounced out of the room to wait upon some petitioner, while her sister Angeline Jennings asked Jean again if she had ever heard of this "iss La rue.

474Jean never had but promised to nitify Violet and her sisters of it.T hen aft er bidding good bye to the two of them he went outside remounted his horse and went on t t ward his own headq headquarters.Timothy Groveton was the next to accost Jack, and as the business with the headquarters of Violet and her sisters was uppermost in his mind he rode home with the young boyscout , and obp opened the subject at once by t elling him of the letter, and asking if he ever had h eard of Angelinia Aronburg being t he n i noice of general Concentinian Aronburg.

"Angelinia Aronburg being his neice--Angelinia Aronburg--" J ean repeated."No N ever but t hat is good if it is so.But from what I heard she is some way related to violet, and her sisters.When will the general be here?"

Jean was interested in the general at once, but T im Grovet on who was several years and a few months older, was more interested in the numerous arrangements he was to make for his receitipn and for the new headquarters of violet, and her sisters.They had reached the Knoll by this time, and were met in the hall by Jack Saunders, who was glad to see Tim Groveton.

"Ah Jean dear glad to see you"he said to his girl friend."Hop e you had a pleasant and successful time while scouting"Then in an absent kind of way, with a wve of his hand"Make yourself at home.You are quite welcome I am sure bot h of you"bowin g to Tim"And now if you'll excuse me I'll leave you, as I need to start preparat ions as you have asked, in fact I've started already.Shall see you at lunch t ime if not too busy but can't delay as the generals letter came late, good mornin g friends"and then with anot her very courtly bow, he walked r p rapidly awa y to do whatthe had been asked.L eft to themselves t he boy scout capt ain and Jean resumed their conversation about t he headquarters for violet and her sisters, and Tim showed Jean the generals letter.

"My my"said Jean(not been)""The little Vivian Girls should be queens and ruling their own d s destinies.But we'll see to it t hat everything is bent to t heir wishes, for God knows what they didn't do for us..I'll see that they have special bedsteads, matting, flowers,housekeeper, horses cats and dogs if we have to raidthe enemys richest part of the army to get them.I'll take what job I can off your hands.I know of a whole litter of young beautiful puppies which I ll have in readiness for them, besides half a dozen or more cats."

"Yes thank you but one dog and a cat are sufficient"said Tim"as they don't a whole house full."But Jean if you know please tell me, about Angelinia Aronburg whether she ever had a mother living now,I was too late coming into t hese lines t o know much about her, and you of course was a girlscout a long timr time.She had a sister I think who was murdered. Who is Annie Aronburg?"

"I know and she's living and a dangerous christian spy and scout, who t he enemy cannot detect to save their soule, but I daen't t ell" replied Jean."If we did of or if I did I'd have both onto my neck.But her parents are not living.Bug But they are a sort of distant relation of Violet and her sisters.Grandma Vivian as everybody called the mother of emperor Vivian was only Angelinia Aronburgs at ep grandmother, but Angelin ia Aronburg sure has t he most b eutiful little cousins in the world and she doesn't know it and for some reason no body is allowed to tell her.The Vivian Girls know it but don't say a thing.It was the beauty of Angelinia Aronburg that attracted general Concentinian Aronburg, and he is sure proud to know t hat he is t her uncle.Indeed who ever would be a relative of Violet and her sisters need never be ashamed.They are what everybody knows now, a whole army of glandelinians cant hurt them, though I'll con fess that what I hear they go through does try me at times, but wait and see now what all our boy and girlscouts thinks of them.When are you going over to investigate the place, and help them solve the riddle of the pictures in that old barn, and would you like me to go over with you."!

Nothing could suit Timothy Groveton better for though he was several years older than Jean, the two were fast friends,,, and they now immediately rode together tward t he mansion close near by on a small but beautiful hill which had been wit hout tenants since the dreadful war began.

The place really designed for the new headq n headquarters of violet and her sisters was nearly a mile distant from the main section of the christian lines and within its surburbs, and on t he summit of a hill, t he ascent of which however was so gradual on one side but precipitious on the other, that on reaching t he t op one could always be surprised indeed to find himself so far above the surrounding country of which t here were t he most delightful views for so for the spoiled s had not yet devastat ed any sections of country in this neighborhood.And t urn ever which way you would the eye was met with lovely landscape pictures of grassymeadows and plains, of woodhillsides, sloping down to a rivers bank(not spank) and stretch ing away to the sandy shores of lakes which when on a clear day the morning or evening sun was shining on them sparkled like so many diamonds.This encampment was close to Ophelia for the enemy was still encamped here also despite the fact that he did not win the battle.Ophelia was not a very large or very stirring town for its very sons and daughters boys and even litt le girls had turned their backs upon the old homes and were in the christ ian armies either as soldiers, Red Cross N urses or boy and girlscouts.The factories in Ophelia were closed, even the shoe shops there were were closed for all the men who had worked in them were in t he christian army too.Railroad tracks ran through here also but no t rains were running at this sector.Some days ago when t he Glandelinian still lurked in the woods around the city of Ophelia shooting at t he christian troops for weeks like the Indians did in America, and the assailants were hunted like bears and woods like hunters did, and t he glandelinians acted true when wounded howled like like wolves, the en tir entire town it is said was in possession of t he christian armies and before the general conflict there had been fighting in its neighborhood for most he day in and day out without an hours intermission.

T his building an violet and her sisters had said was owned by one of their past anc estors whose record their ancestr archestory in a direct line back as far as the N orman Conquest in t he other world.Theirs of course was the reddest blood in Calvarinia, and theirs the heaviest purse but full of unusual charity, and because of t he goodness of all t he Vivian archest ors instead of dyi dying out one by one they had increased.All the archest ors of violet and her sisters always had had only one child.Emperor Vivian had seven beautiful little daughters and four sons, one of which was on the enemy side.For nearly four most he general Concentinian Aronburg had remained in C lvering or moved fort h here and there, and during that time with one exception he had never had an intercourse with any Glandelinian army, except with generals Beresforde,--Henry the Elder, nd and general Author Grosnow who alone dared to stand up against him but to no avail.For a time however it had seemed that general Aronburg had not been t o Violet and her sisters as could have been expected unless on n ecessary conditions.When general Concentinian Aronburg first came into t he army and got a co mmu commission he was a dashing handsome young soldier, with something very fascinating in his voice and manner, but to Violet , and her sisters he was like the moon to the humble brook on which it shines but always looks down.They could not watch and admire, and look up to him from a distance princesses though they b e but never hope for anything like a real intimate recognition, for the Aronburgs though good people nevertheless seemed to hold themselves up so high that very few were admitted to t he charmed circle of theiracquaintan ce.

Even strange to say before she knew them well enough, and became their friend, Angelinia Aronburg had looked upon violet and her sisters, despite their h inboing Princesses as beneath her. Mrs Turner Aronburg, general Aronburgs mot her had come from the vinjoit y of Pandora, and with the best blood of Abbiegnia in h er veins was if possible more exclusive than e her Husband, and labored to inst ill her notions into the mind of her son.After her death however, whether it was that h e found life at home too lonely or that he misused her councils and instructions, he was often with lower people of the Abbiegnians.Genera general Concentinian Aronburg never got married.

True as t he reader may know Violet and her sisters suffered a great deal, but never were devoid of friends.Many of the best of the christian boyscouts oft en had had frequent meetings with violet and her sisters, despite the factthair father was a great and powerful emperor, a perfect ly holy; upright and respectable and beloved monarch, and whose mother was then familiar known throughout the nation as Grandmother Peggy. Great therefor e was th the astonishment of all when it was re rumored that Captian Tinot hy Grovelon, who bee before becoming a boyscout had been almost ed at his own e home, and whom in no way Violet and her sisters almost acknowledged as the equal to t heir brother in frustrating efforts of the enemy, fell in with t he Vivian girls within the foe lines and despite t he helplessness of Penrod who was wounded, and the sad fate of his mist ssistersput it over cleanly on Manley, and brought them despite being wounded wounded safely back to t he christian lines.As any one knows the Vivian girls are all unnaturally good looking, and their dazzling complexion and soft blue eyes had often caught the fancy of many of the boyscouts.Timothy Grovelon at the time was nin e or more, and before this had never showed the slightest interest in any one of the girls unless they had become unusually friendly to him.He did not crave the society of little girls, but believed the best way to find total and everlasting friendship of girls was to let them start the acquaintance first.If they didn't he paid no attention to them, nor their wants either.He belonged to a good brave family, but now was an pr orphan, but his parents a had been rich, and he t herefore had no ones wishes to consult but his own, ;and so after the first meeting with the Vivian Girl Princesses, when they entertained him in one of their recent parties it was r remarked that he seemed very fond of them, and that it t ook him some time to leave the headquarters, for his big chestnut mare was often tied before the headquarters entrance for more than half a day or so,while he say sat in the room where they had been busy with t he plans they were st udying.At last t he news reached Angelinia Arbtbubb Aronburg; whose guest the boyscout was, and who told him t hat if he wasn't careful they would run away with him and he'd have to stay i with them forever.The boy listened to her laughing chatter in a dazed kind of way, un till she said, although no o harm could come to him he c certainly could not have the nerve to stay too long by child mangels/

Then he roused up, and without a word of reply, started for the interior of t he christian camps, and entering the headquarters of Violet and her sisters found them in con versat ion with a strangely dressed man, while Violet alone sat with her gin ham apron on, an d lookin g as if she we crying very bitterly for the very reason that she was peeling round "cry babies(Onion s) for she was to do t he cooking as Violet and her sisters took t urn s at cooking different meals for themselves.Her hands nevertheless were very pretty little hands, small and whit e, and dimpled, and the tall man took them both between his own, and before the astonished little girl knew what he was about, he asked her to abdo abandon the dreadful career of being spies against the enemy and her sisters too, and t old her how happyshe and her sisters would be, providing they would forsake this dangerous and agonizing sort of career, and always only to their own o home town unt ill the frightful war was over.

"I do not mean to say"Tim had heard him say"That you should be acting as cowards by deserting a brave profession"But anything like this career would be very undesirable, for their was a great difference between their position as spies aga i against t he enemy, and his own kind, and---" Tim saw he did not finish t he sentence, for violet had disengaged her hands from his by this time, T im had seen her rise from her seat and with flashing eyes look him straight in the face and say;

"Thank you Colonel or General Schloeder.You have said enough for me to understand you fully.You may be proud as your following but I and my sisters are prouder st ill and I decine to do as you suggest, which the way you made it was more of an insult than an o honor.I know I and my sisters risk a lot of dangerous, death in horrible forms many times, and ever plenty of untimely suffering, but it is through you and your following that we have to do it .If you wish us to stay safely within t he Christian lines then why is this latt er about the those murdered children in t he barn of whose pictures we found.If you cannot solve such mysteries it is up to us to t ake the chan ces.Nobody but our Father can dictate to us what to do but we can give you or d orders and you'll obey them.Emperor Vivian is our Father, but a better truer, worthier man yet never lived, and yet he stays at the front risking his own oly life every day. If he's on the battle fields and we stay home cowering in a dark safe hole like seven cowardly rats what would the whole world think. I and my sisters could always hate you for thinking to make us ashamed and a afraid of our career..But we can't because you and your following has been unusally kind to us, but you people of the Gemini t hink too much of our own safty and not of yours, but we will never t urn our backs upon our career never untill we see Glandelinia humbling herself at our feet . The man who wishes too strongly to see us go home where it is safe, then therefore takes our place and does we we do or at least will try to and I'll bet that party would be scared to do it. We know the enemy and his ways you don't.I wish you good mornin g sir---" and Tim had seen her walk from the room with all t he haute heuther of an offended queen leaving the crest fallen Gemini leader alone and very much bewildered and uncertain as to what had happened.Tim had recognized other things that happened after the man had left t he house saying to himself"Are those little girls crazy or too overconfident in their possession royals.Do t hey know what they are doing to refuse the good sound advice of I and Darger repeated so often before, and she says she almost hates me, because I persist in trying to get them to leave off such a dangerous career.Well well it is my first experience at tampering in their affairs and it won't be the last.I'll p plead with their Father on the case.Two days later Tim had again been with violet and her sisters, when Joice recieved a three page letter from general Hendro Darger which came was what Schloeder had said, which she promptly returned to him with the words;

"The man who interfers with our private business business loses his job."

A week had then went by, and then general Darger sent them a letter of six pages in w ich he capitualt ed gen generally.N t only would he recog nize their rights to do what they chose in their military career, but in proof therefore he would help them find out who and where the three Glandelinian gen erals are and would not in sist upon anything which did not meet their approval.All he and his officlas wanted was that they be careful in what they do, and that t hey must not risk themselves too much as the enemy was dangerous/.This was a concession and violet , and her sisters, who while standing by their own profession had not been insensible to t he dangers confronting them, declared in another letter that they themselves intended to do nothing on the matter of t he mystery pictures of the barn without their fathers consent, that it was the place of t he Gemini to dete ct these murderers, but if their father did not oppose it, they certainly would go to it, and let no one step in their way, and who did ---beware. All this occured before Tim was asked with others to help t hem in their interprize,and Tim surroundered t o them, and therefore

Tim had nearlyhas much rights in the headquarters of violet, and her sisters as did their brother Penrod,, where he was always made welcome, and treated with kindness and con sideration . We have dwelt thus long on the companionship of these good boys and girl soldiers, because they and their following have nearly as much t o do with this part of the story as the myst ery that violet, and her sisterswere determinec tosolve, because the coming of this new adventure was the means of bringing about another unusual incident, without which our dainty little Vivian Girl Prin cesses could have never further been t he heroines of this unusual stirring story.Angelinia Aronburg herself would hardly have been human if her sudden . elevation to her high rank had not affected her somewhat.It did affect her to a certain extent, to such an extent that Glandelinian generals were more afraid of her t han of anybody else, and all new child scouts, who watched her curiously agreed that her companions ip with t he Princesses and her high rank did not turn her head, and that she fitted wonderfully in or her place though at t imes she was quite froward.

"Acts for all the world as if she was borne to allthat grandn ess, and ain't a bit ashamed of any lower ones eth her."Gangirlscout called Peggy Margaret said n ever n ever once suspecting that Angelinia Aronburg as she mingled more and more in the "World o"of the Abbiscuslan Princesses got to be more and more like them every day.As for "

As for her disguised sister who posed as Radcliffe she enjoyed to the full to seeing her sister a great girlscout l ader and fully in as high rank as violet or her sisters, but la had laughed at her endeavors to change and pilish her. "Ain't no use Eva"he would say or she would say."It's impossible to make a whistle out of a horses hair, and you can't never get me alevated to t he rank you have as I m hardly ever seen in the christian lines and more in t he fores.My young but hard hands have worked too long in dirt mortar and st one when posing as a child slave to be cramped up in cormination gloves or to handle them wide military forks of yours.Like t he crazy Glandelinians do I shall always have to eat with my hands untill t he war is over, it comes natural like and easy, and shall drink my milk out of a big cup.But I like to see you go through with your adven tures, and t hink you ought to, if the Princesses want you to.You always had the making of an amazon.But Angelinia though you may not be able to lift me h e good an d kind to your loving friends the Vivian Girls for t hey're as pretty, and as smart and as good little girls as ever lived.You can even cause them t o be as dangerous to the foe as you are if you will to learn them your w y ways, and with Penrod their friend"she (She doesn't know he is their brother) learning t hem his strange trickathey'll soon make the enemy wish t hey had left t hem alone.They are the prettiest litt le girls any one can loo at of having seen ."

And in this Annie Aronburg was right for violet and her sisters were even more good than t hey were pretty even though Jennie was even more beautiful than any of her sisters.What she too owned the goodest. To the same dazzling puriety of complexion nd large lustrous blue eyes, she added a most sweetest show of expression and a softness of manner and speech unusual in one who had seen so much adventure sorrow and suffering and who had seen so much of the fury and devastat ion of war, but if she was angry at you Heaven help you.

If angry she was the fiercest spit fire of her whole number of relatives not counting only her sisters. But her outbursts of anger though very severe was only when she saw wicked or senseless things done.And too it would have seemed when by her parents Violet and her sisters were allowed to do as they pleased and had as much say over the armies as their Father that they would have become proud and spoiled but t hey never were spoiled in the least, and banished pride as a thing t o shiver at and grow cold.As for Tim it was sometime aft er he had forced t he surrounder of a Glandelinian general to him at the Santa Fe Works did he first meet the Princesses and then it first happened to be only one of them.It was at Santa Fe that he first observed t he fresh lovely young face of Angelina Vivian, which was to be his d estiny of friendship and adventures with them.He had first seen it before in one of the Catholic Army Churches when he went to Mass.she had come late for Mass through some cause but never afterwards left the Church untill t he last of the Masses had been finished and then stayed half an o hour after Mass.Her sisters had been before her, and t herefore Tim had missed them.He had been pretty shy of girls before t hat not that he was r ally girl shy or afraid of their company or that t hey embrassed him, but as it seemed as the saying is Ladies first"He believed t herefore that even little Ladies should speak to a boy first and if they did not he paid not the slightest attention to t hem.It never struck him however just as it did when trammed in the pretty bonn net and not ina un iform, and with t he bonnet having violet ribbons view vieing with the deeper clearer blue of the large bright eyes which flashed a smile on him as he involuntarily lift ed his hat did he meet with violet herself and she first spoke to him and as if she had known i him for years held him in con versation for three hours while they sat on a curbst one of a street of a litt le t own.

Timothy Groveton had often been fond of little girls whether they had pretty faces or not, and when e he made friends of girls he followed them for good and his attentions were always strictly honorable with regard to violet and her sisters.At first he was embrassed a good deal, but the beauty and good gentle loving nature of violet, and her sisters overcame every scruple at last.On on of t he fun ny things that happened was that after Manley had slightly recovered from his wound he had heard of Timothy Groveton not only finding and sheltering the Vivian girls, but mistaken reports even came about that he had with t he help of Violet and her sisters capture "Adolfofob"and bring him as a prisoner within the christian lines.A terrible scene ensued within the Glandelinian army, and words were spoken between him and Phallinia Tamerline and ot her generals suspected of double crossing him that was never to have been expected to be spoken, and the next day Phallinia Tamerline had marched his own army a great distance away swearing he would never again lend assistance for Manley against t he christian armies and would resign in command first.He bl med Manley for the t reatment of them as to the cause of the disaster if Adolfofob was on t captured, and t he Vivian Girls were missing, and two days later one of t he Glandelinian generals who knew Manley went over to his headquarters and claimed t he report was true, that Timot hy Groveton through some given clues had found where "Adolfofob had been placed and that T im and violet and her sisters captured "Adolfofob and the boy has not been seen since.T h n T hem general Manley swore the biggest oaths, and Blasphemed God and all the Saints and angels, said that he would tolerate this no longer, t hat he was glad that his own wife had died before she knew of the way he was cheated by his own following in allowing him t o be doublecrossed.When he wrote a letter to His fat her in reply to a letter recieved from him announcing that Phallinia T amerline was not not blame but Adolfofobs foolishness in being friendly to them, the result was t hat Manley decided to move a part of his army out of t he t erritory of Big Girl Knool at once, and wrote his father to the effect adding that with the big army left him despite his fearful losses he could hope yet to crush his christian enemies and not only asked no odds of any one but decided to try and capture that Timothy Groveton at once, and also the Vivian Girls for he had learned of the capture of King Procilias children and that they had been sent to Angelinia Agathia where no Glandelinians could lay hands on them.This was true, and Manley had no redress, but walked the floors of his great lonely rooms in his headquarters weeping at times like a whipped child, or foaming with rage and ghnashing his teeth and clenching his fists, while all boy and girlscouts of t he Glandelin ian army were crying over the news of t he loss of "Adolfofob".

I seemed however to Violet , and her sisters as they would be somewhat disappointed for Angelinia Aronburg was so o s distance away from general Vivianias camp.she wrot e to violet and her sisters that she was happy where she was, though she would like to come b ack and go on some stirring adventures with them, but that Emperor Vivian must now would not a llow it.sh said she would write them oft en and n ever forget them.Then came a few lines written from some distant un known spot t elling them what she had heard of t he results of the long batt le of Big Girl Knool, telling of homesickness for t heir comp, of t he kindness of Emperor Vivian, and t he beautiful new uniform he had bought her.T hen followed an interval of silence, and when Gert rude wrote again, it was just before the battle of Opholis, and this time a change seemed t o have come over her and her letter was stilted and con strained, like those of a person writing under restraint, but showed signs of culture and improvement. She was at ill with emperor vivians army,, but of the army she said very little, except that he was well and moving against the enemy, and once that he had had a slight en gagement with t he enemy at Swit zerland Creek.To this letter violet herself had replied, asking Angelinia Aronburg if she were rreally content and happy, but there came no response, and nothing more was heard of Angelinia Aronburg untill two days before t he discoveri discovery of the pictures of the barn when she wrot e t hat she had been woundedwhile out scouting, and that she was being t t ransferered t ransferred t o general Hanson ias army for better keeping.A day later came a special wireless t elop telegram for Violet, and her sisters; The Emperor vivian Himself having wrote as follows;

"Geneva Run "Calverinia" December IIt h 1913-

"Dearest daught ers--On one of Angelinia Aronburgs best girlscout officers Jean Margaret died suddenly of a shell wound on the t wentieth of last month and was buried with Solemn Military Services and with a Grand High Mass.Will let my dearest daughters know more about it later as time takes me up so I cannot lengthen a lot ter.

Your dearest Father.

Robert Vivian."

Nothing could seem more astonishing or more unsatisfactory than were these brief short lines to t he sorrowing Vivian Girls, t o whom it would indeed to have been some comfort to know how the girls great officer died, and who was with her at the last, and if she had a thought or word for her friends so far away who would never see her again.But because of the enemy keeping superior Vivian too bus y to do anything this solace was denied them, for though Violet wrote twice to t he address from which this letter had come she nor her sisters never recieved a reply, and and therefore t he loss l of life of that girl and the whereabouts of Superor Vivians army and where Angelinia Aronburg was was shrouded in sad mystery and gloom, when general Hathernon died at the battle of Ophelia.

Violet and her sisters were desperate.With the situation so unsaid and this strange harn mystery discovered at the outskirts of Ophelia they could not tell what to do.Everybody seemed to be killed or dying on them.Every day too they had found out the loss at Big Girl Knool mounted higher and higher.T here fore upon either Hendre Dargar or Rodney Graves the superior who too had been the legal adviser of violet, and her sisters, developed the duty of giving them assistance in hunting up the Glandelinian generals thus mentioned, whose whereabouts no one know, and of getting the aid of general Concentin ian Aronburg who had written to Tim Groveton asking him t o to take charge of the new headquarters of violet, and her sisters.The house itself if Tim found it too far beyond use was to be therefore shut up, for the own er had fled from that territory during t he battle of Big Girl Knool and cared litt le if the old building t rotted to t he ground.He never should go back to live in a territory where a thunderous bloody battle had raged for four days, never ret urn to t hat part of Calverinia at all, but he would neither have it sold or rented.And so it stood empt y since the battle of Big Girl Knool and the win dows looked as if it had been t he target for stones and brick bats because of the concussion of shell fire and over t he whole place t here brooded an air of desolation and horror. T hen general Beresford died at Ophelia on the christian side, and general Art hur who was many years younger, succeeded him in command, and took charge of t he Hethorton division, having wrote two formal messages to general Hethort on, who sent back two letters just as formal and brief, and asked for information con cerning the situation or anyt hing pertaining to the battle field of Ophelia, nothwithstanding that general Rossiter sent a note, asking about his friends death, but to this t here was no reply, except the message that he near died within t he wreck of a building.Thus it is not strange that the letter to Timothy Groveton, announcing general Aronburgs advance to rejoin Vivianis, and speaking of Angelinia Aronburg as his neice, was both a surprise and revealtion, for no one had ever learned that Angelinia Aronburg was his neice(except Evans and Walter Starring).Infact so busy was all t he boy and girlscouts of vivianis army that they had almost forgotten the existance of general Aronburg, and had ceased to speak of him, though John Scanlon, who had now been dead two months or more had talked much in his last days of An gelinia Aronburg and had said to his weeping sister;

"Something tells me you will yet be brought very near to her.I surely don't know exactly how but in some way she'll be coming to you, but how I know it is not quit e clear ."

And now at last she was with general Conc ntinian Aronburgs army and she was coming back, but violet , and her sisters did not know it yet .Only Timothy Groveton, and Jean Saunders held the secret, and t hese two were driving or riding toward a solitary looking old abandoned mansion on the top of a beautiful hill on this warm December morning.

Scarcely any two child scouts(notpout s) could be more un like each other than t he two who walked slowly through the grounds of the abandoned mansion, contemplating on the enforced neglected ruinous condition everywhere apparent caused by shell fire, and the va vast amount of labor necessary to restore the park and garden and the buil ing itself to anyt hing like beauty and order.Timothy Grovetonas the elder and the more superior, w ill naturally sit first for his picture. He had recieved a first class education at a boyscout school, n and when he entered the service as a scout he devoted himself to it with an energy and assiduity which placed him in t he ran k where hw he was now, and where he was now at the very h a head of his profession.what ever he did he did with all his might and his services were much sought after by generals and all child scout friends in gen eral, so that he was always occupied and busy.T he enemy knew Tim was a dangerous foe, but at the same time did not even know who and where he was as he always disappeared even at times from his friends most mysteriously and would appear again in their midst as if he was a ghost. In st atue he was t he size of a eleven year old boy though he was younger,he was finly formed, with a handsome head set erect, and square upon his his shoulders and co crowned with a profusion of dark brown hair, which curled slight ly around his forehead at t imes and was smoothly combed at others.Though good looking his face had a t ough sinist er expression, his eyes looked flashing and fierce and those who did not kn ow him would be inclined to run away from him. His complexion was dark, and his eyes were restless and bright, not very round but more oblong, eyes which makes you uncomfortable when fixed upon you because they seem to be reading your most innermost thoughts or secrets, and weighing all your t houghts and motives.He was stronger than most boys of his age , and belonging to one of the oldest and best families in the country of Abyssinkila, he was righteously proud of his blood, and proud of his name but not foolishly or sinfully proud, and the things Violet and her sisters had suffered and experienced had saddended angered and annoyed him more than it did the brave little ladies themselves, while the memory of their recent and experience with Penrod had almost driven him frantic before he had finally succeeded in helping them out.In deed it was a wonder to him how violet , and her sisters could endure all they had gone through and lived to tell the tale.and yet Tim was a boy of sterling qualities and one whom everybody respected and not merely liked but loved, and seeked always his companionship, though not as they liked Penrod and Tim not only know t hat but something through Penrods sisters drew him so close to the Prince as if Penrod was his very brother.Penrod too t o all t he good persons was a good natured comical easy going, insolent boy, who was always ready to help any one when his services w re were needed, and applied himself to every useful thing, and had coolin ually drilled his sisters into his own way of fighting with lance, pistol and sabre and knife so t hey could soon hold their own against any n umber that would would attack or try to capture them. Jack Saunders Jeans boy friend always peculiar, had grown more and more peculiar, and more savage toward the enemy wit h every month of his boyscout life, and as a natural consequence his following, whose character was stronger than his, had developed into self reliant independent boy and girlscouts, who managed their companies and regiments admirably, and for the most part let their own following manage themselves.It was stated once by general Manley for violet when spying on him had overheard the rok remark,"That the boyscout Jack Saunders had no following of boy and girlscouts.T heyre were rattlesnakes which strike dangerously without warning." Especially was this the case with both Penrod and yet more so with Tim, who among boys was one of the best friends of Penrod, the beloved friends of his sisters, and whom they rather encouraged in his doings.There was danger nough in scouting adventures"violet reasoned, for Tim was one of those fortunate boyscouts, into whose hands everyt hing turned out strangely e glorious, and there was no n eed of Tim to be anywhere else but be one of their newly s l selected guardians which t hair Chief Guardian Jack Evans needed badly to be his aides.In deed no queen ever received from anybody more homage, or a sister or mother more love, than did violet and her sisters from Penrod or Timothy Groveton .for their sake both great boys would do anything, dare anything, or endure anything, even to t he fiercest of the enemy, and that was saying a great deal, for t oo t hey were not a family as good as they were whose society everybody could enjoy.He was bound therefore to stand by them and if their experience experience with the enemy ever made him shudder he never s gave s sign but bore up bravely and proudly, secure in is own military position as a boyscout Captain General and a little gentleman . To all t he boy and girlscout followers of his whether above him or below him he had always been attent ive, and kind, and helped them through many difficulties and did everything within his power for them..Violet and her sisters t oo were o not his blood relations, and he knew that , but he loved t hem n evertheless as if they were more than that.On y once had he bawl d out one of his girlscout friends and that was when he first entered the service but once probably without meaning any harm, or probably because she was a little jealous she had something or said something about violet, and her sisters that filled him with disgust.Their suffering had caused this however for to him it made life also a great burden so that at last on that one occasion, when she forgot herself and said to him;

"Yes Violet and her sisters are fools and are crazy to do all what they do."Then he revolted openly and turning fiercely upon her exclaimed justly;

"You hush up youn g girl,I've had enough of that.T hey have a right t o do as t hey think best for their country as much as we have, and t hey're not cry babies as you often call them.The oldest one is t en years old, and I'll be d rned if I'll ever stand for hearing you speak of t hem they that way again.If you do I'll order you under arrest and brin you before t hem."

She never called Violet and her sisters anyt hing like that again, but for a t ime it seemed as if a rift had come bet ween t hese t wo for like she used to do no she never spoke or kissed him again untill three mon t hs later when he was going away to a girlscout school t o superintend the teaching of tem t hem there at t he request of Jennie Turner who was called away on particular duty.And she did not offer it herself either..she said good bye to him at his headquarters, and went back t o her own ten t, where she had worked and served alone since her brot hers death, and which seemed lonlier to her than ever because on the morrow Timothy Groveton would be gone. T im was her idol, her pride, and his daily visits had made much of the sunshine of her life, and as she undressed herself for bed, and then went to wind t he small hand t icker clock on t he table near her bed t he t ears rolled down her face and dropped upon the floor. She had feared for her mistaken that Tim would never come int o her life again and she felt sad and lonely. Her p punishment was slightly justified however because she should have never made such remarks about violet and her sisters but it did seem a little too severe. There was a lot of noise that night for far away some sort of a battle was raging at night, and standing with her back to the company st reet door of the tent she neither saw nor heard anyt hing untill she felt a pair of arms close tightly around her neck, and Tims lips were pressed against hers.

"For the Dear Blessed Lords sake how you scared me. What on earth brought you here." she exclaimed turning t ward him with her nightcap border flying back, and her tallow candle in o her hand. Tim was half crying as he too replied;

"I could not go away without kissing you once more, and having you kiss me. You have not don e so since t hat t ime I got so plaguey mad and called you names for insulting t he Vivian Girls. I've cried about it a hundred times I'll bet. I'll forgive you, and I want you to forgive it, and kiss me too. I'm awful sorroy sorry Nancy."

Her name which he long since had discarded or dropped from his lips naturally now, and putt ing down e her candle the little girl much bigger t hough than him t ook him in e her arms and nearly strangled him as she sobbed;

"Forgive you Tim. Of course I will with all my heart, and kiss you too. It was my fault and I deserved the scolding. Any girl, or wo e woman young or old would like to kiss a mout h like yours."

It is possible t hat we cannot believe our readers will like Timothy Groveton the less for this little incident or because even in his youngest boyhood he had a mouth which even any women young or old or an y little girl or even a boy might refuse to kiss. A han dsome mout h it was, with full red lips which just always seemed ready to break in to a merry saucy laugh but which you felt sure positively had never been polluted by any bad words or vulgar word because he was also an Abbiennian or low insinuation against any one n ot even t he Glandelinians. In thought, word and deed he was as pure nearly as any one of the Vivian Girls, and held all women and little girls in the utmost respect ,,, because his mother before she died had been a saint. Ta ll willowy, and graceful in figure he was like all t he Abbiennian race, as said before blue eyed and fair, with a profusion of soft brown a hair but dark, which sometimes was curled round his forehead and sometimes combed down Penrod called him t he han dsomest litt le boy he had ever seen, with his frank open boyish face and winning smile. At first when e had come into the scout troop it was believed he might have been a sissy because he knew all t he details of a little girls dress from t he arrangement of her hair to t he fit of her girlscout boot, and could detect at a glance any incon gruity in color, style st yle and makeup. To violet and her sisters he had been an invaluable as a credit, and no article which he condemn ed was ever worn by them again. He detested red borders on their yellow silken un iform dress dresses but they couldn't discard that bec ause it was the authorities of the nation that made these and they wouldn't change for anything. It was strange too considering how much unlike to each other they were t hat Tim and Jean should be such unusal loving friends t oo but each understood perfectly the peculiarities of the other, and undergood their goodness too and each sought t he others society cont inually. With Timothy Groveton t he fact t hat Jean was far under his ran k covered a multitude of sins for any sinner outside of Abbican n ia, while Jean cared but little who Tims family were, but liked the boyscout leader for himself, and spent a great deal of t ime in his headqu headquarters.

"Well this is a jolly place, very jolly indeed for the kind of girls Violet and her sisters are." Jean said disgustedly, as she strolled through the grounds pushing aside with her colored riding can e the dry dead we dead weeds, shrubs and creeping vin es, which checked not only t he flower beds, but even t he walks walks themselves. everywhere were marks of ruin and partial wreck, and the house seemed worse than all t he rest it was so damp and gloomy, with doors know knocked off their hinges by some concussion of n ear shell fire, floors hald out of place, and t he glass gone from most of the upper and lower windows. "Seems like some old possessed house, and I act ually feel my flesh creep don't you!" Jean said t o her companion as t hey went through room after room below and t hen ascended t he broad stairway also staircase to t he floor above.

"Suppose we first take the room intended for violet, and her sisters." Tim suggested, and they made their way at once t ward the large chamber with the two big bay windows overlooking t he distant town of Ophelia and t he country for many miles and miles away.

As they st epped across t he threshold Timothy Grovet on involuntarily took off his hat which he had worn durin g t he invest igation below. Perhaps neit her h e nor his little girl companion was conscious of the fact or the act or that it was a tribut e to violet, and her sisters or to Gertrude Angelina, who were in t he thoughts of both as they st ood in the great gloomy silent room, from which t he day light was kept out by the heavy window blinds inside, and the heavy shutters which had withst ood the ravages of close shell fire.

"This has evidently been the guest chamber of t he ones who formerly occupied this building" said Tim.

"Yes" said Jean "and the furniture is of solid mahogany and of the massive kind and I hate t his kind of wood myself, and I don't like that sort of faded han gin gs around the high bed post it either even though it is of the heavi st silken damask."

"Yes and t he at mosphere is close and st ifling" said Tim and he drew back a st ep st ep or two while Jean pressed on untill she accidentally ran against t he sharp corn er of a large bureau in t he dark, and uttered a little cry of pain (not spain)

"For Heavens sake come out of this Jean." T im f n finally exclaimed. "Let's give t he whole thing up, and let general Concentinian Aronburg get this olf robbery fixed up himself. We can never make it decent. I'm afraid the schools wouldn't do t he work."

"Just hold on a minute I'm not going to give it up." said Jean making herway to a window. "I m going to let in a little air, and plent y of light. There" she sent in ued, as she sent up the win dow curtains with a bang, and then opened win dow after window, and pushed back t he heavy shutters, one of which dropped from the hinges tot he ground. "There Tim see, t hat is bet ter, and does not smell so like an old Limberger cheese Cupboard, and look Tim dear, just see what a most magnificent view. Ten beautiful villages, as I live Tim, and almost as man y ponds, and t he Aronburg run River, and t he hills,, with the town of with the town of Ophelia in the distance."

It was indeed a most lovely landscape spread out before t hem, and Jean who was even a little girl artist and had an artist eye for anyt hing beautiful enjoyed it to t he full, and declared it as fine as anyt hing that might be in Heaven which she called her real home town from which she was "exiled". Tim however was t oo much absorbed in t he duties devolving upon him to care for views though views usually were his delight too, and Jean herself soon came back to t he room and examined it minutedly for she was a lovely little housekeeper wherever she happened to be, and examined it from t he carpet, moulding on t e floor t he floor, to the rott -n rott on hangin gs on the bed, which she at last began to violentlypull down, thereby raisin g a cloud of mortar dust, from which Timothy Groveton who didn't like dust on his uniform beat a hasty retreat.

"I'll t ell you what Jean" he said "It 's no kind of use for us, I shall wash my hands of the entire job, and let Miss Angelinia Aronburg or her uncle arran ge the place to suit t hemselves."

"N onsense you won't do any such t hing and you know it." Said Jean. "It 's not so very terrible sure enough, though I must confess it is a sweet looking boudoir for a set of beautiful Heaven like little Abbiennian Princesses to come into, but it can be fixed easy enough. I'll help. I can see the end from the beginning. First we'll get four or five st rong refugee women in t he camp. I know where t hey are, I'll get t hem and pay t hem well. Then in the meantime we and our scouts will pitch every identical old thrash out of t he win dows and make at night a good old bonfire to sit around like we always do—that fall naturally to all us camp fire girls and boys. Then we or rather t he women, will go at the room harder and then girls wit h soap and sand and water scrub brushes and elbow grease and burned feathers and so forth if necessary. For your sake I'll take the whole thing in han d and as they say boss t he job. T hen we'll get a glazier and have n ew window glass put in, and a painter with pot and brush, and a paperer to cover the walls wit h—let m e see what shade will suit them best I wonder. They always like the same wall paper with beautiful designs of roses on it. In t heir bedroom they like shades that suits their complexion. I forgot how t hey look. Are they pearl white, with golden hair like t he small child angels in heaven, or are they dark like some of us do you suppose? "

"They're pearl white in t heir skin. I only wish they would stay within t he christian lines where they belong and not go on these foolish dangerous adventures." growled Tim, very hot and very sweaty, and a good deal soiled from the dust of the bed curtains, which Jean had shaken so violently.

"Take it cool Tim dear, you've done adventures as they have and don 't kick about it." returned Jean. "I believe you're on e head and holls in your love for t hem and maybe have often gone down on your knees before them."

"They're t he first little girls I ever went on my kn ees to." said Tim, while Jean continued;

"Angelinia Aronburg their girlscout guardian is light complexioned of course, but Violet, and her sisters I suppose are light er, t here never was a Vivian yet who had not a complexion like peral, so we will have the paper of their bed room a pearl white with designs of lovely colored roses, which they can study at their lis liesure, mornings when they are awake, and do not wish to get up in case t hey were forced to be out late at n ights.That settles the paper, and now for the furniture---something light, ---pine of course, t hey love pine wood and real pine, no shoh for the litt le queens and you cannot fool them for there is not a single piece of wood or a tree that they cann ot tell what it is. Mosquit o net ---ecurse, white lace t rimmed wit h blue or violet, for the Vivian Girls not only Violet love anyt hing trimmed with Violet, and their dresses of yellow and purple or violet always goes together.So we'll loop the muslin window curtains back with violet, and have some violet and yellow--what do you call them T im dear--those square things t hat we little girls are always making or buyin g for backs of chairs, and bureaus, and cushions; you know what I mean.?

"No I don't I'm sorry, I never was a housekeeper.I wish I did know, but Jean drygood stores or their propoeritors or what you call t hem own r own ers know all the paraphernalia of a little girls bed chamber and you or I can goeand ask them" said Tim, while Jean laughingly replied with imperturbable good nature;

"N either do I dthough I'm a sort of a little house keeper m self for I can no more ent er a room without knowing every color or article in it, and whether they harmonize or not, but we can ask those of stores and they will know what to give us.We can buy it in Ophelia.You see I should be able to air the litt le En glish I have been picking up from Penrod as I dare you say Violet and her sisters can speak good English.Do you understand En glish Tim!"

"I learned it in school through my own effort when I found a English grammer left by some fool foriegner.I hated English at first andwas glad I did ot know it but now it is a blessing of God I do. Enl En i Eng,i English a few days ago came in good and handy for me."said Tim remembering the last harrowing experience of violet and her sisters, and also thinking to himself also that he would privately get out his grammar and English reader which he had still retained, and brush up further knowledge of the language, for if any foriegners wished therefore to take advantage of him thinking he couldn't understand English it would nevr do to let them get so much advantage of him, and just t hen Jean startled him with the exclamoat ion;

"I've got it Tim dear.Tidies---That is what I m ean.Purple and yellow Tidies in the bureau with little fancy perfu e bottles standing round, new mown a hay jockey club eau de cologne, the very best that we can buy at Ophelia, and soap. By Jove, violet and her sisters shall have the very best cake of soap that I can but buy, and things for perfumery for who is the girl who don't like perfume or the boy either---but I've got to give it up now.Not but that Angelinia Aronburg will bring a cart load, but I wish her to know that we girlscouts can get good soap for violet and her sisters as w ll as she.Then there's power--I must get sister Wildord to give me some of her's."

"Gun powder! What do yo you m a mean."Tim asked in t rue surprise; and J ean replied with one of her sweet a sweetest but mischievous smiles;

""Now T im dear ,are you putting on or what.Is it possible you have lived to be fourt een years old;;"?

"On y half past nin e going on ten."interrupted Tim, and jean continued;

"Well t henhalf past nin e.Have you lived to be nin e and a half years old and don't know that every one of us little girls, and even ladies and women has a little power pot, and puff ball on her dressing bur au or table just to touc h her skin on a real hot day like this when it is supposed to be winter and snow on t he ground, and make it feel better when she is moist.And I didn't say gun pow der sit her T im.Use your brains and listen when I'm talking and you won't make mis takes.Some of it cost as high as three dollas a package--that is the kind violet and her sisters must have.You ought t o have some too for I have seen you use it too when you sweat too freely.It would improve that spot where the dust of the bed curtains have settled on your nose.There---don't rub it with your handkerchief you make it worse than ever.We must afterwards go to t he river yon der to wash our faces before we go back to our part of the camp.But let 's furnish this room with matting, which we quite forgot , and seven willow chairs close by the bay windows and a work table, and another chair close by with the cat and kitt ens.T hat will make the pue picture complete, and if they are then not satisfied then maybe they have already had a taste of real Heaven up above and wish to only be there.I'll make this room my special charge; you need not bother about it at all though you can inspect it afterwards and tell me whether I done a good job or not.I was going right down to Ophelia, but shall wait to greet my sister-Minnie.And now come on let's investigate t he rest of the hut, where there is daylight to do it in.Con found that rat it almost tripped me.If I wasn't humane I'd give it a kick."

In deed T im was not at all loath to leave the close room which was not only almost a hot purgatory to him, but smelled so musty and damp(not scamp pamp) but whih which really seemed in a better state of preservation than otherparts of the

Everything had gone to ruin by either shell fragments or bullets, or suffer d from t he concussion of battle, even in places the ceiling was where it was not supposed t o be(on the floor in pieces) and but for Jean, he would have been utt erly discouraged, and aban don ed all attempts t o restore the place to anyt hing but habitual condition.Jean was all enthusiasm, and being a litt le girlscout housekeep r and having had plenty of such good training at home knew exactly what ought t o be and what not ought to be done, and in her zeal offered to see to nearly everyt hing, provided t he aurthorities of her wage which was of course very high did not limit her as to means. T his Tim faithfully promised not to do. Money should be forthcoming even if a thousand workmen were employed, as T im seemed there must be, the time was so short , and they would like to have things decent at least for violet and her sisters of whom they talked pleasantly about as they rode back to t heir own part of the camp cleanly washed.Jean at first t hought it cheaper to employ Glandelinian soldier prisoners from the inter ment camp but T im put a positive "N O"on that suggestion saying he didn't want the buildin contaminated by the hands of those dirty weasels. Were Violet and her sisters reallly angel possessed, they enquired, and the decision was from what Tim confessed of having seen and known, that an angel possession cases was a frequent case in Abbieannia, it was positive Violet and her sisters were not an exception, although they may be pretty as celestial children.Tim said that even Lillies and Roses which Violet and her sisters loved were not as pure as the Princesses. Yes Violet and her sisters were as good as t hey were pretty, unquest ionably too brave,, and real full blooded Abbieannian, and unspoiled like all Abbieannian children are, as Jean said, for no one with Abbieannian blood in their veins was anyt hing but that, and the young girlscout spoke impatiently, for she was thinking of her own human lillies and roses, and fair features which she loved.

"Of course they're strange and unusual"Tim said, but Jean did not agree with him.Jean herself was an Abbieannian , her mother was one and tall, her cousin Anna was tall and alsoan Abbieannian.All the Abbieen laes when grown were tall and strong.The two children were getting very much interested in violet and her sisters, nor was their interest at all diminished, when as they reached the camp,they called at the milit ary camp post office, and found a letter from Angelinia Aronburg herself, which t hough sent by t he same route had not reached the camp untilll just now.The handwriting was in code, but they under stood code language, and t he letter was very short and ran as p follows;

"Concentin ian Aron burgs army D ecember 11th-

T o T imothy Groveton;

Dearest boyscout friend,I have just discovered that my dear Uncle has t old you among other things t o have little saddle ponies in readiness for violet and her sisters.What does he think t he Princesses are ,three year old babies?

What spee d can they do on thes litt le ponies.By all means they dos detest riding small baby ponies as much as t hey detest to t committing a sin, they must have great tall horses, who will carry them grandly, high and swiftly.T he Biggest ,grandest and fastest you can find.Get one for their brother too."

Your true and loving friend;

Angelinia Mary Aron burgs."

It almost seemed to t he boy and girl that they held Gert rude Angeline by t he han d, so near did this letter be bring her to them, and such insight int o her character did it give them.

"She has a mind of her own and means to exercise it."said Tim, while Jean said;"I n ever intended to get them the ponies suggested by the general.I t hought he must be seeing things.Nobody but an amazon as they are would insist upon seven t all horses.It is just as I t old you.How would the general himself look riding upon a small pony.He is six feet and eleven inches at least.."

"I was always thinking t he same as you for I never saw them ride any but tall horses."said T im still studying the gilt edged sheet of note paper where there lingered a faint delicate perfume which miles of travel by land had not quite destroyed . Jean then bid Tim temporary good bye for h she desired to see h er sister on the subject riright away.

After leaving Timothy Groveton,, Jean concluded before going home to her own e headquarters tent (not spent to call on e'her sister, and ask if she h d had ever heard that General Aronburgs neice was the cousin of violet and her sisters who was with general Aron r Aron burg for the present. The headquart ers on Minnie Saunders was a low old fashioned brown building un der some big big popular t rees. Minnie was a tall well formed girl for her age with a face which once seen always won many glances afterwards from every one who saw it. T hough they called or Minn ie Margaret Saunders was her real name but for some cause or other everybody called h er "Peggy", and everybody not really liked her, but loved her, she was so throughout ly kind hearted and good natured and ready to sacrifice herself in every and any cause/. But there were persons however who were really against her. But don't let the reader worry about that, t hese people are not within the christian lines or anywhere el se unless you look t ward a Glando; Glandelinian camp. Her father who was still living and in service within t he christian lines as as da dangerous to the enemy as a gunman who could not be captured or killed, and her brot hers were fiercer and more dangerous still, and against the Glandelinians t he most "storious fighters ever seen, while her mother was a head of a large number of Red Cross N'urses within t he christian lines. Him in's reputation was unusually good, though at t imes she was loud talking, boisterous , but very also and a inhabitant of Calverinia, also perfectly hon est, straight forward, and very trusty and brave and enduring. she had a good strange way t oo, she could catch on and imitate by learning t he fright ful grammar of many of the Glandelinian generals who were ignorant as to spea ck speech, and she could imitate the slang of any Glandelinian kn own to use along with originitality and force and therefore by it do her spying work many without detection. But she was a good spy, and good fight or, a good girlscout, and a lovely friend to everybody of her own side. T o the Glandelinians she was a terror, and sometimes a "Ratt leanake also" to the Glandelinian generals she was not only an annoyance and a mortification both from her manners prot ended, and her showy style of disguise, but also she was a terror, while while to Tim she was a source of amusement, and when he had the time he frequently spent hours in a her n eat quiet sitting room or out on the shaded back porch where he somet imes found her on t he evening of his return from some scout ing tour.

Wit h increasing years of her stay within t he christian lines before T im first knew her she had chan ged a lot and became such as made Glandelin ian patrols keep out of her reach even though she was out alone. So saucy Tim sat her down as St Michael disguised as a little girlscout, and encouraged her in her work.

One time Tim seen or her return into camp wit h some prisoners but her appearance made him laugh himself sick. At first he t hought she reallyturned to a size which would have caused her to refuse to be weighed, and he could have put h r down at two hundred and fift y despite her height , and could not kn ow what to make of her form which he said he could not encircle wit h both his long sinewy arms. All delicacy of feature and complexion seemed to have departed, and with her round red face and four chin s she might as well have passed for some fat old English or German dowager seen in comic strips especially when she was attired in a royal black mor moire antique which is called a poray, with a long heavy gold chain aroun d her neck, and a lace cap with mountains of pink red green and yellow bows upon it. Her hair was at l least done up in about t wenty litt le pig tails and presented a rather grotesque appearance. Always after t hat T im used to say;

"I never saw her so disguised as she was on that occasion and it looked so real I t hought a natural misfortune had befallen her. I wondered exceedingly since how she made up that way. But she wouldn't tell a soul."

But now when her sister sought her sh had laid aside all superfluities of disguise and her dark brown hair shone smoothe and glo ssy in t he strange red sunlight peeking through a reddish brown sky, while her uniform dress and her heart shaped hat she wore looked cool and comfortable and she had far from a big round form.

"For our Blessed Lords Sake" she said "as Tims tall figure came forthe swiftly to her side "what brin ge you here so late, and why hal you not come before. And here comes Jean my sister. I was at the headquart ers of Violet, and her sisters our daring and beautiful Princesses this early afternoon, and Violet t old me they were also looking for you but you were not home. I made a short strawberry cake with milk for you hoping you would come in and see us. There's a good piece cold in the ice box now if you want it ."

With his friend Jean coming in T im declined the short cake, and both sitting down by t he girlscout officer, t old her of general Aronburgs letter, and asked if she had ever heard of Angelinia Aronburg being a cousin of violet and her sisters. Margaret was a good deal startled and surprised so surprised that she would not have felt worse had somebody knowcked knocked her down with a broom st ick. T hat her chief girlscout leader Angelinia Aronburg was a cousin of t he beautiful . Vivian Girl Princesses, was a great but pleasant surprise to her, and for a moment she stared blankly at hot h T im and her litt ler sister, as if not quite comprehending t hem. Then she began-

" General C nsentinian Aronburg coming back this way again aft er being at Calverine so many days, and bring his good noice wit h him. And she's the cousin of violet and her sisters. That's very strange but pleasant news, and makes me think of what Joe Green said before he did died. Seems as if he had second sight or something, which sure is not at all to be wondered at for he was a good boy. He said that in some way t imes will soon come when Miss An gelinia Aronburg will be coming back again, and she is coming--but it 's quar r I never heard of her being a First cousin t o violet and her sisters. Then without any one knowing it but himself then Hanson Vivian must be her father. Still probably it is good for the cause that t he secret is kept from t hem so far. But T hank God and His Blessed Mother t here is so much Royal blood in her as Violet and her sisters and thats good news to hear. I never could abide t he Glandelinians who had done her cousins so much harm. I one myself when I was nearly caught by Manley t old him if he harmed a hair of one of t he Vivian Girls I'd shoot him as I would a maddog. There's fight you know in us Saunders."

And Minnie's eyes blazed with all the fire of her fighting brothers and father who fought t he enemy like prize fighting savage demons.

"What were t he particulars t hat brought her on t he way here? I've h eard of course but did not pay much attention as I knew nothing much of Angelinia Aronburg except of which I have seen and heard." said Jean, and Minnie replied;

"It 's a runaway match f r the enemy, for general Aronburgs army always "Rides such a high hors e" that many o Glandelinian generals are afraid most of their lives and so t hey run away from him---the more cowardin t hey are---and being disguised because h e couldn't engage an enemy inbattle he took his army in a hufftward Calverine then also in possession of a Glandelinian army. At least he h ard it was, but it certainly wasn't when he got there. The mayor of t he city told him t he enemy fled the coop on hearing of i his approach. And since shewent off with him that was t he last I seen of her or heard of her oit her as you may say.

It is t rue s she wrote sometimes, but for fear of enemies getting hold of h r communications her letters were always short and in code, and not sat isfying at all--seemed she was afraid also t o tell us she was lonesome for our child scout camps or wanted to see us. she had a new uniform gown, and she said a good deal about them, but nothin g of general Aronburg or his army, after a spell whether he was either advancing or ret reating or st ill staying at Calverine. He never wrote for fear of enemy couriers capturing his messages, but onceat here came a letter "From him" saying t hat Angelinia Aronburg had suddenly died at Calverine, and was buried in a Catholic Graveyard. We were all sad and grief stricken and violet and her sisters felt the news t he most and wrote tearfully expressing her their sorrow and spy sympathy. Strange to say they got a swift telegram that night from general Concentinian Aronburg. He state he surprised him greatly t o hear his neice died and was buried in a cemetery when she was herself at his very side as he recieved t he st artling news. He wrote that he had never wrote any message announcing t he death of his neice, t hat as far as death was concerned, she was very much alive and strong and healthy only home sick for the child scout camps. He was in Calverine then I believe, a but after we wrote again we got no answer and did not know where to direct letters, then violet and her sisters wrote and wrote t o t he old place in Calverine, and at first never got n o answer untill finally t he Mayor of the city happened to get one of Joices lett ers, and stated in answer that general Aronburg to sat isfy his neices longing was advancing t ward Ophelia and t hat they that is the Princesses must hold the army there untill t hey arrive."

"It 's very singular he did not tell Violet , and her sisters a'o about her being their cousin." suggested Jean, and Minnie replied;

"No it ain't. He couldn't know or he couldn't let them know if they had a hundred cousins, and indeed they have and all are like themselves but mostly are boys. Once I asked general Aronburg why he didn't let them know, and he said because for some mysterious reason Angelinia Aronburg herself forbids it being made known so far, and she puts a penalty on it to any one who blabs t heir mouth. Most of us know even who Radcliffe is, but. God help us if we blab it . Radcliffe will surely put us into hot water. why t here was never a liklier girlscout leader than An gelinia Aronburg , t here's no girl or boy within our nation that the Glandelin ian generals fear more than her, and there ain't a grander litt le lady now in t he land than she is. She's better in many ways t han the Vivian Girls, and it is not that I'm critizing them, they said so many t imes themselves and won't be argued about it ."

"I don't kn ow about t he grand" said Tim himself with a grin "but I know from what T he Princ esses there lves always told me there is not a bi better girlscout in our army than An gelinia Aronburg, , or a handsomer either, when she's dressed in her purple velvet uniform and wears her big hat . The firsttime I saw her I t hought she was one of t he older Vivian Girls. she seems to resemble Joice a litt le but is bigger . And her hair seems to be of purs spune gold. I wish you could see her once."

"I oft en did "said Minnie. "Why don't she put on her best unior uniforms here and let us see them once, and not always wear them plain old disguise uniforms all t he t ime."

When going out scouting so oft en as she does near t he foe lines is hardly the place for the best of uniforms." said Jean. "T here is seldom any occassion for them and An gelinia Aronburg doesn't think it any good taste to m ke a display where t he enemy can s e it."

"No I suppose not" Minnie replied "-But maybe some day Angelinia will take me on a "Friendly visit" to Manley and then I c an see it all. T There's my crazy disguise makeup, there's my rott en morery and upon a p'nch I can assume anot h er fatt y. Miss Angelinia Aronburg will find I sure can disguise myself."

T im did not usually wince at anything Minnie said but now a feeling of laughing came upon him as he thought of her near t he enemys lines arrayed as she had once been .What would Manley think of such a figure, and what would Angelinia Aronburg think of her anyway!

He was accustomed no e now to her queer funn y disguises, he knew all the good there was in her; but Angelinia Aronburg, with her Vivian Girl like ideas, was different, Angelinia Aronburg was awfully froward and stern at times severe as an irate school teacher, and he found himself seeing with Angelinia's eyes and hearing with Angelinia's ears, and blushing with shame for the good girlscout friend of his who went on talking about the good girlscout g moral, and Tim finally said;

"We want to please her you kn ow"and Minn ie replied;

"T o be sure we do, and we must make pitt y a time when she arrives here.Your boy and girlscouts will return to this cam too I suppose."

"Perhaps so.I shall sent them a written order from th." said T im and Jean herself said;

"We must get up a procession to meet her in your little friends rig Jean ie Vivians I mean, and wear out our best uniforms.I'll ask Captian Lyddy Ann to borrow if possible about fixing me a new hat mine is sore worn out.Now that I think of it Lyddy Ann talks of moving her camp a little le forward to the west--so she t old me this afternoon.Penrod is planning a new raid upon the enem y to get even for what his sisters suffered when t hey were with general Phellinins army.did you know it."

"Yes"said Tim.I'm invited in the raid."

"I know some one who too has written her on the subject, and Penrod invited us all to go on the raid"said Jean, and Minnie answered;

"He hasn't exactly said when t he raid is going to take place, but Ann was putting him up to it, believing he should get satisfaction against Manley somemy.silly critter that Manley.He's gets a nature of a fiend, I know him t hrough and through. Tim proceeded to tell her that changes general Aronburg contemplated making at the old t umble down mansion, and what general Aronburg had written of t he test as of the Princesses, with reference to cats, and asked if she could help him t here.

"That's the Abbiesnnian blood in them"said Minnie."We all are desperate foj fond of cats, but I can't let t hem have old Blackie, who had been my faithful companion for nearly two years, but there's Tiger with eight as lovely Malta kittens as you ever did see.Violet, and her sisters can have them and w lcome.

But as to the dog I don't know where you can get one.T hey were good good dogs that could protect them.As it was now getting on late in the afternoon Tim at last said good evening, and rode tward home(not home) thinkig thinking constantly of Angelinia Aronburg as the c cousin of Violet and her sisters whom he loved, wondering how well he should a,e also like her though h ardd know her and wondering more how she would like him .

Within less than six hours it was known all over t he christian lines, t hat general Con cem ta ian Aron burg was coming t o make a junction with general Vivianin, and was to bring back with him Angelinia Aronburg, of whose existance as being a cousin of violet and her sisters no one in the nation itself had ever heard, and by the n ext morning a hundred military workmen and plenty plenty of willing child scouts were busy at t he big house trying to restore it and the grounds t o something like their former appearance. Nominally T im Groveton was the "boss", but for an unusual reason Jean was really the selected head or superintendent, t he one who t hought of everything, and saw to everyt hing and to whom every one always went for advice.He had wrn written to Angeline R o Richee and her sisters, telling them of the expected arival, and asking t hem if they would not come home for a few days to help Violet and her sisters solve a certainestrange riddle found within an old barn, and also to recieve Angelinia Aronburg, who would naturally feel more at her ease, with them t han with a strange collection of persons.

"To t his lett er Mary Stanck replied, ex pressing her astonishment t hat t here should be a cousin to Violet an d her sisters of whom she had n ever heard, and saying that t hey should be very glad to be within the christ ian army to recieve her, but t hat at the battle of O-h Ophelia Emperor Vivian had been severely wounded without the Princesses knowin g it, and required the constant care of bot h herself and Angeline Richee whom a doctor give them commission t o do, so it was sadly impossible for them t o leave him, at least he himself the Emperor would not allow them whatever untill he was better.

"His wife t he Empress too is very anxious t o retain t heir good father here because she is a strong woman, an d can lift her loving husband better than an y one else."Mary wrote in conclus on"but if it is possible letvpyy let our good girlscout general Angelinia come and see Him and us, but she must do as she thinks best.His wound is very serious but not dan gerous so for t he love of G od please don.'t tell his daughters he is wounded un less you hear from me worse news."

Your friend Mary Stanck."

This letter however Tim did nevertheless show to Jean , and also Penrod ofcourse, and as Penod was particularly shocked he would have t old his sisters but for the letter warning not t o, but as it was the situation was very obnoxious t o Penrod and he was very angry evenvthough he knew Emperor Vivian had been wounded oft en before.but he knew Emperor Vivian now was his father, and without telling his sisters where he was going, but almost severely telling them not go to go anywhere outside the christian lines before he returned, he started at one with a strong patrol of cavarly as a guardian e hip squadron t ward Emperor Vivians army, and as Tim therefore had to be in his place as Penrod ordered him to do so and watch his sisters, Jean was left to stem the tide of work at the new headquart ers of Violet , and her sisers alone . But she was a strong husky litt le girl and was equal to t he emergency, and enmoyed it immensely.Every day was spent at the old place, except on the occassionswhen she made hasty but risky journeys with a cavarly squadron t o Ophelia or Chamberlane in quest of articles which could not be found within the christian lines or in rosa or T opsy towns.It indeed was astonishing to Tim to whom daily reports were made as to how much Jean knew about the furnishings of a house, and she a little soldier girl.He jokingly said to her b st best friend Jack;

"Jack dear if you and Jean ever grow up to be man and woman and you be married she'll make you an excellent housekeeper."

"Jack answered;"I'm unworthy of her, but she deserves a good friend from anybody and I'll keep her if it is gods will for she does like me exceedingly well.But Jean s is a great housekeeper and you ought to see her.Nothing is forgotten from a box or saa starch and pepper up to blankets, and spreads but no easy chairs.

Violet or her sisters detests easy chairs.Yet Jeans seems to be ever where at the same time, and by her own enthusiasm spurs on both her child scout following and the very men to do double the work they ot herwise would have done.she is great at t hat house, she superintends everything in the grounds, and in the house, where she frequently works with her own hands.I saw her cut the paper and border for the bedchamber of the Princesses, put down t he matting herself loop the muslin curtains with knots of purple or violet ribbons, and from her own headquarters near th the knoll bring a number of choice pictures to hang upon the walls and beautiful Sacred Heart Pictures too of our Blessed Lord and Mary.She has asked advi ve of no one.she has taken her sister to the place."

Indeed she had taken both, Anna, and Minn ie, and they never were happier than when seen by the villagers in company with T im t oo or with any of the great girl and boyscout leaders of whom they were very proud.Like the Vivian girls she and her sisters thought a good deal of dress uniform, and on this occassion they were very dashingly arrayed with streamers on their heart shaped military hats nearly a yard long and beautiful in color, their dresses were pretty in design and color and so easyly fitting they could ride their horses well.Like Violet and her sisters these three girls were very much in love with beautiful uniform dresses and jackets, and were very pleasing with T im for t olling them if it was not for their features he would have mistaken them for some of the beautiful Vivian Girl Prin cesses.They also liked city things.As the weather fir that time of year was so hot they had though riding slowly on chorsebook carried red yellow and blue colored paracols which costs enormous prices.They flaunted their paracols on all a occassions according which direction the dazzling "inter "sun struck them and also held it airly over their heads as they rode tward the new headquarters building with Tim, and were very gentle soft ad and did not talk very much(Abbiennian girls are not talkitive as in other countries), but nevertheless Minnie t old Tim of a schoolmate girlscout of hers, who had just been killed at Ophelia while doing her girlscout work, and that girlscouts seemed to be shot or inu injured pretty often recently. T im thought it as decidedly wicked to shoot down any girlscout as to shoot down the Vivian Girl Prin cesses, and he decided to inv catigate those reports and make the enemy pay for it dearly.Arived at the place Minnie and Anna praised things gen erally n and believed everyt hing just right to suit the tasts of Violet and her sistors.everything was as simple and plain as Violet and her sisters would like it, especially in the room selected for them.It was also pleasant and neat, but one thing they did critise was they believed the place was a little too warm inside, even though airy.but Tim said when the work was finished he could find means to make it too cooler if possible though he believed it was cooler inside than outside. Anna however did not like the color of the matting on the flood as it was a gra y color and believed it looked too much Glandolinian.Jean looked and thought it funn y for she remembered she put down the matt ing herself and when she did it certainly was more green than gray. Though Minnie approved of it saying it was grand yet she wondered how and there Jean managed to obtain such handsome expensive furniture.Jean protested that she didn't put no gray matting down on the floor, she had bought and brought a lovely pattern of Brussels green carpeting at Ophelia for two dollar and sixty a ya yard, and here was a gray one down in its place.Maybe the workmen made an exchange by mistake. and she was going to investigate.There was a big wardrobe with a looking glass door, so that Violet, and her sisters could see the bottom of their dresses.Then Ann a and Minnie inspected the pictures, and asked where Jean had foun' such magnificent pictures, and wondered exceedingly when Jean c onfessed her sacrifice. "You make such a sacrifice to give up such lovely pictures, and so well done.?

Why Jean I didn't know you loved Violet and her sisters that much.!"

Jean bit her lips, but maintained a very grave face, while she explained to her young sisters, t hat no such pictures could be obtained in any of the towns because the stores had sent them far away for fear of desecration bythe enemy, and therefore as pictures must be on the wall as Violet and her sisters were so touchy and wouldn't go into n any room where religious pictures were not hanging she brought o her own over as many as she could spare. Some also were strange pictures which t hey had never seen before, on one one a landscape, and another a moonlight scene on the Rhine near Bingen with the Mouse T ower and Ehrenfels in sight , while another was a copy of a Maddonna and Child.Her sisters did not approve of the picture of t he "Scene "on t he Rhine"saying it was decidedly "foriegn"but that as long as Violet and her sisters did not object to it they wouldnit mind as it certainly was one of t he prettiest pic tures they had ever seen . nna Saunders had been t o a girlscout and other schools, and had studied botanies, and physiologies and algebras, laid away on the book shelf on or in er her tent which she often looked through, and though t he pictures were decidedly foriegn she had knowledge of the Louvre or Murillio and Calude Lorraine and knew they were decidedly foriegne, and that at certain times foriegn pictures had been very displeasing to violet and her sisters, and had advised Jean to take them down, but Jean said she would let Violet or her disist ers sisters decided what to do with them as she certainly wasn 't could to carry those heavens good for nothing frames all the way back to her headquarters a second time, and she said to very decidedly too. One trip carrying those things in this crazy blazing hot weather when it is suppose to be winter and snow on the ground was enough torture as it was.

Anna knew many things however ,and said the pictures are lovely and would be all right if the Princesses appro ve of them.Just then the three girls turned suddenly.

"Why Jack Sanders dear you here"said Jean for the boyscout was just entering. He was far much better since his sick spell from the strange posioning of the food, and had ridden over t o this new headquarters building with a girlscout friend who was going a few miles furt her, and hearing voic es upstairs, had come at first to investigate having had some suspicions, and had come at v o once to the room to be occupied as a bed chamber by Violet, and her sisters, where he found T im and the three girls.Just then a workman called T im away, and jack was left alone with the three girlscouts, Jean who was even better pleased to be with him t han with Tim, and who assumed her prettiest most coquettish manners in order to attract the grave boyscout, whose cue she at once followed, praising the arrange ment of t he room generally, and finally calling his attention to t he pic tures one of which she said was drawn by an artist called Mr Lorraine, and the Holy pictures by Rachel, but she continued with t hat h r two sisters didn't t favor the scene pictures because they were of foriegn Countries.Jack was su surprised of her n knowledge of such unusual pictures, but he was slight ly disguised of the Pictures of the Foriegn lands too but t old her that it was up to violet or her sisters to decide whether the pictures remain or not.soon Tim rejoined t hem, and they went over the house together.Only the lower and upper halls, the dining room, t he Libary, general Concentinian Aronburgs and his neices bedchambers , t he kitchen and the servants rooms had been renovat ed, and these were all in comfortable living order, with new matting on the floors fresh paint and white wash everywhere, and furniture enough to make it cosy and homelike.but it was in t he grounds that t he most wonderful changes had been wrought, and even Timothy Grovet on could scare ely credit the evidenc e of his eyes when he saw what was done.Weeds and obnoxious plants, t urn torn or dug up by the roots , cement walks cleaned, quan ities of fresh green sod, where there had b en no grass, masses of pott ed flowers here and here upon the lawn and in the flower garden, while the conservatory which op ned from t he dining room, wasxtotally filled with t he most rare flowers, which Jean had ordered from Ophelinia an d Chamberlane.In days before the wreck caused by t he battle of Ophelia this build ing had been one of t he finest places in the country, and with some of its real beauty restored, it looked very pleasant and inviting, and with the flowers and still green grass, and the warmpth it looked more like a summer afternoon t han an December day, and Anna and her sister felt a pang of sorrow that poor Violet and her sisters couldn't stay here for good and all, and enjoy it for all t hese preparations were made for t hem.Anna herself was beginning to be more lovable to violet and her sisters than customary, though some would have though she might have been jealous of them, but the sin of jealious had never taken root amongst any body in Good Abbicannio, and never will.As they rode home with Tim, she asked asked him jokingly "wasche in so lo much love with Violet and her sisters as their brother Penrod was.

"Why yes"he he answered"Under the circumstanc es who should not be of course."

"Yes"that's the point"she retorted."Un der the same circumstances, but believe me if I was t hem I'd quit going out spying on the enemy and remain ohome untill this mutt y war is over where it is safe."I tell you what Tim I'm always scared of the saft y of their welfare, and though they are Abbicannian Prin cesses, and consider themselves not one whit better than we are, when they're better to our opinion we all hold you T im responsible for t heir safty, as you are their Guardian and times in Penrods st ead when he is away.Their Mother is the best and dearest lady God has ever placed upon this Earth next to t he Blessed Virgin to my idea, and whose Father kept the enemy on the run in 1841.I can't get over t he fact t hat you a few days ago before the battle of Opheliniа or when Big Girl Knool was st ill in the drama put it over on t hat st uck up old John Manley whom we all hate, when you and your friend Jann ie got the Vivian Girls out of the enemys clutches, and also helping Penrod get away caused Manley to believe you and his sisters captured Adeldefobe When I heard of t he latter sup posed su pposed occurance I nearly died from laughing. Manley is afraid they'll kidnap him next. I wish they would shootthe stuck up Glandelinian prig. You have made yourself almost a better boy than even t heir brother, ' you refuse to admit it , protect it , but he himself says so with his sisters.

If it wasn't so he wouldn't give you guardianship over his sisters.would he now?"

"I don't suppose so"said T im to Anna whose good but fiery nature he understood most perfectly, so he merely laughed at her fancies of the dangers t hey may be in and tried to divert her mind by first stating why she should fear about their welfare when they're angel possessed," and then asked her where she thought he could find a blue silk spread to laid on the foot of the beds of Violet and her sisters chambers. Anna did not know, but firmly decided to sit her make it her business to inquire or to get them if she had to get them from the Glandelinian camps in a raid,, and also to see that some pots of beautiful plants and ferns were sent to the place before the Vivian Girls took possession, and General Aronburg and his neice arived . Then too Ann a now who felt that Violet and her sisters were safe, was in a much better frame of mind, when she was at last with Jean and Margaret sat down at the door of their own headquarters.She found Mildred Maxwell in the sitting room, and at once Ann a recounted to her all she and her sisters had seen at the new headquarters an and how she was to send over some flowers, ivies, and ferns, and hunt up blue silk quilts for the beds."

"Blue silk quilts this untimely swelt ering weather caused by forest fires! What under the sun do they wantof that!"Mildred asked, and Anna explained that Angeline Jennings had a pink silk quilt because the room she occupied was pink, and that her sister Dolores had blue because her room was blue.It was a military fashion, that was all.

"Fiddlesticks on the military fashion."Mildred snapped."Better save the time and money for somet hing else.Those things anyhow cannot now be obtained.

If I had blue silk quilts of course I'd gladly give them to the girls .But I have a large patchwork quilt and others which their mother gave to me as a Christ mas present two years ago.It took the prize at the military drygoods show and I've kept it over since as a sort of memore.Violet and her sisters would t hink a great deal of them because it was their mothers work.I shall send it over with the cats, kittens and dogs."

"Cats and kittens!What do you mean!"Ann a asked in unusual surprise, and Mildred explained that Minn ie said that general Aronburg had written Violet and her sisters were very fond of cats and all animals of domestic kind, and T im wanted some for them, and that Minnie was going to give them Tiger and S e Speckles.

Anna was surprised that Margaret would sacrifice two of her cats and the little kittens, but then everybody meant to do their duty by them.Then too Mildred said-

"When t he general and his neice comes we must all go up in procession to meet them, and then go with them to the house, and Jean ie Turner is going t o g get me a new hat in c ase we stay at a reception dinner, and if it ain't too hot I shall w a wear my jacket, n and if it is I'll go only in my dress, and every one of you girlscout officers must wear your best uniform dresses and hats,vfor we don't want Angelinia Aronburg to think we are hookwoods."

T here was no danger of any of the girl or boyscouts wearing anyt hing but their best uniforms , and for the next three or four hours they busied themselves with thinking h what was most becoming to them, deciding at last upon not lavander but deep purple small summer jackets attatched to their summer dresses with blue sashs with their long lace scarfs fashioned with red roses, their magnificent colored heart shaped hats on top of which waspurple, with a cream colored feathers drooping down the backs.T hie they thought would be altogether

au fait" and sure to impress Angelinia Aronburg with the fact t hat they sure know how to recieve her.Anna e herself was getting quite interested in Angelinia Aronburg since she learned she was the cousin of Violet and her sisters with whom she meant to stand well.such was the state of affairs on the evening when a telegraph ~~stirt~~ report announced that general Aronburgs army had reached N ~~ew~~York C ham berlanc t hat afternoon(not soon) a piece of news indeed which t hough expected, t hrew T imothy Groveton, Jean and indeed everybody in camp into a st ate of great e excitement.T he news also stated a portion of Manleys army had been stationed t here, and tried to give his van guard some grand resistance proving Manleys army was not afraid of him, and that he could not advance furt her for a time as he was meeting with some very sev ere resistance.
He had not expected to find Manley in his way and Manley was not afraid of no
Christian general on earth for facts.
Fortunately however by the next day, everyt hing at the building was in readiness for t he two and violet and her sisters said to they would occupy it when Fomrod ret urned but to let Angelinia Aronburg t~ ke charge of the structure untilll they came.The rooms were all in perfect order, a responsible and respectable woman in the person of a Mrs Lupe, had been found for housekeeper, and with her daughter Gladys Wenthworth in stalled in the kitchen as an excellent cook.
Seven beautiful horses, with a large handsome carriage to match, were standing in the stable, awaiting t h e approval of violet , and her sisters, while in another big barn seven milk white st eeds, t all and large, were pawing and champing, as if impatient for the coming of their mistresses they were to carry so grandly and high. chained in their kennel to keep them from running away from the dog home they had not yet forgotten, were two noble N ew Foundland Dogs, which Jean had bought at a great price in west Chamberlane, and whose names were King and Queen.Could Jean or Anna have had their way, they would have bought a litter of puppies too for t he Princesses,, but Tim interfered, insisting that two dogs like King and Queenie, was enough to satisfy ay little women.
And if they did want puppies then they could notify him and he would get them.
So Jean and Anna gave t hem up, but brought over T iger, Spr e Spreckle and the four Maltas, and these were tolerably well domesticated, and had taken very kindly t o the big chair which st ood near the window of the Princesses big bedroom.The blue silk quilts had been found within the christian lines, the quarter mast er Se rgeant having had them and gave them free, and Mildred Maxwell had sent over the big "Crazy quilts" which t he mother of violet and her sisters had pieced when t en years old.This Mrs Lupe had promised fait hfully t o put on the ir beds, and t o call the young little Princesses attention to them as their mothers handiwork, though the old lady wondered how violet and her sisters looked as she had never seen them before or unfortunataly had not heard very much about them as she paid no attention to news reports and papers or conversat ions but but wherever she was,was a very busy good woman. And so all things were ready ra ready, and T he three Scunger girlscouts were in full attire, when T im came with the news that the army had arived at Chamberlane, t hat a batt le was raging t here as Manley was trying t o ch e k check his advance, but that in all probability inspite of the battle they soon should get a wireless telegram from either general Aronburg or Angelinia Aronburg herself.

This was early in the morning, and as the hours crept on, Tim and Jack themselves hovered about t he military t elegraph office untill at last the message came flashing along the wires which had not been disrub disrupted by either batt le or foe, and the operator wrote it down, and with a white scared face, handed it to T imothy Groveton, who with a whiter face an and a look of horror in his eyes, read the following;

"Chamberlane Decem ber the 12t h 1913-
"To Friend CaptianTimothy Groveton;
"George Zimmerman our beloved boyscout is dead.He died when a signal station he was on was demolished by an enemy shell.He was my companion and now I am allalone.But everybody is so kind, and everything has been done, and as general Aronburg isn't com coming untill he can push on I have taken the t en o clo k open war route train for Ophelia and the train is loaded with girl and boy scouts as a protecting escort .We have poor dead George on the train.Please meet us at the Ophelia Station, and don't take George to the headquarters.I and Violet and her sisters could not bear to have him there dead.We should see him always, and hate the place forever, so bury him at once with S Solemn Mass rites. General Aronburg says that will be better.I t rust everyt hing to you as you are one of the guardians of the Vivian Girls.

Angelinia Aronburg."

Indeed general Concentinia Aronburg ar y had been advancing t ward C yamberla
Chamberlane with t he purpose to mv move due southweatward and oin general Vivianis at , Ophelia and join general Vivianis at Ophelia but one Glandelinian general was not afraid of him and not only t hat but general John Manley hearing of his advance, and kn owing from scouts that Concentinian Aronburg planned to join Vivianis, not only gradually t hrew himself in the way of his advance, but attacked him fiercely at Chamberlane causing not a mere small conflict but a general batt le nf wild character to rage. The attack was delivered wit h inconceivable violence. The batt le had lasted quite a number of hours before Angelinia Aronburg had sent any special message, and one small hill on the christian side was crowded with anxious christian boy and girlscouts, many straining their eyes to catch t he first glimpse of signs of t he enemy being repulsed, and to others to whom such a battle was t h e first and strangest sight they had ever seen were looking eagerly from side to side, at the battle scene so near now and yet so awe inspiring to them.T hey saw a immensely long wave of Glandelinian soldiery the shapes of their uniforms and the square shaped hats making a fants fantastic sight as they rushed forward to the onslaught , and yelling as so many demons.
StStanding apart from the rest, watching the scene, with her hands locked tight ly t ogether, her head thrown back, and a long blue ribbon twisted around her heart shaped girlscout hat, was a young girl spy or girlscout general, with a
have at that distance mistaken her for a child of eight, but when s e turned more fully t ward you, you would have seen that she was a girl of ten summers or more, whose face any one would look at once, and twice, and then surely come back again t o restudy it, and wonder what there was in it o to fascinate and charm you so.She was nearly as beautiful as Joice one of the Vivian Girls, and if you looked not closely enough she did resemble Joice Vivian somewhat.But her complexion was darker, and her features were somewhat severe and stern.
Her cheeks had lost something of their roundness during the time she was away, which though made at this time had been been altogether smooth and free from storm.During t he first three days of general Concentinian Aronburgs advance south ward from Galverine, Angelinia Aronburg because probably of the heat had been very sick, and George Peters, her attendant, had soon to it she made the rest of the trip in on e of the cooler covered wagons, and even t o keep low the temperature in the wagon, had placed ice around the edges, and pans to catch the water and a fan going in t here but not close enough so that she would catch the draught.
And even George Zimmerman watched and cared for her as if she had been a queen.Now she was all right again, and here at Chamberlane when the enemy made t he attack upon Concentinian Aronburg, and the great gray waves of assault try tried to break over t he hastily constructed christian positions, and she remained with the child scouts watching t he scene, and refused to return to a safer spot, and said she liked to watch the Glandelinian attacks in a fury because it made her think of herself in some of her moods, he stayed by her, and to sheild her from t he glare of the sun by holding her parasol over her h ead, untill a cannon shot aimed t hat way by a Glandelinian gunner took it from him and turn ing it wrong side out, carried it far a cross the fields, where it seemed to go like a feather through the air, while Angelinia Aronburg laughed merrilyto see it sail off so swiftly untill it was lost to sight.Even t hat peril did not cause her to move from that spot.Others than George Zimmerman was interested in, and kind to the little Abbieann ian girlscout leader, whose Uncle had kept his promise to move southward so she could again be with her girl and boyscout friends.It was whispered that he was t he greatest christian general ever known , and t hat Angelinia Aronburg was his neice, and a danger to t he vast Glandelinian armies, and as such things go for a good deal within any big christian army, as well as elsewhere, this of itself was sufficient to interest everybody in her, who as soon as she was able after recovering from her illness danced about the Company Streets of t he camp like t he merry light hearted creature she was, now jabbering with George in his own native tonbu tongue for she knew German, and sometimes holding fierce altercat ions against tthe enemy, now watching t he soldiers at their drill, drilling child scouts herself, and not unfrequently joining her own clear bird like voice in the songs they sung, and again amusing and consoling fretful child refugee, whose tired mother blessed h er for the respite, and thought h er the sweetest type of girlhood she had ever seen.Every body liked her(not Glandelinians though), everybody called her a half twin in features to one of the Vivian Girls, called her beautiful, she was so bright and sparkling with t he rich warm color in her cheeks, her pretty litt le mouth always breaking out in exclamat ions of surprise or burst s of laughter, her long eye lashes and heavy golden brows, her long golden wavy hair, which in some lights had in it a tinge of whit e fire as if it had been formed from the threads of a fiery sword, and more than all, her large dark blue brilliant and yet fiery eyes which flashed upon you accasuddenly and sowswiftly as almost to blind and bewilder you, and if you knew her not make you afraid of her with their bright neas.Taken as a whole Angelinia Aronburg was a girl who once seen, could never be forgotten she was so sunny so sweet, and yet wilful against the enemy, and piquant and charming in every way, and all the christian generals of Concentinian Aronburgs staff, who were mostly middle aged men, petted and admired, and sympathized with her, later during t he battle when the trace of tears in e her beautiful eyes she came from George Zimmermons bedside, and report ed him no better aft er he had been seriously injured from a fall when t he signal station he was on was demolished by a shrapnell.For hours since his in ury gangerene had sent in, his health had been failing, and yet bot h he and Angelinia had hoped by being placed on a cot on t he outside in t he c ooler breezes would restore him somewhat, but it t urned out t hat the wood was mortal and he was growing rapidly worse, though as yet there was no shadow of fear in Angelinia's heart;she was only sad and sorry for him, and staid with him whever her boyscout friend would let her.Generally however he would send h er away after a few passionate hugs and kisses, and inquiri es as to how he was feeling.She must try and learn all the details of t he enemys attack she c n con he said, for he wanted gen eral Manley t o learn t hat he could not lick general Aronburg even if he may be able to lick others.And too he wanted h er to be bright and fresh and full of spirits, when she presented herself to her friends in general Vivianias army.

"Not that you have not many friends there,"he said smiling a little bittorly."It has been so many days, and so much has happened, since I first left home and by an accident in the Abbiesnn ian flood became a boyscout, that I doubt if any of my relatives remember or care for me, but I hope they will not forget me, perhaps for the sake of you Miss Aronburg"and he stroked fondly the long silken golden curls which Angelinia Aronburg wore losely around her splendid litt le head and looked lovelingly into the eyes meeting his so tenderly.T hen e sent her away, and t urning in his narrow berth or cot, paid no attention to the sound of battle, but thought again, as he had t hought, and t hought many times, of all the sin and evil doing, Glandelinia had heaped upon herself and other nat ions since the day Glandelinia became into x existance according to what he had learned in Geographies and gistories.Many and terribly bitter were the thoughts crowding his brain, and filling him with mi sgivings as to what might happen next, as he lay there, and kn ew that with each sound of t he battle, he was nearing the home, where angels would be welcoming him.

"but once there"he said to himself"Once in Heaven,I'll begin life anew.I'll probable be face to fac e with God, and will beg his intercession for the pernament safty of all my friends no what or matter who they are or what they do, and especially the dear Vivian Girls---oh Angelin ia Aronburg my friend there is so much I would like to make Glandelinia undo for you and them---foy for you and t hem to whom the greatest w ong wrong of all next to our Blessed Lord and His Mother has been done, and you and they alw always conscious of it and doing nothing for redress.Would you dare to face the fury of Glandelinia as you might do if you knew all the dark past of that wicked nation as I do and learned of it!Oh my dearest friends, t he poor Vivian Girls"and covering his face with his hands the mortally wounded boy sobbed aloud.

"If I live and survive after all"was now the burden of his thoughts, but could he live, he asked himself, as hour by hourhe felt he was growing weaker, and counted the rapid heart beats and saw the streaks of blood upon the napkin his faithful boyscout friend held to his lips after a dreadful fit of coughing.For the sake of serving the cause his desire for life wasstronger within him now than it had been for years; but the candle was burned out, there was only the snuff remaining, and when at last the scent of battle smoke was borne to him and he heard the enemy was getting t he worse of it, and Angelinia came rushing up to t all him General Aronburg was pushing a vigorous and violent counter attack and making good progress, andshe had seen a Glandelinian wave of attack literally destroyed, he knew the hand of death was on him, and that the only good shore he should ever reach would be the boundless shore of eternity, which was looming up so bright before him and making him havi have an ardent desire to get there if he couldn't really live any longer To see God was his greatest desire.But he would let Angelinia Aronburg be ha py as long as possible, and so he sent her from him and then with a low moan he cried;

"Oh pity them, and her oh Blessed Lord.T hey have so much need to be protected. Increase the angels possessing them"

In his gayest most reckless milita ry moods, he had always prayed, he had said that Violet and hersisters were the prett iest little girls he had ever seen anywhere but they were ugly in comparison to the beauty of God, that the Bible was his greatest t reasure and if he ever died he wished it buried with him, and nowswith a Holy death measuring his life by heart beats, he begged the God he loved only for the po protection of his dearest friends, not a thought for him self, he had nothing with which to sting his own conscience though he was a Foriegn boy and German, and the first prayer uttered from his white lips were always for either Angelinia Aronburg, Violet and her sisters and friends.Oh how many and great were the terrible experiences which suffered by the brave heroines came back to him, as he thought of their hard sad lives, and the great sins Gla ndelinians were guilty of who had done this t o t hem.Remembering his own mother, dead so long ago in Germany, his father too, whose last words to him had been a blessing and also telling him always to be a good brave boy, and the beautiful little sister he had had, whom he had loved with a love so impetuous as to feel seperation from her a deadly curse, only t o see her swept away to her death in t he Abbiesnn flood, l and left only posionous remembrance, where the thought of her smiling face had been.How gent le, patient and good she was, forgiving everything she had suffered, and how bus l barely she had gone to her death in that flood, and he unable to even save her.

"Oh Margaret, Margaret,"he sobbed his hands over his eyes"I am so sorry such a disaster happened and I un able to do anything, and if I only could make Glandelinia undo the past I would.If you meet me in Heaven dear sister help me intercede for Violet and her sisters and save them from harm."

Then as another phantom, darker and more terrible than all the others flitted before his mind, he shivered as if with a chill, while the great drops of sweat came out upon his forehead, and the palms of his hands which he clasped so tightly together, were dripping with perspiration.And while he lay there alone suffering this torment of horror, he could hear the rapid movements of large bodies of troops, the receding sound of battle, and the excited crowd of non - combatants from various towns watching for the result and who had come from afar to see the battle.And Angelinia Aronburg he knew was with them looking eagerly upon t he new scene.

"Probably a Christian victory starting"he murmured"I must see it again"and regardless of consequences, he got out of his cot, and tottering t o his window of t he house on a high hill looked out upon the battle field, and saw int he distance a long surge of Gladelinians retreating swiftly tward a hedge of woods, long walls of smoke that showed artillery in action, advancing christian troops and other activities of the battle which had grown so much since he last looked upon it on that ill fated signal station.But t he exertion was too great for him and dizzy and faint, he crept back to his cot, where he lay unconscious for a few moments ;then rousing himself, and alarmed by the terrible feeling stealing over him so fast, he called aloud for Angelinia Aronburg.The call was heard by one of the boyscouts, who were never far away, and who came at once, greatly alarmed by thepallor in the boyscouts face, and the flecks of blood upon the lips and chin. T o go for and find Angelinia Aronburg was t he work of an instant , and like a frightened deer, she came to the place and entered the room where George lay, and in e her impet iousity almost threw herself upon him.But he motioned her back, and whispered;

"Not so close, you take my breath away.Henry"he added faintly to t he boyscout who had summoned "Gert rude", andwho had start ed for the physician"Don't go for him it is too late now.I am dying nothing can help me, and I must not be disturbed. I must be alone with Miss Aronburg.Stand outside till I call."

T he frightened boyscout obeyed, and then Angelinia was alone with her beloved dying boyscout friend.She knew he was dying, but the awful suddenness stunn ed her so completely that she could only gaze at him in a su stupified kind of way as his eyes were fixed so earnestly upon her.

"Litt le Angelinia"using the pet name he always gave her"Kneel down beside me and hold my hand in yours while I tell you something I ought to have told you long ago but did not have the opportunity.."

She obeyed, and covering his cold hands with kisses whimpered;

"Yes dear I am waiting."

But if he heard he did not answer at once, and when at last he spoke it was with great difficulty, and like one who labors for breath.His mind too seemed to be wance wandering and he said;

"I can't tell now but if it ever comes to you and I pray Dear God it does, promise you'll guard Violet and her sisters more and more from harm.You of all persons can do it.You are dangerous to the enemy.Manley fears you exceedingly.I have loved you so much my darling, oh my darling girlscout friend, promise while I can hear you."

"Yes George dear I promise"Angelinia replied, knowl knowing nothin g to what she pledged herself, thinking not hing except of the white face on the pillow, where the sign of a Holy death was written.

"Angelinia are you here!" the voice said again, and she replied"Yes George"while he continued"I meant to have told you yest erday, but cannot now I am too weak.It is too late, forever too late.Oh Angelinia- or Margaret guide them from harm."

"Is it of your dead sister you really wished to tell me!""Gwrtrude"aksed bending forward eagerly, and fixing her great blue eyes upon him.

"My sister-Angelinia---my sister .Yes--no-don't speak that name aloud.I've left her body in t h e flood, couldn't resu rescue her or do a thing.T hat is why I was going home by means of the small raft, which your ship destroyed--to get away from the awful scene and ---if---- Angelinia where are you.I can't see you Angelinia.You are surely here?You are listening!"

"Yes, yes George dear, I am here, and listening"and the little girls rigid face, and wide open eyes showed how intently she was listening.

"Yes Angelinia dear, that's right , listen so close that nobody else can hear.We are all alone."!"

"Yes George dear all alone, only the boyscout outside.What is it George?What are you going to tell me.!"

T here was silent silence for a moment, while George regarded Gertrude fic fixedly, and with an expression in his eyes, which made her uneasy, andhalf av afraid of him.

"What is it!"he said at last."I don't know, it comes and goes as my sister did.Ah now I have it,"An gelinia remember how I loved you, and if you ever meet your mother, remember it was my fault , and do not blame her too much."

"Oh poor George, his mind is wandering "Angelinia thought"but she said to him soothingly"My mother is dead long ago I believe.She died long ago when I was born."

Again the eyes regarded her wistfully, as the dying ne boy replied;

"Yes I know but she's here, or she was over there in the corner just now and my sister too beckoning me to come.Oh Angelinia do t he torments of the lost begin before they die.I've seen so much of it amon gest Glandelinians and ther are lost.It's too late now they cannot repent.I cannot think how it was or t ell you if I could."

He was quiet for a moment, and seemed to be himself again and his hands caressed the shinig shining golden air of the little head bowed down so near him.

"Too late Angelinia dea e dear. I ought to have told you before, but I was forced by untimely circumstances to put it off, and now sh when you reach ageneral Vivianias army, and when t hey claim you as their own, accept it , try to lead the enemys of the Vivian Girl Princesses into disaster if you cannot reform them and be pleased with the new friends you'll have there.General vivianis is very different from Viviannanna.Trust T imothy Groveton;he is my friend.He comes of a good race.Tell him everything.Go to him for everything necessary, but don't t rouble any one when you can he, help yourself.Don't cry before people and friends an for it bothers and distresses them.But always as you were a brave little girl; learn to be a great guardian of them as you sure know how to c are for yourself. Govern your tempetwhich you have against the Glandelinians.Be patient with your friendsp--and Angelinia dear---where are you---?It's getting so dark.I can't see you anywhere, nor feel you eit her.Have you left me too? and Margaret and your mother is gone now."

"No, no I m here"Angelinia cried, in an agony of fear, and the boy continued "Remember when it comes to you, as it may, that you promised to be a good protector of violet and her sisters."

"Yes George dear.I don't know what you really mean, but if I ever do,I'll guard against everything wrong against them----everyt hing and love you just the same, forever, and forever."Angelinia said to him and the cold clammy hands upon her h ead pressed harder in t oken that he had heard.But that was the only response for a moment, when he said again, and this time in a whisper, with heavy labored breath;

"One thing more comes to my mind.T here will be lett ers for me--some on boyscout business, and possibly some others, and you must let no one see them if there is anything in them the world ought not to know, especially gin Glandelinia. Promise Angelinia."

"I promise Angelinia said, and frightened at the strange look in his face and his evident eagerness fob $\hat{\text{B}}\ddot{\text{u}}\text{tr}\hat{\text{o}}\text{p}$$ for her reply.

"God bless you darling friend.Keep your promise and try to find---"

He didn't say what or whom but lay ne perfectly quiet, while some distance away the trampling of countless numbers of feet was more hurried, and the sound of batt le more noisy, and the house itself gave a litti little lurch as if it was a ship hitt ing against something which resisted its force and set it to rocking while there came a shocking thunderous reverbrating report .It was a high explosive close by.T he motion threw Angelinia backwards, and when she gathered herself up and turned tward the white face upon the pillow, she uttered a wild cry---

"Oh, Henry, oh Henry come quickly poor George my dearest friend is dead."and tottering toard the door, she fell heavily against a tall boyscout officer just entering the roo m.He had come in t o report the news that the enemy was waverin wavering, had seen the little boyscout speak hurriedly to the little girl outside had seen her dart away, and fancied she cast a fright ened look at him.He stood appalled in t he awful presence of death.Now both refugees, soldiers and girlscouts and boyscouts and officers viewed with each other in their care for and attention tward this little girlscout general, whose best boyscout friend lay dead on his cot hei having that morning recieved the Last Sacraments.Understandinghut little of the Abbicann ian 's language, and terrified half out of his wits by the sight of death one of the boyscouts, was almost worse than useless, and could do nothing but crouch at Angelinia's feet and holding her handsin is his gaze into her face in dub dumb despair, as if asking what to do next.

"T errible things to happen to t hese good children."said a capt ian looking angrily in t he direction of the Glandelinians"We must take it in hand ourselves" and he did take it in a hand, and saw that Angelinia was made comfortable in general Aronburgs headquarters, and that the boy was made ready for a Christian Catholic burial.

"When asked if she had friends and relatives expecting her, she re lied as best as she could;

"No I have no relatives, except Concentinian Aronburg, and Violet and her sisters are my dearest friends.There's plenty of them, that is consolation, but the whole of them will be also broken because he was our dearest friend.There's only Francis Greene now , Penrod, and Timothy Groveton, Penrods axting guardian.I am to trust him with everything, but oh how can I tell him his friend George is dead."

"Don't take it so hard please Miss Aronburg"said the Captian"Be cheerful--"

"I can't I can't he was a good friend and he's gone.As soon as I get a friend who loves me immensely they're gone.Oh those glandelinians I'll---"and he became almost afraid of her for her eyes flashed fiercely, her face looked flus ed and dangerous and she was worked up into a fitful storm.however later when she had been cooled down, and when something was said to her of telegraphing to T imothy Groveton t o come for her she answered promptly ; through her tears "No, Timothy Groveton must stay by Penrods sisters, and Penrod said I was not to do t hat, and George too.I am afraid of nothin g and can go alone.I have traveled a great deal, and when George was injured yesterday, and others could not understand I talked to the guards and the porters.I know what to do and I'm going to dovit."

And on t he pale tear stained face t here was a resolute self reliant look which in part borne of this terrible shock, and partly the habit of Angelinias military life.

"I will telegraph immediately"she added"You see us to the right train, and I can do the rest, and this regiment of boy and girlscouts shall accompany me on the train armed to the tooth.I can do the rest.I can find the way as there is no part of this country I don't know.I've st udied my geography you know." Sice leaving the army to be entrained she had not shed a tear in the presence of anyone, but the anguish in er dry bright eyes, and t he drawn set look about her mouth told how hard it was for her to force back the wild cry which was constantly forcing itself to her lips.George Zimmerman to whom in life her slightest wish had been granted, and to whom she had favored, and t o her he had said;"Be a brave girl, and don't trouble people nor cry over my loss if you can help it"andow his wish was a law to her his superior, which she would obey if she broke her heart in doing it.She did not seem at all now like the airy merry hearted laughing little girl, she had been with in general Aronburgs army, but like a little girl with a strong haughty womans will, and a soldiers capacity to act.That she could go t o general Vivianias army she was perfectly sure, and not only did she convince the captian of it, and said she liked to see any glandelinians try to st op her, she then with a voice that shook a little added;"Timothy Groveton will meet me of course, at t he station, and some others pae perhaps.I know all t he ways of t his Galverinian States.T hey wit h solemn High Mass and Military rites due to a hero t must bury him at once."

"Naturally then t hey will take your poor dead boy friend to your new headquarters for a day or two, and then give him a grand funeral with;;;

"T hey won't t hey shant it is my orders and it'll b e be obeyed"interrupted Angelinia Aronburg her eyes blazing with determination."I won't have a grand funeral, when there is so much dangerous battles going on so quickly one after another.Neither will I have him carried to not my headquarters but that of the Princesses for it was selected for them by me and Uncle not for myself even though I and he reside there.I and they could not bear to see him there dead, and God knows they've suffered enough and unjustly.We should hate the place forever and see him everywhere.He was like a dear darling brother to me, and therefore he is mine to do with him as I like.I'm going t o have a great Solemn Burial at High Mass.Violet and her sisters gave me co mission to be my own mistress in all thin go good, and I shall t elep telegraph Timothy Groveton right away, that George must be buried from t he station, and I know he will do it."

She was very decided and imperious, and the capt ian let her just ly have her way for she knew best, and sent off for her immediately the long telegram which he had sadly written and almost stained withher tears, regardless of expane expense and which so startled the army of Vivianis and changed their plans so summarily.

Timothy Groveton to whom the t elegraph was addressed, read it first, feeling as if t he ground was moving from under his feet , and leaving a chasm he did not know how to span and yet to go falling in to it.

"What is it?"Jean asked, as she saw how white Tim grew, and how the hand which held t he t elegram shook.

"I can't explain, read for yourself."T im said, passing the paper t o T im t o handing the paper to Jean, to whose eyes the hot tears sprang quickly, and whose heart went out to the desolate young girlscout leader, wit with her dead friend beside her.

"If I had known it before I would have gone to her with a party of my girl and boyscouts"she said"But it's too late now for that.All we can do is to make it as easy for our leader as possible.George Zimmermon my friend gone.Tim dear you see to the grave in the nearest lot, and that the army hearst is at the station to meet the body, and I'll notify my sisters and others not to go on with the big dinner they are to get up, and I'll tell sistor Min that her best uniform will not be needed to day."

Shocked and sad and as horrified as she was, T im could not refrain or Jean rather could not refrain from a little pleasantry at the expense of the dress and hat her bigger sisters were intending to wear at the reception.T hat they should accompany their good girlscout leader home to dinner she did not for a moment doubt, and her best uniform and hat were ready, when Jean came with the news, which so shocked her for a moment that she did not speak and when at last she found her voice her first remark was wholly characti charas characteristic an d like her.

"George Zimmermon dead. We got to at op t hat .None of our members must here after be allowed to go up on signal stations.It 's too dangerous its sucide.Wish we could get Starring for redress of our loss.Would serve him right the stru stuck up Glandelinian boyscout .I am sorry for poor Angelinia Aronburg but it is too much loss for us all, and we will give t he boy a big funeral just to show the enemy something."

But T im who also came explain ed that George was to be buried from the railroad station of Ophelia, as it was Angelinia's command, as she would not have th e body ta en to the new headquarters.

"She may have the right idea"said Minnie thinking to herself that this disast er was too much for them all.T hen her eyes fell upon her new uniform c oat and dress and her thoughts t ook up another chan nel.Out of respect for Angelinia Aronburg, who of course would be g clad in the deepest mourning, all t he boy and girlscouts must of course wear bl black when they go to meet her. T he news of George's death had preceded Minn ie however, and everybody was ordered to wear black un iforms, and the entire encampment was ransacked after dark colored uniforms and hats, for everybody were to go up on a l slow funeral march to the station, and in o heart t hey were all really as sorry and miserable as t he deepest black could make them.Tom Henderson of whom scarcely anything had been said and who was a plain quiethoyscout, and as obstinate in some matt ers as a mule, declared t hat it was a great insult from the enemy by killing one of the best boyscouts in the christian army.

"George Zimmermon did a lot for us since he came here, and was great to Violet and her sisters, and diesnt or shouldn't have gone after him now"he said."Why in the world don't somebody go and pop that Gerald Starring. Our good boyscouts get shot down ruthlessly and the Glandelinian ' ones always escape."

"This saying Anna Sanders in er heart thought a wise one.If possible she wasmore ashamed of this tragedy, t han of anyt hing that ever happened, and as she passed a Glandelinian intern ment camp tward home she gave the nearest prisoners a look that made them haughty and desperately bold as t hey were turn their faces in shame.She hoped that handsome st ylish uniformed T im would ride along with her.But when the carriage came around for the mourning party of officers, Tim was not in it, nor did the coachman know where the young boyscout leader was;his orders were to drive the little ladies to the station, and that was all he knew, andAn na believed T im was with Violet and her sisters, "Where he rightly belonged"she thought to herself.."He must be with them for he would not leave them alone too long with Penrod not home"she thought, as she took her seat t earfully wonderin g where Penrod was, for suppose something would happen to him.And while she thus t hought fearfully of Penrod, an d of the Orincoaaaa, and hoped Tim would be by them t o prot ect t hem, T im with t he perspiration standing in great drops upon his face, and with his cuffs pulled up from his shit e wrists, was working like a beaver in a large empty lot, which he had selected for t he grave, and finding it a perfect swamp of briers, and weeds.And standing near by watching him worl, and tears in their eyes were the Prine sesses.They wanted to work too but being in Penrods stead by his orders, he show d showed his aurthority and told them to "save their strength to get redress for Zimmermons death."

As Violet spoke of the woods T im answered;

"T his would never answer to let Angelinia tear her dress on the briers, nor Violet or her sisters sit her, and get t heir feet entangled in the woods.

Something must be done, althoughthere was but little time to do it, and he began to hunt about for some man t o help him, but no one was to be found.T im was very tired for he had been busy since t he arival of Gert rud e s telegram at his own headquarters, his friends and at t he newly selected headquarters for t he Princesses, where he filled t he ro'ms rooms with flowers brought from t he distant kn oll gardens and conservatory and with t he beautiful pond lilies which he went himself up up t he river to secure.The most of these he arranged in Ger trude Angelinas chamber, for there was both a great pity and sorrow in ' Tims heart for t he young girlscout leader whose home coming would be so sad. Of himself or how he would impress Gert rude he never but once t hought and t hat wh n chan cing to pass the mirror he caught sight of his boyscout hat, which was rather the worse for wear.

"I must certainly honor the approach or Angelinia Aronburgwith a new hat for t his is unpardonably shabby and she'll be scolding me"he thought "I'll do so as soon as I can.He had gone in quest of some laborer t o take with him to the grave yard, but there was none to be found, and so he had sent off with hoe and rake and spade, and sickle which he was able to carry all together himself alone, accompanied by Violet and her sisters who only watched him work because he wouldn't let them. work, and he waged so vigorious a warfare upon the weeds, grass and briers, that the lot though farvfrom being being presentable was soon greatly changed in its appearance.But T im had miscalculated the time, and while pruning the willows which drooped over t he spot prepared to be made for a grave, Violet who was standing close to him suddenly nudged him in the side wit h her finger saying- "Tim t here's the train"and as she finished the last word he suddenly heard in t he distance the whist le of the train not over a mile away.To drop his knife don his coat(not the goat) and wip the blood from a bramble scratch on his hand was the work of an instant, and then with Violet and her sisters quickly following he and they went flying acrosss the fields t he short est way tward the station racing with the locomotive so swift ly across t he meadows by the river side untilll it reached the station, where a crowd of soldiers and boy and girls 'outs were gathered, and all in black, and also where Minni e and Ann a also in their blac black, while Jean who had come up in t he carriage stood apart from t hem nervous and expectant, and wonderin g where T im could be, poor T im, tumbling over st one walls, bounding over fences, and leaping over dangerous bogs in his great haste to be there and almost getting caught in one, and on ly st opping to breathe when he rolled suddenly down a bank and was obliged to pick himself and his cap up, and wip e t he dirt, from his uniform trousers, and rub his grazed an kle.Then he went on , but the train had unloaded its freight living and dead and shot away into t he distance, leaving upon the platform a young girlscout chieftian, with a white sad face, and great bright blue eyes whic h flashed upon the staring c rowds glanc es of wonder and inquiry for all were strange to her here.It was an exquisite litt le figure in uniform, with grave in every movement, but t he crupe which all t he ot hers had expected to see upon it was not there.Indeed it had never occured to poor Gert rude that mournin g towns really needed to t ell of the bitter pain at her heart, and she wore the same girlscout chieftian uniform, which had done duty on the batt lefield she had just left , and which was beautiful and fitt ed her admirably, and was so unmistakably stylish and dignified, t hat Violetand her sisters began at once t o think how they should copy it for themselves and for all goilscout officils in general.Angelin ia Aronburgs heart shaped hat was the color of her dress, and twisted around its rim, and t ied under her chin was a long violet hat ribbon while her glov w gloves were of embroidered Linle thread, and came far up under the deep purple cuff, which was worn outside her closely fitting sleeve.All this Violet and her sisters noted at a single glande, as she did the dainty litt le riding boots, which t he short dress made so visible.

"She isn't in black Minnie you might have s a ved yourself and all of us that bother."Anna said under her breath, while many of the others were thinking of the same thing, and sighing regretfully for the thin cool uniforms left in their tent lockers, while they were sweating at every pore in their heavy black mourning un iforms. Violet and her sisters as is their honor were t he firs t t o press forward to welcome and embrace their cousin, just as Timothy Groveton stepped up to the young girlscout leader.The crowd of strange soldiers and slight ly confused and bewildered Gert rude, and for an in stant she had thought of nothing but the box which was being lifted from the car, and which one of the officers half crazed himself, was superintending, while he jabbered orders as what to be done.But when t he box was carefully put down and the train ad had started, she threw rapid glances around her in quest of the only one on whom she felt she had any claim, Timothy Groveton, the best friend she had and leader who was looking at her curiously, and thinking at first that she really must be on e of the Vivian Girls.But when in their rapid sweep, the dark blue eyes fell upon him and seemed t o rest there inquiringly he began t o change his mind, and as all t he rest including Violet and her sisters were evidently expecting him t o make the first advance, he walked up to her, and offering her his hand for Gert rude had never seen T im before though she had heard lots of him, he said in his well bred gentlemanly way;

"Missie General Angelinia Aronburg, I believe?"

In Gert rudes mind Tim had always seemed a boy of about fourt een or fifteen years of age, and she had no idea t hat this youn g good looking yot sin ister appearing boy stranger with the han dsome teeth and pleasant smile, and voice was he, so she withheld her hand from his offered one, and stepping back a little said in perfect English to Violet, but with a very pretty Abbi ssinian accent-

"Dear Prince ess,I am looking for your best friend an d guardian T imothy Groveton do you 'n know him."

"Yes"Violet said pleasantly"I know him well and no do my sisters."

"Is he here."?

"It was such a sweet musical voice, and had in it something so brave and yet appealing that T im felt his pulses quicken as they had never done before, as Violet merely pointed to tim and said smiling sweetly at him;

"T hat Angelinia is our best boyfriend and guardian Timothy Groveton of whom I and Penrod have written you so much about.He saved us even in the face of the seeming impossibilities only a few weeks ago and therefore he is our best boy friend."

The lightning glance which Gertrudes bright eyes flashed into his face almost blinded him, for Gertrudes eyes were very wonderful for their brilliancy and continually varying expression, and nobody not even Violet and her sisters ever stood unmoved before them.

"Captian Timothy Groveton.Are you really Tim Groveton the friend of the Darlings of the Nation?" she asked.

"Yes Miss Aronburg I am Timothy Groveton, their friend and guardian for Penrod" and again his hand was extended tward her.

Angelinia Aronburg had kept up her composure ever since the moment she knew George her best friend was dead, and had even tried to seem cheerful on the traij train, and had talked of the places they were passing to some people she knew on t he train, but at the sight of T imothy Groveton, the friend of the Vivian Girls and her uncles best friend and helper also whom she was to trust with everything, her forced calmness gave way, and she broke down entirely. To t he surprise of all as was her cust om to those she knew were friends of Violet and her sisters, for then she too was one she instead of taking his offered hand, threw her ar ms around his neck, leaned her head against his breast and sobbed like a heart broken child who had gotten a dreadful whipping from a cruel parent .

Indeed it was a very novel position in which Timothy Groveton found himself, with Violet and her sisters sailing at his-- a girlscout crying against his breast, with all those curious yet sympathic people looking on --and still he liked it, was not embrassed, for there was something very t ouchy i touching inthe way she clung with her arms around his neck, and he also embraced her tried to comfort her, but before he could think or know what t o do or say Joice Vivian herself stood close to him, and as Gert rude lifted her head a pair of beautiful little arms was thrown around her k neck, and a voice which her patrician ears detected at once as strangely angelic exclaimed;

"My dear Gert ude Angelina I and my sisters are so glad to see you back again. she embraced her in return and her sisters t oo, but when Timothy Groveton said"My dear Gertrude I am sorry to hear you lost your little sister Annie Aron burg by death she with a mos motion as swift an graceful as the motions of a kitten freed herself from Daisys embrac e, and the eyes in which t he tears were still shining blazed with aston ishment and indignation at hearing this.

"Sir I don't understand you, I have no sister by that name"she replied, drawing n earer to him and Violet and her sisters.Neither did T im understand, except what he had seen when Violet and her sisters had shen shown him what they found in the barn during the battle of Opholin, but he realized by her look, and so did Violet and her sisters that t he existance of such a litt le girl was wholly unkn won to Gert rude, who as if to breathe more more freely, untiled the bl purple ribbon, and taking it from her neck removed her hat, and stood like a hunted creature at bay, while T im not in nothing abashed raised his voice and told her all what Violet and her sisters had discovered in t hat barn, the lett er sent them by one of the Gemini.

Releasing her hand from Tims, Angelinia with dexterious rapidity, wrenched off her gloves, as if they like the ribbon were burdensome, and Violet and her sisters with a "pang of delight" saw how soft and small were their cousins han ds with the dimplesnat t he joints, and t he costly jewels shining upon them. Some others of the girlscout officers who felt quite overawed in the presenc e of this dignified girlscout general, did not speak but courtsied straight up and down, while Anna Sanders with real cordiality offered her hand and made a most profound bow as she said hon estly and sincerely;

"I a am glad Miss An gelinia Aronburg, to make your acquaintan ce, and you are very welcome to our army to take command."

"Thanks"murmured Angelinia in her soft Abbissanian accent and in er own tongue, just as Joice spoke again;

"And this is another friend of ours Fr Francis Ph llip and Jean Saunders." Jean saunders had come at last, and st ood looking at the new arival for though she heard much of Angelinia Aronburg it is hardly possible she hreally had ever seen her before.Time face itself was very red, with his recent exercise and a little soiled by the hands which had come in constant with fences and walls and bogs, then wiped the perspiration from it, so that he was not quite as juani ty and handsome as usual.At a glance he had seen ow how matters stood.Angelinia Aronburg t ook very kindly to the new comers, and she t ook her big hat from her head again and fanned herself furiously for she was very hot and she turned very swiftly to Tim and said;

"You Tim recieved my telegram?You will bury him straight from here!"

"Yes"he answered"And I believe everyt hing is ready.Shall I tak eyou to the carriage prepared for you by the Princesses.They'll ride with you."

"Yes, yes oh do"she replied, and placing her hat on o her head again, she took his arm and walked past the ot hers to t he carriage the door of whic h the coachman help open with as much respect as if she had been a little queen o too. She wanted Violet and her sisters to go in first but they bade her and Tim to do so and they would follow.Gertrude must have guessed this for she said rapidly and low to Tim;

"You go with me of course, and Violet, and her sisters, they're nearer to me than any one else in t he world."

"Why yes, only I think some of the ot her chief girlscouts will naturally expect to accompany you."Tim answered, and Gert rude said quickly ;

"If after Violet and her sisters gets in and t here is room they can .T hey can t his carriage not they.Timothy Groveton George Zimmerman said I was to ask you everyt hing. "Did they discover suc h t hings really in that barn?Tell me true."

T im could not repress a smile atthe way she put the qu st ion in er her vehemence in e her vehemence but he answered herfvery low and cautiously;

"T hey have the very pictures and the lett er in their old headquarters."Then as a sudden ide idea flashed upon him he contin ued;

"Did you not never have a sister by the name of Annie Aronburg?"

"No, never never."

"Tell me then please what is your sisters name?"

"Her name is e Annabel Aronburg, but where she is and what she is doing I don't t ell no one and dare anybody who knows to reveal it to any one."

He had her in t he carriage by this time, and her eyes were looking very straight into his as Violet and her sisters followed, and he began;

"If your sister is Ann abel Aronburg, then there is something mysterious about Radcliffe whom I met in Manla e Manleys army and I am afraid he is----"

He did not go on, for somet hing in the blue eyes stopped him suddenly, and warned him t hat if he realize knew something about An nabel Aronburg he under no conditions must reveal it not even to Violet and her sisters.She was like hot coal in that respect, what was hers she would defend, and when Jean Saunders appeared at the door and there was room Violet said;

"You alone now besides us and Tim can come in Jean.Sit by me please."

She was glad to have Jean in wit h her and her sisters, and t hen Jeans t wo sisters disposed of t hemselves on t he soft cushions in front, and Violet clenc ed her fists or hands h ard as she remembered t he dangerous mission t hat th y might have to fullfill because t he G mini c ould not do it.

T hey had spoken to Penrod, and he had said"No. T hey mustn't do it."

Violet then spoke of Penrods refusal on the matter, and Angelinia said;

"You and your dear sisters ought t not to try it.Such missions of that sort, when es ec especially we know nothing of the whereabouts of those so called generals and their murdering armies is not known."

"But we don't ask any one to go where we wouldn 't go ourselves."

Jean is said, while Angeline frowned, and Hettie looked on and shivered, and held her han ds t ightly t ogether, and thought how dreadful it all was, and how it could be that t he Gemini had so many members and the armies so many experienced spies and Federal Agents, and yet couldn't accomplish one third of what she and her sisters did.It seemed strange that conscious of the fact that Violet and her sisters did not be proud and think then that they deserved more credit for all t heir work, but instead they were not exultant nor proud and only really thought t he Federal Agents and detectives and spies and Gemini were not as clever as they were in spying or were a little timid of the enemy and were afraid to attempt anything so serious.Because of the looks of his clothing

Tim did not care to sit between t he cleanly dressed little girls, though he had to for t hey overlooked that and made him do it.Wh without exactly knowing why, Tim felt uncomfort able, nd embrassed; for this was thofirst time he had ever rode in a private Royal carriage with Violet and ther sisters and did not believe this almost Heavenly honor h was deserved by him, and yet when it came to his mind the experience his friends had recen tly though so dreadfulto to him then had never seem seemed so distasteful and horrible to them then as now, and he couldn't help admitting that he favored Penrods advice saying that the experience of finding out the mystery was too dangerous but that if they would do so so anyway he would accompany them.Violet and her sisters however in a slight haught y manner ignored what he said, and he did not like it at all for he knew by that and their manner and airs, that nothing no matter how risky could scare them.Yet it did not seem as if there was any dangerous adventure now for they were riding in their own Fathers handsome Royal Carriage, with the high stepping bays, without the aid of livery, and the coachman looked so respectable and dignified and yet so saintly upon the box that it seemed as if no war was ever raging.Yet in the distance could be heard the battle of Chamberlaine. He felt fearsome however and could not overlook the situation, he appeared shabby, and there was a soiled spot on t he knee of his pants, and his hands were cut with briers and dirty too and there was nothing airy or exquisite about him as he was the last to enter the carriage, and then when on the way the girls within sat silent and motionless.Never once did the little girls look from the carriage windows or show the slightest interest in anything around the m and when as they reached the village of Ophelia and turned into the main street, Minnie Sanders motioned with her hand to the right , and said;;

"There dear Prince ssses, and Minnie Aronburg--way down there under them popple trees is the headquarters where general Victoria is, and where General General Lurne was wounded"they never turned their heads or gave a sign that they heard, only Angelinas hands looked so tight ly together worked a little more nervously, and there was an involuntarily shrug of her little shoulders, which Anna Sanders saw and understood the feelings of the Vivian Girls and resented it hotly t hat they should have to live such sad suffering lives when both countries should be at peace and lthe little Princesses living hap ily like little girls of their kind should.Ann a hat ed the Glandelinians more to day than everghe even was a personal enemy because she had accounts to settle with Glandelinians. At last the silence became unbearable to Minnie, and she said to Angelinia Aronburg;

"T here's something mys mysterious as to who your mother is.I suppose you don't remember your mother."

"I do , but for military reasons for for my career, and my sisters, I'm not going into details about here.T oo many care communist s with the enemy."

"How old was you then Angelinia dear when your good dear mother died!"

"I can 't tell be ."

"Don't know how old you was when your mother died!That's curious.Did your Father never tell you!"

"No,"Angelinia said al oat with a strange smile"because both are living.I can't for military reasons and for our countrys cause tell you nothing about them now except he's a might y high general."

"Well now that's good news then.Won't you think t hat's singular, you the cousin---" Gert u Gert rdes Angelinia Aronburge sharp look halted Minn ie for she understood she was not to reveal whose cousin she was under any conditions, and Minn ie looked at Angelinia Aronburg and little ann a and then at Violet and her sisters, Angeline of whom seized the op ort unity to spit out her righteous venom against Gladelinia and said;

"Not sigular at all, because the enemy has n too many cars, and for the sake of our Country and Miss Aronburgs secrets to be kept if I was you Minnie I wouldn't bother her with troublesome questions, for what she keeps secret we wish her t o.We too know who her sister is, what she does, and so forth but we made a law that is so severe that God help the ones who knows and blabs it out.We wouldn't care, but such things will reach the ears of the foe, for I've also I hv have an idea that something can go wrong.T herefore we must not say enthing out of the way for I've an instic instinct that somebody is sec retly shadowing us to get information, and therefore we don't want any one hearing of who her mother and Father is for fear the wicked enemy who persecuted her as much as us, in the earlier days getting wind of it."

Angelinia Vivian spoke spitefully, for she was personal of her enmity of the Glandelinian cause too as well as her sisters, and had the satisfaction of seeing the big blue eyes unclose and flash just once in er favor, while Anna herself repl replied;

"A mysterous person shadowing us.I never heard of that before.Be you crazy Princess Angelinia.Do you suppose any foe could be shadowing us.Angelinia Aronburg dear do you hear that.Somebody shadowing us.If there is I'll keep my eyes open and kill him.I hope you can contraadit it."

Thus appealed to Angelinia Aronburg roused herself, and in a voice choaking with sobs said;

"Oh please don't worry yourself and us girls now, we have enough now without at darned mystery of that Ophelia Country barn--by and by we can talk with you dear-- but now--- oh father, father dear, why did you have to go so far away and leave us here all alone.,and poor George Zimmerman is dead.Oh Glandelinia.You're more vicious than a cobra.War on children, God, Nature and everything."

The sob was a wal wailing heart broken cry, and her little hands were upraised and beat the air in a paroxysm of nervous fury and pain for an instant, then dropped helplessly, and "Gertrude Angeline" never moved again until they turned into the cemetery, and stopped before the great lot.Then she started, and said hurriedly;

"What is it!Are we t here!!!!!"! "#%& ***(().

Minnie Saunders, who since Gert rudes pitiful outburst, had been crying softly to herself, wiped her eyes and said;

"Yes Darling, this is the selected place for the burial, and there's the place over there(pointing) where the outdoor Requim High Mass will be said or sung rather. Who ever owned this spot and your newly selected headquarters sure owned a magnificent spot, but it had been somehint ravag ed by t he batt le of Ophelia , but with work going on there will look batt er by and by.And you not batter stay in t he carriage girls.You can if you want t o."

"No,no oh no,We must be with poor George during t he Mass."Violet herself re replied, and opening the door herself, she was the first to spring out and to t he ground, and with the rest following Angelinia Aronburg was the first t o and at the open grave, where t hey all stood immovable while the hearse was directed on to t he small but beautifully constructed out door alter.After the mass Mass t he body was lowered into t he grave.Then poor Angelinia exclaimed;

"Oh therewere no flowers for him!Did no one bring a flower, when he loved them so much!"and her eyes flashed rebukingly upon those who had brought no flowers for the dead boy. But it was not their fault for nobody had the chance to get any the best flowers having been placed int o the new headquarters.T hen poor Gertrude was quiet again until!!! there was a creaking sound in the ropes and the coffin slipped a little, when with a cry of alarm not only Angelinia Aronburg but also Violet and her sisters sprang forward with a cry of alarm and bent over the grave as if to see that no harm was going t o the boy.T here however was danger in Angelinia Aronburge pest ion and that of violet and her sisters too, and T im went quickly to t hem, and said to them very gently;

" Please s stand furt her back girls, please or you'll get caught .T here is treacherous quicksand here, and the earth might crumble and let you into it."

T hey however were too sad and they t o look at him, but they stepped backwards a few paces, and did not move again until!!! the grave was filled--and their dead boy friend--he who had so longed to come here to his own friends and Companions was hidden forever from sight , with all the horrors of wars past him now.

Meanwhile T im with his unusual forethought , had interviewed Minnie and Ann a Saunders in an aside, and suggested to them t hat as Angelinia Aronburg would undoubt edly prefer going alone with Violet , and her sisters and him to their n ew home, every girl and boyscout should return to camp, and that all their officials and leaders should call on o her on t he following day.Minnie whose hea rt was however not upon going to t he new headquarters, would have refused to listen to t him arrangement were it not that her heavy mourning crape was weighing her down, and making her long for t he coolness of her own headquart ers, and her thin uniform.As it was(110 in the shade of for December))) she made no objection and when it was t ime to go, she went to Angelinia Aronburg and said;

"Tim your friend believes its best for you and the Vivian Girls to be alone the first night in your newly selected headquarters, and I'm sure he is right , so if you'll excuse all of us, we will come all us officers early to morrow and see you, and have a long talk about the myst ry, and also see to it that we will have lots of flowers for t he grave if we have to make a raid to get them.Penrod telegraphed he will be back by to night and see you too t o morrow.Good by and may our Dear Blessed Mother Lord bless you you dearest and bravest children on earth t earth."

While she was speaking Gertrude looked st eadily in her face, and something in its expression attracted more than anyt hing before.Minn ie had a good kind honest loving face, and G ertrudes lips quivered as she held out her hand and said;

"Thank you, it will be bett er so, but you and your two sisters Anna and Jean must accompany us.We want your companions.T he rest may be dismissed.T im dear"she added turn ing to the boyscout Capt ian ! "If you know where he went and is ret urning go and meet Penrod and if he will come bring him here as soon as you see him."

"I sure will willingly ."Said Tim.

From amongst t he others there started another up and down curtsey, and a stately bow from others when Jolne held up her hand and all was silent.

"Of course we're the "grand"daught ers of the Greatest Emperor ever lived" she said"But that does not mean you should courtesy to us.We are no better than any of you and in the eyes of God we are all alike and all equal. If you must shown us as something, then give us the milit ry salute when ever you pass us by but there is no n eed of n courtesy.If in fact for what you all did for us, we should be the ones to courtesy."

Everybody was surprised to hear this from a glorious little Abbicum ina Princess, and poor Ann a Saudere c ouldn't help giggling, and Ann a's turned up hat, cream feather, purple cash, and long beautiful thin uniform coat, Angelinda Aronburg noted a second time, and then they all walked to the carriage where Tim was waiting for them.

Tim was to escort Ann a herself home for she told Violet and her sisters she n eeded to and was assured, and therefore T im was to go with her, and then aft erwards to meet Penrod Penrod.

"Well we have seen the greatest and gr t n ight night.Now what do you think of Miss Angelinin Aronburg?"Ann asked him, when they left the cemetery, and turned into the high n highway.

"I have not yet seen enough of her yet to have an opinion"he said"Her con she appear herself.She is in great trouble.We must make every allowance for her."

"Yes of course and we need to have some others of our best boy or girlscouts shot do n shot down for the satisfaction of the darn sweiy."Ann replied.

"Good doings for us to see our best scouts go, happy outings.Joe Green killed while doing his duty, as a signal corps, Mildred Hatherton killed, George Zimmerman blotted out of our sight .For my part I hate Glandelinin.I know you'd stand up for her, and she wouldn't. But she and Violet and her sisters have the hardest knocks. I wish I could get hold of that boy Gerald Starring.Oh would I "love "him."and she fingered her automatic systematically.

T him was Ann a's favorite expression if she did not like Glade Glandelinian boyscouts, and she went on;

"If Violet and her sisters or Angelinin Aronburg had been the lowest people living, the Glandelinian suerdies c ould not have shown more contempt for them or done worse thing they did.Nobody knew it but I do, I spied a lot more, and Manley in jealous of superor Vivians position, and Gerald Starring in envious because Violet and her sisters are such great Prine esses. I know she had never heard of thatstrange Ophelia Born Hatters till to day, and I just wish you could have seen her when you asked about her two-gun sister by the name of Ann a Aronburg.But where were you T fatigue you I notice you.You do,n delayed us."

He explained where he had been and what he had done, and she couldn ndll

"You are n good thought ful boy, but you might have spared yourself the trouble and made some of t hese lazy good for nothing no account Glandelinian prisoners dig t he grave.I know never belong she'll thank you very warmly.But she just sure t hit me her head back and stayed outside in such an impertinent way, when we spoke of Penrods not allowing Violet and her sisters to go and solve that mystery, that I know she would have liked to have shot Manley down like a dog.I felt like saying to her that Manley came from the aristocracy of the In fernal regions, but he's too bad to have come from there.But she stuck out that her voice and eyes expressed I believe'n she is going to be dangerous to the Glandelinians now for sure.She loved George, we all do I'm sure we must do or ght hing we can for her, and Violet and her sisters in fact we girl and boyscouts have not been fierce enough to the enemy. Her great big staring eyes looked at me so that I thought she was a little celestial child who had lost her way to heaven , but I don,t say you and good Penrod can do n lot to make redress."

Tim did not care just then to discuss the matter with her for he too was sick and sand at heart for he had come to love George Zimmerman like a brother and now he was gone. The carriage soon stopped at the door of Ann a's tent, and saying he must go t o meet Penrod, the carriage therefore drove on leaving him standing by the tent with one of the other girlscouts who came out, and who said;

"Don't worry Master Tim.We'll all stand by you and the Royal little girls.Poor litt le Princesses and their g irl friend Gert rude, how I pity them alone in t hat great house, with George now dead in the grave yard, and others gone.But Angelinin Aronburg is a fiery girl and she can protect them while you're going for Penrox Penrod."

T here wer e tears in her eyes, and Tim felt a lump in his own throat as he walked rapidly away, repeating her words to himself;

"Poor Angelinin Aronburg and the poor Vivian Girls. But things sooner or later will take a turn."

T im was a litt le sore and a litt le disappointed..But nevert heless he had made a great impression upon Gert rude, yet everyt hing had turned out so differently from what he had hoped.He had expected to see Gert rude com raident and happy but he had been disapi disappointed.But too she was wholly different from his idea of her.She was taller than he had expected her to be, she was more far more beaut iful a little girl than he had expected, with pink and white complexion and golden hair, the same as the hair of the Princesses, and had he not known who she was to be he would have thought her an one of the Vivian Girls t hemselves come back to them after a long absence, and there was something indescribably bewitching and graceful in every t urn of her head, and motion of her body, while the clear bell like tones of her voice with its pretty accent rang sweet in unity in his ears.Tim had reached his own headquarters by this time, and had seen in the glass that his personal appearance was not as good as it might be. He had seen in the glass that his personal appearance was not as good as it might be.

"Heaven an d Earth"he said, as he examined himself in the mirror"I sure am a beaut.'ook at all that dirt upon my face, and that black spot upon my nose, and that blood stain under my eye, and to crown all I didn't put my new hat on. I look for all the world like a boy prize fighter.But I can't sure wear Penrod like this or he'll mistake me for an enemy my" and here the ludicrousness of the whole affair came over T im so forcibly that he burst in tot o a loud merry laugh, which was like thunder on that sultry day.It clearedthe atmosphere and Tim was himself again or would be aft er the long ride on horseback, which he determined to take on meeting Penro d.He planned himself up, put on clean uniform and calling Frank the military stable boy he bade him saddle his horse

Old St Johns, his riding horse and was soon galloping off at a furious rate going eastward first until he came to a fork in the road, where he turned and on in my had to ride toard the direction of the new headquarters for the Princesses.

H He had no intention of stopping there--no expectation of seeing any of the girl heroines unless Providence s should interfere.But Providence did not interfere and he saw no sign of human life about the house.The windows of Gert rudes chamber were open, and in one of them sat the big Cat Spackles evidently absorbed in something going on inside--the gambols of her four kitt ens perhaps.No carriages of any sort was in the yard, and he that night T im realized the driver must have rat urned t o the camp and that he missed reaching him by having made the circuit of what was called the Humble Evergreens.Tim rode on quite c heerfully for three or four miles, but could see no sign of Penrod.But a courier came and told Tim not to wait, Penrod had yet urned hours ahead of time and was in his headquarters within the lines.T herefore thinking the courier he turned and came back more slowly, reaching the new headquarters just as the sun was in its three oclock pose position in the skys at so late a December day.As before outside of the sound of distant battle everything was quiet, and noone can to be seen, until he came opposite a great lodge of rocks on the hillside higher up than the house itself, and surrounding a still better view of the surrounding country.This lodge wil which s evered quite a space of ground and was in some places as level as the floor, even n precentad in many other sections a broken and uneven appearance like a succession of little rooms.Here with the fading three oclock sunlight falling upon one of those spots sat eight little figures in girlscout or Prine ely uniforms but hatless, and every one with hands folded together either on the backs of their heads or lying upon t he lap any one of them reminding Tim of that picture of "Evangeline" sitting by the St Lawrence River and watching the distant boatch not t he goat) He was astonished for he saw Penrod, and he was sitting upon the rock but soon in sisters and Gertrude, and stretched at the feet of two of them was the new catch dog, with whom they had already made friends.The scene was indeed a very pretty picture for up on the hillside with t he western sky behind them, and T im without knowing whether he was seen or not was involuntarily going to ride toard them, when he saw from a distance a man on o horse suddenly gallop away at sight of him, and he hit him up with suspicion and vexation and suspicion and galloping rapidly after the disappearing figure.But it was too late he was gone out of sight.

"Hang the luck I believe Angelina is right .If that thing had been Lucifer I would not have been more surprised.He means if he can to cut us all.Well let the shadower try it.He'll find out that I'm as dangerous as Penrod."

Jack Sanders was surprised of seeing T im at by Groveton being alone with Violet and her sisters, Gertrude, and the t hree other girls, and listening to their conversation, but nevertheless so sad and disturbed were all of them, though Jack at T ims request was to see company them to t he new headquarters, and during the drive to it, t he little girls scarcely spoke t o him, but all of them sat with closed hands and closed eyes(many pies) some of the m them leaning back against the backs of the carriage seats, as motionless as if they had been dolls of that size.Once however when they were crossing the Aroburg Run River, Angelinia Aronburg herself looked out and said;

"Is not this the Aronburgs Run,"and being t old it was by Violet, she said to Violet in English;

"This is the river where general Concentinian Aronburg my uncle is going to concentrate the army when he get s here.It empties into the Mis-Hollester Run.You know you looked it out on the map for me."

Violet nodded, and Angelinia Aronburg, although she now kept her eyes open, did n ot speak again until t hey reached the very long hill which wound up to t he house.Then as she saw to her right a large lovely sheet of water sparkling in the st range reddish sunlight, she st arted up exclaiming;

"That must be the lake my uncle was talking monbout, whin h the general intends to surround tp prevent the enemy if he concentrates here from getting any water."

"Yaw"said Jack Sanders surprised at her knowledge of the neighborhood."Your Grand Mother Mrs Hattie Aronburg called it In o Lake St Johns I believe, but t o most of the people here it is merely"T he large Pond."

Angelinia Aronburg shrugged her should ers and asked;

"Isn't it not on the land I and the Prince owns will persons whom he occupy that house as our headquarters."

"Yes it belongs to the one who owns this estate."was t he reply, and she contin ued in a decisive t one."Then it is Lake St Johns."

T hey were half way up the long hill by this time and as one after another vi ws of t he surrounding country, greeted the ma r vellous gaze of the little girls, their delight knew no bounds, and even Angelin ia Aronburg forgetting for a mom nt the load of pain at her heart, she and even none of violet s sisters gave vent to their delight in true little girlish fashion, utt erin g littl exclamns of surprise and gladness, and Violet occasionally seized ng Jack by the shoulder, ad shaking him to make him see what she and her sisters were seeing, and appreciate it too.

"It's better than any other country in the world better than anything"she cried---

"I like Calvordin and her sister states" but Jack shook his head, and said the best country in t he world is Abbiemonia State which had been too far for the war yet to reach, wh en he said he wished they had stayed for their safty, adhering to his opinion in spite of all Violet or her sisters could say.So therefore there was some slight altercation going on bet ween them, and Gert rude was astonis ed to see the different expressions which passed in an instant over the faces of Violet and her sisters, and how beautiful they grew as the bright colors came and went, and t hey sparkled and they flashed, and laughed and frowned, and sho%k shook up up Jack all in the same breath .

They were driving up t o the b eautiful house by t him time, and the moment the carriage st opped, Violet was t he first t o spring to the ground, followed by her sisters and Angelinia Aronburg, and they began to look about them, Violet herself goat inviolting rapidly, and talking ner in Abbiemonian, and now in English, now t o her sisters, and Gert rude, n ow to Jack, who were almost as excited as she was.T he Chateau "as she and her sisters now called it, was so much larger an than they had ever supposed, and t he grounds were prototypes, and "Oh the flowers" t hey cried"And in December where did you get them", and they darted in among t hem like little humming birds, and Violet and her sisters filled t heir hands with t he flowers which a few of t hem pressed to their lips, and kissed as if they had been living t him gs, and sharers of their joy.

"T he flowers are t he commoneryvhere, and I and my l sisters love them so much and the world is so bright just like a pink ure, up here where it is so high -so near h eaven, and we ought tobe so happy."Violet exclaimed as she hopped about, then suddenly as a cloud passes over t he sun on an April day, a shadow came over Ge t Gertrudes face, and tears rolled down her ch eeks, as turning to Jack she said suddenly;

"What must you and the dear Vivian Girl Princesses think of me to be also so gay, and poor George dead over in that little graveyard.But it is one part of me and I can't help it, though all t he t ime I'm minding him so much, and theres a pi pain in my h eart and a lump in my throat t ill it feels as if it would burst.And at ill I must leave the brightness even t hough itsall dark where he lies alone.Oh George if only you t oo were here."

She was sobbing bitterly, and Violet , and her sisters were c rying too, even while they tried t o comfort her.Suddenly at something Jack said to her her sobbing ceased, and pushing the hours from her y eyes, she smiled bright ly at Violet and her sisters and said;

W"Forgive me dear Princesses for troubling you with anexhibition of my grief for I know all you have suffered too.I forget myself.Poor George told me not to cry before you and the child scout s, and I will not again if I can help it.Come let us go into t he house; it looks so cool and inviting i with the doors and windows open and t he muslin curtains b'o blowing in an and out, and the scent of the flowers everywhere around the house.T he world is very beautiful despite the wr war, and we must be happy and gay."

During this scene in t he grounds, t he house keeper Mrs Annie Roonie had been inspecting the little ladies from behind the kitchen blinds, and now as the party ent ered t he wide hall, she came forward t o meet the Princesses first in er her neat calico dress, and clean linin collar, with her hair combed smoothly back from her frank open brow(bow bow). h She knew she was there on trial subject t o the fas fancy of the Princesses, and as she liked the place, and was desirous of keeping it , she naturally felt some anxiety with regard to the impression she should make upon the Princesses, for good as they are they're very particular n and frightfully strict . However she was not kept long in suspense, for something in cher face attracted violet and her sisters at once, and Jen n ie who was in the lead and without the least hauteur in her manner went forward first with outstretched hands and said;;;

"Mrs Rooney I am so glad you are here,,I kn ow I and my sist rs and friends will like you, and you must like me and my sisters in all our moods for we are not always alike.We are all good but got different natures.And now please dear lady take those flowers, and put them in water for us.I don't wish any of any one to show us through t he house.We can find the way."Turn ing now to Jack Sanders she continued;

"I my sisters, Angelinia, and the others will find our way alone, and guess which is our room, and which was meant for him--"her v their lips began to quiver but they kept up bravely as Jennie went on,"You and T im will come andsee us to morrow, ed and we shall ask him many things concerning the mystery in the barn and show him the letter and pictures.George said t was to trust you and him who are our litt le brothers best friends and helpers and who have been so oh so fwonnnly good to us, and we will look upon you more as our super superior despite our rank and go to you and him for everything everyt hing.By and by though we'll decide whether we'll go on that sort of adventure or not.We'll take Ferrole and T im olvine.Father said we can go but he does not like us to take the chances.And now good bye untill t o morrow morn ing."

She gave him her hand, and he had no alternative but to go, although he would gladly have lingered longer so deeply lovable was he to t hese little girls and gladly indeed would they like him to stay, but he had so much duty that he could not do so if they asked him to.And t o all good people not Glandolinians these little girls before him had the nature of being gentle and soft, and a sweet as the flowers they loved so dearly, but against t he Glandolinians because what t hey had so much experien ced and seen in all the shocking horrors they were proud, haughty, cold, scornful and frightfully passionate in wild fury as these boys had seen. Jack indeed might have been more interested and lovable still had he seen them standing in the door waywith the great tears drop ig dropping from their long eye lashes as they sadly watched him going down the hill and felt that now indeed with Ferrol too gone away, t hey were alone in their lonelat ion with probably a new adventure coming for them.They wished he could have remained but they couldn't keep him from his duty and that must be performed.Supposed too something happened to him cannot while he was away.

"I like him too very much because he was Georges friend, and because he is such a gentlemanly boysaint though he was once a litt le awkward"said Gertrude, and then as she remembered from t he news she had read of what experiences Violet and her sisters had had within gun oral T ansorlinas away and of T imothy Grovetons rescue of them from Manley who inwardly shuddered, and felt a gr at grief and anger master ing her again.Just then Mrs Rooney appeared, asking if she could do anything for her while the Vivian Girls by now had gone out t o view the scene y, and if she would not like to go to her room.

"No,no,no--go away please."Angelinia Aronburg answered, almost angrily"I want nothing but to be left alone.I can find my way.I must work it out myself."

"So Mrs Rooney went back to t he kitchen .Gertrude An gelinas face was very white and as was usual when she was trying to repress her feelings, her hands were locked togeyjer t ogat her as she at ood looking about her at the trees heavy pine or evergreen t rees.Then with a little smothered cry,she turned quickly and ran up at nice t oo the room which she had h eard described so often, and which at a glance she knew was hers .

Oh how lovely it is, she cried, as she entered the room and took it all in as rapidly as any one else could have done."What perfect taste Timothy Grovetons and especially Jean must have."she cont inued. It is much more beautiful than t han I could have ever planned for, except t he purple ribbons which do not just now suit my t oo much tanned face.But I will retain them and oh, oh the cats are coming down from Violets and her sist rs rooms"she screamed as she caught sight of Mrs Nanna, who with her four children , was purring contentedly as t hey stopped and jumped into the cushioned arm chair by the window of Gert rudes room."Cats and kittens and I love them so much, and so do Violet and her sisters and T im has given them toht he little girls;he has remembered everything."and bounding across yhe the floor, Gert rude knelt by t he chair and buried her face in the soft fur of the kitten s, who true to their feline instincts, recognised in or her a friend, and began at once to put her neck and ears with their velvety paws, while the bigger cat feeling a little crowded slowly vacated the chair, and seated herself upon the window sill, where Tim saw her when he rode by. T he sight of the bea tiful cats carried Angelinia Aronburg back to t he few days ago, when for her sake general Aronburg had written his directions to Timothy Grovston and she herself had made suggestions for she knew how Violet , and her sisters liked their headqu headquarters.How c areful he had been indeed to remember a ll their likes and dislikes, and how pale and t ired he had looked after the latter had been fin ished, and how thoughtful she had been in refusing to let the general walk six blocks to the Mess Hall but had cooked his dinn er for him.And now his and her best friend George Zimmermon was dead, and though she of course wasn't she did for a time feel as if she was alone in a strange new world, with only Violet and her sisters, and her boy and girlscout troops for her friends, unless it was that her enemies the Glandelinians would try to wipe out all her friends and Violet,and her sisters too-- and then their plan poor foolish little girls, of intending to solve out a mystery of persons and against Glandelinian generals of whom she and they had never never heard, and against which proposition she rebelled with all the strong force of her laporious nature.She yet had not had time to consider the matter seriously, and wondered how people came to think a certain"Annie Aronburg"murdered by Glandelinians was h er dead sister, when Annabell Aronburg was her sister and personatin g as "Radcliffe."and who was too crafty, and too dangerous to be killed. In secret there was no boy or girl spy in all Abbi annia more clever shrewd or dangerous to the Glandelinians than Annabell and she was so fierce too that sh chad derived the nickname of the "Rattlesnake."

But now alon ealone in her own room(n ot the room) with the door shut between her and the war torn outside world it rose before her in all its magnitude, and for a t ime drove drove every other feeling from her. T he proud part of her nature that always rose up in defence of the Vivian Girls against their foes was in her, and battled fiercely against her efforts to stem the tide. Her t houghts then went back to Gerald Starring,, .Was it possible, she thought, that that loud voiced rascally Glandelinian boyscout , who often used such dreadful language, and whom she had o heard call Violet and her sisters names not fit to put even in a swear book, and th his companion Fredrick Dargar who to her looked like a harmaid ,and t he tall showily dressed Fred Lowden, with t he yellow and green plume, and the large round black loud hat(it yelled very loud) such as probably to her idea well dressed"devils "wear--were really still at their interfering work after he t he scare she t hought she and her followers recently gave them in that barn, and t hat they or at le least GwyGerald Starring had caused so much trouble between Violet and her sisters an d "Adeldefob", who she had always supposed to be a Glandelinian boyscout of more humane nature.Her uncle had said to her once; "T hough he is a Glandelinian from what I heard of many who had experiences with him "Adeldefob n ever was guilty of a single unmanly act , and I should be glad my dear N eice if he had been a christian boyscout instead of a Glandelinia for he though a foe is not a person al one, and is very gracious and gen tle of manner and his befriending t he Vivian Girls on t hat occasion according to t he n ews astonishes me still more with Manlrys report that t hey had captured him.I don't believe it, because surely Violet and her sisters would not show such an act of in gratitude."

It was true she had never been able to learn anything definite of her idea of this sort of boy, for general Concentinian aronburg when questioned, a had either answered eva evasively or not at all.but once he had said to her decidedly; "T here are reasons for the safty of our Nation and its cause, why I do not care to talk of the reported experiences of Violet and her sisters with Adeldefob and concerning Gerald Starring his rival, and t herefore it is quite well that you either remain in ignorance or try t o solve it out yourself.But nevertheless though he is a Glandelinian "Ad l Adeldefob" id everything that a perfect lad should be and had not Starring wounded him he could have prevented Manley from seizing them as he seems to have an unusl unusual ammount of aurthority in the Glandelinian armies and is a sort of Prince.You must be satisfied with that or try yourself to learn the details, and then be satisfied t hat you know so much, and don't seek for more knowledge t hat your friends and the Vivian Gir,s won't permit.whatever those Glandelinians are, t hey are nothin g to me they can be nothing to you. Adeldefob may be courteous as he was to the Vivian Girls, but in ot her ways he's as dan gerous to others as Penrod is to t he enemy and both seem to be alike in character and fighting qualities though it is said he can even outfight Penrod.so don't go troubleing yourself with hhim.He may be friendly t ward them but not t ward you.".

T he general had seemed very much excited, and there was a strange look on i his face, as he walked the floor of his headquarters room, which frightened GGert rude a little. Inside her room were seven photg photographs of the Vivian Girl Princesses.They were unusally fair lovely litt le faces, with hair of golden yellow, and great tender eyes of lusterous blue, with a tinge yet of defiant sadness in them, as there were also in t he expression around the sweet mouths in which in some of the pictures were just breaking into a smile.T hey were not in uniform in those pictures, they even then were not all dressed alike as sisters usally are, but Joice seemed to be dressed the prettiest and the dress was of heavy blue satin, with scapulars upon the neck, and a wreath of low lovely flowers on the lon g wavy curly hair.Refined angelic faces Gert rude t hought them, and despite the evident dislike of the enemy of them she never for an instant had t hought of them as other than fully her superiors in position and social standing with God and t he Heavenly host, as well as of Earth Earth.An Angelinia Aronburg had more than once resolved to seek the special friends of the beautiful brave little Abbisannian Princess s never doubting that she should them fully equal to t he Vivian Girls, who General Aronburg said, had in their vains the best blood of very saintly people of the land, that they were possessed by legions of angels, and for that reason despite their hazardous adventures no harm ever really came to them of fatal consequences and often even escaped . miraciously wit hout even an injury.Everything pertain ing to violet,and her sisters was guarded by Angelinia Aronburg with great fidelity, and in er her special box were her favorite t reasures were hidden away, were long bright t resses of hair, and a few faded flowers tied together with a bit of blue ribbon , to which wascattatched a piece of paper with the words;"The hair of the holy litt le Princesses,cut from their heads by them and given to me as a everlasting remembrance should I be seperated from them for good."Among Angelinia Aronburgs books(not looks) there was also a Dairy in which she kept a list of the experienc es of the Princesses every one they had t hemselves and those they and she had together and which was written in a very pretty hand.It had been a present from t he Vivian Girls and on the fly leaf was written by Violet; "To Dear An gelinia Aronburg,from Violet, and my sisters Christ mas 1912." T his was the only link bet ween herself, and violet and her sisters which she possessed, and she built upon it a mulitude of t heoroes with regard to t hat strange "Adeldefob"whom she meant sometime to find at any risk, and whom she alwy always heard was dressed like a young Glandelinian boy prince.

Such were Angelinia Aronburgs ideas of thevfriends of Violet , and her sisters ,which her uncle had suffered her to cherish, only smiling faintly at some if their extravagant speculations of their lives in too many rash adventures, but never contradicting them.And now when it seemed all would be quiet, in place of a short good time, t o have these new strange mysteries thrust upon them, this "Annie Aronburg,, and the three unknown Glandelinian generals; who she herself had heard of a good deal o and of the dangerous of interfering with t hem, but that the knowledge of who they are and where they are with their armies noone could say, yet to start an adventure of this sort with a unmistakable peril of exceedig greatness accompanying it, was too much in her idea for Violet and her sisters, and for a time the brave sensitive girlscout spy rebelled against it with all t he fierceness of her nature, while mingled with her bitter feeling was a better and deeper feeling, which hurt her face more than the mortification of knowing Violet and her sisters might attempt the adventure, and that was that she may not be able to prevent t hem from doing it.Their brother whom they so loved and honored and believe in would not be d a dealing fairly with them if he permitted them t o chan chance it.But could he prevent them. And why had not poor George Zimmermon been able to t ell her of it, especially aft er he knew t hey were advancing for Ophelia, and that she certainly must know it some time

"If he had told me, if he had said anything about those generals I should have been prepared forit , and found some way to prevent it, just because not only are they my most loving friends, but because they're my nearest cousins and their Father too is their Uncle. my Uncle and so is His brother Hanson Vivian and so is Concentinian Aronburg Vivian."Oh t hat Gerald St arring, what ever his motive might have been , he did t he Vivian Girls often a grevious wrong, and what he did to t hem he did to me."she said, and into her eyes there crept a look of resentment and fury as never before was seen.She remember ed her conflict with St Starring in t he barn and wondered how he had succeeded in licking her an d eight ot hers at the same time, eight girls to his one.Then as her thought s went back to t he room where George Zimmermann died, and the words he said to her she cried out;

"I understand now what he meant, and what I was to do. He meant to have told me before he said, he was sorry he had not had the chance.Yes dear George I see. While we were in Calverine there was no need to know them ; and when we start d for Ophelia it slipped from his mind and he forgot t o tell me, and then it must have been hard to confess it to me when he did remember and so he was forced to put it off as he was forced to do everything unpleasant as long as possible.You were going to tell me when you reached Ophelia, but before we were there you was ruthlessly killed, and I was left t o meet the sit uation alone.Oh George I promise to do what I can, and I will, but it is very hard to get them to change their minds once it is made up, but I will try my best and if t hey won't listen they must let me and Penrod accompany them to shield them from t he unknown dangers.But if I only meet that Gerald Starring"and she stood in the center of her room, her face as whit e as snow, her t earless eyes flashing fire, and her hands beating the air more rapidly and fiercely than they had done when in the carriage, when some of her friends quest ioned her of her kn owledge of the situation.That was a feeble efforts compared what she was doing now, as she flew agout the room striking out here and there as if Gerald Starring was there in her presence.It was a singular sight, and not strange at all that t he mother cat from her seat on t he window looked curiously at the young girl scout general, acting more like a po possessed than a sane little girl, and at the four kitten upon the floor who fancying all t hese gyrations were for their benifit jumped, and scampered and spit, and pulled at Gertrudes feet and dress in true cattish delight. Then Gertrude sat down in or chair and cried for a moment, then dashing her t ears away, and taking one of the kitt en s upon e her lap, she bad Violet who just ent ered to sit down beside her, as t here was somet hing she wished to ask her. V Violet and her sisters had not been in Angelinia Aronburgs company more than ? hree years without understanding their coun cousin t horoughly;, and they loved her as much as if she had been a sister. They knew just how kind, and lovin g and self sacrificing she was, and how she had cared for any one of them, when t hey had been severely wounded or ill. In spite of the tremendous sacrifices of loss of sleep and even at times food, an d remonstrances of friends who said she should rest, she had st ood by Violet night and day when s e had been dangerous wounded, and did so for weeks because she missed her when s e was absent and called for her in her delirium. It did not even matter that t he righteous gayieties of a Abbiennian Military carnival for boy and girlscouts were in progress, that she had recieved a invitation, and that the rarest facilities were offered her for seeing them. She turned her back on them all and stayed by poor Violet, who needed her as well as her sisters, and who the best of physicians said owed her life to her n ursing and consta constant care. when during adventures Gert rude was with t hem she was such a fury that it was impossible for Glandelinians who persued to do anything, andthe enemy thoughg thought her possessed.

Violet nor her sisters had never forgotten this no more when he h she had forgotten the time, when in a fit of anger a foriegn boyscout had slapped Jenn ie, Angelinia Aronburg had pounced upon his back like a wild cat, and scratched and pummeled and bit, and pulled his hair, untill he managed to shake her off and rum for dear life. Afterwards he was arrested and Angelinia Aronburg punished him severely by a flogging which she gave him personally herself, and discharged him from t he camp in disgrace. No body could do a thing out of the way to violet and her sisterd when Angelinia Aronburg was around. Angelinia Aronburg had once when spying on t he enemy seen a boyscout of very handsome appearance with eyes as tender and pitful as a litt le girls, and yet with something strong and masterful in their expression, as they seemed to have recognized her, and not only smiled a welcome upon her but had claimed to then be Adeldefob and said though he knew her and what she was doing he wouldn't give her away. It was most bewildering to her but in her excitement she had scarcely heeded it. It was the same young Glandelinian boyscout she was sure, who had held her ba k back from a bog of quicksand near a st ream within t he foe lines, and spoken to her in a voice which she recognized as should be belonging to the Abbiennian nobility. Gertrude hadclaid a g reat stress upon t he boys voice insisting by it she could tell how much of real cur culture or nat ural inborn refinement its p ownerr owner possessed and that he did not speak like a Glndelinian boyscout. T he sharp loud voices of the Glandelinians, with their peculiar intonation, had grated uupon her nerv s nerves but the well modulated well trained tones of the strange humane Glandelinian boyscout had fallen upon e her ears like a strain of music among jarring discords, and too she thought she had heard that voice oft en some where before but just then ould not make it out to whom it belonged.

"who was Adeldefob? Angelinia Aronburg was slightly suspicious. Surely he couldn't be the disguised Brother of Viol t , and her sisters. That was impossible; and yet the voice at that timehad sounded like Penrods(Penrod usally disguises his voice but didn't when he spoke to her that t ime), and some one had said; "T his is Prince James Adeldefob" and he had acka acknowledged it with a smile and a bow which came to her like sun s ine brea ing t hrough a rift of grounds and cl aring up up the sky.

"Oh if Adeldefob was only Penrod in disguise what a won derful boy he would be and everybody would like him much better for he sure would be the best spy of all" she thought, just as Angeline Vivian came in.

"My dear Miss Aronburg" she began "It was right n ice of you t o come bac k t o us from C alverine, to prevent us from being vict ims of the enemys fury, and had you come sooner a few weeks ago you might have helped Tim Groveton prevent us from being almost captured by Manley and Penrod seperat ed from us. Manley would give anythin g to have me and my sisters in his power--something which stands for all the girlscouts he would like to conuq con u con quor, but nevert heless Tim himself saved us, and we were all glad and like him much bett er than before, and we're going to govern ourselves hereafter, for we must not be too reckless in what we do for we have discovered that the enemy is becoming more dangerous than ever."

"Yes Princess dear t hat is very good" Gert rude saidl;;; wondering how she should fin d her litt le Queen if she were always as mild and gentle as she seemed now without any fire or spirit at all. Then thinking suddenly she said" Princess "How long or often have you or your dear sisters been in contact with that unusual Glandelinian boyscout who helped you called "Q Adeldefob!"

"Unsual what ?" asked Angeline in evident surprise. "Adelefob!" And she looked at "Gertrude Angeline "curiously and then smiled as she understood the question and said "We knew g him since the day before he and Gin gigore helped to rescue little Jannie From freedom."

"I t hought so, and did you know Adeldefob before that!" she asked.

"No Gertrude dear only as I heard of him as a famous Glandelinian boyscout Prince, who I can saftly t ell you as no body is here is a great christian boy scout spy and not a Glandelinia and who gained informat ion from the enemy so extravagently from various Glandelinian armies, and is so c lev r as to be able to pretend to serve in the enemy ranks wit hout discovery."

"A christian boyscout in disguise! It surely isn't Radcliffe." said Gertrude.

"Angeline shook her head.

"Then of course who don't know who he s he is.!"

For a moment Angeline in st ead of answering the question said;

"T hen of course you nev r saw him before but on ce as you said.!"

"Never said Gertrude, and then contin ued or rat her Angeline continued to Gertrude" And did you never hear anyt hing of him from others than strangers. ?pid you never hear where he came from, and how he and Gingigore caused the escape of Little Jannie and IO,000 other child slaves."

"I heard from you on ce Princess that he is a verybeautiful looking boy, and was too good to be a Glandelinian, and yet I thought h was one all the t ime, and I think you t old me he could speak English and French, and Indian. Surely you or your sisters who had so many experiences with the enemy ought to know something abouthim if after all he is a christian boy scout spy" and Gertrude looked curiously at Angeline, who colored painfully, and beat a tatoo on the matt ing with her foot. An gelinia Vivian was for the moment hesitating as to how she would tell Angelinia Aronburg, for it did not come to her will to tell her who Adeldefob was without Penrods or her sisters consent. At last deciding she must be frank with Gert rude if she wished her to be so with her, she said;

"I do know, and so does my sisters and even Penrod who Adeldefob really is, but without his or their con sent I cannot yet reveal. If they were home I would ask them to decide but they went back t o t heir own e headquart ers t o see to it their private belongings are moved over here and left me in charge to watch the place. Of all the best followers Gert rude dear, you Angelin e Richde Tim and Penrod are all we have left in the christian armies, and I must t herefore try to get their consent t o tell you everything. If they will especially if Jann ie does then Penrod our brother cannot object. But to the Glandelinians and to all of our generals who don't know who he is there is always a mystery about him when t hey cannot solve, though we can and do, and all t hey know of him is his name, and that the christian gen erals cannot understand how on this past occassion he being a supposed Glandelinian boy Prince loved us so much that he fought Starring for us at t he risk of being wounded, and all they know besides the name is that he is a Glandelinian Prince, but t hey did not guess right. I know it could be all right to t ell you who he really is, but it would be not right nevertheless withouy my sisters kn owledge of it. They'll be here any minute now I hope for bet ween here and our old headquarters the dist ance isremarkably short. I never met anybody however who had seen Adeldefob besides ourselves except Timothy Groveton , who was within us during our tryin g experience, and little Jannie she too knows who he really is. she is back with us now too with us in our headquarters, and she'll be here soon. Father was very angry over our experience and decided t hat Manley should suffer the con quences. Did you ever have more than one experience with Adeldefob within the foe lines when you spied Gertrude.?"

"Yes your question brought something t o my mind. T hree or four mont hs ago, when I was staying within the foe lines I not being recognized by our friend Radcliffe went with him to general Manleys headquarters, and t he general gave us a note to be taken to "Adeldefob" I remembered the name perfectly, but who he was then or where he lived I didn't yet know, and I wasn't going to bring it to him anyway but slip out of the christian lines, and when I proposed to do that t o some of my friends whowere assistant spies, Radcliffes face was very dark and he was silent and gloomy all day, and I t hought therefore that he thought I was really a Glandelinian girlscout who had got the best of him. So having a chance to do so I finally revealed to him who I was, but he at first wu would not believe m and thought I was double crossing him."

Angelinia Aronburg saw that Angeline Vivian did not understand her, and t hough she might have told t he Princess t hat she did not then give up the papers t o Adeldefob but brought t hem out of t he christian lines whether Radcliffe liked it ornot she did not do it, preferring that Angeline might have been shocked by her wilful action. But Gertrude had been temporarily angry at Radcliffe for refusing to believe her.

"I remember that day so wall"she cont inued"I left the christ Glandelinian army with t hat package and do you believe it Radcliffe led a persuit against me with a column ofcavarly and I couldn't escape.It was the first time I was so easily captured but not by the sol io soldiers.He led the persuit but captured me single handed.The package was taken from me I was charged with bein g a deserter escaping with important military papers, and was sentenced to face a firin g squad on the morrow.Through some mistake on my part in failing to restore my disguise afterwards Radcliffe discovered the mistake he made and was awfully sorry for he couldn't before believe it was really I for . Glandelinian boyscouts did duplicate as me.He forwith arranged means for my escape or otherwise I wouldn't be here to t ell it now.T hat experienc e happened Ange'in e a litt le t ime before the battle of Evangeline St C laire when you lay in your room so long from the effects of a lung wound, when your friend Jack Evans bought you a beautiful doll, and fondled and caressed you more than usual, as if making up for what happened to you."

Angelin es eyes were full of tears at these remembrances of her sad experiences but she forced them back and said;

"You have no idea where our lovin g friend Jack Evans is now!"

"None whatever but I think general Aronburg my Uncle h eard from hi him or of him when we were in Calvarino, waiting to advance.You remember that several lett ers of a strange sort were forwarded to him, and one excited him very much.I was in t he room when My uuncle read it, and h eard him say something which I couldn't catch, and I know he said something angry about the Glandelinian generals, for I under stood that plain.He was very white andupset all day, and that night asked me if I would desire to get back t o the christian army where the main division of child scouts were.Then he sen t you and your sisters a letter telling you he was going to advance for Ophelia.You remember the letter don't you."!

"Remember the letter"said Angeline looking curiously at Gertrude."I or my sist rs didn't recieve any letter from general Concentinia n Aronburg.Probably he sent it only to T im."

"N o"said Angelinia"he wrote and sent seven lett ers to you and your sisters by wireless.If you didn't recieve them then something is wio w o wrong."

Gertrude thought to her self how worried and sad her uncle had looked, and how much he had ta k talked of Violet and her sisters, and she remembered whe when she could see that he had been willing, to advanc e tward Ophelia gladly and did so. Surely t here could not have been anyt hing strange in a letter which should make her uncle angry or wish to go back.Timothy Groveton was a unusual boy too to be able to understand English so well--and it was not a easy for him to blunder he had never done so.Sh he was however more interest ed in Adeldefob .Why had he done such good t hin gs to Violet and her sisters if he was a Glandelinian Prince as they say, and where was he now."

"T urning t o An geline she said;

"T his boyscout Adeldefob is still within the Glandelinian armies!""

"No Gertrude absolutely not .He's within t he Christ ian lines.We captured him accordingly to t he reports of general John Man ley."

"Captured Adeldefob after what he did for you!"

"I don't say we exact ly captured him, he came with us very willingly bec ause he desired to , but Manley circulated a report that we with the help of a boy and girlscout captured Adeldefob."

"Ad And you know where he is now."

"I know where he went this morning, but he has not returned yet.He's not a prisoner you know.We really t ook him away from the foe lines but that don't mean we captured him or made him a prisoner."

"No matter Princesse dear.He must be well known I presume."

"He certainly is well known Gertrude."

"Well a telegraphic letter will find him, and I shallwrite him and ask for Annabell Aronburg, for I mean to find her if I cross into t he enemy camps to do it.Sh She know Adeldefob and I mean to know something about him too but oh--oh --Princess my brain is all in a whirl what t he n ews of h what has recently happened to you and your sisters and Adeldefob caused by Gerald Star ring, but I ---I---I---I---I can't tell you here, I feel so smothered when I think of it.Let's go to t hat immense ledge of rocks over there on the hillside.We must see the red sun set from t here, and maybe we can see poor Georges grave."

She put on her heart shaped hat, allowed Angeline to go first and proceeded her down the stairs, and through the diningroom, where they found Mrs Ann ie Rooney arranging a very dainty looking supper table.

"Supper will be ready very soon."Mrs Rooney said, suggesting that her young Mistress's wait till it was served, as the muffins would be all cold. T hey therefore did eat first before going out but told the housekeepr she'll have to keep supper warm for Angelines sisters who but just at that moment appeared and then aft er they all finished supper and left the little girls flashed upon the poor woman a smile so sweet and winn ing winning that it was ovident she was going to have a good time with them.Then with Gert rude in their midst the litt le girls went on their way, through t he back yard t ward the ledge of rocks, when suddenly they heard a pitiful whine, and t urning saw the dog tugging at his chain to get away.In an instant two of the litt le girls were at his side with their arms around his nec neck, while Violet cried;

"Look Gertrude, what a noble fellow he is, and a great Dane.Why do they keep him tied up.We never gave such orders!I mean to set him free."

And as violet and Joice were about to do so, the coachman who was watching them at a little distance called out--

"Princesses you mustn't do that.He is strange here and will run home.He has done so twice already."

"Who are you!"Jenn ie asked rather haughtily a flash in o her eyes, and he replied meekly;

"Frankie Henryson, and I was selected by Timothy Groveton to take care of the horses.Maybe you would like to see th m them; they are real beauties."

"Yes we will when I unchain the dog"Vio lot replied."He will not run from us, and it is cruel for whoever it was to t ie him up.Some foolish foriegner no doubt. What's the Dogs name!"

"King"said Henryson, and taking the dogs face between her hands, and looking straight in tot o his eyes Violet saidp-

"Mr Doggie, you are our King, and we are your litt le Queens.You must not run away from us as we're very good and gentle.We'll take much good care of you, and love you so much, and in proof t hereof I'll give you your liberty and nobody can tell us different as we have t he say.""

She slipped the chain from his neck, and with a joyful bark King sprang upon her licking her hands and face in token of his grateful allegiance.Every brute recognized a unusual good friend in violet or her sisters, and King was not an exception, and kept close to the little girls as they w went toward the stable to see the horses, h which Henryson led out for their inspection.First the seven splendid Bays, named by the seven First Apostles, with whic h they could find no fault as particular as they are about horses they ride.However Violet said that St Peter carried his head a trifle higher than St Andrew, and might be more proud.And then they turned to the milk white steed which was to be Jenn ie's saddle pony, with which t hey were perfectly delighted, he was so white and clean, and tall and gen tle, and ate grass(not glass) from her hand, and followed them about as readily as King Himself.

"What's t he name of my horse!"Asked An geline Aron burg who noticed it too was a beauty.

And on the coachmans reply that it was Annabell she said;

"Annibell is the name of the dearest sister.She is so fair, beautiful and I love her so much but she is still spying within the foe lines.Oh Ann abell""she cont in ued laying her hand upon the neck of her own steed"Where are you now, and do you know how sad and lonely your little Angelinia is!"

There was a shadow on Gertrudes bright face, but it quickly passed away, and sending t he horses back to their stalls, she went with violet and her sisters and King t ward the ledge of rocks on the grassy hillside .

I was very very pleasant and b eaut iful on the large ledge of stones, but t here was nevertheless plent y of warmpth for that t ime of the year, and instead of the soft rose tinted glow of even a winter sunset in the western sky, the color of t he sunset was strangely colored and sike sickening, the sky overhead was a strange color between black, blood red and brown combined int o runn in g off shades with inky blackn ess in the east(not yeast), and the long line of wooded hills, and st ill grassy m adowns for the grass maintained because of t he warmpth, stretching away to t he northand south, and east as far as the eye could reach assumed such a color as to make it seem as if An Angelinia Aronburg and Violet and her sisters were transferred t o some strange eerie phantom world.T hrough a deep cut to the westward, a train of cars loaded with soldiers was coming swift ly into view looking like some hellish d5a dragonic monst er at t na t hat distance, while over t he t op of the pine trees to t he east a strange fantastic bright rousing glow had slowly but gradually appeared all along the entire east, and the darker it became the brighter was the glare.And thatwas three hundred and fift y miles away.At the foot of t he hills the wat er of Lake St Johns lay like a bit of oran ge and black strange waters, amid the brownishwgreen fields around it , whilevfurt her to t he left another lake or pond was seen, and from the color it reflect ed of the sky it looked like a peat bog instead of water, while t he Aronburgs Run winding its slow course through strips of meadow land and strangely green colored pa stures, where t he c ows used to fr feed throught the day appeared ridiculous in its own color.Everything was quiet now.the sound of distant batt le had even ceased, all seemed calm and peaceful, and the girls felt quiet and peaceful too, as they now with Penrod having come back to t hem seated themselves on t he highest ledge of roc k and scanned the strangely colored landscape spread out below them.

"If it was not for t his dreadful old war our Calvarinia could still be as beautiful as before."Angelinia Aronburg herself said to Penrod, who stood at her side,"And I should only be happy if we had our common winter again in stead of all t his untimely heat.T he whole world wonders at t his strange phenomennom. No sn ow which we love, no cold which we can enc en joy, but this hhtt t h month we just swelther worse than an African heat.It is a wonderful occurance in a way and makes the world marvel, but I don't like it.Those forest firesmust These forest fires must be terrific to do all t his me and make the sky assume such a phenomena in color."
"But we must try to be happy even as it is,"said Violet ,"For Father wishes us to be so, and we mean to be happy."
"Yes and too"said Angelinia Aronburg I understand now what George said or meant when e he said such strange t hings to me just before h e died. He was preparing me for a surprise---a ---a Violet--"and forcing down a great sob, she began rapidly did you notice all those boy and girlscouts, who came t o meet me at the station of Ophelia."
"Yes"said Violet"They all went with you to t he grave and also att ended the Mass."
"Gertrude found it hard to summon her courage but finally she asked;
"Iheard -- I heard that ---that-- you and your dear sisters while within the enemy lines after all he did for you captured Adeldefob.Manley stated so.Is that really t rue?"
"We captured "Adeldefob" Violet first looked strangely at Penrod, then turning them t o Gert rude they flashed angrily, for to Violet and her sisters nobody must speak against any of their friends no matter what sidethey are on."We captured Adeldefob.Gertrude are you an idiot.?"
"No "Princess, Gert rude answ r answered humbly, and Jennie herself said;
"You don't yet understand how different everything is we do.T here is no real nobility within the Glandelinian armies--Penrod dear don't grin so you'll give it away before t he t ime)-- there is only too much cruel aristocracy there, nothing like the holy rich we have in Abbieann is.The one you know as Adeldefob there might be called "The Prince"for all of his dress and uniform of what he did when we saw him t here.But he is no more of a true Glandelinian t han I am and if it was not t hat we know who he really is we would have put it on our records that he is a far bett r boy in his ability than our brother Penrod.why Gerald Starring threatened to bring Penrod against him)Oh Penrod please will you st op grinning ,you'llget us all laughing in a minute-)) thinking t hat would scare Adeldefob.It's worth an educat ion wchih to bring spies to do what he did, and Adeldefob mind you would not have been shot had he not forgotten to bring his own weapons.You must know Gert rude he only wore his night robe when that t reacherous snake shothim down .Othw otherwise there would be no Gerald Starring to day.Don't pay any attention to poor Penrod"She added He knows so much of it that the sc ene is so unusual that any of us can't help smiling now when we come to think of it though it sure was a heavy cross when we first went through the experience."
"Mon dieu "dropped involuntarily from Penrods lips, as he looked first at his sister Jennie half mischieviously, t and then searchingly at Gertrude for an instant, who had dropped her eyes meekly as he met his almost threatening gaze.
"Are you t rying for some reason to prob into the secret of who Adeldefob is?" he asked.
"Yes"she answered Meekly"I do not know quite how it is, or why no one had ever before t old o me of him, but George Zimmermon did know and tried to tell me when he was dying.For t he love and benf ben efit of your sisters and for your good and welfare too I believe I should know especially when he is not a Glandelinian but a boy spy for our side.George said there was something he must explain , something he ought to have told me, and this was it.Adeldefob too met me within the Glandelinian army shortly aft er I was arrest ed by Radcliffe, and he identified me to my friend who t herefore then saved me from the firing squad by getting me free.It is very safe for you and your sisters if Iknew Adeldefob.Your sisters do Prince ?Penrod but you don't."
"Oh y e s yeah "Oh no. What makes you believe I don't know Adeldefob."
"Because you have never encountered him.".
"I see very nice opinion"Penrod said with a nod of assent, though knowing the unusual girlscout as heddid, he knew perfectly well how hot she was rebelling against the recent act of Gerald Starring, and how it was her great pride of her holy country and her cause which prompted her to exalt him and his sisters if possible before or beyond all earthly things.But it was not then for him to express n any opinion, so he remained silent, while Gert rude though she looked surprised at his exclaimanation of What makes you believe I don't know Adeldefob?"went on;
"Radcliffe is well acquainted with Adeldefob, Prince, she and you too have told me that, she can tell me all about him t herefore I mean to find him and here hear what she has to say.Prince, there was another great boyscout leader at the station with Timothy Groveton--with such a fair winning saintly face, and perfect manners besides Jack.He was at the grave too and mentioned something about Adeldefob being captured by your sisters. He was a little gentleman I am sure.Of course I don't believe such a report, because I don'tbelieve a thing crazy Manley or any of his Glandelinian generals."

"Well"said Penrod and he again looked mischievous"They in one w y did capture him"he turned and glanced at his sisters"But not against his will.He came with them right gladly. H He guided them to safty."
"Yes I understand"said Gertrude, and she brightened at once.
"Well that boy is quite the litgle little gentleman ."Said Joice."He rode with us, and though he is a foriegner has he spoke t o me in my own tongue, not as we talk it, but fair, very fair, though he did not understand me so well.But he was not English for I tried to have him speak in that language so he could understand better by talking to him that way.but he shook his head. He's language was very strange.But T im was always with us as o you know."Violet and her sisters were eloquent on the subject of T im himself, and Angelinia Aronburg was gre greatly interested, and asked a number of questions concerning him.
"How did he become so acquainted with Adele Adelefob?,hat did T im call him and what did he say?"
Violet, and her sisters looked at Penrod and he looked at them, and then Penrod himself replied;
"He asked much of you, and once there was something like t ears in his eyes when Adeldefob told T im how sad you were when so far away from your friends , but seems he was ashamed to have t he others see him, for he pulled his great black hat down over his eye s, and said something aboutbit in English, which no on e else understood and--" There goes T im now"and Penrod pointed him out to Angelinia Aronburg just after he appeared into sight, but she watched him and so did Violet and her sisters as farss she could see him, admiring his figure, admiring his horse, and wondering how it was he was so great a boyscout almost like Penrod.If she could only find her sister Ann abel she could solve all doubts on the subjecy subject of "Ac Adeldefob; and as she believed certainly Violet and her sisters wouldn't tell her for some reason, and that Penrod looked menacingly on the subject, she meant to fin d her------if that were possible,,, and set herself about it at once--to morrow perhaps, for there was no t ime to be lost.If Radcliffe hd had as Angelina said been a companion of "Adeldefob", and if Radcliffe had heard often from him, then of course she must know who the boy spy is, and through the military det ectives she could trace her disguised sottet t sister and perhaps bring her t o the christianvlines, and get the information from he. Thus thinking she advised Penrod and his sisters to come back to their headquart ers and get va small late evening luncheon, and they did so just as it was growing dark, and the housekeeper Mrs Rooney was beginnin g to fell feel some anxiety with regard t o ice tea and toast, n n and the time they would b called for. T he fatigue and excitement of the day, was beginn in g to tell upon these brave good Royal Ci children, and aft er partaking quite more of the luncheon than was expected, and which the good old la y lady pressed upon them, Violet and her sisters and Penrod being tired announced their intention of retiring to their room while Angelin ia Aronburg dec ided to go and see general Vivianie for a good purpose.
Mrs Rooney desired t o carry up wax cand es candles which she light ed h herself, but Penrod said neit her he nor his sisters are afraid of the dark, and that all she needed to do was come up and light their ro room so that they c could see what they were doing ..T herefore she did and sett ingthe lighted candles on the table, and seeing that everyt hing was in order she at ood a moment smoothing t he hem of her whit e apron as if t here was something she had to say. She did not know how t o go about things in their presence.Decided to her idea Violet and her sisters did not look half as prett y as she heard they did, in fact Angelinia Aronburg was far more prett ier(Violet and her sisters that early mornin g had gone out scoutingand st ill had forgott en to remove their head disguises) but she said nothin g nevert heless.She had promised Minn ie Saunders to call t he attention of violet and her sisters a to the patchwork spread quilted "Crazy Quilt like and"Herrine Bone" and which as the work of a little girl of her o their own mother had taken the prize in the great Worlds Fair at Angelinia Agathia, but she did not kn oq know how to do it..such quilts did not seem to be in st yle, and therefore probably would be not be in accord with t hese high little Abbieann ian Princ esses, who t hough so plainly uniforms u just now, and so friendly and gracious of manner bore unmistakable marks of t he highest grade of saints ever recorded and who though aristocratic in rank were no aristocrats at all.Like the most of her class Mrs Ann a Rooney held such people in the highest esteem, and as something quite different from herself, though she even though actiol acting as a servant was also very rich but had offered her servic es because she desired to be near the Princesses.

But she could not understand how one like Violet and her sisters would care for seven sections of so large a patchwork quilt no matter how pretty it was even if their mother had pieced it in so many years gone by.But she had promised and must tell them about it.She stood for a moment hesitating untill she saw them removed their head disguises clean their faces and hands and renew their own features, and then she was so ty t hunderstruke thunderstruck and scared at their beautty tht she could hardly find voice as laying her hands upon it, and pulling it more distinctly into view, she began;;

"I promised one of your highest girlscout officials to tell you about this great big crazy bed quilt big enough when sliced t o be used for your beds, which appears kind of out of place here--but she sent it over the girlscout did, think ing t o you would be pleased to know your mother made it when she was a litt le gil girl and that many of them is pieces of her most expensive but discarded gowns dresses waists and petticoats she used t o wear.I remember her myself with this one on, it was her Sunday Frock, and she looked so pretty in it.Adeldefob first had it and sent it to Minn ie to give to you"and Mrs Rooney touched a square of the blue and yellow checked calico which had once formed a part of her mothers best dress when she was a little girl."

"I don't think I or my sister s quite understand you"said Hettie"About "Adeldefob having sent it over to Minn ie "."

An idea came p perre perfect ly clear to Angeline however.Mrs Rooney had known her mother when she was a little girl and her great dark blue eyes were full on inquiry as she said;

"You have seen our mother, when she was a little girl,you knew her when she was a little girl;;knew her for certain and true?"

"Yes"she answered"Gert rude Ann a Vivian was under my tender charge when she was a sweet good little girl, and she too became a wonderful mother.You should sure be proud of your good Mother Princessss. put you made a great mistake several weeks ago"she added."I heard reports that when you and your sisters escaped from general Manleys lines, in order to insure your escap e you and your boy friend T im captured Adeldefob after all he did for you.That don't seem to show gratitude, but maybe it is a mistake"she added hastily as she met t he proud flash of t he litt le girls eyes, and the almost scornful look of her sisters and a fiery glare from Penrods, ed understanding that to speak of that incident was an iindign ity not to be tolerated.

"You are just as foolish as the rest of them"ret ort ed Jenn ie."We did not capture Adeldefob.Adeldefob is not a Glandelinian either.If it was his will (pointing to Penrod)I'd tell you who Adeldefob is."

But for this slip of the t ongue from Mrs Roone , Violet or her sisters might have questioned her furt her of her mother of their mother but they could not do it now, though she rot urned with her sisters to the big bed quilt and man aged to get a totally clear comprehension with regard to it.

"Made every stitch of it"mrs Rooney said and being fairly launched on her subject she was going on very rapidly, when Joice suddenly interrupt ed with;

"Yes,yes,I know;I see mother did it.Mothers have hands have t ouched it; and now go away please quick, and leave us alone.We got military business to att end to."

She pointed to t he door, and Mrs Rooney went swiftly out half fright ened at the look in the eyes of the litt le girls and Penrod too, as Joice had her leave the room.

."Yes Penrod dear"said Jennie "it is true, everybody and everything confirms it, and we are now so far from our ideal good mother, and also Father,"and she beckoned to Penrod to close t he door which in her haste Mrs Rooney had left oft open.Yes they were sadly far away from t heir ideal mother, but the temporary loss had not been without its gain, and Violet and her sisters felt this was so as they knelt in their an g ish by their bedside, and laid their hot t ear stained cheek against the silken fabric which had been their mothers work. "Not hers dear hands had made it."Jennie said again"and that brings her so near to us that I almost feel as if she were here herself.I love God and everybody but it s alll so strange so different from what I have fancied it t o be."

T hen remembering what Mrs Rooney had said of the quilt, she brought the candle close to the bed, and she and her sisters examined the pieces arefully, especially red yellow and purple ones in which Mrs Rooney had said her mother had looked so prettily.It was de'icate in color and in patg pattern, but to Violet and h r her sisters and Penrod, it did not seem too common a fabric.Of course it did not at all match the lovely pears pearls she and her sisters kept so sacredly among her t reasures but that did not matter.UnUnlocking the box, Jenn ie t ook out the beautiful exquisite necklace, bracelet s, and ear rings which h her mother had worn she brought t hem to t he bead bedside, and laid them upon the squares of blue and she and her sisters tried to picture t o themselves their beautiful mother.in creamy white satin who had worn them.

"Pearls and calico.T here is a gr at gulf bet ween them"she thought "But no. greater than the distance bet ween our old lives of dangerous adventures and the new which I and my sisters must live bravely and wel."

Then returning the pearls to their casket with a feeling that now she and her sisters should and would never wear them, she and her sisters undressed themselves hurriedly, and were soon in bed, and aft er their night prayers Jenn ie herself thought while her sisters were soon asleep;

"Dear Mother and Father we love you so well and yet oh you're so far away, and you t wo seem to be near us to night , as if your arms were around me, and you were pitying your desolat e little girls, even though we have everyone here to pity us, ti defend and fight for us, to lov4 love us, some who love us too much, everybody to pray for us now, and that is when why we can't be sad and wretched no matter what we go through."

Poor little Jennie was of not mistaken when she said t o herself that every one pitied and prayed for her and her sisters, for throughout the army, christians across t he river, t hroughout the whole nat ion, and even within the christian lines all t he child scouts knelt long that night in their short night gowns, and prayed for Violet and her sisters, and Angelinia Aronburg, that G od would comfort them, and have t hem in His keeping, while in his own headquart ers, Tim who had shot and killed t he prowler without Violet and her sist rs having h eard the shot, T im was t hinking of the seven little sad eyes, which haunted him persistently, t hey were so full of phatoes and pain.

"Poor little brave girls they shouldn't have to go through all that"he said. "I pity them and will do everything for them by jove."

Violet and her sisters slept heavily tha t first night in their new headquarters-- so heavily, that the sun had risen beyond the part of the sky it reaches at nine o clock on a Dec ember morning before Penrod was t he first t o awa e, with a very vague perception as to where he at first was, or what had happened to him. Through his bed room win dow which he had left open, came the strange warm forest fire heated air"sweet" with the slight sc ent of burning pine needs and wood. And Penrod who was keenly alive to everything fresh and beautiful inhaled the " delicious perfume" with disgust , and felt inst inctively how much of freshness and beauty of nature those far away perpetual forest fires was dest destroying.

But when he ro rose and going to t he window, threw back the shutt ers and looked for an instant at the now "Lovely picture" of the smoke fogged hills and valleys spr s spread out before him, a shapr sharp cutting pain of fear for his sisters came upon him as he remembered t heir plan suggested to him of going to t he forclosure of the "Ophelia Barn mystery", and then came his thought t hat there was nothing for him to do but not let them do it under any con dition.It was no their work.What was the Gemin i and t he military detectives for.If he cannot st op them he'll share the danger with him them for t hey cannot stop him eit her.T hen he remembered somet hin g else, and he grew cold and f int and t hought with a strange feeling"They wouldn't shirk at no danger no matter how great it was."

H went into their room, and with great reluctance awa oned them, and then they said their morning prayers, dressed, and went down to get ready for breakfast.

In the meantime Angelinia Aronburg had arizen earlier but had remained in er her room.T hen as she remembered what Minnie had said of an early visit, for t he sake of talking over things"she wondered if she had come or not for Violet and her sisters had not yet risen.But fortunately for them Minn ie had been made lat e by stric t military reason s.As she then prepared to clean erself and get ready for breakfast Gert rude thought t o herself;

"If I only were posit ive and sure beyond a doubt who Adeldefob really is, I could bear everyt hing so much better.Timothy Groveton knows all about Adeldefob; he probably will t ell me, indeed "she added decidedly and determinedly"I'll make him tell me, and I must see him first, for others will not be long in com ing to pay their respects.I'll sent my orderly Pierre immediately wit h a note asking him to come to me immediately.No I won't .I'll phone."

She lifted t he reciever and asked for the or gave the number.She however had to wait nearly five min utes before any one came to answer the phone and it was T ims Housekeeper.

"Who's calling she asked and Gertrude answered;"It's Miss Angelinia Aronburg. Will you t ll Tim I wish to speak to him please."

"I'm sorry Miss Aronburg but he's not in.He's at general Vivianis's."

Gert rude therefore had to write a note, and what she willed to do she did at once, and she opened her desk wrote t he note, and sent her orderly with his swift est horse."If you happen t o lose the note then just say to him"I must see him at once.Come without delay"she directed direc ted to the orderly. This done, not desiring t o go out just j yet as she intended to interview Tim she contented herself with a cool white cambrac wrapper with rows of lace and embroidery down the front, and bows of delicate pink ribbon on the pockets and sleeves..Over this she threw a dainty Abbiennian silk jacket of the same hue letting her long golden a h curly hair fall loosely about her shoulders. She always worevit so, and she made a most beautiful and striking picture of an angel child from Heaven paying t he hou se a visit for Mrs Rooney to contemplate when in answer t o her ring that good lady presented h rself at the door to know what her mistress would have. she asked what t ime Violet and her sisters would be up and as the lady did not know, Gertrude ordered that they would be left alone untill they awoke, and that she herself was to be left in quiet in the Reception room below where she proposed going t o wait forther friend T imothy Groveton whom t he boy scout Pierre found in his own headquart rs horse just on the return from general Vivianda, and with him Jack, Sanders, Jean Saunders, the Jennin gs sisters, and several others including "Bright Eyed Mar,y and t he t wo Saunder Sisters who were having packages of somekind in their hands.

The two boys had been talking t oget her and comparison of the Vivian Girls with Angelinia Aronburg.

"She's an imitation of the one Angeline a good deal in prettiness, as bright and agreeable, with t he same sort of will as they have."Timothy Groveton said guardedly, remembering what Jack had predicted with regard t o the immediate surrender of his h eart to the eight beautiful litt le good h eroines.

"Yes and they could make Lucifer quail before them too or I'm mistaken."answered Jack.Why I really believe lat er on t hey'll train us all to ride over all of their special enemies.Odd though t hat Miss Angelinia Aronburg never h eard of Adeldefob. She would sure open her eyes if she know it was---"

T im(Tims look warned him not to let it out here.

At this moment Pierre rode up, saluted and handed the note to Tim Groveton who read it aloud, while Jack Said laughingly, though h in secret he really felt exultant and happy about it and not jealous---

"You see it is for you whom she sent.Don't let her capt ure you to her heart and carry you away t o be her brother ." Jack said it in En glish but strangely enough the boyscout messenger notwithstandin g his imperfect knowledge of English underst ood the last part of Jacks speech, and his gestures were more vehement as he assured Jack he was mistaken, that Angelinia Aronburg cared for him too just as migh much as t o carry him away, had noticed him at the grave.It was military business alone which had prompt ed her to send for T im later she would be most happy t o see him too.Jack could not follow the boy readily in such gest ulations but he answered in perfect Abbieann ian ;

"T ell her I shall be there some t ime t o day.Emperor Vivian sent me a note which I want to give her in person."

T im rode off t ward the new headquarters of Violet and her sisters, and arived there exactly at six oclock .

CHAPTER THIRTY SIX....".".".".".""

THE INTERCOURSE BETWEEN ANGELINIA ARONBURG, AND TIMOTHY GROVET ON.. DOWN BY THE RIVER.. WHO CAN HELP LOVIN G YOU DEAR DARLINGS OF THE NATION. JACK GOES AWAY.....".".".".".

AN GELINIA ARON BURG felt worse on the qu s question as to the Ophelia picture barn mystery" than the day before, and that was for one reason why she insisted on seeing T im Groveton at once, who was admitt ed graciously to the room, which t o keep spies from looking in or seeing n an yt hing Mrs Rooney hd had made as dark as possible, but which was st ill light enough for him to see very easily the little figure of a girl in pink and white standing at first before a window with masses of foot long golden curls rippling down about her shoulders, and a big purple ribbon ribbon tied upon the top, and her eyes flashed a welcome upon him as he came in and saluted, though he felt a little awed or abashed in the presence of this Abbieannian girlscout leader, much higher in rank than him or probably equal almost to t he rank of the Orincesses, standing before him in e her pretty dishabile, with her loose wide sleeves showin g her round whit e arms to her elbows, and her little pink rosetted slippers on her feet(High heels are not worn in Abbieannia).she on the contrary was as composed and unconscious as if he had been a block of wood instead of a boyscout with all a boys impulse to worship and admire .

"Oh Master Groveton"she began offerin g him her hand"Oh Master T im I mean it was so kind of you to come in so soon, when you must have so much to do, but you see for the sake of Violet, or her sisters who are st ill asleep I could not wait, even though I had to get up so confounded early to do so, and I didn't sleep hardly all night I was so worried.Mrs Rooney said it was hardly the thing to see you in this way, but a girl who must not delay a in anythingcannot be expected to dress as if going on a scouting tour, and I did not therefore take time to do so.It was possible that I must see you very early this morning before they get up.I They might have arisen but I sternly forbade Mrs Rooney to awaken them untill I said so.The reason is George Zimmerman and also my own uncle said I was to ask you everything------trust you with everything for their sake-- nd what I want to know--I want you to t ell me--t hosegirlscout leaders--Minnie Sanders said she was coming t o day to talk over matters, and how can I talk if I don't know what to do or say.I need their help if possible to prevent Violet and her sisters from going out on a most dangerous adventure."

T im was sure he didn't know what to do or say, Minn ie was dangerous if taken on the contrary and so was her two sisters, and Angelinia continued;

"It may seem strange to you Tim, who they say did not know Adeldefob intimately except by your aiding him save t he Princesses--to know how little he talked of this affair to any one, and of the false report by Manley that Violet and her sisters captured and made him prisoner.I questioned Violet and her sisters, but by pre pretension to see if they really wanted to keep it a secret, for I know very well t hough noo n obody ever t old me that Penrod and Adeldefob were the same even when I first heard of him months ago.Even with regard to Angelinia Richee, she was very reticent, and never told me anything, except t hat Adelfevob is supposed to be a "Mysterious Glandelinian boyscout Prince,' and that he also assumed the name of Fred Parker and ot hers.I i know his identy because no boy anywhere even within the foe lines besides you and Penrod can speak English and he within the foe lines speaking in English to me and the sound of his voice confirmed e me it is Penrod. I had hoped he would be still within the foe lines as Adeldefob for in that way he might have been able to help me prevent the litt le Princesses from going on such a hazardous adventure, and so you see I was a litt le no I was dreadfully surprised yesterday, when you and others asked me if I have a sist er a dead sister by the name of Annie Aronburg.were there many at Georgest Mutual Burial."?

" More than a person can count"Tim replied.

"There certainly was a great number of them."she continued"and I fear I was not as gracious as I might have been, for I was so astonis ed to hear that I hd had a dead sister, when I know for sure that the only sister I have really living is Annabel and she's a spy and n ever got detected. Master Tim would you mind t ellingme all you know about the mystery of those strange child pictures found by Violet and her sisters in that barn during t he battle of Ophelia?Were those children claimed to have been murdered by thosethree generals ever been child sla slaves!pid Violet and her sisters bring those pictures here or leave them in the old headquarters!Did they rea retain the one whose n ame is Annie Aronburg!"

As she asked these questions her eyes were fixed on Tim who not knowing what she meant by these questions, said he did not understand what she meant but continued seriously;

"I'll dare say they brought the pictures here."

"Oh then they have the pictures h r here, and have you seen them."!

"Yes I have twice"said Tim."

"Have you seen the picture of "Ann ie Aronburg, and that,that there is no mistake and that these children are--they are child slaves and not our own kind of children!"

T his was the second time Angelinia Aronburg had put her question in this form, and Tim answered gravely;

"Yes I have seen them all, but "Ann ie Aronburg "to me though she is prett y and wears her hair alo almost the same way as you do does ot at all look as if she is your sister.Her hair too must also be golden.It is strange Violet and her sisters or Penrod never t old you."

"Not strange at all if you knew them like I do."Gertrude said, resolved that no blame should attatch to t hem."But tell me "she went on"tell me all about it and t he strange lettr letter they found there--ty the pictures too, and who is the Annie Aronburg child--a nice situation in deed, and if possible I mean to try and prevent Violet and her sisters from taking such a risk.In particular who are t hose three Glandelinian generals!"

Tim could not look Angelinia in h er face, and tell her of the fact that Violet and her sisters would not let any one stop them in their purpose except their father.But he dwelth upon the honesty and respectability of Penrod, and told of his decision against t he dangerous proposition.Angelinia however saw he was evading her questions, and with an impatient stamp of her little slipper she said;

"Tim dear you are keeping t hings from me, and for their sake I will not bear it.If there is anything wrong concerning poor Violet, and her sisters I wish to know it so I can help them.With me around I defy any of the enemy to tr y and do them harm.T he Glandelinians may not fear Violet and her sisters, but they keep away from me and my followers because they're scared.I must know the situat ion"she said wit h a flash in her eyes which made her visitor wince."They are my cousins though they don't know it, they are my Uncles Hansons children or Neices I mean and the daughters of Uncle Robert, and if they are going to go on that dangerous mission and nobody can stop them in case their Father believes it is their duty I am going to d h go too and you must also.If they are mine they are mine, and I won't let them face unknown dangers alone and not rem or them help even if secretly."

What a strange contraditary creature she was, one moment insisting that he must t ell her something, if there reallly was anything t o t ell, and the next warning him that she knew he was holding something back.what could he do but stare wonderingly at her, as she sat down, then leaned back in er her chair and holding him with her bright eyes said imperiously;

"I am waiting,, Violet and her sisters decide to do it under any conditions I suppose and won't stand for any interference."

"Yes that's about the fact of t he case "Tim replied, feeling compelled to speak out."I do not know why but Emperor Vivian in an answering telegram did not oppose their design, and I suppose that makes a difference you know."

"No it doesn't she replied vehojently."I am their legal guardian and so is Jack Evans, and nothing makes a differ n ce to me.If I can prevent them I'll do it, but if I can't, they can't prevent me from joining in the adventure.But go on .When did they discover the myst erous pictures and letters.What day was it?pid they find those thin gs in the barn!What did they do afterwards!"

T he look in e her eyes brought t he answer promptly;

"They discovered those thin gs on Decel December the Eight ; but I forgot what day it was.It was in a small rickety smal farmers barn."

"Well that's dirty stinking nasty work for any person to put them there where the Princesses are likely to find them.Probably t he one who was supposed to take th the situation in his own hands was scared and got cold feet.Likley a no account Foriegner.It seems when everything is needed to be done people always must have violet , or her sisters or us do it, and I've no doubt that he who left them there wrote the letter and not Dargar or Schloeder.I'm going to investigate.What did Violet and her sisters do after they found those pictures and the letter.Were they undecided them."?

She had almost hit it , but not quite, and T im replied;

"T hey were angry about it, and decided to do nothing unless their Father told them to.He said they must.I saw the letter.On ly they can solve the mystery "he said and can 't back out even t hough it will be a sacrifice to him."

Angelinia Aronburg drew a quick gasping breath, and said;

"Yes I see, I understand.T hey were unfortunate indeed to be born just in time to have to go into such adventures t hrough this Ear thly Earthly Hades region and of course they did what they could to bring about safty for their nat ion, and according to their story about you just recently you did more for them than anybody every did before, more than I or even Penrod did, you even saved him and them, and that is no reason you should try to back out of it and say you did not do much.You have done more m for them than anybody."

"My dearWiss Aronburg"Tim began puzzled to know how to treat this little capricious creau creatu e"What can you mean.!I did not do so much. I was ai ded by little Jann ie and she deserves nearly all the credit and;"

"Yes you did"she answered."Violet and her sisters told me all,I can see it even in your fac e.I saw it there yesterday when they came to recieve me. You are one of those kind of boys who do a whole lot of good for us girls and when we want to praise you you run away.But I won 't deny itfor I know.T hey are my cousin s, and what you did for t hem you did for me.Who was t hat strange young boyscout with them.Why don't you t ell me about him, as he was with them all the time.He was not Penrod sure.He was so t ransformed I never saw him in such a uniform if he was."

It was Penrod; and T im launched at once into praise of Penrod, and the Vivian Girls generally, dwelling at lengt h upon their old headquarters, the way they did things during the batt le of Ophelia, the accomplishments of t he child Princ esses against the enemy, the sweetness and dignity t hey showed, and lasrly Penrod himself, the bravest, best hearted most popular boy in the whole world if not woild, wit with the most exquis ite taste in everything.

It was strange how Angelinia's whole attitude and expression changed as she listened. She became as gentle and soft as a purring kitten.Tim felt that he deserved a great deal of credit for thus extolling Penrod, but f e feeling as he did a horrible pang of fear about the situation, when he saw the bright eager face flush, and her dark blue eyes light up with pleasure and expectancy.

"And so Jack Sanders will call on me soon--to day I hope.I am so anxious to see him.It is so nice to have Violet and her sisters to really be real flesh and blood cousins, to whom I can talk more freely than before.Between me and them them you are the greatest boyscout ever known .What makes it more astonishing is the surrender of a Glandelinian army you--you yourself compelled, and the disgrace of that Glandelinian gen eral, an unheard of thing in the history of t he world.And when the Vivian Girls were in hopeless peril you got them out of it the very same afternoon, and put Manley out of commission and disgraced Gerald Starring and shot him in t he hand.Jack loves you Tim and I know it. Tell him please how I want to see him, and Minnie and her sisters must come too and we'll decide on the cause of the adventure if it has to be.But I hope they don't decide to do it.Oh God it is too dangerous"she said, and again a pang like the cut of a knife thrilled Tims nerves, as he felt again that the safty of violet and her sisters was slipping away. Angelinia too was growing tired, and as there was no necessity t o prolong the interview any longer and as she knew poor Tim was dreadfully busy, she gave a little wave of her hand tward the door, and said;

"Thank t o you Tim, I don't want to detain you any longer as I know you have duties to perform, and that is all I care to ask you now.For what you have done though you have made me a friend as good as my Cousins, don't blush so T im you'll get used to it, and I have gr at confidence in you.You saved them once though almost impossibilities and I know you can again.I know how dangerous you are to the enemy for I've heard lots of it, Penrod says you're more dr dr aded by the enemy than I or he is. You will of course contin ue continue to look after them, as you did before, and I though superior to you will not act so and will put you as my equal and shall help you in everyt hing you need to do for them.

T herefore I wish you to see to everything, only stipulating that you let me have the say where it is proper to do so, and I give you good warning that if you do I and you can make the enemy realize what we are when they don't leave our fair friends alone.They have been persecuted enough and I won't have it. I mean to make a fool of the enemy for not letting them alone.You accept I can see it in your eyes.You too will be my agent , and their super boy guardian or whatever you choose to call it, but you must let me do exactly as I please in the mission as I know every lay of land, all forests and lakes and streams and the whole Geography by heart and can't be set astray.Soon the enemy will find us very troublesome.When we go hand in and we'll be two bobbells."

She smiled up at him brightly, while he bowed his acceptance, thinking it was really a fact that the enemy might find it harder to del deal with t his girlscout captian general, who proposed to give him her help so prett ily, and yet so determinedly."

"I will serve you and t hem to the best of my ability."he said"And if I am to look after t heir interests it is necessary t hat I fully understand how much and many of those those pictures they possess and what the lett er was really written by.We should see those two Genin i leaders and find out whether they wrote that letter or not.I know of course about affairs of Glandelinian generals, and I know too the affairs of the Gemini, but they must surely have not really wrote t hat, and then leave their letter there so mysteriously.yo you know then well.Did Dargaer also leave any of her clue within that pa barn besides those papers--and could you get me the letter as soon as possible--not t o day of course but soon!We could have the letter in vestigate and see whether the two Geminiv leaders wrote it or not."

For an instant Angelinia Aronburg lookedat him fixedly, while the remembrance of what George Zimmerman had said to her with regard to that sort of letter flashed upon e her, and with the instincts of a girl or woman that scents danger unless that letter is investigated, there came to her mind the thought that if there was such a letter no one must read except the Gemini, there might be papers which no eye but hers and Tim besides the Princesses and their brother must see.she and they and Tim before taking them over to Darger must look them over first, and if there was something unusally suspicious only they would know it.

"Yes"she said at last"There are letters--Violet placed them in a tin box, and when you come again we will investigate it. Penrod knows more about that than I or t hey do.Ask him anything you please.But hush is not that a horse halting at the gate?It may be Jack or cousin Penrod.I hope so.no it ain't Penrod because he is not up.I am quite sure it is Jack, and if you wish to go you may, and if you wish t o stay you can .But I don't wish to keep you from your duties. nd if you go sent Mrs Rooney to me.I must dress up properly to meet Jack."

"t was very complimentary to T im t o know that she was willing to have him remain even if the other boyscout chieftian came, but he had to go for he was at some duty at which he was already now too far behind, and thus he got himself dismissed, and bidding good morn ing to the little girlscout general he went with him to the door and opened it for him, he went out into the hall to meet not Jack, but the three Sanders girlscout officials.They had been admitted by the guard, and he first shook hands with them, and then showed them to Gert rudes door., and through him went unannounced into her presence.

With a little start of surprise but evident delight ,,, Angelinia Aroh Aronburg recognized her visitors, and she went forward to meet them with far more cordially in her manner than she had showed ward them the previous day.

"Good morning Miss Aronburg Minnie began."I and my two sisters meant to have come earlier, so as to have a good long visit before noon but we cann ot remain for dinner to day.We will have to go out scouting to day, for general Vivianis is suspicious of the movements of the Glandelinians and he wants to know what is up.Oh my Heavens how hot I am.And it is supposed to be winter."And sett ling herself in a chair Gertrude had placed for her, the good girlscout untied the hat strings of her heart shaped uniform hat, took off her yellow gloves, and fanned herself rapidly with the huge fan she carried. Angelinia Aronburg opened one of the windows to let in more breeze.When the blinds too were opened Minn ie for the first time noti noticed that Gert rude looked dreadfully worried about somet hing.

"Why what's the matt er Gertrude?"she asked."T he Vivian Girls in danger?"

Gert rude nodded.

"Oh I'm so sorry but we'll prevent the danger coming to.You take it from us we'll defend them and make the one y stay away.But t hey should never go no where where it is so dangerous.But I believe they often can take care of themselves especially if Tim is with them.Better try and persuade them not to go out.They'll no do anythin g for you."

As she listened Gertrude began to believe it might be, and she could have screamed screamed with fear of what she knew might happen to them.Sinking into a chair with her back to the window, and her friendly visitors in front, whom she had wished to see also, she scann ed them closely; but for a moment said very little to them as she was thinkin g hard, and also what good specimens they would be in accompanying t he Vivian Girls, for these three were nearly as dangerous to Ne enemy as she herself was.

"She evidently fears for the safty of poor Violet , and her sisters."anna thought , and she was beginn in g to plan somet hing in her mind, when Mrs Rooney looked in , and seeing the elder Sanders girl exclaimed;

"You are just the very girlscout I wished to see.I'm making some Apple pie mixed with currants, and wish you would come to t he kitchen a minute."

Minnie went ouid at once, and left to themselves, Gertrude and Jeanchersolf began to talk(not spoke), Gertrude asking n umberless questions, by the way of drawing Jean and Anna out and jud judging what sort of girlscouts they were.It did not take long for her to learn that both little girls had been three years before the war to a girlscouts school, and that their elder sister Minn ie herself had studied algebra, geometry, astronomy, chemistry, physio,logy, botany, rhetoric, zoology, English language, Germn and French, the three were good in walter colors, and had taken lessons on the piano, and could do any sort of shootin , he hors ba shoot in g horseback riding and so forth.

"Dear me(he he()"said Gertrude, drawing a long breath, "How learned you three must be.I t oo have st udied all those things, and so the four of us are posted in them all and could be good Con federat es for Penrod and his sisters.But tell me now you have become great girlscout officers what do you do.P Ophelia town is a very small place, and it doesn't seem much worth for our armies to occupy this unusual territory wi ith such big Glandelinian armies c oncentrating here.What do you do all day, when there is a battle for instance, and none of you can go any further than your own prospective sighal and ot her observation posts? and when you first came within this army time must a have hung heavily then."

Angelinia Aronburg had a particuler objectin asking so many questions, for she wished to learn their ability the more, and she had no suspicion of the feffects her words had upon Anna herself who said;

"Gertrude, you will know sometime anyhow, and so I'll tell you myself, and let you judge whether we consider the situation a happy one.You know of course that though we command them here we ourselves are not Vivianites but Lagorians.You know of course too t hat we learned that we are in a poor situat ion here with so much supplies cut off.I do not mean that we do not have enough to eat and wear, but we often have to make raids to get supplies, and that our situation here ma es as much difference as it does elsewhere.General Vivian is keeps his army here through the orders of Violet and her sisters, and gen eral Hinderin e keeps his bigger army further to t he right , and talk as you please of the nobility of the army, the army must have plenty of provisions and ammunition too and there are lots of girlscouts with within this army, no better off than we are, with just as good an education, who frequently come to us for help because their own food supplies have run so low and we had to make raids to secure for them and us.You ask what we three did when we became officers.I'll tell you.At that time the army was very busy, for there was much fighting, so dangerous too and fierce that we and our followers were forbidden to go too near the battle so zones, but nevert heless we had to work on our signal duties at some location thought to be safe, but we suffered plenty of losses for our efforts.

One of us went to Captian Sue Granger to get orders from her and learned too she had been wounded.That happened at t his old battle of Big Girl Knool.

I tell you I was mad,and I've always acted as a dangerous sniper against the enemy ever since, and I shall be so glad yet if we get out of this situation, for I hate it, and we are just as good if notbetter as any of t hose confounded Glandelinian child scouts who try to interfere with our business.T hank God we are not as low as that, and God forgive Forgive the poor fools if they would only repent.T he Glandelinian girl and boyscouts called the "Rices" are highly connected with some of the best scouts of the enemy belonging to t he "Gerald Starring" Gangs, and are mighty dangerous, nearly as dangerous to our cause as we are to their'rs' ty t theirs ."

Here Anna paused to take breath, and Gertrude who had listened to her wonderingly said;

"And does your friends, Mildred Manning, Su Susie Farrol, Ethel and Gracede linia and others share your opinions.?"

"Of course they do!Why shouldn't they for all the experience they have had. And so does Angeline Richee.T hey are big spies, and one of them is general Vivianias daughter.Don't they often go to general Manleys, to general Federals, and ot her Glandelinian armies, and do lots of work and find out plent y of information.?T hey know Gerald Starring and his three companions better than any of us do, better than Penrod or violet and her sisters do, and say those three are to be left alone if t you wish to contin ue living.Yet such people can never understand why girls like me feel as I do.Ethel and Grace laughed at me when I proposed to try and have Gerald Str Starring overhauled, and say that we are placing ropes around our own necks and hanging ourselves if we go and try that and so then the boys must be dreadfully dangerous.Gerald Starrings mother is in the Glandelinian army and also helps him in his career.You know perhaps that it was reported thatiGerald Starring shot Adeldefob and tried to cause Manley to capture Violet and her sisters during t he battle of Big Girl Knool.?"

Gertrude flushed to thecroots of her hair as she replied;

"Yes I know, but their safty c depended upon Timothy Groveton, and by his conduct he rescued them and outwitted Gerald Starring easier than supposed.But I supps supposed he had a dangerous adventure of it --even though he said he had help from Jannie, an d some general by the name of Turmer--even if the busin ess was not dangerous ."

"There is where you are grandly mistaken"said Anna."His position to rescue them depended upon his own cra ftiness entirely and not how much help he had.He only got the information from Jannie and general Turmer and did all the rest. And is it justified that general Manley should have tried to cut off their hair so Tim could not have found them?Of course not.T hey're wmperor Vivians daughters just the same, and thank God Tim so easily rescued them.They are the best litt le girls on earth, and looked up to, and admired and run aft er by us and the whole army, and you are great too because of your relationship to them.

Miss Aronburg I once heard a stranger say to Sue Granger about who about you"Who is that stylish looking girlscout, and she replied"It is Miss Angelinia Aronburg; her uncle is a great christian general, and I heard him say that he wished you were his own daughter as he believed you were one of the best girls he had ever seen.T he stranger--a foriegner from Ireland, was so attatched to usa girls and boys that he was loathe to leave our camps and we let him stay for he was good to us.When he heard wh t had heppened t o poor Violet and her sisters he was as mad as a hornet, and said if he can he was going to join the army and show the Glandelinians some Irish way of fight ing.His name was Aurther George Mic-Cann . After all he turned out no fighter--no. He was taken prisoners with two otheters some time ago when I and Violet and her sisters were spying on the enemy and when called down for shooting so many Glandelinians single handed which astonished us to hear he surprised us more than ever by telling t hings to that Glande linian tribunal that not even I or the Princ s Princesses or you have never ddared or thought of telling Glandelinian gen erals before.Of course it was nearly shocking language but well meant and deserved to those Glandelinians.He told the Glandelinian generals that they and their whole Glandelinian government and nation can go to the"Hot world"! and told them very st strongly too."

Here Anna stopped a moment, and Angelinia Aronburg scanned her very closley from head to foot deciding mentally that she was good looking and had about her a certain style which would attract any number of good boys tward her. he too was a refined girl by nature and education, and Angelinia who in many things was farseeing for years for her early y a years, saw readily the difficulty under which the Sanders girls labored.They were naturally and beautifully refined, ala a calert as owls or eagles, andgood to every friend about them, and while they took pains to be careful of every one under them, t hey also had no haught inessa of manner, the language of the girls were first class, and free from slang but was full of harsh but just and righteous denun ciations of the very people or Glandelinians who did so much harm to violet, and her sisters and full of praise for those who did so much to defend them.While Angelinia was thinking all this, Jean herself said it;

"I wish those poor Vivian Girl Princesses would quit so much of this dangerous adventuring against the enemy and only do a little more or the same sort of work we do which is decidedly safer.They surely had come near going for good during the awful battle of Big Girl Kn ool when Gerald St rring recognized them and fought Adeldefob to get them.A few days ago a boyscout by the name of Francis Radcliffe had appeared within our lines, asking me and Jean and others about Violet and her sisters and Penrod."

"Where did you say Francis Radcliffe was?"Angelinia Aronburg asked rising up so suddenly from her reclining posture, and looking earnestly at Jean(not bean)) who replied;

"F Francis Radcliffe had recently returned from general Manleys army coming here to be sure violet and her sisters hadescaped Manley through the efforts of Timothy Groveton.He has done plenty of work for the christian armies, seems to be the equal of that Adeldefob boy who is no other than a famous christian boy spy too, though I do not know who he is,, and whom violet and her sisters think so highly of, and suggested that Adeldefob should some day meet Penrod.Why Heavens. How excited you seem Gertrude dear.Do you know Radcliffe?"she asked, as Gert rude sprang up quickly, her cheeks flushing, her eyes sora sparkling, and her whole appearance indicative of pleasurable surprise.

"Francis Radcliffe"she repeated."The name is the same and he is a famous chris tian boy spy too, you say, but it cann ot be my---- t it cann ot be Radcliffek for the last I heard of him he was in Angelinia Agathia, and talked of going to Abbieann to solve a nother mystery there, but it is singular that there should be two boyscouts of famous sort, Adeldefob and Radcliffe.What do you know of him?Is he in this part of the christian army or elsewhere?"

"I know nothin g except the name "Jean said, astonished at Gertrudes interest in and evident liking for that st range boyscout whom Jean hardly had ever met face face to face."Is Radcliffe your friend?"she asked; and Gertrude replied; "Yes he is my friend,-----the dearest I ever have had,, and he is beautiful too, and has the lo e loveliest face for a boy I ever saw, with soft blue eyes and golden hair like mine ....."

But Gertrude how came you so intimate with him, and he never knowing you?" Anna herself as ed asked.

"I do know him know him a very very long time ma way before the war came, but it is too long a story to tell you now."Gertru Gertrude replied."I have kn own him since I was a very small child.I never thought anything about him being near when Manley t ried to make viol t and her sisters prisoners t hrough the effort of that snake Gerald Starring.He is educated and refined, and good and true with not a single low instinct in this hant nature, and th t is what constitutes a boyscout."

"Anna shrugged her shoulders incrediously because in her own estimation though she did not feel it good to mention it t to Gertrude Radcliffe was a girl in disguise as a boy, and was more refined and educated than Gert rude thought, but she made no reply and Gertrude continued;

"I shall take steps at once to ascertain if this Francis Radcliffe, you speak of is my friend, and if it is, and if it is merely a matt er of coming here because he is worried about the saft h safty of violet and her sisters,I think I can make these e people and frien ds of mine happy, and I am glad you came for I will need you to help me.We must turn the tables on the enemys of violet and her sisters no matter what happens."

Before Anna could reply, Minnie Sanders came in and apologi i gizing for her long absense.

"I did not mean to be gone for more than a min ute"she said."But Mrs Rooney caught some sneak hiding in her pantry supposed to be a spy I guess trying to overhear when we would have to say, and I had to arrest him. He tried to claim he was no spy ,and if I had notbeen watchful he would have got me inthe doorway before I could look about me."

"A spy in the kitchen.Why was he there for, and sent by whom?"Gert rude asked in astonishment , and Minnie replied;

"We found written papers in his possession, and it was written thereon that a number of glandelinian agents disguised as christian soldiers and even scouts are within our lines tryin g to secretly apprehend or kill violet and her sisters because they are charged with capturing an d running off with Adeldefob.Why Gertrude dear what is the matter, you are as white as a ghost"she continued, as with a long breath or gasp, Gertrude clasped both hands to her forch ad, and leaned helplessly back in her chair.

"It's nothing but what you told me it is so dreadful"she said faintly"Spies here trying to get violet and her sisters because t hey're accused by Manley of running off with Adeldefob.What for, and then who is Adeldefob? Why did they not act wise a d and leave him alone?Was there any reason why they captured him?"

"Reason?I cannot tell"Minn ie ret urned."I capt ured the man in a room back of the Kitchen .After he was captured he would not take notice of us but only looked sullen, treating me and the others as if we were only the dirt under his feet. When we questioned him as to the papers found in his possession he declared Manley intends to capture or destroy Violet and her sisters because he they ran off with Adeldefob and one of their accomplices shot and wounded Gerald Starring, and one of them t ore his face with a whip and finger nails.But surely Gert rude dear you must surely have kn own something about it, though Jean here and Jack t oo--that reports were circulated everywhere that Violet and her sisters and T imothy Groveton capturedthe boyscout and then started for the christian lines thinking no doubt he was a glandelinian.It seems strange that you never heard of it before, and so never knew they were in grave peril.Is that so?"

"It was a direct question, and hurt Gertrude cruelly, suffering as she was mentally.She applied a wet cloth to her throbbing temples, and then in a voice full of anguish and yet with something defiant in its tones, she said rapidly; like one who wishes to have a disagreable task ended;;

"No I did not know that such a thing was occuring, n obody ever t old me.Darger should have kn own as the camp is full of Gemini and ought to do something"Said Jean.

"T hat's smart but just like him"Minnie interposed, but Gertrude st opped her short and said;

"Hush girls.I will not hear the Gemini blamed for anyt hing.T hey are doing their best now.George Zimmermon warned me of some danger threatening t he Vivian Girls and I was worried every s ecver since.If it is true they captured and ran off with Adeldefob they may have acted hastily and foolishly, but they are the dearest and best of girls to me.George when he was wounded did not talk much ever, but now since I kn ow that it is reported they're after the Princesses because they ran off with Adeldefob,I am not surprised that George did not have a chance to tell me, how t hey done it or anything who Adeldefob really was.I suppose he knew it would pain me, and so he let me think the situation not as bad as it seemed, as I always did---"

"Yes but when you started for Ophelia from Calverine, he should have told before he got fatally wounded.He know you would have t o hear of it some time"Jean said; and Gertrude replied;

"Yes and he meant to tell me when we reached Ophelia.Hevtried to tell me when he was dying of his wounds, tried to tell me so hard.I know now what he meant when he once said;"When it comes nec essary to defend the Darlings of the Nation do so at any cost--and I do-- I will-I will-- and I'll stand by Violet and her sisters through everything and you three girls and T im must help me"and Gertrudes eyes, where the great tears were standing, fairly blazed as she defended Violet, and her sisters, and Minnie cried a little too, and her animosity tward the enemies of violet and her sisters was so great and t his silenc e of the situat ion seemed so like a fresh insult, that she too was ready to fire up in an instant , and when Gertrude said"It is painful for me to hear it, and still I wish you to tell me so I can plan accordingly, and that you must tell me all I ought t o know about the news.Why did you say it is flashed in the reports they ran away wit h Adel Adeldefoh"and Minnie began with everyt hing she had heard from the prisoner who was forced to confess."And I never have met such a situtation as I have to day"she said"I wouldn't wonder if all of our dead girl and boysc outs wouldn't stir in their graves if they know what I know now.If I had had the chance I would have horse whipped that Gerald Starring for causing such a report to go t hrough for there's a fight in my make-up.My two brothers Jim and Will Martin Sanders, were as prize fighters against the enemy, and though bot h are only boys could lick any two Glandelinian soldiers single handed.They are dead now both of em died in the battle of Cedarvine, doing boyscout duty for their country, got killed on a signal station, and if they were only living they would be a great help to us now."

"Yes oh yes" Gertrude said f i faintly neither knowing h what she said or what she meant only knowin g that every nerve was quivering with excitement and mental pain and fear, and that she felt half crazed and st unned,with all she had heard of the danger Violet and her sisters were in, that they were falsely a ccused of doing.Nothing had been o mitted, and she knew all about the secret foe angents and spies within the christian lines, one of them was captured by Minn ie and others at large.The papers found in the possession of the spy had been turned over to Court Mark Marshall no one operated just then by Jenn ie Turner.

The situation was dreadful, the dangerous pride of these spies and the in excusable sil ence of George Zimmerman with regard to the news and of t he peril of Violet,and her sisters.T here was nothing more to t ell, and Gertrude c ould not have heard it if there had b en.Proud and high spirited as she was against the foe, she felt completely crushed and humiliated, and as if she could never face the world again un less she prevented the danger.And so! in what she had heard there was nothing true to the report s at all.And it was so different from what she had believed.By and by when she could reason more calmly, she would feel differently and see it from a different standpoint, but now she felt as if she could scream outright if she saw Glandelinians trying to carry off her friends.Minnie on arising to go said she was glad she had captured thi this spy for now she had issued orders that all strangers not giving a good account of themselves should be immediately arrested, and t hat she and her two sisters could understand how crushed, and broken - heart ed and t errified Gertrude felt, as she fled up the stairs to her own room after their departure, and throwing herself upon the bed sobbed and moaned in a paroxysm of grief and despair.

"And now secret spies and here t hreatening t o assassinate them"she said"They belong to me and I won't have it.They're said to be disguised as boxers, and boyscouts and bakers, shoe shiners and nercy knows what.Why did I not come sooner.It is dreadful but I must do something to save them if I get killed myself."

Just then ear caught the sound of horses feet galloping in the yard and starting up from her crouching position among the pillows and pushing back her heavy golden hair from her forehead, Gertrude listened intently feeling that she know who the rider was, and experiencing a thrill of joy when a few moments later her boy scout aide-de-camp Pierre brought her a military card with the name of Jack Saunders engraved on it.T aking the bit of pasteboard in her hand she examined it critically, and pronouncin g it all right in every respect announced her intention of going down t o meet him.

"But Miss Aronburg, your dress, your hair;Jack Saunders on a very superior boy scout now"Pierre said, but Gertrude cared nothing for her dress then, nothing for her hair, which had again fallen over her shoulders. Combing her hair into better shape and refixing her ribbon, she then went hurriedly down into the Libary ~~Whereof Jack himself in his best approved man ner of a young boy scout likes to dress his part when appearing before a good and high girlscout general,~~ where Jack Saunders was awaiting her.He had got himself up in the most approved manner of a young boyscout who likes to dress up before girlscouts whom he adores and loves and highly respects.From his short purple cut away uniform coat to the tips of his black boots everything was faultless, and his fair but stern handsome face impressed you with the idea th that he was fresh from a perfumed bath, as with his soft military hat under his arm he stood leaning on the mantle or mant el and looking curiously about the room.She in pink and white dishabile a good deal t umbled and mussed, her hair loosely over her shoulders, her cheeks flushed and her eye lids swollen and red, showed pl plainly the wear and t ar of the last few days.And still t here was a gr at eagerness in her face, and her eyes were very bright,,,, as she stood an instant on the threshold looking intently at Jack, as if deciding what manner of a boyscout general he was.Some thing in t he expression of his face, which won all heart s to t rust him, won her as well, and when he stepped forward to meet her, she s w ni went swiftly to him and laying her he ad upon is bosom as if he had been her brother sobbed like a litt le boy baby child.

"Oh Jack, oh Jack,I am so gladhyou have come at last."she said."Why did you not come sooner as you could have been with Minn ie and her two sis ters.Oh I'm so glad to see you, and find you just like poor George."

Jack did not quite know whether he felt complemented or not to be likened to poor Ge re George Zimmermon, but t o say that he was astonis ed faintly portrays portrays his st ate of mind at the novel position in which he found himself.

Although very warm hearted and affectionate he was not naturally very demonstrat ive, or if he were t hat part of his nature had never been called into action, except by Jean , Anna or Minn ie.All the girlscouts were very por proud of him and more than fond of him but they never caressed or petted him, and only kissed him who wh n parting with him or after a long absence, because of his unusal bashful ness.At to all girlscouts of his acquaintan ce he or they had also kissed in friendly token, he had always been very polite to ev ry girl he saw or knew always attended their parties and dances with ot her boys, and assisting them to their horses, and yet he was wholly astonished for here was a very superior girlscout, superior above all next to Violet and her sisters, sobbing in i his arms with his hands clasped in hers, and her face bent over them so that he could feel the touch of her burnin g cheek, and the great tears as they wet his imprisoned fingers.And too he knew this was not all for herself.she gave no thought for herself.It was for violet and her sisters.and with that queer perver sity of any boys nature Jack liked it, and drew her closer to him, and felt his own eyes moisten and his voice tremble as he said gently and pityingly as little girls themselves are wont to speak;

"Poor litt le Gertrude Angeline, I am sorry for you For I know how you have suffered for four of them, and you have heard bad news too Minnie Saunders told me.She was here this morning and thank God captured one of t he agents.We have already captured thirty of them.She is the kindest hearted girlscout and will do anyt hing for us."

"Yes"came faintly from the neighborhood of his hands, where Gertrudes face was hidden for an instant longer, then slowly freeing herself from him, and stepp ing slowly backwards she looked at him fixedly, untill all the t ears left her eyes, which twinkled mischeviously as she burst into a merry laugh and said;

"I will be honest with you Jack dear, and let you know just how bad the situation is.I didn't like the n ews but I know it is true.Oh I know you are horrified, and will hate me and think me awful if I don't tell you the truth, but Minnie said many secret spi s are disguised as our own child scouts with the intention of assassinating Violet and her sisters for as it is feared kidnapping Adeldefoh."she contin ued as she sank int o and easy chair."But you can't under stand how sudden it is all tobme, who k never knew they could be in such dire peril.I'm afraid spies might try to even disguise t hemselves as the Vivian Girls but it is not believed they can unless there were Glandelinian boy or girlscouts who could make themselves of the same faces and equal beauty.And to be t old all this;;;"

"What have you been told?"Jack asked and she replied;

"Everything I am sure, and if there is anything more to hear I wouldn't care to hear it unless not hearing it hinders our efforts to prevent dis disaster. I know about what happened within the Glandelinian army concerning Gerald Starring and Adeldefoh, that Tim Groveton helped Violet and her sisters escaped with Adeldefoh, t hat Adeldefoh is Penrod, but the enemy don't know it, and the results of his disappearance I can't even guess, but news came of their runing away with "Adeldefoh", they're accused of kidnapping a high Glandelinian boy Prince , and that spies are here trying to apprehend them and recover him, worse than all the rest, unless it be those dreadful International spies wh o may also be detailed to get them, and they're two dreadful beasts.What were their names? I cannot remember."

"You mean those two spies who resemble so much in Natural life the persons of the Comics called "Mutt and Jeff" in li looks and size."?T Jack said, having heard the description of them only yesterday for the first t ime in his life.But he would not hint that he had been that ignorant of them."You mean"he added those "Mutt and Jeff "rascals ed called N ero Profania.I forgot the other ones n ame but Nero Profania is the main one and the Jeff fellow.but they can't hu rt us and they wouldn't dare encounter you.They had one experience with you nand don't want another."

"I know that but something hurts me cruelly."replied Gertrude clinching her hands together"And you don't know how much I hate it all--hate everybody among the Glandelinians--and I want to fight and tear general Manleys hair; get hold of that Gerald Starring,; that would relieve me but it would not rid the Vivian Girls of their awful secret and unknown enemies."

She looked like t he little fury she was as she beat her hands in the air, and T Jack said"You don't surprise me by taking such a strange view of the matter because we all do. Penrod will be up soon and we'll warn i him of the danger.

But don't be too hasty Gertrude or we'll plunge ourselves into such danger too that we won't be able to aid them.All strangers who could not give proper satisfaction to questions asked them are already apprehended and we expect to appre end more.I learned of the danger from Minnie and if you would only look outside you'll see we're apparently besieged by all the boy and girlscouts war .we know in person.They're not to let anybody in there who have no pass signed by the Vivian Girls themselves.I gave that order.If I didn't have the pass I myself thouh known could not have come here.Now can you not understand that in our vivisnite camp we jump to any conclusion, and so nobody is going to get at them, and let also t he possession angels help us protect them.It does not matter to us who the agents are for we ordered them all to face firing squads.We'll end this threat to the Princessan for good and all and prove how dangerous we are to their enemies, open or secret, and that they can't put one over on us.The Glandelinians thought by having strangers h ere they would be hard to find.It does not matter so much as to where they are, we catch them by the fact we trap them.No Glandelinian under any conditions will make the sign of the Cross.All who refuse t o do so arrest.When I first heard the news I puzzled my brain over it to know what it meant, understanding at last that it was another version of that part of the Nicene Catechism which tells us to do our duty in an y state of life which God has called us.And Gerbu Gert rude dear you should look on the brighter side of things, and not worry so because you receive news of some plot of the enemy which you know we can all easily nip in the bug before it sprouts ad give in so hotly and went to fight and tears some rascals hair, because that Gerald Starring double crossed Adeldefob because he righteously would not give Violet and her sisters up to him.You will only excite yourself to illness Gertrude and will be in no condition to do a thing for them or us..And can you not understand that within the christian lines where we boast of our own Athenaanian democracy, there is no such chance of agents succeeding against us if we are watchful, or if there is any danger of it , th the peril is so deluded deluded and mixed that the original element is hard to find.

"Honor and danger from no watchful condition ring} Soldier not well your part , there all t he honor lies."

That u used to be written for me in my copy book in school."

"I'm sure I don't know what you mean by talking poetry and Cat echism t o me" Said Gertrude almost tartly."Who knows those dangerous Glandelinians more than I or Penrod does"and she had a half lu laugh in her eyes, where the great tears were shinig. shining. Jack smiled a little, for the situation into which it was believed violet, and her sisters had fallen shocked his heart sorely, he was bound to defend them through any sort of peril(not pearl), and he replied}

"Yes I kno w all that, the situation is peculiar and unusal, but as according to those two In ternational spies they do not harm you one whit , in fact they as you know wouldn't dare come near out child scout camps.They don't fear soldiers but they dread us.Therefore we can do anyt hing we desire for Violet and her sisters, and though circumstances are against them, we can pull them through.They never had a chance to have a happy moment since this war began they had to work hard for the Countrys cause all their early lives, and we we all know we di they did it well, and t o us are some of the kindest little girls in all t he world, and some day you ,I and all the rest will appreciate the fact and think ourselves fortunate t o have been able to defend them litt le girls, and even through our efforts even n ow n o harm shall come to them."

"They shall never come to harm."Gertrude replied"I can never get used to seeing what they have gone through. You know you are one of the best of the boyscouts we have next to Timothy Groveton, t hough at your early career you were a litt le awkward and did funny things to us and got us a litt le mad at you.But you have turned out splendidly, for you are now like all the rest, and I do think you are very good t o stand there planning things for me, when I wanted you so badly to come to me, and you have really comfort ed me, and smoothed most of the trouble away for me , and you have brought good information too, andyou have done for us and then that nobody else has ever dared to do in t he face of the enemy, and sometime ago as my uncle showed me in a letter, something happened to Violet and her sisters, and you said you would pay t he enemy back, and yet you paid back ten times worse than you threatened.Everybody likes you Jack, and I like you so much too.But you are afraid though t hat you did not succeed so well in your purpose as you would have liked. I see it in your face, and you are a Timothy Groveton too, and the Vivian Girls love you and so do I."

As she talked Gertrude half rose from her chair, and in her excitement upset a bowl of water, which went plashing over t he floor.Then sinking back into her seat, she began to cry pir pitiously as Jack had never heard a girl cry before.

Crossing swiftly t o her side, he knelt down before her, and talking her flushed tear stained face between his hands, kissed her upon er forehead, and lips, while he tried to comfort her, assuring her that she n eed not worry for them

, thethe was sorry for t hem and her, and would do anyt hing to help her apprehend any one who tried to do them harm.

"Please be comfort ed and don't worry so much please don't Gertrude"he said"And let us be part ners in our efforts for I assure you I and everybody else too likes even you and we can con spire against t he enemies of the Vivian Girls and put them into plenty of hot water."

"But how are we going to do it "she said."Uncle always told me to be careful in all I do, the enemy is more dangerous these days than usual, and they got two dangoo dangerous Glandelinian girlscouts called Queenie and Margery, and they ar and that Gerald Starring and his gang are t he only ones I fear, for he once licked me and ten others in a knife fight and he single handed.I wish you could help me capture those two girls if you love me and them Jack."

"G e rtrude by jove, we all do love you, and so we will seal the compact"The boy scout said, touching again the sweet girlish lips which kissed him back again without the least hesitancy or t oken of coyness.And so t hey planned it up, t hese two highest child scout leaders of all Jack and Gertrude, who had planned desperate means to prevent violet and her sisters from harm on the occassion of their first interview, and Jack picked up the bits of broken china and wiped up the water with a piece of clot h he found, and t old her that he could conspire with Tim and his friend Walter John Harrison and the three Saunders girls. She then asked him to throw op e the blinds and let in the light and then sit down where she could plan something.For an hour or more they talked together, and Gertrude t old Jack everything she could think of with regard to the cause of the disturbance, and asked his numberless questions concerning the n w news of the supposed kidpo kidnapping of Adeldefob.

"I'd be ashamed of myself if I do not succeed in fooling t he enemy."she said"And I'm going to do all I can, though I don't believe I can do very much at the start.Anna Saunders is the kind of girl to help me as she is fierce.But what ails her Je Jack.There is something wrong for I never saw a girlscout who is so bitter against the Glandelinians as she is.Is there something pertaining only to t he trouble of t he Vivian Girls my cousins.?"

"Yes but somethin g else too"said Jack."Her father a good honest hard working mali once at the request of jean adopted a little child slave girl, whom the three Saunders girls became attached as if she are their own little sister. Well that litt le girl was murdered by Glandelinians en end—"

"What!"And Gertrude looked up quickly"She adopted a litt le, girl slave and she was murdered}"

"No"answered Jack sadly"H Their father did.But not only that but in defending her they injured her mother so that she always has to use crutches.""Jack knowing she would rather hear the truth from him than any one else she didn't know t old her all he had heard from the three Saunders girls concerning the tragedy, andthat ever since Anna, who is the spitfire of the three h as always hated the Glandelinians bitterly."

"And so too"said Gert Gertrude with a sneer"They go murdering little children people adopt too." and the t ears rushed to her eyes again.

"That is so"smiled Jack,"But that fact though in my heart in really feel sorry over it it gives us all the help we need.She'll strike for us any day we ask her too.She is d has done so before. Just once give her a chance"he added"and she would ride over every Glandelinian soldiers head, and fix Glandelinian generals wh worse than we could ever think of doing. And besides she was a great and still is a great assistant to your Disguised sister Radcliffe.T hey usually work hand in hand and its only since a few days ago t hat Ann a has come to the camp.Get her to work for you for the safty of the Vivian Girls and believe me she'll with the help of Radcliffe make a fool out of the enemy."

"I feel some times as if I could, t hat must be the fire in me"Gertrude said laughingly, and then she spoke again of Ann a, who Jack said was sensitive and fearsome of the welfare of the Vivian Girls, and his allusion to it reminded Gertrude of what Anna a had said with regard to Radcliffe, and she questioned Jack of him, and Jack said}

"He's not h in our camp but he's coming.I'll send him to you as soon as he does come.He'll come to me first as he notified me he would.But we never let on who Radcliffe is.Violet warned us not to."

"Oh if Radcliffe were only here I should be happy.You don't know how I love her, she is so sweet, so good, and beautiful and such a loving brave sister. We have been little girl soldiers and went to girlscout school together and really she's my equal in terri terr r t errorizing the enemy.She is so busy t hat I never saw Radcliffe but once or twice, and she is almost like me in looks and form but is a little taller.I'm the oldest but she is taller.She had almost killed general Manley one time I think and it would have been good for the safty of viol t and her sisters if she had.Oh if she would only be here. When will you see her?When are you going to general Hanson's army.! "

Jack could not t ellwas his duty didn't let him go.He had intended going at once, but since violet and h r sisters had been in secret danger he had changed his mind, and too t here was something in t he litt le girls which attracted him more t han all other things, and he said it was uncertain when he would make the trip to general Hannaidus army probably not for two weeks or more as he need to stay, but he said he knew where Radcliffe was and would sent him a code note to come at once!-and getting up from his chair he went over to her desk and with pa per and ink wrote a note and addressed it to Radcliffe.

"Oh I'm so glad"said Gertrude frankly"for I do want to see him so bad.Are you could to send it."?

"No."He said."I'll telegraph it myself from my office when I reach my headquart ers. You know you cannot tell who the cou i courier may be."

"It is real nice of you to have come here"she added with equal frankness "And I'm glad if I could see you every day.We must be great friends Jack, and I know you'll help me in everything.Will you do it Jack?"

"You bet your life I will"was his reply as he t ook in his t he hand she offered him, feeling strongly tempted to t ouch against the little girlish lips which pouted so pretti ly, as she looked up at him.One taste of those lips had intoxicated him as wine or brandy ht oxicates the drun kard, but now there was a womanly dignity in the little girl generals manner, which made him respectful, while she went on to tell him of her good intentions.She was going to plan something with t he three Sanders girls, especially"Spitfire Anne" and she should commence by callingthere that very afternoon, and Jack and T im should go with her.She would order an early dinn er, at half past one to which Jack should stay, and then they would take a gallop ito t own after warning Penrod what was taking place so he would keep his eyes open and his ear open on the alert.

"You have noti nothing to do but stay with me.Your duty will not suffer!"she asked and Jack replied that the duty he had to perform was that he was doing now, and that he was at her disposal to crush out the enemies of violet and her sisters and show the foe that even he and Gertrude were not to be t trifled with.

"Then I'll interview Mrs Rooney, and have dine or on the big piazza which overlooks the river, and the meadows.T hat will make it seem like some French Chateau des Fluers, where Penrod said he are out doors half the time in Canada" she said as she disappeared from the room in quest of Mrs Rooney who heard with astonishmen t that dinner was to be served upon the north piazza instead of in the dinning room and that the Vivian Girl Princesses and Penrod will attend.

But a few hours experience had taught her that Miss Aronburgs ways were not at all the ways she had been accustomed, and so she assented without a word while Gertrude went next to her room and transformed herself into a most stylish uniformed little Minnie.Indeed how lovely she was in or uniformed yellow silken dress, with a uniform sleeveless k jacket, with her yellow waist sleeves coming through very neatly, her hair arranged in a hanging heavy golden curls which were fashio fastened at the back of her h ad with a scarlet ribbon , while a knot of the same ribbon was worn at her throut.As she came down st airs, and came near the Library where she had left Jack she thought she heard voices and Jack speaking.Astonished she slowly opened the door and got a shoc k.Jack was surrounded by soldiers and a strange man was in the center.

"Yes I8ve got all the information I needed"shecheard him say."He is a spy full and sp simple men and he was hiding under this table all the time that I Gertrude were in here in conversation.I was glad you answered my wh stle whistle as promptly as you did.Those papers I found on him are very important .He tried to find out who I and Miss Aronburg are and what we intended to do concerning the "adeldefob"situat ion.Take him away boys and I'll have him examined by the T ribunal."

Oh Jack"came from Gertrude as she strode into the room. Jack and some of the others turned around.Jack had thought her bewitching in her wrapper but when she tripped into the room in o her new attire he start ed with surprise at the transformation but yet did not lose sight of the prisoner or lose caution.At the sight of thewhalf dozen men and the prisoner there was a bright flush on cher cheeks, and her eyes shone like stars, as she smiled at Jack but looked daggers at theprisoner.She had her sun hat in her hand for she had inted intended to lead him out into the grounds, with the purpose of showing what improvements she could make in er her plans for the litt le girls but this scene upset. her plans entirely.However Jack would lose no time the spy was marched away, and on er her qu stioning he said;

"Why it happened this way.After you ran upstairs to chage change your clothes I happened to desire to look at a book you left on the table.I couldn't believe my eye sight, but I wondered what in the world were those two shoes doing in that position under the table.I got suspicious cumpicious right away and went over and looked under gun in hand.A man was lying t here and he listened to all we said.How he got in is a mystery to me.He might have been here before we st arted talking."

However she was not at all worried since the spy was captured since now he reallly would not escape.

To avoid being pestered by spies(n t not pies) Jack had started wit h Gertrude a peculiar idea but in answer she said she could not change the general appearance of t he botvand girlscout camps if she t ried.The only way she could do to cause a sure apprehension of the agents is to take a r new registeration of all boy and girlscouts by the old names, and if new n ames were answered to to arrest them immediately and hold them untill t hey could prove they're not spies.She had at first planned to add two n w new camps, and only enlarge the numbers of the regiments by allowing the junction of other divisions, but otherwise she had wished the troopers t o remain as they were, when Violet and her sisters first originated them, but t hat to make the columns undergo a change would not cause the apprehension of the spies and agents.Put she had near t he headquart ers special guards selected only from the boys and girlscouts she knew in person who were to act as strict sentries on the winding walks and terraces, and flower plateus, to even stand on guard by t he fountains, and statuary gleaming among t he ever greens.Her idea on making this go through was on a magnificent scale, and Jack listened to her breathlessly till she had finished in telling what she had done and then asked if he had any idea if this would work.

"It ought to work."said Jack.

"Indeed it has to"she said, arching her eyebrows and pose a little, as she scented disapprobation"put what if it doesn! We have a great detail of boy and girlscouts I kn ow, and whatever was right and perfect Violet and her sisters or Penrod never den e denied me anything.And besides Jean ie Turner is the boy and girlscout matron and she has all t he registered names of all those whom we know and therefore if we have those amongst us whom the names are strange we can easily apprehend them.I mean to fill the interment camp with strange scouts and find for proof who they are, and Heaven help them if they're Glendelinian spies looking for a chance to do t he Princess an har harm, and you must stay here most of the time and h lp me see to things, or would that interfere too much withyour military business- ----your profession!"

This was a second time she had alluded to his business, and yet Jacks cheeks were scarlet as he t hought of t he unknown dangers Violet or her sisters were facing and he would have had a feeling of shame in the presence of this active energetic girlscout general if he would have backed out of any adventure now. Put he would not do so and answered that any other business he might have can be canceled y untill Violet, and her sisters were completely safe. At that moment breakfast was announced ,and with violet,and her sisters and Penrod also coming down they all went together on the north piazza, wh re where Angelinia Aronburg presided at one end of the table, Violet and her sisters on one side of it, and he and Penrod on the opposite side. Grace was said, and then during meal only Jack and Gertrude continued conversation, Violet,and her sisters and Penrod being silent but carefully listening nevertheless.

"I don't intend to dine out this peculiar way just to do so for my own way" Gertrude said"It is just for the sake of fooling spies and where we can keep our eyes open .You remember Minn ie captured one here this morning, and then you captured another within my library."

Jack promised to dine wit h her every day when he was not too busy.

"For our safty, not always here"she said"but around in different places----under the trees---and in the summer house, and everywhere where we can keep her eyes keep our eyes open."

Against the enemy she was the fiercest kind of radical, always seeking something new to outwit spies, and Jack felt that to follow her would be a good scheme he was ready for it (don't take a fit), ready for anything, ready to jump into the lake if she said so, he thought a little later, when he saw h er in her riding uniform mounted upon her snow white horse with violet and her sisters and Penrod upon theirs, while Gert ruden horse held its head up so high, and st epped along so proudl as if conscious of t he graceful burden she bore.Angelinia Aronburg and violet ,and her sisters were fine horseback riders, and sat the saddle and han dled t he reins perfectly, and the nine of them made quite a sensation as they galloped into the main of the child scout encampments near Ophelia, and then galloped into the town in possession of a part of the christian army and fully in possession of the Vivianite child scouts who occupied the houses, and with a strong body guard in attendance, for Angelinia Aronburg though Violet and her sisters slightly protested, insisted stubbornly and determinedly that one should accompany them for their own safty as a kind of bodyguard.

Their first call was upon Timothy Groveton , who came out and stood by Gert ruden horse as he talked to her, marveling at the change in this sparkling brilliant creature from t he tear stained swollen eyed little girl he had seen so early that morning.She told him of her immediate plans of improvements, which he she had issued orders to begin immediately, and which Jack said would bring about good results and insure the safty of Violet and her sisters.When she want ed a thing done for them she wanted it, and would T im go forth and see Jennie T urner at once, as she had no time to look over all the registered names now.she talked as if registered names of child scouts grew on bushes, and yet Tim listened to her description of the unknown perils of Violet and her sisters aghast, for unless he did something himself, there was no hope for anyt hing as Jennie Turner was far away at Big Girlknool.The repairs of the encampment itself too had cost enormous work and there were still work to be accomplished.Of course Colonel Colatons death would of course also retard matters a little, but it was impossible to even delay anyt hing for the anger little winsome girlscout generals and for the safty of violet,and her sisters, all of whose eyes were looking straight int o his own. When o he told her that Jennie Turner was too far away Gert rude suggested he ought to write to her and have her come, for she could be them in charge of the registeration, but he answered that if he can get the books he could save the day by looking over the registeration i himself, and apprehend all new comers who do not answer to the names.

"Good idea"T im"said Penrod himself."you are the berrys for t h eworks.Go ahead.The Registeration books are in her headquarters.Summon everybody for roll call and read off t he names."

Gertrude then said she would like him to hold every one who is a stranger, and added "Jack has sent a telegraph to Radcliffe. She knew "Adeldefoh"and I mean to find Radcliffe and I and Adeldefoh can work hand in h hand."

Penrod grinned but she did not notice it .

"How about finding little Ann ie Aronburg your sister!" asked Violet not knowing t hat Gert rude had no sister by that name."She was killed by three Glandelinian generals."

"It is funny everybody believes she's my dead sister"said Angelinia Aronburg. Well I'm going to see Radcliffe about t hat myst mystery, to inquire about that litt le girl Annie Aronburg.I'll admit I did have a small sister her name was Angeline Aronburg but she was never murdered by any one to my kn owledge and to be able to murder her would be a profound miracle.She knew you and your sisters even if you didn't know them or her, and I mean to find her if she is alive. T hey call her Angeline because she acted to everybody who is good like a little angel.But her name was Rose.Not that it matters much but I'll unravel that Ang Annie Aronburg mystery"she contin ued as they rode off,"And I'm getting quite sat isfied since I know T im Groveton and found out what he can and does do.I hope Prince Penrod you would not ever get jealous of him.He sure seems a good boy."

"I am a litt le jealous of him in one way" Penrod almost retorted."He doesn't keep as much company with us as we wish him t o.He will now because I and my sisters drafted him to it.He is a litt le shy of us since he had seen my sisters as they really are and not in disguise for he said he couldn't believe they're real humans but are angels in disguise."

"He'll get used to t hem bye and bye and won't want to leave them ever"laughed Jack, and then Angelinia Aronburg dropped her voice a little as she said t o Jack-

"Would you mind showing me the new addit ion to the encampments of the Vivian ites general Viviania had made, and then we'll go to see Minnie and her two sisters and interview especially Anna!"

Jack could not show her the new addition, for though it was erected somewhere he did not as yet know where it was, but he could show her the way to t he headquarters occupied by Minn ie and her two younger sisters, though since the shock of the battle of Ophelia it bore no t races of what it used to be.T he Building was long and low, shaped like many of the New England houses, but it looked deliciously cool and pleasant under the tall elms and pines with its plats of grass and its sweet old fashioned flowers trying to renew their bloom because though it was December the hot weather still persisted.It was no hot weather how ever it was the hot spread of Heated air produced by the far distant forest fires.Minnie Saunders too and her sisters in their clean excellent uniforms, with their hair curled and the top part combed smoothly back made a different picture from what they di in t he morning.The three were delighted to see the eight Princely children and Jack too, and also Gertrude, and Anna took them all over the house, from t he parlor where she said general Paul Risaitor and Fred Hethertonlawere brought when mortally wounded in the battle to the room where Anna said she still retained the bed where the litt le child lslave used to sleep before she was murdered, and showed the litt le bed she had occupied, and the chair she used to sit in.

"For the sake of the poor litt le dear my sister Minnie wanted me to get some new furniture"she said sadly, as they stood in the quiet room"And my dear mother could afford it as well as not, and therefore we got it, and I still retain t he bed and furniture, and take it always with me when ever the army moves and place it in any new headquarters we occupy, and somehow it seems to make the poor little girl seem nearer to me to have the things she used to handle, and so we keep them with us, and sometimes when we are lonesome for those days that are gone, and for the poor little girl that is dead I come up here with them and we sit awhile, and I think I can see her as she used to look, when I waked her in the morning, and she--she--she --lay there on that ---pillow, smiling at me like--a fresh young rose, with wit h her hair falling over her pretty eyes, and then sometimes we cry and wish we had her back, though I know she is so happy in Heaven now, and some day we shall see her again, for we are good, and we do try to do the best we know how.Poor Maggie, dear little Maggie, dead far away from here and because of those dirty Glandelinian murderers, who also made my mother a life long cripple when she tried to save them.Oh I'll get even ."

Anna was talking more to herself than to her min e visitors or ten rather and the tears were dropping fast from her eyes, and her little but rough hands were tenderly patting t he pillows, where she had so often seen the dear little head of the child now dead.But to Gertrude or to Violet and her sisters t here was no roughness about t he hands, no coarseness about the little girlscouts and all else was forgotten in that moment of perfect accord and sorrow and sympathy and the eyes of the Vivian Girls and Gertrude ju t just about rained t ears as they tried to comfort Anna.

"Blessed Princesses"Mi Anna said."I thi Thank My Dear Blessed Lord for sending you to us, and that you are good and true like our Dear Lord loves you to be."

This was too much for for Angelinia Aronburg who burst out impulsively; "T hey are too good to be persecut ed as t hey are by the enemy;I couldn't cant hardly believe it is true if I didn't see much of it with my own eyes.These Glandelinians are as bad and as wic ked as they can be, and I'm going to confess it all here in litt le poor little Maggie's room room hoping she can hear me, and know I mean to trample their enemies under my feet.I am proud and hot against t he foe, and felt like fighting snakes yesterday when I heard of the near t ragedy in general Tecumseh army and Gerald Starrings treachery, because it was so sudden, so unusual, and this morning when I heard the news the Glandelinians are trying to get you little girls here because you're accused of carrying off Adeldefoh I rebelled again and wanted to scream, but I'll not let it happen, and I'm going to guard you all wit h my life if need be, and if possible I'm going to make you oh so happy;and now please all of you please go away and leave me for a litt le while."

Violet and her sisters, Penrod and the rest understood her, and all went out leaving the girlscout leader alone in the low humble room which was used as an imitation of little Margarets as the little girls right name was.Kneeling by the bed, and burying her face in the pillows, Gertrude sobbed like a chipped baby, and asked the little child slave to beg God's intercession in helping her successfully guard the safty of her seven beautiful little cousins, whom in her heart she knew did not deserve all they had and may yet suffer.T he prayer did her good, and as hers was an April nature,when she was wrong good she was as bright andplayful as the sweetest natured kitten when she went down the steep narrow stairs, and bidding the three girls good morning mounted her horse and with Jack, Penrod and the Vivian Girls started for t he headquarters formerly ued used by Jennie Turner.T hey found T im was not there, and neither were the books and that proved he had started to work right away on the roll call.They however found one of the girlscouts within very hot and nervous over some plan that must be finished that very night , and oh which anot her girlscout was helping very willingly . Through an open door, Gert rude caught a glimpse of a disorderly breakfast table, at which a boyscout was sitting in his shirt sleeves regaling himself with wheatcakes, and raw onions.

"Come Michael"The girlscout busy at the plans called in a loud shrill voice"Here's the Prin cesses with their brother and Miss Angelinia Aronburg and a boyscout." T he boy came at the call.His face was pleasant, and his manner was kindly as he shook hands with them all, and said he was glad more than anyt hing to see them and told them that all t he scouts were loyal and would defend them. Gertrude saw saw that the boyscout belonged to an entirely differ nt regiment than his own he was of the Mascot Regim nt, a very powerful and fierce organi ation which t he enemy dreaded still more, and when t hey were going over Jacks headquart s headquarters at the knoll she said to Jack t hat she felt as if she was back sliding awfully.Is there not a couplet "she asked"which runs thus;

"The devil when sick, a saint would be;
But when he got well never a saint was he."

"Now the enemy is just like that.Over at Ann a's I felt as if I could sink through t he floor at the news of the little child slaves death.T hings are so different fro anything I ever saw.But oh Jack, and Princesses is the whole of Glandelinia so wicked that it would not sink down through the earth into ut t er ruin..Now t oo this suits me, this is more like our own headquarters"she said as she followed Jack through the house.

Jack showed her his own bed room and every portion of his house.They all followed him through every portion untill they came to his own room, where on the table he found a telegram from Emperor Vivian, which was as follows;
"Come to us at once as I must let you signal to the corps here for a while as I intend to retain positions here at Big Girl Knool and push another portion of the army through t rward Jenn ie Richee. And Radcliffe needs you."

Emperor Vivian."

He read it aloud to the girls and Penrod, and Gertrude exclaimed;
"I am so sorry, for now I shall be alone, and I mean to have you work with me every day for a week."

Jack was sorry too, for Gertrude and Violet and her sisters had made sad havoc with his heart during the few hours he had known her.But as Violet and her sisters did not decline and said Jack must obey their Fathers surmons for His orders is their order, there was no help for it, he must go, and he was anyhow very willing for there was no more company that he liked better than Emperor Vivians, and violet and her sisters knew it, and therefore gave Jack that honor. So that very forenoon, when the Tantrdi Line train still open bound for Emperor Viviane army at Big Girl Knool left Ophelia, Jack was in it on his way to t he t o n with the promise he would speak of the situation to Radcliffe.

Miffe Radcliffe was not a boy to day. Ann abell Aronburg had never been seen yet by any one as her former self untill t o day, and then she wasn't known as Radcliffe but believed to be a new girlscout, and some mistook her for Angelinia Arong Aronburg as she resembled her a great deal.
And besides her sex because of her rank(not spank nor hank) Ann abell Aronburg occupied the handsomest rooms in Emperor Vivians headquart ers, not only because of t he fact of her rank but she was Emperor Vivians n eice as w ell Angelinia Aronburg, and General Aronburg was his brother in law. From the effects of the heat caused by t he forest fires "Radcliffe" as we may still call her yet was slightly ill, and on t he afternoon of Jack Saunders arival she lay on her couch at the open window, occasionally looking out upon the water of the Aronburg Run River listening to some heavy cannonading going on n ear Jennie Richee, but her beautiful eyes were fixed mostly and fondly upon o her handsome boy friend who alone knew her disguise or not, and who sat by her side, fanning himself with a fan he had carried and her too, and answering t he numerous question s of osome more lov lovable girls and friends of t he Burroughs at this camp, concern ing Violet , and her sisters and An gelinia Aronburg, whose narrow escape from the ene y through T ins help had taken them so by surprise and yet made them so exultant. N How were t hey aft er their awful experience, and how did they look.Were they still badly upset.What did they wear that caused crazy Gerald Starring to discover t hem.What did they do when "Adeldefob"was wounded by Starring, and what boy and girls outs were to occupy their new headquarters at Batt le torn Ophelia?"

"Don't hurry a chap so please don't"said Jack wiping t he sweat from his forch ad."T here's a lot to tell and I'd better start at the beginning but for the loveof mike give a fellow a chance in such awful African Weather.Phew I thought this was thewinter month of December but it feels like July in Algeria."

T hen he described the first arival at the station, where all the girl and boy scouts were waiting in mor mourning uniforms, and Anna Sanders alone was gorgeous in her best uniform, while poor T im who had worked before recievig her flourished with a dirty face andvtorn soiled pants and bleeding han ds.

"Oh you could have seen her face, when shegot the news of the peril Violet n and her sisters had been in and were still in.I tell you it was rich, and will be the m ans to bring them the saft y and protection we always longed for.I never saw such eyes in a human beings head as Rose which flashed upon one and then upon another of her informants.I tell you comrades dear it's no idle boast. T he enemy no matter who t hey are sure have a right to fear her."

"Do you really mean she never heard of that adventure of Adeldefob and the poor Princesses at all untill she came?"both Ethel and Grancedelina, Mildred Mann n ing and susie Farrol asked in the same breath, and Jack replied by telling them everyt hing which had transpired since Angelinia Aronburgs return to vivianias army up t o the time he had left her at her own door, dwelling at length upon her sparkling beauty, which he said made him almost think she was a likeness to K Joice Vivian herself.Some might think her on e of the Vivian Girls who didn't know her, while others would believe she was an imitation of them, but Jack too who had seen the rich warm color come and go on her clear olive cheeks, who had seen her dark blue eyes flash, and sparkle, and dance untill her whole person seemed to shine and glow like a new rare diamond, she was supremely beautiful next to t he Vivian Girls, and he dwelt upon her loveliness, piquancy and fresh ness, while every one even "Radcliffe"listen d breathlessly(for she liked to hear her sister praised), but not so breathlessly as a girl in an adjoining room, who sat making some changes in a uniform dress, Mildred Maxwell was to wear when she drilled her boys and girls the next day.The door between the two rooms was only sl i slightly ajar, and Angelina Richee had not heard a word of the conversation bet ween the boy and the girlscouts, untilli her earcaught the name of Angelinia Aronburg, and also that of violet, and her sisters, followed soon byt he adventure within general Tamerlines army. T hen t he work dropped from her hands, and a sudden pallor crept into her cheeks, which ordinarly were like the sweet roses in june .

"Angelinia Aronburg, with Violet and her sist ers, and the their cousin."she whispered . Is there another name like that in all the world?Is it my friend "Gertrude Angeline", My Angelinia Aronburg, t he dearest best friend I ever had next to poor Violet , and her sisters . Impossible.She's in Calverine with general Aronburgs army, for if so what can she be doing at Ophelia, where I have thought to go sooner or later."

T here was a death like faintness in the hear t, of this girl, whose whispered words were in English, and were scarcely words, so softly indeed were they spoken.

"Gertrude Angeline, Gertrude Angeline ."she repeated as with clasped hands, and h a head bent forward in the attitude of inten se listening, she heard the whole story Jack told, and laughed a little to herself at theludicrous description of Violet and her sisters believed by Manley t o have "Kidnapped Prince Adeldefob" , and the impression t he strange report was even making throughout the whole christ ian nat io nation itself which believed the report with admiration while Manley was so furious as to sent angels with the purpose to try to apprehend Violet and her sisters in any way they could ."I can imagine what hor cold and haughty, and proud she grew, and how these great eyes blazed with scorn and fury as she must have heard of the recent plight of Violet and her sisters if it is really Angelinia Aronburg he means"she thought."But it cannot be.T here is some mistake.she's in Calverine with her uncles army."Then as the name of Angelinia Aronburg was spoken, she half rose to her feet and laid both hands upon er mouth to force back t he glad cry which sprang t o her lips.This girlscout general, t his girl from Calverine, this cousin of violet ,and her sisters was her friend Angelin ia Aronburg, whom she loved with such devotion, as few girls have ever inspired for one another.There could be no doubt any longer. How she longed to rush into the next room and pour out question aft er question concerning her friend, but this she could not do, she never had a habit of butting in upon somebodys elses conversation for any reason whatever, and she realized she could learn must as much if she remained quiet, for the present at least and continue her sewing.so she resumed her walk or work while the talk in t he next next room flowed on, always as "Gertrude Angeline"as Jack called her, and in whom all t he girl and boyscout offic ers were so greatly interested.They had intended t stopping here for t he remainder of the nedge of Big Girl Knool and Jennie Richee, but now they spoke of going to general Vivianias army on the account of the Princesses and Gertrude, a plan of which for the saf y of Violet,and her sisters Jack highly approved, for he would far be there No than here where he could do a lot to frustrate their enemies, especially as "Radcliffe was improving daily.

"And Jean, Anna and Minnie Saunders?How are they"Gracedelinia asked."Do th ey volunt eer to help as they take so kindly t o t he eight girls--or are they still ignorant of their coming?"

Jack told all the truth, and then this mention of Anna reminded Jack of the "Ann abell Aronburg", who had written to Minn ie; and in whose indidenty with Gert rude Angeline had been so much inter ested.N udging Ann abell so she would be on er guard for the present and say nothing; he said;

"By t he way, there's a great Abbiesnnian boyscout, a special friend of Prince Penrod here in this army somewhere, A George Radcliffe, recently come from Manleys army, whom Angelinia Aronburg says she kn ows, and over whom she goes into rhapsodies.Do any of you know her, and is He or she theyperson I mean who wrote to Minn ie with regard to t he situat ion that Violet and her sisters are in?"

"A warning"sh--sh--sh--sh-h-h-h"came from Radcliffe herself, with q nod tward a slightly open door which was not open before, and Jack was on his feet and out the door in a hurry.A strange girl was just stealthily slipping away but Jack drew his pistol and cried;

"Halt.You're a girl maybe but I'll fire anyway .Halt I saw you by the door sneaking off."

T he girl of ccurse had to halt, but she gave a satisfactory explaination and proof t hat she was not spying, but really only listened from curiously or curiousit y."

"Well for the love of God don't be so foolish "said Jack."You must be mistaken for a spy and shot.If you wanted to listen then why did you not come in."

she del declined however and Jack seeing by her face and eyes that the girl was hon est and true let her go on her way.But then the door howeverwas shut aft er he came in and they lowered their voices, and Angeline Richee being seen was called in, and the wonder and interest of all increased as they heard all which Angelinia Aronburg had said of Radcliffe, whose taste andskill they esteemed so highlythat t hey had suggested him going to general Vivianias army, but then did not know s he had written t o Minnie, for the supposed boyscout was very reticent concerning her self and her business, and only spoke when spoken to.But they said they had heard she was here but had not seen Gertrude disguised sister yet .T hey didn't even know they were in the very room with her and that she was lying on the lounge pretending to be sleeping.

"It is very strange though t hat Angelinia Aronburg doesn't know who Radcliffe is."Ethel Mic-Cammy said."I mean t o sound her on the subject if she'll tell anyt hing and hear what she has to say."and as it was time for Radcliffe or Ann abell rather t o take her airing outside in her "in valid chair, t he conference broke up,and on pretext on seeing her dress Mildred Maxwell went into the room where Angeline Richee now sat again, sewing as quietly and composedly as if she had never heard of her friend Angelinia Aronburg. If there was not any descriptions of her before she was a ten year old beautifully looking golden haired girl, though some of her curls showed a little reddish gold, and an interminture of burnish gold and golden brown(not night gown), and lustrous brown eyes, shaded with long curling eye lashes, and heavy eye brows, which made them seem darker than they really were.T he features were finely cut and perf perfectly regular, and the whole face and figure of this girlscout however were not exactly the refine delicate type supposed to belong most ly t o the upper classes in whose veins t he purest of patrician blood is flowing but appeared despit e the beauty somewhat t ough as if she was a severe fight ing T om boy, and in fact she could look so sharply at you t hat if you did not kn ow her you wouldcringe. She was the size of a ten y ar old girl but was only nine, and she had an air of in dependence and self reliance habitual to persons accust omed to care and think for themselves.

Yet to all her followers, and all of her own side in general, her looks fooled you.she was as gentle and as good natured and as kind as a kitten, but to t he enemy she was a "maddog."

She had recently been in Angelinia Agathis on a furlough, but instead of taking her vacation she had gone to work to drill recruiting child scouts in the mobolizatich camps of Angelinia Agathis and then on e her t return t o general Concentinian Aronburgs army first gave the regiments to him to be a h a head of his own army and placed Gladys Wr Wentworth over them as their chief leader.she then had come to emperor Vivians army this moth of December but very early if not oily, and first at opped at general Hindernines headquart ers with her mother who accompanied her, who was tall, st out and also bl nde but rather repossessing in her manner, with more signs of culture and education that is usual with the ordinary t ype of Abbiesann ian women.She was very pretty and att ractive too, with bright complexion and large brown eyes, which had in creased their brilliancy, though t here was in them a sad thought ful expression as if she were continually haunted with some bitter memory, and also for the fear that some day her husband general Noro Vivianis Richee would fall in batt le.

I'll say he did---not. As An n abell Aronburg was a stranger to her, Angeline Richee in fact did not kn ow Radcliffe either) Angeline had been introduced to Ann abell by a friend from the Glandelinian army, also a christian spy, who had aided her in Manleys headquarters by disguising as a Glandelinian girlscout officer, but occupied as they were with so much dangerous duties, and the wild fury of the insane war around them, they had hardly thought whether Radcliffe was a boy or girl or not, untill Jack eletrified them with the news that Radcliffe was a very dear friend of Angelinia Aronburg, who everyone knew was also very beautiful.

"I will try to find Radcliffe myself"Mildred Maxwell thought, as she entered the room where Angeline Richee was sitting t. sewing with a deep blue flush in her cheek, and a bright eager look in the blue eyes or brown ey s rather lifted inquiringly but respectfully to the face of her friend.During the last ten minutes Mildreds thoughts too had been traveling back over the past to the earlier days of the cruel destructive war, when somet imes before the battle of Headrick Junction on the Cedernine, her headquart ers had been on the upper floors of a high farm house, where her days because of so much fighting from Pl Phelant nburgh to Cedernine were passed in loneliness except for the companions ip of her cat and some girl and boyscouts or which then she in charge of a great number.Her parents both mother and father were in the army her mother a Red Cross Nurse, her father a captian, and her poor mother was busy all day every day and sometimes at night at dressing the wounds of injured battle torn soldiers, going out early and coming back late, while her father commanded a Abyssinkilian regiment she did not know where, and somet imes it entered her little active brain that perhaps he did not command a regiment at all for on the days that she went out to do some scouting, as she occasionally did whwith her child scout superior, who had a whole division of scouts under h er command, and who looked after and was kind to the lonelier child scouts, she often heard of him as bein g a christian spy.Sometimes too Milder d had heard her mother slightly reproach her father for his chosing so dangerous a profession, and then there was some sad sort of conversation into which her name was dragged though in what way she could not tell.she only knew that after these sad intercourses, her mother was kinder to her than before--and said her prayers much ofternor.Her father too was kinder to her in his rough off hand way, and she loved him as she did her pretty mother, and when at last he died, shot at the battle of Cedernine while rallying a panic sti stricken column of troops her grief for him was violent, and never was forgotten, as probably the grief of many children are. T he loss of her husband made her poor mother lose her reason, and though she still lived she was in an insane asylum.

Among the first friends of Mildred Maxwell and also Angeline Richee, was their unusual boy friend George Radcliffe, the most dangerous christian spy in all the world, whose elegant home sometimes stood on the Common Street held by two order lies, while his housekeeper and also attendant talked to Mildred Maxwell of the military or uniform garments she had brought t o be washed for her little master, Radc liffe--garments when christian uniform dainty enough for a prince to wear, and which others had taken great pride in sho ing to their comrades. But neither girls had ever seen Ann abell Aronburg as she really was.But one morning when Mildred Maxwell was spending an o hour or two with the military landress, helping to fold the clothes preparatory to being sent to their quart ers the Man Laundress had showed her the lovely embroidered uniform dresses of t he strange beautiful little "new girlscout officer" and told her of the little blue eyed girl who occasionally came t here with her attendant, and seemed so much like a playful kitt en h in her quick varying moods, and who resembled Angelinia Aronburg a little but was a little taller.

"Oh how I wish I was with her, how I'd like to see her.Do you think she'd come up t o our room if you would ask her?"Mildred had said, and the Laundress said that she did not know, but would try what she would or could do, for t he stranger was very superior in rank, uniformed like one of the Vivian Girls and acted and appeared like one and had a rich high voice.Accordingly t he next day "Radcliffe"came to the Landury of t he camp in her scarlet hood and cloak trimmed with t he yellow border of golden silk and lined with quilted satin and wore a great big heart shaped hat , red on t he interior and yellow on top with beautiful decorat ions and bright feathers on top, T he Landress told her of the little girlscout whose headquart ers was in the floor of the farmhouse but on t he top, and who when not working with her scouts was alone all the t ime with only a few girls, and a cat, and who would like to see her.Radcliffe had known Mildred as assumed as a boy, and Mildred knew Radcliffe, but realizing who it was Ann abell understood that Mildred thought she was a new girlscout.

Too the cat and doll att racted her somewhat, quite as much as the litt le girl and giving orders to her orderly not to wait but to come back in a few hours or so with the horse, she was soon climbing up the steep narrow but perfectly clean st i stairway which lead to the upper floor of the farm o farmhouse. Mildreds fathers th n then had been living, and had been home to luch that day, and Mildred t hough scarcely eight years old then was clearing away the remants of their meal, and brushing up the hearth, when the door was pushed softly open and apair of bright laughing eyes looking at her from under the scarlet uniform hatand cloak and a sweet bird like voice said; "Annabell assumed her own natural voice then, and not t he voice as Radcliffe";;;

"Pl ease Mildred, may I come in.I'm Ann abell.T he Laundress said you lived up here all a lone when off duty and with your little kitten.Where is she?I don't see her.?"

Mildred Mildred was standin g before the stove a large broom in hand, wit h a long sleeved apron on e her 6n, which came t o her little feet and conce aled her yellow uniform dress entirely,,, while her black hair was hidden in a cap ca p she always wore at her work; to keep her head clean.At the sound of "Radcliffes voice h she started suddenly, and droppin g her broom gased a opened mouthed at th t he vision of loveliness addressing her so familiarly.T he mention of the cat struck a chord of sympathy, and she replied at once;

"The cat isn 't a she, its a he and his name is Tom.T here he is under my chair"and t he two litt le girls bumped their heads together as they both st ooped at the same moment to capture thecat(notthe hat) who was soon purring in Radcliffes lap as she sat before t he fire, with mildred on t he floor beside her, admiring her bright face and beautiful dresses.

"Out side of t he dearest Vivian Girls or Angelinia Aronburg, I've seen noone half so pretty as you are."Mildred said admiringly, as she t ouched the scarlet scarlet cloak.""I believe you're a Cousin of Angelinia Aronburg for you look like her a little."

"Oh my "Radcliffe "replied,,, with a great air of surprise."I have also three more beautiful uniforms.One is velvet lined [illegible] with rose color and purple on the outside, which I wear to Mass every morning, and when we go out on dress parades. But I'm not Angelinia's Aronburgs Cousin. I know who her cousins are but just now I don't tell, and cannot dare reveal my own self either for fear the Glandellinians will get news of it.Do you ever go to that big Camp Church on General Company Street No Ten ????"""//////"

"I ride there every time on Sunday, but I never went often as it is so far."was Mildreds reply, and "Radcliffe"rejoined;

"Then you shall have a good chance to go.I'll make my aidedecamp--take us to morrow morning which is Sunday.There'll be a crowd, and it will be so grand to Hear Mass.But why do you a girlscout officer and a captian do this work and wear that big apron and cap, which the orderlies is supposed to do it?"

Mildred blushed and explain ed that she wore them to keep her uniform clean; then then ridding herself of the undesirable garments, she shook down her rp ripp ling hair(o ut tear) and stood before "Radcliffe", who suddenly exclaimed;

"How sweet you are, with that black hair and those lovely blue eyes.I do not understand why mine too are blue, and my eyes look so vixen ish as my orderly says when I am mad at the enemy, as I am more than half the time if not always. But tellme do you really use this old shack for your headquarters, and at times when off duty stay all noone here with the little cat?"""""

"Oh no.It is said the enemy doesn't pay as much attention to an old shack as they do to a better looking one.And in a few words Mildred explained her mode of doing things to outwit the glandelinian scouts and patrols, which to the great girl spy seemed desolate in the extreme extreme .

"Oh that is dreadful "she said,"And I'm so sorry for you that you have to do so much dangerous work and not let others help you.But you ought to see the apartments in the headquarters of the Vivian Girls, where they stay and yet they don't fear the Glandellinian scout patro s patrols.Their rooms are just lovely." Mildred listened with rapy raptattention to Radcliffes description of the beautiful headquarters of Violet , and her sisters, and then as she said that Violet and g her sisters had gone to a Foreign school, she suddenly interrupted her with;

"Can you speak English."

"Of course I can "said Radcliffe . "I always speak it with Gertrude, who for the sake of the cause wished me to know it as well as Abbieannian.My own Mother could speak a little English, and died at Rome Calvernia where I was born and I went to an English school when Father was away, as he was a great deal, and I boarded at that school, and have had plenty of fun , because foriegners there didn't dare even say anything wrong to me for foriegner even if they temporarily are reiging here were afraid of Abbieannians."

"Oh if I only could speak English.My poor mother wished me to learn it, and told me I should try sandby, when she could afford it.She spoke it a little"Mildred said"and now she is dead."

There was a moments silence, and then Radcliffe said;

"I'll tell you what I am going to do.I feel batter now and can even travel on a horse once more, and Emperor Vivian told me recently he had more child scouts in his army than he knows what to do with, and I mean to make a trip to general Vivianin's lines and see Angelinia Aronburg, and you shall accompany me with a large regiment of boy and girlscouts."

"Oh I shall be glad and shall tell Angeline Richee to night ""Mildred exclaimed feeling unbounded faith in Radcliffes ability to accomplish anything.Nor was her faith at all shaken, when a few minutes later "Radcliffes" aidedecamp came up the stairs to the call of his little mistress, who horrified him with the announcement that she meant to go to general Vivianias army and take her new friend with her and a regiment of boy and girlscouts and as well an escort of cavarly.

"I shall if will"she said I want my commands obeyed not protested "she said as the aidecamp protested against it."I'm well enough to travel,I like her, I like them all, and I want to see the Princesses once more and Gertrude.We have been here long enough idle idle, and if you are afraid to accompany me you may stay behind."

The aidecamp knew better than to oppose the imperious girlscout general when in this determined mood, and besides there was something very winning and attractive in the black haired blue eyed little girl, whose uniform though more plain was becoming and faultlessly clean.She certainly was no ordinary girlscout and that beautiful face was no disgrace to anybody. So the aidedecamp rather than be left behind consonted, and with joy beaming in every feature Mildred brought out her old uniform cloak and hat, which presented so striking striking a contrast to the rich scarlet one of Radcliffes that she drew back at once, and with quivering lip said to the aidedecamp;

"I must not go.I am so dreadfully shabby beside her.I'm afraid she would be ashamed and that I am sure I could not bear.I have not had a new uniform for two years, and now I wish I could wear a new one and see how it seemed."

"You surely shall"Radcliffe"cried with great tears in her eyes."You shall know how it seems.We'll make believe you are one of my sisters"and before the aide camp could devine her intention, she was removing her own dainty scarlet uniform cloak and hat, and putting them on poor Mildred, who was too much astonished to resist , but stood perfectly still(not window sill), while "Radcliffe" wrapped the uniform jacket around her, and put the older uniform cloak and hat upon herself.

"Oh how lovely you are"she said gazing admiringly at "Mildred"and no how funny I look in the old uniform.Nobody will know but what you are really Ann Abell, and I am Mildred,,,"and she drg dragged the child childlessout down the stairs, and out into the street of the camp, where at the corner the two horses were waiting for the trip to emperor Vivians Vivians headquart ers first for she would not leave without telling the great King about it. And too "Radcliffe let her ride her own splendid horse(not hoss), and mounted Mildred,, looking awkward like a dowdy bit of humanity in the plain uniform cloak and hat, with the large rim hiding her pretty face ..... But nevertheless she enjoyed it immensely playing that she was Mildred, and made the guide to lead them straight for emperor Vivians headquarters.

" It was a "lovely" hot winter afternoon(when by this time for this part of Calvarinia there should be two feet of snow on the ground and 20 below Zero) and all the Vivianites and surrough boy and girlscouts, with many of their friends, and parents came to visit them many from afar, and others on the drill to show whatthey could do before their friends and parents were in a brilliant procession, and were gayly dressed in their best uniforms, and carrying the most splendid eq equipages.And among the latter none wathe more handsome or more noticeable than the fine bay, and elegant uniform of An gallain Richee, along which Mildred and Radcliffe now rode, they for a time from the brilliancy of the scene believing they were more giving a show than really being girl and boyscouts and going throuh through adventures luring a dreadful war, and yet enjoying it as much as if the two had really been the daughters of emperor Vivian, last and of only girlscout leaders. How happy they were for the time being, and they remembered how in days before, when she herself (Mildred) rode through Army Company Street in borrowed hat plumes for her head, which had stood out before her as the bright spot in her life from which dated all the sunshine and all the sorrow to, which never came to her.Not had it been hard for her to ever go back to her choose shossen humble headquarters lodgings--to give up the beautiful scarlet cloak and be Mildred Maxwell again, for she had so much now to think of--so much to tell her followers, one of whom she found waiting at the head of the stairs with a white scared look on this face, and an eager wistful expression in his eyes which seemed to look past Mildred,,, down the dark stairways as if in quest of some one else .

"O"Oh Jane Melfort dear"Mildred cried,"You are home early to night , and oh I am so happy.Heaven I'm sure can never be any bright er t han this morning has been to me, playing that I was Annabell, and wearing her scarlet cloak."

She was in the room(not boom) by this time, taking off her own old uniform Jacket, which she had put on in the court below,, and talking so fast that she did not see the pale pallor on Janes face or how tightly her hands clenched on the back of a chair as she at ood looking at her//////..

Jane Malfort had been dismissed from duty by her superior Angelinia Richeee a little earlier than usual, and finding Mildred her friend gone, had been to Mildreds Aidedecamps room to make inquiries for her.

"Are you sick"the Aidedecamp asked, as Jane dropped suddenly into a chair, when she heard where Mildred had gone and with whom."You look as if you had seen a possessed person."

Making an excuse that she was notill, and not feeling quite as well as usual which some case was the truth for the heat was bothering her, Jane soon went back to her own apartment, and kneeling down by the wooden chair before the fire cried bitterly, as people only cry when some great wrong has been done to them or their friends in the past or some great and terrible memory which they had thought dead and buried forever rises suddenly from the grave,, and confronts them with all the older horror.In the distance to the shock and loud rolling rumble of some protracted cannonade and shell storms.

"Annabell Aronburg, and Mildred together side by side."she said."Oh if I could see it------see her, but no I have promised not to reveal her identy to no one, and I must for the sake of the Countrys cause and to obey violet and her sisters to keep my vow.I dare not break it or God help me."

For a long time she lay with her head upon the chair, and then remembering that her superior whoowas also Mildred would soon be coming home, and must not find her thus she arose, and wiping the tear stains from her face busied herself with preparations for the coming meal untill she heard upon the stairs the bounding steps which always sent a thrill of joy to her heart, and in a moment Mildred came in with her blue eyes shining like stars and her cheeks glowing with excitement , as she talked of the wonderful things she had seen, and of "Radcliffe who she said, acted as if she was one of the Vivian Girls, that she was an un usal good friend of the emperor, who had chosen such a lovely headquarters, and Emperor Vivians wife was like a picture, as she sat talking to her and Ann abell ,and then she told how Annabell had sat on t hi th the hard old chair"and she indicated the one by which Jane had kn elt, and on whic h the tears were scarcely yet dried//

"This one?pid she sit upon this one."Jane asked eagerly, laying her hand caressingly on the chair where Annabell Aronburg had sat and talked t o ,ildred."And what is the very best of all"Mildred continued"She came spying on the Glendelinians in disguised as some clever sort of boyscout , and when I t old h r how much I would dare to do that too, and even wanted t o she said she'd t ome the Vivian Girls for the permission for me to go, as soon as we would ren h reach general Vivianias army and she knew she would get it too, for they like her so well that they give her everyt hing that she wants.Oh I do hope they will on this occassion.I mean to ask God to night to cause them to do so.I know I ought never must pray for what we want, but Jesus a through His Blessed Mother will hear and answer if it is for our good.Do you think He will?I' afraid I'm asking something may not be for my good.Does he answer prayers when he you ask Him for such sort of an adventure?"

"Oh Mildred, Mildred.I never pray for chances to do dangerous adventures.Don't do it Int Violet and her sisters decide for they know best.Pray for Guadiance only whether it is safe or not.You had had no e p experience and it would be dangerous for you."Jane replied, and seizin g her little friend she hugged her passionately, and reling ing kisses upon h her forehead and lips, released her as suddenly, and t urned quickly to hide her anguish from her.

W rriThereeve evening

That same morning Emperor Vivian suffering from his wound lay in his ham dsome bed at his headquarters, and trying to read a page or two in the book left for him on t he table beside the bed.As the reader may remember from the very beg ginning he was an unusually handsome man in his fourt ies, handsomer now than he had been in his youth, in fact more handsome still as he had rec ntly got rid of his b a b g beard, and there was a st yle and elegance of manner about him which attracted attention from every one.He was v ry popular of t he whole nat ion, and the only enemies he had were those who were fi fighting against him.He was not at all reserved and he was very communicative also, and people called him A second St Vincent, and he was not proud haughty nor misanthropical despite his high officer as emperor.N everthaless that he was not happy was evident t from t he shadow on his face--the shadow also that would seem of appredien sion , and as if some haun ting memory were ever present with him, marring every joy.He at t imes good as he was also had great fits of ang r anger and fury, especially when general Manley and his C on federates were ever mentioned.Even at Times Violet and her sisters, whom he loved more t hanenybody next to God had no power to chase away t hat brooding shadow, on t he con t rary, a close observer would have said that it was darkest when she and her sisters caressed him most , and when t heir moan or warmest bewit ching.Sometimes whenViolet or Jennie climbed into his lap, and win ding her arms around his n eck laid her soft warm ch k against him, and t old him that next to God he was the best and d earest father in t he world, and asked of him where Mother often had kept herself so long, he would spring up suddenly, and pushing her gently from him exclaims as he walked rapidly up and down the room;

"Child you don't know what you are saying.Your mother s and even your Aunt often remain safely out of the danger zone, while you and your sisters risk so much for me and the cause.I am very far from happy when you and your sisters have to chance these dreadful adventures, but you --you are my darling daught ers and I fear for your safty every hour.Oh dearest daughters I wish you could hid e out of ssight of t hese dreadful fo s but you are safer even doin g your adven tures."

On t hese occassions, Violet or any of her sisters would go away into a dark corner and with her bright curious sorri sorrowing eyes watch him till t he mood was over, and t hen stealing up t o him again would nestle do s closer to him and half timidly stroke his hot forehead and hair with her litt le hand and t ell him no matter how dangerous the adventures they went through she and her sisters loved him just t he same, and should forever and ever and even be careful for his sake.Violet and her sisters as the saying of t he slang goes was his"Idol" t he sun of his existance, and he always had lavished upon Violet and her sist rs all t he love of which a strong man is capable..Violet or her sisters could do anything wit h him, and justly take any liberty, and as he sat alone in his headquarters wherever he had been during t he after advan cen of his great armies, s he would be greatly surprised when t he door opened softly and a pair of little holy but roughish eyes looked in upon him for an in sant instant --then seven little white robed figures in their night t oilet, crossed t he floor swift ly, and the first one springin g in t o his lap began t o pat his face and kiss his lips, and write words upon his forehead for him to guess.

This was on e of his little daughters favorite pastimes since she had learned to write, and she or even her sisters had had great fun with her father making him guess t he words any one of them traced upon his brow.But he could not to it now untill she helped him t o the first three lett ers, whi When he she he made out t he name of Annabell Aronburg, and felt himself grow suddenly faint and cold for that was t he pet name of his Neice .But how did his dear daughters know it.How came any one of them by that name which burned into his forehead like letters of fire and carried him back to the meadows, and hills and shadowy woods of Angelinin Agathia, where His blue eyed golden haired Wide and Qu een had during peace t imes walked with him hand in hand, and whom he called Margery instead of Anne.

Guess "Guess now what is her name and who she is?"Jane le had said it one day holdin g her sad hands bet ween e her hands, and looking straight int o hu his eyes.

"An nabell Aronburg is the name."he said and his voice trembled a little so that noticing that she had never again asked him the name.But on this day now to m be mentioned Annabell Aronburg herself had come t o Emperor Vivians headquarters, and t old the little story of the little girlscout, who when not on duty remained all day with a small cat on the top of an old ramshackle farm house,because she believed it would not be a mark of enemy scout ing parties, and who so wanted so badly to go back to general Vivianias army with her, but dcould not because her duties duties tied her down, and had no means ither by which she could go.

"But sire you have ways of sending herand me" Annabell con tinued,"you said the other day you have more child scouts in this army then you know what to do with, as people all say, and as we're going to make the trip I want you to give me two regiments to accompany her and me, because I like h er--I don't know why exactly but I like her better than I do mys lf myself, and did the first minute I saw her.I felt as if I wanted to hug her hard----as if she belonged to me----and you will do it Sire I know you will.You'll send with us a good strong child escort of scouts and a h ghig patrol of cavarly to make our trip safe."

Emperor Vivian did not reply to t his, but asked numerous questions, concern ing his neices acquaintance with Mildred Maxwell, whose mother had been a Red Cross N urse, and finally expressed his pleasure of the undertaking.And so she gained her point from her mighty uncle, and the next day one of his Royal Members was sent to the place to make inquiries concerning Mildred Maxwell.As these proved satisfactory, arrangements were made with t he principal of the Cavarly q squadrons to be a patrol of the two girlscouts and the regiment to accompany them when they would go, but Emperor Vivian said to Annabell;

"You are never to do anything rash though on your adventure under any circumstances as the enemy is not to be trifled with t hese days"and she answered;

"Yes Uncle I'll be awfully careful.I'll keep my eagle eye peeled ever where every day during t he journey.We are bound to be careful as we do not throw our lives away recklessly."

And she had been delighted at the outcome of the proposition, and yet soon report s had arived that it was so dangerous for any one to leave the army that everybody had to remain within, and yet Mildred was Annabels avowed champ ion in everything and she st ood by her always, and fought for her sometimes when Glandelinians tried to attack anywhere within the surburbs of th e christian lines.In girlscout signal work too Mildreds followers were quick to learn, and easier to retain than even Annabell, and she soon outstripped her in all her military girlscout studies, and was of great service in helping her friend to master her lessons, and acquit herself acquit herself with a tolerable degree of credit. During the way days way before this scene at Ophelia, but for Mildred during scouting trips, who would go patiently over the lessons time and again with her indolent friend, Annabell would have been captured ot killed, for though she was famous as a spy, she was not particul rly good in her scouting adventures of experienced, and lacked thw appil appilication necessary to a thorough girlscout scholar.Once when she had gone out a little too far to make an observationof theland landscape, Mildred was suspect ed by a Glandelinian scouting patrol and found guilty of scouting or spying, and though she knew Annabell to be the "Culprit against the enemy", she did not retreat but with her small handful of followers, stood up bravely against the atac k attack t he Glandelinians made, and bravely faced the chastisement which was t o to be administered if she was captured.Mildred was very pale, as she and her followers hard pressed by the assailants took their place upon the platform of rock surrounded by a ledge as a last stand, and recieved a small bullet scratch wound on cher beautiful white arm, and seeing at a distance her friend and a great number of child scouts her blue eyes glanced just once wistfully and pleadingly tward thr knoll where at rest Annabell sat with her troop.

Somehow even at that distance Annabell was able to hear the sound of firing and saw at once what was occuring through her field glasses and ordering her column t o horse, went swift ly to the rescue, and before the astonished Glandelin ians knew what was happening, she and her followers burst upon them like a tornado and carried all before them.The Glandelinian leader was captured and Annabell had him by t he hair and collor, while she cried out;

"You vile nasty Glandelinian officer, I'll fix you and your followers whom we captured for this trick of attacking my friend and her soldiers.You may dare attack one of us but are afraid when there's a score.She wasn't scouting and you might have known she didn't do it.It was I, and I am the guilty one and would like to know what you are going to do about it.I did it, and she knew it and never told but gallantly defended herself.I'll have you beaten to a pumice if I want to and burn your followers at the stake."

And she ordered t he soldiers who formerly had defended Mildred to march the prisoners away while her column would retain the officer.

Over this incide ind incident all other Glandelin ian scout patrols had become dem-l demorilized as it were, and dared not come near the spot for f'ar of ambush, while within the christian lines all the child scouts thronged around Annabell and her prisoner, who became almost a s much a heroine as "Radcliffe "n had been to them and still was, not knowing she and Radcliffe were one, for though a girl now she had shown so much genuine moral courage and nobleaness. As it was despite the attack no one had been killed among Mildreds fo followers Ann abell did not kn ow what to do concerning the prisoners, so she wrote t he whole transc t ransaction to Violet and her sisters then near Cedarnine , who was at Hendrick Junction, and asked that as a recompense to Mildred, she be invited to spend the summer at their own headquarters, where at the time Annabell was going with her sister.To this backed by their father Violet and her sisters consented, but Emperor Vivian wrote that the officer should be hun g for the attack upon child scout s as a warning to others.

Nothin g could exceed Annabells devotion to Mildred from that t ime on, and when the army was concentrating at Big Girl Knool, Annabell stood by her st ill ,and found her situation as spy courier q a ,little too rigorous, she suggested that she retire from such dangerous services, and try the work on the child scout signal corps for an experiment, with-o without the formality of regularly learnig learning the trade, which would take so much valuable time.So Mildred set up as an amateur in the pleasant signal station districts not t oo close to the bat battle lines, where Mary Stanck had lived or worked since the death of her brother on t he battle field of Evangeline St Claire.It would seem that her brother, with his indolent habits against the enemy, had been a great draft upon his child scout followers, but it was not so, child scouts of his regiment were more numerous, and everyt hing for them was on a larger freer scale, so that their encampments was a very comfortable one, especially after their wonderful skill in fitting, and perfect taste in trimming of the beautiful tent decorations.N ow as in her school days, Annabell was not only her good angel but she often a had friendly visits from "Radcliffe", and brought her more gaun, and brought her more in rank than before.Once and only once did Annabell meet Timothy Groveton who seemed to rather believe that she was Angelinia Aronburg who transformed herself a little with disguis e, and that was on an occassion w on s e came to see Mildred and found her busy doing some scout signal work, and that the boyscout was directing a lot of other scouts scouts near by.She rode up to him and said;

"Tell Mildred I am Miss Annabell and that I will wait,, and she mistook the boy at first for some sort of Prince he was then so beautifully uniformed.

"Miss Angelinia Aronburg.Gertrude Angeline."the boy exclaimed, t urning quickly and coming close to the little girl, who was surprised at once at this familiarty by a boy she did not know, but she replied as sweetpy sweetly and as gently as possible-

"You are mistaken my dear boy.I am Miss Annabell Aronburg her dear sister. Tell your friend Mildred I am here, at once will you."

"All the blood rushed to Tims face at once, and his voice shook as he said;

"She is my little girl friend and I'm Timothy Groveton"and he went to get Mildred.This was before the battle of Big Girl Knopl, and not long aft erwards Mildred startled Annabell by tellin g her that she had learned through some cause who she really was, and therefore now respected her that more and loved her immensely since she learned she was the cousin of Violet and her sisters and t the sister of Gertrude Angeline.Never had they been seperate since that day and when poor Annabell t ook sick because of the t remendous heat she t ook care of her and brlu brought her back to health.Such was the part in the history , when Mildred entered the room where Angeline Richee was sewing and after moving about a little and inspecting the trimming of her uniform dress, began hesitatingly;

"By the way Angeline Richee dear, Jack Squ Saunders has just come here telling us about a famous boyscout called "Radcliffe, who has just come wit him our own christian army, and who says he knows Miss Angelinia Aronburg and Penrod.Is it possible that he means Annabell.I'm suspected that right along but never could have guessed it before.Oh---h-h-h--Don't let her hear us yet."

"Oh I cannot dare tel' not without Angelinia Aronburgs, or the consent of the Orincessas"and Angelines face nevertheless was all aglow with ex-itement as she looked quickly up. "but Mildred I do know who Radcliffe a isand where he is, and too you must es excuse me for the door was open, and I could not help hearing some of the things Jack said------he talked so loud; but I do know who and where Radcliffe is but I dasn't tell unless I had permission.You must understand t hat because of the reason it must be kept a secret its a death pen alty who for who ever frevesls his identy without permission.But I kn ow who Radcliffe is and have often been with him when he turned out as the girl she is.Because of the uniform she usally wears I call her "little queenie."I always called her tha t because she lade me do so.She is one od t of the dearest friends I ever had in both she and so on,and I have loved her since that dreadful wintry afternoon at Dalights Junction, when she brought so much sunshine int o my then lonely life(not wife)--when she came into my humble headquarters, in her scarlet rich uniform, n and sat down beside me, and not only acted as if I was her equal but removed her best clothing and changed with me and helped me at my work and let me keep the uniform.And she has been my good little angel ever since.She persauded her Uncle to send moto some school, where she was then a pupil and learning a litt le English.She got me a situation as captian of girlscouts and encouraged and stood by me and others, and in creased t he number of child scout recruits for me untill I had quite a regiment.Oh I would die for An gelinia Aronburg and her sister."

Angeline Richee had talked rapidly, and her blue eyes were almost purpl e in her eagerness and excitement, while Mildred listened to her intently, and thought indeed how beautiful she too was, and wondered too when or where she had seen a face like the face of this fair girlscout leader, whose accent was so pretty, and whose manners were so perfect .

"And Annabell is the cousin of Violet and her sisters too."Angeline said it"T hat is strange, for I always understood that Concentin ian Aronburg only was her Uncle."

"He is by M"rriage"said Mildred."His wife is Emperor Vivians sister.. That makes also then Emperor Vivian and His brother as her uncles and the wifes of t he Emperor and Hannon as her aunts.Emperor Vivian's main o home is in Marcuecian city in An gelinia State in the T ropical sector.Did you ever see Emperor Vivian!"

"Very often.I often spoke to him.I met him often on chorseback with his retainers. I was once riding wit h "Radcliffe" on chorseback, and to my surprise he made him stop and speak to us.He was very fine looking and very gentlemanly and never proud and reserved as Emperor Vivian t Emperors usually are, but I t hought h e sai sad and gloomy, and I believed he was worrying much over the saft y of his daughters who so often go out on dangerous adventures ."

Jane Mellfort had returned by t hin time, and entering the room, joined in the conversation asking many qu questions of the condition of the Vivian Girls and their experience within general Phallinia Tamerlines army, which however Angeline Richee was surprised for she knew nothing about it .

"Is Angelinia Aronburgs sister pretty."Gracedelinia herself asked, and Angeline replied;

"You might think she is prettier than her sister Angelinia, but when she is excited and animated, she like her sister Angelinia or like the Vivian G irls sparkles and gows, and flashes and shin es, as if t here was a blaze of light encircling her, and then n ext to Violet and her sisters she is more beautiful than anyt hing I ever looked upon, and she takes your breath away with her brilliancy, and brightness.But she is t errible when s e she gets really angry and you can't do nothin g with her."

"You must have heard her speak oft en of her dear mother"Mildred said, and Angeline replied;;;

"Yes many times, and at Calverine in their old home t here was a lovely portrait of Mi Mrs Aronburg, taken in beautiful colors.she was very beautiful. I was suspicious of Annabell because there is a resemblance between her and that portrait."

"go you know where that portrait is now"Mildred asked, and Angeline replied that by nearly six years before, the portrait had been sent t o Emperor Vivians palace for safe keeping and that probably it is still there."

It seemed so strange to Mildred, Gracedelinia, and Jane that Angeline Richee should know so much more than t hemselves of the Vivian Girls and their relations and for a lon g time they continued to ply her with questions concerning the second cousin of violet, and her sisters, a cousin whom the two others had never seen but which Mildred and Angeline had very often.After a time Jack Saunders came sauntering into the room in his usual easy manner with only the purpose to get somet hing of his he left there and would have gone immediately out as he was busy but Mildred called him back(put in the sack), and present ed him t o Angeline Richee, whose blue eyes scanned him curiously, and question ingly.She had heard enough of his conversation to guess that he was already far gon e in love f for these nine Royal children, and she was anxious to know what manner of boyscout he was.Yet something in his manner and the expression of his face fascin iated and awed her strangely, while he in turn was equally drawn t ward her ,and when at last her work was done, and she started for her own headquarters Annabell accompanied her and Mildred, and Jack exclaimed under his breath as her especially watched Annabell going down the company street ;;;;;;

"By Heaven , Ethel and Grace, if I had never seen Violet, and her sisters or Angelinia Aronburg,I should say this little Annabell was the loveliest little girl I ever saw.Look at that little figure, and the way she carries her head. I don I don't wonder Angelin is Aronburg raves over her, such eyes, such golden hair like Violet or her sisters, and the best complexion I ever saw ...."

Meanwhile little Mildred Maxwell, was walking rapidly toard h r her own head quarters,,, where she and Mary Stanck had rooms.

"Oh Mary dear"she began as she took off her uniform hat and cloak(not coat) and began to arrange her enamel up hair before the little mirror,"I have such news to day.Annabell--Angelinia Aronburgs darling sister-------is h ere."

"Here.Annabell Aronburg here, and her uncle"Mary s claired springing to her litt le feet as if mildred had slashed her. But Mildreds back was t ward her, and she did not see her agitat ed she was or how dead bly white she grew at the reply.

Her Uncle Aronburg arrived at Ophelia to reinforce Virginia there just as the army reached the territory, but Angelinia Aronburg left t he army and went to Virginia's instead and is staying with the Vivian Girl Prin c esses.."

"General Aronburg at Ophelia"Mary Stanck repeated, as she dropped back in her chair, while the hot blood surged for a moment to her face, and then left it pallid and as gray as the face of a corpse. Something unusual in the tone of her voice att racted Mildred, who turned to look at her.

"Why Mary Dear, what is it , are you sick ?"she cried crossing swift ly t o her and passing her arm around her, as she leaned back heavily in the chair.

"I have been very dizzy like all t he morning.It is nothin g mildred it will soon pass offf."Mary replied truthfully, t hough she did not tell the more serious shock that mildreds news had given other. But when Mildred insist ed that it must be the heat and that she must lie down, and be quiet, Mary did notrefuse, but suffered her friend to lel lead her to the long lounge and bring her the hart shorn n and camphor while she prepared an ice bag to placd on her hot forehead .

"It 's not t he heat Mildred dear"she said as a shiver like an argue chill ran through her veins.I'm feeling more cold than ho I must be hon est and say t he news you gave me gave me a shock.There that will to Mildred dear, and now sit down beside me, and let me hold your hand, while you t ell me of your friend an d the arival of general Aronburg and his neice,, and how he managed to arive, and who told you..It will interest me, and make me forget my bad feelings."

So Mildred sat down beside her, and t ook t he hot hand which held hers wit h a grasp which so was agast less actually painful as the narrative proceeded, and Mildred told all she knew or heard from Jack, and from Angeline Richee.

"And to think her sister was or is Annabell Aronburg, t hat her Aunts and Uncles too are the Vivians and th her neices t he Vivian Girls, and that Angelinia Aronburgs headquarters is that of the Vivian Girls in Ophelia, where I and Angelina Richee thought of going.Oh if I could only go t here now."Mildred said, but Mary Stanck did not express surprise at anything.On the contrary a more suspicious person than Mildred would have said that the story was not new to her for she occassionally asked some question which showed some kn owledge of Ann Annabells antecedents.But this Mildred did not observe.She only thought Mary was ill from the heat, and was glad when her closed eyes and perfect ly motionless figure indicated that she was sleeping.Dropping the shade so t hat the ,light should not disturb her, Mildred stole soft ly out leaving t he wtre wretched litt le girl alone with herself.She was not asleep however, and clenching her hands together so that her nails left their impress in her flesh she whispered;

"General C onsentinian Aronburg here at Ophelia, and does that release me from my vow?no I wish t o be released now!No, oh no a t housand times no.And yet when poor mildred was talking so steadily to me I felt as if I must even scream it ould.Oh.T he Vivian Girls in so grave a danger because of that st range "Ad ldefob"whom it is said they captured and brought to the christian lines.

And because of a stunt like that done before with some other Glandelinian boyscout, oh my sister Mildred, on my sister my sister dead.Dead.And will that scene haunt me as her death did--the sweet face of my sister whom t rust ed me so.Gone shot as a spy before my very eyes and I un able to help her.T here surely is a hell, and I have been in it this many a day.I'll get even .Mildred my mildred."

"Did you call me Mary dear?I t hought I heard my name"Mildred Maxwell said opening the door and looking int o the room.

"No, go go away Mildred.You awaken me when I want to sleep."Mary said almost angrily, for the sight of t hat beautiful litt le face, and t he sound of that littl birld like voice nearly made her mad;so poor Mildred went away again, and left her friend alone to figure t o do to prevent the disaster to violet and her sisters, which the news of the capture of "Adeldefob" had aroused within her ..Wh n When she was sure nobody was in the room or coming in she got up and went to her writing desk and wrote;

"To the Gemini.

Dargar and Rodney Graves..Vivian Girls in unsoon peril.Accused to or by the enemy of kidp kidnapping "Said Adeldefob"from Glandelinian camp. "Adeldefob" is their brother Penrod.Act at once please for Heavens sake.

"Mildred Maxwell."

And she sent t he note by wireless telegraph and got a response telling her her note was recieved and that the Gemini would immediately act .

Angelinia Aronburg herself was earliest up and at her window on the morning when Jack left Ophelia, and had his seat been on the opposite side of t he car from what it was, and had his powers of vision been long enough, and strong enough he might easily have seen a pair of white plump hands waving kisses and good byes to him as the train movel from under the railroad stat ion, and off tward the encampments at Big Girlknool.

"I and even the Vivian Girls shall miss him so much, but he has t o go when summoned by "Radcliffe" An gelinia thought."He like Penrod or T im is the nicest kind of boy friend any girl ever had and that 's saying a great deal.We can go at all lengths without the slightest chance of falling into peril when he or the two others are around, but without any one of them that is impossible.Taking chances means falling into all s sorts of dangers, and I have been educat ed too much like the Roman Catholic all us Abbiennianns are ever to do things that is so rash as to sucide.But we often fall into dangers t hrough no fault of our own t hat t o others in rank sucide and yet survived.If it was not for t he sake of the Princesses whom I love so dearly I would as soon go home and be happy and be free from this horror if I had the chance ..This war for Glandelinia is most wick wicked and disgusting .So dear Jack I and others are just going t o just the best time flirting with sure death with you gone that ever a girl had for I must sheild the Vivian Girls from their enemies at all risks.Confound that Adeldefob situation . I wish I had that Gerald Starring by t he neck. But what shall I do to sheild t hem.You can easily detect by registration who are not true child scouts but it is almost next to impossible to detect the men enemies among the soldiers.Tim Groveton is nice and a good one too but Violet and her sisters need him, and I can't get his help I'm afraid.He t oo is too busy, and too strange to say has such a way of looking you down whether he means it or not ."

This mental allusion to Tim Groveton reminded "Gert rude Angelina" t hat he at her suggestion was to come that day for any papers of her Un cles, t o go to the Vivian Girls which she had in o her possession, and that at his advise she must look them over first.Ringing for her aide-decamp, she had him to bring the small blanblack trunk or box in which t he generals papers were kept.He was horrifed and t hought her mad, mistaking t hat she told him to bring her a skunk.

"I didn't say Skunk wake up boy"said Angelin is laughing."You're asleep yet .got up too early I suppose.I want that litt le black t runk with the lett ers in it."

"Oh"he exclaimed, and he obeyedand without leaving t he room, she bade him come back and bring her a lighted candle, and to set it upon the hearth of the open fireplace ..

"I may wish to burn some of t hem.""she said///...!!!.

The lamp was brought and lighted instead as the boy predicted he couldn't find a candle.Gertrude thought that was strange and wondered what had become of the candles for she had brought a thousand of them along and now not one was to be b found.She nevertheless began her task, often seeing to it no body not desirable was in o her room.She pulled down t he win dow curtains first, q closed and and locked t he door, and then selecting first all the more legal d ucmtatts documents which she knew(not blew) must pertain strictly t o her uncles military business, and which heedesired more than anything to go t o Violet , and her sisters. A few of these were in English, and related to affairs in Calverine and Vivian Wickey, but t he most were in Abbiennn ian , and pertained to matt ers of discovered movements of various Glandelinian armies in southern C alverinia, and also a warning of a comi ng menace upon Angelinia Agathia, and porothy Gale cities, and some explanations that even as late as now most of t he Abbiennn flood yet had not let up and it was a wonder where all the wat er had come from.

These Angelinia know that Tim was also able to understand without her help and he as he knew English too fairly well, and she went carefully over each document finding nothing objectionable--but t hings which no stranger might see when not kn owin g who he is, yet nothing mysterious, but yet alarming t o her, tyou t hough one paper most of all must never be seen by enemy officers.T hat was dated about two days before, and was evidently a copy of what was int ended as an advise for Emperor Vivian to move a portion of his army for "Heavens sake"to t he defense of Jennie Richee, and also an order sett ing ap apart a certain number of newly registered and recruited child scouts to be placed under the command of a girlscout leader called Christine Nodinia in return for her brave services rendered for the cause,,, the princp principal one was placed in the hands of Schofield Penrod Vivian, with instructions to watch for dangerous enemies menacing violet and her sisters, and who if it could not be avoided either way should to save their lives resume his role as "Adoldofoh "and go back to t he Glandelin ian armies untill t he storm threatening Violet and her sisters should blow over.This paper Angelinia Aronburg read two or three times wondering what the services were for which this newly selected child scout leader should recieve this co mission without her or the consent of violet an d her sisters, and t hinking too that t here was a chance to find her.That new regiment must already be formed if she was to be in the command, and through Violet or her sisters she or they could trace her, and brin g her to command some division of Vivianit es also.

"I ought to have some more officers to command child scouts I suppose"she said"but it is so hard to find any one to be able to fill t he occupication. There is nobody who can be found to fill Georges.And oh how I miss him."

The milit ary business papers disposed of and laid away for T ime full inspect-- ion, Gertrude turned next to the letters, of which t here were not very many. Some f were from Tin Grovet on himself on military business--and one from her Fathers Mot her, written t o him when he was at a Military S T raining School at Angelinia Agathie, and showing t oo that the w i writer was a lady in every thought and feeling, and one from herself, writt en to her friend Ge r George Zimmerman, when he was t hen at Angelinia Agathia, and she in Calverine cit y.It was a perfects childs letter, full of details of life at the main girlscout officers school, and of her sister Annabell, who was wit h her there. "Angelinia's first let ter writt en to me"was writt en on t he label, and the worn paper indeed showed that it had often been read by the fond christian boyscout friend.Over this "Gertrudes" t ears fee fell in t orrents, for it t old how much she had been loved, by t he boy whose hands she seemed to t ouch as she sortedthe letters letters he had held so often.Putting aside t he ev envelope which bore her childish superoription, she took up next a strange packet, which t o her military instincts, seemed strangely out of place with t hose ot her papers in which t here ling ered lingered still the faint odor of t he costly perfume her friend George always ys used. There were three letters inclosed in one large en velope, on which was written"Papers port aining to the Abbieann disaster."Angelin ia knew her Un cle had once also tried t o solve the mystery of that great catastrophe, and taking first the largest lett er in the envelope or package, she studied it carefully, noting that the paper was cheap, the hand writing cramped, and Calverine, to which it was directed, a s spelled wrong, probably for some reason or ; purpose."This letter must not be a military one---it is a letter by which mistake George must sh have put in the wrong place, for he looks course, it feels course, and it smells course"Angelinia said elevatin g her little nose as she caught a whiff of something very differen t from the delicate perfumery pervading the other papers."Who sent t his t o George and what is it about?"were the questions that passed rapidly through her mind as she held the soiled worn missive between her thumb and fin gers, and in- spected it curiously . Once something prompted her to put it away from her sight, and never to know its conten ts.But "womens curiousity overcame every scruple, and she at last drew the letter itself from the envelope.It was quit e a large sheet, such as Gert rude knew girls or ladies never used, and the four pages were closely but very neatly written over, while there seemed to be something in side which added to its bulk. Turning first to the last page, "Gertrude glanced at the signature, and saw t he two words"From Angeline Vivian" but saw no more, for the something inside which slipped down, dropped upon her hand around which it coiled like a living thing, with a grasp of recognition.It was a tress of long golden hair in a beautiful curl wh with just a tendacy to wave perceptibly all through it .Removing it from her finger and remembering the names, Gertrudes cheek paled a moment very badly with a sensation she could not define, and then crimsoned with shame and resentment ; resentment for violet and her sisters, who m she knew had so often been wron ged and ill t reated by t he foe and persecuted, and shame for the Glandelinians who had caused all this trouble.And she wondered to whom Angeline had written and to whom she had sent the lock of hair,and how the letter come in to her possession.

"T o whom did she write"she wondered and looking at the end and then at the beig beginn ing say it start"To my darling sister Jennie"and it was dat ed at the time Jennie was a prisoner at the hands of Augustine St Claire and Angeline then probably did not kn ow it.

"I remember that dreadful time "she said to herself with a hot gleam of anger in her blue eyes"and how dared that scoundrel treat her sister as he did--the bold bad creature.Served him right he went before the firing squad after he was finally captured.I hate all t hese cruel Glandelinians."She picked up t he golden curl which had been sent to Jennie and looked it a over carefully."If I had my way and had him my prisoner"she again said"I would have burned him at the stake.I'll make it possible no Glandelinian will t ouch Violet or her sisters again."

She remembered that once Angeline had told of about this and had said; that if she ever found t he hair which was meant at that time to go t o Jennie and she and her sisters were all together again, to burn it for Angeline did not want it to get int o the hands of anybody.Gertrude therefore reaching for t he thon ge which stood upon the hearth, she reluctantly t ook the hair and held it to the lamp, watching it wit h a sense of pain, as it hissed and reddened, and charred in t he flame, andwrithed and t i twisted as if it had been somet hing human from which the life was going out.Through the open window a breath of the un usual"forest fire weather" came ste aling in, and catching up a bit of the burned crisp hair carried it to Gert rudes white morning gown, where it clung ttenacioualy untill she slowly shook it off.

"Jennie once a prisoner of that human pollution Augustinia St C laire."she exclaimedagain."Who I'd like to know did that!Oh I remember.It was Gerald St arr ing and his two Confederates . Then remembering the surest way to find out how it happened for she had a letter addressed to Angeline by Jennie, and which was to read the letter for she was allowed to read all communications of the Vivien Girls by their permission, she took t he other one up again, but hesitated a moment as if held back by some unseen influence-hesitate as we sometimes hesitate when standing on the threshold of some great crisis or danger in our lives during a grave and serious spy situation in a war."If it is something I do not wish to read"she said"I do not care to get the ill effects.Oh Jennie dear I hope it wasn't heart rending n ews-------it must not be heart rending n ews" and the hot tears came fast f ast, as Angelinia who believed Violet and her sisters were in greater peril than supposed, turned at last to the first page to see what was written there. It was dated at Cedernine two months before the battle there, and began;;;

"Dearest sisters mine, are you wondering why it was so long you did not hear from your dear little Jennie????-")--------

"Miss Aronburg Minnie Saunders is here asking for you"came from t he door outside at which the aidedecamp Pierre stood knocking,,, and starting like a person caught in the act by a spy, Angelinia put the letter back in its envelope, and went down to meet Minnie, who had come over for what she called a"Real sit down "visit to talk over the situation Violet and her sisters were in and what t o plan-and brought her Dairy with her and a Geography. There was now nothin g left for Angelinia Aronburg but t o leave the letters and devote herself to her guest, who staid till breakfast, so that it was not untill two hours after breakfast that Angelinia found an opportunit y to resume t he work of t he early mornin g. Meanw ile her thoughts had been busy, and over and over again she had repeated to herself the words"Your little Jennie"untill they had assumed for her a new and entirely different meaning from the one she had given them in the first moment of her discovery.There might me--ney t here was no object danger attatching to them;; no danger in that golden curl of hair, which she could feel curling around her fingers still as if it was some very delightful thing, and yet sadly one it as it hissed and writhed in the flame.That letter was writt en two mont hs before t he "War St orm"at Headrick Junction on the C d Cedernine . Though Angel Pbbsted possessed Violet, and her sisters were nevertheless human, were like other good litt le Abbieannian girls, brave as angels h t hemselves, and Jennie's fancy had probably been caught by somet hing she saw there at the time, and therefore in the letter wrote to her sisters"Their litt le Jennie", and maybe she had met with some good kind hearted boyscout and she probably had bewitched him, so that he might have thought to love her as if she we re his dear sister and she had written of it.

Yet then bit was remembered Violet or her sisters never wrote such secret letters unless some s unseen danger threatened any one of them and h ere Angelinia felt her cheeks flush hotly as if a wrong of great immensity was done to poor litt le Jennie, but she could not hardly comprehend it, maybe then too she was trying to defend her boy friend, ot or maybe he had been killed by Glandelinians.He was honerable to her always no doubt .Of all this Angelinia thought as she talked wit h her friend Minnie, answerin g her n umberless questions, of her plans t o save violet and her sisters from the unseen peril, and her plan for the future

, and by the time the good girlscout was gone, and she free to go back t o her work, shehad changed her mind regard t o Jennie's sacred latt ers, and a strange feeling of pity, fear and horror for the peril of those lovely little Princ esses had taken possession of her, making her shrin k shrink not only from her words of love to her sisters no matter how innocent and pure they were, but caused her to girdle herself with her cartridge belt and pist ols and st steal softly up stairs to find out if they were all right and t he sentries still at their sleeping quarters door.T he sen sentry bowed respectfully, and Gert rude passed him to open the door and look in.Yes they were still in bed sound asleep but Penrod was already up and dressed and was standing by the window.One look of his face told her"Let any one try something on his sisters"and therefore feeling relieved she soft ly closed the door gave some orders to the guard and went back down the stairs to her own room.she picked up the letter, and resolutely put it back in the envelope with the ot her two.Once she thought to burn them, as she had the hair but as such letters were probably no temptations to spies she did not know what to do, for especially as often as she held them tward the lamp, she had lighted again as often something almost spiritual in its methods checked her, she even thought she heard a whispered word in her right ear-"Don't burn them you'll be very sorry' untill a sort of conviction took possession of her, that for some good reason she must not burn those letters written by poor Angeline, and Jennie.

"Put unless t hey say so I shall never, never read them"she said, and dropping on her knees with the package held tightly in o her hand, she registered a righteous vow(pow pow vow) so that as long as t he two Vivian Girls did not t ell her so she would not seek t o know what the letters contained unless circumstances should arise which would make the reading of them a necessity.

This last condition come t o her mind she hardly knew why for she had no idea that any circumstances could arise that would make t he reading of the letters a necessity.In fact it would had been better had she read them.God knows Manley or His Confederates would have sacrificed their lives to get hold of those letters which how ver fortunately they never did.Searching through her trunks and drawers, she then found four strange paper boxes of different sizes and putt ing the envelopes in the smallest of them, placed that in t he next larger size, and so on writing upon the cover of the last one."To be burned without opening in case I'm killed in line of duty.Angelinia Aronburg." Then tying the lid securely with a strong cord, h she placed it into the corner of her small black trunk(not okun k) where neither she nor any one could see it too soon.

"There little Angel Possessed Jennie dear and Angeline too"she said, as she closed the lid of the trunk"Your secret if you had one between tw you two is safe, with t he cost of my life if need be, not on ly for your sake, but for the sake of your sisters and Penrod you little dear golden haired angels of Heaven come down upon earth in human form, and n o Glandelin ian will get hold of those t he devil eyed gargoyles"and Angelinia sat her foot down victiously as she contin ued"And let Manley beware, not on ly for your sakes but for your good Fathers."

Having thus settled this unknown sit uat ion, and dismissed the letters from her mind for the t ime being at least, Angelinia went back to the remaining package in the box--a large one tied wit h a red yellow and blue ribbon, and labeled"The letters of my darling sisters the Vivian Girl Princesses.Germaine Vivian."

Their brot hers"she said softly, with a quick gasping breath,"And now I shall know somet hing of him at least and she kissed tenderly the time worn envelope which held these precious letters.However t here were not many of them, and they had been written at long intervals, and only in answer to t heir brothers it would seem, for Angeline who wrote here to him lovingly complained in one that he waited so long in replying to her.however he had been cut off from all communicat ions and it had been no long before he even recieved h er letter.Angelin is felt no compcompunctions in reading t hese,,, there were somethin g here which also belonged t o her, and she went through them rapidly, with burnin g cheeks and eyes full of tears at times that she could scarcely see t he delicat e handwriting, so like t hat of violet and her sisters.And they wrote in English instead of in their own language so incase the letters fell into foe hands the Glandelinians could not understand them. And as Angelinia read, there came over her a feeling of resentment and anger, tward the third and wayward brother Germania, who she felt sure by their own t estimony had often grieved and ill treated his darling sisters, who though they made no complaint, wrote to him so sadly and dejectedly, and begged him t o mend his ways and come home, and not stay in the wicked Glandelinian armyas a general general. But he had never answered t heir letters. One letter t o Jimmie Vivian was a sad beseeching one from Angeline who before the battle of Evangeline St Clare had been ill from the lung bullet wound and her sisters then prisoners in the hands of t he foe.Jimmie had wrot e back by telegram that because of destroyed communications and the watchfulness of the enemy it was almost next to impossibility to come just then, but that he would make the greatest effort to do so, and had sent her some t hings which t he enemy had not been able to prevent reaching her.This is the letter Angeline wrote to him that day which Angelinia sadly read;

"Dear James"she wrote from "Evangeline St C laire"Please come to me if you can,I am so lonely without you, my sisters are gone, prisoners of the cruel heart less enemy, and me being ill the days are so long, with only litt le Jann ie at t imes for company, for I 'm too ill to go out but stay shed for days, and so sc are e ly see any one.Jann ie is a great comfort to me and so is dear Evans, and knows my wishesbefore I know that I have them myself.Jennie is also so fait hful and tender as if she were my mothdr mother instead of a little girl, and if I should die of my wounds and my sisters do not return you must always be kind to her for what she has been to me.But oh I do so long for you, and I think I c ould make you very happy.You loved me so immensely then, and how oft en I dream of home and the shadowy woods by t he river where we used to walk together, and the moonlight nails on the river when we rowed in among the white lillies and you said I and my sisters were lovelier than they or any flower.You loved me then and my sisters most dearly, do you love me and they now as well.I have often feared the enemy won't let you come to me, feared the enemy has placed something between us.don't let the wicked enemy fu frustrat e or outwit you Jimmie get through some how, and let me be your little May Queen, Your litt le Daisy, your little Angelin again, for dearest brother I do love you, more than you can gu guess, and I want your love oh so much now t hat I am sick, so sick, nearly dying, and tired and lonely.Evans is waiting to post this for me, and so I must close with a kiss right there where I make the star,.Put your lips t here James where mine have been and then we shall have kissed each other.T ruly lovingly, and longingly your tried Sick little Angel child."

An gelinia could see by the date the letter had arived that it was two months after the battle of C ddrhhSaint t t t Evangeline St Claire.

"Little angel child"That was her pet name, the name I like the best of all because of my own darling sister."Gertrude Angeline cried, as her tears fell fast upon the letter, which seemed to her like a voice from the dead."Poor little Angeline even with Evans by you and little Jennie you were not so very happy werewyou.Thank God you didn't die, for James wrote to you and I know he came too for all Hell couldn't st op him but he came two mont hs after. If you were only up and out of bed now how I would love and pet you"she said as she passionate ly kissed the place which Angelines lips had touched, and Jimmie's too she knew, for Heaven kn ows he could not resist that touching appeal.In fact he sure did love the writer of t hat letter, and yet the war was bet ween the Princesses and their two loyal brothers, which cast its shadow over Angelinia Aronburg herself and made her weep bitterly as she wondered what it was in disrupted i or destroyed communications which had crept bet ween them, bet ween Violet and her sisters, t heir brother, and poor Angeline who was ill at that [illegible] and dreadful t ime.

" Was it that rascally and but inaky Gerald Starring. she said as she clenched her fists together, and then beat the air with them as she would have beaten the yellow haired Glandelinian boyscout spy chieftian, had he been there with her.And what stung her most always since that day was the fac fact that he with a sig single blade had licked her and six other girlscout leaders whom they both even bru brought two knives apiece against him in t heir envdeavor to make him their prisoner.

"Poor Violet, and her sisters"she said again"And poor Angeline, so long ill from her wound those days, and her sisters gone, and no one to take care of her but Evans and little Jan ie and t h her father, and their brothers sick at heart because they were unable to come to her.I know it.The enemy saw to that cound Glandelinia.I love that little Jennie becaus e oh Dearest God how good she was to her and her sisters at all t imes.It was she Tim said who helped him get square with Manley and Gerald Starring.I know why Violet or her sisters always wants to e keep my little Friend Jennie with her it was because she was so kind and good to poor Angeline their unlucky sister, who knows no w too that even their brothers did love her and her sisters more than she thought, t hat his not coming then was because t hey couldn't no matter how hard t hey t ried, t hat the enemy interfered with their correspondan ce and even probably captured it, for their brothers sure do love them I know from my own experienc e wt with them, and their brothers loved me toofor being so good to his sisters, and they are noble and true! Whenever they had the chance they-always came quickly and are even here now.Oh dearest brothers of the Vivian Girls, help me save t hem, for I must have lost something.I cannot put it in words,I don't know what I mean;"and st ooping over the package which her hold little An golines and Jennie's sacred letters, Gert rude cried out loud with a bitter sense of something lost from the memory of Violet and her sisters and also George Gi Zimmermanns men memory which had been very sweet to her.."Oh how much has happened sin ce I became that they call a very famous girlscout, and how long it seems, and how old I feel, and there is no one to tell it to--no one to talk with about it. Well t hey said I'm the most dangerous girlscout the enemy has faced.Well maybe so, but I'm not hing now.Just wait.When I start"---

Just then there was a second knock at the door, and to her impatient "What is it now"? Pierre announced Master Timothy Grovston wi waiting in the Library. He was indeed a prompt boyscout, and for the sake of violet and her sisters h ad come for t he papers, as Gertrude reallly knew, and bathin g her flushed cheeks, and fixing her golden curly hair, she first uniformed herself, and then went down g to meet him, taking t he papers with her after firi first locking her door and placing two guards by the door.She tried t o seem natural and gay, as if no golden curl of hair had burned in her room no letters of Angelina or Jean ie were hidden away in her litt le black trunk, and no sting when t he thoughts of what Violet and her sisters had gone through and may do so yet was hurting her so sadly andou cruelly.Angelinia Aronburg was indeed a perfect little actress, and her face was bright with smiles when s e entered t he Lib Library and greeted T im who being a close observer with t he experiences with his friends and the Vivian Girls, saw that something had been agitating her very great ly,,, and guessed that it was not only the examexamining of the papers, which would bring back her sorrow so freshly but realized she was worrying a great deal about the safty of her beautiful little cousins ..Therefore there was a great pity in his heart for this brave little girl scout general, and a greater desire to protect t hose in whom she was so ardently concerned and therefore his manner was very sympathic and gentle as he took t he box from her and said;

"I am afraid this has been too much for you.Penrod and I are worried greatly too and under no conditions won't let violet and her sisters go outside for fear they'll be shot down by unseen foes."

Instantly the great tears gathered in her eyes(not pies), but did not fall,,, and all the same made her all the more sweeter and prettier as she sat down beside him and said,

"I must read some of t hem over for you, for I don't believe you can read English as well as you can speak and understand it do you?"

"I understand and can speak it but cannot read it at all."he replied, glad to be thought ignorant of even the "Accursed English" as if by this means he could sit closer to her, and watch her dimpled hands sorting out the papers, and hear t her silvery bird like voice, with its soft accent translating what was writt en into them in Abbicannian. Especial pains also did not take to make him understand about the special watchfulness of the Princesses, and that also how little Jannie must be guarded, and why it was to be done.

"She was oh so kind to poor little Angelina Vivian, whom Evans brought t o care for her and keep her company when she was all alone and ill from the wound so long ago."I've been readin g all about it in Angelinas letters to her sister Jennie"she said without lift ing her eyes to his face as she was busying herself with the papers, and also for in spite of herself and her avowed confidence in little Jann ie's good honor, there was in her heart a feeling of peril, when she remembered Jennie's sad letter--as if the peril--if peril t here were was in some way attatching to her because of her companions ip to the Vivian Girls, and making it necessary that she should be equally as well watched and shadowed by her friends. Gertrude went on telling that any one who is seen onl y snooping around their headquarters should be shot on sight.Tim Groveton had had some suspicion of Jannie's unseen peril however, and thought how lovely like one of t he Vivian Girls Gertrude was, and what a remarkable tarlent for understanding military business she had developed, as they went ov er the papers together, and formed a pretty fair estimate of the value of the Vivian Girls to their Country and Nation.

"Why they and their parents are worth more to t he nation thant anyt hing"she said looking upat him at him with pleased surprise"and ought to be protected at all costs.And I am so glad for I like them more than I like myself.I have always have had their company e xcept on some occassions, and should not know what to do without them.I'm going to stay with them a great deal more than I used to, the news of their experien ce recently with Sta rring is what brought me down here.I'm going to organize my own Lagorian secret child scouts to cover and shadow them where ever they go, and if any body tries to do them harm well I've already given my orders.I'm going to give as a body guard the best of the scouts to them because----well--"and Angelinia hesitated a little"Because the Gerald Starring was so mean to them and their friend "Adeldefoh" trying to clain t hem from him; and I'm going to give them as companions the three Saunder Girls, so they can have three powerful bodyguards when out scouting which is so obnoxious to them when it is so perilous, and of t hat girlscout down at Emperor Vivians army at Jennie Richee proves to be my sister Annaball,I shl shall ask her to discards her disguise as a boy for a while and remain with me to combine against the enemies of the Vivian Girls, help me investigate this "Adeldefoh"mystery, and then when I find Adeldefoh everyt hing will be all right.And wait till you see her Tim.You may think I'm pretty that I'm a pretty litt le girl, but when you do you'll be falling in love with her like you have been loving the rest of us--remember that. And I want you to.You and Penrod, our best boy friends should be her company always.You'll be loving her as much as you love even Violet and her sisters and me."

"Your sister Annaball.Who is she.Not Radcliffe I'm sure!"Tim Grovet on asked; and then came t he story of Annaballl mixed with so good a prise of the young girlscout which praise though seemingly extravagant was far beyond the reality, so that Tim began to feel an interest in a her, although t he idea of falling that much in love with her as he had with the Princesses and Gertrude was simply preposterous.Also sensible as he was, Tim also did not have no foolish pride, yet would all the same have scouted t he idea or thought of a new girlscout who may be Gertruden sister ever becoming a close friend of his and the Princesses and Violet, and her sisters were . That girl Annaball was t o be more like this golden haired fairy beside him, who slowly chattered on, telling him what she meant to do with the sit uation, her plan she intended to take up with Penrod and so forth.she would make every girlscout leader help her. T im smiled and thanked her, and said he would remember her offer to help m him, and then she added;

"I hope to soon get Jack to return to carry on his milit military business.Does it take much to get him to go through with my plan Tim."What's his military business------his profession!I do not think I now know."

"I don't think for some reason or other any one except himself is allowed to reveal the bui business."Tim replied;

"No one allowed to reveals his military business--his profession.Something must be wrong there.As a young boyscout I hear heard he does so much that the enemy is in abject terror of him and once how was when on a raft with us so awkward that he'd scout toss with a paddle x splash all t hat muddy flood water on us.I think he did that purposely to make himself appear careless just to hide his profession.Pray what does Tim do.How does he pass his t ime."

"All I can say is by making himself useful to t he enemys discomfort"Tim said, and in his voice there was a tinge of something which Angelin ia detected at once as if he cannot tell anything without Jacks desire superior though h e himself is, and therefore she said;

"Of course he makes himself useful--more useful than anybody I ever saw but it is strange his work is not allowed to be made known .Maybe of course then the enemy would know more than s he should know. I have only kn own him a few months or more and yet I like him better than any boy in the world."

"Jack ought to feel complimented with your opinion which I assure you is well mirt ed, but you're mistaken"said Tim, while a feelin g as if lonesomeness for Jack was coming over him.

"Why what do you mean?"she asked.

"Your cousins Violet and her sisters are in rapshodies over him"he answered.

"And so is Penrod..and why not Gertrude.Why shouldn't all you girlscouts like such a good boy as Jack who has been so active energetic and throughgoing boy as he is.I know him a long time even when he was younger and before t he war went on.When he was around I always felt every nerve in my body thrill with a strange feeling of ~~ecstasy~~ ecstasy, andnow I'm as lonely as a forlorn person thrown out of Heaven when he is not around.But I'm sure of all girls Jean likes him best, and before because of his awkwardness she was often sore at him.T hough I can say anto another thing.When he left for Emperor Vivians army she secretly followed him."

Gertrude laid her soft warm hand on his and said as she looked up at him with her bright earnest eyes;

"Now you will write at once to Emperor Vivian, and inquite a inquire about "Adeldefoh, and I shall write t o, to my sister for I must find her and brin g her here to operate with me, and--and--why are so grinning so"she suddenly asked.

"It 's about Adeldefoh.You don't know;;"

"I do know"said Gertrude so don't be so foolish Tim dear as to give it away if you kn ow too.But it is said Adeldefoh has been kidnapped by t he Vivian Girls and if it is true that they kidp kidnapped their own---"

"sh-h-h-h-"don't say it so loud"warned Tim laughingly man aging to retaini retain the hand laid in his so naturally."I one sense like we he id their guardian, and we cannot say anythin g about"adeldefoh "now.Walls have ears you know."

"Certainly not it would be dangerous with so many un seen spies around."Gertrude said."Tim dear I think you also are very nice.you are t heir frir frienx friend and they said I to oo must ,o love you, and t ell you everything, and I do like you ever so much, though not the way I like Violet and her sisters.I lov e them because they are so good and brave, and because they are my cousins."

"Happy Violet, and her sisters despite what they go through.I almost wish I was one of them and your cousin too"said Tim, as he bade her good morning and went td his own quarters of the building to await the time when e could see Penrod or his sisters for evidently they were not up yet and Penrod would not let any one awa e awaken them.

"I'll bet he is in love with me as much as he is with my cousins" thought Gertrude."He wants my company too as much as Jack did.He is good and dignified and as he did so much for us he deserves our love and company."

Within aven a few hours after Jacks departure and her interv i ew with T im the whole one encampment was full of Gertrude and rumor was said she was running a wild career against all suspect strange boys and girlscouts within the camps who could not give satisfactory answers to the quest ions she put to them when they werre were brought before her, and especially when their names were not on the Child scout registeration.Everyone of the good child scout officers t oo thought her wonderfully bright , and fresh and pretty and a great militant for the cause,but her rigorous ways astonished the soldiers and child scouts of the whole army, who nevertheless were greatly interested and amused with watching her and her followers round up l all t hose not registered in t he Child Scout registeration,, and also as she developed phase after phase of her militant nature, visiting Timothy Groveton at his own headquarters ostensibly t o translate certain English written letters and papers for him, but really it was said by others, t o see the boy himself to get him to work hard against the secret foes of violet and her sisters, t hen too galloppingoff miles and miles into the country on er her spirited horse with a column if child scout lancers, with her aide-de-Pirser in attendance ,worrying Mrs Rooney by having many childs scouts as guards in her room, missing breakfast, eating dinner at two oclock, and dining at night with as mu h ceremony as if a dozen people were seated at the table instead of her and her cousins, who never went out , and who t hemselves hardly t ouched t he dishes prepared with so much care, so worried were t hey with apprehension of the unseen danger, while acting as chaperones girl and boyscouts at breakfast or other meals dinned at all sorts of places as they were either ordered or as fancy t ook her or them, sometimes Gertrude dinned on the north piazza, and on the sout h pia zza but armed as a Foriegn Brigade, seeing to it that scouts went out everywhere by hundreds, sending Colonel Furguson to go to other christian armies with t he warning of their peril, and having child scouts form a strong position on t he grounds near and around her headquarters, which she was entirely metamorphosing with hundreds of men at work too all t he time, while she superintended t hem, and gave them lemonade or root beer two or three times a day, as much as they could drink as aninscentive to swift swift er labor. Such a car eer she showed with no one to advise or check her except Penrod and violet and her sisters, who seemed as crazy as hersel f.And such was the state of affairs when Jack Saunders improving the first opportunity for leave of absence from Emperor Vivians army came back to that under general Concentinian Aronburg/. It was IO A.M.(Not the ham what am) when e he reached the railroad station of Ophelia and exactly half past ten to a minute when he found himself at the headquarters of Violet and her sisters, his hand locked first in that of Angelinia Aronburg and then of violet , and her sisters,,,,,,,, who in thei e their big garden hats, with pick and shovels led him over all the grounds, where hundreds of men were at work, Angelinia Aronburg pointing out her approvements and improvements, the position being made and so forth, and asking him what he thought of t hem.And Jack who had promished his friend Jean Saunders who had accompanied him to check Gertrude if he foun d her going on a little too recklessly in her work, as they heard from Anna Saunders, proved a very flunkey, and instead of checking her or Violet and her sisters when he could have, not on ly entered heart and soul into their plans and even make suggestions as to how things could be improved but went himself to work at the spot where work was needed and induced a whole crowd of boy and even girlscouts to give a helping hand.

So useful in fact, did he makehimself,,,, and so much skill and taste did he d display that Angelinia Aronburg forgot entirely to slightly chide him for forgetting to tell her whether he had seen her sister ot not. nd too she was glad that he was off duty for the time beig being as it left him free to be with her all the time and to become at l last the superint endent of the whole with this diffe difference however,,, that while he directed the menand the numerous working child scouts,, Angelin ia Aronburg directed him n and made him her very"willing slave" Even Violet and her sisters despite their dignified position never shrank fro m anything,,, but use the spades as if they were strong men or plunged their white hands int o t he dirt up to their forarms, while Jack took offf his coat and worked patient ly at Violets side,,, helping to make a small breastwork here or there wherever t he fancy took violet,,,, or her sisters.However either she or her sisters could not always tell where they wanted a thing untilll they st udied the effects of certain positions,, because of the lay of the ground,, and then if she or h r sisters did not think it worth while or did not like it , it if it did not harmonize with the defense she was forming it must be changed as she or her sisters knew exactly how positions should be formed and where. Yet everyone who watched or witnessed this marved to see how rapidly what had at first seemed chaos and confusion began t o assume proportions untill the grounds bade fair to become more like a defense position against assaults from that direction.What also had been done before t he arival of "Gertrude Angeline"'s arival was for the most part unchanged, but the remainder of the ground was entirely overturned. The plateau and the summer house,,, on which Violet and her sisters had set their hearts were also made as a sort of fortification, and the terraces, and the new works, and the pasture lands west of the house was robbed of it s late Fall Green sward for turf to cover the terraces and plateau, which were watered t hree times a day.Everything went beautifully Angelinia Aronburg said, as she issued her orders, and busy as bee s she and her cousin, had worked also from morning till night //// while Jack also in attendance, while even Timothy Groveton and Penrod himself caught the fever,, and went himself into the work.Everybody were amused at the work being done, and at night Violet and her sisters rewarded every one who had worked with them a with a beautiful bouquet, when violet fastened to their button oholes, with Penrod himself being taller she st ood up on tiptoevto do it and looking up at their brother with eyes which nearly drove them crazy with love.Now was this spot the only place where Violet and her sisters or Gertrude were busy.A few hours after evening when work was through Angelinia Aronburg recieved a letter from her sister Annabell;;;;;;;;;

"My dear Darling Angelinia,

You do not know how surprised and delighted I was to hear that you was with your uncles army at O helia and that your army had joined with vivianis to help protect all approaches to Big Girl Knool and prevent another attack in that direction ..I am really sorry to hear of your loss for I liked poor George too. But with our dear cousins with you and your friend and mine too Penrod I hope you do not feel lonely and sad, for y u you are in a part of the country very familiar to all of us.What sort of a battle is there still ragi ng at Ophelia? I hope it is not as severe as Big Girl Knool was.I heard it was awful. And do you think it would be safe for me, Mildred and Angeline Richee to come there.?Isit not funny that I have thought to go there, and have actually written to Anna Saunders, who turns out to be a danger to the foe and should be one of my Confederat es But she asks me to come here quicker than I can make it, and I wrote to her jokingly that if she wants me there so bad she better give me a pair of wings so I can fly to Ophelia so high that the enemy will have to chase me in an aeroplane if they want to catch me.But I must see you since hearing of the "Adeldefob"mystery, a dand as I really know who Adeldefob is, and that he is none other than Penrod in disguise I have a plan I wish to have him carry out.Mildred Maxwell remembering my kinde kindness in the days past you will not think me intrusive when I tell you that as soon as possible I am coming with her and Angeline Richee just to look into your dear eyes, and those of your cousins again, and see if there had been any change in you and they. nd I wish also so bad to see Penrod but for Heavens sake when I come in my real form and appearance don't tell him I'm Radcliffe the boy friend of his in disguise.He never knew "Radcliffe"was a girl and for military reasons he must not yet.I like your beautiful cousins and Penrod still better now since I learned he was Emperor Vivians sons, and he sure ought to appreciate it to have violet and his other dear sisters.They are brave genuine little ladies, and I am glad that he is their brother, as well as they also belong to us."

Your dearest sister,
Annabell Mary Aronburg .....".!"

The first thing t hat Angelinia Aronburg did that evening after reading the lett er, was to mount moun t her horse(not hoss) and gallop in hot haste to the encampments of the boy and goilscouts, where she astonished her companion superior officer Jane Lydia Furgersonia by telling her that she must see to it that t he boy and girlscouts should be dressed at their best.It

"It's my sister Annabell, and she's coming here probably she'll arive to morrow and I'm going to have her in my own headquarters. "she said, and she talkked talked so fast, and gestiluated so rapidly, that the girlscout grew quite bewildered but managedvto comprehend, that Angelin ia Aronburgs sister was coming and that everybody must be dressed up for the occasion. nna Saunders too was all eagerness to get ready for the reception, and so the order was to be carried out and Lyda was to command the whole situation of t he girlscouts.

Of ocurse Lyda tried to warn Gertrude to keep watch on the secret enemies of Violet and her sisters who may trie t ry to prevent the arival of her sister ubut Gertrude said she would clean the obnoxicus spies out before that time.However Angelin is Aromurg heard that spies of some kind had been operating near a charm ing little cottage on what in the camp was called Maple Avenue, and she "swooped down ucpn that sector with her troopers like a hurricane" but the spies if there were any must have been warned by some secret agent and had vacag vacat ed t he territory before they got there.

"You see I've got to prevent them from interfering with my plans, for I mean to make it safe for violet and her sisters, and Annabell will help me."she said to Minnie Saunders, who tried to restrain t he "reckless girl" telling her that she was going on at a ruinous rate, and t hat of herself she could not work schemes against the secret Glande'indian spies.

"put Timothy Groveton can do it for me then, and I shl shall have it done"she said, and she took T i m by storm, and soon got to m him to make an arrangement whereby all places should be s e ser searched for these spi s.Then she wrote to her sister;;;;

YOU DEAR DARLING LITTLE ANNABELL:::::::::

"I do know how surprised and glad you were to hear that I was with Violet and her sisters in Ophelia, for wasn't I just as glad to hear you were near me when I thought you were inAngelinia Agathia or Dorothy Gale Cities.Why didn't you answer my last letter you "naughty"little girl.I wrote you six and had at one in return. It's just like a story isn't it------our being together one near Jennie Riches and the other at Ophelia where a sort of squabble action is going on daily.And Anna, and "Adeldefob"is not that real Glandelinianboyscout I always thought he was but really Penrod who disguises himself to work against the enemy, and he sure adores his dearest sisters and especially poor little Angeline and Jennie.,nd you will like Penrod ever so much more now, and you must try to come to Ophelia at once if possible and help us get rid of secret foes shadowing the poor litile Princesses.So pack up your things as soon as you read this.I have prepared the encampment into good shape for you with the help of Lyda, who is my best aid, and she has a sister who is also a good help, who who is very stunning and swell.That last is what they call"slang", which Penrod said he had learned in far away America of people there, and if Penrod is really their brother then he is another cousin to us,and a real brave American too.T here are with us now a great many new boy and girlscouts recently regis tered in,you see, but then they're not Vivianites here but Lagorians.Emperor vivians army only has them now.But you will learn lots of the "Adeldefob"mystery whenbyou come.I have a pretty headquarters engagnd for me and my cousins, with a large bit of fresh greenaward in front and the loveliest old fashioned gardens at the two sides,, with pune Pinks and Roses go growing in this strange phenomena hot weather for December when it is supposed to be winter, and tiger lillies too and a nice bed od of tancy,I like tansy don't you.Then there are two front rooms t o hold meetings, and a sitting and dining room back with the kitchen and four chambers communicating with each other//// One of these has been fit up with green for you it will just suit your lovely complexion and eyes, the ot her is scarlet for your companion Mildred,,, who is dark complexioned, and the third well that is mine.I wish for heavens sake however that the two Loyal brot hers of Violet and her sisters could come back as I wish to see them very much.If you hear where they are write to them please and said I command them to return.If they don't come I'll go and get them. And now Annabell dear come as soon as you can but as you are.don't come as Radcliffe this time and surprise Penrod and keep him guessing and use your own natural voice so he won't be suspicious.And don't be silly about my decorating and and preparing the whole encampment for your arival.It is only a little bit of payment of the sum I owe you for that big sacrifice you once were ready to make for me.How well I remember that day, and I can plainly see you now, as you were surrounded by Glandelinians attacking your position you one against fifty with your face as white as paper and your eyes so-pi pitiful and appealling as they that day looked at me and yet so full of love.,nd I fortunately recieved aid from Heaven for I came upon the scene on time with my party of Abyssinkilin Calvarly and you know how thise those soldiers are when they see Glandelinians attacking children.You remember I coud couldn't control them, they became unmanage able and slaughtered without mercy every Glandelinian soldier who did not succ eed in escaping and burned at the stake the officers they captured, and how they st rung up one chief officer by t he neck with his feet over a hot coal of fire. The attack upon you hurt me more t han it did you, for it cut right into my heart as it could also cut into my conscious if I did a sin, and t here has been a little smart there ever since, while your dear hand is just as w itwhite and fair as the bullet wound ha d never wounded and furrowed it.Splendid brave little Annabell to get yourself trapped to allow me to a escape.And I met t he part y as I was trying to think of a scheme to save you alone.God sure was good to me that day.The massacre was horrid of course yo as you said but what could be done?It was justified.You know how Abyssinkilian soldiers are when they see Glandelinian soldiers attacking children.And what Abyssinkilian soldier is there who can truthfully t ell you he never saw a masac massacre of children.No wonder they're d so merciless to t he Glandelinians. S l Splendid sacrificing litt le Annabell.I want to hug you this minute.And oh Anna, don't think I have forgotten poor George, because I have not said more of him, for I haven't, I can't, and there's a thought of him and a great ache in my heart for him all the t ime.I'll get even with the enemy for my loss of him.No matter what I amdoing, or how gay I seem I never forget that he is dead, my heart is like an empty shell.But there is so many who not only love me but is crazy about me, especially the three boys Penrod, Jack and T im, and you too who seem so near to me, because you know because of the war that the old happy life at home is now gone forever.Answer at once by secret wireless, and tell when I may expect you.If travel is dangerous tell me in your letter in answer and I'll send you an escort that will make the very legions of the bad place hide in terror."

Angelinia Aronburg ....."

To t his letter Annabell replied as soon as she had recieved Gertrudes letter thanking "Gertrude for "h for her gen r generous interest, but saying it was not right to accept so much from her--she could come to Ophelia with her two best girl friends as soon as they could arrange matters where they were, but she should insist in being in some other building instead of the headquarters of violet and her sisters.

"I can find a good provised tent in a short t ime"she wrote"and I shall be happy in making our dear cousins independent of their slick shadowing enemies whom I believe could not harm them anyway if they really are angel possessed as it is said and from symptons I've seen it is a fact.P s Besides I do not believe our dear cousins would like you to go too to much extremes for their sake when you know they have so often been able to protect themselves."

"I thin k her a very sensible girl.I nor violet and her sisters could be happy wit hout you but she doesn't under but she doesn't understand the situation yet and what danger t hey're in"he said, when Gert rude read him Annabells letter, and when he explained t he danger he had discovered and which he was striving desperately to avert, Gertrude flew into a passion, and said as he appreciated t he friendship between i himself and the Vivian Girls she was going to help him save them from disaster at any cost, adding that she should never tell Ann abell anything untill she came, and that if she ever saw anybody trying to sneak into the room of t he Vivian Girls why she would----"

But there was no necessity for such a scene.With Jack and Tim and others to help her as they did, she had accomplished more at the building than an y ten ordinary men could have accomplished in the same length of t ime.T he house was really un pr a un approachable by any slic k foes and if there were any within the t orritory they were just as "n ervy "to approach it as a mouse has courage to approach a cat lying in wait for it . And veverything was so well chosen, and so aetistically arranged that the whole effect was like a lovely picture or lovely picture, and so many went to see it, and wondered what this Annabell could be that Gert rude and the Vivian Girls was doing so much for her, that Gertrude finally ordered t hem off the premises declaring she did not do this for a "show."

"To most people she is only a girlscout after all"Anna Saunders said laughingly to her sister Jean with a t oss of her head,"But wait untill she is well known.I knew Annabell long time and if she can't do nothing to frustrate the enemy the possession angels can't either."

"T h She for violet and her sisters would wipe out a past which would be never be forgotten by others"said Jean.

"I would en o enjoy it immensely to see the faces of the Glandelin ians shadowing them when Annabell puts her say in the matter"said Minn ie."Then Violet and her sisters can wear their best dresses or uniforms every day, and t hat the two cousio cousins of violet and her sisters would be fast and queer if they being the girlscouts t hey are could not pull Violet and her sisters t hrough any dan ger.For her part she could see nothin g that Gert rude or "Radcliffe"couldn't do, that both were bright and witty.To the christian side she was sweetness in itself but to the enemy oh my."

Despie despite the dreadful cut off of communications cause by disast ers and the mad enemy in this war, t hrough some cause almost miraculous it seems there was no christian army no matt er where it was situat ed t hat could not boast of everybody who wished to buy it of not getting their daily newspapers from various cities and towns, and in general Vivianias army army persons in t he ar y and even boy and girlscouts t girlscouts read in t he columns of t he "Angelinia Agathia T imes, that Emperor Vivian was changin g his posit ions whether the enemy knew it or not, and that also the two Vivian Brothers despite all obstructions were coming to t he army under Vivianis and expected to be there in a few days as they were frightfully lonesome for their litt le sisters, and that Miss Annabell Aronburg, Angeline Riches, and mildred Maxwell t he high class girl scout leaders, who were to succeed Minnie Saunders and her sister Ann a in their business, were also expected on that day .:.:.:.:.:.:In deed everybody was glad that the t wo grand sons of Emperor Vivian was coming, for all armies were more gayer when t hey were in command, as they were just like Violet, and her sisters in their nature and ways, and always entertained a great dea deal of company.and indeed no one was more happier over t he news t han Violet and her her sisters and Penrod, including Angelinia Aronburg. Usually t hese two great Princes brought guests with them or new generals, but this t ime no one was coming as the news reported, except a litt le girl slave whom one of t he Princes saved from a cruel mast er.The two Princes were very rich in t he numbers of soldiers as following, and any one knew how good looking t hey were they were t he best looking men in the world, and h a hearing of it Jean laughingly bade Angelinia Aronburg be prepared to surrender at once to the charms of her two big grown ~~ptinc~~ Prin esses cousins.

But Angelinia Aronburg answered that she had cared for the two Princes since the day she first knew t hem, but she admitted that anyhow all her thought s and interests were centered in t he one fact that the t wo Princ e Princes, her sister and the two girlscouts were coming, t hat that would bring more safty and joy to Violet and her sisters, and she spent the whole of that Friday morning at her headquarters , seeing t hat everything was in readiness and also Violet, and her sisters la ored as if t hey had never been Prin cesses, and they literally filled t heir own and the rooms prepared for the two Prinxes and the three girls with flowers from t he garden, and also the ~~green~~ green house.

"I wish my sister and the two girl friends to have a good first u impression." she said t o Jack(put in the black you packing house at oak), who was wit h her and she and ,iolet, and her sisters inspected the rooms,, for t he last t ime so at to be at the station in t ime.The train was supposed to be due at six o cloc k, and t en minutes before t he hour, all t he boyband girlscouts and every one of their officials and even Concentin ian Aronburg and his generals were there, and t he great military Royal Carriage with Violet and her sisters, their brother Timot hy Groveton a Jack and Angelin ia Aronburg t here in it , which drew up at the rear of the depot.The eight beautiful girls were full of excitement and expectation, and t hey indeed made a most lovely picture in their best deep st colored purple uniforms and yellow dresses and hats, with knots of double faced scarlet and cream ribbons t wisted in with the bows and loops of satcat satin --a scarlet and purple bands on her yellow heart shaped hats and a mass of white illusion wound round them, and fastened beneath their chins. Jack thought especially t hat Violet and he r sisters themselves were especially charming, as they walked restlessly up and down the platform, waiting for the first sound which s should tell of the approach of the train.Everybody out of respect gave them plent y of room, in fact they had to any way for Violet would have ordered the platform cleaned in an instant as she or her sisters did not allow railroad stationscluttered up with mere spectators when t hey were on it.Jenn ie spoke rather sharply to a Foriegner who stood there for a moment giving her and her sist ers such as sizing up that she was both angry and suspicious.Believe me at the menancing looks of her sisters and Penrod and also the sneer on Gertrudes face, he walked rapidly away and saw down on a benc h where he belonged.At last it came------a low whistle in the distance,, growing gradually louder and shriller untill t he big mighty n engine shot past the station like some snort ing monster, and the great eni engine puffed and groaned a moment beyond the station, and t hen went slowly on its way leaving two dist inct groups of people who would have been st ared at had not the soldiers at Violets command kept the platform clear.One two handsome looking men who appeared to be uniformed like Kings and a tall middle aged man dressed in t he extreme of military fashion with eye glasses on is his nose, and a little slender cane in this hand which he twisted proudly, with a little half shy curious girl standing bet ween the two OF i Princely persons, while with t he ot her members of his part y t he middle aged man looked curiously at the second group farther down t he platform but rapidly approaching--the three elegantly dressed or uniformed girlscout leaders who spoke their native t ongue so volubly and were so demonstrative and expressive in their tones and gestures, and showed they had also plenty of aurthorit y for they were commanding some curious ones to stand back.

Annabell herself did not come with any uniform on she wore c it izens clothes and wore white all t hrough with a large blue gray hat , while Mildred Maxwell herself had a st range expression on e her face and in er eyes in her eyes, as she wat ched t he two young girls and then saw violet and her sist rs and ot hers standing almost isolated on t he railway stat ion platform.

T he moment Annabell alighted, Angelinia Aronburg and Violet and her sisters one at a t ime had precipitated themselves int o her arms, Gert rude herself exclaimin g:

"My dearest sister, and your t wo friends you have come at last , w"while kiss after kiss was showered upon t he girl by the eight , whose golden hair gleamed brightly in the sunlight, and whose blue eyes were full of t ears as she ret urned the greet ings. Suddenly remembering g Mildred Maxwell and Anbe Angeline Riches, t he delighted Princely girls turned t ward t hem, and did the same to t hem, and then they noticed t heir brot hers just coming t ward him, wondering where they had disappeared t o na after having alight ed o off t he t rain.The Greeting bet ween t hese too was t oo t ouc hing to relat e here.T hen suddenly remembering a girlscout escort and att only ign oring t he fact that t hey had never seen her before Jennie herself t urned t ward her, and offered her hand very cordially saying;

"I t hink you are Miss C atherine Lee and I am happy to meet you, because you brought Gert rudes sister back t o us again, and our t wo dearest friends!"

"Thanks you are very kind"Catherin e Lee replied wit h a t one which a st ranger might have thought cold and constrained but for the face, which had something very eager and almost humory in its expression, as t he great black eyes were rivited upon Violet and her sisters, whose hand of Jenn ie's t he girl held in a t ight clasp, untill Jennie begged to be let go, as they turned again to their two brot hers.

"Wait brot hers dar dear, and you two Annabell and your two friends."Jennie said."Our Carriage is here, and I'm going t o take you to our new headquart ers which we will have here for a long long time I believe asor I kn ow the enemy will refuse to move."Then hurryin g on she went again to her brothers, who had been watching their sist ers c uriously, and mentally commentin g beautifully upon t hem.

"Quite too good little girlsto have suffered all they went t hrough.I like it more if they could have remained home where is was safer.But t hey have to do t"James t hought , while Germaine felt the same way, though the three girls felt more surprised for they never believed violet and her sisters were really so beaut iful at t he first t ime t hey saw them as t hey appeared now.But when Violet and her sisters foo followed by Gertrude came t ward t hem, their heads grew t their cheeks flushed, and blue eyes shining like diamonds, and seeming t o almost speak as they danced, laughed and sprakled, t hey changed their minds, were a litt le scared of them for a moment as if they were facing supernatural beings, and when t he great t ears came in a rush as Jenn ie again t hrew herself int o James s arms exclaiming;;;

"Oh dearest brotyo brother I and my dear sisters who love you so much are so glad to you have returned, and I hope you will stay here with us more often and command armies closer to our dear Father" they were glad one by one to t ake her and her sisters again int o their arms, and never for a moment wavered in their allegiance t o t hem.Giving each of their ot her friends a hand and kissing them warmly, she said laughin gly;;

"You are all alike are you not FT all and fair and blue eyed---so different from t he Abyssinkilians, and so big and good and stron g--so different from us, who am nothing but little girls despit e our rank."

"That's the humble st yle of us"Penrod wa said with a meaning smile, which brought a flush to Gertrudes cheeks, and yet made her laugh as she ret ort ed:

"I wish I was a Princess then like them if t hat would make me humble.For I do believe I'm pretty high and haught y at t imes."

"You are not as haughty or proud as you make believe you are"said Penrod.

"Duced pretty angelic sprites after all"The middle aged man thought as they next beamed on him their sweetest smiles, when Penrod introduced them to him, and then the parties seperated, and returnin g t o Annabell, and her t wo girlscout chums, while t he two Prin ces followed after t hem. T here was the sound of a strange supressed sigh from Catherine Lee, and Angelin ia Aronburg said to her Counsien;

"I believe C at herine is homesick, and pining for her mot her and Father and home, she seems so low spirited."

"Oh I hope not"said Jennie who was closest.Anyhow for all of us girls we have found out, and boys too t hat the armies af are safe and more better and we anyway have plent y of adventures."Anna, and Jennie glanc ed at Catherine Lee and noting for t he first time how pale and tired she looked, noting all that she was all in black, though not exactly in mor mourning.

"She has lost some dear comrade perhp perhaps"Violet thought sadly, but then as she can read minds she caught onto something else, looked strangely at Angelinia Aronburg, and then she and her sisters chatted on with Ann abell and her two friends apparently unmindful of Catherine, who being admitted also in the carriage leaned wearily back among the soft ch cushions of the luxirous carriage/.
"Of hwhat was she thinking.Indeed Violet and her sisters who through the corner of her eyes t heir eyes were watching her knew all, but just then prot ended they didn't.Catherine knew a dangerous secret and they knew it pertained to them. She was worried sick about their own peril and she did not know it.Yet what was she thinking, the apparent, but really sad litt le girlscout leader, as the carried wound up t he hill, across the coo common past the military Catholic Camp Church, where now during Daily Mass violet and her sisters carried good reliable safe weapons while go going to Communion for fear of attack at the Alt er Rail, and past a long yellow but partly wrecked house, which Angelinia Aronburg pointed out was her own embush for glandelinian assailants who may come that way, and where along a long line of works teeming lines of cannon frowned, and where on the doorstep of another small building Anna Saunders sat fann ing herself, rejoicing now that the two brothers of violet and her sisters had ret urned.
It would not be hard to fathom the thoughts of this girlscout by violet and her sisters even at that distance, which were straying far back over the broad gulf which lay between the present and the days of her younger girls girlhood.And yet nothing even escaped Catherine Lee, from Anna Saunders on the doorstep, sto the handsome boyscout headquarters and grounds on the knoll, which Angelinia Aronburg said had once been Ti s headquarters before Violet and her sisters choosed him to stay with them, but when at last the main Princely headquarters was reached, and Catherine alighted from the carriage,, she was so weak and faint t hat Angelinia Aronburg and t he other girls led her into the house, and even violet and her sisters were alarmed at the death like paller of her face, and st ood by her while Jenn ie desperately hunted through her small box in a drawer for the restor atives she usally used when one of her sisters happened to faint through some shock.
"You are very tired are you not Catherine dear?"Angelinia Aronburg said kindly to her, at the same time laying her hand gently upon her head, for the hat had been removed . At the touch of those cool slender fingers, and the sound of the pitying voice and the compassionat e sad looks of Violet, and her sisters, Catherine gave way entirely, and grasping bot h Jennie Viviana hands, covered them with t ears and kisses as she said;
"Forgive me Princess, and your dear sisters, and let me call you once by your pet name only"Jennie dear";; let me thank you what for what you have all done for us--for even all our best and lowest ranked girlscouts and boys t oo.God bless you Princesses.God bless you."
"Catherine dear, Catherine you'll frighten poor Jennie and her sisters"Mildred Maxwell said, coming quickly forward, and guessing from the expression of Jenn ie Jenn ie's face, that she must suspect that somethingwas wrong."You are tired and nervous; let me and Gertrude take you up stairs"she cont in ued, as she led the unresisting girlscout to the room selected vfor her, where she made her lie down upon a couch, and then went back to Angelinia Aronburg and Annabell who with violet, and her sisters was standing in the wide doorway, and beating her little foot impatiently as she t hought;
"I wonder Violet what makes Catherine act that way so.The first time I ever saw her again and that is to day she stared at you n and your dear sisters as if she was afraid an evil spirit would eat you up, and u just now there was something posit ively frightful in e her eyes as t hey looked up at me too;I cannot could not believe she senses you and y t oo are in danger.Violet.I you and your sisters have to play foxes and keep our eyes open. She knows something she dasn't tell us in the open believe me."
Just here Annabell appeared,, spologin g for Catherine, who she said she believed was wholly overcome with probably all the kindness of violet and her sisters displayed tward her and her followers so often.
"Yes I know"said Violet almost whimpering.
"We do it for everybody"Angeline Vivian said"I know her trouble though and we'll interview her when it is safe for us to hear hear.She knows our danger and is frightfully afraid for us."
"You know!How."
"You forgot we can read peoples t houghts"said Joice.
It was now time for Violet and her sisters and the two Aronburg girls t o go if they would see to the rooming of their brothers, but who wished to make a tour and inspection of the army first,.and pro promishing Angeline Richee and the two others they would look in upon t hem later on, and bring them new uniforms which they really needed badly, they reentered the carriage, and was soon driven to the knoll where Tim had been showing the two Princes his own headquarters, and where the boy and girlscout leaders were just sitting down to breakfast.

Taking seats with t hem the eight Yoral children and theirbtwo Cousins talked and laughed, and sparkled and sone(not drone) untill the room seemed full of angelic spirits, and the bewildered but delighted brot hers could have sworn were were as hundred and twenty pair of eyes flashing upon them instead of sixteen, while Angelinia Aronburg and her sister now held their breath, and watched violet and her sisters as the expression of their bright faces changed wit h every new gesture of their hands or turn of their heads.
"violet and her sisters are so bright and unusally beautiful, and different than we ever saw them before"they thought, while Mrs Ann a Rooney who was there t oo being invited to serve there though no less fascinated, was conscious of a strange feeling, because she could where nobody else seemed to discover a resemblance to violet and her sisters in the two Aronburg girls.T hey sure must unmistakably be their cousins, though with another look in Angelinia Aronburgs tenn ed face and wonderful eyes which puzzled Mrs Rooney as she stood at the head of the table watching the two and also violet and her sisters with constantly in creasing interest, and listening to their gay brot her Penrod, and the two older brothers the latter of whom seemed half afraid of his sisters as if he was with celestials instead of humans, and were evidently slightly ill of ease when theit eyes so frequently lighted so brightly and unaturally upon him as if they were of another world of Heavenly Realm. Breakfast being over, Violet and her sisters and their three brothers ros e to go, saying t o the head of the boy and girlscouts t here
"I and my sisters shall expect you all to dine with us to morrow at six oclock. It is to be a family affair, but everybody who can come is included in the invitation as you all are just as good as us and our equal no matter what rank we are.Remember I and my sisters will be expecting you and you're foolish if you don't come.I' going with my sisters now and ask the Saunders girls.Will you go with us T im?"
"Will T im go with t hem? What a foolish question.They knew he wouldn't refuse anything.They found Minnie Saunders drilling a company of boyscouts who were new recruits.Violet gave her invitation, which was accepted at once saying;
"I will come as early as possible so as to have a good visit before breakfast, though she presumed her two sisters would not be there very early as some unavoidable duty would keep them back.The Princesses rode next to another tent where they found Dolores Mic-Hollest or and her sister Angoline seated in their room with a worried look on e her face, while Anna Saunders was there porin g over a map, while now at some distance there came the reverbrating sound of cannonading dreadful to hear for those who paid any attention to it.
"Oh Princesses Darlings tou and the dear Aronburg Girls and your brothers here"she said as she rose from her chair."I was trying to finish the duty I'm working on so I could come and see you dear girls.I hope Catherine Lee is better.I hope so badly for I heard she was ill.I know who that dar dear dandy old man is who was with your brot hers st anding straight up as a reanrom with eye glasses on his nose, but as I can tell by t he looks in your brothers eyes that he doesn't want me to tell I swon't. "
However Violet herself explained t hat she personally sent for him since Anna knew who he was, and said"Anna I want to to give Rodney Graves all the assistance he needs and say not hin g about who he is to anybody.He knows our peril because of the fake report of us "Kidnapping "Adelefobe from t he foe lines and His Gemini is shadowing us to protect us.I invited your sister to our party and want you and Jean to come too."
"I'll do all you wish dear Princess"anna said bowing."Yes I'll come to the party Violet dear and so will Jean too, but I've no idea you'll get my brother Henry there--he doesn't like parties very much.He's so girl shy. I wish you could make him though."
In their hearts Violet and her sisters cared but little whether the Saunders boy Hon Henry came or not.His presence would add nothing to their party, and they didn't care to acquaint themselves with any boy who does not care for the companions ip of girls, but something in Anna's manner awoke within them an idea that Anna would be sad if the her brother failed t o come for their sake, and that sent them to the tent where their the boy commanded a platoon of scouts and where she found him just commanding a Company to "Rest".He saluted and bowed as they halt ed their horses before him, while he in a shy way talked to Violet and her sisters,who gave him the invitation and urged his acceptance as warmly as if the success of their party depended upon it.
However he couldn't as he thought dare refuse the invitation, and as Joice said "I and my sisters shall expec t you without fail, she with a smile and flash of her eyes which stirred even staid Henry, the Vivian Girls drove away with the rest, and said to Penrod"I hope he will come, for I could see that his sisters does not like it that he is so girl shy. But what's the mem matt er with her anyway. such airs she has taken on since she learned that we are in unseen peril as she terms it.We've been out here and nothing has happened.Does she suppose suppose

suppose that we can 't take care of ourselves. OOf course we appreciate what t hese girls are, but are we more than they? Oh Penrod w y is it that t here is such a strangeless of all these boy and girlscout leaders we know so well. Is out peril great er than we suppose. T here's Mildred Maxwell for instance, as cultivated and as refined as if she had been born a Princess, and yet she looks at us if there as if there is something wrong, and there's Angelina Richee and others. If so what is our unseen peril. Didn't T ime cause the capture of many child scouts who after all were not enemies but who were only slow in getting in their registeration and who proved Glandelinia means nothing to them. Is the very camp in unxe unseen danger. Are we going to be bombed. What made "nutty" Manley believe we captured "Adeldefob." How can we capture our own brother the nut. If this is the situation then we don't like it and would go straight home and keep out of this affair for the rest of the war, but it is more dangerous to remain home than in the army." and leaning back in the carriage Violet looked very sober and so did her sisters, while Penrod said good humoredly;

"There is unseen danger I can accept it. I will never do for you r y sisters to go anywhere withoutha protecting bodyguard. There's no getting rid of this peril unless somot hing desperat e is done. I've tried to think of a plan but could not succeed yet. It may be a desperate plan too. "but as you said once yourselves sist r sisters dear, vfor us saints there's no getting rid of the Cross we bear no matter how good we are."

"As lon g as our Blessed Lord hung upon One I or my sisters h ave one wish to be rid of it , but I for myself and sisters may as well confesscit, I do wish some of our troubles and sorrows though would have a slack up once in a while as our experiences are going a little too far even though unconsciously we may have brought it upon ourselves." Jenn ie herself replied, then added laughingly "Don't think us going back on our dur duty--I nor my sisters can't help the feeling, it was born in us, and father and mother fostered it, but danger or no danger we're trying to overcome it see, and t o show we defy any peril that may threaten us, we have invited them all to dinner. You too T im dear must come early, Jack t oo, v but very early so as to help us through."

Tim was only t oo glad to do so, and as they reached the Vivian Girls head quarters by t his time, and it was beginning to grow dark in the eastern sky again and the atmosphere warmer, they all went inside to settle some of their military business while Violet herself went into her bed room alone to try to ponder what Catherine Lee was so worried about and what was the unseen danger she and her sisters faced.

"If Glandelinian spies try anything she t hought fingering her most deadly of pistols a small machine gun variety "T hey not live to tell it."

True to their promise Violet, and her sisters and Gertrude An geline drove around again to see Annabell and the three other girls, the one "supposed to be ill, and also carried a pile of handsome new un iforms. They found Annabell, and her friends delighted with the rooms,,,, w i which suited them in ev ry particular. Also Catherine Lee was very calm and quiet, and only spoke to Angelinia Wronburg or to violet and her sisters when spoken t o, untill t he latter in speaking of t he main headquart ers, and how lonely she would be at times especially in the ve evening when Tim or Penrod was not t here said;;;;

"I' I'm going to hunt up Jane Lee my past time girl Aide-de-cam - who was with me when George Zimmermon died. She is still alive I am sure, and somewhere either in Calverine or Angelin ia Agathia. Ishall have her come to act as Aide-camp for me."

"Catherine Lee (not a flea) was standing with her back to Angelinia Aronburg pick ing the dead leaves from a pot of carnations, but she turned suddenly upon Jennie Vivian who had said she would get Jane Lee, and facing the Princess said quickly;;;;;;;;;;

"Better for your sake to leave my sister where she is; you and your sisters will be happier without her."

"I cannot un derstand at all why you should dare say that" "Jenn ie retorted in a tone which showed her irritation that Catherine Lee should presume to dictate, to her "You certainly can know noti nothing of what your younger sister has and can do."

"I certainly do, and I know also that girlscouts don't often as aidedecamps add to t he happiness of suffering Princesses likeyou so for your own sakes l a leave her alone, do not try to find her and I'll act as your aidedecamp" Catherine Lee replied,,, and there was indeed a ring in e her voice like a note of fear which Jenn ie or her sisters would have detected, had t hey been at all suspicious but they did not take time to read her mind, and Jenn ie was only resentful and answered proudly;

"I certainly shall find her if I can" then with a few direction t o Mildred Maxwell as to whom the brand new uniforms go, she alone drove away leaving Gertrude an d her sisters behind, for she wanted to order some necessary articles for the dinn er which she and her sisters meant to make a success. The long table was laid out on the broad piazza overlooking the beautiful river, and t own of Ophelia beyond, and everything was in readiness when Minn ie Saunders arrived, for t rue to her promise, she came early, even earli r than she said she would, and in her best uniform, and she was fanning herself in her large rocking chair just as the clock was striking six ..... She had t ried she said to bring Margaret Ford and Annie Rooney with her, but Anna Rooney had been called for something which went wrong in her headquarters, and evidently t herefore she couldn't come untill the "last gun was fired". It was evident some prisoners had been brought to her headquarters and she had to see who they were and what to do about t hem. Anna Saunders was reallly putting on a great many airs, and talking lots of what she would like to do against the very Glandelinians. T he way s e she talked at times it was more like those who t alk the most but who do it not when the t ime comes but with her it was different. Whatever she says she does she don't exactly do, but really more and worse. Often she herself alone with a party of scouts of soldiers or a regiment of boys and girls had made so many raids and sorties upon the enemy as to capture more booty than was needed, commit wanton deso destruction of enemy property and drive the glandelinian generals nearly crazy. They thought sh she was possessed by a legion of devils. This morn ing she had been to the southern part of the camp to call upon her own cousins, both of whom were struck with with the assaccessions of dignit y, and stifness in her manner when anytin anything was related about glandelinia, but never dreamed that a sorrow of Anna's past(the poor little child slave who was murdered before her eyes) had anything to do with it , they attributed it rather t o patriotism and love of country

, and on t husiasm of the presence of the "Darlings of the N ation", who were her best friends, and who with a freak of fancy had surrendered t o her friendship at once. General Concentin ian Aronburg himself was peculiar, and though he admired all little girls pretty or not and had a beautiful wife he had nev r never been known to pay one more attention t han was required of him as a gentleman excepting of the Princesses and his neice. He had any chow thought his two Neices and ,violet ,and her sisters more attractive than anybody he had ever seen, and lady like and sweet, while violet and her sisters had taken is his breath away with t heir flash and sparkle, but not one of t hem had moved him as he was moved by Anna Saunders stately manner when she gave him the tip of her fingers, and bowed so ceremoniously to him. The general more than anything liked little girls to be very quiet and dignified, and Anna's strange stifness suited him, and he rod home with her, and sat for t hree hours in t he parlor and talked with her of his plans, which she hoped one day t o see carried out with the fall of Vivian Wickey, and sy mpthized wit h her when she deplored most eloquently t he fate which tied poor Violet and her sisters down to t he horrors of this war, when she believed t hey were by God and N ature fitted t o en o enjoy so much happiness and freedom from sorrow. But War was the hardest calamity of the world, it was a hard master too and ruled its "subjects with an iron rod of cannon hail, she said n and made even poor children and non combatants suffer the most she said, and there were t cars in t he blue eyes which looked up at t he general, who felt a great pity and int erest in t his girl, so f gift ed so dignified, and so prett y and daring, for she surely was all t his, and he said t o her at parting t hat he hoped t o see her later in t he day at the headquarters of Violet and her sisters, vwhere he was going with general Vivianis and ot hers. And as the general left her Anna sat down to think and t he result of the thinking was that though general Concentinian Aronburg was not known much by her, he was grand, and a very good man, he was tiresome and fidgety t o the enemy, and somewhat more dangerous to the foothan even waperor Vivian or his brot her, he was rich in his milit ary abilites, and evidently pleased wit h every one who helped him, and therefore she resolved that not hing should be lacking on her part to in c rease his interest in her, and get him to help her in e her interprize against t he foe, and t o get him t o understand that whatever their surroundin ge were, Violet and her sisters were superior t o them all and worthy to stand in the high places of t he land. She was ashamed of anyone who were even most slightly timid, but too she dreaded for what what threaten ing Violet and her sisters that Tim would do somet hing rash, and when at five oclock he asked what t ime t he great breakfast party was to come off she felt a fear of what outbreak he would have if he found anything suspicious go n going on for he was more dangerous than she or Penrod coh combined in t he defense of vi-l violet and her sisters. Nevertheless the eyes of violet and h er sisters when they gave the invitation had done t heir work wit h him.

"I really believe Violet and her sisters wants me to come more than anybody else, "h e said" and he made up his mind to do so, and Anna felt a cold sweat oozing out from her finger tips, and she hoped if anyt hing wen t wrong that Tim would not do anything that would bring him inu injury.

"Arevyou sure Tim dear you will be c areful"she said."You know what happened in general Tamerlines army, and now it seems as if it is axlon g time since you have had anot her experience, and too I know how particular you are in watching that any of your friends are safe, but I'm afraid you'll be meeting with enemies and better now join them exact ly at their own table."

"Who in thunder said I wouldn't eat with them at their own table."T im said doggedly, feeling intuit ively that his friend was just as much afraid about his safty as that of Violet and her sisters, and feeling determined t o go all the more t o show t hat he would like to see secret enemies try anything on even ihim alone. And so it happened that simultaneously with general Conc antin ian Aron burg, in his elegant dinn er uniform w t with his white necktie and butt on hole bouwuet came Timothy Grovet on, in the uniform suit he had worn when he made a general and his whole glandelin ian army surrender to him at Santa Fe, and which was more st ylish and fashionable than any uniform even the best dressed generals wettotbet wore.Timothoy however was not a proud stylish boy however and despite how he uniformed or dressed made no pretence of being ot her than he was, and too he never did commit any blunders at t he breakfast table, where six or seven courses were served, with boyscout Mess Hall Officials as chief waiters and "engineers.Jennie herself was a remarkable host ess for her size and so managed to make all her guests feel at home as if they were a part of her family so t hat the breakfast party was a great success, and the great general, who was seatedfar away from the others, did not think t he loss of any one else.everybody t here were well refined and cult ivated, and the glamour for the love of children at first sight sight was over and round him, and especially for violet and her dear sisters, ad t hey were more prettier than ever in their litt le white muslin dresses instead of uniforms, and very quiet and lady like, and when after dinner was over, he walked with t hem upon on e of the terraces, and saw how well each of the little girls carried t hemselves, and how small and delicately shaped were their hands and feet,(though in fact they were more stronger than they looked) for he was one to not ice all these things he began t o vaguely wonder how hold each of the lit tle brave Prin cesses were, and what all his generals left behind would say if he had been their father and was able to present them as his daughters , inst ead of relations. General Concentin ian Aronburg was without quest ion attacked by a terrible at rong disease, very impossible to be cured, the slightest symptons which he always had, and that was his love for all children, and when at last it came time for the guests to leave, and the Royal Carriage came round to t ake the Saunders girls home to their own headquart ers he suggested that Violet and her sisters and the two Aronburg girls should ride on horseback with him, as there was a good sun that morning and the wind was st rong off the south and not quite so hot as when it was on the southeast. They at first had intended to decline as they needed to go elsewhere for the present, but they finally consented as a good horseback ride was always a desire wit h so good a general of theirs, and their relation also, and they decided not to ride on horse but to walk it if he willed.The General however protest ed as they wore that morning a dainty pair of beautiful shoes but they told him even t he dain tiest pair of shoes or slippers weighted as nothing against a walkwit h so great a general even down dusty high ways down a winding hill between othedhedges hedges of sweet briar and alder and across t he long causeway where the beeches and maples nearly met overhead(not dead) and t he river wound like a silver ribbon through the green meadows to the southwestward.Such a walk would be very romantic and violet and her sisters meant t o take it if they had to spoil a dozen pair of slippers and clean them all themselves afterwards. So they acdeeded t o t he generals proposition, and the general and the nine beaut iful little girls st arted on t he way for their own ohomes, while Timot hy Grovet on looked curiously afterthem, and said aside to Mildred Maxwell;

"The gold general is hr hard hit, and if I'm not mistaken Violet and her sisters ought to be able to even win Glandelin ian generals t o love them if their wicked hearts have not grown too cold."

Mildred Maxwell was a success iwithin general Vivinias army as a good organizator of good boy and girlscouts at least,especially with the help of her friend Jane Melfort .Angeline Richee too had done very well it is true.Their work was always don e done properly and neatly, and ther rewards satisfac'o y but Angeline Richee had never went further from her own headquarters, than just a few Company Streets down, but she had done splendidly nevertheless.so that in at least two weeks before they had even come to general Vivinias army they had two good hig regiments of new ly recruited boy and girlscouts, and their leaders always busy, and now Angeline Richee had proposed t o Anna Saunders to help her a few hours each day during the busy season when the armies were in so much contin o s continuous military action n ar Ophelia.But Anna ce cheerfully spurned the proposition, saying that she didn't wish that Angelinia Richee or Mildred should go so far as to overwork t hemselves and especially for her.

When violet, and her sisters heard this they laughed merrily, and went them w e themselves out into the Company Streets, and also drilled regiments of boy and girls, and once even drilled the soldiers, and promised to make the best drilled regiments of boy and girlscouts that ever marched on a field or road and to do other things too should they succeed in more and more capturing the heart of their great cousin general Concentinian Aronburg,, or Uncle rather he was, but laughingly Angelin ia Aronburg said if the general ever was captured by them then she and her sister Annabell might as well be sisters inst ead of cousins.

"Oh is that so"retorted Violet."Well you and your sister are like sisters to us now.e what do you say to that."

There was nothing to say(ecce except bale of hay) From the first in this new great army which had come under general Concentinian Aronburg, t he great and unusual beauty of the Vivian Girls, their piety at Church and everywhere, their strange angelic goodness, and every other manner attracted unusual att ention from everybody who saw them but upon no one did it produce so great an effect as upon the Saunders girls, or the boy Penrod and Tim, who first saw them when they were at Mass in the Church at Ophelia since the Arival of the army, and it was on a Sunday.Violet herself had told the Sexton to give Annabell and Angelinia Aronburg a seo with them in the pew as well as for Tim and Penrod and also for their three friends, deserving deadscribing them to him so there could be no mistaking them.But Mildred Maxwell at that Mass came alone, and whether it was t he old sextond sextons mind was intent upon a little girl in black or whether something about Mildred herself carried him back to the Sundays of logn long ago when he was a little boy, wh n he now dead sister used to glide piously up the isle to her pew he made a mistake and Angelinia Aronburg had just sett led herself on her seat after kneeling before the Blessed Sacrament, and adjusted her wide girlscout skirts about her, when a rust ling soundsaug t her rustling sound caught her ear, and t urning g her head she saw a face which made her st art suddenly with a great throb of somet hing like fear and sorrow as a beautiful little girl who seemed to have an unearthly radiance s beauty that was almost or really absolutely without t he slightest doubts etheral, simply but elegantly attired in the best uniform ever seen, and a white chip bonn et with a wreathe of roses around it take a seat beside her evidently where she didn't belong.Angelinia Aronburg would hav have told her it belonged to the Princesses but she had seen something in the little girls face, which puzzled bewildered and even made her afraid of her.She looked so like a litt le ng enangel wit h the golden curls forming a halo for the wimsome face that tears came int o Gertruden eyes. And Penrod and Tim and the Saunders girls saw it too, and defined it at once, and drew a long breath and blinked the tears away as they gazed at the face so like the face of Jennie vivian they thought but strangely transfigured.The was she Gertrude Angeline asked herself, as she wondered and watched in some fear while waiting for Mass to begin.Others had seen only a likeness to Jennie Vivian, but Angelinia Aronburg who could never forget saw more than that, she saw the features as of Jennie Vivian t ransfigured in this beautiful little girl, who however grew somewhat restless and nervious under the scrunty of the eyes she knew were fastened so constantly upon her, and Jenn ie it was, sent the usher with the order that t who ever was looking at her so much please pay more attention to the Mass and Sermon which was more Important t han she was.Annabell who occupied the pew with violet, and her sisters, had turned once, by mishap as a person coming in before Mass madeca mist ake and wanted to come in, and seeing where Jennie was for her seat was occupied by a stranger, had nodded to her and then Mass was paid attention t o as if it was the greatest and most interesting Drama ever seen and well paid for. Then came the elvation, the Holy Communion and then with reluctence the end. The y staid however for four Masses, and then when that was over, Angelinia Aron burg came down the isle t ossing her head airily and with t he strange witchery and magnet ism of her smile and wonderful eyes throwing into shade the fair sister, she came up to the little girl whose beauty and etheral appearance had been noted by the whole congregation as something remarkable.Her sisters too accompanied her and also astonished the people, all golden haired, blue eyed rose tinted cheeks, so quiet and self possessed, petite and playful, and rest less as a bird, wit h a flash in her their brilliant eyes.

None of these con gregation owever had seen the Vivian Girl Princesses and when they came out from Mass one of the old women who was among war refugees asked of Mildred Maxwell ;

"who are they little girlscout ? and she pointed to the Vivian Girls and especially Jennie."Who are they with faces so strangely etheral in bu beauty and who have such unearthly radiance about them.who are they who so look like celestial children that I thought they came from Heaven itself to att attend Mass."

"like celestial children come to attend Mass.Oh I am so glad for now I shall love them more than ever."Mildred Maxwell replied, then calling to the Princesses she presented them to the good old lady, telling her they were the Famous Vivian Girls so much heard of, and saying to Violet and her sisters as she did so "She thinks Princesses you look like little Heavenly girls just dropped from Heaven to hear Mass, and perhaps you do, for I'm sure you little girls are more like celestial children at that."

"And so many kept staring at me as if I was a ghost even Angelinia Aronburg and many of hers"said Jennie pouting."Am I so transfigured as that.They should attend to "ass and never mind us."

"But the way you and your sisters look who could help it."said the good woman.

"Well as long as they have their minds on Mass"said Jennie more soberly I am glad then if I or my sisters are something like ethereal and I am sure everybody will like us more for it if it is only a holy desire.But I and my sisters want people to like and love us not for looks only but because God is with us and He deserves love best of all."

And in this violet, and her sisters was gratified for always more how they were always very popular, and took their places among the best boy and girlscouts in the whole army and had friends everywhere.For this too always since it began two or more years ago they were in all indebted to Angelinia Aronburg"and Radcliffe" who insisted that they should be noticed and respected, and who if she saw any signs of rebellion or indifference on the part of people who happened to be foriegners as was somet imes the case, opened her batt eries upon the delinquets and either brought them to terms at once or "got out."

The party which had been gotten through that early morning of Saturday before had been in honor of the coming of Annabell and her friends, and Violet and her sisters had treated the two Aronburg sisters as a subject would treat a queen, and made so much of the two, and talked of them so much, that one of the silly Foriegners said to Violet Vivian as they were standing a little apart from the others andshe was asking if he ever saw any one as beautiful as Angelinia and Annabel Aronburg;

"Yes they are very pretty and graceful, and all that, but they did not cannot expect to have all the training that you and your sisters did.Their early associations must have been very different from yours and I am somewhat surprised at your violent fancy for them."

Then Violet with her eyes ablaze turned upon him suddenly and hotly, and he never forgot the look of scorn in her blazing eyes, or the angry contortion of her face as she said;

"I surely know perfectly well what you mean sir, and I and my sisters ought to despise and hate you for it ..If you must know those two girls are my Cousins, what is said against or for them is the same as done to me or my sisters.I suppose you and your Foriegn people who no doubt ate English look down upon them and us from your loft y platform of pride and van ity and of position and social standing and I should hate you for it; yes I should, for how are you better than she, and her sister how are we better I and my sisters will admit it than any one I'd like to know.Are we better than other people because we are Princesses.shouud I hold my h ad way up in t he air and at uck my nose up to the Heavens because I'm a Princess andshow off because what I can do.Are you not u just as anxious for any case to be worked up, as we are for spying and working against a cruel wicked foe, and what's t he difference, except that you are a man probably afraid to join the army, and Gertrude and her sister two brave girlscout spies, and so the more to be commended, because they are willing t o take care of themselves, themselves, us and others under their loving care, instead of going saftly home and leave all the rest of us Abbiesnnian children to face an insane glande linia alone.I tell you sir, you must do better, respect my friends better or I'll not speak to you again or allow my sisters to do so either.There's Angelinia Aronburg now over there by the camp summer house, talking with Timothy Groveton wit h her sister Annabell, who looks somehow as if she needs somebody a stranger to show her friendship. Go and get her away, and dance with her or do something and be social like the rest of us.See they are just forming a quadrille there in the summer house Mr foriegner"and she pointed to a large beautiful structure on the plat ueau with which its many colored lights was like some gay resturant in Heaven.Indeed the whole affair bore a str strong resemblance to the fetes that may be seen in Heaven, and the grounds seemed like a celestial field, with the flowers growing in "December", and flags and arches, and colored lights and groups of gayly dressed soldiers and children scouts and refugeesct oo wandering up and down the broad walks and on the grassy terraces or dancing modestly in the summer house, near which a Nat ional Army band was stationed.

This foriegner never danced, he was too proud and dignified for thatit oo bad about him), but he carried Annabell away from Angelinia at her permission, and walked with her through the grounds, and finally wondered at her refinement and lady like manners, which seemed so natural to her.This foriegner was an aristocrat of the deepest dye, and believed in everything in family and blood, but he being foreig foriegn was not hardly interested in her even though she had 563 nearly as beautiful a little face as any one of the Princesses. But he did accompany her on the walk to show respect nevertheless, but her manner and ways finally won him in spite of himself and he regretted his remark to Violet.

Violet and her sisters too had been at their best that day, and were like some bright birds of Paradise flitting here and there among their guests saying the right word to the right person, and always doing the right thing in the right place and so managing that when toward noon the festivity was at an end, and their guests came to say good bye ,it was no lie of any kind but the truth they spoke when they assured Violet and her sisters that that whole morning had been the most enjoyable of their lives(not wives) and one never to be forgotten.

What was what Timothy Groveton and Penrod were said to be doing, during the next day when they went to the headquarters of Violet, and her sisters, Penrod for mysterious reasons who had plan plenty to do riding over early that Sunday Morning right after he had attattended Mass with his sisters,,,, and Timothy Groveton who also had a great deal to do , going in the later afternoon as early in the afternoon as he could get away from his necessary duty.It was not unusal for the two great Christian boy leaders to meet in the causeway, Penrod coming from, and Timothy Groveton going to the beautiful little "Ladies", who always bewitched and "intoxicated both", though in a very different way.with Penrod their brother, they were busy at some sort of work, and sometimes from the way they spoke about what the enemy was trying to do to them and their friends, it would have to those who know them not sounded like hot bitter quarrels in which they would always have the better of their brother inasmuch as their command of language was greater and their rapid gestures added point and force to their sarcasm.but they were not quarreling, their anger was only hot and fierce against Manley and the others for publishing throughout the world something they never did,"Kidnapp a Glandelinia boyscout Adeldefob who had at first befriended them.Yet if they were in error over some thing they were the first to confess it by studying their map further, and they did it so prettily and so sweetly, and those who heard sounds thought they were making up with their brother. However Penrod their brother did think that some what unusally unreasonable and aggravating that they would would not accept the advice giving them concerning the peril they were facing.Some time later Violet standing outside heard one of the foriegners remark;

"Something must be wrong for I heard the Princesses quarreling fiercely with their brother this morning.

"Is that so"said Violet turning on him suddenly to his surprise."Since when were I and my sisters quarreling.Some of you kind of people go about making so much noise out in the Company Street that we have to talk loud to be heard.I think some of you foriegners are hateful to be eavesdropping around our headquarters anyway.If most of you would be in the army and give us a hand against the enemy who are threatening the safty of a nation that gives you Foriegners a home and shelter we would like you better."

Timothy Groveton himself had grown more and more infatuated with his beautiful and other girl friends, whose eyes were just as bright, and whose smiles were just as sweet and alluring, when later on Penrod came, more in love with his sisters than a man would be to the most beautiful woman in the world, but with a different way of showing it. There was one boyscout which often also came and Violet and also her sisters were morally certain, that he was either pretending to love them, or was up to something, and he yet always was a little shy of them, therefore she never allowed the conversation to approach to any thing like too much friendship, and if he praised particular dresses and said they were becoming, as he somet imes did, they never wore it again for him but when they knew he was coming, either donned some olf fashioned clothes in which they fancied themselves not tidy or sent him out to do some work.

One day it happened when Tim had been absent from the headquarters of violet and her sisters for two or three days, Violet had sent one of the girlscouts with a note beginn begging him to come and stay with them a while. Yet many of the boyscouts who happened to be foriegn even though good and loyal to the cause were somewhat foolish, and believed they had as much a right to be in their headquarters as often as anyo anybody else, and violet thought too that if they had such ideas and were foolish it should not be any fault of hers or her sisters, never dreaming that if she or even her sisters even arrayed themselves in a big potato potato sack or bag they would still have thought the little girls much too charming provided their eyes and mouths were visible.

Ostensibly Tim Grovetons relations with Violet and her sisters were of a purely military business nature, for in managing so large a division of boy and girlscouts for them there was much to be talked about, and also Angelinia Aronburg and her sist sister for the good of the cause would need to know everyt hing, especially with regards to Manleys intentions concerning the report that Violet and her sisters had kidnapped Adeldefob had kidnapped "Adeldefob..There were many letters from either Emperor Vivian their Father or from their Uncle Hanson, and these they read both to Tim and Penrod, who with Jack Saunders help made them out, but he brought other letters religiously to Violet and her sisters who had insisted upon it with a persistence which surprised him and and insisted t oo upon recieving them from him with t he seals unbroken Add. reading t hem first themselves.And for letters t hat came from elsewhere Angelinia Aronburg herself had not forgotten Georges dying wish"If letters come to me of a purely military business matter and you cannot make use of them burn them unread. However to Gertrude no letters had come for George from any source, proving t hat no one cared to sent messages to any one whom they learned was dead, but with a womens subtle intuitiojn heightened by actual kn owledge, Angelin ia Aronburg knew that there was something somewhere, which she was to ward off if possible, and so it might come in some sort of military business letter, she and Violet and her sisters made it a condition that all documents should be brought to her first.As yet however everything had been open and clear, and the nine girls began to think their fears were only groun dless, when on this very Sunday morn a few hours after their return from Mass and Holy Communion T imothy Groveton brought Angelinia Aronburg a letter from an address which he could not make out, who among other things, wrote that the recruiting stations taking in more soldiers for armies could not be accomplished because of disrupt ed commun ication and then also stated, that some spy was operating within emperor Vivians army was who wa d was disguised as Penrod but who couldn't be captured as he was too slick.The description of the boy spy was given, and enclosed was the conclusion;

"For reasons which may be just,I would not advise the Vivian Girls to cont inue the search for this girlscout called Jane Lee not shall we answer Miss Aronburgs letter with regard to her unless greatly pressed to do so and she is much too busy to be bothered and cannot leave Angelinia Agathia for the present."

Angelinia Aronburg was whit e to her lips when she read this, with Tim Groveton sitt ing by her side and with a worried expression watching her, but she uttered no sound.She merely took out her fountain pen, and on a slip of paper merely wrote the name and address of the party who wrote the letter, which she put int o her dairy, then still keeping the letter from Timothy Groveton, she scratched out every word concerning Jane Lee so effectually, that it would be impossible for any one to decipher it.

"My dear Miss Aronburg.What are you doing?You may b e erasing something v ry very important for Violet and her sisters to know.Stop instantly.You have no business I'm afraid to mutilate a letter which does not belong to you. "he cried growing more and more in earnest and even slightly irritable, as she paid no heed to him, but when coolly on with her eras ureures.

"It is my business and it is my letter only this time."she answered at last, and her voice was low and strange."It is my business a and no one elses Tim and I know what I am doing.It has nothing to do with my good little Cousins.It only concerned me and Jane Lee.If you're afraid I'm hiding something out from you you are mistaken for here is the duplicate copy of it I made out while you were waiting on the Typwriter.You may have it and I'll destroy this.Bring it to violet and her sisters as soon as you can and explain matters."

She handed him the duplicate letter, which as it was well pri printed he was able to read well.

"You see even t hat agent does not t ell me where she is."she said t rying to speak naturally, though there was a kind of defiant tone in her voice"I want you to help me and Violet and her sisters by not only making further inquirin inquiries but press the inquiries.I might have to find her if I have to go t here and find her myself ."

She looked straight at Tim, who nodded assent to what she said, but as she explained wholly he knew that the erasure had to do with somet hing of Jane Lee, and he was aroused to some slight fear by Gertrudes excited manner and the details of the letter, which she told him don't let get in the han ds of no one but Violet and her sisters, and to ascertain imself if possible where Jane Lee really was.She gave him the address of Janes authorized military girlscout agent , and then yet he just remembered to his surprised that he had forgotten that two ot hers letters had arived one in English and one in Abbiennian, directed to Penrod, and in the one written in Abbiennian was a note for or from Jane Lee in whom Violet and her sisters had declared faithful, and a true good girlscout notwithstandin g what was said in the matter that she couldn't leave the mobolization camps just then.She of course was trying t o discover the plans of some vile suspicious Glandelinian generals, as Gertrude had said, who because the enemy were planning some mov against Angelinia Agathia she could not yet leave the camp.They knew however as much as she did how Jane Lee had been kind and faithful to her in e her cause, who asked that she should be rewarded and care cared for, and this was t he way some one had done it.Thus Gertrude Angeline reasoned and ti tried to reassure herself but nevertheless so vicous was the situation along sectors of the christian lines at Ophelia and the news she had heard of Jane Lee that there was a shadow on her bright face and a dull pain in her heart as she wondered what the mystery could be concern ing what Jane Lee must know.But Angelinia Aronburg could not be unhappy long and in visiting Mildred Maxwell and An geline Richee, she recovered her spirits and resumed her old fascinating manner with Penrod and Tim, driving them to the point of seeking to learn the fate of Violet and her sisters concerning the "Kidnapping of Ac Adolfev Adalafob."

Timot hy Groveton was the first to say it.As he did not often see Penrod and Violet and her sisters were absent from each other, he had reason t o know how much they were to each other, and therefore he was as confident of success as he was when he helped them out when in such desperate straights within the enemys lines on account of interfering Gerald Starring.At last he made up his mind to speak and know the worst or best there was to know.It had been this boast that no girl friend living had yet met any bad results when he was around to help and protect t hem.As a general t hing he didvnot believe that danger for violet and her sisters was really very great, that is at first did not even believe them real, even though he felt sure violet and her sisters were worth the love of all boys and girls.But the little bright eyed Abbiennian Princesses had torn down all his fortifications, and from the way Gertrude Angelina a cted, and Penrod acted he did believe the dangers were great but unseen, and wanted to put up some plan for Violet and her sisters as he had never wanted anything before in his life. They were so fresh, so original so piquaint so different from any others he had ever seen.Angelinia Aronburg and her sister Annabell whom Penrod had not yet seen, were sweet and lady like , and they expected his help on the matter, while Mildred Maxwell and Angeline Richee were he acknowledged nothing in cont rast to violet and her sisters who were t he most beautiful little girls he had ever seen.Everybody conc cded that and Timothy Groveton was not an exception to the rule.However since the n ight when Angelin ia Aronburg had int roduced him to Angelina Richee, he had called upon her three or four times, and felt a great growing interest in sher and Mildred Maxwell, as he saw how pure and sweet they too were with an inborn delicacy and refinement of manner almost like that of Violet and her sisters, and Angelina Richee never tried to hide the fact that general Vivianis was her father.But he understood that something mysterious about Violet and her sisters was known by Catherine Lee whom he also visited, and this of itself would have been a terrible obstacle in Tims way, had he been greatly interested in the mystery at the time.He knew Catherine Lee was such a sort of girlscout that all Glandelinia was arrayed against her for her do ddoings, but with Abbiennia it was different and therefore because t hey were brave, good, and loving themselvesshe loved every girlscout he personally knew as men of mature age unlayy love when the grand but when its a true holy passion seizes them for t he second or third t ime, and h e told Angelin ia Aronburg so one night when they sat together upon some ledge of rocks which overlooked the town and the river wandering t hrough it , and declared that the Vivian Girls, she, her sister and many ot hers made it seem as if the whole christian army was full of little loving girl angels.

Violet and her sisters had had some important message for Jack Saunders that - day, and told him to go and take it to General Con ce tin ian Aronburg.And Jack was glad to do it, and said he was quite ready to go, a and that they need not fear that he would fail in his mission.Then Jack went off, and was soon riding rapidly down the hill, while violet and her sisters from t heir big window watched him wondering if he could be safe with that message and that no slick foes would try to trap him and secure it, and then wondered what their lives would be without patient good loving Penrod.Once Violet and her sisters had remenvered t hat they had heard Manley say that she and her sisters werevixenish and wild catty(those were the terms he had used) and if other Glandelinians thought so too--General Bushaum and Johnston Jackon Manley for instance who were so different from John Manley, the three of whom she and her sisters were a little afraid.Where they had been the prisoners of John Manley they had never treated him with such burst s of righteous temper as they had treated his father and brother, but they had been hot and imperious in manner tward him, when e he made them his prisoners, and with John Manleys words"You little Christian dog princesses are a vixen and a termagent" ringing in their ears, they resolved to be that much more gracious to their own friends and less gracious to the enemy than formerly.They resolved too to be very gracious to Tim Groveton when he came that day as he was sure to do.every angelic smile should greet him, and if she and her sisters were wild cats as the enemy called them, every claw for her friends should be sheated, she would and her sisters be very gentle and purring cats to all her friends, and they wore t he dresses T imothy Groveton usally liked, and put knots of scarlet ribbons here and t here, and were altogether more lovely than usual when he came, earlier than usual, and this time without any papers or letters for hervand her sisters to read.There wasnothing to do but talk on the ensueing even ts of the war and on religious matters more, and Violet and her sisters were very gel gentle and soft and acquiesced readily in his proposition that they with their two cousin s walk out to the lodge of rocks, which was their favorite seat.(not dead beat) The late December morning was very sultry and st ill with an east wind, and the sun hung still in the east ern sky, giving a strange color to the smoke darkened heavens and looking like a ball of blood, and yet falling upon the golden hair and bright glowing faces of the nine girls, who w ere full of life and animation, and talked and laughed and coquetted with their companion, untill he could restrain himself no longer, and catching Jennie suddenly in his arms he said to her;

"Jenn ie and your dearest of sisters,I love you nearly as good asyour brother Penrod does, and I want you to be careful, not to expose yourselves these days to this unseen danger, I have loved you and your sisters, I believe since the moment I first saw and served you, and one of you clung to me as your dearest fathers friend, whom you were to trust with eve y everything.So again t rust yourselves to me;let me have a right to protect you as I often did in the past .I have lived for many years of my young life with at first no too much thought or care for girls, and yet such boys love all t he more when at last their hearts are touched.surely, surely Jennie, and your sisters, you will not say"no we cannot do as you say."

This last was said in a tone, which had something in it of dear, but while she allowed him to still hold her lovingly Jennie looked at him fixedly wit h wide open wondering eyes as if asking what he meant."

"Say dearest Vivian Girls"he continued"you will be careful, and not expose yourselves to needless danger."

"No, n ever never, we're not or never were so foolish.For your sake dear Tim since you and so many others love me as you do and my sisters too we'll do all in the world to be careful"She said and her voice rang out clear and full as if the answer were decisive."I am sorry"she began very gently"but we cannot understand why so many care for me and my sisters this way, and since we might have encouraged them we have always tried our best t o be careful.But I thought you know me and my sisters better than that Tim dear.I have gone through many adventures with my sisters, just as if have with Gertrude Angeline and others but with n o intention to do anything rash and foolish.Some one must have misled you int o beliefi believing Tim dear we a were reckless and dare devil.What we knew for sure would be certain destruction to us we have never dared to attempt, our own Father would not permit it.But for t he love of Heaven Tim Tim you look always since I've seen you for t he last t hree or four days as if you had been even by us smitten a sudden blow.I cannot understand it.I have had no information that we were in an unseen peril, and neit her had my sisters.What's the peril Tim.Do you know?"

He knew she was in earnest, quite as much by the expression of her face as by her words, and for a moment he felt bewildered and stunned, wit h his sense of loss and pain which was all the greater, if he had recieved a different answer from her. He had not expected her to say that she and her sisters were really ignorant of the unseen peril, for they were so cautious that that was not usually their nature. Sometimes when s he had spoo spo ken to her or any one of h er sisters, she had teased him and would assume all lovin g yet coquetish manners which he thought so charming and once Jennie herself had said as she laid her little hand in hix and answered in her saucy way;

"You can have me and my sisters if you really want us, but you will feel that you will get too good a bargain.The result.this t ime was so different.He had thought Gertrude Angeline had told them of their unseen peril, and alas the result was so different and he for an instant could not hardly refrain from look ing angril; at her though she fortunately had her back turned to him as she was engrossed in something her sister was saying.In fact Gertrude did not know her self that Violet and her sisters were ignorant of the danger.Jennies hands at his information were locked firmly together, and the little girl was still in his arms but looked sort of scared and yet dignified to him with no conquety in her manner, she herself not her sisters had heard, she did not show any shyn ess as she asked him the question of which danger she and her sisters were in that hurt him so cruelly.He was not one to beg and plead as a younger more impetious boy would have done, and yet t he blow of the knowing t hat they were in unseen danger hurt him worse and made him shiver with a cold faint feeling, as he looked at poor Jennie for a moment , while sister seeing this h Jennie's sisters looked curious ly at him seeing somet hing in his face which awoke within h them a feeling of great pity for him and thinking Jennie by her own face was ill or something .

"Oh Tim dear what's wrong"said Violet coming up to him"Don't look at us like that.Surely d you don't care for us more t han we're worth.You're worth more than us.We are not as worthy as Our Dear Blessed Lord is. Surely so far Tim dear we have did our level best to make you h happy, we are ~~not~~ ~~so~~ ~~low~~ so low temperted we have Passionate love for God and all t hose who love us. What is the matter and why does Jennie you're holding look so worried.?"

"And so oft en "said Joice coming up to"General Manley calls us vixens and terma gants."

The mention of Manley awoke in Tim a feeling of fury which made him say things that Violet and her sisters had never expected him to say.

"General Manley"he repeated sneeringly."Yes I see.I understand.He is the main devil in the Glendelin ian army and I might have kn own it.Satan and his followers prefer rascals like him to work for t hem. I and Angelin ia Aronburg recieved news t hat the whole spy army is within the christian lines seeking to destroy you litt le girls because that liar Manley accuses you and your sist ers of stealing away from the Glandelinian army "Adeldefob who has done"---- he at opped suddenly checked by t he expression of the blue eyes of Violet confronting him so steadily and growing so fierce and bright as the girl said;

"Well go on Tim.You did not finish.You said Manley said we kidnapped Adeldefob who has what.I insist upon knowing what you mean.what is it about Adeldefob?" Her tone and manner though it delighted him made him angrier against Manley yet and he answered at last;

"Manley claims Adeldefob made crazy impassion ate nutty love to you and your sisters, and has had plenty of time at his disposal to make love to you girls, had nothing else to do, that you little girls turned over to t he Glandelin ian cause for a t ime in order to gain i his favor and then let Gerald St-arring shoot him because you girls turned cowardly, t hat you monkeyed with a glande linian Prince, wit h no aim, no object in life, nothin g to do but play the Sardanapalus, that I Timothy Groveton harbored Gerald Starring and then treacherously shot him in the head to gain your favor, and that in the onsend I helped you lit tle girls kidnap "Adeldefob"from t he one;ye lines. And now Manley has sent within our lines Glandelinian spies, detectives, and the what not to t ry and put you litt le girls out of the way and recover Adeldefob."

"I im"and Viol ts eyes blazed with scorn "as wicked as he is, I did notdream general Manley was ever so mean--so dasterdly.That's an insult to our brother Penrod who would cut his own tongue out sooner than it should say a word against even us and you his friend, were you a t housand t ime his rival, and yet Manley in his crazy jealiously accus us of kidnapping Adeldefon Adeldefob and yet accuse him of wearing our dresses and spinning and likened our brother to a Sardanapau palus, and now we hate him for it.We're in unseen danger !Well we will show him it is he and not us in unseen danger."

"I don 't believe you dea detest him as much as I do"Tim said."It was unmanly cowardly in Manley to attack you and your sisters that way, and nothin g but cruel disappointment and bitter pain have you suffered since the war began. Penrod is my friend, what Manley said of him he said of me for I was with him and the more brave unsle unsel unselfish kind hearted boy in the whole world. I wanted this good opportunit y to warn you and your sisters of the grave unseen danger.Will you little girls for Heavens sake be careful."

Violet and her sisters knew he was in earnest, and Joice herself answered at once;

"Yes I understand the situation.We will beve be on our guard.Poor Penrod is so noble and so good, so unselfish and bears with our t roubles as no one else ever could.But Tim dear you are mistaken.We do never nanyt hing that is really rash and since you warned us we'll not only be on our guard but try and learn what our unseen danger is and erase it.I and my sisters are sure enough of A roman Catholic to think or kn ow needless recklessness is rank sucide and don't go t o extremes in our adventures.I or my sisters could not do anything that would make us throw our lives away recklessly, and we have no desire for these dreadful adventures anyway but have to go t hrough them whether we like or or not, or whether we're afraid or not.why we would sooner go home where it is safe if danger was really fatal t o us upon my word we should.So rest east easy Tim and don't be so worried about us.Manley is nothing.We really have him at his wits ends and he kne knows it."

She had t herefore comfort ed him, and he knew it, and hope rose suddenly within him, and takin g Violets hands in his and holding them tight ly there he began again;

"Oh Princesses, your safty will give me new life, new hope(not rope de dope) for if we can only discover what t he unseen danger is, you and your sisters sisters may come in time to think of me and your dear brother Penrod how much we have learned to love you.Promise me that you will try to overcome that unseen peril and ask God to have your angels that possess you guard you well.Put even. t hem on trial for a year, during which time probably this crazy war will be over, and the enemy will not be able to bother you any more.I'll like Evans, and Angelinia Aronburg be your staid guardian.Will you surely be careful and n ever leave this camp for a long long time."

"Of what use would that be"said Hettie"When at the end of a y ar the war may not only still cont inue but grow even worse."

"But God will it won't be"he replied."At leaset ask Him for that chance, take into yourselves one ray of sunlight for without it you and your sisters will be very dreary dreary. I for yourasks will put myslef myself on probation whether you will or not."

"We will do our best as your advice is very good"said Jennie herself looking off acroass the sun lit meadows with a troubled look in her dark blue eyes which he could not fathom.At last releasing herself gently from him, she said with a little shiver;

"It seems as if some one over in t he distance is watching us from behind a tree.I believe it is only fancy but it scares me.You must come with us.We must go in to our headquarters, and ifyou see any new dangers warn us so we can be on our guard.

"You girls go first and I'll follow"said Tim taking his field glasses from its holder and looking at the trees she indicated."Anyhow a y year is a long t ime and we may see happier t imes."

Indeed it did seem long t o ther and her sisters, but t o him whowas who was so much older it seemed as nothing, if at the end he could hope to win perpetually the safty of the beautiful little girls who walked so silently with him untill the house(not mouse) was reached, and taking up his quarters in one of the rooms but for one reason or other almost incessantly sitting by the window where he could keep his eagle o eye on t hat particular tree.

For some reason or other Penrod their brother had recieved a car call which made him leave, and when e he had been compelled for the time being to leave Violet and her sisters so suddenly, he was full of resentmen t, for he realized that who ever had spread the news that his sisters had kidnapped "Adeldefob"was unusally unreasonable and exasperating, and he meant what he said when he told his sisters he would not give up untill he had found who had circulat ed such a report .T o him those sort of fake new peddlers were bores, spoonies, and Miss Nancys, and he did not know what else, and his anger over it continued all through the day and night, when he lay awak awake thinking of t he peril his sisters were in, and how t hey looked witht he great tears standing in t heir sad but flashing eyes, as she bade him good bye untill he returned again.

"And I won't give u it up by jove."he said as he was dressing himself in the morning, but when breakfast was over which he had with Tim Groveton and a great number of boy and girlscouts and he had sat for more than three hours with Violet and her sisters, he began to feel t erribly ennuied, and to wonder why his sisters would be so apparently dull and tame, and take so much interested in their own interior home work when they should surely know they were facing some dreaded unseen peril.They were too nice a bunch of good little girls to suffer this way ,he thought, and he was puzzled to know to kn ow how he should dispose of his t ime to discover the st range and mysterious danger, now that he had found it out from Timothy Groveton .

When not busy with Violet and her sisters it had been ihis custom to ride over t o see Angelinia Aron u Angelinia Aronburg quite early in the day and stay untill late in the afternoon, but for four days he had not had a chance to do that, he had never had a chance of doing that yet , and never yet saw Hannabell Annabell, and because of t he peril so unseen which his sisters were in life had rather a dreary outlook(if not lookout) for poor Penrod, when at last he left the house and rode slowly tward Tim Grovetons part of the headquarters where he had been busy watching that one pa-ticular tree.....!WN VCAQ"

Tim was busy at something else too, but he greeted Penrod even more cordially than usual, for there was in his heart a feeling a the keenest regret forthe worry and sorrow of the boy Prince whom he reallly loved so much, and who it seemed to him looked rather sober and abstract as he seated himself near the window, and began idly to turn the leaves of a book he found on a table.Some military mail was just in and among T im Grovetons letters, was one from his Grandfather in Angelinia AAgathia, who wrot e asking if any one of his boyscouts or even goils knew of any honest trust y winning boyscout, who would like to find out where and who Adeldefob was so that the excitement caused by his disappearance would calm down and prevent disaster upon violet, and her sisters.Tact , patience an d suavity of man ner were also the essential qualit if qualifications, he wrote, and to a person boy or man possessed of these, the Abbisannian Government would give a liberal reward. On many accounts the Government prefered a man or boy from the christian lines who had been or was a boy scout, and so had written to his Grandson first.Timothy Groveton read the letter carefully, and then glanced sid ewise at Penrod, and asked himself whether it were not a desire to remove a possible unseen danger from Violet and her sisters by the plan of warn ing Penrod that he should try to get back to the foe lines as if Adeldefob had escaped and then to make a chance later of returning when he could.It would be a tremendous sacrifice but it would safe his sisters from possible disaster and probably a horrible d ath,by some form of assassination.Penrod was always willing t o sacrifice anythin g for violet, and her sisters, he was trusty and winning with any ammount of tact and perseverance if once roused to action.

The changing back to "Adeldefob "for the time being would relieve them from the peril, and deciding at last that it was the best thing in the matter, Tim handed him the latt er, saying;

"Prince here is something which may int erest you, and possibly you may like t o for their sake change your situation back from Penrod to Adeldefob. Evetybody is bound to find out who is "Adeldefob ."QA Penrod looked sharply at Tim but t ook the letter, and read it through, and his first impulse was that he would go to do anyt hin g for them no matter what the sacrifice.He should enjoy again getting lots of information within the Glandelinian army immensely, for he liked to double cross those Manleys his chief foes who were en vious of His Father, and he should enjoy the life again as "Adeldefob, only--

Penrod gave a little gasping breath, as he thought of going away where he could not even see his darling sisters, and t hat also it would cause grief and sorrow to them. But it was necessary.It would appease Manl ey in such a way that he would probably give up trying to have them bounded to their deaths.Of course they would always be to him what they had always been , and it was always his pleasure to see t hem come in and go out of his fathers house or headquarters, and to be with them everywhere they went, and hear occasionally t he sound of t heir voices, and all this would be impossible in Glandelinian armies.He would like to have them come along in disguise but that would be impossible for once they were detect ed now he would be either forced to give them or or reveal his identification by fiercely defending them.It was safer to go alone, and he had a chanc e to do some thing to save th m, something which he had so longed for at t imes, and was too good to be lightly thrown away, and he said to Tim;

"I am half inclined to go;at all events, I will see What Angelinia Aronburg says and let you know to night.If I do go you must guard them Tim, even with your life if need be."

"I beg your pardon Sire"fell suddenly o n Penrods ear, and turnin g he saw Angeline Richese who handed him a dainty note, and wait ed while he read it .

At was dat'ed at the Vivian Girl Headquarters, Eight oclock A.M. and rad read as follows;;;

"Dear brother Penrod;

"What a simpleton you must be to think I and my sis ers were in earn est when I told you we couldn't believe our peril was so great.I know we tried you awfully and so the news did us, but I would wish you would come over to us right away.We are just as lonesome without you bein g with us as can be, and last night after poor Jennie went to her room, she cried real hard, and said to us t hat some thing is wron g too with you, and we want you to come right over here and stay with us for munch.I have ordered broiled chicken, with pop overs and maple sirup. You knowsPenrod dear you can eat a dozen.While I'm preparing it my sisters will be out on the rocks, and see you when you come down the hill, and Jennie whill tie her pocket handkerchief to her parasol and wave it for a signal.And now you will come won't you, and we will make some plan to prevent the disaster to us.

"Your dear sister

An geline."

Indeed Penrod was not the sort of a boy to withstand an appeal like this, and as he read it everything else for the moment was forgotten in his imm nse desire to fly to the little sisters waiting for him.Timothy Groveton saw Angelin e Richese had him the note, knew it was from Angeline for he know her handwriting and watched the prince as he read it, while his col r came and went like that of some little school girl about to be punished for some misdeamor, and he was not greatly surprised when Penrod said to him, as he rose to leave the office;

"By the way I've been thinking it over, and I don't believe I'd care to go t o Angelinia Agat hia just now;;its too far away, and somet hing must be done to save them from that unseen danger.There is Will George Grangort ou-- just t he fellow they want, and he needs advent ure badly;;offer it to him.I'm going back to the Glandelin ian army as "Adeldefob"It's their only chance though it 'll break t heir and my heart I suppose when I go.But God 'it can 't be helped.Either Adeldefob is as they should believe liberated, or poor Violet and her sisters soon are no more. It 's the only way."

Penrod was in t he Company Street by this time, and ten minutes later he was galloping madly tward the headquarters of violet and her sisters, and the little Vivian Girl whos whose signal he saw as she waved it aloft - to let him know thatsheihentsed ot she and her sisters were there ..And Penrod rode hard and fast untill he was at Jennie's side with her sisters crowding about him, and soon sitting just where Timothy Groveton had stood the night before he had warned violet vand her sisters of their unseen peril.How sweet and lovely they were with that air of grace and eterality, for they too were worried for what had been known, and very glad t o have Penrod back with them, and Jennie gave him both her hands, and offered no resistance when he took her in his arms and hugged and kissed her more than once, and then held Catherine and Daisy while he talked to t hem all and asked if they were not worried sick by the news of the dangerthey apparently or really were in.

"We are not worried that bad"Jennie said"but then unseen dangers are the hardest for even the bravest to face.But we knew you would come back just as Angelina knew she should send for you.She is cooking our breakfast inside.It is useless for us to try to live apa t apart for what would the world be to either of us wit hout the other but nevertheless it often happens and we know will happen again."

"It would be worth nothing sister nothing"Penrod said eagerly, as he drew her down beside him and passed his arm around her waist and that of Violet too, while the light of a new hope and yet worry too showed over his face.He did not like to tell t hem of his dreadful plan in which there was really no way out no matt er how great the sacrifice.And Penrod had long ago told himself that he loved Violet and his other sisters with more than a brotherly love, more than lovers have for each other more t han he loved anything ever before, and had only now been det erred from telling them of his enforced plan of act ion by their fitful moods against their foes, sometimes all sunshine, and somet imes all storm.But now he surely might speak with the full assurance of q a favorable agreement to his plan for he would not even then go if th ey would not sacrifice him for what could but this her and the manner of her sisters mean and her assertion that they could not live apart .violet and her sisters loved him it was more than certain, and with his arm around Violet and Jennie now he began rapidly and impetiously to tell them how o inexpressibly dear t hey were to him, and to speak of the future, when hi s plan would be an ardent success, and when they would again be safe from unseen danger, as if every thing were understood and settled between them.

"Probably then if Our Dear Blessed Lord wills it we will never have to part again will we my little darlings!"he said."I should l not like to see a look of sorrow or wor y on t he faces of my sisters, and knew it meant you were again in unseen perils,vand I will be so good and loving, that the whole world will be surprised. And if you my sisters don't object I will carry out the "Adeldefob"plan at once.I Will have T imothy Groveton and also Jack Evans to guard you, for you need these Guardians now more than ever to care for you little girls, and as you are now in such peril and as my plan alone can save you there is no reason why I should wait a single day.I can manage to telegraph letters to you from the Glandelinian encampments.I will tell my plan to Angelinia Aronburg to night, and she may be so glad, and so will Angelinia Richee Mildred Maxwell and others, for they all love you dearly.It will h be an awful big sacrifice sisters but it will be good for me and you in the end.I will miss you oh so badly but what would it be for me if I looked sadly down upon your graves because I didn't carry out the plan.They surely will get you sisters dear because of the news you "Captured Adeldefob" I must pretend an escape from the christian lines and make them understand you never did capture me.Why don't you speak to me Jennie!,he said as she or her sisters did not answer him, but sat like one dead to all sense of speech or hearing.Why Jennie dear, and your sisters too, what is the matter!How white you all are."he continued, h as he happened to look into t heir faces, which were as pale as ashes, with an expression of pain, and even horror upon it, which he could no not understand.

"Oh Penrod dear you have nearly killed us."Jennie said, at last as she slowly released herself from him and looked at him with eyes from which the hot tears were falling like rain.

"Almost killed my dearest sisters Jennie!"Penrod cried."How could I kill you my sisters by not only telling you that I loved you so much, and of my plan to go back as Adeldefob when you knew or must have known it already. But surely if you object t o it I won't go, but surely sisters you have not been unconsciously decieving me all the t ime--not been leading me on to believe that you did not know the awful situation, only to feel you can't make the sacrifice at last!But what can I do.To remain here when the Glandelin inns believe I'm your prisoner would be to cause a disaster that even I nor anyt hing but a profound miracle probably what even t he possession angels cannot prevent without doing a miracle. That would be cruel on my part indeed.I'd be safe.I'd keep my eyes open so that I won't encounter t hat Starring boy or his two dangerous companions.If I kn owing your danger stay here now when I can pretend I as Adeldefob escaped and t old the Glandelinian s I was not captured but went on that mission for gen eral Tamerline then Manley probably will for t hat cause withdraw the unseen danger and everything will be all right.I'd love to have you accompany me but that on this occassion would be impo impossible.I too wouldn't want that awful scene like in Tamerlines army repeat itself again .I and you girls couldn't bear it again ."

And this he said because something in their faces and eyes w filled him with dread and fear.

"Oh Penrod, oh Penrod"Violet herself cried;(pied) beating the air with her hands "It is hard, too hard to do it but if my conscience reproved me one whit and said I had purposely misled you one bit for my own amusement just to see what you would do or say,I would and my poor sisters too deserve to have the possession angels withdrawn from me and that evil spirits should drown us in the river, but we have not, we certainly have not.On y Only last night T im t old us of the unseen peril, and a man tried t o snipe us from a t ree while we sat here.I thought I t hought---"

"You thought"Penrod interrupted her, as she hesitatd hesitated a minute"T hought what. That I didn't know and would not tell you either!Well I only kn ew from what you told me this morning and what Tim confirmed and Gertrude too.You must know sisters that these Glandelinians are stocks--hard senseless st ones. unmoved by your beaut y and sweet ness, and holiness, and all your sorrows and sufferings,--and I will say it , I know it though I'll shock you to t imidness by saying it--what t hese Glandelinian generals would do to you litt le girls if they only dared.They could do it sisters I swear it, I know it all.There is nothing they couldn't do to you if they dared, nothing at all, and because of the news t hat you kidnapped "Adeldefob"they dare and are trying their best to do it now. For Gods sake sisters dear don't be spoony and wake up to the danger you are in.I have not slept since T im told me of it and I wet my bed from the sweat of t error pouring from me.I will say it too, your wiles and witcheries, cann ot cannot effect the Glandelinians, their fury are damnable to any the least now and the only reason so far you were not harmed as I found out from Angelinia Aronburg and Catherine Lee is the fact Manley doesn't know which Christian army you are in.He thinks its your fathers.If he finds out you're here and my plan don't even work or be carried out I'll be praying at your graves. Their own Glandelinian girlscouts are heartless coquettes they pretend love to us to ensnare us better and Manley may sent to you the most heartless conquettes to ensnare you that ever breathed.Girls however do not usally write notes to their own dear brothers such as Angelina has written me, begimn begging me to come, and then when I come are afraid to make a litt le Sacrifice without meanin g something, and if you do not mean to make the sacrifice for fear of my own danger, may I ask what do you mean!"

He spoke bitterly.So great was his disturbance that he felt the same as if he had been outraged insulted by his foes in their presence, and he was only passionate in speaking to them now, and Violet, and her sisters recognized it and shivered from head to foot , as Jennie crutched down on her knees and sobbed bitterly, while Violet said almost severely;

"List en to me Penrod before you make so serious a mistake, and believe me as I hope for Heaven, I or my sisters do not see how we could fool you this way. We know nothing of the danger untill yesterday when T im told us.How could we so easily let you go now and alone when only God knows whether you'll come back or not.We'd rather die for you.You are my youngest brother--my blood relation, you had just returned to us after having been absent so long when stolen away from us when so young, and I have taught t hat if we did do anything rash such things were wicked, unatural, such as God disapproves and curses.But if it is such a danger for us could we not flee from this army and hide in security for a time untill the storm blows over."

"You are not so foolish to do that which is impossible"Penrod said quickly.

"You would be easily overtaken and captured by t he Glandelinians.Surely you would do no such fool thing eit her.It would sister dear seem cowardly."

"But it would be for your sake and you wouldn't have to go within the foe lines so soon again. I might not have as much experience with the enemy as you did Penod dear but I had had much of that teaching from experience, and this situation is one of the things that took deep root in mind my mind.I had once a go governess who herself went through a sort of experience we are now going through, who to took chances in facing the unseen peril in spit e of everything , and she surely passed through the danger and survived."

"Yes"said Penrod almost sneeringly"but I heard from t he horror of her experience she went crazy and drowned herself in the Mic-Hellenter Run thinking she was a d fish. When it seemed that you then would never see me again when I was carried off to the Army Hospital two of you little sisters of mine were mad insane for a t ime untill Tim by his influence brought you back to normal. Ofcourse if you say no to my proposit ion, I give in to your will.But remember the consequences.Those Glandelinians can get you if they will it.All their other intentions at you before were only fakes.Look out now I warn you."

"Penrod dear, I and my sisters would no sooner take a chance of a grave unseen danger, than I would kn owingly and purposely st abbing ourselves in the heart.You sacrifice more for us than even we deserve though, you are our brother, and we loved you as such even before we discovered you were, and as you understand.Surely you would not cannot think me or my sisters so brazen faced and bold to treat you as we have and then yet refuse to make a sacrifice which would be for our good and yours too though hard as it is.I am sorry Penrod dear, so sorry but we cann ot accept the sacrifice without Fathers consent, and I wish I and my sisters had never left Angelinia Agathia, for we sometimes fear we cannot bear this sort of hard saddening haphazard sort of life any longer.Our whole nature revolts against aguinst it, the same as if you were already gone and had died within the Clndelinian army, and T know that even you for what has gone through before cann ot carry out that plan without Fathers consent, and Angelinia Aronburg being his closest companion and our guardian dear brot her has say over you too and could object.If you do go over t here you may be killed, that we would never see each ot her again. And too we cannot hardly bear it even if you are safe for t he days will be long without you Penrod, and worse than all you will perhaps think always that.we unconsciously decieved you this time, but we didn. didn't.'n we didn't , we didn't kn ow of the danfer untill , last night when T im told us and surely you must believe it .If you really have to go, and will go in spite of all we say and how strong our objection may be, you will be careful over in the enemys lines.Will you promise that.?"

Violet, and her sisters were kneeling before him Jennie' a and violet a upturn d faces meeting with his every muscle quivering with anguish as Violet thus importuned him.He could not resist her, and at ooping down he kissed the quivering lips, and he said;

"If the danger can be proved to be really so great would you object to my going then?"

"I don't know Penrod dear.You see we never thought the danger so great in that way.We might perhaps in t ime, but we could not now unless Papa does not object and then oh we can't prevent you, for you are our brother and mean good for our safty, and if you do go away we will build up a better love for you, and then Penrod I do wish you to be oh so careful, and be a litt l e different from what you are now.Even your quickn ess your learn ings over in America did not prevent you meeting disaster with that Gerald Starring.Nobody can lick him. Gert rude Angeline and ten other girlscouts and two boys once attacked him in a barn with two knives t apiece to capture him and he licked them all with one kife knife in his possession and escaped.girls do not generally want to see you take such chances and meet such a boy scout again who have---"

Here Violet st opped suddenly appalled at her own t emerity, but Penrod made her go on in a t one that she must obey, and she went on and said;

"Who have shown such dangerous fighting qualities as he has.It is all very nice in cousins and brot hers to know how to fight with Clandelin ian boy and girlscouts who only know how to run sewing machines, and how our dresses should be trimmed and ought t o hang, but we wish our brothers brothers and cousins to avoid such Clandelinian d child scouts different from that, wish the to avoid such boys as St arring, Dargar and Lowien, t o avoid such girls a s Mary Lou, Macy Queenie and ot hers within the Clandelin ian armies--for they have occupitat ion s that would throw terror in the stoutest heart.You are great too and have learned us many things but we fear you have never learned any thing about the fighting quatqualities of those three boys and and if they ever discover who you rea lly are they could really get you too.Your fight ing ability is good too and your Indian Tricks fine it is true, but that may not be able to protect you against them who fight treacherously, and if you go forth it would be wise to keep out of their way at least, don't you think so?"

She spoke very gently but every word was a sting, and hurt Penrod if possible morethan a girls rejection of her sweeth eart would have done.

"Yes T see"he answered bitterly."My first experience with Gerald Starring tells me that.when I have one of you in my arms he sneaks in the room and shoots me before I can even draw, and shocks one of you in the neck through an open window.You think him a lazy treacherous wild dog, whom many Clandelin ians eben even generally despise, and so he is and T can watch out for him in the fu future but if you won't let me go, it will be very hard to give in when you and your sisters are in such extreme unseen danger of which we know nothing about or when it will strike.Your love and respect is too strong and won't let me go without fathers consent."

"And so you have Penrod our love and respect ,"said Jennie "so you have,"for she was eagerly t ouched by the grieved hopeless expression of his face, which was not at all like Penrods face, usually so bright and happy."You have both our love and respect--love as sisters were are--for neither Gertrude Angeline or ot hers can love you as we do, and we have respected and will respect you always as the kindest and best and bravest and most unselfish brother in all the world.If we could only think up another plan that would work just as well we would do it. But disguising ourselves as som ebody else within the Christian lines won't help any.ponT Penrod, oh don't cry"she continued in a tone of agonized entreaty as the gr eat t ears which he could not restrain, rolled down is white face, which was convulsed with pain. "If you c ry like that we will feel as if we were already being killed, and almost fear so now."she added frightened by the storm of sobs and tears to which he at last gave vent and which scared her sisters too.

Violet and Jennie were kneeling in front of him Hattie and Catherine on each side, and Jennie crept down closer to him, and gently t ook his hands from his face where he had put them,,, and wiped his tears away, while her own fell fast as she tried to comfort him and could not. for only in one way could she do that, and with her view of the matter there was no comfort for either he or she and her sisters.Yet to take chances with the unseen dangers would be foolhardy and wicked and so there was no hope for her or her sisters either, but maybe she could com fort him in another, and she said at last;;

"Penrod for your and our own safty we will not refuse the s acrifice, that is just as impossible, as for us t o face the unseen danger and pr perish through our own foolishness, but in case anyt hing happens we can promise never to go away from the christian lines not even to scout or do anything untill you come back to us safe and sound.That f would not be hard, for T do not believe we need not try anyt hing just yet concerning those picture mystery concerning Ann ie Aronburg for we do not care to solve t heir mystery it is up to the Gemini to do that and that is what they are for, and if you wish it I and my sisters will remain within this christ ian arms and find some means to disguise ourselves so we won't be known and be as stranger girls.shall we?"

"No Jennie no.That wouldn't do any good.And I am not so selfish as that." he said."You ought to scout too, you need to do duty to your country; but you need two guardians here besides Angelinia Aronburgsomebody with an r energy and will and those will be Tim and Jack Evans. The latter loves you too as if you were his sisters."

She was smarting awfully from th the hurt of the dreaded news he had found out and he went on; "Whether youscout on the enemy when I go away or not cannot affect me, for when I go away I'll be doing something, and will be a success and then when I come back you'll admire me as your Savoir."

"Oh Penrod but be careful over there.Be careful Penrod dear.Oh I am so sorry for this mornin ge work, when we meant to be so happy."

Penrod had risen to his feet, and she and her sisters had risen too, and they st ood looking up at him with an expression which was born of greater love and nearly maddened Penrod.

"Jennie"he began laing his hands upon her shoulders and looking fixedly into her eyes"Do you fear that when I go away, there will be no hope of my return, that I cannot be successful again as Adeldefoh."?

"Yes Penrod we fear it.We can never feel happy untill you return safely again because still we feel we cannot sacrifice you that way."she said."It's too much for us, the worse we have ever met with yet.We always sorrow too because our two big brothers are so far away."

And Penrod knew she meant it and was conscious of a death death like sickness stealing overand mastering him, and making him sit down again upon the rock while everything grew dork around him, and Violets voice seemed a long way off as she spoke to him in afrighte d tones, and asked if h e were fainting.

He however did not faint,, though it was some minutes before he was himself,,, again, and arose sadly to say good bye bye. There was no question of breakfast, no thought of broiled chicken, and pop overs for the night were past caring for such things now, and only remembered t hat in some sense, that if it was Willed by God this good bye was for life.But as the reader will see God in this story Willed them t o only see great things and doings of their brother.He by going saved them and saved himself and got the better of Gerald Starring for once.She thought he would of course come to their headquarters again----:oto morrow perhaps but not as he had come heretofore not as in the old happy days but more as a bet ter brot her thancever.He knew he could not come again to morro w nor for many many to morrows--he feared never perhaps, for there was dire danger in Manleys raving Clandelinian army which even after the long st ubborn battle of Big Girl Knool and his partial defeat would not so much as move off from there than a mountain would move from its base, and yet he meant to go there as Adeldefoh. Possibly his grave wasthere waitin g for him or probably the branch of a tree with a rope hanging there, or he might tarry months and mon ths with no hope of getting back to t he christian lines, untill the bright beautiful little girls standing before him had pronably gone loony because of his failure to return.

It was as great a sacrifice for him to go as it was for them to let him go.He in his heart hated Manley most bitterly.And so to him it seemed it was good bye forever, but he would not tell his sisters so.He would wait and write his farewell.

But he must kiss them once for the sake of all they had been to him, and that he had known they were.He was a tall young boy, taller than Joice who was the tallest of the girls, but the other sisters of his were smaller, each one of whom he could take into his arms as he would a baby, and he took each one of them in his arms and kissed their foreheads and lips as he said;

"Remember sisters dear, my little Queenies, whatever comes my love for you will always remain unc ang unchanged, for it was not the love of a day or a year but love forever.Good by.I'm going now but oh I hate to.But it is for your safty."

And he went slowly from them, while they watched him with t earful eyes and throbbing hearts, and neither of them guessed just where anr how they would meet again.But indeed they would.

Timothy Groveton was alone in his headquarters when Penrod came in aft er his return from t he headquarters of his sisters, and asked abruptly;

"Have you seen William Grangeron about going to Angelinia Agathia."

"Not yet, no I thought I would wait until to night ."Tim replied, and Penrod con tin ued"Sent him immediately if you can find i him and let him wear one of my old uniforms.To t hrow the enemy off t he scene scent he must temporarily app ar as me.Write so to your uncle at once or perhaps I'd better write myself.I'm going back into t he fo lines as "Adeldefob for the sake and safty of my sisters.I can 't bear it any longer."

Something inthe ton e of his voice made Timothy Groveton t urn quickly and look at him.

"whytTim "Why Penrod"he said"what ails you?What has happened to make you look so white and strange.?"

"N othing"Penrod answered"--That is nothing of any consequen ce t o any one but my sist rs.I must do this to avoid the unescapable danger they're facing the un seen danger you warned me of."Then moved by a sudden impulse t o t ell him, Penrod burst out"Tim I can t rust you, I know for youn have always been my best friend among boys."

"Yes "faltered Tim t binking remorsely of what was threatening to happen, and wondering what Penrod would do if he knew more than he knew now and what Catherine Lee herself knew.

"I must tell you, talk to you or go crazy." Penrod con tinued"The fact is if I do notgo back to the foe lines as Adeldefob I will be making a fool of myself, and would deserve to be rejected as t heir brother and Prince.I alone can save them by proving to crazy old Manley and His Confederates that they did not ad abduct "Adeldefob."

"Youbgoing to surely do t hat.You going back after your experi nce with that Gerald Starring rat..Were you advised to do so?If so by whom?" T imothy Groveton asked although he felt that he knew perfectly well what the answer would be and dreaded it .

"No one advised me.It was my plan and I had a hard time to get them to let mé do so.They refused at first.What ot her little girls are there on the face on t his war torn earth whose answer and presence is worth caring for than they.I asked t hem the permission tolgo back to t he foe lines, and they refused untill I pointed out that unless I did so I'd be standing p or praying at their graves for Manley really can do them if he wants or dares to, and at first t hey made me know they meant it, but finally they gave in, and n ow I'm going to t he Glande linian army for with t he peril facing t hem I cannot stay here."

"What reason at first did they give for t heir refusal?"Tim asked, feeling some what apprehensive, and Penrod replied;

"They had t hree reasons, each of them good and sufficient if there had been any way out of this unseen immeasureable danger they're facing. First they loved me too much't o let me face that sort of work again after my experience with Starring as they expressed it, second I am their brother, and they feared it was an unpardonable sin if I did it unless I can find a way to do it saftly as t hey said I might be facing the danger of committing rank sucide, and third they were afraid I would be hanged by t he Glandelinians or something.That is what Jennie and violet said or something like it, butthe danger t hey were facing hurt me too much not to tri try t o get them to let me at least try it long enough to appease Manley, for not to do somet hin g for them made me feel so small, so contemptible, and aft er they finally consented I knew how impossible it was to let the matter drop even if I was to face that Gerald St arring who to me is nothing but a dawdling effeminate, Sardanapalas."

At the mention of that word; Sardanapalus.Tim Groveton started, for that was the name he had used when once speakin g of Gerald Starring to violet and her sisters.Was S Penrod really going to face such a danger again.He hoped it was not likely, else he had never come there to speak over the sad affair, which seemed so like a stab to Tim, who at last could bear it no longer, and as Penrod went on with his story showing in all he said how implicitly he trust ed him he burst out;

"Stop Penrod, st op Penrod while I make a warning confession to you, then you will think t hat bot h of us have to do something to prevent disaster, for Heaven knows I'm your friend and I don't want you to come t to h harm eit her, and t here is no boy I like living as you are.But Penrod I in a moment of wea ness I t old them of things about Gerald Starrings doings for which any one ought t o have blushed.I t oo have offered my aid t o Violet and her sisters to go within the foe lines to erase that lie of their kidn apping Adeldefob."

"You when ?"Penrod exclaimed ., and Tim replied;

"Only last night, and when she t old me or at least Violet did that she feared Gerald Starrin g more than any one else, and said t hat I should not take such chances, I accused Gerald Starring of being the sole cause of their trouble and an in my mad anger said things of him, which only a coward could have said of a friend, though far from my friend he is or I am of his.I sneered at his wicked career and his persecutions of your darling sisters, and said that he was a a Sardanapalus or something like that and also t hat he was a t reacherious snake which he really is. "

"And you said you t oo was going into the foe lines to st op Manleys attempt on Violet and her sisters.But Geo I need somebody to stay with t hem untill I come back and somebody must as I cannot locate Evans anywhere just now"Penrod said and in his eyes t here was an expression which hurt Tim cruelly, and made him think of t he mortally wounded Caesar when he cried out, Et,t u, Brute.

"Yes I had int ended to, but I thought by doing so I could make what mends I could for that report that your sisters stole Adeldefob.Violet and her sisters will tell you so if you ask her or them.I can remember the day when Violet flew int o Geralds face like a yellow jacket, and defended herself bravely.But if you wish Prince, you stay with them and let me go to t he foe lines."

He offered his hand to Penrod in whose eyes tears were shining, who did not refuse to t ake it, though he was still smarting under this new pain.

"Only I can do t he stunt as "Adel evo Adeldefob" must ret urn to t he Glande linian army"he said with a faint smile."I remember t he day when I seen Violet horsewhip Starring, but t heir persecutions is very hard to bear.You may yet she refused you t he permission t o go, and gave you no hope of going!"

Tim thought of what was called the "Months" probation he had insist ed upon , and spoke of it t o Penrod, but added ;

"She told me however; t hat it was useless, for at the end of that time her answer would be the same, so you see there is no hope for me going into the foe lines unless you consent to it"and this he said because he saw how utterly crushed and heart broken Penrod was, and he would not add to his pain by con fessing that away down in his heart, t here was a shadowy hope, t hat violet or any one of her sisters might change t heir mind, and make Penrod stay, and let him go instead, but Penrod was reallly going.He had made up his mind to that, and before return ing to his headquarters he wrote himself to the boys Uncle in Angelinia Agathia t elling t hat he was sending Whillim Grangerton to accept the situation and saying that Will would be in the city in a few days, and t hat he was going to allowcthe lad to wear his own older uniform so t hat the enemy wouldn't got wise to w to whom Adel defob was.Penrod himself was going into the Foe Lines by to morrow.But why to morrow.

"But why to morrow?There is no such haste necessary"Tim said when he heard of the contents of the letter, and Penrod replied,

"I must go before I see them again; the sight of t hem grieving for me when I cannot even back out of this proposition might unma unman me and make me give it up and cause them disaster.Oh how I hate that Manley.I'd give anything while there I could shoot him down."

So the lett er was sent, and when Penrod went home to dinner, he startled Angelinia Aronburg and Angeline Richee and also Mildred Maxwell and Catherine lee by telling them that he was going to t he Glandelinian army again for several weeks as "Adeldefob" and possibly longer .

"T o the Glandelinian army as "Adeldefob"the three girls ex exclaimed,"So you are the famous boy spy "Adeldefob too.". And then Penrod explained it to them. Angelinia Aronburg opposed the plan with all her childish strength, for she believed life without Penrod t heir bor brother would be nothing for his sisters who loved him so much. Catherine Lee on the contrary reluctantly approved of it.She said it was no ways for a little girls brother to hang anywhere too near his sisters when they were threatened if he saw a way to save them; t hat Penrod had a right to return to the Glandelinian army as "Adeldefob, but while he was goje they t do ought to be doing t hemselv somet hing for themselves.This was only a repetition of the old story of the danger the little girls really were in, and con firmed Penrod in his purpose.He this time would make something of himself that would start le the world itself,----would show that he was capable of even higher and greater occupat ion than frustrating and outwitting Gerald St arring.He was very sore on t he subject of the hidden mysterious danger they were in, and very reticent all through the dinner. and when it was over; excused himself to his girl and boy friends saying he had important letters to write, and some few matters which must be attended to.It was very sudden to them all------his going away again when especially Angelinia Aronburg had just come more than anything to be near him-- but as he was a prince he therefore was his own master; and must act for hims l himself, he knew if Adeldefob returns Violet and her sisters would no furt her be shadowed by the unseen danger wo which would really get them fatally sooner or later, and when Mildred Maxwell tried to persuade him to give it up he almost was angry as he answered;

"I like and love all of you little girls most immensely but you must not forget my sisters comes first in my heart. heart. They are the best and dearest ,ittle little girls in the world to me, but I would do wrong not to go away, I done wrong not to have gone back sooner untill this blew over.I must be a boy among boys as much as I expect to be a Prince among Princes.I see it now and must take the first chance offered me.I'm afraid t oo I'm making a bigger sacrifice than my poor sisters are.But t wo weeks is not very long, and I shl shall write to them every other day if possible and in English."

So Mildred Maxwell gave it up, and busied herself with various preparat ions for his comfort, and said she should with others go to Ophelia to see him off with his poor now saddened sisters, and t ried to seem cheerful and happy, and tried with his sisters to fathom t he cloud which overshadowed his face, and made him so unlike himself . What had happened to his sisters, and was really the secret peril any connection with it.They thought no, and when in the morning he said he was going to bid all the good girl and boyscouts good bye, and they asked if he were going to see his sisters too he answered;

"I saw them yesterday evening, but I can't bear to see them now, but give poor Violet this letter when I am gone"they were sure of it, and for the first time since they had known Violet and her sisters, they felt sad for the little Vivian Girls sadder than ever in their lives before, who even then was watching from their win dow for their dear brother coming over t he bridge across the river, across the causeway, and up t he long hill as he would not come again, for when later in t he day, they saw at a distance a lone boy on horseback heading tsouth southward toard the for klnon toard the "Adeldefob life which was to have the same sin and occupation it had before.

Violet , and her sisters,,, saw a long train of Abyssinkilian cavarly as it came across the plains from Fort Ophelia--now then go past under a bridge, and rush past out swift swiftly on by the river side, untill it was lost to view in the deep cut by an old abandoned coal mine. But they never dreamed that the lone figure on horseback with the cavarly was Penrod, whose face was as pale as ashes, as he rode his horse wit h his cap almost pulled over his eyes, almost seemingly seeing nothing that was passing around, and t hinking only of Violet and her sisters who were even then listening for t he sound of his horses feet coming up the hill.For violet and her sisters felt sure he would change his mind and come back to them.And in deed they anxiously watched for him all day long, and was beginnin g to get restlessand rest less and impatient, when about sunset, Angelinia Aronburg and t wo other girlscouts came riding slowly up the hill and into the yard.In a trice violet was at the door her sisters immediately following feeling certain t hat Angelinia Aronburg had come with Penrod and T im as she sometimes did.But only Angelinia Aronburg and her sister were there and it struck violet and also her sisters that there was something a litt le strange in their manner while A n Annabell had been evidently crying.

"I am so glad you have come and so are my sisters."Violet said as she led the way way into t he house."I and my sisters have been so lonely to day, with not a person to see me except general vivienia and Angeline Riches, who were h ere a few moments this morning.Where is Penrod , and why has he not been here to day."

"Penrod has gone; you dear Prin cesses surely knew that, or at least that he was going, he was here yesterday and told you."Annabell said, and in her voice there was a slight hardness as if her cousin Violet were trifling with her thus by seemingly pretending not to know Penrod had gone.But she knew better when she and also Angelin ia saw how white Violet grew, as she repeated after her;

"Gone.....and I or my sisters knew of his going.You are mistaken .We know he planned to go but we objected.I or my sisters know nothing.Where has he gone?"

"To general Manleys Glandelinian army as "Adeldefob".

And then violet grasped the chair near which she was standing with both hands, and leaning h avily upon it while her sisters were now weeping bitterly and she asked in a half whisper for something was choking her so that she could not speak aloud;

"To Glandelinian armies under Manley.For what.? And how long will he be gone?"

As rapidly as possible Angelinia Ag Aronburg t old all she knew of a matter which had taken t hem so by surprise, and which had so effected poor litt le Jennie that she was sick in bed.For a moment neit her Violet nor her sisters did not, could not speak, but stood st aring at An gelinia Aronburg, who sure t hat Violet and her sisters were the cause of it through t heir unseen peril continued;;

"We thought you and your sisters unconsciously had somet hing t o do with it,that as rumors were said, you sent him away t o save yourselves from the unseen peril, for it was after he came from here that he decided to go;he had given it up before.

CHAPTER THIRTY SEVEN.

HO

F HOW VIOLET AND HER SISTERS BORE THE SAD NEWS... VIOLETS ILLNESS

MOURNING FOR PENROD.

THE LETTERS. THE SHOCK.

VIOLET AND HER SISTERS LEARNS THE TRUTH...

"I and my sisters sent him away--sent him into t he Glandelinian army to die as a spy in case he gets taken as he will.No, no we did not do t hat, how dare- you say t hat , An gelin ia who is our best frien d"Violet cried angrily yet petiously."I opposed him, said he couldn't even do so without Fat hers consent, and he our brot her too, and I could not more t hen you could let him go wit hout my consent.But we did not think he would really go away.And not only accusing us of sendin g him away but coming at this time to tell us when we could have stopped him had you t old us sooner.And you our frien d to treat us this way.Accusing us.Do you love him more than we do.Oh what shall we do without Penrod.Go the bot h of you and bring him back, and you'll answer dearly to us if you do not succeed.Go."and Violet stamped her foot , while her sisters were sobbing passionately, but Angelinia Aronburg was sorry that after all she had t he wrong suspicion the first she had of her darling frien ds, who for a moment were friends no lon ger for the occasion, but as Gertrude and Annabell began also to sob passionately for Penr d too had made t he happiness of their lives and without him t hey were very desolate, Viol t Violet fin ally relen ted of her anger, but nevertheless would not relent of her order.

"You not us are responsible for him going for not telling me sooner"said Violet and t herefore the mistake is on our side.But we will forgive you for it and the occasion but you must bring him back.did he speak of me"Violet added."Did he leave no wordlle messege, no goodbye."

"He left this letter for you and your sisters."Ann abell said passing the letter to Violet, who clutched it eagerly, but would not read it before with the littlevAronburg sisters looking on.T hat probably they at ill blamed her and her sisters, and held t hem responsible for Penrods t rip Violet and her sisters were certain, and for t he first time in their lives t hey felt glad when at last t hey said good night, and left them to themselves with the letter---Penrods letter--which they read together in t he privacy of their room, and which broke their hearts.

"Dear sisters"He began "For your sakes I am forced to go away to act again as Adeldefob--for a month certainly, an and perhaps forever for boy dcouts and spies of my habits usually get caught if they are not careful and could be hanged as a spy."

"Oh-h-h-h-h"and Jennie herself groaned bitterly as she thought "Why did Penrod say what will make it seem as if he was murdered if he should die as a spy there.Angelinia Aronburg must sheild him or bring him back and I'll hold her strict ly responsible for it.And she accuses o us." Then she read on"As I said I am going within general Manleys army to act again as "Adeldefob so that Manley can see and understand that you little girls did not kidnap him as Manley t hinks.The chances of gaining plenty of information for our cause is good, and t he duties such as I can perform, and so I am going.T im will be your guardian while I am away.Tim made me t he offer to be your guardian, and I gave him t he permit.But dearest sisters I wouldn't do this if I had not kn ow of the grave danger you were in, did not kn ow how sure sooner or later you may be assassinted in cold blood like t he Glandelinians planned.Sisters dear I do believe such news hurt me more than anyt hing before, I literally heard your death knell.I do believe I could not live without you perhaps t he shock might kill me, and so to save your lives I am going to beging as "Adeldefob "anew, with some sim some occupation, you frust rate Manley, and for what I shall do Gerald Starring won't be able to taunt me again.But oh dearest sisters how I love you, and how I long to hold each one of you in my arms my dearest litt le darlings.Why should this dreadful war so oft en forfe us to seperation.It's a strange power too which you dear little angels have over us dear brothers--a power to hold us at your will by one glan e glance of your eyes or toss of your heads.No faces are more beautiful or ethereal than yours, but t oo there is something about you poor little dears more att ractive than mere regularity of feature or purity of complexion heart and souls, and boyscouts have gone down before it as I have done, body and soul, with no hope or wish for anything else if your safty must be denied me.But don't worry dear sisters for me for you must remember all those who have been so good to you have never met bad luck, and have I not even loved you to my greatest power.And indeed therefore I do not fear any disaster to either myself or you but may you never know how my heart is aching as I write this my sad farewell to you my darling sisters, and yet to have kn own and loved you is the dearest thing in life, and t he memory of you little girls will help to make me a better Prince when I can come back.If you do feel it safe to follow after me and try to find me, do so, but for Heavens sake don't come too soon and discipline yourself well.I know how broken you will be when I am gone, and miss me everywhere, but it won't la long and if you pray hard enough you will know I'm safe even if you do not get accustomed to my absence.I will have Tim to take my place temporarily to guard you on Heaven kn own I cannot find Jack Evans anywhere, and just here although I do not pretend to be so unusually good or unselfish for I am I will say a word for poor Angelinia Aronburg and Annabell.I overheard some body I do not know who it is tell them poor little girls you were the cause of my going so if they do would you don't feel bad for t hey were hookwinked.They are your guardians too, and I believe somet hing is afoot to cause you to send them off from you so you'll not be safe.don't do it sisters for Gods sake retain them girls at all costs or my making this sacrifice will be in vain .T hey did not know I was go ing away untill I told them, and like the splendid fellow he is he told me of how easily I can accom l accomplish my mission this morning, without danger or detection, so whatever Gertrude or Annabell may say t o you whenever Annabell is do not fall sore at them for t hey would not misjudge you purposely.Thad no choice to tell them not to believe the report or I would have. If Gertrude therefore by mistake accuses you forgive her, do not be hot , and rash and bitter against her, as somet hing t ells me you may be when accused when you kn ow I am gone.He told me of your refusal too that is Tim did of letting you go to the enemys lines, but he hopes time may change you--and if it does oh my darling--how can I say it loving you as I do--- if it does don't worry and t ease him, but deal with poor Tim honestly and openly as true little girls like you are deal with true honest boys.And now good bye, and if it is forever-- if I never come back again, if I am caught, and die as a spy, remember that I loved you my darling sisters always, always, and I shall carry your little pictures with me wherever I go, and so in fancy I put my arms around you and your sisters one at a time, and hold you for a moment as my darling sisters, and kiss your dear faces, feeling sure thathif it were really so t hat I would be saying good bye forever, if I never come back again that I was saying good bye forever and you knew it you would kiss me back a dozen times at least, in token of all we have been to each other."

Your lovin g brother
Schofield Penrod Vivien."

"Oh Penrod, Penrod, yes a thousand times we could kiss you, if you were back again"but oh that you would go and do this"violet cried, as with Penrods letter clutched tightly in e her hand, she lay upon her face sobbi ng bitterly while her sisters though weeping too tried to comfort her, to calm her, and wondering what life a was to them now, that Penrod was gone, their Father was fifty miles away, their two other brothers though they wrote did not yet come."

"I couldn't stand it if he didn't comeback I couldn't for he is my brother" said Jennie bitterly"We do love him so much, he was so much t o us t han that how can w we live without him, but then what greater sorrow is that w hich we could have if we were bad and lost our souls."and then there began to creep into her heart Hot resent ful feelings tward Gerald Starring, who no doubt was the cause of all this.

"How can we bhelp hating Gerald Starrin g if we did."she said stamping her little feet by way of emphasis, then thinking of how Angelinia Aronburg might feel she grew more calm, and less resentful tward her since her ac u accusation was caused only by false reports to her, but nevertheless declined to see her, when next morning, she rode over to their headquarters and asked for her and her sisters.

"Tell her we are not seeing any one to day"she said to Pierre."We're seeing no one unless it is Mildred Maxwell.Ask her to please call at her tent, and tell her to come to me and my sisters, for I and they are in great trouble."

With a suspicion as to the nature of why the Vivian Girls wouldn't just then see her, Gertrude rode back to the camps and delivered the message to Angelinia

Mildred Maxwell who at once went to her friends, and tried to comfort them. Put Violet and her sisters refused to be so forted.Penrod was gone, probably Angelinia Aronburg was slightly provoked with them for something they were accused of but didn't do, and what was there now for them.

"You can bring him back.He is far from the Glendalinian armies yet, and a word from you by wireless will change his mind"Mildred said, carressing the bowed head of Jennie resting on her lap.

"Do you think,--do you believe he would come back if I or my sisters were to write or beg him?"Violet asked, quickly as Jennie lifted up her tear stained face.

"I've no doubt of it"Mildred said,"but darling Princess"if you do that and he does come don't you see if anything happens to you then it really would be your fault .Pending for him to come back would mean your deaths and nothin g else for Heaven kn own what Catherine Lee would and could tell you if you would let her see you.But she won't t ell you nothing now.you couldn't stand it nor your sist rs either."

"Then he must go and do his duty no matter what the sacrifice"Violet answered, with a rain of tears."We cannot face the unseen peril and save ourselves when we do not know what the danger is or where it lies, and to do so would be suicide.It would be hedious for us to take the awful chances.Penrod must go at no matter what the sacrifice, but our whole lives go i with him.Oh Penrod, Penrod we are nothing, nothin g without you.why is it we had to meet and then to seperate again."

That evening as Mildred Maxwell sat with Catherine Lee over their supper with Angeline Richee and other great goups groups of girlscout officers and privates all in t he same Mess Hall talking of poor Violet and her sisters, Catherine Lee said to her;

"Mildred if Penrod didn't really have to do t his, do you think you could trace him and make him come back."?

"I have no doubt of it"Mildred replied."They fancy the danger is greater than it is, as Violet expresses, but if the unseen obstacle were removed, I believe we all could feel differently.Poor little Princesses.They don't deserve t his and I hate Manley for it.They are so sad down and wretched, thinking they have sent him away to die, as Violet declares he will, and Angelinia Aronburg recieved a report t hat to save themselves Violet and her sisters sent him off t o do that to save th mselves.I told Gertrude different and so did T im and we were able to prove it.Gertrude is down east too also for she said to day violet and her sisters would not see her."

"Are they eg angry with her.?"

"Yes.At first they were untill they read Penrods letter. But I guess unless she confesses her mistake it is useless for her to see them for the time e being.!"

Catherine had listened intently to all that Mildred told o her of the distress of the poor Vivian girls and there were tears in her eyes as she cleared away, the supper things and busied herself with the household things.

"Poor little girls, she whispered to herself ,would their love for him ong outweight everything---everything, I wonder is it really mightier than anything else."

There was a worn tired look on Catherines face that sad and dreadful day which she account for by saying she had not slep well, which of course was the truth, and that her head was aching severely walk in the grisp autum air would have done her good or winter air rather She said if it was not so confounded hot, and soon after breakfast she left the house, and started slowly tward the headquarters of Violet and her sisters

Wide on the causeway she sat down to rest and once by the bank on the side of the road which led up the long hill come stopped and and asked her if she was ill but she told them to go away and leave her alone ,ere she sat for a long time, with her head bowed upon her knees while indeed she seemed to be absorbed in painful and even agonized reflection, for she rocked to and fro and whispered occasionally to herself ,n the distance there was the sound of a multitude of horses trotting some cavalry squadron was approaching and not caring to be seen just then by anybody friends or foes she arose and climbed the long stone wall, went up the steep hill Beside tward the ledge of rocks, where poor Penrod had sat with his sad little sisters, and predicted his plan which he could not escape, it was the first time Catherine had been there and for a moment she stood transfixed with surprise and delight at the lovely view before her , for even despite the smoke foggy air objects seemed to be visible for miles and miles away but it was not so mc much at the distant landscape she gazed as at the scene directly about her--at the broad rich acres of the headquarters of violet and her sisters, stretching away to the westward and southward and eastward and embracing some of the most valuable land in that part of alverinia,at the great beautiful house itself standing there on the heights so stately and grand with alverinian arc aristocracy and blood showing themselves from every casement and door post ,and lastly at the beautiful grounds so like the parks of the nation with their terraces and winding walks, and pieces of religious statuary gleaming here and there among the evergreens

"A goodly heritage for somebody" the little girl said "nd the princesses would give it all for the sake of love of country a nd all their own in their city too ,od only knows how good they are, and yet every body knows they are so good that what they suffer is less deserving than what we good children suffer if they are not to distressed to see me, must go forward, if they refuse for to day and makes us wait untill they can be themselves, shall take it as a sign that i must forever keep silent"

Thus deciding she walked quickly across the fields, and soon stood ringing at the door, which was opened by the boyscout ierre himself violetand her sisters were still in their room he said ut he would take any message the little girlscout officer chose to give him and his manner showed plainly that he was upset about something

"ell her ina atherine ee is here, and very anxious to see violet or any of her sisters but must see only one of them"

atherine said, and with a bow and asking her to sit down ierre swiftly departed leaving her sitting alone on the hall he had felt too faint and tremulous to stand, and sinking into the chair he he had offered her she leaned her head against the hat stand, and shutting her eyes waited as people wait for some great and fearful shock or blow which they knew is coming, and also how long the boyscout sidedecamp was gone she could not guess, for she was lost to all consciousness of time, and was only roused when he laid his hand upon her shoulder and demanded what was the matter and if she were sick hen she looked up and showed him a face so white so full of pain and dread, and horror that he asked her again what was the matter

"othing, nothing the matter with me" she answered sharply

"ell me what did iolet or any one of her sisters say ill she see me"

"he bade me tell you she or her sisters could not see you but if your errand was very particular, or concerned something about them or that ngelinia ronburg had relented in her mistake you were to give the information to me reesre replied and in an instan the whole aspec t of the little girlscout changed, the deathly pallor left her face and the look of dread and anguish was succeeded by one of intense relief;

"hank our lessed ord, for just now in their present sorrow could not have borne it could not have done it at the last and now know it is not requi e required of me have no errant just now untill they can see me won,t give the message to you its structly private; good morning and she darted from the door while the boyscout aidecamp looked wonderingly at or after her saying to himself that he believed the little girl was crazy nd in good truth insanity would best describe atherines condition of mind as she sped down the winding hills and across the causeway untilll the bridge was reached, and then she paused, and leaning far over the railing looked sadly down into the depths below, as if that watery grave would be best for all the tormenters of iolet and her sisters owever she was not contemplating on suicide for such suicide was something of which all bbieannians thought with the greatest horror et it seemed as if some phantom haunted her day and night the phantom of the frightful unseen death hovering over iole violet and her isters sisters, and now it seemed to look over her shoulder and whisper;

"who will dare to interfere with us if we wish to end the ivian girls now and forever etter you little hristian dogs dare not interfere with our purpose to ruin their lives, for you all are loathed and despised by all the devils in hell because you won,t follo follow on our own side ometimes you girlscouts in your fits of conscientiousness you will tell, as you were tempted to do just now and then those little rincesses brats will be saved from danger, and atherine se gave a long gasping shudder as she thought hat then will happen es myself had better die before have to fail to tell whether the enemys hates that or not d love to see the faces of the princesses turn to justified righteous bitter hatred against those landelinians who persecute them all the time h rincesses my dearest friends y friends by all that is sacred et cannot die by any means and go away from them forever, for, even though there is a hereafter and we should meet again in heaven f course our destiny will be heaven and so will that of the princesses, while for all the landelinians it will be blackness and eternal despair, where the worm never dies, and the fire is never quenched annie read me that last night and we all know every wicked landelinian soldier carries about them the worm which never dies, and many have carried it all their wicked lives, and oh how it must gnaw and gnaw at times and yet they so threaten and threaten the poor rincesses untill am tempted to scream and shriek the dreadful peril to them h od oh god give me the time and chance to see them and warn them before it is toe late for poor foolish enrod, his going won,t help them one mite must keep the love of everyo ne of them within my heart

he had drawn back from the railing by this time, and gathering her uniform shawl around her, she started for her own tent where she was surprised to find her friend ildred axwell in the reception room alone busily engaged on a beautiful new uniform, which nna aunders had given her to wear She had been there that morning to bring it to her, and then in her conversation found a great deaing deal og of fault in enrods going, and had insisted that somebody especially ertrude ngeline should bring him back

"he enemys army is pretty far away and he couldn,t get there until four this afternoon ildred said, and if somebody could go and tell ertrude maybe she,ll disguise herself go into the foe lines and induce him to give up the plan and come back ut nna was more decided in her p lan, she said that somebody should have gone at once, and when ildred asked if ngelinia would have gone, she answered promptly; cannot tell it is not our business to tell her that she might get sore he thinks iolet or her sisters sent enrod off through their own accord nd ildred bore this news quietly, and promised that she herself should immediately sent scouts within the foe lines to find enrod and have them try to get him to come back ut she felt the disastero disasterous consequences of this incident keenly, and her cheeks were unusally red, and her lips very white, whn when atherine entered the room, and bending over her kissed her with a great glad tenderness as we kiss one restored to us from the gates of death ou look tired and worried my pet she said and you have been working too fast this morning thought heard nna suggest that ngelinia ronburg should go and try to bring enrod back he did ildred answered she hasinsited things that you know we cannot make our superiors do, and too she found fault with enrods plan, and it made me feel so keenly the danger they are in that am greatly upset oor rincesses it is to the caprices of the enemy that they are subject because they do their duty to their own nation atherine said, caressing the black golden hair bent so low over her new uniform which nna brought her on the sleeve of which a great tear came near falling. "ou ought to be a princess like "iolet or her sisters. "ou would be happier in" in her place would you not my friend. "

"o "atherine dear" and "ildreds beautiful blue eyes looked frankly up into her friends face. "very one should like a little money of course, but surely all of us are much happier than they are poor little princely girls, and too there is an immeasureable distance between themselves and the enemy now. and all the rest like our own profession as girl or boyscout for it is as much one as that of artist or musician, and if. was in the place of ge of the poor princesses my life would be just as sad and horrible. o "atherine dear don,t both bother about such a sad subject "e are happy far happier than they, who though they may have a loving father and can own and rule the whole nation are far seperated from their parents, "enrod is gone, their two bigger brothers did not yet alive and they are as sad and as lonely as if they did not ha e have no mother to love or care for them and pet them. "m sorry that they had to be born so early as to see these frightful days"

"h "ildred my friend, you do love the poor "ivian ,ifls then, you would be glad if they were safe from harm then, unlike you as. am made "atherine cried in a voice which was like a sob of pain, and "ildred look wonderingly at her as she said;

"hy "atherine, dear how strangely you act this sad morning with "enrod gone "f course ,d be gl ad if the danger was only known so they would know how to avoid it--for they are the dearest kindest princesses any country ever had. cannot remember the time they would would not and could not and did not sacrifice everything for us and why should we not love them and each other too and do all in our power to relie e relieve them"

"ou should and you ought "atherline ee replied "nly you are so different from me and all the rest that sometimes when i think how refined and ladylike you are, and then remember what. am, an uneducated girlscout--. sometimes feel that. am an obsticle in your way and in the way of others, and that you and many others must feel it too, and wish you were sm someone else--somebody like the princesses---but you don,t "ildred you surely don,t"

"f course. don,t "ildred answered, laughingly "or if. were the princesses, don,t you see "ngelinia "ronburg and her sister would be my cousins, and. would be suffering things like either one of them do, and that would be worse to me than the suffering of the souls in "urgatory; so little girlscout friend please don,t distress yourself or bother me any more for we both have plenty of duties to perform" taking the lovely little girls face between her hands, "atherine kissed it fondly, and then left the room, while "ildred wondered what had happened to excite her so uch strange moods or state of mind in "atherine to her were unusal, but now they had been more frequent than ever, and yet "ildred could not be or get accustomed to them. he had ha at first believed these spells of "atherine to be a naturally morbid temperament, combined with a low nervious state of health, but now she was suspicious that she was worrying about the safty of "iolet and her sisters than she wanted to let on.

"I wonder why she asks me so often if. love "iolet and her sisters and wish to see them happy "aybe we do not seem to show them affection enugh enough. am not demonstrative, like her, there is very little of the "bbi annian gush in me even though. am one indeed. "m more like the cold "mericans, but. mean to do better and pet "iolet and her sisters more and more poor dear "princesses they are so fond and proud of us girlscouts and we don,t seem to show our appreciation "ut we,ll show it by secretly shadowing them wherever they are keep our eyes peeled everywhere and if any one threatens them they,ll rue it" "ildred thought as she kept on with her work, while "atherine busied herself in the kitchen preparing the cut of nice hot milk and slice of cream toast, which in a few minutes she carried to "ildred and "ngeline "ichoe, who was so busy they could not stop for a regular meal. "nna "aunders again appeared asking imperiously if "ngelinia "ronburg had gone ut to find and bring back "enrod and cheer up "iolet and her sisters.

"" heard nothing of it" "ildred replied adding" "ve planned and gave orders for a number of boyscouts to disguise and go within the foe lines in an endeavor to get him to change his mind and bring them or him back. t,s a great deal of work for that to be accomplished for that purpose and if he won,t come. ,ll go and get him" "

"ou should not have planned such a thing in the first place "nna rejoined, and then continued; "t is up to "ngelinia "ronburg to do it herself if she loves her cousin as much as she does e together can plan something, and if you can will you come to my tent at about two in the afternoon"

"es. will "ildred said, and an hour later she was trudging along "ottage ow in the camp n her way she met "imothy "roveton face to face, and saw his surprise at the fact that she was out alone on the company street and not on her horse f all boyscouts "imothy "roveton was the only one who had ever interested "ildred nearly much as much as "enrod, and she often wondered why she should feel her blood stir a little more quickly when she saw him or "enrod e was so good, so dignified and yet not proud nor naughty, but He was reserved, always a gentleman, and courteous to everybody, and now he lifted his hat very politely, and with a pleasant smile passed on she after she had c declined his offer to let her ride to "nnas tent saying she prefered to walk, thinking to himself how brave looking and beautiful too the little "obicannian girl was and what a pity too that she had not recieved a higher ran in i in the army of girlscouts, which such people as "ngeline "ichoe, and others "nna was waiting however almost impatiently and already tostart with a plan, and when "ildred met her having worn her uniform she was so becoming to "nna that she condescended to be very gracious and goodier, and as she looked at "ildred she said- "hy "ildred you are a brick "ow lovely you look"

"hen the plan was carried on and we will leave them thus here and go back to "ngelinia aronburg "hether we are grieving or glad time never stops for us, but the hours and days and nights will never theless go on and on until at last we wonder that so long a period has elasped since the joy or sorrow came which marked a never to be forgotten point in our lives in this vale of tears/

"ut it was not so with gertrude angeline, she still was as wretch ed and di discolsalte as she was during the first day of penrods absense though this was the second she had no light or bouyant temperament, and she still awoke to the fact that life for her and her cousins had no hapiness in store for them, and not as long as penrod was so far away within the glandelinian camps she and her s sters on this day had recieved a few words from him just before he reached the glandelinian army--words which made her as well as violet and her sisters cry as if their hearts would break but which were very precious to especially gertrude for he told her that she was wrong and mistaken in thinking violet and her sisters asked him to go to save them but that he planned it and went even thugh they objected because he must save them, and telling her that whatever might befall the writer she and his sistefs would always be his little queens, his dearest loves, whose images were wengraven on his heart forever and angelinia aronburg had answered thenote by wit wireless, for it was nothing more, and filled ten s heets in anglish with her passionate longings for the good little naughty boy prince, who runs away to be a make beliebe glandelinian as she called heem, who was not satisfied to be her cousin but must needs seek also to be her loving brother too but why should he have to go away and make her life and the lives of his dear sisters so miserable "he letter was sent to manleys headquarters for pr penrod was to take the overland route to that section of the glandelinian army, and visit another section of it on the way he had promised to write from every point where he stopped, and so hedid not seem to be so far away for even violet and her sisters who however did not grow any brighter and gayer, and consented yet to see gertrude angeline and her sister and also timothy groveton whom they had at first not tim however, persistently ignored because they had slightly accused them of sending penrod away, and after rating gertrude angeline soundly for the part she had played in the slight accusation, they again became very gracious to her, for they still loved her and were always willing to forgive the ~~most~~ most serious offense against them, and they were willing to do so too but told gertrude she should not take too heart anything she hears without it being confirmed „im was crushed at their sad faces when hefpe they were so bright, bewitching and so forth and „im a little later in lifting „iolet from a chair when she some how got stuck in in it held her hand tighter in his

„ou sure love to squeeze our hand„ said violet tim dear i suppose you would give anything if you were our brother too„ and looking slyly on him she also said „some day maybe you'll be a lover to one of us or even better but just now you are not „f so one of us will try to consider and if poor „enrod comes never back to us we may keep you for our brother „

this state of things seemed very hopeful for tim who however con f essed„ love you and your sisters most dearly princesses more dearly than i can explain but i hope i don&t annoy or hurt you by saying that i cannot help it, i love your brother penrod best of all „

„ou are a good de darling boy and for that deserve more from us than it is in our power to give„ violet said as he was leavingm and he finally rode away more in love with the little princesses than ever, who after he was gone and „ngelinia aronburg still remained went into their room with her where violet found on her dressing table a letter which pierre had brought from the military mail headquarters during their short absence „t seemed however to be a foriegn letter post marked at chicago ill, america; violet was astonished and her first exclamanation was;

„r „from america it must be from p f one of ours now maybe we will hear from christiania whom she strove to hear from this was the thing of all others which she and her sisters had greatly desired, but now it seemed to be within their grasp, they waited and loitered a little, and took off their hats, and shawl and gloves and laid them carefully away and picked a few dead leaves from a pot of carnations in the window, before violet herself broke the seal and even then she hesitated with a strangely nervious feeling as if from fear that the letter might contain something she and her sisters would be much happier not to know--something that even her father would have withheld from them, had he been here with thm them

„ut no„ violet said at last„ indeed how foolish i am„ christiania was surely faithful to our cause, and ffather was good to her for it and even while always serving us pensioned her for it now, as he always wished to do and ought to do, and those vile glandelinian generals always thought to harm us through her too

„ must keep angelinia aronburg with us as our guardian, the wicked glandelinians know her more than i do and know she is awfully dangerous to them, for we know the stuff she and annabell are made of „he idea of penrod going off without our consent and causing us this worry and misery „ut „„m going to read this letter sisters and see what it contains „„o saying she opened the letter and read

to violet and her sisters or the princesses of abbiesannia, pophelia calverinia,

„my employer albert john smith is gone away for probably a mot month or two, and told or gave me orders to open all his most important letters if necessary, and also to answer them for him so when yours and timothy groveton&s came, i opened and read, that is read those of your sisters for the seven of you wrote together seper ate letters, but only yours was in english while it took us a long time for me to get an intepreter to make out that the one sent by „imothy „roveton meant the same as yours, and asked information of one party once here in american called christiania anderson, once one of yor f once one of your faithful girlscout officials and still to be and continued pensioner of eme emperor vivian your magnificent and gracious father „

„hat was „im who sent him an abbiesannian letter „e must be awful afraid of the peril that it is said we are in, but he is more afraid of the danger that poor penrod is in„ jennie exclaimed, and her cheeks were scarlet and her breath came hurriedly, and then seemed to cease altogether as violet read on; „i could not remember any o e one by that name princesses, but there is a certain catherine michaellena lee, to whom by references to my employers books i find that moneys were paid regularly by the gladys wenthworth and company in your own country for some service she had been so often rendering in her slick efforts to try to run down two strange professional spies disguised as mutt and jeff, untill last summer when the entire principal was sent to miss catherine francis turner at oak bluffs calverinia, where it seemsshe was once doing some strange duty and who afterwards again turned out to be catherine michaelelna lee, though whether she is the person you are wishing to find to obtain some information about some secret danger oppressing you i do not know your billet to christiania i will keep unti ll my wemployer returns, and if he knows the girlscout he will forward it.

h oping my letter is sati f satisfactory i am your bedient servant
„rancis „enryson

„„atherine lee within our own christian lines„ violet herself kept reputing to her h herself, her sisters looking on, while at first a feeling of terror took possession of them and made them for a moment powerless to move or reasn clearly who is this catherine lee and where have we seen her; „jennie asked in a bewildered kind of way, and then at last it came to violet and her sisters who catherine lee reallly was, and where they had seen her

our friend friend with mildred and angeline richee impossible„ cried violet as she and her sisters read the letter again and again while their thoughts went backwards, and with lightning rapidy gathered up every incident connected with catherline lee which had seemed so s trange to them and had made them like and yet almost fear the girl scout for her unusual familiarity though they had not know her as distinctly as if it were but yesterday and not to day, they recalled their first meeting when she came, when catherine lee had stared at her so and her sisters, and seemed so strange and queer and since then she had so often shown them, what seemed over-grat titude for kindness shown to her companions

„nd all the time we were talking of our former girlscout nurse and we had the desire to locate her, she knew she was „atherine lee viat othristiania and made no sign„ hettie said„ and once she bade us stopp x searching for her as finding her might bring more pain than pleasure of happiness „

„what does she mean and why does she wish us not to know who she she really is„ said „atherine „„s there anything wrong about her „„o„ non„o no„ no„ no„ said „oice almost shrieking as she said the emphatic no„s „„ather amd mother trusted her, they both loced her and did since they knew her „ have it in her own words written to papa and mother „hristinia is faithful, and tender as if she were my mother though even a little girlscout, and once one of the wounded girlscouts said to me „that if she should die, you must always be kind to „hristiania, for what she has been to me and you, and then that is why papa always trusted her „ut why has she never told us „„hat is she afraid of„„hat has she done „es she must surely be right, it is more pain than pleasure to find her but if she had only told us who she was it would have been such joy to know she is mildred maxwells sister--my dear friend mildred and our friend still, thank god and his blessed mother, for she has no part in this concealment „he has even no suspicion that christ-

ianie francis, and catherine lee are o e one and the same but if she suspects we are in a peril and know it she should tell us 2 his mention of mildred maxwell helped violet, and her sisters and the pain in their hearts was not quite so heavy, or their fe ar as to what the mystery might be so great She was mildreds elder sister, and whatever violet, and her sisters decided they would stand by the girls whom they loved so much and who had done so much for them and indeed violet realized she had refused to see catherine lee that morning because of the upset condition of her sisters t was their fault now they did not know the danger so they could avoid it/

"ease please princesses dear, have you not heard the bell-it has rung five times, and dinner is growing cold, the boyscout pierre said,putting his head in at the door and then violet and her sisters roused themselves to find that it was getting dark ,for the december twilight was fast creeping into the room

"es pierre we know, but we are not coming--we are not coming, penrods going away so suddenly has upset us tell them to please clear the table violet said abstractedly, and then as pierre look ed inquiringly at her and her sisters she continued, pierre come here and shut and lock the door, and come close to us, sono one but my two cuo cousins here can hear pierre i,ve found christianie francis

"you have found her, where, pierre said looking wonderingly at his young mistresses, whose white faces and exicted manner puz l puzzled and worried and alarmed him

" ere pireere in this very christian encampment while i was searching for her across the wide seas, she was hefe not half a mile away, and for some unknown reason or other, she never told me pierre catherline lee is or was christianie francis/

"heavenly days, pireere exclaimed with a shrug of his shoulders and a rapid movement of his hands "catherine lee christianie francis am very much yes suppose very much astonished t can,t be really possible, believable he was absolutely flabbergasted e had shared the faith of violet and her sisters in christiania, and he put things together rapidly and to himself he thought;"catherine lee assuming the name of christ ianie francis cant believe it, it does not seem to be true but to violet, and her sisters he said;

" who told you surely princesses you are either dreaming it in your distress or losing your minds r there surely must be some mistake for if so surely catherine lee would not have kept silent so lng long

"we are not mad, dreaming, nor is it any mistake and my sisters can trust you pierre, and we began to feel as if you were the only one in here except my cousins whom we could trust verything and everybody seems to be slipping away from us his is the letter from the agent in chicago, who tells us paper paid he, the money for services she had rendered to him in the past u know you were with him and us once with father and saw him give his check for twelve thousand and fifty pazoes to be sent to catherine lees mother read the letter pierre, and you will know all do violet, handed it to heem, and stiking a match to light a candle he read it throu h, while violet and her sisters watched him narrowly to see what effect it had upon him e was absolutely sur prised and confounded and though he made no comment yet he did not could not yet hardly believe it, and just then the dinner bell ran rang again, this time long and loud as if the ringer were growing impatient

"oh that dreadful confound bell joice herself exclaimed almost angrily putting her hands to her ears to shut out the sound ill they never stop ringing it or understand that we are not coming go pierre and tell those servants or orderlies to please clear the table away, tell them we,re sick and shocked by pr penrods sudden leaving us to go to the dangerous oe lines, and wish under any conditions to be let alone--tell them anything that aint l[redacted] lies to keep them away from us nobody must come to night but you though tim could if he arrived for i,d be glad to have him see this so quick before they ring the bell to pieces or mrs annie rooney comes herself she must not know what we do

thus entra entreated pierre departed with the message to mrs rooney and then went back to violet, and her sisters, every one of the little girls who sat with hands clasped tightly together, and a look on their white faces which puz zled them, for he did not know that the princesses were bravely fighting down a suspicion to harbor which they could not tell which

"pierre dear, said jennie herself who was looking very white indeed as she lifted her dry heavey eyes appealing to him and speaking like a sick three year old baby who wants to be petted, pierre and my sisters are strangely shaken by this strange news, but we and i in particular cannot understand why christiania herself one of our best friends should wish to hide her identification from us, when she knew oh so much how we wanted to find her t looks as if there was something which for our sakes perhaps she wished to keep from us or did not dare to tell---something wrong coming to us had so much faith in l and love for her and so did my sisters, and now---oh pierre it makes me cold, sick, and faint for get that i an nine years old, try and fancy me a little baby girl, and take me up and carry me to mu couch you are a strong boy i could not walk there if two helped me to save my life for the strength has all gone from me

"pierre had carried her in his arms several times when she was ill, and now he took her up gently, and laying her upon the go g couch, asked one of her sisters to bring a pillow for her which she did it, and he fixed it under her head, and covered her with a amry girlscout shawl

"now sit down beside me, pierre, she continued and rub my hands they are so numb and lifeless, and let me talk to you first of the olden time, when and my sisters lived in marocuian and, were so very happy at the earlier years before this war came on

"es dear princess pierre said sitting down beside her, and rub bing the limp white fingers which seemed to have no vitality in them

"pierre, she began, we were so happy when we used to live with papa in marocuian he and mother are so good he was always kind to catherine lee was he not,"

"yes always, said "iolet to whom jennie added the last of the sentence

"and he was good to everybody "iolet,"2

"yes everybody,"

"and you and my other sisters were with him in places where he would be under less restraint than when with me, and you think he yet feared the coming of this awful war

"e had no more thought of it then than we did "oice said emphatically "er sisters n knew that jennie was wishing to be reassured of some mystery between their father and christiania

"thank you sisters dear she said ou make me so happy "ather was always a good honest and, saintly man, and yet believe christ ianie was unusually good

"did any of our servants at the time before the war, ever mention her as other than a girlscout,"

"they never mentioned her at all never heard her name except from you jennie and violet, said oice, and from "uns only only twice

"hen said jennie " am sure christiania is more than a good girl scout my mother and, ours as well trusted her and bade father be kind to her always have it in a letter written before the war, the letter which we still kept, and when christiania was with her catherine lee is a good girlscout jennie kept asserting this as if she feared that at least pierre or her two cousins might doubt the fact, but if they did, they gave no sign and angelinie ronburg herself replied;;2,2;2

„she must indeed be very good to gain such favor from our dearest uncle and your dearest father"

„yes angelinia dear„and jennie roused herself up and pushing her heavy golden hair back from her face said joyfully;„ see it now i understand it all now why she has not told me "he did not have the chance she was going to this morning and yet we were in no condition to see her„"

„that may be without question„pierre said ready transient toanyt thing his young little my mistress might accent or suggest no matter ho absurd

„and pierre she continued„i and my sisters shall of course tell catherine lee that we do know who she is, but it is not necessary that all the world should know „o need tell no one else„"

„ho dearest rp princess, but what of timothy groveton„he wrote to that agent in chicago too, he will get an answer, he will know/ i am sure„"

„of course „ennie „said impatiently„but " own trust him" i do not even need to tell him to keep silent though of course I will, and now leave me and do not let mrs rooney or any one come near us to night „e are tired and upset and shall retire though we are so worried about penrod „ doubt if we can sleep and tears came suddenly in a flood to her eyes „o pierre left her and her sisters alone to their thoughts or with their thoughts, which kept them awake most of the night „t was just as they had retired that „imothy „roveton rode over to the headquarters, where he was met by pierre with the message that the princesses and their two cousins had retired, and could not now be disturbed „f he wished they would see „him on the morning „in was indeed disappointed, but he himself would not have them disturbed for anything, and was about turning away from the door when he said for it just occurred to him;

"by the way, do you know if „iolet and her sisters recieved any "letters from america to day"

„they did recieve one„pierre said looking straight at the boy scout, and feeling sure that he too had heard, from the agency in „hicago and knew the secret of „atherine lee and he was right for the same milita ry letter or mail rather which brought the letter to the princesses had also one in it for „imothy „roveton he had a tolerably good knowledge of its contents, which surprised, and confounded him almost as much as he their letter had confounded and even shocked them „ut in his letter were a few words or rather insuations, which were for some reason omitted in the letter sent to „iolet and her sisters, and which affected him more than all the rest, and t threw for him a flood of light upon „atherine lees reason for keeping her identy with christiania francis a secret from violet and her sisters, and whoch had horrified him and caused him to put in secret a strong selection of the most watchful se number of strong armed sentries about the place and a regiment of hidden boy and girlscouts tokeep a watch on the place with well loaded rifles „ut he wondered did violet and her sisters know what he knew or suspected, and, if so how did they take it "hat would the poor little girls do „ burning intense desire seized the unusally calm sober boyscout general in chief to have those questions answered the danger he knew averted the ones to cause the danger captured and „enrod to come back at all costs he must also see „iolet and her sisters and judge from their faces how much they knew and if they didn t to reveal it himself „ut „ierre told him they were ill and had retired „ennie herself was sick from shock and sorrow, and she had recieved a letter from "hicago" so much he learned and warning pierre to say nothing to nobody under any condition, and to watch that no stranger gets hold of the l etter and to guard their room with his life if need be, he rode back to his headquarters, but on his way kept his eye pealed on the faces of all big or little strangers that passed him with his hand on the butt of his pistol „ore in his headquarters for the remainder of the afternoon and evening he seemed in a most abstracted frame of mind, paying but little attention to those who called on him for information who had never seen him so absentminded and grave before, and wondered of what he was thinking „trangers who were even among refugees who culdn,t give him a satisfactory answer when questioned he had soldiers keep an en eye on „ow indeed to tim this situation for „iolet and her sisters had turned everything upside down it was like a coming horor and tragedy that only „eaven could avert, like a coming tragd tragedy whose pages he was reading, and now a fresh leaf had been turned, which he wished to not oly read but decipher, and since he could not see „iolet and her sisters, he must seek more information in another quarter for the danger must be averted, and he meant therefore to turn a page and begin a new chapter in his reading „he night set in dark and smoky even for december and hot and sultry with the eastern sky seeming to tell the world was at an end there, the southeast hot winds howling dismally through the tall pines which grew up in the common, when „im left his headquarters equipped for an evening call "e was going to see „ildred „axwell, and on his way when he reached, the grounds he saw a man who had been apparently loitering around „im had two companions with him and he accosted the stranger before he could get away but all questioning proved satisfactory the man only claimed he liked to look at so many brace child scouts just preparing to turn in, but nevertheless „im warning him there was nevertheless a penalty for loitering around forbidden grounds, and that he would find himself a prisoner if caught doing so again after this he went in „ildreds own home whom he found alone, as „ngelina „iches, had retired to her room, with a toothache and slightly swollen face

„ildred let him in himself herself,,, and indeed looked fully the surprise she felt when she saw who her visitor was „nd it was not so much that he should come that holt sweltering night as that he should come at all which astonished the young girlscout, who with a womans intuition had read the magnificent and gallent boyscout leader pretty accurately, and guessed that all girlscouts like her and others had an unusal attraction for hiihim „ut it was his training g besides the real heart of the gallant boyscout him self his mother had done lo lde for him and herself, and when a t the opening of the terrible war her immense fortune was robbed from her by raiding glandelinians and threatened to leave her com parat ively poor , her two sons „im and „arney „ichards „roveton two as noble boys as ever called a woman dearest mother to choosed their own proce professions to care for themselves, and they became boyscouts, one to be in charge of a station at „ngelinia „ethia and „im to be with the army, and she herself became a gallent red cross nurse „ith such a mother and a lng line of long line of ancestery on her side as good and as brave as herself it was not strange at all that „im shulshould have imbibed some notions about girls that made him the friend of them he was „e thought a great deal more however of his own sisters who were girlscouts girlscouts in some far away army, and though he was always polite and courteous to „ildred and many other girls when they met and spoke to them often for a long time there was a gulf between them in comparison of the love he had for „iglet and her sisters and their better following friends, and therefore „ildred had gd cause to had good cause to gaze on him wn wonderingly as she opened the the door and held it open a moment as if expecting him to give her some message from either the „ronburg girls o violet and her sisters , as he had done while jack went away laughing good humeredly as he stepped past her into the hall and bowing politely he said;

„i am coming in to see you, though it do not wonder that a call on such a hot sultry and wild night as this surprises you/ but it is not the weather that brings me here „ut since penrd went away it have the blues and need to inquire of some one some information you or any one if you have it are under obligation to give, and as from the shock of penrod going away so suddenly, and a strange letter they have recieved, violet and her sisters are sick, and for their sake i have, come to call on you for a few minutes! hope i am not unwelcome„"

„e was talking rather strangely, and not at all in a strain usanly usually always noticed by mildred, who nevertheless passed it off pleasantly, and said with her pretty accent which struck tim with a degree of nowness

„thank you master tim ;i should and ought to feel honored to have you here to night let me see you said that as prince penrod was gone, and violet and her sisters sick,,, you were reduced to the alternative of coming here not to get rid of the blues but to seek some important information from me/is that it„ or have my ahhiennian eyes misinterpreted your meaning„2„

„that is the way it sounded i will admit 2„tim replied„but i am a bulglar anyway, so please consider that i have made you number one, for really i have intended to call since from a for offoriegn city i have recieved a very strange letter which has me badly upset, espppially concerning, you, catherine lee, and violet and her sisters.....

we took the seat offered me which she offered him we took the seat which she offered him, and moved it a little mor more in frnt of her, where he could look directly at her, as she bent over her work which with his permission, she resumed as she was moving a tear on her own uniform jacket an old one though we saw on a dressaver a photograph of violet and her sisters in full quite a large one too, and as he with her permission took it and looked it over it brought him memories of them how graceful their every motion was, and how well their uniform dresses became them, and now very beautiful they were both in face and form with their golden hair rippling over their finely shaped heads, their dazzling com plexion, their perfectly regular features, and more than all else their large clear sunny blue eyes, vieled by long fringed golden lashes and shaded by eyebrows so heavy and brown, that they seemed almost out of place with that hair of golden he hue but they gave them a novel and distingue look, and added to their unusal beauty, which now that he was studying the picture, struck him as something very remarkable and made his eyes linger on the fair faces with more admiration than of curiousity when he looked at mildred maxwell, and then at a p picture of the bronburg sisters but the likeness of violet and her sisters was not there yet in feature and x complexion annabell was the handsomer of the two tim confessed that to himself, then he realized that somewhere a serious wrong had been done to poor violet and her sisters, who put together with angelinie bronburg and her sisters annabell, would nevertheless win every time, and make people and boys and girls see only themselves, with their wonderfulcelestial sparkle and brightness, which threw everything else into the shadoe or shade violet, and her sisters were the heavenl heavenly diamonds, and their two cousins were pearls,,,, and they were not at all alike,, and tim groveton felt puzzled,,, and in xlined to believe the agent in chicago a slanderer, especially after he had talked with mildred maxwell a while, of her princess friends/you have known violet, and her sisters a lng, long time, he said and she replied;,2,,2 yes a long long time---three years before the war, when they were smaller girls, though indeed it seems but yesterday tim since they allowed me access to their palace and let me play with them and do all things i liked everything else when i was a little girl annabell too their cousin used to keep me company in an old tumble down headquarters where after duty hours i staid all day long with no one company but a littlekitten, and nothing besides my small playthings to amuse me, except to nce in a while look down into the company street below, and watch the gun carts carriages munition wagons, and long lines of troops as they passed and wonder when my companions would be off duty and come home and if some raiders would bring me as they sometimes did some bonbons or some chicken and canned goods, which i liked so much better for my meals than our dark army sour bread and that rotten black coffee

yes tim said i leaning forward and listening eagerly to what mildred was telling him of her early life as a girlscout and wond ering a little that she should be so com cumm communicative, for he knew that most girlscouts would try to conceal the fact that they had once known such army hardships, but he did not know mildred maxwell or guess that it was in part her pride which made her talk as she was talking & he noticed that she was very reserved and reticent in regard to other others but not much to herself and to him that is tim whose value of blood and family connections she rightly guessed , she would speak openly and show him that to her idea violet and her sisters were something far more than abbiesnnian princesses, whom he was loving and honoring with his society, and in whom he was interested more than anybody on earth excepting penrod she devined that readily by the kindling of his eyes when they met there as she talked, and by some of those subtile influences by which any girl knows that the man she is talking with is far more than entertained, and pleased with herself as well as with that what she is saying so when he said to her with a real round of pity in his tone and were so as desolate as all that too when annabell found you, she answered;

there has been no one more desolate than poor violet and her sisters, more desolate than even you can guess ----you who probably ave b never known what desolation sorrow and horror means to violet and her sisters except of what you have seen and heard of but it seems they are never una unahhpy unhappy either she added quickly hey told me they have had too much love and petting from their parents other, relations and all friends for that, though that never spoiled them was only lonely in their absense, for they were continually busy recruiting girl and boyscouts, and i kept house for them and got the meals for them, and they gave me a gorgeous and grand funeral when my father died on the battlefield your father yes tim repeated what was he, what did he do, and when did he die, he seemed very eager in his questioning & and mistaking his meaning altogether, mildreds cheeks flushed, but her voice was steady and clear as she replied;

he was an officer in the army and led a regiment after he died annabell herself heard of me frm one of the princesses, and she came up to our humble room in my hea headquarters in her best uniform and filled it with glory at once ou know the same strange halo of brightness encircles her as what encircles violet and her sisters and affects everything around her though she knows it not she too is is angel possessed and how she did sparkle and glow, and light up the whole room, as she sat there in that hard wooden chair with me standing awkwardly by in my course & nigh necked working apron with broom in hand , an and gazing at her as if she had been a being from the celestial regions how rapidly and excitedly she talked gesticulating with her hands which were as small and white as those of an angel child of heaven too, and now large and bright her very dark brown eyes grew as she described the first interview with annabell so vividly that tim himself imagined he could see the low room far up the winding stairs, the humble furniture, the bare floor, the smouldering fire on the hearth hearth, the wooden chair, the blue eyed girl in scarlet uniform who sat there with with the captured cat in her lap, talking to another child more more beautiful than herself, though of another type of beauty, and clad in the uniform that showed age and wear we could see it all so plainly and forgetting for a time why he was there he listened still more intently, while mildred went on to tell him of the trips she made with violet and her sisters and when often they gave her their own beautiful but cast off uniforms , and let herplay she was one of the vivian girls, while violet herself sat demurely at her side when she was between the other princesses on the same carri carriage, violet glad in homely garments, and making believe she was a poor little beggar girl i think that one act bound me to violet and her sisters forever mildred said thought or though it was the beginning of many make believes, and many deeds of kindness, for through the influences of violet and her sisters their father allowed me to attend the same school to which they attended and where i learned to speak and read the same english language you know, and all i know besides, and after that they stood my fast friends in everything and treated me more like a sister than an infero inferior girlscout as i am , ve a often observed that their love had never failed me since the day they first came tome /e to me themselves, and-brought the glorious sunlight with her o so do you wonder that i love violt and her sisters, i would lay down my life for them if need be--would sacrifice everything for them and i sometimes wish that it might have the chance to show how much i love them and would endure for their sake i might have it yet since i know that they are in or facing some unseen d anger

mildred paused her, and with clasped hands and eyes which had in them a rapt far away look, seemed also almost see looming on the horizon not far in the distance the something for which she longed, and which o when it came would test her as few girls have ever been te tested in their love for another, a test more severe than violet and her sisters ever went through it was not possible that the dark shadow touched her now, although it was so near, and yet for the peril violet and her sisters were facing she shivered a little and drew a long breath as she at last came back to the present,,, and turned her eyes upon tim, who said to her;

did you ever see the great emperor, the father of violet and her sisters///--- did you know him--i mean --you or your mother"

"my mother didn,t but i do„mildred answered promtply promptly, saw him once when violet and her sisters and i were out riding on hor horseback, and she called to himand he came to speak with them and me and i liked him very much„he impressed me as one of those beautiful men saints you ever and so often read about, he was not proud and haughty despite his rank, and became very loving and friendly to me

"a was very fine looking though, the most handsome man i ever saw and his manners was very elegant, o you know him, anter, proveton

"scarcely at all but , have heard much of him where ever i go and he is as popular here as ,t ater is in heaven i imagine, im replied, and then the conversation drifted into other channels, and they talked of penrod and the ronburg sisters, and tim tried to find out who „adcliffe was, but Mildred couldnt tell anything about that as she said no one is allowed even under penalty to reveal who radcliffe is „im had not succeeded in reading the strange page just as he had expected to read it and was a good deal puzzled and perplexed, when rather at a late hour he said good night tomildred and went back to his rooms at his headquarters with his mind full of what she had told him of her own life connected with violet and her sisters, and full thoughts too of her also and after he had retied retired to his bed and a feeling of drowsiness began to steal wer over him there came to him another face than that of violet and her sisters in his sleep--a fair an ladys face, with also white hair and eyes of blue with two little girls, which appeared as his mother and sisters who were dead and in heaven and one in his troubled sleep or dreams warned him of what was going to occur and begging him if he loved the princesses as he said to prevent if for he could do it, and a voice as if from a little angel somewhere was sounding in his ears, it was very late when he awoke, with a confused vision of seven blue eyes and angelic faces dancing before him, and hastily dressing himself and swallowing his breakfast he started for his own main room where he did his work, where to his surprise and yet delight he found violet and her sisters waiting for him

„iolet and her sisters had thought and thought till their heads seemed, bursting with the effort to solve the silence of catherine lee „nd there been some mystery that she was afraid to tell them just for their own sakes, or had she done anything to them that she may be ashamed to tell, and if so what was it, and did it concern any one but herself, or ageut about them

"no i cannot will not believe it„she said once more that is violet to her sisters with a striking out of her hand, as is thugt ing something aside „we cannot believe it „he is too good a girl and there is something she fears about us and does not wish to scare us and too there is some good reason for her mysterious conduct which she can give me, and we are going to her to find out the truth, but the wholw wwhole world will not be as charitable as i and you my sisters and will no doubt said or say bad things of her no doubt so to the world she must remain as catherine lee and no body will ever know that she is christienia francis, except timothy groveton, who of course knows it now, for that party in far away chicago has wr written to him no doubt ut i can trust him and i shall command him to keep the knowledge to himself„ after this decision violet grew calmer the violet throbbing in her temples ceased, and she and her sisters were then able to sleep comparatie comparatively well that night though they all dreamed that penrod had never left them and was still in the building asleep in his own bed „ut though the morning found violet stronger and better, she more than they felt nervous and unstrung, and shrunk more than her sisters with a great dread from confroning „atherine lee, and wringing her secret from her, if secret there was to be wrung

„i,m so hurt and disappointed „she thought to herself, as she was the last to dress herself having to have been the last to get up for they had been lesthe to awaken her „„and my sisters have loved catherine lee so much, and wanted so much to find „e christienia ,and now she is this girlscout catherine lee whom for some unaccount able reason , sometimes was slightly afraid of, though she is „ildreds best of friends and greatly superior to her elser „here is surely something wrong and „ am going to find it out and my sisters will back me „o they first went to time place, and the waiting for the boyscout general seemed a long, long time time to the excited little princesses, though in reality it was not more than five minutes from the time she entered „ims military office before she and her sister sisters were closeted in tims private room with him where he recieved his visitors who came to him on special military business „nd indeed violet and her sisters were very special, or at least very private, and when the door was closed she plunged into it at once, by saying;

„im dear , and my sisters believed you have written to „ „mith in chicago ill in ma-i emerica, and asked about christianis francis „

he she did not put it interrogatively, but as an assertion, and looking surprised tim replied;

„„ot that , will just say , did write to him asking information for the girls wht whereabouts but it was your wish „ou were so anxious to find her you know and;;

„„ush„jennie said lookih looking around cautiously„„e not say it so loud there is no telling who may overhear us , know it was your desedire to serve me that prompted you to write, and you have had your reward „ „mith has answered your letter"

„yes he surely has„tim replied„and violet herself said;

„we know it for we have one, written from him too „ew hokeen her , „ay over there , can,t tell more it is and i will read it to you „he drew the letter from her pocket, and read it through in a clear steady voice, as if its contents were just what she and ever her sisters expected

„you are not surprised of course„she said when she had finished „e tld you that christienia francis was catherine lee by right name"

where is the letter and how did you make it out"

„in case it fell into the hands of spies i had it written in english to me, so i did pretty well„tim replied„and then juice put in;

„id he write to you anything more than he did we tim dear we have a right to know if there is any reason why she should have kept herself from us in this manner „how me and my sisters the letter

„im dear "

„e did not write a anything more than he did you„said tim but it was altogether a different story in it , hate to show it yo to you for ,,m afraid it will give you a shock but if you will i must „while this conversation was going on a certain person unknown to them had managed to slyly open t the door got in, m and unseen by the clerk secure the letter, and knowing he could not get away with it threw it into the fire „im went in to the adjoining room, and began searching first on the table where he had laid it and not finding it started hunting through pigeon holes and on another table where piles of paper lay but couldn,t find it to his alarm

„where is that infernal letter„he angrily asked of the clerk so loud that violet and her sisters could distinctly hear him „he clerk said he had not seen the letter, but tis was heard to reply;

„„where was your eyes ,,m positively spire before heaven , laid it on this particular table and its gone „„he clerk got scarbd and believed he might have made a mistake and had torn it up that morning with other letters of no importance „im then looked among the torn letters but t no trace of it could be found „e was very nervous and angry, and he felt like repi p reprimanding his clerk for his carelessness for not watching but he only said;

„,,m sorry to say it but if that letter got into the hands of „lendelinian spies we,ll have to hold you responsible --ah whats this burning almost away in the fire, and he snatched it up and beating it out with his hand at the risk of burning his hand managed to get the remainder of it out but it was too far gone to be read

„„id you throw this in the fire „

„„o sir„„dmitted the clerk , even didnt know it was in the fire „

„„ell how did it get into the fire, for heavens sake„cried tim and there was real agony in his voice „„my dida,t you keep your eyes open „his was a very important letter and its destroyed and what can i tell them out there as i do not remember the contents by heart of all the sleepy heads you,re the worst „

„adly but reluctantly tim returned to violet and her sisters with the burned fragments of the letter in his hand, feeling like a hypocrite though he wasnt, even though the end may justify the means „ut as to the clerk violet and her sisters was not deceived and with a smile which and much bitterness in it she said to him before he could speak;

„do not trouble yourself or worry about it „our clerk never destroyed that letter, for you are not the boy to leave it lying around, and the fault aint yours either „t is either safe somewhere and you may have forgotten where you put it, or if not and that is it in your hand than some spy unseen by you got hold of it and knowing he couldn,t get away with it try tried to destroy it „or,t you remember anything in it which you could tell me „

„o i8n afraid not „said tim dejectedly „ was so busy that it had no time to memorize it „ut i say one thing catherine lee is the one you had better see to get the information you wish „

„what is the best plan„said „violet„we will go to catherine„ and she cannot keep from us why she has made no sign that she was our dearest friend with mildred in the past, when she knew how much we missed to find her „

„perhaps she feared you and your sisters might feel terribly bad if there was really a secret unseen danger you faced and was alone knew what it was„tim said uneasily, and jennie replied;;;

„ he and my sisters have thought of that but as yet we have ran away from no dangers whatever unless it was absb absolute suicide to chance it, but she would have have known us better to think anything could make us as scared of unseen dangers as that „erhaps there is an unseen danger we are facing „erpaps too she got the information from papa after period left us, and he sent her here to tell us, because our mother wished it „at would also explain why father never was willing to talk to me and my sisters about something concerning the report we kidnapped ---edy edelefeb-- and always said that it was only for us to look out for ourselves for that„we could do more for ourselves than any one could do for us „

„„you used to question him of her then „" tim said

„„es we had to and he was afraid to tell me anything then „vidently he did not know much about our spying qualities but i knew how st o strong his prejudices were if once he got suspicious of anything not just going right, and so untill we learned of ur danger we attatched no importance to them „

„how long did she live with you in your headquarters as a dear friend before this war came on„„tim asked

„we do not know, a year or so i think, though all that knowledge of that part of my life and that of my sisters seems to be a blank and where was mildred maxwell then„? „ennie put this question more to herself than to tim, was nevertheless replied;;;

„perhaps catherine believes that the enemy is going to try to wipe you little princesses by some untimely mysterious explsion, when munley finds time to have„it done „

„yes„yes thank you tim „ennie said eagerly while her sisters paled at this suggestion „it must be something of that nature we doubt and you boyscouts are tawk ged shrewd enough to see it, while i and my sisters might have grouped in the dark forever „ am glad you thought of that, and tim you must tell us exactly what you would from „r smith „here are many glandelinian spies within the very christian lines who would therefore do anything to apprehend catherine lee and possibly connect the trouble in some way with--with father whom the glandelinians say also helped us to kidnap edeldefeb--and i will not have his name coupled with that in any way„„y father is a holy gwn gentleman and an „merican „

„im bowed an acquiescence to the fact that the father of the „vian girls was a good emperor and she and her sisters were a fair representative of it as she and her sisters stood up so proud and calm and uttered her protest against their fathers name being mixed with that of the accus accusation of stealing ---edeldefeb

is a strange letter from a spy we captured some time ago which was to be forwarded to munley „ was just looking it over and thought there was nothing to it

„are there any secret messages in it „„asked tim

„„e it contains no secret code or anything „hat is what struck me funny„said jennie

she handed him the letter and he looked it over carefully

„you are certainly greatly mistaken „said tim handing the letter back to him her „better look at that letter again

„violet did so but said „„ can,t see anything wrong except a few misspelled words in it „,ll read it and maybe you,ll understand and„as she read it thin was what the re letter was;

„„ „our excellency general „unley;

„ did not expect expect to recover from my wound but am all right now except for my arm in a sling „ts a secret, except what keeps me alive when those vivian girls shoot me down „ere had no message message inin in weeks write my me and tell me about your chances of getting out in your mine next letter, letter your secret six„

„i can,t see anything wrong either„said „ennie

„neither can „ said violet „he writer only mispelled a certain number of words

„yes but take a look at those mispelled words that are scratched out „

„violet did herself and then her sisters but they were puzzled

„„en,t you see„said tim

„ne we can,t see anything wrong there „

„those mistakes were made on purpose„said tim „these mistakes read;; EXPECT SECRET MESSAGE IN MY NEXT LETTER" „

„well „,ll be„said „ice well he went write any letters to no ri thanks tim for telling us „ut we must go now to see catherine and when i and my sisters see you again i shall know everything there is, to know of christiania francis, and about this secret letter too „

„ timothy groveton felt a little doubtful on that subject but said nothing, and going with them to their horses, helped them into the saddles, and then in a very thoughtful mood returned to his military office wondering what would be the result of that call on catherine lee

„ndeed it was certainly more than a mere toothache and slightly swollen face which had ailed poor catherine lee, and sent her to her room on that sad hot night when tim groveton called upon mildred maxwell „he had a toothache it is true, and a severe one at that, and was also suffering from the effects of the severe hot weather at a time when it should have been winter, hot weather caused by the ever increasing forest fires of the east under cover of whichshe hid the terrible pain which was making her sick under the nervous apprehension, lest at last, she was to be confronted by the principesses when she feared and shrank from them from all the world beside unless unless it was mildred maxwell, her dearly loved beautiful child child scout friend, who had brought her the letter which affected her so strangely „t too had been forwarded from „ ohicago ill and post marked originally at eh ephelia, and it read as follows;;;

„„te miss catherine lee;;;;; ;

„nclosed find a note from the princess of abbieannia in jennie who has written asking your whereabouts, and that this might be forwarded to you „n my absence my clerk john handson, took charge of my business letters, and it seems answered the young abbieannian princesses telling them your whereabouts and the army you are in had i been home this would not have occured„, but it cannot now be helped „t is better for yourself and for their safty to reveal all you know and if you don,t reveal you may be responsible for the consequences for they dont deserve the peril they are facing which we of the remini over here detected through rodney graves information „oping no great harm will come of it, i am;

your obedient servant
.uriel .mith.

.his letter mildred had taken from the military army post office and wondered in a vague sort of way what it contained, and why this man smith had written to her friend catherine, when she had supposed her business relations with the gemini ever in the abbiannian country to be connected alone. .ince the time too since mildred at first learned to write, it had been a distinctly understood thing that both she and catherine were to respect each others correspondence, and mildred would sooner have broken the seal of a letter belonging to a stranger, as to her friend, consequently she had never known jus what w. was in the letters,, which had passed between catherine lee and the members of the gemini .he had always known however since her fathers death,, that catherine lee had at times recieved a certain amount of general information from sources unknown to her, which caused her to do things therefore that made the glandelinian ge erals generals .ad because she lived,, and she knew too that never did the letter writing cease, but that a letter should come for catherine from chicago was astonishingindeed .hat the information must come from adeldefeb or others like radl radcliffe she had been made to believe , and .atherine had told her once what hwhen she asked what she was doing with the information, that she only did nothing much except play with the enemy as a cat plays with a mouse

.but who gives you the stran e strange information .,"mildred had once inquired, and catherine had replied;

.a certain boy by the name of, radcliffe, whose sister is very fond f of me and the vivian girls , was his aidedecamp first, and after he became a spy i correspondad secretly with him ."

.nd mildred wholly unsuspicious f what a dangerous spy she was against against the enemy, accepted this explanation, all as all there was to tell, and recieved the impression that the boy radcliffe was the one whom she had heard of as one of penrods most closest friends, though once by mistake a foe, and never dreamed f the dangers , violet and her sisters were facing which catherine knew of and longed to tell them, and which haunted catherine so continuously, and made her grow so faint with fear .ildred however could see catherine did not lose any of her brightness or prettiness, and there was a sparkle in her dark eyes and a bloom upon her cheeks, which however were slightly sunken and pale .he had brought the letter from chicago, and given it to catherine without so much as looking at her and thus she failed to see how white she was as she took the letter and went to her room to read it alone

.probably it has something to do with my darling in vestigations .she thought, seeking to reassure herself, as she broke the seal and opened the envelope from which the note from jennie dropped into her lap/ picking it up she read the adress address.. .hristiania .rancis, care of .r .mith.and recognizing the hand writing, which she had often seen on notes, sent to her friend mildred by the .rincesses, she gave a low cry, while for a moment everything around her grew back black, and she could neither see nor hear for the great fear ever mastering her

.tracked by them at last,.she whispered as she tried to read what mr smith had written, and could not for the blur before her eyes .

.curses on that manley and all the enemies of the vivian girls. she hissed through her clenched teeth i,ll get him yet .however she grew calm at last, and read her agents letter, and then picking up the dainty note with jennie,s monogram upon the seal, kissed it passionately, and cried over it as if it had been some lving livingcreature, instead of a bit of perfumed paper, on which these lines were written,,

. ARMY VIEW PLACE(NOT DISGRACE)
OPHELIA? CALWERNIA. AB.A.

.my dear catherine lee---have you forgotten the little princesses you used to play with a little more than, two years ago, in marcucian and at our palace at angeline junction .ne little " Queenies they used to call me? and my sisters, though you knew my real names well and that we are the daughr daughters of the great Abbiannian Emperor , who leads the armies now against our wicked glandelinian foes. and towhi whom you and your l ittle friend Mildred were so kind. I and my sisters have it in mothers letter written to father, in which she tells him how good and true you were to him and her, and bad him always be kind to you for her and our sakes.AVD I think he sure had been, and he made you so great in rank as a spy, which was all very well, though we should have shewn our own gratitude in an altogether different way. We might have given you some good infotmat ion also if you needed it and raised your rank higher, but we should also have made you come home to us, and should have lved and petted loved and petted you,because you w were such good friends ofours and knew our father and mother so well, and were so good to them and us.A nd that is what we wish to do now. Papa is at big dilr dirlkneel, as you perhaps knew.He is just as stubborn as the enemy he won't give way and neither will the enemy, but we and he are seperated far from each other so , and even communication has been cut off from us for since penrad went back to the foe lines ad Adeledfeb we tried to notify him but our correspondence came back .We are now l iving at headquarters on the outskirts of battle torn Ophelia, which is a lovely p lace however almost as lovely as out own home at Angelinia Agathia, with a much finer view Christiania do noyou not know that mother is back home in Angelinia Ag t Angelinia agathia.She is, though her home is in Marcucian, where before he was married my father found her, and where we have a host of good respective relatives on her side and Uncle Hansens too But still with penrad and everybody of our relatives so far from us now, we are still very very lonely, and I want you to come and live with us in our headquarters and do s let f spying for us.We will try our best to make you happy, and you will seem to bring us nearer to our darling mother and father, for ye will be able to correspond with her better than we can as you know how to pass things through even the most disrupted communication, where we don't, you can tell me what the enemy is up to, what he did.We are sure to love you more than ever, because she and father [illegible], and to her first letter to her m other and sisters after she became m papas wife and our mother, she so often spoke of her dedilittle good little Christiania Francis, who was so much to her.You see we are writ ing on the assumption that you or your followers have no other ties other ties , always think of you as our dearest first c friend who so often in these days came to see and play with us, Christiania whom I and my sisters can easily remember.Did you not come to me once in the St Peters street, when my nurse m nurse had charge of me, and for some reason or other kiss and cry ov over me and give me a quninity of bon bons .Some such scenes comes up to me from the misty past, and you sure had such bright black beaut iful eyes, and somuch color in your cheeks, and looked so pretty.

Was that you, and why did you not stay with us always? Write immediately and answer all f of these questions, and tell me you will come to yoyour loving Vivian Girl Princesses

.JENNIE VIVIAN".

O how the wretched little girlscout, writhed as she read this letter with thuds of pain beating in her little heart, and her eyes de dimming with burning tears.It was so kind, so affectionate in its tone, and so familiar too.

"my darling Princesses, would you dare to face me if you knew the the horror I had to tell you?" she moaned, as she rocked to rocked to and fro in her anguish, while at her work below poor Mildred sat singing a little song;

"There is rest for the weary,
There is rest fo for you."

"Rest for the weary" Catherine Lee repeated;; as the clear sweet tones floated up to her." Indeed I alone have no right to be weary and neither am I, but I know poor Violet, and her sisters, are weary, oh so weary; but there does not seem to be no rest for them, except in heaven, which alone is an eternal blissfulness, and that many of us can have been, for nevertheless The Blessed Lord is always near us all, and His Blessed Mother too" and she glanced toward the south wall of her headquarters, where hung a huge and most beautiful picture of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, to which she frequently had resort, when even sleeping potions did not avail to quiet her and bring forgetfulness ."But I must see poor Mildred once more", she thought."I must kiss her again, and hear me her call me sister ."

It was nearly time now for the evening meal, and summoning all her strength and calmness that she could assume, Catherine went down stairs, and under cover of the fast increasing darkness caused more by the blackness of the smoky sky, than the night as it was not yet four oclock, managed so well that Mildred suspected nothing, and believed that the pallor in her friends face, and the weakness too to the bad toothache to which she was suffering /

"I'm going to bed to night very early to night" Catherine said when supper was over, and the table cleared away."I'm feeling quite ill more from distress over violet and her sisters than anything else."

Then MILDRED looked at her quite closely, and asked if it was anything more than the toothache or her distress which ailed her.Was there bad news in the letter?

"Ye-- yes, but nothing new that I can explain except to only Violet and her sisters first" Catherine replied; then going up to Mildred she kissed her twice and said"Good night darling friend, and please do not speak to me when you come up to bed, for it may be you will be finding me asleep."

Mildred kissed her back, with no thought of what was in the mind of this brave girl who should feel so over the sad situation of the Vivian Girls, as she slowly climbed the stairs, and going to her room shut thedoor, and then she knelt before the great picture of the Sacred Heart crossed herselfkneeled at it, and smiled sadly as she thought of the morrow, when evidently she would be tellingViolet and her sisters everything, if they should come, as they might do now at any time .

"But that danger isconly a hoax if the princesses will do as I war after I told them.Yes this is better for them than staying here where they'll be discovered by the secret foe spies, and yet I am so hot and feverish to night, that a bath in cold water would be grateful for me, and this is the night for just such a swim, only I have no time or chance to for nobdy is allowed in the rivers to night, no body is allowed to cross from either side either by bridge or swimming, and therefore I'll have to remain here. So Mildred darling, and Violet and her sisters good night untill to morrow."

She was after saying her night prayers raising a glass of hot lemonade toher lips which usually makes her sleep just as the doorbell rang a loud, clanging peal, which made her start so violently that the glass dropped from her trembling hand, and the lemonade was spilled on the floor . It was Timothy Greaten who had rang, and Catherine heard him him speaking to Mildred in the hall.The sound of their voices quieted them, and for the time therefore she continued her prayers but only for Violet, and her sisters.

"Dangers will never be fatal, they'll never die at any ones hand" she said to herself, as she cleared away all traces of the broken glass and then undressing herself, again said her prayers a little longer and then went to bed, but not to sleep for her thoughts were busy with the situation she knew. Then she thought of how she ever became a girlscout, and even first entered the service of the Vivian GIRLS. She could not remember her own father who died in the battle of Evangeline St CLI CLAIRE, when she first entered the secret service even she was eight years old.Her mother was a red cross nurse and still living, and often assisted the surgeons in their work on the many wounded.As she was pretty and bright and piquant, she naturally attracted a good deal of attention, and sometimes by enemy wounded whom she also treated words were said to her which she knew were insults, and which she repelled with scorn and hatrd hatred for she was honest and pure as a child of heaven, and would have shrunk with horror from the future had it been shown to her ,t was then that she herself Catherine Lee had seen at recruiting stations an advertisment to the effect that many boys and girls were needed in the christian armies.As the terms offered were liberal and promished full of desirable adventure, she had resolved to apply for the situation, nothwithstanding at the time she had had no experience.At the apoint appointed hour she presented herself to princess Jennie who at that time happened to be alone in her headquarters her sisters being out somewhere with their own father, and Jennie who was tired from work the previous morning a little more than for her strength was reclining upon a couch of red color, while partly behind her Redney Graves the powerful Gemini C"hief stood with folded arms, and a grim critical crafty look upon his face

Accustomed as he was with spies and boy and girlscouts, he saw at a glance that Catherine Lee knew nothing of the habits and ways of a girlscout, such as he wished to see every child in Abbiennia be now that the nation was in such straes with glandelinia, a thought of which made him shudder. Indeed the girl when questioned for references, and the address of her instructor, acknowledged freely that she had no references, and had never solved anywhere as a girlscout .

"But Princess I can learn" she said" and as you were so good to me and my sisters when we played together two years ago I will serve our country faithfully and you toooo as yes and you too. I should so like you and your sisters to try me." And she had looked imploringly at Jennie, who not only remembered how good she had been to her and her sisters but saw something in the girl that pleased her.O She was so young and plain in her dress, and appeared so good and trusty that her heart warmed toward her more than ever before

If Violet and her sisters liked anybody their reference were nothing to them, and turning to one of her aidedcamps she said she decided to give her a trial .Redney Graves demurred urging that the girl had no experience of style and no learning, but Jennie would have no interference and smartly told him so, and Catherine was retained and entered upon her duties the next day:.

How happe happy and full of adventure, those first few mm met months spent in the service as a girlscout seemed to Catherine now as she looked back upon them, and how sweet and kind and patient Violet and her sisters had always been with her even when she so often flunked in her learnings of the drills and hose back riding treating her more as an equal and a friend than as a girlscout girlscout girlscout.But nevertheless CAtherine could not forget the past or cease to pine for her dead father, and her lost home, and the plain old fashioned mother who was serviving as a red cross nurse and for whom she cried every day of her life when she was so far away.Laying her head on the lap of her faithful brother who now too hi is dead, she would sob out her lonesomeness, and talk by the hour of her home town and its people, untill her brother knew every stone and grag, and winding stream in the pleasant Abbiennian city, and knew pretty well what every person was and how they stood in that city .hey were of mutual benefit to each other---this girlscout and the Vivian girl princesses, for while Catherine anticipated every wish of the Vivian girls, waiting upon them as if they had been higher in rank than they were were, and teaching them the french language as well as the german which Violet and her sisters also knew now. Violet and her sisters in turn taught her a little english, and during the many weeks when she and her sisters were alone in the early stages of the war, she and her sisters gave her lessions in history and geography, and arithmetic so that Catherine, who was apt and bright, became a much better scholar than was common to persons of her class, and astonished a and astwished her mistresses with her rapid improvement.

Even the powerful ad haughty Rodey Graves began to notice her at last ad marvel at th e change in her, ad when he had not been busy and was w within th eir plac or headquart ers or at h ome with th em he oft en found h imself linering longer in th e ap apart ment of th e Vivian Girls when Mildred was th ere with her saucy smile, her brigh t eyes, ad and her pretty way of saying saying things . Without any motive except that she wished to please also him becaue c because he was the guardian and assistan of the princesses, she made herself necessary to him, and carefully studying the great mans wishes, ministered to him with the alacrity of a child slave, and when he offered her rewards for extra services, she refusedvto take it, ad said that what she did was only for love of h im for being so good to her friends Violet, and her sisters, who also trusted and clung to the girlwith a love and holiness which made the very devils shiver with fear, hate and remourseful pain, as Violet and her sisters could remember it now when the sorrows and yet brave deeds of the past were confronting them so often and making them almost scriek aloud against the foe, as they recalled those days especially in Evangeline St Claire, Calmanrinia, and the Wicksy places, and especially at Angelinia St Claire when Emperor Vivian was contending with the enemy so often at Trinoque, while poor Angelina had been ill from her wound and grew paler and thinner every day, and yet strove so hard to keep up by talking to Evans and others of the great happiness in store for her and her sisters in the far future, ad surprise for her dear father if all went well went well with her, and she lived through the dreadful trial awaiting her, and her as sisters.

"Emperor Vivian is so fond of his dearest daughters, and he will be so happy and surprised when he hears of it that Angelina is getting better.I was glad I did not tell h im."Catherine Lee could see those dear girls now, and yet still feel the touch of Angelinas soft hands, ad see thewhite worn face uponthe pillow and the great blue eyes which followed her so wist wistfully and question ly and had at last a look in them of sorrow, terror and dread, anas the days had gone by and no strength or signs of recovery had come to Angelina despite all Evans, and her Father could do or any return to her nerves of the well needed vit ality, and to retard her recovery too was the disappearance of her sisters.She was dying, and she knew it at last, and Catherine had seen her thrown herself into Jack Evansarms, and sob a sob bitterly.

"It isn't hardto die"she had said"When I am so young and have much to lif live for.But home is so far away, and mother too, and my sisters gone, where are they Evans!Can't you fnd them for me.They ought to be here, ought to be rescued and I so sickand lonely."

Catherine knew that pretty well low under great difficulty he did find them and brought them back safily, and that while Evans was gone her own tears fell like rain upon the little golden head resting upon her own bosom while she tried to comfort the young princess, who at that time itseemed was so surely passing away.

"Evans will soon bring your dear sisters"she had said,"and then you my poor Princess will soon be better, and when the war stops we shall go back to your beautifu beautiful home and be happy there"

But Angelina was sure she knew better.She would never go back home again------ never see her dear sisters again, and that grieved her the most and she had longed now for them so much when she lay dying in Evangeline St Claire, with only her father with her, and to whom Catherin e had h eard h er say;

"God bless you and all my friends and reward your kindness and faithfulness to me."

Angelina had meant it for a blessing, but it wasreally a curse against Glandelinian, and it had followed Glandelinians ever since who didn't leave them alone, yet again the enemy was finding them out, and makingat least her Catherine writhe with anguish and fear.They must be saved at all costs.Angelina had pulled through her sickness at Evangeline Saint Claire and was stronger to day than ever.

"And yet I sure was kind to her"she whispered"And fearfully I dreaded she might die in my arms, while my head was upon my breast(not nest) and she kissed me four times upon my lips------one was for me"shesaid, and one was for her sisters, and the two others for her two brothers who were then so far away.Ah me, those kisses how they burn like holy fire------ad and I am burning too, burning for love of them.If there really is a hell, is it really worst than the sorrows tormeds and awful times they are enduring!Ha.They are in danger from the enemy a secret enemy or secret danger which I alone know.Here's my chance to get even.The Glandelinians won't kill my baby sisters and brothers and get away with it.If possible I'll tell them the nes news to day....."

Her mind was disordered, and she raved inchoherently of Evangeline St Claire and of Angelinia Agathia, and Mildred Maxwell, and Violet, and her sisbr sisters untilll she was utterly exhausted, and growing quiet, at lest fell into a sleep so deep-(the peop) that she did not hear Mildred, when she finally let Tim out and came up to her room.

"Poor Catherin e dear,she is resting sweetly, and I hope will be better to morrow"Mildred said as she bent over the sleeping girlscout leader, whose face looked so white, ad worn and pinched. The next morning h e however Catherine Lee did not attempt to get up.She felt t oso weak and sick, ed felt like keeping her bed all day."And Mildred"she added with a quivering lip, and a pleading tone, don't let any one in h ere will you, if they come asking for me, except if it be the princesses."Let them in by all means I wish dreadfully to see them but can't go to th to them.Not any one elseipromise, Mildred."

"No Catherine dear no one shall disturb you, and if Violet and her sisters come then I shall send them right up here"mildred said soothingly"and fortunaly I have not much work on hand to day, rand can stay with you a great deal.I must finish my torn coat and that is all.Now try to sleep again it will do you good.You are ill because you we r worry about them so much Catherine. Surely the angels who possess them will guard them carefully.Try tocheer up for I can't have such a woeful looking pale faced little girlscout on my hands.Or I shall have to send her off to t he hospital untill I am well."

She spoke playfully but it seemed every word was a stab to the brave girl, who said again;;;

"Remember Mildred, nobody is to come up here;

"No Catherine dear, nobody but Violet or her sisters.You are safer than the old good holy bishi bishop in h is castle on the Calverhine for even the rats could not reach him t here, and not so much as a mouse shall harm you, here, soo good bye for the present--and with a kiss,--the last and yet the best or more coming she ran down stairs just as a c l calvacade stopped at the gate, and Angelinia Aronburg followed by Violet, and her sisters came rapidly up the walk.

Angelinia Aronburg who was in the land, did not ring but entered,unannounced like on like one who had but one thought , one purpose, and was resolved to carry it out with as little ceremony as possible.It was fortunate for all parties that this was Mildreds dull season, and there were no secret enemy spies and agents or other secret enemies with prying eyes and curious ears to try to acsend listen, for Angelinia Aronburg was greatly excited nog now that the moment drew near when she could have her friends Violet and her sisters confr confront Catherine Lee(not the bee) ad she plunged at once into the business by after returing Mildreds salute"Where is Miss Catherine Lee?I and Violet and her sisters have come to see her."

"Catherine is sick"Mildred replied,"She is very nervous ad said she dahnot see any one except Violet and her sisters.I am sorry but you will have to wait.Maybe I can do as well. "she continued, lookin wonderingly at Angelinia Aronburg, who utterly disregarding what she said, had started for the stairs.

"No Mildred I am sorry but you will not do as well.I and also Violet and h dr sisters must see her;;;it is very important and I cannot wait."Angelinia said, still advancing tword the stairs, while Mildred boldly put herself between her and her superior, whose strange conduct surprised her so much.

"But Miss Aronburg!you cannot see her.I promised no one except Violet or her sisters could disturb her and then only out of grave necessity"she said again" and as I'm on guard here even my highest superiors must obey"she said again and now she laid her hand on Angelinia Aronburs shoulder, to detain her, for "Gertrudes" foot was on the first stair, ad she looked resolute enough to storm a fortress, as she persisted in her determination t o go up.

But not less resolute than her own wasthe face which confronted her as Mildred roused up and said in a voice Angelinia Aronburg had never heard from her before;

"Miss Angelinia Aronburg.You astonish me.I tell you Miss Catherine Lee is very sick, and cannot be disturbed, not even by the fair princesses th emselves unless a case of grave necessity.You must not go up, and only one of th e Princesses can and if you pes persist I'll draw.I'm in charge h ere."

"Well then if I can Violet must."said Angelinia Aronburg more astonished herself at Mildreds conduct but realizing that if she is in chegre here she must be obeyed no matter how low or high her rn rank is.

"I'll go then"said Violet taken aback and astonished beyond her wits."I and my sisters have very important news from some place in Chicago away in t h at country al called America, which concerns Catherine Catherine Lee and me, and our own safty from t he unseen danger, and yours too Mildred, as you're involved in it more than us for being what th e Glandelinians call an accomplice of ours, and therefore one of us must see her and it might as well be I.If not then Joice must go up."

"What news."mildred asked,, thinking suddenly of the lett er Catherine herself had recieved from "Chicago Ill herself the previous night , ad suddenly experiencin g a vague feeling of great fear and dread ofvsome impending evil, especially as the noise of th e ever continuous battle of Ophelia war coming louder and closer and reports had come that t h e foe was winning. "what news have you and your sisters heard which concerns Catherine and the secret peril you and I are in!"she repeated looking steadily at Y- Violet, and also her sisters. Violet, hesitated a moment , kept silent by something in Mildreds face, but when she said for the fourthtime more determinedly"Tell me what news you have recieved from America and its city of Chicago Joice herself said pretty severely and with all the dignity and worth ority she could summon;

"Mildred it shall never make any difference between us, but your friend Catherine Lee is not Catherine Lee as you believe, but a dangerous spy whom I and my sisters were trying to find and have found at last."

"My friend Catherine Lee a dangerous Glandelinian spy.Impossible princess, you must have dreamed it.So She surely was with us for most be and now you who know and loved her so well secure her of being a spy."Mildred gasped, as she clutched Joices shoulder with a grip which was painful."

"I have it from her agent in Chicago Ill, and so have my sisters, who has given her lots of aid in her work at different times, that she is one of our own best christian spies and more dangerous to the foe than any of us.I didn't say she was a Glandelinian spy.I said she was a dangerous one, and that meant not for our side.she knows something which will save us all and she can save us and she is ill because we're in danger.Our presence will even make her well.Now be wise and let us go up and see her or at least le me go and the rest of us stay untill she calls for us.I must see her for our own or your sake."Join Joice said, and she darted up the stairs no long r longer restrained by Mildred, who had at least allowed her to pass without further protest.. Clasping her hand to her h ad head as if smitten with a blow, Mildred staggered back, and leaning against the wa wall for support , tried to think what it all meant ,while her mind traveled rapidly back over the past, gathering up a thread h re here and there, untill she had no doubt t but what Violet, and J Joice told her was true.Her friend was the greatest of all christian girlscout spies in th e world Ch ristianie Francis who assumed the name of Cath erine Lee.she knew Daisy would willingly give h is very life for her capture she was so dangerous to Glandelinia.But why this concealment.what was she hiding for their sake and her own, to t ell at the proper time.could she even now ruin Glandelinia by revealing this?"hat was th e Glandelinians goin to do t hat she knew of?"

Violet herself wondered too, and her first impulse, was to hurry to Catherines room in spite of Mildreds protest, where there were already the sound of excited voices, Christin Christianies, and Joices blended together, for it seemed as if each strove to be heard, and once she caught her own name, those of her sisters and Mildred, and then of Dunlaye and Gerald Stanley, and then heard Mildreds name as if Catherine were calling to her to come.Th en Violet did start up, and was half way up the stairs, when the door bell rang violently-a sharp imperious ri ring, which she recognized as Jean Saunders."Mildred Maxwell herself was expecting th at young girlscout leader, and knowing that however fierce a storm might be blowing, she must keep it from th e world, so she calmed herself with a tremendous effort, and opening the door to Jean, listened patiently for several munites, while th e girl examined a map Mildred was showing her and said it would do very well, only th e paper was a little too large.

"For a man you never made out anything so large b e before."

"Very well but you supplied me with the paper yourself and forgot about it and I used it all not going to waste it.""Mildred said, anious to be rid of her friend for this moment , who had asked in her strange way;

"Isn't that Princess Joice up stairs and isn't she talking pretty loud for so well bred a person as she is?"

"Oh will she never go!""Mildred, and the other Vivien Girls also thought , just as the bell pealed a second time, and Angelinia Jennings came in, bringing a bringing a bundle almost as large as herself, and entering at once into full details of what it was, who had captured it in a raid and how.

"I suppose Jean is going on a scouting expedition to morrow "she said looking hard at the girlscout,"though she didn't have the chance to tell me so, right out, yet wants me and my sister Dolores and others to go with her; but everybody is volunteering for it, and I thought I might as well come and tell of it."

"Oh Angelinia, why didn't you get a lavenda coat instead of that horrid dark purple you got on?"Jennie Vivien herself said, as she glanced at the silk coat, as Jean(not hers) went out, I a leaving Angelinia a good deal crest fallen, and a little doubtful with regard to the dress she had lately thought so pretty.

"Oh never mind Jen"said Catherine"what's the different what coat she wears,"and then Jennie herself relented and soothed her as well as she could, and heard her suggestions, and took her a present, and showed her some new fashion plates for a brand new coat(not the coat), and did it all with her ears turned tward Catherine Lees room, where the talk was still going on, now low and quiet and almost pleading, and again as high and excited, that Angelinia Jennings asked if th at was not Joice's voice, but what she was talking so loud for.Then Violet excused herself for a moment, n and ran upstairs to Catherines room, the door of which which was a jar and h that accounted for the distinct noss with which the sound of voices was born e to the parlor below.Catherine Lee, had risen from her bed and put on a small girlscout dressing gown, which Joice was buttoning for her while she was trying to bind her long loose hair into a sort of pig tail style b behind.Her face was as wh ite as ashes however, and in her eyes there was a haunted look, as of one pursued to the last extremity.But when she saw Violet their expression suddenly changed changed, and thrusting out both hands she cried;

"Oh Princess Violet, for the time being please go away; this is no place for you."

But advancing into the room and closing the door, Violet said in a low firm ton tone of voice;

"I don't know what all this is about, but Catherine is too weak and sick to be thus excited.Will we leave her Joice dear un till a fitter time."

"Please Violet dear don 't speak to me your dear sister as if you were angry at me" Joice replied without looking up from buttoning Catherines dressing gown."I cannot go now.This girl scout is the one we used to play with in Marcuncian and Angelinia Acathia in our younger days, she knows about t he situation we are in and is going to tell only me andyou out then we'll tell our sisters.she is Christianie Francie."

"Yes I am Christianie Francis.God pity us and mostly you."the girl exclaimed and over Violets face there swept a look of unutterable pain and surprise.she had said to herself that this which V Joice had suspected from the letter was true that Catherine Lee was Christiana Francis, and still there had been a faint h ope that there might be a mistake about their secret peril;;;;; but there was none Ch ristiania had declared it herself, and with a low c ry she turned away saying as she did so;

"There are people in the parlor-and your voices are sometimes very much louder than you think, and though they cannot understand you down there, they will know that you are excited and that there is trouble of some kind.Of course we can trust th em it is true but suppose without our knowledge th ey may be duplicates instead of the real.Speak lower I command th e both of you.If this thing we hear be true we surely need not tell it to the world; we can keep it t o our selves if we want to escape the unseen dangers...:"

"Yes Violet that is what I mean to do"Joice said, while Catherine herself exclaimed indeed with a ring of joy in her voice as if some very unexpected relief h ad come to her;;

"Yes,yes we need not tell;we will not tell; we will keep the secret forever."

"But for our sakes and yours you must tell me all you kn ow about our secret danger."Joice said, while Violet went down stairs, for the bell was ringing again , and Angelinia Jennings was growing impatient of wait ing to know what was going on up stairs, and y et was not going to find out after all for Violet refused to say anything.Th is time it was Minnie and Anna Saunders, and int and into the minds of Violet, and her sisters there flashed the same th ought;

"Are indeed all the girlscouts coming here to day, and what would they say if th ey knew who Catherine Lee was!"But th ey did not know or dream of the exciting interview in the room above, where Joice questioned so rapidly and impati nt impatiently the girlscout who almost crouched at her feet in her abasement and answered amid tears and sobs.The two Saunders girlscouts had merely come to ask whether Violet and her sisters and intended to go out on any scouting tours to morrow, and with their answers of "No" they left very soon, t aking Angelinia Jennings with them, to t h e great relief of the girls and especially Mildred, who locked the door upon them, determined that no one else should enter untill Joice and her sisters were gone or th at Violet and she herself knew wh why t h e truth had been withheld from them . Up stairs the talk was still going on, th ough the voices were now low and qi quiet , as if the storm was over, but would the interview never end,would Violet or Joice rather never leave her or her sisters free to go to Catherine herself and demand an explanation?slowly as it seemed the h our hands crept on untill it was twelve o clock, and then at last the door opened and shut, and Joice came down the steps her eyes red with weeping but with a look of content upon h er face which surprised Mildred, and also Joices sisters quite a lot .

"She cannot be angry at all with Catherine"they th ought and th eir hearts began to grow ligh ter as Joice came up to t hem, and putting her arms around Mildreds neck, said to her;

"Wil it makes you too seem nearer to me, now that I know th at Cath erine Lee is Ch ristianie Francis, and we love you more than ever for you was always with her too those days. But Violet my dear sister how white you are, and your hands are like lumps of ice.Are you sick!"she cont inued, as she looked with dread alarm at her sisters face, which was as white as ash es.

"No Joice dear I am not sick, but a good deal upset from what I have heard"violet replied"put tell me"she continued"what does Catherine say.Why has she never told us who she was and what our peril was untilll now!"

"She says it is for our sake, that she feared lest it might be told too soon and won't avert the disaster she fears."Joice replied, and looking earnestly at her Jennie herself asked;;

"And yo believe this to be the only reason don't you!"

"No I do at not"Joice answered promptly."It is true in part, no doubt , but there is something she did not tell me, and which I am resolved to find out but she refuses to tell me untill she sees you Violet dear first and wishes you to come up now.But I did not tell her so, she seems so scared about what she fears we are facing---so like a frightened baby.Sisters I believe there's something terrible in store for us if we don't keep on our guard and she's going to help us."

"Yes,yes",nd Violet caught eagerly at t he suggestion."you are right .T here is something terrible, and unseen threatening us somewhere.I can see it now, and th at will account for much which seemed so strange.Oh Joice be patient, be careful, be merciful.Remember she is our best girlscout spy we have."

"And our best girl friend."Joice rejoined. "She was with our mother when we three you I and H attie were sick.We shall not do sgth ing foolish and we shall surely reward her for what she has already told me;do not fear about her but Violet ,you must go up to her now she is waiting for you"and Joices lips touched Violets in token that th rough her no harm should come to the good girlscout , who in the chamber above lay head down on her bed with a sickeningdread of th e moment of what would happen if her information was too late and she would stand face to face with a view of seeing Violet and her sisters come to doom.Oh why don't Violet hurry, she thought .

Yet she had a sickening dread of the moment when she must stand face to face with Violet whom she knew was "Angel possessed, and meet t he glance of those clear blue eyes which surely might read th e story she had not t old her sister Joice . Indeed when Joice Vivian went up the stairs to Catherline Lees room, she h ad at that time no definite plan of action, indeed she had no plan at all, except to confront and confound the girlscout spy who had seemingly deceived her and her sisters so long, and whom she found sitting up in bed with so terrified a look on her face, that she stood a moment on t h e threshold gazing at her ere she then plunged impetiously into the business which had brough t her and her sisters there. Secure in Mildreds promise that no one should disturb her, Catherine had grown comparatively quiet , and was just falling off to sleep when she was aroused by the sound of h orses entering the courtyard of Mildreds headquarters, and of the h orses stopping at the gate, and a few moments after she heard at first Angelinia Aronburgs severe voice, speaking earnestly and aurthoritively to Mildred, and felt when she also heard Violets voice that th e hour she had dreaded and yet H oped for too had come at last. Violet , and her sisters had heard from "Chicago Ill" and had come for an explanatation.

"Fool that I am that I did not kill that dog of a Manley when I had that chance"she said as starting up in bed, she listened untilll footsteps came up the stairs, and Joice Vivian instead of Angelinia Aronburg, or Violet, stood looking at her.

But not long, the princess was in t oo great haste to wait, and advancing to the bedside she began imploringly;

"Christianie, you see I know you; I and my sisters have found you at last;traced you th rough your spy agents in Ch icago way over in a foriegn country, whose agents clerk put y you in my track; so th ere can be no mistake.You are surely Christinie Francis my old time playmate and friend, whom I and my sisters have so ardently desired to findjand you know we iwished it all th e time, and yet for some reason because of the secret of th e enemy did not tell me who you are. Why did you h ide from us and treat us so Christinia!what in th e world is your excuse?you have on e of course.Is it the danger we are in, ad that you shadowed us secretly to guard us against it !go Speak."

Th e princess spoke so rapidly, pouring out question after questio;, t h at for a moment Cath erin e Lee was stunned stunned and was not able to answer anything ,but sat staring blankly at her, like one in a dream. At last however her lips moved and she said bravely;

"I am orig coriginally and noth ing else but Catherline Mary Lee but in my spying work have assumed th e name of Christinia Francis. If I did t ll you who I was you would have been out of luck and your sisters t oo."

"If you let on who you were it would be bad luck for us! That is very strange Joice replied."put yet if t h ere was noth in g for you to conceal ffo from us if all your derlin gs for our countrys cause, andyour great t aid to our parents and us were honorable and right as we can see by reading your character and doings of the past,I nor my sisters see no reason why h iding from me and my sisters th e fact that you were once our playmate in days gone by.Catherine

I did not come to scold or chide you."and Joices voice softened a little."I and my sisters have loved you too much for that, but I have come to hear about the secret peril we are in, and which you seem to know about, and which you came once to tell us, but which day we were too upset by Penrods going away to see you then. I heard from one of the Lacrian scouts th at you were with us when we were with general Tamerline and that you know somet h ing more about t h e accusation a of our having kidnapped "Adeldefob" of which you know who he originally is.It was you as Jennie finally told me who really told her to tell Tim Grovston whhere Penrod had been taken, and who was an responsible for our restoration t ogether as she or he was.You were with her when we were takenaway elsewhere.You even p ersed me once when I was wounded.You know even th en what mother said to me and of me then and of my sisters.She and Fath er loved you Catherine and trusted you.I have it in a retained letter written to my fat h er as soon asshe left for th e front and when he was away in the first defense of Angelinia Aronburg,and that is why he made you of so high a rank, was it not Catherine!"

She was looking fixedly at the girlscout, on whose white face blood red spots were beginning to show, and who answered falteringly;

"No princess he did not give me th e commission.It was your mother. Oh princess for your sake and for the sake of your sisters, leave me, go away, don't try to unearth t h e sec secret danger, there is no escape even if I tell you what it is unless you can show proofs you didn't capture Adeldefob.There are things about your h idden dangers you should not know--t hings I cannot dare tell, you or your sisters will not be able to stnd it stand it.There's no escape unless your possession angels interfere mire miraculously.God help me and you and your sisters.I'm in t h e same danger and so is Angelinia Aronburg and Mildred.I wish I had died and gone to heaven before I ever saw your faces."

Poor Catherine looked so pale and death like, that Joice bent anxiously over her and bringing the camphor bathed her forehead, and held it t o her n ostrils untill she was better, and raising herself ff from the pillows upon which she had fallen, she finally said;;;

"I cannot lie here for I feel that I am smothering.I must get u up while I am talking to you but oh , you, and also your dear sisters will be oh so sorry. You and they will wish you had never come.Bring me my wrapper there on the chair and my woolen shawl, for though the weather is hot I am for some reason o r other shiverin g as if it was cold."

Indeed her teet h were chattering and her lips were blue and pinched as Joice brought the wrapper, and h elped her put it on, kneeling onnth e floor to button it on h erself, ad occasionally speaking sooth inly to her, t h ough her own heart was beating rapidly with a dread of what she might hear.Th en it was that Violet herself appeared on t he scene and by suggesting that no one but themselves need know what had been so long hidden, changed Catherines intention altogether.For a few brief moments there had been in h er mind a resolve to make a clean breast of it, and to tell of all of the whole truth , and then when that was done she would do all in her power to prevent the storm sure to follow her revelations."

"Bett er to get the Manleys"she thought"than to be questioned by so many secret foe spies within the christian lines as I should be if they knew I was really Catherine Mary Lee whom the whole of Clandelinie wants dead or alive."

But when the idea was suggested that only Joice, she and her sisters need know, she changed her mind, and in which she would now t ll the latter there was to be a deep dark gulf bridged over in silence.

"H e,p h elp me to my chair for.I am very weak."she said to Joice, when Violet, had gone.Joice complied with her request, and leading her to a chair placed the girlscout gently in it, ad drew the shawl closer around h er.At th is little act of attention poor Catherine broke down entirely, and throwing her arms around Joice sobbed out ;

"Oh my darling princess, whom I so loved to play wit h and your sisters.I have so longed to again hold you and they in my arms as I held you three years ago. Joice, Joice, kiss me ---because--because I am your real Catherine Lee."

"It was not in Joices nature at all to resist such an appeal, and she kissed the poor tren t rembling girlscout twice, and then drawing a chair to her side spoke very softly to her and said;

"Now Catherine dear pl ase tell me."

"Tell you w what Princess!What do you really wish to know."Cath erine asked;

"W-ll about that confouded confounded "Adeldefob" kidnapping scandal.You are the first of th e girlscout spies I or my sisters have ever seen, who have know known of that sort of rumors spread by general Manley and his lying generals I and we have my sisters heard all about it, it has been even th e rumor throught our own christian camps, and even my generals believe it is true."

Catherine looked looked at Joice, and observed that she was one of the sweetest and loveliest creatures she had ever seen, with eyes like the summer

th e azure sky of Italy and a face so fair and pure, that she recalled a good deal h er her sister Jennie. Joice continued"I wish to hear from beginning to end all you know about t h at "Adeldefob"kidnapping scandal, and when you heard of it first, whether you saw us go off with Penrod who th en t co was dressed at ill as Adeldefob, ed where you saw th e event, and about Manley being wounded by one of us in our h eadquarters or his rath er, before we were taken away to be seperated from Penrod, and only Tim and Jennie to care for us."

"Would you mind holding my hand, while I tell of o you of my first days wit him general Tamerlines headquart ers."Catherine said, and Joice took t h e cold cl m clammy hand between both of hers and rubbed and chaffed it as tenderly as any one of h er sisters would have don e.She was beginn ing to feel far more kindly toward this girlscout who had played with her and her sisters in t imes past and had been a great favorite of th eir mother, th e insinuat ions by th e Glendelinians being forgotten in the t ime and she saw before her only one who had played with her and her sisters th ree or four years ago before the war, ed had even taken care of Angeline in secret and prevented her from dying and who in reality was th e one who saved her life.

"Begin"she said"Please.I am impatient t o h ear."

And so Catherin e began, and told of being a spy within Tamerlines army, of getting into h is headquarters posing as a spoiled and yet petted girlscout, t old h er of watching everything that transpired between Adeldefob and Gerald Starring over her and her sisters, told how she kept hidden in th e handsome rooms of t h e generals headquarters, and of how th e beautiful little girls were so kind to Adeldefob, and made of h im more a loving companion than any one, h ow she saw herself how Gerald Starring protected ad often against it and talked over the scene and wrote in s secret letters to general Manley, and did things which made even her cry becau because she was not able to interfere at the t ime.

"and did little Jennie ever tell you anything of which mystery either er I , my sisters or you didn't now!"

"Yes.Plenty.she helped me a lot."

"Did you ever m eet Adeldefob!"

"Yes.But I had no chance to speak to h im."

"did Jennie ever tell you of general Manleys army and how she was a slave there?did you n know she had once been a child slave!"Joice asked, and Cath erine e replied;

"Yes she told me all about her own child slave life and Manleys army and its ways, how den ie despite her being a slave she had secretly learned a lot about child scout work and spying , n and became familiar with every rock and h ill of Calverinia country, knew all kinds of trees and animals I th ink, especially the elms and pines, and knew th e movements and ways of advancing or receding forest fires.she was so fond of scouting work, and all her slave friends and used oft en to cry for freedom when by herself.But now she is one of the best girlscouts you ever put into the army.Angelin ia Arnburg says so and when she says it it must be true."

"Was she very handy to you in general Tamerlines headquarters."?Joice asked and Catherine answered her;

"Always and took advantage when general Phellinis Tamerline or any of his officers were away wit h his military associates or said out late at night t s as he somet imes did.she learned a lot of Gerald Starring and his two companions and t h ey were surely plotting to ruin you and kill Penrod and cause your destruct ion.They're jealous of you t oo because you are princesses and spy so good on t h e Glendelinian generals."

Joices breat h came quickly for a moment, and her voi ce shook as she said or asked, very low as if afraid some one might hear.

"Was not Adeldefob kind to her always?"

"Before I can tell you of th e secret perils you face you must know more of Jannie for she too is involved in it . Adeldefob was kid, he was kind to her th e first day he saw her with in Manleys army, and when he saw what she wanted she did not have, and th at was the society of t he christens he saw to it she had it promptly."Catherine Lee said, and th en Joice drew back a little and answered;

"Catherine for all I know it is not only that you are hateful to t he Manleys for Military reasons but you have also some personal grudge against th em which you would like to sett le.You'd kill Manley if you had the chance..I see th at in all you say.I can't blame you I suppose because he has destroyed everyti everyth ing that was very dear to me and my sisters, and have done a lot of mean nes to my father whom I and my sisters love so much.You in secret are Manl ys Manleys bitterest and most dangerous foe and th erefore can help us a lot but I insist upon your going on just t h e same and telling me everyth ing th en first about litt le Jennie th e poor litt le dear.Why did she once a poor child slave so much love th e society of my father, and where and how did he pass his t ime with her and Angeline then at t he awful time I and my other sisters were stolen away through Starring and seperated for so long.He loved her t oo I am sure.You know he did.You know he loved little Jannie.There is something in her that makes everybody crazy over her who sees her."

She kept asserting th is, for there was an expression on Catherines face which she could not understand and which did not quite please her.

"Adeldefob was very proud of t he beauty of the little girl slave, but wh n I first believed he was a real Glendelinian boyscout, and did not know who he was I did not th ink it was in Adeldefobs nature to love ay child slave long no matter what h er she was a pretty one or n ot.But I was surprisingly disappointed if being fooled is what you call "disappin disappointed, but at first her habits did at suit h im it was too "christian"and h e was afraid she would give herself away, and th inking him a Glendelinian h is did at suit h er but she was a ve willing worker. He neverth eless took h er for "his own slave" and allowed her to breakfast later th an oth er child slaves, while he frequently dined out in the mess halls, returning generally to see her working hard for some oth er Glendelinian boyscouts and that cause a row between him and th em in which he gained the mastery.H e wished her not t o work at all.Because of h im she was nevertheless somewhat happier with in t h e Glendelinian camps than most other child slaves, and would have been happier if "Q"Adeldefob had stayed more with h er her, but he was much within general Manleys headquarters, and also with in Federals, and others, ed often with Gingigore, and so we were alone a great deal, and she herself taught t me many strange things unseen by th e Glendelinian soldiers and notwithstanding th at whe th ough t me a Glendelinian girlscout, was very kind to me."

"But why did not my brother stay with her more!!!"""" Joice asked, ed Cath erine replied;;;

"To avoid suspicon and to get in his work which he was there for and to contemplate plots with Gingigore to get her and a lot of child slaves out of the camp and to t h e freedom of th e chri tian christian lines he had to t ravel from one army to another in the guise of hunting and racing, ed had many Glendelinian com panions there whom he pretended to be a friend to and cobblots of im information, but he once complained to me that t he "Glendelinian camps"were lonely.If he had only to finish his work if he had litt le Jannie with h im--he could bear it he said--but as it was the Glendelinian camps of Manleys army was unendurable, and so because of his work he was forced to stay awayfor weeks at nothing, untill he then th ank God got t o t h e point he was striving for, and because of his Jannie is cis where she is to day, and then was with your sister Angeline at Evangeline StClaire when she pined and drooped like so e fair lily which had neith er water or sunshine because you and your sisters th en were stolen away from her by Gerald Starring and h is companions, and your two brothers were compelled to be so far away because of the dreadful war."

"Oh th is very dreadful"Joice said wit h a shocking sob."I am glad that poor "Penrod did not know and will not know about poor Angelines suffering of which you have told me for we never knew of it being away at the time as prisoners.But go on and tell me th e rest .I insist upon knowing t h e whole."

So Catherine Lee told of th e weeks and weeks.poor sick wounded Angeline passed only with Evans and her father in t h e headquart ers at Evangeline St Claire, while Adeldefob not t hat being suspected h e was the broth er of the Vivian Girl Princesses was seeking h is military work against the foe elsewhere, of his great desire t h at he would have had sisters like th e princesses- of poor Angelines failing health , and removal at last dl closer to th e pure waters of Lake Angeline, and th en as th e mont h of July advanced, to anoth er s ot of th e great joy which came to h r so unpextecredlt, and which she purposely kept from her father and sisters, whswishing t o surprise at least them when th ey came back, of t h e weary days of waiting, h oping against h ope for they never came, th en of Evas desperate h unt for t hem ad of h is rescue of th em ad h is revenge for the cruel treat ement , how because of both Jann ie and Evans Angelin did not die but improved more rapidly than sh e had feiled in health ad h ow she looked like a celestial child wit h her own head pillowed on Catherines arm.Here Cath erine stopped a suddenly and covering her face with her hands sobbed h ysterically as she recalled th at scene, while Joice too cried as she had never cried before, for th e th en supposed to be dying little sister in Evangeline St Claire, who had held to th e faith that her sisters would return to t h e very last, and prayed th at God would bless and causad rescue to come to th em, and make th em a comfort an and a joy to th e good father and th eir country, ed for the broth ers who were t hen compelled to be so far away being in milit ary movements and enforced bloody batt l e battles such as Angeline , her sisters nor th eir father never know formed a conspicious part.

"When Evans was not t here ,at the time searchin g for her sisters, Jannie was a great comfort t o h er."Cath erine said when she could speak."And she would have her near her when she was worse in h er health .Emperor Vivians physician had been in, ed told me sh e probably would not last th e night th rough , and that I and Jannie must h ave some one with me."But she said that I and Jann ie and her fath er were all she wanted, and when h e was gone h e made us sit by her, while she talked as she had done many a time, of her home at Marcudian of her missing sisters, and her moth er and aunt and brothers, to whom she had sent messages..I remember your poor sisters every word."Tell my two dear brothers who cannot come to me that I have never ceased to love th em and to long for t hem with such longing longing as only h ome sick creatures know, and if I have seemed neglectful ad and have not written as I ough t to--it was, because--I couldn't.I can't explain only I love th em so much, and now if I could lay my h ead m on moth ers lap as I did when everyth ing was so good and peaceful and no war tore us so far apa t apart , nd it ached as it is aching now,I should die more willingly.Dear dearest mother, poor fath er, my poor sisters and broth ers and dear Aunt and Uncle and my dear friend Jack Evans, a God bless t h em and comfort t h em all when th ey hear th at I am dead.But t hanks be to God because of litt le Jannie your dear sister Angeline is hale and h earty t h is very day and stronger now th an ever ."

"Oh Catherine"Joice sobbed"Adeldefoh"ough t t o know this--and he and my brot hers ad ot h ers too.When we were stolen away and placed far from each oth er in the camp we never even h eard that she had been approaching her last days.Poor little Jannie did not get half th e credit she deserves from us.I ought to tell Penrod."

"No no better not.You said you would not, h e'll run amuck in the Glandelinian camps and do so h orrors that h e'll sure get caught "Cath erine exclaimed in terror."I know Penrod once said even when he did not know h e was your broth er and you were only his friends"H e'd torture the person who ever did harm to ay on any one of you.Don't think I wantto sheild Manley God forgive me if I'm so foolish indeed I'd cry happily if I h eard h e was gone forever--h is record as a Gladelinian general was never th e fairest, even you and your sisters, may even your good brothers, and even your fath er would not like to see the blackest pages about t hat man."

"Manley you mean!"

"I do."

Joices face was crimson with shame and resentment against Mahey and in her eye was th at peculiar gleam which so bewildered and confounded th ose on whom it fellThe fair structure she had built about her countrys condition was tottering to atoms but she would struggle bravely to keep it t ogether as long as possible and she replied;?;?;?;

"If t here are pages so black in Manleys life do not show th em to me and do not mention h is hane again name again.H e is th e worse enemy of my father whom I and my sisters love so dearly.H e was kind to me and my sisters always- and I and th ey will stay by h im always no matter what Manley or h is Confederates will try to do.But you have not finished.I want to know just how Jannie saved my sister Jannie from dying."

So Catherine went on ad told of the long sad hours when th e dying litt le Vivien Girl lay with Jannie prayed over her, when finally Angeline had said;

"I believe it is all over Cath erine.I believe I'm going home to Jesusvwhose arms are around me so t hat I am not afraid.Tell t h em at home and my sisters when th ey are found that I was neverthel ss so happy and then so unhappy, and because I am o oh so good death has no terror for me.Tell th em I seem to hear my sisters singing as th ey used to sing in the beautiful Catholic Ch urch in Marcudian and the summer winds blows in and out, and brings the perfume of the p ond lilies with it, and the river flows on and on amid the gras t green meadows--away away just as I am floating floating so quietly upon the sea of eternity, where the lilies are fairer and sweeter th an t h ose which lift t h eir white heads to the sunshine in the ponds.Ad now Cath erine bring Jannie closer so I can kiss her once more for strengt strength h as failed me and the doctor said I probably won't live th rough the night ."I obeyed and brought Jannie t oo her and she kissed th e pale lips tenderly, and th en as your sisters whc then had returnd f a feared the worse, well you know the rest of t he story.You still have Angeline thaks thanks t o poor little Jannie though I don't know how she did it."

Th ere was a fresh burst of tears and sobs from Joice as she listened to the story and an increase of love for Jannie and Catherine, and when it was finished she threw her arms around Catherins neck and nearly strangled her with kisses as she said;

"I and my sisters love you and Jannie more than ever now th at I know h ow good and true you two were tohmy sister."After she was free from t h e Princess she went rapidly on;

"Though your fath er was t h ere with Angelin all the time, I did not know where your two grown brothers were, for because of th e movements of the enemy th ey were never long in the same place, striking terrifif blows here and th ere and trying to advance to come to you but found too mu much opposition, and as we could not wait to hear from them, and as lots had to be done because of th e results of th e frightful batt le of Evangeline St Claire or Trinoque, I did not know what to do, yet your fat h er as you know took t he matter in hand and th ings turned out more h appily t h an any on could ever suspect.So and was the trepid event t hat your fat h er has never come near Evangeline St Claire ever since."

"And Jannie was responsible for the fact that Jack Evans rescued me ad my sisters."

"Yes."Someh ow or other she discovered where you had been taken and your sisters too.H e rescued you and brough t you and your sisters back."Catherine replied who did not look at her now but shut her eyes and leaned wearily back in her chair while for some reason or other h er face grew scarlet and then turned ashem e asha ashen pale, and Joice never never dreamed of the chasm wh ich she leaped in silence or of bitter fury against Manley which brough t t h ose livid spots to t h e face of Catherine so said finally;

"I am so weak, and telling all this tires me so."but Joice was not yet satisfied and h er next question was!!!!!!!

"What did fath er say when Evans told him what had happened."

Cath erine did not immediately reply to th is but sat with her hands lockee locked toh together, ad a look upon her face as if she were living over some painful scene."

"Tell me h ow did he act!What did h e say!"Joice repeated, and th en with a smile of irony and bitt erness Catherine answered;

"H e swore to it or made a vow that when th e proper time came You Angeline, znand Jannie vivien will by h is efforts kill Manley in ambush."

"Kill Make Manley in ambush.Oh -h -h t h is is terrible, impossible"Joice exclaimed as h er face grew very red.But she was too brave to let Catherine see h ow she was surprised and shocked, and she continued;

"Yes I or any of my sisters would give anyth ing to do so if we had th e chance, it would be a sin for us not t o if we saw th e opportunity and skiped it.I can understand h ow a man like my fath er must have suffered when we suffered for h e always loved me and my sisters most dearly.I am sure that some day Manley will rueth e day h e made us suffer as he did and probably will yet .H ow long did you sty stay with her at Evangeline St Claire and why did you leave after Angeline got batt er!Was it t hat duty impossible to avoid callnd you!"

"Yes important dut y did call me it was Adeldefoh, he needed my help and t here fore I had to leave, but I saw you and your sisters sometime afterwards in your spying work with in th e fo foe lines."

"I remember it, a dignified girlscout came one day when I and my sisters were disguised as child slaves, ad surprised us by kissing and crying over us, and gave us some bon bons which was a surprise t o us it being done what we th ough t was a Gladelinian girlscout, ad yet t h at was you."Joice said, and Catherine assented, while Joice continued;

"And you stayed so long inside th e Glandelinian armies, sent us and our generals lots of informat ign, and yet never let us know or brough t Jannie to us, and oh Catherine when I found her up in t h at old Glandelinian camp shack again and though t she was again captured and a slave when in fact she too was only there to help you, and she told you of me and my sist r sisters, did you know then who were we were despite our disguises."!

"Yes I know"was th e reply and Cath erine went on;

"You know and never tried tosee me and my sisters!Th at is very strange.And did any of t h e Glandelinian generals know, when Jannie was at a supposed to school with us and afterwards while we po ed as child slaves!Did Manley know she was Jann ie!"

"No fort unately for you her and me he did not, itwould have been out dest ruct ion if he had"Catherine replied"and lest h e s and his generals should find it out and discover us I skipped from Manleys army and took her to south ern gal varin in, and for your sakes and hers and mine ad t h e enemy would not suspect anyt h ing tried to cut off all intercouse between you.H er letters t o you and your sisters I did not post and yours to her t with hold.You remember you did not h ear from h er for mont h s.It seemed a very mean thing for me t o do but God help you and us had I let t h e correspondence go t h rough .Manley looked at all sorts of mails that came th rough and had all sort s of codes examined by letter writi writ ing experts.Therefore you may have been h urt when you did not hear for mont hs."

"Yes we though t it strange."Joice replied.I and my sisters talked about it and wondered wh ere th e lett ers went but we never suspected you, but if it was so necessary I must say it was or would have been a very mean thing for you to do h ad you let t hem go t h rough .For not letting t h em go through you did wisely."Manley would have overhauled us in no t ime.Why should we h owever be in such unseen danger!" and Joice grew more a earnest in her mann er. "You may as well tell t h e trut h for I am resolved to wring it from you, and I will not t-ll "Mildred or any one else with or and neit H er will my sisters. "You had done somet h ing t o incur th e great enmance from Manley; now and for your own protection t ell me what was it ."ou can save us and we can save you! For th e sake of all of us I insist upon knowing."

"I cann ot tell you noth ing, othing now you could not und it."Cath erine groaned."Manley was very proud, and I know h e knew th e doings of you and your sisters that is all everyt h ing I can tell you now.What I must not tell you I must tell your sisters.Th en you can explain it among yourselves and not accord ingly."

"And what was the reason why eft or we escaped with Penrod Manley accusin accuses us of kidnapping one of Glendelinins high est boyscouts, and whon you met us here you kept silent .Were you afraid th ere were too many secret agents of th e enemy watching you, and would assassinat e you if you were caught telling th ings!"

"Yes, yes you have guessed it."cat h erine said, quickly, as if relieved th at Joice had put so good a reason in her mind which of course would have been true .she was very tired and had borne so much th at it seemed t o her she could could bear no more and clasping her hands to her h ead, she said imploringly; "Leave me now please princess; th ere is nothing more to tell you, Violet herself must know it all and th en Angelina and you three can tell t he rest of your sisters.Oh Princess make everything as easy as you can for little Jannie.Don't let any harm come to her what ever happens.You'll find out she's worth the world to you and your sisters for nobody not even Penrod--forgive me) did as much for you and your sisters as she did.If anyth ing h appened to h er I could not bear that .She's so good, so true and hat es t o see you and your sisters suffer as you didsshe feels the same as if she was your sister.Go now and leave me t o interview your sister Violet.I believe --i I th ink--yes I think I am sure the whole of your enemies is going mad against you and you mus t find out t hese th ings and save yourselves if possible."

Joice looked at her in surprise.

"There is something else"she thought "something beh ind which she has not told, and if she will not tell me th en I mean to let Violet know what it is, But I myself will leave her now"and taking Cath erines hot hand in hands in h ers, she said very kidly"Good bye Cath erine; I am going but another time you iwill I h ope help us through th e unseen danger."

Then pr pressing her h and to her lips, she ran down the stairs t o Violet and her sisters, who were waiting most anxiously for her. Then for a full half an hour aft er Joice came down and jejoined her sist r sisters and Angelinia Aronburg, Violet and her sisters all sat motionless motionless, Violet with her head heavy bent down, thinking of all th e incidents of her past life and th at of her sisters as far as she remembered as connected with that sad day and wit h Evans and Jannie, and recalling here and there certain acts which viewed in the new light shed upon them seemed both plain and mysterious.Buzzing th rough Violets brain, and almost driving her mad, was th e same suspicion which had at times so disturbed Joice and her ot h er sisters, and which had caused Penrod to go away to again assume the role as Adaldolph, but like Joice and her sisters she fought it down.It was for poor Cath erine upstairs, th at her h eart was aching sd, and the hot blood pouring so swiftly th rough her litt le veins. To lose Cath erine even by th e illness threatening her who was so good and who had always been so good a playmate, would be t errible.And yet that girlscouts life since she entered th e spy service had been for over two years been one of concealment, for which of cou course she could see perfect reasons.That given to Joice however was not t he t rue reason.Th ere was something else"and if she can't tell it t o my sister Joice I must know what it issshe thought""even if it kills me."

Mumbling some something to her sisters in English she start ed to her feet at last and forgetting how weak and sick Cath erine was, she went up half way on t he steps and after hesitating a moment called;

"Catherine dear, can you come down now or shall I come up-.!"

"Th e voice was not t he same which Catherine knew as Violets'.There was a fear hardness and a little sternness in it which boded no good to some purpose.

Catherine though t "She will wring it from me.Well no matter.It will be bett er for h er perhaps but if secret spies were in this room and we knew it not--"andca mortal terror took possession of it.

"I say CatCatherine dear, will you come down please, or shall I come up!" came again from violet, a little more sharply this time, and now Catherine replied;

"Oh Violet, Violet, not yet--not yet. Wait a little longer.I have been so t ired and worried.Wait a while before you come dear Violet."

Th ere was a word bf pathos in those words"dear Violet" --pat hos and pleadings both as if even a moth er were asking mercy from her child.And some h ow or ot h er Violet recognized the meaning, and th ough her h eart soft ened and relented she was neverth eless determined to find out.Indeed she could not understand h erself, or define th e strange feeling which had taken possession of her and was uring her and her sisters on to know what it was th at Cath erine know so well, and which could aid th em so successfully. But she did t not go upishe waited a while, and going to th e kitchen she and some of her sisters prepared a tempting dinner, for themselves and th eir sisters and Gertrude and Mildred and a part of which Violet arranged neatly on a t ray, and then took up to t he room, where Catherine Lee stil sat, just as Violet had left her, her face as white as marble, her eyes blood shot and dim, and her whole attitude that of a guilty culprit awaiting its death sentence though she was guilty of no wrong what ever.Ad she indeed seemed to be awaiting hers; and when t h e first blow came in the person of beautiful little Violet, she seemed shriveled up in her chair and her head dropped upon her breast.But she did not speak, and when Violet drew a little table to her side, and placing placig the train t ray upon it poured out her h ot milk and and held it to her lips she swallowed it slowly and mechannically, as she did th e food pressed upon her.n

At last however she could take no more and putting up her hand she made a gesture of dissent, and whispered faintly;;;

"Enough.I'm no more hungry ."

How sick and crushed she looked.But because of the news which must be learned poor Violet could not spare her, and when after seeing to it that the orderly took the dinner away, she returned to Catherine, and sat down where Joice had sat and said;;

""No please Catherine dear tell me."

" "Tell you what!"Catherine asked, and Violet, replied;;;

"For our sakes and your sake so we can do something to avert the dan ch danger tell me the whole truth, every word of it, as you did not tell it to Joice."

"What did I tell her."Catherine said it in a bewildered sort of way., as if the events of the last few hours w r were really a blank to me.

"You told her that you really were Catherine Lee our former loving playmate" Violet began, and Catherine interrupted her with;

"And I am princess Violet, that is the whole blessed truth.I am Catherine Margaret Lee but in my spying work I changed my name to Christienia Francis."

"Yes I know "Violet returned."You even I supposed were compelled to fool us with regard to your name; and also you were forced to kept your identy a secret from everybody else, even when you seemed to know how much we wished to find you, and you a gave her as reason that you feared l st secret Glendelinian spy agents gurmen and spies and detectiv es and secret service agents would assassinate you incold blood if you revealed to us the dangers we are in."

"Yes, that's it, that's it Viol t."Catherine gasped, as she clutched at the skirt of Violets gown and rubbed it caressingly.

"Catherine"Violet said;; and now her voice was low and stern this time;"That excuse might be doing for some occassions, but not for me who know all our past life.Don't become a coward or we'll disband you.You ought to know that there is something queer about me and my sisters for we have witnessed it ourselves. Those who attempt to do us body or other harm never come to luck, those who have befriended us wone wonder why the enemy can't even touch them.Therefore there is no excuse for you who also have done more for us than anybody elset to be afraid of enemy agents or spies if you even do give information for we'll beg on our bended knees to our Blessed Lord to afford you the same luck you have seen us have and those who befriended me and my sisters.There is something you are keeping from me, and which I must know.Therefore you have nl reason to be afraid to tell me, and besides I can sense it if a spy is hovering near and my instincts tells me none is within this room or outside in the hall either.I could see by the very thoughts of the guards outside of your door that any one who tries to pass them unannounced is doing the stunt of "How to keep from growing old." So there is no fear.Tell me.What is it.Why were you first afraid to let Joice and my sisters and me and Penrod know who you were."

"There is nothing nothing more that I can remember--believe me Violet, nothing-- nothing that you would care to know, if you do you can't stand it." Catherine said, still caressing the little gown, as if she would thus appease her princess friend, who continued;

"I s Yes there is something, you must remember it, there has been a something since I or my sisters can remember.Angelinia Aronburg said you were sssttt shadowed by some secret and yet most dangerous of all Glendelinian spies Nero Fania.I see it now, it must be true, your sts strange fits of abstraction, your moods of sadness and melancholy, ammounting almost to childish insanity, and which have increased to frequency since we cam came back to this part of the christian army and i met with our cousin Angelinia Aronburg again.The money you recieved at stated times by Mr Smith in Chicago Ill was from my own Fathers own will for your services to him and us, was it not!!!!!"

"Ye--es" come in a whisper from Catherines white lips, and then Violet went on;

"You must then have always known his whereabouts no matter what army my father commanded or whatever he was doing.When we were situatied a little longer in Evangeline St Claire after Angelinas red recovery through little Jannie and Jack Evans our best man friend had rescued us from the foe and saved Jennie our best sister from that snake Augustinie St Claire you know Emperor Vivien was in the battle smitten city too, and did you ever see him face to face!"

"Not then.I never had the opportunity, though he wrote often to me asking why I did not come and see him.He liked me so well because I spurned the wicked Glandelinian cause like a mad dog"Catherine answered energetically, and Violet continued;!!!"

"But you knew he was in the city nevertheless, and when little Jennie came into see me and my sisters that day, when for fun I wore her large showy scarlet cloak, and she my faded plaid which I then wore as a disguise, you knew who she was and yet did not speak ."?

"Yes I know who she was, and God knows I did not dare speak as I recognized two Glandelinian secret service agents disguised as two christian generals" moaned Catherine, and violet went on;

"And when I and my sisters went to a girlscouts school with her and we were the instructors despite our young age and size, and father helped us and paid our bills as we had no money then when in the army, and when I and my sisters visited her at general Jack Evans headquarters, and then often at my cousins too, you knew and did not tell me and my sisters.But did you tell my father and mother and also Evans.?did they know who Jennie was--know of my fathers intentions tward her recreation."

"No he did not"Catherine replied"How was it possible . I don't know why, those two spies seemed to be everywhere, and there was no opportunity for him to know. They were looking for Jennie but did not recognize us and for her sake we didn't dare even speak of her or mention her name as we had no proofs against the spies to cause their apprehension.The same ones are secretly shadowing me and you and your sisters and are so cleverly disguised that I alone only know them now."

"Catherine"Violet began, after a moments pause"In spite of those "Butt and Jeff "spies who really fear us, why did you really wish to hide from me and my sisters who you really were?I and my sisters have a right to know.I and my sisters have always been your faithful friends, and yet in your fear do not trust that we can protect you.If there has been anything wrong I and my sisters can share it with you.If you know those spies despite their disguise secretly expose them to me and I or my sisters will put them out like two candle lights. Anyway I would rather know the exact truth than think the horrible things I or my sisters may think, if you do not tell me or my sisters. nd why did you take another name than your own, and why did you not reveal yourself to me and my sisters, but l ave us to group in the dark, for what we so badly wished to find.?Tell me please.I insist upon knowing.If you don't we'll arrest you Catherine.It is your duty to reveal thi[illegible]ountry.". this if you loveyour country and us."

"Driven to the last extremity, and forgetting herself in her distress, Cat Catherine replied;

"It would not have been dangerous to me to do it, it would have been fatal to you and your sisters, and therefore I had sworn not to do it--had taken a just solemn vow never to let you or your sisters to know who I was untill the dangerousstorm blew over."

"Had made a vow!Had sworn not to do it!Who made you swear!Who required that vow from you.Was it Rodney Graves! "Violet asked, and Catherine replied;

"Because of the Mconce of Manley curse him in his cause, yes Mr Rodney Graves. He said he knew if I revealed myself to you and your sisters that would be your fatal ruin.He for your sakes wrung the vow from me ; he was scared almost to death for your safty, and even Dargar paid me money to keep the vow; he ------"

She stopped here, appalled by the looks on Violets face---a look which made her cower and tremble as she had never trembled and cowered before .

Wr Wrenching her dress away from the hands which still held it, and drawing herself back, Violet rose from her chair and stood with folded arms looking down upon the girlscout V o Violet demanded;

"Tell me what you mean Catherine and this instant!You have said very strange things to me Catherine and I am surprised, shocked.You have talked of ruin to us if you revealed yourself, and money paid for silence, and as my countrys cause is at stake and our lives are menaced by a secret danger we have a right to know what you mean.Consider Catherine the penalty if you do not tell me.And you must tell me too, before I or my sisters look on any ones faces again .What is it Catherine!.What was the secret between you and my father and Rodney Graves. What had they to do with us and the secret!Or what have "you" done which you would hide from me and my sisters!Speak and I will forgive you even if it brings disgrace to us.If you do not tell, and suffer me and my sisters to liv on with these horrid suspicions torturing me or them to madness, not only can I never touch your hand in love or think of you as we have done but we'll discharge you from the regiment of girlscouts."

"Do not please Princess, do not drive me to tell, for the telling will involve so much-so much, something that you will certainly regret to hear.Some will be terribly disgraced, and others benefited, do not make me tell, please do not."

Sh She stretched her hands tward Violet, who frowned and stood immovable as a rock and said with a hard ring in her voice;

"Unjust disgrace to me and my sisters I suppose.Well I and they can bear that than suspense and uncertainity."

"No Princess Violet, not disc disgrade to you or your sisters, thank Heaven not disgrace to you in the way you think for what should disgrace you."Catherine cried.

And with this horrid fear lifted from her mind, Violet came nearer to Catherine and said still sternly;

"If there is no disgrace to me of my sisters then tell me at once what it is. I shall never leave this room till I know or till I'll have you crossed examined and grilled if you don't."

"Then listen."

And raising herself erect in her chair(not tear) while the blood came surging back to her face, and her eyes flashed with the fire of a maniac, Catherine continued;

"Listen but sit down first.The story is long, and surely you will need all your strength before it is true and God knows you'll wish you never heard what I'm going to tell you you'll not stand the shock, but you made me.sit down"and she pointed to a chair into which Violet sank mechanically while a strange prickling sensation ran through her frame, and she felt a sickening dread of what she was to hear.

"I am ready Catherine"she said, but her voice was the faintor now of the two, for Catherines was calm and steady as she commenced the story, which she told in all its details, beginning at the day when she first saw Rodney Graves.For a time the story was pleasant enough to listen to, for Catherine de dwelth upon the goodness and sweetness of Angeline Vivian even in her condition of sad illness, , who trusted her so implicitly; but at last there came a change, and Violets eyes grew large and dark with horror and pain, and her cheeks paled as she listened to a tale which curdled the blood in her veins and seemed turning her into stone.,without the wind was beating in gustly gales against the windows, indeed the wind which had risen since noon roared fiercely down the chimney and shook every loosened blind and casement, but was unheard by the little Princess who with a face like the faces of the dead,,, and hands locked so tightly together that the blood came through the flesh where the nails were pressing, sat immovable listening to the story told her by the girlscout, whose eyes were closed as she talked, and whose words flowed on so rapidly as if to utter them with were a relief and cast eased the terrible fear which had k gnawed at her h eart so long. Had she looked at the little girl s before her she might have paused for there was something awful in the expression of Violets face as she listened untill the terrible story was ended,, when with a cry like one in mortal pain, she threw up both her little hands, and fell heavily to the floor, while purple spots came out upon her beautiful little face, and the white froth flaked with blood, oozed from her livid lips. From knowing the secret of Catherine Lee Violet had not been able to stand the shock.

Angelinia Aronburg then w was sent to see Timothy Groveton while Violet and her sisters remained behind.she drove or rode rather to the headquarters of Timothy Groveton, to whom she communicated the results of theinterview of the two Vivian Girl Princesses with Catherine Lee, telling him the reason given by the girlscout for her silence, and profession yet not to believe it. But Tim believed it was so and then Angelinia Aronburg said;

"It was very foolish in her I supposs then, for if possible I love Violet and her sisters the better now, and also Catherine for all she may have suffered for their account, but nevertheless there is no accounting for the fancies of some people no matter how good they are. And besides as Joice told me Catherine seems very much broken, and does not wish for some reason or other to be questioned and withheld a lot of the information Joice was seeking, and she certainly would be questioned even grilled by emperor vivian or by our officials if they knew or suspected what we do, so we must keep our own council.I can trust you Timothy Dear...."?

Tim bowed and looked searchingly at her to see if no other thought had been suggested to her by Joice as to her interview with Catherine. But if there had been she gave no sign of it(don't take a fit) and her face was nevertheless bright and dh cheerful, as she said good bye and rode back to her own headquarters, where she sat down to write to "[illegible]" "Adelde fob" who had left general Manleys army and was journeying on tward Gen ral Bickwells, where she was to direct her letter and in it in code english she asked him please to come back for the sake of his sisters as they needed him badly.

"It was about ten oclock that morn, by the time the long letter was finished, and as the windstorm had by this time ceased, and there was a prospect of cooler weather as the wind had shifted to the southwest, Angelinia Aronburg determined to take the letter to the military post office herself, and then call upon Minnie Saunders and her two sisters, and to return to where Violet and her sisters were. Catherines pale face had haunted her all the time since, and she longed to see her again and assure her of her faith in and love for her. Depositing her letter in the office, and saluting to Tim who happened to be riding past in the company street with a squadron of boy and girlscouts, she rode next to the head quarters of the Saunders girls, but was told by one of the door guards that the three had gone to see if Mildred Maxwell was there at her headqu arters more than an hour ago, and had not yet returned.

"Very we,l well I will go there too(not a jwe jaw)" Angelinia said, and she soon drew up her horse before he the headquarters, where she saw to hersurprise and some alarm that a doctors army gig was standing.

"Doctor Henry here! Catherine sure must be worse. I am glad I came." Angelinia thought, as she went rapidly up the walk and entered unannounced.

"How is poor Catherine Lee, and where is Violet, and her sisters?" she asked of Mildred Maxwells aidedecamp, whom she met in the hall, and whom she recognized as one of her own bodyguards.

"My goodness Miss Aronburg don 't you know! Have you not heard? Violet has had a dreadful apopletic fit or something, and is dying." was th e girlscouts reply, and with a shriek of terror and surprise, Angelinia wildly fled past her up the stairs to Catherines room, where she paused a moment on the threshold to unwillingly take in the scene which m t her aston ished and horrified view. By a big window, which was raised half way up to admit the air, the tall doctor stood, with a grave troubled looks, while near him sat Catherine Lee with a face indeed which might have been cut from stone, so rigid and immovable was every feature, with her eyes deep set in her little head, with dark circles around them seemed like coals of fire as they turned upon Angelinia, who shuddered with fear at their awful expression. At the sight of her the girlscouts lips moved; but made no sound----on ly her finger pointed to the bed where Violet lay heavily breathing but with no other sign to show that she was living, and her sisters kneeling about the bed with frightened faces. She looked like one dying and had looked thus too since the moment she fell to the floor at the end of Catherines story.

For nearly five minutes or more Catherine Lee had been as helpless and almost as insensible as Violet; in fact she almost giggled so hopless hopeless seemed th e situation, then rousing herself with a great effort, she knelt beside the unconscious princess, and lifting her head covered the white face with a storm of kisses and tears, and called upon her every tender epithet to open her eyes and speak, if only to curse the Glandelinian devils who had wrought so much harm. But Violets ears were deaf a i alike to words of love and pleading, and she lay so still, and looked so awful, with that bloody froth about her lips, that at last in wild affright and horror, Catherine started shrieking for help, which threw a panic into her sist Violets sisters so that for a moment they were horrified and as immovable as statues, and one of the girlscout leaders who was at the tent door not far away talking to Jack Saunders and Joan, was startled by a succession of scr ems for help, each louder then the preceding or preceding and which came exactly from Mildred Maxwells headquarters. she ran tward the place as fastvas she could do followed by Jack, and a whole swarm at once with guns at the ready for they feared some on e within was being attacked by a Glandelin ian spy. Entering at a rear door, and following the direction of the sounds, she came to the chamber where Violet lay upon the floor, with Catherine Lee bending over her and shrieking for aid, for by while by other sounds Violets sisters were now evidently come up the steps followed by Mildred Maxwell as fast as any one can get up steps going two at a time. For a moment the girl stood at the threshhold tran sfixed a with horrorvat the sight of Violet. Then to get h others to help her lift Violet up and carry her to a bed, and send for an army doctor, was the girls first work, and then she tried desperately what she could do to restore the unconscious girl, sensibly keeping her sisters from coming too near untill something could be done. Poor Violet finally only moaned faintly in token that she knew what was passing around her, while her sisters were scared almost to frenzy by the bloody froth still around her mouth. The Doctor through some mishap in coming was delayed longer than usual, but when questioned by the military physician, who was greatly shocked and puzzled by the strange cause, whon he couldn't understand it when it is said she was angel possessed, Catherin e Lee said nothing, but one of the girlscouts declared that Violet, and even her sisters had not seemed well for some time--had overworked in their military duty, she thought, and that as Catherine had told her h ad suddenly fallen from her chair while talking to her after dinner. This was the explanation she could give, and as Catherine Lee was too shocked now to speak, and more perplexed than he had ever been in his life, the physician believing that some of the secret enemies had done something to her unseen, hent his most desperate energies to help the beautiful little Princess, who it seemed to him was dying for the most powerful restoratives and stimulants failed to pro duce any effects whatever, or to move so much as an eye lid, while her sisters looked as if they would go mad. It was just then that Minnie Saunders came in. he had remembered some map that Mildred Maxwell had said she had for her, and had come again to see about it. Finding no one below, and hearing the sound of voices holott above, she called called loudly at the foot of the stairs;

"catherin dear, Catherine dear. What ails you all up there. Is any one sick!"

"Hush Violet is sick very sick" the girlscout whose name was Jennie Angelinia Krupkin answered, going to the head of the stairs, and putting her fingers to her l p lips. At the soundof Minnie Saunders familiar voice a tremor seemed to creep all over Violet, whose beautiful head moved a little, and whose eyes partly unclosed as the girlscout leader entered the room, and in great concern, asked what was the matter.

"I felt deathly sure ailed her early this morning." she said sadly "For she did not appear natural at all, and her hands and face were like ice. Maybe it is because Penrod had gone away and she felt it ever since. Have you tried a mustard paste the whole length of of her backbone. My sister sometimes when shocked by battle noise too loud for her sometimes had such fainting spells, and that always brought her too."

Minnie was standing at the foot of the bed, as she talked, and when she mentioned her sister Anna, Violets eyes unclosed again, and her lips moved as if she would speak. Then she was quiet and did not stir again, untilll Angelinia Aronburg came in, and at sight of her and Violets sisters weeping exclaimed with great fear in her voice;

"Oh what in the world is it p leased! What is it. violet, Violet. what has happened to her."

At the sound of h r voice the same tremor which hadrun through Violets frame when Minnie Saunders came in, returned, and this time with great intensity. There was a faint moaning cry, which sounded like "Angelinia-oh Angelinia" and stepping forward the physician said;

"Speak to her again Miss Aronburg. She seems to know you, but not her sisters, and we must rouse you or she will die."

Thus importuned Angelin ia Aronburg, a great fear tearing at her heart, muttered a prayer and ke knelt beside her cousin, covering her face with hands and kisses, and saying to her softly;;;;;;

"Dear Violet do you know me! I am Angelinia Aronburg, who they call "Gertrude Angeline. Speak to me if you can, and tell me what is the matter. What made you so sick all of a sudden!"

"No, no, oh no. Please go away. I cannot bear it it is killing me. The presence of everybody but hurts all of you go away." Violet said as she tried to disengage her hand from Angelinia. And those were the only words she spoke for several days during which she lay perfectly still, never moving hand or foot but apparently conscious most of the time of what may have been passing around her and the sound of continuous distant battle around and near Ophelia which had continued to rage night and day since it started, and always seeming happier when Minnie Saunders came in with her caresses, and words of sympathy and love and age agitated when Angelinia Aronburg, or even her own sisters came in also with their caresses and words of sympathy love and sorrow. It was a most singular case and greatly puzzled the doctor and all others, who on the afternoon of the second day said to Angelinia Aronburg;

"It really is some mental shock and not a bodily ailment. Do you know if anything happened to disturb her, or that she recieved some terrible news that shocked her for it is not caused by over fatigue for she was not fatigued at all. I know. some sudden shockcking news produced this utter and sudden prostration?"

Angelinia hesthesitated a moment looked sharply at Joice who then replied herself; "She as well as I did hear something which surprised her greatly, but I should hardly think it sufficient to affect her so much, and the princesses then looked sharply and queerly at Catherine.

"Temperaments differ." the doctor replied, while Angelinia Aronburg thought to herself;

"Can it be possible that poor Violet takes it to heart, and does she fear of some impending disaster a fear of such disaster which prostrates her. I It shall not and I will prove it to her."

Ever since however the day Angelinia Archburg had taken up her abode f of which she was reallly the head, for either Violets sisters or even Catherine did nothing but sit by Violet, and watch her with a pertinacy pertinacity and earnestness which seemed to annoy the sick girl, when she came to realize what was passing around her and made her try to escape the steady gaze of Catherines strange eyes always watching her.

always hawk like watching her and her sisters.

"Catherine please do not look at me."she said at last that afternoon."I command you to move back please pl a please or move out of the room where I cannot see you."

Without a word Catherine obeyed and withdrew herself into the shadow, but did not leave the room as commanded, as except at intervals to eat and sleep, and so did Violets sisters be commanded to go out and thus the whole charge of the headquarters fell upon Angelinia Aronburg, who had a wonderful tarlent for housekeeping and for nursing, and sew to everything.Much of her time however was pressed with

Violet on whom she lavished so much love that her caresses seemed at t imes to worry the prostrated and sick princess, who would moan a little and shrink away from he re..verybody was worried too for the doctor had said oncel

"She'll never recover. I'm positive of that and can prov prove it.Only a miracle can even save her life."

"What is it Violet darling?Do I tire you?Do you want to see your sisters?"Angelinia asked her, that evening, when they were alone for a few moments, and Violet had seemed uneasy and very restless.For a moment Violet did not answer, but lay with her eyes shut,while the great tears rolled down her cheeks; then suddenly raising herself in her bed, she threw her arms around Angelinia's neck and sobbed;

"Oh Angelinia, Angelinia, you do not know, I cannot tell you how much I love you, more than I ever did before, and yet I am so sorry too, but you will love me and my sisters always, whatever happens, won't you.?"?.??.??

"Why yes, yes Violet dear.what in the world can happen, and why shouldn't I love you and your dearest sisters, who are a almost as broken down over your condition as to be prostrated too."and Angelinia held the b eut beautiful little golden head against her bosom, and kissed the quivering lips.."Violet"she continued;"Do you feel so badly because of Catherines strange silence.She has explained it also to me and I am satisfied.That puts me on guard against the dangers that menaces you.I've sent lots of spies to try and capture Starring even in the foo lines.Don't let that trouble you any more. No others besides your sisters and ourselves need know who she is, and what she has told us.Once you will it, and then all caution will be taken .All soldiers are at roll calls now and who don't answer to the name given out will be apprehended.So don't worry."

"I know, know I know" violet replied almost as if in a panic"but Angelinia "You and Joice told me you believed there was something else-- --- somecther reason .... and you yourself do not to also write to Chicago Ill, in Americaide you mean it still!Will you try to find it out?"

"I have already wrote and recieved the answer this afternoon but did not read it yet."Angelinia answered"Just for the sake of the course.I have the letter with me written in English.I shall make no bad use of it I'll assure you.I shall not let any Glandelinian spies harm you and neither will Timothy Groveton .."

"No, no, you must not seek you must not seek to know, pl ase give the letter to me or destroy it."violet exclaimed with an energy."There was something; something dreadful, I have wrung it from her.She did perfectly right to keep silent.I should not have dared try to make her tell me.She ought not to have spoken no matter what I said or threatened her with.And Angelinia if you love me promise me you will never try to find out;; never read that letter you received.Promise me or I shall certainly die."

She had disengaged herself from Angelinia's embrace but was sitting upright in bed swith a look upon her face likeone who is really losing her senses.It startled Angelinia who answered without hesitation,;;;;

"I promise.I will not read the letter, I will not let any one see it, but I won't give it up either.It is best I destroy it.But maybe you will tell me sometime.Will you Violet?"

"N ver Never never so help me heaven,"was the emphatic reply, as Violet fell back among her pillows wholly exhausted.For a moment Angelinia stood looking curiously at her--, then seating herself upon the side of the bed and taking Violets hand she said;

"You make me repent my promise made without stopping to consider, for it is not from curiousity, but only that the danger you and your sisters are in is very great.But I shall not read the letter do not fear, and I will burn it before your eyes before I leave to get your supper.But only tell me this---was it anything very dreadful which your dear friend Catherine did?"

"No"violet replied"It's something dreadful Manley and Gerald Starring have already done and which disaster is coming to us unless I and my sisters flee to Emperor Vivians army at Big Girl Knool, which Catherine said she'll force us to do if necessay at the point of guns.It is very dreadful--it would make you hate the Glandelinians and Manley worse than ever.For my sake don't talk to me any more about it it scares me and makes me sick.We're done for.Don't mention it again.when I get better I'm with my sisters goingto take all you girl and boy scouts and fight our way out of the trap."

"But tell me one thing more."Angelinia persisted"I for your sake and your sisters have a right to know.It will enable me to help you.Id your father involved in it?"

She held her breath for the answer, answer, and looked earnestly at Violet, whose eyes grew larger and brighter, and whose face was scarlet as she answered at last;

"At first he was but for the last, the thing whis which is to happen, Father with his big armies and clever generals take can take care of himself, it is mother for whom we fear most."

"Thank God for that information as I myself with Tims help can immediately avert it."Angelinia Aronburg exclaimed almost joyfully, while her tears fell in torrents."Oh Violet, you don't know what a load you have taken from me--a great load I did not mean any one should ever suspect because Violet--- I don't mind telling you----I've had some dreadful thoughts about what may happen to not only you and your sisters but of your mother, for I feared to get even with you Princesses the Glandelinian authorities might strike at her.Forgive me violet do if I have to reveal this unpleasant truth"she continued, as she saw a strange look leap into her cousins eyes as look which she construed into one of resentment toward her for having given such hurtful information, but which arose from a widly different reason, and was borne of bitter shame for the enemy, and a great pity for all the victims of so fierce an enemy as Glandelinia.

"I've nothing to forgive at least in you or all Abbe Abbieanniana."violet said as she covered Angelin ia's hands with kisses and tears, which fell so fast and so long, that "Gertrude"became alarmed, and tried to comfort and qui t quiet her.

"Don't Violet don't"she said"It distresses me to see you so disturbed.If Father or mother or Penrod and our two loyal brothers can be saved I and my sisters do not care what happens to ourselves, but we could not bear to lose any of those whom we love and honor so much."

"You never shall, darling, never never."Violet, exclaimed, and Angelinia little dreamed how much the princess wasthirsting from her, or how terrible was the temptation to really reveal Catherines story, which for one brief moment almost overcame her. But she put it down and in her h eart registered a far more solemn vow than her lips had uttered, that never through any inexcusability of h ers should Angelinia Aronburg know what she and Joice knew, and what had affected her so pow powerfully,taking away all her strength and seemingly all her vitality so d that she did not rally or take the nligh test interest in anything about her.

However Angelinia Aronburg was a good nurse nevertheless,though she was only a little girl, and she decided to see that everything was quiet here, with nothing to excite her, and she was determined to take care of her all alone."You"she said to Catherine Lee herself"Will you go to the building and Mildred will give younall the assistance required,"and Catherine assented in silence, for she knew that for some reason or other her presence was a constant source of pain and excitement to Violet, who undoubtedly would improve more rapidly away from her.However Violets sisters not only insisted that Violet should be removed to their own headquarters, but as at first Angelinia demurred, doubting if the place was the spot to take her, and violet doubted too, Joice herself then made it a stern sharp command, thus her sisters carried their point, for in thin gs they know best they're bound to have their say, and Violet was borne off in triumph, leaving Catherine alone in Mildreds hea dquarters to combat her own misery as best as she could.,verything which love could devise or mon ey and militar military efforts do was done to make violet happy at her own headquarters.To comfort her Tim too was there.The sitting room and sleeping room across the hall from Angelinia's which were to have been Penrods if h e returned here before this army moved elsewhere were given to her, and all the rarest flow rs found in a greenhouse were brought to beautify them.And there the two girls alone took their meals, and sat and talked, or rather Angelinia talked, while Violet would listen with her hands folded listlessly together, and her eyes often times shut, while around her mouththere was a firm set expression, as if she were constantly fighting something back rather than listening to Angelinia Aronburg,, who chatted gayly on, telling how delighted it seemed to have violet and her sisters together there and Tim with them, and how she wished she could keep her always.

"You and your sisters Violet dear ought to just have a home like this forever, and this mad crazy war ought to be only a passing dream and not a reality.It sure suits you and your sisters better than this toilsome sad and bloody army affairs, where it is battle, battle, battle, and all other dreadful w - war horrors all the time, Angelinia said while they sai sat in the gathering darkness, with no light in the room, save that which reflected through the windows from big battle fires made in the far distance which glared up the skies fearfully.

"yes indeed"Angelini a Aronburg continued;"I believe you and your sisters would make much fitter mistresses of this place than any one else if we would never need to move again.You especially, for usually you are always so quiet, and din dignified, and like a little lady, and you and your sisters are only hot and impulsive, and do and say things which shock devils into insensibility when Glandelinians do such sinful things.You and your sisters are even ruling the nation while your father is doing all the fighting.Everybody loves him and you."

Violet did not reply,, but she nevertheless was glad that her companion could not see the pallor which by the stfo strong sick feeling at her heart, she knew was spreading over her face. Just then lights were brought in by the boy scout aide-de-camp Pierre, and in a moment the supper which the eight girls took together at that hour appeared,, and was arranged for Violet herself and Gertrude upon a little round little table which was drawn near to Violets bed.?!.:"

"This is in deed so nice" Angelinia Aronburg said "and carri a me back to four or five years ago, when we were still younger little girls and used to play at make believe. Do you remember it Violet.?.."

"Yes,yes, I remember, I have not forgotten nothing no connected with you and my sisters and also Catherine." Violet, replied . and Angelinia Aronburg went on;

"I made believe so often that you were I, and I was you, that I used at times to feel as it if it were real, and that my own rightful home was in some poor tenement district. And oh violet I once ha d a very strange dream, I dreamed that I was a t actually a child slave, ad had to work for a Glandelinian master, and even do all the work child slaves have to do...:"

"How did you like it Gertrude" Violet repeated.

""How did I like it." exclaimed Angelinia. "I did not like it at all. I rebelled against it and what the slaves had to go through with all my might. I thought I was working in some field with hardly no clothes on, and I dreamed I ran away and was persued and recaptured and was going to throw myself out of a window into a river to escape again, when one of your sisters awoke me and asked me what was the matter that I cried out so loud in my sleep. Still not half awake I told her I was a child slave working for Glandelinian officers, and going about half naked , and she could not pacify me untill she had really got me properly awake and then I realized the dream, and I grew calm and quiet. It was strange for me to have such a dream, when often I posed as child slaves and worked among them for the purpose to get information from the enemy was it not?"

Violet did not answer at once, but sat looking at Gertrude and also at her sisters while the drops of perspiration stood thickly on her forehead and about her mouth, and at last attracted Angelinia's notice//// L .

"What is it Violet dear at!" she said. "Are you too warm.? Let me open a window nearest to you and yo u'll get a nice little breeze ." "A

The wind window was opened, and wiping the drops of sweat away, Violet rallied and tried to seem cheerful and natural, though all the time there was a terrible pain tugging at her heart as she kept thinking whispering to herself; "Go help me to keep my vow."

Even a little later while supper was in progress in progress, Timothy Groveton called, and was admitted to violets bedroom (the room) He had seen her and her sisters often before before her illness, but had not seen her for a day or two since her illness, though he had sent to inquire for her several times, and heard various strange reports with regard to the cause of her sudden attack. Some of the girl scouts had told him that Violet had suffered from a sudden swooning fit, and then had been taken up for dead, and that overwork in her scouting activities with her sisters and loss of sleep (the peep do sheep) was the cause of it all. But shrewd and far seeing as he was Tim did not believe in the overwork and loss of sleep as Violet, and her sisters had not gone out on any scouting trips since Penrods departure. As nearly as he could calculate, the swooning spell had come on about two hours or more after Joices interview with Catherine Lee. Tim knew positively there had been ample time for Violet or any of her other sisters to see Catherine and demand an explanation, and that an explanation had been made either different from the one given to her sister Joice or that it was the whole throughout which not had not been revealed to Joice he did not doubt,, and he was scared, and very anxious for her sake and other reasons to see the girl and her grief stricken sisters who interested him nearly as mo much as they interested their brothers.

That Catherine had told something unusally shocking to Violet h e was sure, but how would the princess bear it, and what would be her attitude toward Glandelinia and her wicked cause, and what would her sisters and Angelinia Aronburg say or do if sh they knew what he suspected, and what he fully believed after he had been a few moments in the room and detected the new expression on Angelinia Aronburgs face, the new light and ineffable tenderness in her eyes when they rested on Angelin ia and also on her own sisters. And yet there was something in those eyes and in Violets manner which baffled the keen witted boyscout leader, who was accustomed to study the human face and learn what he wished to know by its varying expression s.

There was nothing about Violet indicative of humiliation or of shame neither of dread or fear. On the contrary it seemed to him that there was in her manner a certain reassurance and dignity he had never noticed before, and he studied her carefully and wondered if after all he was mistaken and the warnings of the spy clerk in X Chicago false. How inexpressibly sw eet and lovely Violet, and her sisters were, and for Violet, with just enough of invalid about her to make her all the more interesting and loved, and Timothy Groveton found it awfully difficult to decide which of the princesses pl as pleased or fascinated him more, Jennie or the rest of her sisters. All of th e seven were lovely beyond all description, and even even so was Gertrude Angelin a, who had a little resemblance of Jennie in her, and he was so much interested and attracted that it was very late when he at last said good night to the eight young girls, telling Angelinia Aronburg, and also Violet, and her sisters that he had already written to Penrod, who must be in some big Gl nd Glandelinian army by this time probably Manleys. For two weeks longer and tward the coming of Christmas Christmas Violet remained ill in her own headquarters, something like sometimes severely and dangerously ill and sometimes improving only to rep relasp again, and everything was done for her comfort that love and care could devise, but she did not seem any more well, nor was she any more happy, n either did her strength come back to her, it was hard to get her to even eat, and ev ryhody was dreadfully worried. And all this time too the long battle at Ophelia raged, each day growing more bloodier and fiercer. It was never now that Violet ever so much as smiled, even at Gertrudes liveliest sallies or jokes, even to say what Penrod once said about A persons face looking like a hot water bottles with warts on it did not so much as bring a smile, and there was upon her white face a look of inexpressible sadness that should not be there, as if there was a heavy pain in her heart of which if she could speak she would not tell. To her sisters and Angelin ia she was all sweetness and love, and Violets eyes would follow her cousin as she worked about the house, with an expression oin her own face which it was hard to fathom or explain, it was so full of tenderness, and pity too if it were possible to connect that word with a creature who usually was bright and merry but was not now since Violet was so ill from the shock. Tward Catherine Lee who came occasionally to see her, her manner was more friendly than usal, and kind and considerate but she said words to Catherine which no one else heard. It seemed that something had come between the Princess and Catherine, which even her sisters and Angelinia Aronburg noticed and commented on to Violet with her usual frankness.....!.

"Catherine acts as if she were afraid you won't do something she advises." she said to Violet one day, after Catherine had been and gone. "And she actually seems to start every time you spoke to her, and she watches you as if some dreadful evil may befall you. I hope Violet that there is not yet that dreadful danger lurking upon you and your sisters."

Angelinia then was plea i pleading that she should give in to Catherines advice and as she went on, Violet burst into a passionate fit of weeping.

"Thank you Angelinia" she said when she could speak "Thank you so much. It is hard to do as she suggests, even if you noticed it, but it is so hard to do it but she says just now it is safer for us to be in the enemys army in disguise than here and with her and you with us. But I hate to do such a thing for if chance i of discovery came there would be worse circumstances here. Poor Catherine. She has worried over us so much, I think she is not altogether right in her mind."

The next time Catherine came to their headquarters, she had no cause to complain because Violet might refuse, for even though far superior because she was a princess nevertheless Violets manner tward her was that of a di dutifu dutiful and affectionate child tward the mother it loves, and when Violet asked;

"Are you never coming to stay with us here Catherine;" she answered her;

"Yes to morrow or next day sure. I have left you too long already but my duty kept me away."

"And are you going to stay always------just the same for a long long time" was Violets next question, to which Catherine replied;

"Yes stay with you just t he same, and try to make you happy, but you must get better for my sake. It is too bad you made me tell you that. This would not have happened."

They were alone in violets room, when this conversation took place, and when Violet said what she did Catherine sank down on the floor at the side of the bed, and clasping her knees cried pitcously;;;;;;;;;;;;

"Oh Violet, my princess my friend. God will bless you for what you are doing for your country and Him. He'll make you well soon. I can see it in your face. Oh if I could do all what the enemy did, I would suffer torture for years and years. You and your sisters should not need to have gone through all this. My noble princess and your dear sisters, there are none in the world like you ".

And for this story at least she spoke contstly honestly and truly for surely the reader himself can say there have never been none like Violet, and her sisters who though the story found no room to mention it had ever since the war commenced converted into Christianity twenty million Glandelinian prisoners, and Violet knowin g what she knew, could for the love of her countrys cause and her sisters and Angelinia Aronburg keep silence, and resolutely turning her back upon a ll the luxury and ease of her own palace at Marcucian, go to the christian armies to risk all for countrys cause to live in far less pretentious places within t he armies, and continually take up the burnden of army life and all its terrors and hardships--take up the piles upon piles of dangerous military work always being assigned to them by their own wills, for their generals knew their their worth, and would go no where else but to them when in trouble. ven Violet and her sisters had been able to frustrate the enemy where their father and his best generals couldn't do a thing..ven Violet and her sisters had originated through their own plans the ornagnous bodies of christian boy and girlscouts which in whichever numbers the landelinian cavarly or infantry scout patrols dreaded a meeting with at any time and would flee from instead of fight .owever Violet was slow it seemed on the road of recovery, and yet Violet would have tried to leave her bed as she was firm in her determination to do her duty, but her determination no matter how strong could not enable her anything when she saw when she once tried she couldn't even stand up and fell down at the side of the bed and had to be replaced by two soldiers.Violet had been at or in this room for nearly three weeks, and during her illness had grown so accustomed to the friendly visitors who always came to see her, that the life seemed to belong to her, and was far more to her taste, than the hard perilous work of scouting and other military duties.It was hard to leave it all when she would be better-- and hard to lose the opportunity of ever seeing Penrod if he ever returned should she and her sisters goin go into the foe lines in disguise to flee the ever increasing secret unseen menance against her and her sisters, and hard to lose also the opportun ity of seeing Tim who had been at the house so often, and in whom she and her sisters always since they knew him had felt so deep an interest .

He had spent the whole evening with them, and at Joices earnest request,Jenn ie played and sang for him, and she and her sisters(except Violet sang , so sweetly and yet so sadly, while he listened enthralled and amazed as the clear tones of their rich childish musical voices more like little singing angels floated celestial like through the rooms, and Jennie's white hands fingered the keys as deftly and skillfully as any of her sisters couldvhave done. That Violet's sisters could sing and play was a strange sudden revelation to Timothy Groveton, who stood by Jennie's side, and turned the leaves for her.Then she played the march she and her sisters loved so much, called REPASZ A M MARCH OR BAND, which means "Remember Abbiecann". They even sang it knowing the words and it thrilled ev everybody in the room, and even despite her sad condition Violet even could not resist joining in .

"You have certainly given me a great pleasure."He said, when she at last left the pa piano and resumed her seat by the fire."This is the greatest surprise in my life for me.I did not suppose, did not even think;;;;;;------"

He did not fin ish the sentence, but stopped awkwardly, while Violet herself who sat up in bed looking like a little bed ridden angel, and who understood his meaning perfectly, finished it for him;

"You did not suppose"she said, almost protestingly to him"That any one of our Princely class could have any accomplishments save those of only spying on the enemy scouting and so on and those of the needle, and it is quap surprising.but any one can accomplish anything if they really love what they set out for. If you don.t love a thing you cannot learn.We love music dearly, but we owe it all to both Angelin ia Aronburg and Catherine Leo.Don 't you remember I and my sisters told you it was through her influence with our dear father, that I and my sisters were early in years as we were were sent to on e of the best music schools in Angelinia Agathia.Of course we have a natural taste for music we're as crazy for it as they say, an and especially bands, and we made greater pro ficiency in that than anything else.We can play the instruments in bands too. If my dear sisters have pleased you with Jennie's playing and their singing and her own too I am glad but you must thank Catherine Leo and Angelinia Aronburg for it."

"Yes indeed"Timothy Groveton answered, thoughtfully looking curiously and admirad admirably at each of the eight little girls, and trying desperately to decide which were the most attractive of the seven.

Angelinia Aronburg herself, always bewildered and intoxicated and betwitched him, and also made him feel very small, and as if in some way he had made himself veryvridiculous, and she was laughing at him with her beautiful l ug laughing wonder ful eyes, while Violet, and even her sisters on the contrary, soothed and quieted and rested him, and by their.gentle and deference of manner, and evident respect for whatever he said, put him into good humor with everything in general and during his horseback ride hom that night he found himself thinking more of their sweet faces, and of the dark blue eyes, which had looked so bravely into his(for there was no shyness about them in anything), than of Angelinia Aronburgs sparkling brilliant b a beauty, which seemed to grow more brilliant and sparkling every day.And he had said to Violet, that he was as happy as going to ha heaven that she was to rd recover so soon aftervall, and that he hoped to hear her and her sisters sin g again very soon.And as he talked to her he kept i in his tho hand which he had taken when he arose reluctantly to say good night, and which was very cold, and trembled perceptibly, as it lay in his broad warm palm. Was it Violets fee fancy or was there a slight pressure of her fingers as he released them---a re touch different from that or a mere acq aintance,

,and which sent through her frame a thrill of jor joy which surprised and be wildered her.It was evident he loved her and her sisters even more than a lover would love his sweetheart.It was not all fancy she was sure,,, and for hours she lay awake,, fe alin g again the clasp of Tims hand, and seeing the look in h is eyes when they rested upon her.

"If he knew.Oh indeed if he knew."was the smothered cry in hervheart, as she bravely fought back the temptation assailing her so sorely, and vowed again that through her or her sisters if possible he should never know what might bring him n earer to her and her sisters if there was that in his heart which she suspected, and rightly too for it was there. Next morning Violet was later in getting up than usual though now she was able to, and she lingered long over her toilet then went with her sisters to Mass in camp before breakfast and Holy Communion, and then taking a sad re gre regret ul leave of the Church.There also often came over Violet and her sisters a frightful loathing for anything sinful, a strong desire for their military work, but also a horrid feeling of lonelinoss, and home- sickness, as they remembered their home and their time with their parents in Marcusian, which they knew was so much rattier and pleasanter than any home th y they had ever known.They would not have been away had it not been for this dreadful war and h er tears fell like rain as she went inside of her room for a time while her sisters prepared for breakfast.Angelinia Aronburg was going to the heart of the christian camps with her and her sisters immediately after break fast, and the sight horses were waiting for them now, she knew, for she heard them when they came to the gate, but Angelinia Aronburh Angelinia Aronburg also heard the feet of horses that sounded too rapid to be of any good, and looking from her window, had seen one of the boys outs dismount from his steed, which had evidently been ridden very hard.A little later going to the din ing room at last she saw Jennie Vivian herself standing near the conservatory at the end of the dining room, with an open letter cl clutched in both hands, her pretty head thrown b back, disclosing a face which seemed frozen with horror, and her whole attitude that of one suddenly smitten with something like catalepsy.At the soun d of foot steps however, she moved a little, and when Angelinia Aronburg went to her, asking what was the matter, she held the letter toard her, and whispered faintly;

"Read it."

Penrods last letter had been addressed to his sisters at the Ophelia battlefield ,and in it he had written that he was to start for Henleys army the next day with a young christian boyscout whose acquaintence he had made on the trip from Gandendon to Talismonn, and who had persuaded him to go for a week as a spy n into Henleys headquarters in hisspose at Ad Idefob.since that time nothing had been heard of Penrod, untill some officier of the christian army whose name was Cololen Haymann and who was a Captian, wrote from Jennie Richee as follows;

"To the Darlings of the Nation, Violet, and also her princely little sisters;;)

"espected friends;

"I'm positively sure little Princesses that it can't be claimed that I am a entire stranger to you, for I'm very sure your brother Penrod wrote of me to you in some of his letters..A boyscout friend of his by the name of James Philip were tog together for some time on route toard the Glandelinian army under that nut John Henley, and when stopping for rest during the trip occupied the same stateroom of hotels, and as the two were of the same age, and had many military tastes and ideas in common, they had soon become fast friends.He wrote to me he had never met any person whom he liked and loved so much upon a short acquaintance as he did your brother Penrod..He was so genial, so kind and so loving and unselfish and let me say with no detriment to him as a boy, so like a gentle tender little Vivian girl like on e of you in h is manner toard every on e,(except the enemy and yours)that not to like him was absolutely impossible.his boy friends parents w r were Americans by birth but his was born in Abbiecannia where his parents had lived many years.Seeing in your brother a true artists love and appreciat idn for everything beautiful, and as brave as a saint and being very military, and loving his countrys cause gr a greatly, his boy friend was anxious for him to first see his home, which the boy had told him was one of the most beautiful places near Jennie Richee.so the boy begged him to accompany him thither before going on to the Glandelinia army, and he at last consented.The boy friend was the more anxious for this, as Penrod did not seem at all well; indeed he was far from being well, he seemed very ill, although his disease if he had any, was more mental than physical.Frequently during the trip, nearly always rather he would go away by himself, and sit on the train for hours and hours looking out the window of the coach, with a look of deepest sadness on his face, as if brooding over some hidden grief, and three times in his sleep when he was more than unusally restless, he spoke your names, the names of his darlin g sisters--wh m he said he had to go away or he would lose them forever, but in his waking hours and walking hours he never mentioned you or your sisters, and he seemed always tearful.The boy said to me that he believes Penrod wrote to you and your sisters from his own house, at the same time that he wrote to his Father and mother the Emperor and Emb Empress of of Abbiesannia.Probably you have recieved his letter before this.He was delighted with my home, and during the few days he was with us improved both in health and spirits..He however was very suspicious one day when it happened to be that a wild storm broke out, not an elemental on e, but a battle storm, and as the boy scout also was nervous, and had a trusty soldier cavarly squadron to accompany them, the two were said to have spent many hours near the scene seeing once a fearful enemy onslaught that extended and moved forward like a wild tidal wave tward Ophelia and which was victorious the christians being driven back in wild confusion.The next morning as it was said to contin ue with greater violence the two went out that morning fifteen or twenty miles closer than usual.Here they rent the day.Penrod himself had been worried because he had heard great deal details of the battle of Ophelia, and learned that on December the eight began a pe rsonal christian retreat at the first action at Ophelia.when and there it seemed as if the issue of this war would be decided for us or th e enemy.Volumes could be written upon the subject of those fateful days so early in December, when the glandelinians like a sea swept through the territory to the very outskirts of Ophelia, and almost without exception every authority had stated plainly that it will be this battle that ought to pluck from the over confident forces of the foe a speedy and decisive triumph over us.After the first early action at Ophelia in the latter part of November, our forces had been in retreat before the swift pounding sledge hammer advance of the Glandelinians, who had been executing a vast wheeling movement pivoted upon Ophelia with the aim of sweeping our christian forces into the territory of Jennie Riches.witnesses to the battle at a distance declared it looked as if the world was coming to an end.General Jacksonia Evans guardian of the Vv Vivian Girls and chief of staff and virtual commander in chief of the christian armies had learned that the Glandelin ians under general Johnston in Jacken Manley were moving many divisions westward under heavy shell fire to escape general Evans counter wheeling movement and was massing great waves of troops in the environs of Ophelia.While Manley alt altered his plans immediately he also to cover his real movement had lauched forward upon the positions at Ophelia a driving hurricane like attack, while he ordered part of his main force forces the the First and Second grand armies to hold off the christians in the neighborhood of Ophelia, while the remainder of his forces five other big grand armies, were to contin ue their encircling movement driving in a northeasterly direction all of the christians in front of them.It was the Glandelinian aim not to storm or besiege Ophelia, but rather to defeat Jacksonia Evans in the field, and then strive to regain what was lost at Big Girl Knool and Jennie Riches.On December the six princesses, the first of this long three weeks days of this stubborn battle the Glandelinians were disposed in an irregular line of simultaneous battle probably one hundred miles long and stretching from Jennie Riches to the surburbs of Ophelia.The first Glandelinian army under general Phillip Goesiter was a days march east of the first grand army, and also south of Daisy Creek.Hansonas army, the Third likewise was south of the creek supported by general Blancy and a days merch east of the second big army.The fourth fourth army under Kickenquire was north of Daisy Creek facing tward the southeast.The Fifth army John Manleys in person was held to the north of Jennie Riches by the defenses of that city.The sixth army under general Huebaum Manley was south of St Catherines Hill s and some distance east of the Aronburgs Run.The seventh army under general Federal John ston was farther south, along the border of a portion of the immense "Red Riding Hood"for st forest.Opposng general Manleys whole army on the southwest and directly in front of Ophelia was the Seventh Christian army under general Greatheart, and on the south the Abbiesannian general expeditionary force under general Baldwin and the more westerly divisions of the Abyssinkl Abyssinkilian army under general Blain Night Linger.Hansons army also faced that of Jacosinia and Jacksonia Evans, and the army of H uebaum Manley was opposed to the Fourgh fourth Abyssinkilian army under general N emo. The third Abbiesannian army under general Nero was in full contact wh with that of Johnston Kacken Manley.The second Abbiesannian army under general Fred Nance stood before the divisc divisions under Adeldegarhe.F Farther south the first Domdobian army under general prindrill faced the army of general Bicknell.All of these various armies q actually are considered to have taken part in this bloody long battle at Ophelia, though the entire action between the Red Riding H ood forest and Oph elia all theseedays might well be considered one great engagement.YIt was Emperor Vivian your father who first realized that because of the results of Big Girl Knool thatthe Glandelinian armies were offering a point of vulnerability with general John Manleys army presenting a flank in its long wave attack across the front of Oph l Ophelia.H e induced general Jack Evans the christian commander in chief to strike a counter blow at once.H e had set to day as the time for a general counter attack.General Blain Night Lingers army in the meantime had been strengthened by an ermergency force created in Ophelia and Jennie Riches and rushed

t to the front by trains.The Abbiesannians an extra days march souy south of the position at which they should have been had three marches back to establish coh contact with the enemy.Blain Night Lin ger struck a corplete surprise to the Glandelinians and struck with sledge hammer force.The whole of Evans army also struck and struck with all its might.But he made no headway because the enemys resistanne was so pugnax pugnacious and tenacious.Ge was forced to falter, the enemy advanced rw swiftly and struck him like a cyclone.H e was cut to pieces .General N ero was forced to withdraw troops from his left and center to front both his right and left flank leaving a thirty mile gap defended however by strong masses of cavarly.But the glandelinians under Hanson and Glancy drove forward in a fierce attack and drove their way into the hu huge gap.The Glandelinians reached and crossed the Daisy Creek on th is very morning and then began a crossing of the Aronburgs Run.General rrodrick Hance was hurled back upon the Ophelia defenses, the guns of which wrought dreadful destruction in general plain Night Lingers army.Evans was wounded and brought to an army base horpital.Your Father h imself was most heavily attacked on his right but so far the attack there is not making any headway for general Nero driving back his own assailants is giving aid to your father.But general Kin armine is pinched in a trap and greatheartz portion is nearly as critical.At eight o clock this evening the retirment of our armies are beginning.At this point is where the sad news to you and your sist r sisters is to come..Near the dreadful battle field he and his friend had spent the day, and it was when the enemy was advancing so successfuly that they decided to return, full of gloom at the sight of the results of such an awful battle.Gradually however we found our they found themselves lost, there came a change, and a long column of gray, which when they started they had observed in the west, and thout thought nothing of it increased in sigh size and thickness, and a great storm of shell fire broke upon our own territory th in gusts of firing.I think now that the leader of our cavarly escort squadron must have been a little new to this sort of scene for he seemed very nervous and uncertain, and as the storm of firing increased, and in spite of all our efforts, we had to follow with a retreating wave of christian troops under heavy fire he lost his self possession entirely, and when there came a gust of firing stron ger than any previous one he gave a loud cry and a shell exploded in their very midst and every one in that territory were lying wounded or dead upon the field.I recieved word that the boy seized Penrods arm, and with h is other hand managed to get hold of a tree and , chich Penrod and another grasped to shield themselves from machine gun fire, and there in the darkness of that awful battle night they had clunf clung for hours, constently expecting death for the battle was raging at night too, and the christians had no power stem the enemy attack at that quarter.For in the distance they saw the glare of great fires where great armies were s ruggling like two tempests, and a group of christians came near huntin g for wounded but the two boys had no means of attracting their attention, and their condition seemed hopeless unless they could hold on untilll morning when they might be discovered and picked up.The other boy for himself felt he could endure it but he feared for his friend.H e was breathing very heavily, and he knew his strength was failing him besides his position was not so easy as the other boys, as he had a more exposure than the other.H e said Penrod made a desperate effort to get closer to the tree while his friend held his hand tward him, and then oh how can I tell you the rest a great explosion swept the tree and the two of them away.Some of the wounded told me they heard after the explosion a wild cry and by the flash of a shell explosion caught one glimpse glimpse of Penrods face as h it went out of sight forever.Of what followed they were scarcely conscous, and wondered how they were able to remember it untill for a time the wild fury of the battle sh abated in that quarter when many of the wounded were rescued from their perilous situation between the firing lines.I cannot express to you and your darlin g sisters my sincere grief or tell you of the boys great sorrowc who n ow lines dreadfully r wounded in a army hospital.way God pity you and your poor parents and help you all to bear your loss..You little girls were always in the mind of Penrod and that a thought of you were undoubtedly with him when he was taken from you never to return .Indeed Penrods friend is sure of it for his last cry which he distin otly heard, was for you little girls, and your names were the words he uttered just before death froze the name of Jennie upon his lips.You can tell your parents this or not as you see fit.Again assur ing you of my heart felt spypathy sympathy;

'I am yours most respectfully
Captian Cololen Haymann."

And this was the letter Jennie's sisters had recieved an and read and wept ov r over poor little Joice going from one fainting fit into another, and refusing to be comforted because she and her sisters had lost their brother.And then poor

Violet herself r gave it to Jennie who read it which such awful bitter anguish as few have ever known, for in her heart she felt that the dangers she and her sisters were suspected to be in had sent him to his death.The Glandelinians were his murderers and she felt as if sh e were turning into stone as she finished the letter and stood clutching it tightly, with no power to move or even to cry out.It was something like that dreadful, yes fearful phase of some frightful nightmare, when the senses are alive to what is passing around one, but the strength to stir is gone.There was a shocking sensation in her throat, as if her heart had leaped suddenly into her mouth and indeed if she could she would have torn the collar from her neck in order to breathe more freely.

When Angelinia Aronburg came she rallied sufficiently to pass the letter to her, and indeed that broke the spell and set her free from the horrid bonds which had bound her so firmly.Angelin in Aronburg at first did not say any words of om comfort, in fact she said nothing at all.She only put her arms around her holy little cousin, and leading her whimpering to her room, finally got her to lie down, while she stood over her and rubbed her hands, and bathed her face, which though white as marble, was hot to the touch like faces burning with fever.

"You won't go Gertrude now!You won't leave me!"she said to Angelinia Aronburg.

"Of course I shall not leave you Jennie darling.You stayed with me often when I had been wounded, and I must stay with you and your sisters.But for some reason"Angelinia contin ued with actons of command "Don't you send or let your sisters send this news to your Father untill I say so.I want confirmation of this newx news first.I can't, I don't believe it."

Later in in the day Timothy Groveton,,, who had heard the dreadful news, came to the headquarters of Violet, and her sisters, brin ging the letter which poor Penrod had written to his sisters from Jennie Richee, and which together with one for his father and also for his mother and friends had come in the same military telegram mail which brought the news of his "death." When Jennie heard he was below asking for her and her sisters she started from her pillow, where she had lain perfectly motionless for hours refusing to eat her dinner, and said to Angelinia Aronburg"My sisters are not in fit condition to see him.Sent i him in to me.I Will see him.If your suspicions that the news is false is correct I'll have him invistage for their sake.show him up at once."

When she first knew Violet, and her sisters, A ngelinia Aronburg had seen Violet and her sisters in strange angelic moods, especially when attacked by Glandelinians when caught unarmed, and that had fought and struck and bit and w hit and scratched the glandelinian soldiers at any spot within their reach, but of late these fits had been of rare occr occurrance, and no she was wholly astonished on her return to the n room with Timothy Groveton, to see the Vivian Girl Princess standing erect in the middle of the floooor her nostrils dilated, and her eyes blazing, as they flashed upon Timot hy Groveton , whose heart was full of sorrow for his loss, and who went toard her to offer his sympathy.

But Jennie commended him to stand where he was with a fierce gesture of her little hand.

"I know you are a great friend of us, and a dangerous foe of the enemy Tim"she cried, and there was something awful in the tone of her voice as she said the last words."Through you none of the secret foes have come near us, have not succeeded in doing me or my sisters harm.But nevertheless I am not myself to day, I am thatttttthethat other"on e"you have never heard of or seen.I know Tim whatbyou are here for without your telling me.You indeed have come to talk to me of Penrod to say that you are sorry for me and my sistors, sorry and also sad that he is dead, but it is not necessary to hear it.You of all boyscouts can if you will find out whether the report is true or not.If the enemy is really guilty of his death, then I want you to get Gerald Starring for me.We were foolish to let him go away.The enemy murdered him but it seems I and my sisters were almost responsible for it for letting him go when we could have stopped him, you once suggested to me not to let him go but we did, for he could not hear of the secret danger I and my sisters were in and not go away to again assume the role of Adeldefob.Go ward th at Gerald Starring is he thought to raise himself by lowering him, and fool that I was when he came to me and my sisters and tole told us of a brotherly love such as even any good lover is incapable ofvfeeling we foolishly let him go away to be killed to save us and the danger h we faced would have made him loathe and despise himself if he didn't succeed in saving us, and therefore made him go away to seek the role once more, to build up a young manhood which he never lacked; , and now he is dead, i killed near the battlefield of Ophelia, my Penrod, my brother, my love, my darling brother.I alone seem to stand it better, my sisters are prostrated.I and my sisters were never never ashamed to say it.There is noting unmaidenly in the confession that I and my sisters love him as few brothers have ever been loved by their sisters, and we have often told him so.But the danger we were in so secret a danger broke his heart, and we saw it breaking too, we knew it by the awful look upon his face, not a look of fear and horror only, he could have borne that, few boys or men ever die of love or fear alone---but there was on his face a look of unutterable shame and humiliation in thinking what would happen to us if he didnot go back as Adeldefob to quiet that fool of a Manley, and the danger we were in seemed to him as if all the manliness of his young nature had been insulted by the tauts tauntsof the glandelinian foes.Oh Penrod, my loving brother, my loving brother;; if he could know how our hearts are a b aching for him and will ache on untill we are reunited in Heaven.Don't interrupt me Tim dear"she continued as the boy tried to say something."I tell you you cannot do anything for us, the enemy is in a bad mood and is dangerous, and the sight of you who have done so much for us would make the enemy beside himself and kill you too.Keep away untill the storm blows over.you have loved us nearly as much as our brother.I told you then I could not understand how it could be. You have done lots for us but what did we do for you.Very little.I tell it to you now a thousand tim s more strongly.But this sorrow does not turn us. No ever suffered like our Blessed Lord and His Mother.Oh God my greatest love if I and my sisters could die and join You and Penrod--but life ceased by possessed angels is strong within us, and we remain little girls and must live on and on for years and years with poor Penrods death cry always soun ding in our ears as itsounded that awful night, when he was mortally wounded by the shell explosion with our names upon his lips.where was I and my sisters that we did not h a hear it and know that he was dying! If we had heard it I believe we too should have died and joined him on his journey through the shades of death.But there was no signal, I nor my p oor sisters did not hear him call but fortunately we did not laugh on before his death after his departure, and n either will we never laugh again, for how can we be happy with poor Penrod dead on some lonely part of the battle field....!"

Poor Jennie was now beginning to soften, the strange mood(the hood) she had was aslowly passing off, and though her face was as white as a clean sheet, the strange dangerous glitter was gone from her eyes, which turned at last toard Ang lllllatt Angelinia Aronburg, who had looked on in utter astonishment.

"Oh Gertrude, Gertrude, help me;".I'm so upset I don't know what I was saying. I think I must be crazy again."she said as she stretched her little arms toard Angelinia Aronburg, who went to her at once, and leading her to the couch me made her lie down while she soothed and quieted her untill a faint color came back to her face, and her heart beats were not so rapid and loud.

Across the room by the win dow Timothy Groveton was still standing,, with a sad troubled look upon his face, and seeing him Jennie called him to her, and nputting her icy hand in his said to him very gently;

"Forgive me if I ask you this favor but for the sake of my sisters have this report investigated and see if it is really true.Otherwise I don't know what I said for my heart is with my brother, and he lies dead in the battlefield. No go away and investiance please dear Tim, and if you do this you'll make us love you still more.My poor sisters are prostrated."

Tim bowed, and pressing the hold he held, said in a shocking voice;

"God bless you and your sisters Jennie, and comfort you, and make it come for your sakes that the latter is a mistake.He was the dearest boy friend I ever had, I must confess the truth Jennie I loved him better even than you or your dear sisters,, he was the one I liked the b st and enjoyed the most, and I never shall forget him or cease to mourn for him.Good bye Jennie, good afternoon Miss Angelinia Aronburg."

He bowed himself from the room, and was soon riding slowly toard his own headquarters, with very sad thoughts in his heart of the friend he had lost and who seemed to be so near him that more than once he started and looked around as if expecting to meet Penrods pleasant face and hear his well remembered laugh.

Tim did not cry over Penrods loss if loss it really was, not because he seemed not to be that sad, but because he couldn't.He felt the same inward grief that Jennie felt and that's the worst grief of all..Tim also belonged to that vla class of Abbieannian boys who once they make a friend they love that friend more than themselves and therefore such a loss is almost unbearable.Because of the dreadful war it is true death had come often very closely to Tim and borne away that for which he mourned with a keen or permanent sense of sad loss and pain.Abbieannians ain't like us despite the fact they know they'll all go to heaven. We can suffer the loss of a loved one and after a few months or so the sorrow goes, but when Abbieannians are these sort of sufferers, they always more or loss have a sad remembrance in their hearts till their dying day.Tims father had died when he was a boy, and though his mother still lived till he was a well grown little boy as he is now she had attatched herself very s rongly to him to her.And when she died, he never wept, his sorrow did not seem deep nor lasting, he went about to school and his play as if she had never died, but finally after two weeks, his guardian had to try to force him to eat for he had never eaten a bite. He had told his uncle that he would have given anythin g if he could have had a good long cry but he couldn't cry, and he was shocked up his listless and ill for a long time.

But what gave him great hope and broken broke down some of his dreadful grief was that he co could think without a pang that there was surely beyond this life a exceedingly beautiful place where loved ones meet again for all eternity, and friendships are renewed. But now as the letter told him and Violet and her sisters that Penrod was dead------Penrod who had been so much to him--Penrod whom he loved far better than anybody he had ever loved in his life, and he felt a bitter sense of loss and pain and loneliness and as he rode slowly home tward his own headquarters in the gathering twilight of that late December Afternoon, and thought of that bring younf prin cly life andenctive mind so suddenly blotted out of existence, he suddenly cried aloud;

"I cannot be,Penrod is not gone from me or his sisters forever.Somewhere we must meet again .There is something wrong and the writer of that letter must have made a mistake , and oh God I hope it is so that it was only a mistake.Penrod must be in the for lines as "Adeldefoh and probably some one was killed who looked like him.Thank God for that hope--thank God still more if I find it is true and h e is safe and not even wounded.I'll investigate if possible."

It was exceedingly very bitter and deep, and all the more so because the blow had fallen so suddenly without a note of warning.At the headquarters of Violet and her sisters ev rybody had b en at a very early but scanty dinn er when the latter came.Also some of the boy and girlscouts were visiting in their headquarters with the purpose to cheer and comfort Violet who was still ill, and Joice too had invited a few of the soldiers and officers to meet them, and in their best uniforms, they had looked more lovely than usual.Violet herself was with them but she mostly sat and had been very quiet though two of the boyscouts Jack and Francis chatted with her gayly and let her look through some big picture books which they brought along to give to her.Dinner had been over some little time, and Joice herself was standing alone with her childish guests in the drawing room of her hea dquart ers, her sisters having gone outside, when the fatal letter was brought to her by a soldier courier.She saw it was from Jennie Richee, and th that the hand writing was a strangers, and though it was dire cted to her sister Violet, who immediately after dinner,(though she still hardly ate much) had wandered off to the outside with her sist rs, she opened it without hesitation, feeling sure that it contained tidings of her brothers and feeling also with that subtle intuition which so often precedes dreadful news, that the tidings were not good. he thought it might tell that Penrod was far off in some Glandelinian army and being an Adeldefoh, and that it might be a long long time before she or her sisters could see him again and that feeling came her a sudden heart ache.But she was not prepared to hear that Penrod was "dead", and when she read that he would never return to her or her sist rs again,, she gave one long piercing agonizing shriek, and dropped upon the floor in a faint so nearly resemb ling death, that for a little while her grief stricken sisters and others feared she was really dead.Fortunately the Emperial physician happened g to be among the gu sts, and so replied reliefwas immediate or she might never have returned to consciousness so terrible was the shock to her nervous system, and after what she and her sisters had gonethrough before..For hours the poor little girl passed from one fainting fit into another, and when these were over she lay in a sort of semi-stupor moaning at intervals with a tearless eye;

"Oh my brother my brother my Penrod, my darling brother--dead,--gon e--from me forever-----my brother, my brother.This seems hard to bear.I can't stant it. Why does the enemy d al with us so."

If Violet and her sisters had a weakness it was their love for theirbrother. Ever since they came to love him and after they had discovered he was their brother, Penrod had been their beloved companion and broth' brother, or idol as to call it, and if any other cross would have befallen them they would not have felt so badly as they did now when Penrod was gone from them forever.Nothing availed to soothe or quiet Joice who was the worse shocked by the news, and the house which had been heretofore quiet and cheerful and full of gayety became a house of sorrow and gloom with the distant thunder of the battle of Ophelia as a sad reminder.The boy and girlscout servants trod softly through the silent halls, and spoke only in whispers to each other, while Joices other sisters and also Jennie and Violet with traces of bitter weeping upon their fair sw eet faces, except Jennie, she couldn't cry so severe too was the shock upon her, sat from morning till night with folded hands looking sad and hopelessly at each other as if paralyzed by the awful calamity which had so unjustly fallen upon them.They were of no us to their poor sister Joice, who lay in her darkened room, refusing to see any One except her sisters and Angelinia Aronburg, whom she kept constantly with her, and Jennie especially gave no sign of what she thought or felt, but from what Joice could see she became sc ared about Jennie and begged the doctor to watch her.But she was quiet, patient and all enduring nevertheless,

, she with her sisters sat by Joices bedside, and listened to her moans, and did what she had them to do; left her when she said so, and wept to themselves, returned to her when she sent for them, and if they felt pain or grief themselves uttered no word in her presence, and never mentioned Penrods name.

Of their best friend Timothy Groveton, we have written comparitively plenty, as he too has lots to do with the story, for he wasthe best loving friend Penrod also ever had, and a general favorite of emperor Vivian and Angelinia Aronburg.H e though he had unusally good ways and manners, and extremely righteous and without guile like all Abbiennians, was nevertheless a very peculiar boy--and when not with any one he was very silent, even though social, and since his experiences of the war he had became very indifferent to anything pertaining to the enemy and his troubles.He had great boyish love for Penrod, and for Violet and her sisters, and too he was very fond of flowers and plants of any kind.. He had during the early part of the war before he became acquainted with Violet and her sisters toured through many scores of miles of Calverinian countryside and through cities and towns hunting for chances to recruit boy and girls into his child scout regiment, and therefore he had really one of the best girl and boy scouts ever known of regiments and they were called the Burrough s.Before he knew violet and her sisters he had spent most of his spare time drilling them, and if he beguiled away from his favor favorite regiments for a few moments he was always in a hurry to return to them.It was on this day when he was instructing the members of his faithful regiment to keep an eye on all strangers and protect Violet and her sisters from the unseen danger that threatened them that the news of his dear friends "death" reached him.After dinner was over, he had asked some of his new recruits to go with him with the purpose to show them where to do the proper sentry duty he suggested to them, and he was talking most eloquently of the nature and h abits of the Vivian Girls and showing these good child scouts the headquarters of violet and h er sisters, when even at that distance Joices shrieks reached him, and as he was running full speed tward the building the side decamp rushed tward him exclaiming;

"Oh Master Timothy Groveton come quick, Princess J oice has fainted, her sisters are wild with grief, and Penrod has been killed near the battle field of Ophelia."

"Killed.Penrod killed.Did you say Prince Penrod was killed?It will go hard with his poor sisters and their poor mother and Father."he said very calmly, as he put his sabre back into its scabbard and dismissed those he had been drilling.But the hand which had held the sabre trembled as well as his other, and the plume were wet with great drops of sweat, as he went slowly to the room where Joice lay in a swoon and her sisters except Jenni ce who then had been reading the letter herself with her in wild grief and fright.He was a somewhat smaller boy in size but he was not weak, and it was he who lifted the fainting princess (her sisters were too bewildered and frightened to even move) up and bore her to her chamber, and made her sister Catherine loosen her dress, and the wreath of f/o flowers from her hair.There was a good deal of an angel in his nature and he showed his consideration of her and them so strongly that in spite of their he heart breaking sorrow Joices sisters couldn't repress the smile they gave him through their tears.

"Poor little angels I'm sorry for you but oh God can it be really true"he said and pressed his lips on the forehead of poor Joice, who clung to him as a small child in pain clungs to its mother.But there were no tears in his eyes, even after his sad intev interview with Jennie, even as the few days passed by, there was no ch change in his manner, as he went about his usual vocations, and kept his command doings its duty, while he sent couriers and the Gemini out to see if the news was true, and tended his new recruits untill three days after he came again to see poor Violet and her sisters.

"Where have you been so long Tim dear?""Both Joice and Jennie asked him once when he came to them after an absence of three days.

"Been drilling my boy and girlscout troops who are dressed in moruning."was his reply, and with a half reproachful sob Jennie said;

"Oh Tim how can you care for such duties now with your best friend Penrod dead, and the whole army in mourning, and we cannot get communications with father to tell him either."

"I don't know Jennie dear."he answered apologetically;"I'm sorry if I have done anything out of the way, but if I did stop in my military duty it would not brin g poor Penrod back."

Had he then no feeling, no sorrow for his best friend.Violet and her sisters almost thought so, but nevertheless they had him stay that night to keep them company in their sorrow.That night Jennie herself who had not slept that night but was brooding over her lost l brother thought she heard a sort of sad sound somewhere, and going to Tims room to look in she missed him he was not there.But she followed the sound and finally saw him in the little headquarters chapel before the crucifix but near a window where the red moonlight was streaming in kneeling before the cruf crei re crucifix but his face buried in a pillow the better to see ther the note, which seemed almost to read his soul from his body, they were so deep and pitiful.

"Penrod, Penrod my best, best friend on earth, given to me so soon, and yet so soon to lose h im again because of the hated enemy.I kn ow the true dreadful grief of his dearest sisters but I'm sure what is their grief compared to mine.H ow can I live without him.If it was no sin I,d allow myself to be shot down also.I was so proud of him and loved him so much.Why is it that we Abbieannians who sin not have to suffer at the hands of this hell from Glandelin is and lose loved ones so undeservedly.Oh Penrod in H eaven maybe they may think me cold and callous because the shock to me was so great that I cannotttalk and moan as others do and as some of his sisters cry, but God knows for some reason or other that I'm truthful when I say without meaning to hurt their feelings that my pain is bitterer than theirs.But God and His Blessed Mother help me, and his sisters too.

Oh I hope that letter was not true, but the investigators coming say it was for the report is confirmed.Poor Violet, and her dear sisters, who were his too, and who I maybe loved him even more than they did.Yet God comfort them please and help them bear no matter what I suffer, and if it really has not happened then if it is His will to show the true facts by natural means when He wills to do it.But sure for what they suffered so much for their Countrys sake this ought not to be that he should be taken from them.How can they and I bear it .We must have the Grace, but this Cross is so hard ....!!!!!!.!.!.:"

This is what Jennie heard, but not very distinctly as he did not say this very loud as he did not wish to be overheard, and in a moment she was beside the prostrate boy-her arms were around his neck, and his bowed h ead was laid against his bosom, while she kissed his quivering lips again and again as she said to him;

"Forgive me and my sisters Timothy dear if we have been so mistaken in our own grief as not to see how you too have suffered.Penrod was out our own brother and your own best friend Tim,, we loved him together best of all next to God ,we will therefore mourn for him together, and comfort each other, and love each other better because we have lost him."

Then Tim poor Tim broke down and cried as any boy never cried before, and sobbed as if his heart too would break, while Jennie Vivian his friend now the stron ger and calmer of the two, sup o did her best to comfort him, and supported him back to his own room.There was perfect accord and still greater confidence between Tim, and his princess friends after that, n and even Jennie's sisters roused themselves to something like cheerfulness and interest in the boy and girlscout regiments about them for the sake of the boyscout caption, who except to them, never mentioned Penrods name, but h who began to grow somewhat ill, and sometimes even forgot to go out and drill his personel regiments, where they might have become discouraged but for Violet and her sisters who took charge of them herself or themselves, and gave them the instructions they needed.However of the Vivian Girls like Jennie and Violet, the others except Joice were very quiet in their grief, which however was more acute than supposing.A thought of Penrod whom they lost was always in their saddened hearts, though they never spoke of him voluntarily, and always changed the conversation as soon as possible when his name was mentioned.But oh how they missed him everywhere missed his quick sprin ging step or his gay horse back riding upon road or walk as he came in bright and fresh, and gay ----his cheery whistle or snatches of song or his playful ways and all the thousand little acts by which a good kind little brother can make himself beloved.If they could have seen him dead in his own bed--or if his body could have been brought home and buried in his own homeyard under the shadow of the palms where th ey could have kept his grave bright with flowers and watered it with their tears--it would have been some solace for their great pain. But alas it was feared he even had no grave, no resting place, and who could tell but that some horrid shell explosion might have torn and mangled his~~t~~ lonely little form before it would be reached by those searching for the wounded.It was too horrible to think of, and the faces of Violet and her sisters grew whither and thinner each day, for each day they missed more and more the brave young prin cly boy whohad been the sunlight of their very presence.

But poor Violet and her sisters were not alone in their grief.Though Penrod was no relative of theirs yet many a girl scout too was completely prostrated for a long time with the suddeness of the how, and could only sit or cry andcould only sit and cry like little whipped children for the boy friend whom they had loved so dearly, and who had always been very kind and affectionate to them. No matter how low in rank the child scouts, boys or girls were he never acted as if shamed or above them, he always treated them as if he was z as equal or even as if he was lower than they.In deed he was the very "Idol"of the whole christian army, and it was true that the hearts of c every child scout, and soldier who were able to hear of the loss was very sore and full of pain, and the whole of Concentinian Aronburgs army clothed itself in deepest black.Angelinia Aronburg stayed with the Princesses and she did her best to cheer them, and though she did not show any sorrow over the loss, they could see by reading her that she felt just as bad t as they did, that is if not worse, and only tried to drown their s her sorrow and comfort them, that she thought more of them than of her self.As for Anne Saunders who had liked Penrod very much, she cried herself into a sick headache the first day, and so did Jean, who declined to see her friend Jack, when he called.But at the advise of her sisters she received him the next day , but nevertheless not at all comforted even by the beautiful little necklace and pendant of onyx and pearls that he brought her with a view to relief her grief, which was very severe. he liked Penrod as well as many others did, and his sudden reported death was a great shock to her, she even liked him better than anyone else, better then even Jack. All the boyscouts themselves and thousands of the girls apparently did not all weep, at least did not seem to, they looked as uncon cerned as if the tragedy did not happen, but whether they wept in private or openin openly, there was something queer about all the boy scouts, that made even prisoners qual wh n when a company passed their prison camps.There was a sort of frightful meanace in them which no one could understand or foresee.It was even rumored they might attack a prison camp but no such attack came. Outside of Concentinian Aronburgs army too, there was deep mournin g for the young Prince who had been so popular with every one, and who had not a single enemy outside of the foe armies .But no where was there a heart so full of pain and sorrow as t at the headquarters of Violet and her sisters, where poor Jennie shut herself in her own room all alone, and now refused to see any one, except Angelinia Aronburg and her sisters three of whom were ill because of the shock.she had read with a fresh burst of anguish Penrods letter written her from Jennie Riches, a letter full of tenderness and love, showing how he kept her and her sisters still in his heart as the dearest sweetest memory of his life, and at the close col containing a few words of passionate entreaty, that she and her sisters would try to overcome the secret dangers and escape it so that they would be safe when he l evest he enemy army and returns for he would come back to them bye and bye.

"I cannot come now"he wrote"Untill Monley seen you and your sisters did not "Jidnap Adeldefob.Then I will return and hope such a disaster will never come upon us again."

"Yes dear brother "Jennie "Cried"We'll do as you say"and she covered the letter with her kisses, and then kept it under her pillow where she could find it readily when the fac fancy took her to read it. Everything Penrod had given her and her sisters or helped them to make, was brought to their chamber, where she and h er sisters could see it, and Jennie herself refused to go down stairs or eat anything, but stayed constantly in her own room, often pacing restlessly to and fro, refusing~~to~~ to play with refusing to play, and often lying down with her face to the wall and her eyes open day and night, for she could neither sleep or cry, and her little head seemed bursting with its pressure of blood and pain.nd what she also thought of what Our Blessed Lord had suffered increased her pain and made her sadder yet for also Him.

"If I could cry, only could cry."she said to Angelin ia Aronburg, as she pressed her hands to her throbbing temples"It would loosen the strange tightness in my throat and about my heart, but I cannot, and I am now so tired, sick and faint that I am afraid that I shall never cry again or sleep .And this is the revenge the enemy takes upon me and my sisters."

And it would almost seem as if she spoke the truth for in deed no tears came to cool her little burning cheeks and eye lids, and her dyes seemed to grow larger and brighter each day, while sleep such as she once had known had deserted her entirely.At the doctors command they gave her bromide, and pr morphine and Chloral in heavy dos doses but these only procured for her snatches of very troubled sleep which were quite as exhausting as a wakefulness, for she always saw before her that dreadful battlefield of Ophelia with the little white face of her brave brother upturned to the pitiless sky and heard always that wild cry for her and her sisters who had always been his shining stars.Every morning general.Con Centin ian Aronburg and others sent to inquire for her and her sisters, and every evening Timothy Groveton rode over to their headquarters to ask how Jennie and her sisters were.And he sometimes stayed for two or three hours or more, and talked with Angelinia Aronburg, not always of the sick Vivian Girls, or Penrod but of things of which how they may find out whether the sad tidings was true or not---and Timo despite his sadness was surprised and delighted to find o out how intelligent Angelinia was and of how much she knew of the literature of other countries than of Abbieannia alone.

"I for some reason or other always had a fancy for English or American, particularly the latter"she said to Tim, and this gave him the opportunity he was seeking.

"Well your knowledge of English will be a great help to us all"he said."Would you be willing, when the Princesses recover from their grief suff sufficiintly grief sufficiently to go forth for me and with your following investigate every Christian base hospitel in the verious near by christian armies and see whether Penrod was killed or not?"and he shot a curious glance at h er to see what effect his question would have upon her.

For an instant her fair cheeks were scarlet, and then she turned very white about the lips, and her voice was not quite steady as she replied;
"I prayed God to make me content in that station to which he has called me, and if he H e has willed it that I should be a spy, then a spy I must remain.I cannot rim go anywhere without Violets or her sisters permission.Sent Angeline Richee.he can go, or you in person ask Violet or her sisters whether I can go.Then if they say yes, I will do so."
It was a strange answer, and seemed made more to herself than to Tim, who felt more certain then ever that Angelinia knew what he feared most, and was bravely keeping it to herself for the sake of Violet and her sisters.What a noble girlscout leader she reallly was to him and how fast the interest he felt in her ripened into a stronger liking during the days he spent nightly when he went to the headquarters of the princesses, to ask and try to see Violet,and her sisters and also for the sake of a few minutes talk with Angelinia Aronburg, who was fast learning to watch for his coming, and to feel her pulses quicken when he came and taking her hand in his held it there while he put the usual round of questions with regard to Violet and her sisters and herself appearing almost at last as much interested in her welfare as in those of Violet and her sisters. It was the dawning of a new hope for Angelinia who tried to cheer him up in his every steady no losing sorrow for Penrod, this feeling too, that Timothy Groveton the best boyscout leader of the army next to Penrod found delight in her own society and loved to linger at her side since he couldn't see Violet,and her sisters. It made everything else so easy, and her life was not one of perfect rest, for Jennie, and nay, even her sisters did not improve as the sad days went on, and to soothe and quiet and minister to them was not an easy matter.Jennie and Joice could not sleep and the doctor who attended to them was beginning to fear for the reason of these two, when one day Jennie said to Angelinia Aronburg;
"Where is Tim Groveton?Why has he never been here to see me,does he not care for us any more?"
"He cares very much"Angelinia replied,"and he has been here every night to ask for you and even your sisters, but as you would not see any one, he did not suppose you were in condition to see him.will you see Tim.?"
"Yes send for him."was Joices answer herself, and the boyscout Pierre was dispatched to Timothy Grovetons headquarters, with the message that the poor Vivian Girl Princesses wished very anxiously to see him.And so Tim went to their headquarters, and up to the room where little Jennie sat sad eyed in her easy chair with her face so pale and pinched and her eyes so large and bright, that the impulsive boyscout utt red a cry cry of grave alarm, and going to her threw his arms around her and cried;
"Oh Princess Jennie my beloved friend, that I should find you and even Joice so changed."
"Yes, ------yes" Timothy"Jennie replied, not freeing herself from Tims embrace."
"I suppose I am changed.I feel it myself, and I feel I shall die or go insane if I do not change or go to sleep.I have not slept a good sleep since I heard Penrod my brother was dead, and poor Joice has not either, and I therefore have sent for you to hold me and her in your arms just as you several times have done ad did succeed in getting us asleep when we couldn't because of our troubles.
Sing me the old childish Lullibies you used to sing me and mypoor sisters then and mayby if it is Our Dear Blessed Lords Will I and Joice shall sleep.I feel as if I should--there is such a heaviness about my eye lids and pressure on my brain.Take me rim dear you are worthy of it.Play that I'm your little baby girl you are a very strong boy much bigger than I or Joice, and I can't be very heavy now."and she smiled a faint, shadowy smile as she put up her little round arms to the boyscout who took her up so gladly and covered the wan face with tears and kisses, while he murmured words of pity, sorrow and endearment.
"There, that will do Tim dear,--it wearies me you need endearment than I do"Jennie said(which showed her unselfishness) and she laid herlittle beautiful and tired head upon Tims shoulder and closed her heavy eye lids and prayed hard for sleep."Rock me to sleep Tim dear, as you did once last month"she whispered faintly, and sitting down in the chair, Tim rocked the poor little girl, and after praying himself, sang to her in a low sad voice, a lullaby of Arbicannia, such as he used to sing when as now, the go golden curly head was pillowed on his breast.
Attracted by the sound, Angelinia Aronburg stole softly too the door, and looked in , but Tim motioned her away, and went on with his song of "Mother Dear Remember me and never cease your care" until nature which had resist ed every exertion and every drug, howerf however powerful, gradually began to yeild to Tims delights, and to also that of her sadly watchin g sisters---the little golden head pressed more heavily, the rigid nerves softened, a slight moisture showed itself under the hair upon the forehead, and the eyes which had been so wild and bright, were closed in natural slumber.Jennie to the relief of Violet and her other sisters and Tim too was asleep at last, and when Angelinia Aronburg came again to the door of the room and saw the closed eyes, and could tell too that her breath-came easily and regularly she exclaimed;;;

"Th ank God and His Blessed Mother, poor Jennie sleeps at last.You Tim dear have saved her life--or at least her reason; but let me help you lay her down so you can do the same to Joice."
He submitted, and after he had done the same to joice and also finally succeeded though it took longer Angelinia Aronburg coming in again said;
"Now let me help you lay Joice down too.She is too heavy for you to hold after you held Jennie so long."
"No,no"-i Tim answered ,almost fier cely;"No no I will not give her up, now that I have her in my arms.I am not very tired.I do not feel her weight very much , I do not feel it any more than if she was a mere baby, and if I did, think you I would not do it just the same--I who have so longed to hold h er, and Jenn ie as I did and do now.Go away for a time Angelinia dear and leave us alone again."
So Angelin ia Aronburg went away a third time, and busied herself below with some military code which a spy had brought to her, and while she worked in the plan room below, Tim sat in the chamber above, holding the little sleeping Princess, untill his limbs were cramped and numbed and ached with intolerable pain while rin gs of fire danced before his eyes, and in his ears there was a humming sound, and a fullness in his head, as if all the blood of his body had centered there.And still he did not move, lest he should awaken the sleeper, but sat as motionless as a figure carved from stone, and sometimes shutting his tired eyes and again fixing them with a steady gaze upon the upturned face resting on his arm.Two hours and a half had gone by, and Violet and Catherine began to think he should have a rest and let them lay her on the bed, when Joice at last awoke and said very sweetly and kindly;;
"I have been asleep I'm sure, and feel so much better.How good in you Tim dear to hold me and Jennie so long.It must have tired you very much.Thank you dearest Tim."
And taking the boys pallid face between both h er hands, Joice kissed it lovingly, and her sisters did the same thus paying the tired boyscout for his two hours and a half endurance .Though still dreadfully sad at on heart Joice was much better after that long sleep, and was able to do what everyone wish wished was to cry herself into another sleep after ward at night.Jennie herself did not awaken untill morning, but the awful spell which bound the two so relentless ly was broken, and though their grief did not go they nevertheless improved steadily both in health and spirits, but would let neither Angelinia Aronburg nor Tim leave her.
"I or Jennie might sink right back into that dreadful nervousness if you go away."she said."I and my sisters need you both to keep us up--Angelinia to cheer us by day, and Tim to soothe us to sleep at night, when the world is the bla k blackest, and Penrods dead face seems t o so close to mine that I can almost feel its icy touch, and can hear his bitter cry for me and my ~~sister~~ sisters. Only Tims song can drown that cry, which I think will haunt me and my sisters forever. ""Q"
So the two famous child scouts stayed, Angelinia busying herself with the military code work, which spies and scouts persisted in bringing to her as soon as they h eard she was free to do anything of that sort, and Timothy Groveton devoting himself to Violet, and her sisters, to whom to cheer them and try to make them forget their sad loss he talked of the daus when he first entered the scriv service as a boyscout. Violet, and her sisters were never tired of hearing of Tims exploits in his earlier career, and the same story had to be told many times ere Jennie or any of her sad sisters were satisfied.
"It makes us think of all our own adventures to hear all this"Jennie said to Tim, as they sat together by the fire light in their room, and Catherin e Lee who also now was with them had been describing a dress, which she said Violet and her sisters should wear."I like to see you and your sisters in lovely uniform dresses of that kind, and you would be happier too I am sure.But dear Princesses don.t keep on grieving so for Penrod Penrod your good brother, I don't believe that letter, surely a boy who has been so good to you and your sisters cannot meet with such luck.It has often been said all those who had been good to you and your sisters never met bad luck, and I don't believe it was even him.I know Penrod your dear brother loves you little princesses very much and have often shown it to you before.He therefore for your sakes would not do anything rash that would cause this when he knows how it would grieve you.He never was reckless though brave as he was.Did he Jennie love you more than your other sisters."?

"Yes,--yes--and he sure ought to, and called her his little Daisy and Daisy the same, that was his pet name for Daisy, and Jennie too"Violet herself replied and Angelinia Aronburg rejoined;

"Daisy is such a sweet name.I always wished it were mine, though my strange nick name fashioned to me by the enemy"Gertrude Angeline" does very well.I don't mind it because Gertrude was a saint, the well known famous Saint Gertrude, and "Angeline "pertains to something to the nature of something Angelic.I like pet names so much though the enemy didn't mean those as pet names.They were to be insults but did no good for they were not to me.Did you ever have one, Catherine.I hardly know what could be made of your name Christinia if that was only an assumed name though Catherine is good being the name of another Saint?"

Catherine Lee was gazing steadily into the fire, and did not at once reply, and when at last she did, she said;

"By the enemy I've been called "The little daughter of Satan because I was so mean to the Glandelin ians."

"The little daughter of Satan"everyone exclaimed, starting suddenly."That's an unpardonable insult.Who used to call you that?"Tim himself demanded."Was it general John Manley."

"Not a muscle of Catherines face moved, though her voice did tremble a little as she replied;;;

"Yes, there was more dirty sentiment in it and in his nature than any one would suppose who even have seen or known him.He would be more fond of seeing me captured than you dear Prin cesses."

Just then the boyscout Pierre came in bringing candles and a moving cart of good size with the suppoer supper of the princesses and three child scouts on it, and the strange conversation was brought to a close, nor was it resumed again, for after tr ee Mildred Maxwell too came up(pup) and sat with the beautiful but sad girls, and Tim untilll the former Angelinia Aronburg asked to be excused, and entered to her room .:::..!:

Jennie was the first one of the last one to go to bed and before she did so she recieved a mysterious letter, which was addressed by so strange a name that she kept saying the name over and over to herself, after Angelinia Aronburg had left her, and when at last she was in btd bed it repeated itself again and again in her brain, while a horrible suspicion, the exact nature of which she could not define, was forcing itself into her mind. To sleep was impossible, and with all her old wakefulness upon her, she tossed restlessly from side to side, untilll she heard the clock strike one.(under the sun)

"I surely cannot li e here."she said it to herself, and putting on her dressing gown she drew her chair to her grate, where the fire which Pierre had replenished just before she went to bed was still burning, and with her face buried in her little hands,, began to think such thoughts as made the drops of perspiration stand thickly upon her forehead and about her lips.

"Who was the one called by that name who wrote to me?" she asked herself. Surely it was nothing about the secret danger, they were facing, that would be too horrible.The letter too could surely not come from Jennie Turner, who was the best also of girl spies and the chief recruiting officer , and it was not like a great and dutiful boyscout like Fredrick Johnson, to think of asking her to write any such letter to Violet or her sisters and yet to direct it personally to her Jennie Vivian.There too may be other Jennie Turners in the world.The writer of this letter no doubt was some bright eyed bright faced girlscout of humble origin, who may have known of the unseen danger of she and her sisters as much as Catherine Lee did, and probably had been advised by her friends to write a secret letter to her that is Jennie, and possibly all those who knew of the secret danger were more interested and worried about the Vivian Princesses than there may be necessary for to be.That was all, and therefore Jennie believed herself foolish to be so disquieted.Thus Jennie reasoned, or tried to, but all the time a terrible fear was tugging at her heart, and she was living all over again that dreadful de t death scene on the beginning of th e battle of Ophelia when as she and her sisters found out , how Joe Greene made Angelinia Aronburg faithfully promise to take advantage of anything that might come to her knowledge for the sake of Violet, and her sisters.Jennie had thought at first, that he meant that Gerald Starring and his Confederates were within the christian lin es, of whom h e had never had the chance of tellin g "Gertrude Angeline" and Jenn ie believed that the great girl spy and leader had forgotten that long ago.But in fact she had not and allthe time since had been secretly working on it.Th en came the mystery concerning Catherl Catherine Lee and for military purposes the con ceal ment of her identity,, but she Jennie Vivian had recovered from that and so had her sisters, except Violet, who was still upset and more so now because of the sad death of Penrod, and still there was that nameless terror at her heart, as she sat alon e in her room, while the clock struck the hour, two and three, and the fire in the grate grew lower, and the winter night though though outside very warm seemed to her to grow thicker, and colder around h er. To make sure there was no secret enemy in the room, she looked carefully under the beds of h er sleeping sisters, and under her own, examined closets and other openings but there was no one within theroom.At last when she could keep still no longer, she arose and pacing the room hurriedly beat the air with her little hands as she was wont to do under great excitement.

"What is it in the world I fear?"she asked herself?What danger is it that I suspect.There is no one within the room nor within the h ouse, it would be suicide for spies to try to get through these guards.I could see it in their faces what dangerous guards they are.Let me put this situation into words, and see if it sounds so very dreadful.I suspect that Catherlin e Lee---in her younger girl h ood--when I dare say she was rather pretty and piquain t and holy too after the war came on made it very necessary for herself to be such a spy as to attract the enemy upon her more than she ought to have done.What she might have done to the enemy causes the enemy to blame me and my sisters more than she for it. Such people as our girl spies are very cabitous, and do more than their duty too and if general Manley was at all familiar in everythin g she might have done in the past and did not show it, she probably was not cautious enough for once and maybe lost caution herself and therefore though escaping the foe accidentally through her work brought the unseen danger upon us, and now wishes to aid us and get us through the danger territory.But where can we go.The battle lines of Ophelia is too extended and not only impossible to get through but inaccessable. She probably too wrote to my Father concerning our plight, and he answered and at last made her see how she could get us out of the danger if she tries to use her reason.Of course it is said the enemy are fury stricken because I and my sisters kidnapped Adeldefob when already it was enough to kidn ap the prince adopted son of King Pricle in that raid.But we never captured or kidn apped any one by the name of "Adeldefob, and anyhow he is our brother in disguise.And then by way of helping her and her followers he must have gave her advice through the Gemini and because of our ru ses and loss and Violets illness we have not had the chance to question Catherine f rther.Yes that is probably the fact of th e case"she contin ued, and the tightness around her little h eart finally gave way.She could breathe more freely, and her hands ceased to beat the air as if she longed to grasp Satan and tear his face with her sharp finger nails and sink h er teeth into his arm.Then like lightning there flashed into her mind;

"But where was little Jennie, and where was Mildred Maxwell when Catherine Lee wrote those letters to my Father.Catherine told me that little Jennie was with little Angelin e my sister when at Evangeline St Claire she was almost dying from her lung wound, and that when I and her other sisters were taken from h er to add to her sad condition father was so angry about it because the Glandelinians took usfrom him and her that he sent Evans and others to try and find us and to give no quarter to those who had us in their possession.Oh if I on ly knew the truth------and I can know it in parth at least, by reading those letters which came to me this evening, I'm sure.At first I had decided not to read them unless circumstances should seem to make it absolutely necessary, and it is necessary I am sure.I and even my sister must know the truth or I'll lose my mind again.I am so unsettled since poor Penrod died, and to brood over this will make me crazy in time.Yes I must knowwhat those two strange letters sent to n me early yesterday evening contains ."""

Jenn ie Vivian, had reached a decision, and lighting her candle, she opened the door of the closet where she had put the two letters.There was a small wooden box on the upper shelf just where she had just left the letters, and where she could not reach it without a high step ledder.This she brought from a deep high closet in her room, and stepping half way up, stood a moment looking at the box while for some reason or other from a strange sound outside a feeling of terror began to take possession of her, and she felt as if the very dead hand of her brother were clutching her arm and holding her back.

"I do not believe I will do it now as I thought I saw a strange face looking into my window"she said as she came down from the step ladder with a sea sense of that dead hands touch still upon her arm.She went to the window, raised it and with pistol in hand looked out, but there was no one there.She closed it and after locking it securely drew the shade."It seems just as if either an angel or poor Penrod were speaking to me and bidding me lett the letters alone untill it was safe to read them.I wish I had burned them when I had found them and then I should not be tempted to do something where spies may overs overhear or see. Confound those Glandelinian spies anyway.If they would leave us alone we would let them alone.Suppose it was the face of one of those Professional International wspies looking into the window.And why not burn them now and so put it out the reach of spies after I read them"she continued as she stood shiverin g from fear and dread before the hearth, and listening to the hot southeastern winstorms which was beginning to beat against the windows.

A great southeast gale was coming in with a fog of smoke(de poke) and the shrieks of the wild southeast wind, which swept furiously past the house and seemed to Jennie to have in it a sound as of human sobbing.She looked at her sisters and wondered whether they were reallyasleep or pretending to be and secretly watching her motions.Better still for if she was surprised by a spy they at once could come to her aid for since their sorrow they were in no mood to be trifled with and neither was she. She thought of Penrod with a battlefield for her graveyard for his graveyard---of her mother far off now in Angelinia Agathia;where the violets and the daisies blossom all the year around---and then again of Penrod asleep in so dreadful a battle field of Ophelia with nothing to mark his grave if he did h have any, and her heart ached with a keener pain than she had ever felt before as she stood in her little slippers and childish dressing gown looking more like a celestial sprite in the strange shadows cast by the candle and yet she shivered as if it was cold but from excitement.And always above everything else the name Jennie was in her mind with a burning desire to solve the mystery and to know what the real secret unseen peril is, and what littl- Jannie and Catherine Lee had to do with it."

"I might as well read them and then burn them up before spies get hold of them"she thought,and going again to the closet and mounting upon the step ladder, she took the small box from the shelf and carrying it to the fire sat down upon the floor and opened it, and she removed the two letters.

"There can be no harm at glancing at the handwriting, and then if I see Catherine Lee as I sometimes may I shall know if they are the same."she thought, and took out the pink pasboardfrom the large purple envelope which seemed to her so different from anything pertaining to here If or to her own surroun dings.Looking at the outside beget an intense longing to know what was inside------to have her doubts confirmed or scattered to the four winds, and at last she made a desperate resolu resolve and she felt here herself growing very calm, and though the outside storm raged with greater fury, and the sobbing of the wind was wilder and louder than before and the air grew hotter, she neig neither heeded nor heard it, for she had opened the letters, and selecting that which bore the date furthest back, began slowly to read.and as she read she forgot how warm she was,----forgot that the fire was going out--forgot the fearful storm that shook the solid foundations of the great house, and screamed like so many demons past the win dows---but did not forget that Penrod was dead on the Ophelia battlefield, despite the fact that so horrible were the sen sations crowding upon her and overmastering every thought and feeling save the one dreadful conviction that now she kn w know what the danger she and her sisters were in , and that the knowledge paralyzed for the time every other sensation..

The letters were written at different times but of the Month of December with an interval of some weeks between two of them, but all w r were dated at Angelinia Agathia, where the writer seemed to be some myste mysterous spy for in the first letter he said;

"Your sistuation dear princesses so far u k unknown to the foe suits me and you exactly, and are very pleasant and a constant reminder of your kidn kindness and loyalty to your Blessed Country the way your have and are serving it when in real fact you would have been safer in far away Abbiesannia.I have found a strong trusty spy woman who gives me help and steys with me, and if I could see you and your sisters more often I should be quite content --only I can never forget the sweet little sister of yours Angeline, who nearly died in Catherines arms believing in her as the best of all girlscouts of which she really was and who through her and Jennie Angeline no doubt came out of the effects of her lung wound and is with you hale and hearty to day. What would little Jann ie say if she knew what is going on now since this war draws to a very bad turn in events? Sometimes I think she is here in my room watching me, and then I'm full of longin g for her, and wish that she would come to me.no be careful Princesses and watch out for Manley and His Confederates.He thinks you and your sisters have kidnapped a Glandelinian boyscout known as "Adeldefob"and is sending lots of agents and spies to try and assassinate you little girls."

A friend."

"Th at was Catherine disguised as a boy sure, for Angeline almost died in her arms"Jennie whispered, faintly while a prickly sensation was in every nerve ,and her lips quivered convulsively.And still she read on , taking next the second letter, the one which had contained the lock of Angelines hair, and which was written two or three months after the battle of Evangeline St Claire and she wondered how it got to be amon g these as she never put it there.Evid ntly Evidently Rodney Graves had been in Angelinia Agathia, or in Evangeline St Claire, and seen the writer and Jannie too, for she spoke of his recent visit and the great pleasure it had given her.It was in this letterthat she called herself Christain Francis, and had written;

"Through my carelessness I have been wounded by a Glandelinian spy and since then had been sick most of Me the time since you were here, and that is why sir I did not answer your letter at once.Yes sir in times past Violet and her sisters were so kind to me and treated me with so much tenderness that I cannot help believing that they mean to make me some day on e of their chief of girlscouts before the world, just as they said they would make me one before heaven, and sir they did.But Mr Rodney Graves they are now in a great secret peril which I cannot fathom and wish you would keep your promise as you said and have your members find out what it is and tell me so I can warn the prin cesses in time and hold them.But why put it off any longer.Can you not bring your famous man Hendro Berger here.Oh if you could take me to Angelinia Agathia.You say that Violet, and her sisters are too pretty to be harmed in any way and too good to be made in unjust sorrown.You praised theirbeautiful eyes and hair when you were here, and had h me sent angelines locks to her sisters.Well dear Mr Rodney Graves if you can prove in what you said by helping me prevent this unseen danger.And Heaven will reward you.

"Your little Christine Lee."

"That's the treas Angelinia Aronburg retained." Jennie whispered.

But there was still another letter, and she read it while every hair of her head seemed to stand on end and instead of burning with the heat there was in the room, she shook as if she was cold as sh e devoured the contents, which threw such a flood of light upon what had gone before and what was happening happening and going to happen now, and which she had far from suspected.She had read enou gh to hate all the demons and lost souls of hell, but so almost slightly admire them for the fact that she believed they were saints in comparison to the Glandelinian generals, and to make her hate still more all thin ge wicked, all things cruel, and almost hate even the existance of t he very Glandelinian nation itself, the she felt was most to blame, but she had no suspicion of the real st ate of things untilll she began to read the fourth l etter which showed great physical weakness on the part of the writer.

"Dear Mr Rodney Graves"it began"I have been so sick that the spy woman who attends me thought I should die.I was shot twice by Glandelin ians in my escapade when I discovered what their real intention is to the secret plans here as to the Vivians girls unseen danger.I am better now, though still so weak from loss of blood and pain of the wounds as scarcely be able to hold my pen. But I must tell you of the secret danger I found out and please for Gods sake sir employ all your Gemini to do the best they can to either avert it or dely delay it untill I warn them.Little Jannie also kn ows and who now helps me to go through with this, and who stayed by my side when I was wounded.""

What f"Jennie exclaimed aloud, and clasping both hands to her forehead, as if some brutal man had struck her a stunning and heavy blow there. "What does she say. A little girl took care of me when I was woun ded------that was----that was--Jannie."

She could scarcely articulate the last word, for her tongue was thick and parched and in her ears was a sound worse than the roar of the hot southern winds outside.

"Oh,oh"she cried, throwing up her hands as if in quest of some support, then they dropped helplessly at h er side, and she fell forward upon her face with the blood gushing from her nose and staining her dressing gown.H ow long she lay in this position she did not know, for since the clock struck three she had taken no note of time, but when she came to h erself the cold gray of the early dawn was stealing into the room, and far away in the direction of the kitchen helrw she heard the sound of some one stirring.The fire was out, and also the candle was out, and she waschot, and sweating profusely and also she was a little stiff, and bewildered, and could not at first remember what had happened w and why any of her sisters did not attend to her when she fell.But it was evident that earlier that night they had cried themselves to sleep after retiring and were too fast asleep to know what had happened for she saw they were not awakened.But then it came back to herwith the rustling of he the letter, which she still ha held in her han d------came a terrible pain which made her cry out faintly as she staggered to her feet and lighted another candle, for she had not finished the letter yet.But she ifinished it at last and laid it with the others while there swept over her a feeling of delightmingled with the horror she had first experienced.Poor little Jannie was that littl e girl who attended Catherine, and won Violet and her sisters were sure every one would love because every one was fond of children like her.

"Yes that was little Jannie"she said"And if so she is a little h eroine in ours eyes.Does she know the secret danger I and my sisters are in I wonder?said Catherine Lee t ll her, the day h she was so seriously wounded, and is that the reason little Jannie had seemed so nervous and different since--seemed to fear for us nocex exceedingly, as if w she was afraid for our saftyYes she knows, an I shall tell her if we see her and also my sisters that I know too, and that for what she has done for us since she was rescued f m from the foe lines I and my sisters love her better than ever.„he is not to blame if s e could not save us.No one can censure her, or dare cast a slight upon her, for she has done more for me any my sisters than even our beloved brother has ont he admits it himself when he was alive, and I and my sisters shall proclame her as a little heroine, a greater little heroine than even I or my sisters, and after the war if she still lives she shall have a place with us in our beautiful p beutiful palace, and we shall share our fortunes with her her, and if possible if papa will say yes, make her take our name.But since Catherine knows the secret danger she I know will help us.but I' afraid we cannot stay in this territory anot her day.We could not endure to remain here, and thus bereaved of all I and my sisters have lost in losing Penrod, and commny friends already killed in these awful battl e battles.Catherine Lee must go with us.Through the letter I learned Glandelinia was false to God, false to us and father, false to the whole world, and false to me, and where were I and my sisters when the war broke?Catherine herself could not remember.I believe she once took me and my sisters to Pandora Abbieannia, and not to Angelinia Aronburg as I supposed.I have wasted too much time in trifling with l little matters, but I know Catherine now, and shall deal with the situation accordingly.Between all girlscouts she and Jennie are the greatest and could with her following make the enemy cudil before her.I'll select her as our guardian untill we escape from the unseen menace which I kn ow what it is."

She in substance were Jennie's thoughts, as she sat in the hot cheerless room, while the morning lights crept in at the win dows, and she could see herself distinctly in the glass upon the mantle.It was a very white h haggard face which looked at her from th the mirror, and her own eyes almost frightened her with their expression.About her mouth and on the front of her dress were spots of blood which had dropp d from her nose while she was unconscious, and which added to her unnatural appearance.The stains upon her face she carefully washed away, and exchanging h r dressing gown for a fresh on e, crept into bed for despite being warm she was dizzy and faint, while in spite of the wildexcitement under which she was l ol laboring, there was stealin g over her a strange heavy stuper, which try as she might she could not throw off, and when at the usual hour Piree Pierre came to make the usual fire to keep the room from being damp he found her sleeping so soundly while her sisters were already finishing their toilet, that he went softly out at their signal and left her alone.And h our l ater after her sisters had gone out to breakfast in the dinning room Angelinia Aronburg looked in but Jennie was still asleep, nor did she awaken when as caust iously as possibl e some one came in to look at her and see that she was not ill. Angelinia Aronburg could not see Jennie's face, as h it was turned tward the wall, and so she had no suspicion of the frightful storm which had swept over the poor little princess during the night.The letters still lay upon the table, and Angelinia Aronburg saw them there but did not touch them or dream what they contained, and afterputting the room a little to rights she went quickly and qui t quietly out leaving her cousin to sleep untilll the clock struck eleven thirty. Then with a start Jennie awoke, and opening her eyes looked about her with that vague sense of abject my misery and pain we all have felt at many periods of our lives when the first thought on awakening was;

"Why is it I feel so badly to day I wonder!"

"To Jennie it came very soon when she poor thing felt so badly, and with a mo n moan she held her face in h er pillow, and something like a sad cry escaped her as she whispered;

"I thought Glandelinia was bad and untrue to God and us, and now-I know that nation to be much more bad than even any one ever could fathom.Glandelinia is false to god, a menance to the whole world, false to the world, and doubly false to our father mother and us, and Glandelin ia had repudiated and disowned our fair christian nation before this awful war brokevout.something is wron g some where.„hat made dear "Adeldefob"alas my brother in disguise, now dead, bring little Jennie out of the Glandelinian camps like a little man he was and first tell me of her after Gertrude Angeline brought her the rest of the way?why did he say to me way before the battle of Evangeline St glaire, and also to my sisters;

"Princesses dear,Inhave averted a great wrong, a grave disaster which all Glandelinians think of no consequence, but nevertheless is a gravest sin on record-for which I will am make amends in the place of the sinful evil doers.I have rescued this dear little child slave, and I w ished to bring her out of the foe lines to make her a good child s scout for our cause, and if she proves our methods with her and proves her mettle she shall share equally with us in honor and glory as if no cloud ever hung over her birth.Will you dear princesses let her come into your girlscout scouts ranks.Oh he had done all this, and how gladly I and my sisters did take her, and yet she had been since then after out adventure with Stirring within the foe lines striving to spare us all this pain.Oh you cruel heartheless Glandelinia, you have death most cruely with all your once good sister States and been doubly cruel to those who deserved ithn ot ."

Jennie seein g her sisters gone, and hearin g one of them calling to her had rising by this time and was makin g her toilet for she meant to appear as natural natural as possible to Catherine Lee and her sisters untill the moment came for her to speak and know every portarcular of the unseen danger the letters didn't tell and get Catherines advice what to do.„hileWhile she was dressing, Mildred Maxwell came to the door but it was locked, and Jennie called to her;

"Excuse me Mildred if I do not let you in.I am not quite dressed, but shall come down very soon."

She was very white when she at last did go down to the dining room, and Mildred noticed it and said;

"Are you sick this morning Princess."

"„o Mildred dear.Why!"

"You are so pale as ashes and there are dark circles under your eyes.Oh Princess I am surely oh so sorry for you and your sisters.""andythinking only of poor Penrod as they only cause of Jennie's pale face and hollow eyes, Mildred drew Jennies head down upon her arm and smoothed the shining hair caressingly.

Then Jennie came nearer crying that she had since she first h eard that her brother Penrod was dead.Grasping Mildreds hand she sobbed hysterically for a moment, though no t cars came to cooling her aching eyeballs.

"I must not give way."she said"for I and also my sisters shall have a great deal to do to day.Where is Catherine Mildred.I must see her and I and her alone. Find her first, and bring her here, or no,, on sen second thought we will go into the council room.No one will disturb us there, and we must be alone.Call Catherine Mildred, I cannot wait."

What did it mean , and wh why was Princess Jennie so strange this morning like one unsettled this hot morning! This is what Mildred asked herself as she w nt in quest of Catherine, to whom she gave Jen n ie's message.

"What can so what of me now I wonder!"Catherine Lees thought as she went to the council room, where she foun d Jennie standing before a large statue of the Blessed Virgin, where a moment before she had just finished her mornin g prayers.As she turned Catherine saw that her face looked very white and wan while her eyes were a peculiar expression as they fixed themselvesupon Catherine Lee.Then Jennie curled herself in a large easy chair which she did no more than one quarter fill, and it was the same chair and the sa me same position Violet herself had occupied on the occassion of one of she and her sist rs sisters friendly int erviews with Timothy Groveton , who had stood leanin g his elbow upon the mantle while he looked at her and her sisters curiously and lovingly.something brought that day back to Violets min d and a sob which was more for the dead brother than for the secret she held e as she bade good morning to Catherine Lees who said;

"What is it dearest Princess, darling angel of Abbieannia."

This is or was the names Catherine had often applied to her and her sisters and Violet, and her sisters had liked it, but now as she remembered the letters and told Catherine she sh uddered, and when Catherine laid her hand upon Jennies head and asked if it ached, she cried out;

"I don 't know Catherine dear whether my head aches or not.But my heart is aching with a pang to which physical pain is nothing.I and my sisters who are so good t yet suffer a purgatory since the warvbegan.Catherine I know the whole now--- you are really Catherine Lee, the most dangerous spy against Glandelinia ever employed in our fathers service as a spy, who wrote to those letters to my father, and had him sent them to me.You know the danger.I know the danger. My sisters yet do not. I called you to me to settle plans as to what to do. Shall we flee or shall we stick it out inthe face of all the odds.I don't believe in doing things sucidal, yet I don't believe in being yellow either. After you give sound advice I'll hold council with my i sisters."

This was not at all the way in which Jennie had int n intended to commence.she at first was going to come to her to it gradually, or as she expressed it to herself"„unt the situation down.But when she saw Catherine, and remembered how th the whole of Glandelinia was huntin g she and her sisters down over the "Ade lefob"affair, her hot but righteous holy passionate temper against such cruel wickedness and evil rose up at once, and she blut blurted out what she knew and then waited the result.„he had expected that maybe Catherine would tell her that she and her sisters would be better off to leave all thin gs and flee.But Catherine did nothing of the sort.Quiet and gentle as she usually seemed, there was still in her a fierce fiery Abbieannian spirit , which when aroused to anything was something akin to the anger angel which ruled Jennie or her sisters when in their righteously angry moods at all wicked things in general.„hen found out to be really Catherine Lee assuming the name of Chrisinia she was born in mind and body, and had shown only nervousness and agitation, for non e of the Vivian Girls had approached her as Jennie did now. There was no disquiet, no fear, n o unusual suspicion or horror in her manner when she said "You are really Catherine Lee my dearest friend." she had been merely excited and slightly reproachful, but n ow she knew everything, was terribly angry at Glandelin ia and all wickedness and Hell in general for whom she blamed for Glandelin ia's doings, and attacked in words the Glandelinian nation with so much bitterness, and shrunk away from the name "Glandelinia" with so much loathing, that Catherine was roused to the fa ct of knowing now what sort of a little girl Jenn ie was, though at first she was stricken dumb, when she heard of the letters she had remembered so well and which would tell what she had intended to tell as soon as the Orin cesses would p ermit her. Standing but a few feet from Jennie, she gazed at her for a moment with a pallid face on which all the worse m emotion s of her Abbigann ian nature were visible as she too for a moment gave a secondary glance at a map of Glandelin ia hanging for some reason of following the face movements in the room. And when at last she spoke it was not in the low half deprecating apologetic voice habitual to her but the tone was loud and clear, and defiant in which she said;

"What letters have you seen dear Princess, and when did your Father send them!""

Her manner so different from what had been expected somewhat enthused Jenn ie, though her thoughts of glandelin ia and her cruel wicked ways of carryin g on the war made her still more angry, and she replied with all the astern ess and dignity it was possible for her to assume;

"As the saying is "Walls have ears" catherine it does not matter just now to you or me or even my d ear sisters where I got them but I ll say I'll tell you later in a code writing which no one but us and they will understand. For the s k sake to keep things very secret it is therefore only sufficient to you and I and my sisters that I have recieved them, and know of the bare faced treachery of most of the Glandelinian p eople backed by the more treacherous nation called Glandelinia, and how glandelin ia also must have decided other nations who trusted her so implicitly, and who believing her good and our country in the wrong had secretly gave her aid, when all the time Glandelinia was vile and low. You Catherine too knew when you held once or twice my dying sister Angeline, held her h ead upon your bosom, what Glandelinia was at heart, and that if she died all the Glandelin ian generals would be gloating over her dead form, and through some miraculous means you were able to make it possible that she is with us to day, you even brought Glandelinia's spite down upon you for caring and training little Jenn ie from a child slave into as good a girl scout as you are and kissed her with lips which shall often meet mine and my sisters, and t hen when you heard of the secret danger we were in you wrote a secret code letter to my father, and called yourself "Christinia Francis, and through that h e knew by his strict investigators what was going to h appen, and whole sale arrests of all strangers not on th e roll call was made. "Ont man like him can never love a n ation like Glandelinia, and my father is not an exception." Manley wants to be in his stead, and Gerald Storring wants Penrods place. Therefore if we ever win this awful war Father said he'll cast Glandelinia off as we do a worn out garment - he hates as to say the very wicked thoughts of Glandelin ia, hates the very name of Satan and his followers, and repents now so bitterly that he didn't wage a no quarter war against Glandelin ianeqrmies when these dreadful slaughters of innocent children once began. I see it all now, and understand his remorse two weeks ago when we last saw him and we were so short a time together. H e was thinking of the millions of children who had been so horribly butchered mostly all child slaves no doubt, and his thoughts of the horror was like a scorphion, stinging him at times to almost madness and making him long to tell me of the danger I should avoid for his sake but he knew where our duty lay for we would tell him, if we stay at home so must he. But he could not broken and sad as he was, he could not t all me or my sisters, even when he knew how much he loved me and my sisters and how much we loved and hon ored h im but h e made us promise solemnly to do whatever we can to prevent massacres if we ever come upon any in time or ever found it out w one was to begin, and I promised and I'll keep the promise too, for I feel bitter and hard against all cruel and slaughtering Glandelinian murderers, who tried to often kill me and my sisters in the same horrible way, and were Manley facing me or my sisters now I should repel him so hotly, and say that as lon g as he never repents which we had prayed so often h e would do for he was once our friend, we could never be able to forgive him, as we never can wicked Glandelin ia if she doesnt repent whom the world once loved and respected, but whom all nations now kn ow to be false in everything, to God, and the whole world in general, and mostly to my father, m and mother, and me and my sisters. Through their actions the Glandelinian generals have often made me and my sisters believe a lie from untill I nor my sisters nor any of my relations can credit nothing anything of Glandelinia has been told us, and am ready to doubt if anything good will ever come of it, and also am ready to doubt if I or my sisters will ever see this awful war come to a finish in our own favor, or if cruel Glandelin ia can ever be beaten wit hout outside help."

"Glandelin ia cannot win. Somebody must have deci ev e decieved you there." Catherine Lee (not the fl a flea) exclaimed.

"But it doesn't seem as if we are in much good favor at present." Jennie continued holdin g her breath for the answer, which did not come at on e once. While Jenn ie had been talking so rapidly, Catherine had stood rigid and immovable, with a strange look upon her face and for several moments or more there seemed to be a gleam in her eyes such as is usually seen in the eyes of insane persons when excited by something they are becoming dangerous. Jenn ie's sudden and unexpected declaration that she had recieved the letters, and her attack upon Glandelinia had so surprised, con founded and bewildered Catherine, that she felt her brain reeling at th e thought of more peril she and her sisters were placing themselves in, and was con scious of a feeling as if she too herself were losing control of herself, and should not long be responsible for what h she said. And when Jennie spoke of her suspicion that Glandelinia could probably easily win the w ar unless Angelin ia and her war torn nation g t gets outside help, she roused herself to the st situation and of her own ip opinion, and answered, but at Jennie's next question she hesitated, while the blood came suring into her face which was purple in spots before she replied;

"No Jennie you are wrong you are mistaken, you must remember in the long run our country will make Glandelin ia rue the day she started this conflict and your father will make Glandelinia pay dearly for what you and your sisters suffered because of the war. Glandelinia shall pay tenfold" and Catherines voice was hard and pitiless, while the gleam in her eye was wilder, and more like a mad girl as she went on;

"My d ear Princess Jenn ie Vivian you must be careful in most of the things you and your sisters do for if you drive the crazy wicked Glandelinian generals too far, they may do what the whole world will me sorry for, and what you and your si sisters will be sorry to experience. We must go slow, and wait, for you know the saying, that the world will t urn when treading upon, and as wicked as Glandelinia is we have to be careful for such a nation driven to the highest fury now will not be pressed too sorely without crushing at us like a world disaster. The whole Glandelinian nation is wicked and sin ful it is true, and she is also false to God and the whole world, but for the safty of yourself and your sisters you must use caution. N t Not everybody, not even your best friends, brothers or your parents kn ows all you and your sisters have totally suffered in the past because of this insane war, only God knows--knows of the two or more years of un speakable anguish, and terror and horror that you and your sisters have gone through, and there is not a boy or girl scout or soldiers would who would not be glad to un do the past for you princesses if they could, but it is too late and too you have found the letters it seems which proves what a grave peril you have gone through. When time is ripe you must get with your sisters and I and Angelinia Aronburg--- don't look at me that way Jennie I, I'm not suggesting you or your sisters to do anything that seems cowardly, for in this case it ain 't rather before Heaven it is rank suicide if if you do not go. Your Father would h ave been foolish if he had not sent those letters to you, and when you do go it will be foolish for you to keep them, you ought to burn them and nothing else. In helping me to sav you and your sisters it shows he cares more for you and your sisters than I or any one else would have supposed---that in his good heart there is something which bin ds him to you and your sisters" And over Catherines face as she said this there came a smile of pleasure and gratification in the thoughts that the great and loveng Emperor Vivian had sent her own letters to him, to Violet and her sisters and that Jennie h erself got them, and that they proc produced th e desired restult.

The look made Jennie more surprised than ever before for she interpreted it aright, and yet her pride rose up against even fleein g from unseen dangers for she nor her sisters n ever fled from dangers yet.

"I nor my sisters n ever cared to do anything rash." she said "At first though I thought the secret danger was only a fancy yet things have changed. The Glande li i Glandelin ian generals never cared for you no more than they cared for me. Recently by some one I and my sisters were told if we did flee from the unseen danger even with you as our companion, since Penrod is dead we would only run right plump into it. "

"It is false, absolutely false." Catherine exclaimed, taking taking a step forward with flashing eyes, before even which the devil would have quailed. "It is false. So ebody et either tried to hookwink you or made a mistake. The danger is what you have learned off through the letter out to remain will mean disaster. The report is false or a mistake. I have every suspicion that something is wrong somewhere, and you Jennie of all others, should not listen to the words of any one whom you do not know. Violet did not and yet here is a greater danger."

"Then you have told Violet." Jennie exclaimed, and before Violet or Catherine could answer, Violet herself came to the door asking;

"Did you call me Jennie?I thought I heard my name."

"No, no, but come in anyway "Catherine almost screamed. "Come in I must warn you and you must warn your sisters. You and your sisters are in such danger that from fear of it I am losing my senses, and with you and your sisters in the unseen peril I shall tell no that you can all take chances of getting away before it is too late. After I tell all I'll help you. Tina and Gertrude Angelina will be your body guard. come in Violet do."

Violet advanced a little further into the room, where she stood, with a blanched pale cheek and wondering frightened eyes gazing first at Catherine and then at Jennie, who stretched her arms toward her, and with quivering lips and a voice full of unutterable pathos and love said;

"Violet my dear dearest sister. We are in grave danger. Come to me and hear of the letters."

But Violet did not move, and her face grew whither and more death like, as she whispered to Catherine;

"What does she mean?Have you told her?does she know it all."

"Hush Violet dearest. No she does not know it all." Catherine replied, and then sinking into a chair and bowing her head upon her hands, Violet exclaimed;

"Thank God and His Blessed Mother for that. Oh Jennie dear I do not know what you know or how you have learned of it, or what letters you are talking about but if you love me and my sisters, if you care for your own happiness, seek to know no more of the secret danger. You'll be the same way I was. I'll never tell my sisters. Let the matter end here and lets make preparation at to disguises ourselves and go away from this territory and take Gertrude Tina and some others with us, and let Catherine be our special guide. I shall be content what that."

She did not look up, but sat with her head bowed down as if with grief or shame or horror or fright. Jennie thought it the latter, and crossed the room where Violet sat, and sending a prayer prayer for strength knelt beside her wounded both arms around her neck and said;

"Violet dearest, I know all about it, and that makes me love you and my other darling sisters more dearly than before, and what ever secret danger there is shall make no difference with me and I shall never tell the rest either until oh so long after we have passed through it. We had no part in the kidnapping of the one Manley believes is really "Adelaide" it was our brother we rescued from him, it is crazy Manley may God forgive the poor fool, and this nation Glandelinia; whom I am sorry to say exists on this earth and so close to our own soil, and whom I'm also sorry to say which Abbicannia is her mother country, whom she probably never can forgive."

"This Glandelin ia." And Catherines voice rang out awfully clear and distinct, as she threw her arms out toward the two princesses. "Say no more of this cruel Glandelinia nor pity poor Abbicannia because she is glandelinia's mother country, Angelinia's daughterhood to Abbicannia is as good as Calverin ia's. Yes better, Princesses for Angelinia State is the one safest for you and your sisters to go through till you reach Angelinia Agathia. There you will be safe and---"

"S She did not finish the sentence for with a wild cry, violet put Jennie's clinging arms from her neck, and rushing to Catherine, laid her hand upon her lips.

"Catherine, Catherine" she cried in a voice of intense entreaty. "Are you mad. Keep still. I saw a face at that window. Somebody might overhear us. Have you forgotten your vow, your promise to us to keep all secrets from prying ears and eyes. Will you be careless and cause disaster outright. Don't please don't talk so loud."

"A face at the window. Surely you don't remember Violet I have all the time been talking in English." Catherine answered fiercely. "You You ask if I'm crazy. Yes and well I may be-I who have seen what you and your sisters suffered all these years before and during this cruel way war. How old are you and your sisters Violet?How long since were you born in Pna Pandora. There's a buzzing in my brain, and I do not quite remember."

She was softening a little now, and taking advantage of this violet took her hand to lead her from the room saying very gently;

"Poor little Catherine you are not quite right to day. Why worry so much about us. You are as much as we. Come with me and rest, and you Jennie dear my dearest sister don't don't mind anything she may have said. She is not responsible when she is this way."

"put in and I certainly do mind." Jennie said suddenly stepping before the door, through which Violet would have passed. "I do mind and I cann ot forget, and will not. Catherine has said at a strange thing to me and of the nations situation---thing as she must explain. If the Glandelinians are really threatening us with such unseen dangers as I have already found out, and which you too have found out, as she herself affirms, and as all the child scouts would have to go with us too, where shall we go if we have to flee."

"I tell you Jennie dear she is not in her right mind, and you are not to believe what she says." Violet replied(pled) trying gently to put Jennie aside, so that she might lead Catherine Lee-Not the flea) from the room.

But Jennie stubbornly kept her place by the door, against which she leaned heavily, while her breath came in quick gasps, and her voice was unsteady as she said again and to Catherine Lee, whose eyes were strangely fastened upon her as she held Catherine by a strange spell with her own eyes which she could not resist.

"Tell me Catherine dear as you hope for our safty in this time of the year, is also Angelinia Aronburg in and little Jennie and others like Angelina Riches and Jennie Turner in the same danger!"

"Yes, you and your sisters and those you mentioned are in the same danger." Catherine replied as Jennie still held her with her awful celestial like ethereal eyes. "They are in the same danger and so an Angelinia Aronburg your own cousin."

"Radcliffe too!" was the next question, and violet then cried out;

""Oh I hope not. Oh dearest Blessed Mother have pity on them---remember all it involves."

Hush violet dear, Be still, and let me know the worst. I can stand it." Jennie said lifting her hand with the manner of one who was born to command and who would be obeyed at any cost she says. "Tell me Ch Catherine" she continued-"Is Radcliffe is also in the same danger."

"No, because the enemy do not know who Radcliffe is."

"Are we then that is I and my sisters in a greater peril."

"No the peril you and your sisters are in is single."

"And is the peril threatening us here or elsewhere."

"Yes the danger in in this part of the country and within this camp mostly and Manley has many disguised secret agents who did succeed in getting their names into the register so they could answer the roll call and avoid detection and capture." Catherine replied with a great power in her voice and a sad half frightened expression in her pitiful face. Violet head released, her hold on Catherines arm, and sank upon the floor, where she sat with her knees drawn up(not down on the ups) her arms encircling them, her head resting upon them, and her whole body trembling as if with an ague chill. She and her sisters had done all they could to continue to avert this sort of awful unseen coming calamity. She appreciated the fact too that good Catherine Catherine Lee had done all she could, and had done her best to save her and her sisters from the crushing blow which she knew would or may fall upon them so ter crushingly, and of Heavens if she failed. Cruel Glandelin ia, in fact the whole Glandelin ian nation was a wild mis maniac or possessed for the time being, and was doing what the whole world was in apprehension of. If this story was a real fact and this war was really raging there is no doubt that throughout the whole world all Masons would have been said either for the Con version of foolish Glandelin ia, or for the sect victory of holy Abbicannia and the safty of its fair little Princesses which in this story alone was happening. Catherine too was telling Jennie, and yet it seemed to the three that even Heaven was powerless to prevent the coming disaster, that is it seemed, but evidently not so in the proper time. God waits, but when he does strike---

"So the Glandelin ian spies and agents have even fooled the registeration boards." Jennie repeated in in a whisper, which low as it was, sounded distinctly through the room, and told how the young Princess's heart was wrung with a mortal fear as she continued;

"Then if we are not in the greatest of this unseen danger, then who is?" For a moment there was a death like silence in the room, for poor Catherine half crazed from fear of the situation as what her was shrank from declaring that she knew would be the bitterest drag in all the bitter cup. How could she dare tell the truth you that young beautiful beautiful princess, who was so proud of her own nation but was proud of God more than any other and loved Him more, and who even in her pain and fear when every limp was quivering with nervous dread and excitement, stood up so erect before her like one born to command. But for their safty and the others safty she must do it now, things had gone too far to recede- but she had been compelled to tell too much not to tell the whole, and when Jennie asked again--"If I and my sisters are at in the greatest of the danger, then who is?" she answered;

"Your Mother." but she said it very softly and low, for her heart was full of a great pity and sorrow for the little Princess and her sisters too,- and over Jennie's face there came that pallid grayish look which comes upon the face of the dying when the death pang is hard to bear, and who writhed a moment in agony as a big worm writhes when put upon the red hot coals. She was still lookin g fixedly at Catherine, though she did not see her for there was a blackness before her wide open staring eyes, and in her ears there was a sound like the road roar of many waters when the skies are dark and angry overhead. For a second the scene around her had vanished aw away. She did not see her sister Violet upon the floor with her arms still en circling her knees and her h ead bowed upon them--did not see Catherine standin g so near to her, and who had spoken those terrible words, but strangely enough saw the far off wild battle of Ophelia and Penrods white face as it sank beneath the soil of the horrible battleground with a wild cry for her and her sisters upon h is lips. Mechanically sh e put her up her hand to brush that vision away and then the present came back to her with all it s horror so much worse than the death of Penrod had been and she remembered the words that Catherine had spoken,;

"..our mother is in the greatest danger."

"my--my--my-- mo--mo--t--her" she tried to say then she could speak but the words died away upon her whit e quivering lips in a kind of babbling sound, which was succeeded by a sort of hysterical laugh so nearly resembling imbecility, that Violet looked up and a cold sh d shudder curdled her blood as she saw the fa e face from which all resemblance to Jennie had vanished, and on which that ghastly, meaningless meanin gless laugh was still visible. frightened out of her wits. Violet struggled to her feet with a cry, and wound her arm around poor Jennie sayin g to Cath rine as she did so almost reproachfully;

Cat"Catherine you have destroyed her intellect. You have made my sister an imbecile."

But fortunately Violet was greatly mistaken. Jennie's mind was not destroyed, though for many hours she remained in that condition, when her reason seemed to be tottering and her whit e lips had n o poor power to frame th e words she wish ed to say. They did not send for an oryn doctor, though it was Catherines wish to do so but Violet said;

"No for our own safty we will not parade this dangerous secret before the world not just now anyway. I can bring her to h erself if anybody can, and when I do I shall if possible, persuade h er to go away with me and my sisters and have you and Gertrude Angeline act as guides and h eye little Jann ie with us. Oh wh y did you go and tell her!"

"Because I am angry at hated Glandelin ia, was temporarily crazy, and yet it was best for her and you and the rest that I should." Catherine replied. "Glande linias fury tward you all, provoked me as much as mass massacres of little children would have don, and roused in me an avenging angel which could not be quieted, and so I told her all; and I am glad, for now I carry no dreadful secrets which if I did foolishly and wrongfully would make my future days so full of p i pain and my nights one long black horror, if dis aster i ever came because I did not tell. I have told the truth--but do not fear for your dear mot her I and all my secret followers and the Gemini have provided against that--for I feel as if I were a sister to you, as if you and your own sisters were mine own flesh and blood--and the remembrance of the bright beautiful days when we played so delightfully together."

And as she said this, Catherines face glowed with excitement and her eyes shone with all the fire of her fresh l young girlshood. Violet, and her sisters had been dear to her as her own life, which she would at any time have given a thousand times if sh e ou could f for the little girls whom Glandelin ia had so wickedly wron ged; but with her good confession of their grave danger that h ad swept over h er a great wave of girlish love and tenderness for the the poor little girl who in her own room, whether Violet had taken her sat in the great easy chair,, motionless as a stone, with her hands lying helplessly upon her lap, and her eyes from which all th e sparkle and brightness were gone looking always from the window across the smoke clad hills and meadows to the spot where the tall evergreens marked soon the burial place of the many war dead. Sometimes Violet went and spoke to her. But Jennie did not answer untill late in the afternoon , when Violet came and stood between her and th e window. Then she said most entreatingly;;

"Move away Violet dear please do, please please. I am looking over to where poor Penrod lies on the bloody battlefield of Ophelia and thinking of all that happened before he died." Oh Violet dearest" and the poor little white face quivered, and the voice was very sad and piteous "Is a danger to the demon s worse than danger to us! Yet I told Our dear Blessed Lord I would forgive all wrongs, whatever it is, and from wherever it comes, and yet I will and from my heart, but oh it is so heard to do so that I must ask Gods's full strent strength of graces, and my heart is so bitter and hard tward cruel wicked Glandelinia, and all the wicked world except the good. Oh Angelin ia dearest she added" as An gelinia Aronburg came in ." You will help me and my sisters won't you. You will love us just a little, I could onot help it, and I and my poor sisters whom they d say do not deserve all this, we lo e love you so much. I and my sisters would have, and would stand by you in the face of the whole world, stand by me and my sisters, Angelinia dear, will you?"

She was looking at brave Angelinia Aronburg with her heavy beautiful pleading eyes, and her hands were lifted in supplication as she spoke, while her voice told how abased and humiliated she felt and how sad.. In a moment tearfully Angelinia Aronburg knelt beside her and was covering ht he little whit e hands with tears and kisses as she said of so sadly and yet so comfortingly;

"Jennie, Jennie, my love, my darlin g little angel Cousin, will I stand by you and your sisters! Will I love you and them. You might as well as ask if the sun will rise again as yo to question my love for you and my sist ers and your sist ers/ for you are as dear as if you were mine. It is very sweet to call you my little angel cousins, even though such aw dreadful shadow lies over us now, but with Gods Will and His Loving care, and His Blessed Mot hers kind loving Int ercession, that will soon pass away. There is brightness beyond and happiness too--upand Jennie you must not take it so hard and believe that the peril is so great as some may say or think.. and trust Catherine. She knows how and can save us all. She knows it now too and wonders at herself. You may believe that your dear mother is in such dire peril--but she has done all she could to avert it successfully--but the part that touched you and your sisters the closet----because-----because-------"

"Hush Angelinia dear" Jennie said, slowly withdrawing her hands from Angelin ia Aronburg and leaning back wearily in her chair. "Nothing can decieve me. My poor may may still be in dire danger and father too. I know what my secret peril is an and that of my sisters but Heaven knows I'll never reveal it even after we escape. General John Conley is not the main source of of our dreadful danger. The source comes from the main Glandelinian Government, and it is Glandelin ian Governmental agents and spies who seek to so frightfully destroy us. Adeldefob or the "Adeldefob kidpa kidnapping case" is not the only cause of it. We are considered a danger to the Glandelin ian nation and therefore the government seeks our destruction. To destroy us it is believed would cause our father to stop the war."

Here a shudder ran through Jennie's frame so long and deep that her teeth chattered as if she were seized with a chill, and her bothher hands and lips were purple with cold.

After a pause she contin ued;

"I think the hardest part of all is that we will have to make a flight from this region. It is not our will, Father and even our generals would compell us, or deport us by force to safty. There is no alternative, we got to do it.. They say even the whole world cannot forgive Glandelinia, even though the nations may have promised that they would. If Father would have at the beginn in g of this dangerous mad war forced us into obscuriety, where I and my sisters rightly belon ged, it would have been better; but now the fall h as crushed me as utterly as it had violet who recieved the news first. I will keep it secret, I'll not tell my sisters under no conditions and Violet will not either she vowed to me she would not. And my dear Cousin Angelin ia what of you! How came you in the same peril I and my sisters are in --you our dear cousin, while I and my sisters who were born of a great Emperor should be such saints and be angel possessed as they say, and yet suffer so much too, and it seems as if the world suffers with us. And how came wicked Glandelin ia in this posit ion---the wayward daughter nation of Abbieannia who raised herself to such a giddy height of propserty by her wicked child slave robbery and trade, that now in her foolish pride she holds herself more powerful and better than all the rest of the nation s, puts herself above God, and trys to war on our nation with the purpose of world conquest so she can crush out all Ch ristian religion. Why is it ? Do you know Angelinia! You are such a famous spy!"

"Yes An gelin ia Aronburg rep replied; "But it will be better for Catherine Lee to tell you."

"Catherine Lee! Do you tell me that she knows that too?" Jennie asked. "If she does it's good for it may settle wicked Glandelin ia-" and her voice at the latter words expressed all the bitter scorn which she then felt for wicked Glandelinia who had so injured her nation.

"Yes she knows plenty too which she could tell you." Angelinia answ r answered softly.

"she is one of the best s spies I have ever known, she told me that Abbieannia was sinned against most immensely and that of nations Our Blessed Lord has no bitterer enemy than Glandelinia" Violet herself put in. "If Glandelinia did not understand what she was doing there would be some excuse, but she does know what she is doing. Her former Kings were mad at God because of certain favors not being granted when prayed for, and that is the cause of Glandelinia's situation now. when th her kings fell into sin sh e fell with them.. Even n ow Glandelinia's wicked King Procile and h is followers and Royal Court are most in fault, and so are his cruel wicked generals. And Manley would like to kill our father and gets his place and rual rule Abbiegann is and make her if possible like Glandelin ia, but he would not be able to do so, they'd assassinate h im if he t ried that. Our nation is purer than many a christian person of to day elsewhere purer even than saints of the past, who now stands high in H eavenly Society. So Abbiegannia should and will win the war in the end and then your days will be far happier."

Violet was pleading for the nation, who had suffered the greater wrong from wicked cruel Glandelin is,, and Jenn ie and also Angelinia Aronburg listened wonderingly, while there came back to her Joe Green had said to Angelinia herself when dying on the battlefield of Ophelia too;

"If you find Violet or h er sisters save them from the unseen secret dangers. You know what they are and you can. Remember Glandelinia is morevto blame than even her wicked generals." At last Jennie said;

"Where is Catherine Angelinia?"

"She is down stairs praying before a Crucifix."

" "Ask her to come up will you Violet dear. No Angelin ia you stay h ere with me."

Violet found Catherine in the libary standin g by the window, with that gloomy abstracted look upon her ch childish face which she had often seen there before she learned the cause, and knew of the keen sorrow and fear always gnawing at h er heartstrings and making her life so wt wretched. Both Violet and Catherine knew that it seemed Glandelinia had done her worse to violet, and her sisters, and the whole Christian world in general indeed had done the worse apparently that she could. Catherin e too had told Jennie the truth; and though a great burden was lifted from her, and in one sense if Violet and her sisters would take her advice she therefore felt freer and happier, than she had felt since she learned of the peril, she was weighed down with a sense of sorrow remourse and regret, and filled with a awful regret of the future. The war was taking on an awful course growing in intensity and fury and violence and who could ever forget the horrors of Big Girl Knobl and Jennie Richee.?

That not only Violet and her sisters, a but the whole world could ever love, forgive or even respect Glandelinia, was utterly impossible, for despit e h r her wickedness Glandelin ia also h ad been since her fallen away state been reared in a very hot bed of wicked pride, cruelty and sinful robbery and stolen aristocracy, and taught by her wicked Kings that such nations as are Christian are creatures or nations of an entirely and much lower grade than h erself.

"Crazy Glandelin ia may try to compel other n ations whether Christian or not to be civil to her." Catherine thought, "Though she ought n ot to hope for that after all the Glandelinian aurthorities have done to the christian world in general and what has been done to pour v Violet and her sisters, and if poor Viol et and her sisters only knew how much I love them and how the affection smothered so long has grown since I've met with them again since so long ago."

"Cath erine dear" Violet said just here, and with a start Catherine turned tward her. "Catherine dear, my sister Jennie wishes oh so badly to see you. Will you go to her now?"

"Yes." Catherine replied in a surprised voice and also in a frightened voice, for there swept over her a great fear for the safty of the little Princess to whom she must tell her story, and grasping Violets arm she whispered;

"Does she fear about it as I do now and does she hate Glandelinia? Will she scorn Glandelin ia? Will she try to make Glandelinia feel that she is but th e dust beneath her feet? Oh Violet do go with me. I feel so sad and badly about Her and her own distress I feel I cann ot meet her alone. She is so h ot, so imperious, so proud so hateful against anythin g sin ful and wicked, so like you and your dear sisters, who have never reproached any of her good friends. Come Mildred Maxwell, you must go with me too so that if there is anything wron g the both of us can render her all the aid need be."

She was so afraid for th e safty of Violet and her sisters even now, that she was like a little naughty child shrinkin g from the rod, and Violets heart ached for the good and brave girlscout spy who clung to her and Mildred nervously as they went up the stairs together to poor Jennie's room. Pierre had been there before them full of concern for his young mistress; whose sudden and strange illness he did not understand. As they entered Jennie lifted h er eyes to them, who made a sign of recogn ition to Catherine, who like some guilty little culprit sank (spank) in t o a chair, where she sat looking at every window, and shakin g in every limb. After glancin g at her, Jennie feeling ill and uneasy thought it best to shut her eyes, and therefore did so, saying languidly qnand slowly as if speaking now were wearisome;

"I wish you would Catherine dear tell me of the cause of the disaster that is so dangerously threatening me and my sisters, tell me wh y the enemy said I and my sisters kidn apped "Adeldefob. That is all."

While Jenn ie talked she looked at Catherine again, and then reclosed her eyes and her whole attitude was one of extreme weariness and sadness. But she heard Mildred as she was stealing from the room, and called her to come back.

"You must stay with me Mildred dear." she said. "I want to hold your hand so that I can feel there is something left, when all else slips from me."

So Mildred came back, and sittin g down by Jennie took one of the hot feverish hands in h ers, and caressed it occasionally as Catherine told her story.

"So you can follow what there is to be, and therefore take w r warning and decide as I wish you and your sisters to do, I must commence at a period prior to Your sister Angelines recovery after the battle of Evangeline St Clare." she said "Or I cann ot make you understand how ir ignorant of the whole danger, you and your sisters were at the time I myself discovered it , and how innocent and in unsuse innocent and unsuspecting too.. Everything was all right during the time your sister An geline was on the road to recovery. Yet when a man who I did not kn ow and whom I did not like the looks of though he wore a christian uniform began to notice me a little too often, and yet before my face speak to me pleasantly, and tell me what a good little girl I was, and yet when he thought I didn't see him, would be shadowing me at different places. I pretended that I thought thought n othing of it, but I feared h e was tryin g to lay hands on you and your sisters again and so I redoubled my efforts to frustrate him. When before my face he tried to flatter me and said I was more a little lady than many an other girl or boyscout, I was angry, and told him he being a stranger to me must never speak to me like that again, and he did not, though before my eyes he was always very kind and polite, and acted as if he respected me as one superior to my own class, and seemed to admire me too, for I was pretty then also as you know, with ways some thing like your sister Jennie."

"There was a slight sound like a moan from Jenn ie, and Catherine continued;

"Th at he could ever have been what h e really was never entered my brain, till I sat by your sister and heard her say; when I complained of the man,

"Don't treat him that way Catherine, he's no spy that is our friend and guardian Jack Ambrose Evans, and I am so glad he stays with us, for Evans h as wanted our company so much, and my getting well will make him oh so happy,, and keep us in his mind. C atherine it may seem very foolish in me, but I do not like to t h in k that Evans will ever have to be compelled to leave us again--that another guardian will take his place, but if duty does call him, which h e cannot neglect for he is a great captian, one of our best and h ighest of generals and his armies need him, and now that h e has ours pictures which will be to him a remembrance to us, there is not so much danger that he will do anythin g rush rash. H e will be satisfied with our pictures,, he will always remembers us untill he returns to us again. I have told him so in th e letter which you will give h im. If we have to go away stay with h im Catherine; and be a comfort to him, you and little Jann ie' These were nearly the last words she said to me for I too at her recovery was called away to duty. N othin g after that h appened untill the affray I witnesst witnessed between Adeldefob and Gerald Starring. Then your escapade with him from the base hospital which occured with Jann ie and Tims h elp. Then I still remained within th e Glandelinian army and overheard t he excit ed rumor that you and your sisters were charged with kidnapping Adeldefob and th observed the effect it had within the whole Glandelinian army. Manley believing Adeldefob was th e Glandelinian chief Prince he made off to be was furious, and almost demented, and with h is generals grouped about him in a council of which I was a secret witness planned this destruction to you which have already been revealed to you and Violet. I was alone with th em but I was not afraid, and the great t emptation to which I afterwards yeilded kept sugg sting itself to me, for the peril you and your sisters were in made me grow faint and shudder, especially when I reflected, what a monster Manley and the Glandelinian Government in general was to harbor such thoughts against you and your sisters for an instant. And still my plan recured over and over to me, untill it did not seem so dreadfully dangerous to make the attempt , and I began to con sider it seriously as somethin g which might m be done if I bide my time.. They say I was not then the sh rewd spy as I should have been when I first entered your service. But I was. The familiarity with which a Glandelinian girlscout had treated me, the evident liking of one boyscout within the foe lines of whom I could not make head or tail and whom I could influence at times more readily than even the girlscout , the notice I recieved from some boyscouts dressed in the uniform of Glandelinian boyscout captians,, especially who looked to me to be of American descent and surprised me immensely by seeing them there, and who frequently mistook me for having been "Q Adeldefobs "companion, rather than h is arf or serving girlscout, had surprised me greatly and gave me more hope that my plan may be carried out. I wanted to get t h e information I was looking for, seize Manleys orders if possible, and as I sat with a dirty rag doll in my arms just to look th e foolish part to decieve the Glandelin ian generals, your angel must have wh is pered to me that n ow was my opportunity to try somethin g to carry out my plan, and gain the mastery over your fierce foes. General Manley I knew might make one mistake or had made one mistake, and might make anot her for my bene fit.If w he was very proud h e was very susceptible too he liked to be cared for and petted, and I who understood him so well, would pretence pretend to make myself so very necessary to him that he could not do without my services, and would perhaps become unwary and give me the chance I was looking for.Thus I reason ed, when suddenly it occured to me that his friend and boyscout servant Gerald Starring was an obstacle in my way.I did not want to have an encounter with him as your brother did; for he was just the same way to any girl if he got en flamed with suspicion or jealiously.He too is passionately fond of his wicked countrys cause, and as long as h ew he would be doing things for Manley that would if I did not do somethin g to get him to be sent away would change everythin g and frustrate me in my plans.That girlscout who had befriended me had told me to look out and not rouse Starrings jealously and from the looks of Starrings face I believed it and feared that dangerous boy.With h im at general Manleys h eadquarters I could never hope to get in to be even more than a common girlscout, as I was now, and then would not be able to find out a thing.And then some one in whom I could confide told me that Starring was going away for a time to do some duy duty elsewhere; and if this was so it would give me the chance to do with general Manley.If I s e succeeded I would be able to learn th e details, even at the risk of discovery an and his n anger.If I failed I would th en try to double cross Gerald Starring at any risk even if I had to do somethin g treacherous to gain my end.IN any event I did not mean however to do anything rash, but I did not then know h ow one peril runs into another or what a h ard master is the kn owledge and sense of danger, when you give yourself in such service at such a risk as I did, for I resolved at last to do the dangerous thing which comparatively easy and which would enable me to save you and your sisters.Of where Gerald Starring was to go and even of whom I really was Manley knew nothin g; for Gerald Starrings two companions purposely kept it from him, to make the surprise and pleasure greater when Starring came back with the success he expected.H e had no sus picion who I was and that Radcliffe was my assistant.We had pretended to live very quietly within the Glandelinian army, and few soldiers knew or cared for or about me.However when the generals h ea h heard that Gerald Starring had been sent off some where; they came forward to my own gratification, and when they heard where Gerald Starrin g had gone to where I did not kn ow which n or did I care, they took the matter in hand, and tried to get me into a commission as general Manleys child scout attendant; but nevertheless while trying to left me to do what I pleased elsewhere, and having recently seized some import ant papers and not wishing to let the enemy generals find it on my possession I took it to a portion of the Glandelin ian army on Parisis Company Street, to AdeldefobS friend Radcliffe, whom I had known for over three years, and to wh om and to whom I entrusted them to be sent to the Christian lines, telling h im where I got it, and hiring him to have the documents transferred to the christi ian lines untill I was in a position to discover the clues I was after for the sake of you and your sisters.Radcliffe therefore knowin g me well despite my disguise asked me no questions.

My next step therefore was to go to aportion of the Glandelin ian camp called Chateu Des Fluers company Street to await the coming og general Manley, for one of the Glandelin ian generalschad written him, telling him of Gerals Gerald Starrin gs transferation, and of general Federals wishythat I should servevin the boyscouts stead untill the boy should return.The letter was sometime in finding him, but on its reciept, he hastened to that part of the camp at once, and for a day or two seemed crhsed crushed with grief because now Gerald was gone from him and he had hoped in having Gerald trail you little girls down and do you him therefore.Then for a short time he drank hard and deeply and kept his room, where bottle after bottle of brandy and whiskey was sent and in his drunkedness he was more like a demon bruite than a man.Th is drunken reval was succeeded by an illness of several weeks duration, during which his special Red Cross N urse took the utmost care of him, while in secret I played my part so well than that the result came much sooner than I expected, but was not what I desired.I must succeed in my por purpose or nothin g, and yet h is drunkedness was what nearly spoiled my plan for weakened bodily and mentally by illness and the brandy he drank in so large quanities that he forgot himself and promised to have me be in Gerald Starrings place un untill he returned unti on condition that I kept it a secret untill he choose to tell of it himself.But I knew he would fool me later on , and he made me believe that by joinin g hands it would be a vow and that n obody should know. "Such things"were common in those crazy foriegn countries"he said.And he swore solemnly too that for the kidnapp in g of "Adeldefob" he would have you destroyed and as I knew h e would keep his vow if h e had the chance I feared you and your sisters would go blind folded to your ruin even though you were in o innocent of what h e accu sed you of."

"Yes "Angeline rejoined with a look of unutterable anguish upon her face, for now it seemed she had lost all fait h in ever escapin g from the unseen perils even in secret flight, and had n o relentin g tward the cruel Glandelin ian nation."Yes yes, go on."

Catherin e flush ed a little as she went on rapidly.;

"I believed I would be successful now and I was.He declared that I and h e must to go to his own private headquarters, and thither he went,, and he took possession of a suite of rooms for me; but fortunately for me did not remain there himself, though h e came often to see me, and yet as Glandelin ians are h e did not treat me with any kindness though he showed respect because of my supposed station.He kept grumbling about you and your sisters, and declared that however the reason no one could get them was that no one did try to do anythin g right or showed n o haste to do so. I then knew the intentions an h and what Manley wished terrible in the extreme, and of what I learned a great four took possession of me, even that no not all was right, and then it was he learned you and your sisters were not in Emperor Vivians army as he supposed, and when two weeks passed since you and your brother escaped from the foe lines, he came to me and asked if I knew anything about the whereabouts of you ad your sisters.I of course did not know then, I would not have told him if I e had, and then it was not kn owin g who I was he undeceived me, and told me how h e and his army had been duped, and then revealed to me his plan of how he would destroy you and your sisters and mainly if he could not reach you, then to strike main ly at your mother; and told me as cooly as if to ruin the lives of seven little inn ocent girls was nothing but a pastime for soldiers like him, and he laughed about how the christ ian army may take it.

"He said;

"Thev Government of that crazy Ch ristian Abbicann ian Nation or her sister Christian states must be very weak to suppose for a moment th at I never am in earnest in things I do or plan, or that those Vivian Girls could ever put it over on me too far and not pay for it!Men of my stamp do not let blitt le brats trifle with me in any way, or in fact stand anythin g from them in our sober senses .I will admit I am far more tl to blame for turnin g against them when I was in the early days before the war their friend, but th in gs have changed now and therefore war is war..I have wanted to outwit thoselittle brats ever so much, and yet if those brats have not done to me and my armies what they did do I should never have done what I have done."

You will not believe ,e if I tell you that when I h ard this my first impul e impulse was to write a letter and sent it to general Con centin ian Aronburg and tell him of the danger you and your sisters are in , but I could not ,,and the thoughts of my failure to do so haunted me continually, making me sometimes cry out with pain and remourse and fear.But I had gone too far to give it up.I must succeed or all my ambitious dreams to save you and your sisters would have come to n aught and you and your sisters would have pe perished..I had at first nb hope for my own escape from the foe lines eit either,bhis imperious manners c too about and your sisters, and cold,disdainful words crushed all that;but there arose in me an intense overwhelmin g desire to see you and your sisters saved in spite of h m him and his foolowers; and I begged God to h elp help me save you, whatever He might do with me for sacrifice, and our Dear Blessed Lord con sented to my petitions at last, and Manley was to go away bading me to stay where I was untill I heard from him again. He because of the progressiven ess of the battle of Ophelia and angit was not then going in h is favor wish ed to make some change in his headquarters He said for if the Christians came forward too close he would be in danger himself.I was only his assistant girlscout, who would not be retained with the coming of Gerald Starring; it would dep nd when h e came." Then h e to my gratificati9 n gratification left me, and I made myself remember. that I was no more to him or his old cause than a cast off garment, of which his country would be tired of, and yet in my an guish for what you and your sisters were to go through I felt that your unjust punishment was greater than I could bear, no matter whether you could bear it not n or not, and I evon thought to kill him and Gerald Starring too, but that just then would be a sucidal thing to attempt even though I would have been justified. But too a thought that it would prevent me from savin g you and your sisters prevented me.But to get the chance to write to emperor Vivian never came.Somebody I knew must do it, and so I waited with desperate feelin gs and hoped the time might come when I could restore you andvycur sisters to your safty.But it did not come and the fact th at "Manley and his Con federates were irgorna ign orant of your whereabouts is what saved you untill I found you and warned you and yout your sist ers.On quittin g his h old h eadquarters general Manley went to the Chateau Des Fleurs Company Street, and on one pretext or another to those who asked him s anything pretended to dismiss his chief Glandelin ian Det ectives in his employ pretending that he had fired them but from the looks of their faces I feared they were secretly sent to destroy you and your sisters if they could find you.H e then

He then filled theirplaces with strangers, who seemed to kn ow nothin g of the past .A huge council room which communicated with his militart apartments was fitted up in true military style.And then he bade me come, and I went to him and at his command I was forced to take alon g with me several little child slaves while I was only the head girlscout--for he had another girl and others to look after his welfare givin g me the post of lookin g after them.I remembered al so well the day I took the child slaves to his newly made up headquarters and awaited h is coming; but waited in vain for though h e knew I was in the house; h e kept aloof from me and took his du dinner and commanded his generals to do t h at and this; and then he sauntered into the place where I had brought the child slaves with that air of elegant in difference and superiority so natural to h im.I had not seen him since his visit; but he simply bade me good even ing, and asked if I had found everything in readiness.Then he walked up to the child slaves who in reality were two child scout spi s come to help me in my plan bein g given me by Radcliffe. He gave them the once over and put them to work as two little scrub girls..I was then given the position as ci chief scout w o was entitled to consideration in the headquarters; bofe because I was temporarily the successor of ge Gerald Starring.This raised me quite high above all my fellow girl and boyscouts, who treated me with a great deal of respect, and asked me many questions concerning Gerald Starring, and of general John Manley who puzzled them with his cold quiet, haughty manner.With the advent f of th e dreadful battle of Ophelia, all his former habits were changed; and he seldom came to his headquarters excep except to hold a council where he never stayed for more than an hour or two.Everything else he had done were dropped..And yet he did not seem to be afraid, or worry so great was his confidence that the gattl would be won.I could see he was perfectly devoted to Glandelin iana wicked cause.Finally as I wished to get away so that I could get to the Christian lines I wrote secretly to Gerald Stat Starring to come at once and then asking him of the permission and telling him Starrin g was coming h e said;

"You can go to morrow if you like,I shall be glad to have you as I like his service best."was his reply, and I knew he meant it.For some reason or other I believed he had been planning how to be rid of me for the sight of me was vey was very distasteful to him, and therefore I did not regret the comi ng of Starring who however picked a bitter quarrel with me for taking h is pl ce against his word without saying anythin g we when he went, and when I resisted him h otly because I hated h im as a Glandelinian he drew a knife on me but I was best at knife work and speedily disarmed him; I was however glad to get away from him and also Manley fearin g something fatal might occur between us two offered to settle upon me a certain sum of money if I would go away to some other part of th e Glandelin ian army quietly, and promise solu solemnly n ever to come near or within sight of Gerald Starring or let him kn ow that I was with him in his hea'quarters so long, I to insuire insure peace between myself and the "brat" consent ed, and left.N ow well then I still with great fear remembered the peril you and your sisters were in Jennie, and learning through Radcliffe that no one h as been able to locate your whereabouts yet I felt relieved.The last time I had ever seen you before these days Jennie and too how well I remembered you as I saw you then for the last time in your beautiful embroidered white dress, with coral clasps at your neck, and your hands full of flowers, which you offered to me as I spoke to you, cryin g as if my heart would break.You were so beautiful and bright, and I loved you; and your sisters too so much, and yet never believed you and your sist ers were ever going to go through horroe horrors sorrows and adventures like these.N ow I have defied my cruel enemy, and have warned you of your peril, and if possible save you and your sisters with triumph.Then I came here and told you all after writin g your father first with a constant sense of your danger."

Here Catherine paused, and with closed eyes and clenched fists seemed to be living over again; the scenes she had described, while Jennie raised herself from h er reclining position in the chair;, and winding h er arms tightly around her sister Violets neck, rested h er cheek upon the bowed h ead, and said;

"Well Catherine dear you have let me see one side of the picture, have shown me how you discovered the peril we are in.Now show me the other side, take me to the child slave camp where little Jannie t to whom belonged the sunshine and the flowers, was struggling with cold and hun ger and shrinking from from harsh words and cruel blows."

„No Jennie dear you are mistaken, no never."Violet exclaimed."You forget Jannie was with us since she was rescued twice. She was with us all the time and after we escaped.since her rescue she is a girlscout n ow and herlife is a happy one, and after I and my sisters took her to be with us she is e very happy, for if the ev enemy has defrauded her of h er birthright, we made it up in love and tender care."

Violets generous description of Jannies happiness touched Jennie and she contin ued;

"Yes I remember now, I know Catherine too loved little Jann ie, who is asleep downstairs all tired out with her days work--know that she has been kind to h er and I thank h er for it--but I wish to h ear about h er just the same how Catherine first came to kn ow her after she was rescued by Angelin in Ardnburg--wish to know where she was after Evangeline St Claire,-and how after she left the territory of Trin oque and went back with you and where we didn't see h er for some months.Tell me please-"and she turned to Catherine-"Tell me of little Jannie, when you first came to know of her."

Catherines face was brighter as she replied;

"After duty called me from the bedside of your sister Angeline who was well on the road to rd recovery, I went to anot her portion of the christian lines but there I am far too ahead of my story as I knew her before then.Sometime after the bloody battle of Hendrick Junct ion br Cedernine I went to captian Floriana headquarters of girlscouts, where I found a h eaul h ealthy beautiful black haired ch ild scout of some seven years of age, whom no one could see and he not love. My heart was very sore and full of great longing for my own sister left in a girlscout camp far away; and when little Jannie came up to my side and put up h or sweet lips to be kissed, as was a habit of hers,I took her in my arms and into my heart, and made a solemn vow to be true to h er; and never let h er feel the want of a good friends love.I told her to call me Catherine not Col Colonel, and the name came prettily from h er l ips. I of course was younger and better looking than Flouring, and sh e took me to me readily, and slept in my arms, and cried when I left her to look for a place to make up my own h eadquarters.I found what I desired; and where you came and changed Jannie to what she is now. Had I chosen to use the money some one gave me ann ually I might have been able to fit Jannie out in better style; but for good reasons I sh rank from touching more or it than was absolus abs- absolutely necessary, and took pl asure in helping her by my own hard labor of going through the military drilld.I decided too to drill her so th at she could become an officer herself, for there are many thousands of girl and boyscouts who needed one like her for a leader.How I toiled and slaved to get her where she is now, and how I loved her as time went on; and she grew more and more into my h eart;loved h er so much in fact, that the image of even my own sister almost began to fade, and I could think of her without a pang.In those earlier days I saw you and your sisters occassionally--once in the grounds at of your headquarters near Trin oque beforeyou and your sisters disappeared, where I came upon you and your Guardian Jack Evans, and several times in the streets of Angelinia St Claire, after your father brought you there before during a scuttin g trip your sister got shot and wounded in the lung.I used then to t ake little Jamie out upon the main street in find afternoons before Angelinas bad luck, when the streets were full of christian soldiers moving out to the Trin oque Heights, and wait for your father the Emperor to pass.Thu Though not the most sh owy for his taste was too good for that;your fathers turn out was the most elegant and probably the most expensive of all the private milit ary carriages in all Abbiesnnia, while his splendid H orses were the talk of the nation and which he still h as despite the war.I always watched anxiously for him and when h e appeared, sitting up so erect but not proudly, with that look of saintlyness on h is face, and with you and your sisters riding with him on the co cushions clad in dainty princely apparel i I used to hold little Jannie tightly to my h eart , and bite my lips till the blood almost forced itself through the skin so fearful was I lest I should shriek out the truth about the fact that you and your sisters were going to be even then in someu nseen danger so loudly that he would hear it above the roll of the wheels and the tramp of the horses hoofs.And somethin g strongly impelled me to hold Jannie high in my arms too and making him see you say to him; "This will be your daughters little guardian some some day.H er place is there beside your daughters." But I was not rea ready for that so I let you and your dear sisters go by in all your military splendor, and if at night I kissed Jennie more tenderly than ever and h eld her closer t o me as I helped her to get to bed at Taps it was by way of aton ement for the great wrong the Glandelin ians were always doing you.It was about this time that I fell in with Penrod, who then not being known as anything but a boyscout offered me service..He was a good natured gay goin g boyscout, who never troubled me with questions concerning the past , provided I made his camping place comfortable and his military life to him l iking, and so I accepted h is services.He was fond of all little girls he came across, and was always kind to me and Jann ie, and adored you and your sisters even then, and I must tell that he did sometimes make me think h e was crazy, when he used to say to me that "The Vivian Girls look to me like my sisters from whom I was stolen long ago.Yet he did press me very hard with regard to your parentage and when I told him you were the daughters of "General Vivian"which I then only knew h im by he did not hardly believe me, though he never suspected the truth as he did not know Emperor Viv'n Vivian your father is always called "General"Because he wears only a high generals uniform. "

"And when I went to your h eadquarters before the battle of Uadernine and before I and my sisters were captured by the Glandelinians, you knew I was Penrods sisters!"Jennie said.

"No I did not as I did not know who he really was, but nevertheless I kissed the chair you sat upon and in my poor blind way thanked Our Dear Blessed Lord for sending you there, and thanked Him again when through the influence of you and your sisters,Jennie was placed at the same military girlsscout school which you yourself superint endented, and her education paid by your own father who came to love the little girl in whom you and your sisters were so interested interested, and he bade me keep her within his sight always.After Angelines recovery it was then that the idea of going to your Fathers own army was suggested to me by some benscout leaders for whom Jenn ie had worked, and who gave such glowin g accounts of the Vivianite girl and benscout troops and the prospects of making Jennie a leader amongst them, that I becam to consider the matter seriously, and finally made up my mind to go, and communicated with your Father upon the subject writing to him however from Pine Bluffs and yet through the enemy spies I believe h e never recieved my letter."

"Yes he did I'm sure h e did"Jennie exclaimed."There were letters with your hand writing forwarded to him at Stricknine Bluffs, and one of them made h im very elated, b my friend Angelin ie Aronburg told me.H e She was present when papa read it, and too after that he was very nervous and excited, and suggested to me that we give up staying at Evangeline St Claire and for your safty push on against Manley right away away.Oh and poor Penrod, so the danger we were in were the cause of his death.H e dreaded what was to befall us, and th e dread and sorrow caused him to go too near the danger zone and a shell killed him.Oh Penrod, Penrod----I can see him so plain as hiseyes followed me, and in a dream he asked me and my sisters to promise to forgive what h appened to him, and I promised, but it is so hard.Oh Violet, and my sisters, and you too Catherine if if it were not for you and also lit tle Jenn ie I could not keep my promise and I don't know as I can at all he went to his death so suddenly and so badly ---if all that dreadful death letter says is true.It was better if we should have remain ed at home it would have been better if father would h ave made us stay at our palace in Marcusian for thin g I should h ave kn own nothing of this dreadful conflict except what we see in the papers, and might h aves been as h appy as the little girls I h ave seen so often playing or dancing on the street.But n ow to meet Penrod, find out he is our brother, and a good protecting one, and then to lose him, and now to fall so far--it makes me dizzy and sick, and dazed and there's a buz z buzzing in my h ead and a feeling as if I were crazed and could not understand it at all, and yet how much more must our Poor dear Blessed Lord have suffered all H is thirty Three Years on earth ."

She was very whit e, with a drawn look upon her lips which alarmed Violet, who bent over her and said;

"You have hea heard en ough.There can be nothing more to tell which will interest you.Catherine must go out no w and leave you to rest.To night we'll prepare to skip if you will it and get away to where Manley will never find us, and we'll warn the army we're goin g and h old them liable if any of th eir generals even say a word.They must keep it mum that we go."

"Yes, yes Violet, tell h er to go and make preparations, she is to guide us with An gelinia Ag Aronburg.I feel so tired and sick."Jennie whispered, and without a word Catherine after saluting left the room, with Angelinia Aronburg and Mildred, and the two Princesses were alone though Violet had said;

"Tell our sisters to come up half an hour from now."

For several moments Jennie said with her head dropped and her eyes closed, , muttering an earnest prayer, then opening them suddenly, and fixing them upon Violet, who knelt beside her she said;

"It is very dreadful Violet dearest, and I sure feel as if I was turned in to stone.We are good and yet have our purgatory thanks to the foe.Oh if I could cry, but I cannot even though I know that everythin g seems if not gone foe forever from me that I love the most next to God and His Blessed Mother.If I would lose Those Dearest one s all then would be hopeless.I must turn to them for help for only They can help.Poor Penrod is dead--Penrod who would have stood by me and you and my other dear sist ers even in this peril, though of course Tim does and is workin g like a beaver to prevent anything happens happening to us.I knowsfrom the results of the many arrests made and the many guilty ones indict ed.But Penrod our dear brother would have come to us and said;"Dear little Jenn ie, and my dearest sisters,I love you more than ever and will brin g you through, and want you and your dear sisters softly by my side"and with him I and my dearest sisters would be happy in spit e of the peril;but now outside of father and mot her and cousins and dearest Un cle and Aunty there is nothing left tome, you and my other dear sisters, neither young brother, nor safty though thanks be to God and His Blessed Mother, we have not lost friends, though still the loss of our brother h urts the worst and makes me feel so desolate , no brother,, its a wonder we didn't even lose all our friends, all our relatives for that would have suit ed Glandelin ia better.It's a wonderv Glandelin ia isn't our mother"

Jennie said the last words with a shocking sob,while Violet kissed and rubbed h er hands which were cold asaice and lay helplessly upon h er lap.

"You forget that you have the whole of Abbicannin at your service and at the service of me and your other dear sisters--forget that the whole of Abbicannia is a part of ourselves------that whatever sorrow we come to us must be shared by thewhole of Abbicannia."Violet said(Abbicannia did not mourn for Penrods death be cause the fact is because of disrupted communications on ly violet and her sisters, and h their friends and only Concentin ope Aronburg nowy kn own it and mourn s).

"No I don't forget that"replied Jennie.It is only the thing which keeps us from being killed curright which would have been otherwise.But I put Angelin ia Aronburg know a whole lot about Glandelin ia Violet dearest, more than you or my dear sisters who h ave not yet learned.Oh Violet dearest you know not h ow forcibly and wickedly proud Glandelinia is when she believes herself a superior among nations, that H eaven can be conquered,, proud of her position , proud of her own blood, and casts God aside, and worsh ips Reason and Money as its Gods.And I will con fess it all to you, who stands where I stand, Glandelin ia is so wicked and proud, that that nation rebelled again st God and h er Mot her of nations-- rebelled against the Abbicannian States, and th ey yet when I and you ad my other dear sisters tried to do our duty for our own country, and tried to be kind and friendly, even to our enemies even though we fought against them, ad yet n ow no matter how brave we are we never come in contact with any members of the for or with any one of general Manleys Con federates, that I did not feel the lit tle shivers run over me, and a shrinking away from them, and their manner, speaking and acting is simply devilish and disgusting.I nor any of my dearest sisters cann ot h elp this feeling!!! though at times I was surprised at myself cordially for it , and told myself many times, that I shouldn 't be that way, and still in my heart I fancied I was infinitely in some superior peril--in deed I suppose to the Glandelin ians, I, you and the rest of my dearest sisters and they parents too had n o right to be born.Once I kn elt in the beautiful Chapel in St Ann e Church in Trin ogue, and begged our Blessed Lord, because of H is sufferings to make me and my sisters, at least we all did ask H im to make us like Him in sorrow and sufferin' suffering, asked Him for H is sake and our Countrys sake to humble us in any way if that do would do any good in h umbling that General Manleys pride, but little did I dream the time would come, when that prayer would be so terribly answered without any results---when I or you or even my other dear sist rs would givedur very lives to know that we were on the road o to holy success, and that once we had foun d our dear little lost brother to be able to keep him.Oh Violet dear, if we could only have the old days back again!;;if I could waken from this, and find it on ly a dream, that n o such awful war was really raging, but I never can, it is only a terrible reality.Listen to those terrible thunder of so many ni distant cann ons That old stubborn battle of Ophelia.Will it never end.To the enemy n ot not on ly us, if that alone he I would not worry so much, but to the Glandelinians, our dear Blessed Lord is not God.such a thought is shocking to me and makes me scared and sick at the stomach s.To them Poor God is a "Nobody.Too had about them. To those horrible Glandelin ian s, our poor Dear Blessed Lord h as Neither N ame, reputation, superiorit y, nor friends, Hor p osition, n or home;;oh Violet, I have not thought of that before I can't bear it;and "And Jenn ie bounded to her feet so suddenly that Violet accidentally was thrown backw r backward upon the floor, where she sat staring blankly at her sister whowit seemed to her had actually lost her mind. She was walking rapidly acrosss th e floor, beat ing the air with her hands.There were blood red spots on her cheeks, and her eyes shone with a strange unnatural light, as they flashed first upon one object, and then upon another, and finally rested upon Violet,, before whome she stopped and said in a whisper;

"Do you know it.Do you not see that Our Blessed Lord is treated by the enemy as an out ca st,a deserving beggar, a trespasser, where H e has no claim. Glandelinia claims that Even Dearest Jesus is an unlawful Child of the Blessed Virgin and that Sh e too is a woman of Un lawful marriage, and that she h as no right to be The Blessed Mother of Dear God.Glandelinia claims that their King Procile has a right to be the Kin g of Heaven, that his cruel wicked Wife is His h eiress, that the poor dear Blessed Mother is no daughter of H eaven, and un ly an intruder, who had lived in Heaven for eternity on what is not her own.That is why glandelinia is so sure of overcom d overconfident success.Do you bleme me if I hate glandelinia as I hate all who hate God."

H er lips quivered as she finished the last words sadly, and her whole manner showed how hopeful, was the whole situation to her.Violet also noticed that with equal feeling,, and spring to her feet, and winding her arm around Jenn ie, she held her fast while she said;

"Glendolin ie is full of folly for this, and H eaven help the whole nation if it doesn't come to its reason.I do not pretend n ot to understand you for I do.You are excited now dear Jen, and insane enough to think all will go to ruin, because you are menon supposed by Glendolinin whom the whole world so despises. We do not fear need to fear for I myself Jenn ie found out, th ough there are many sinful n ations in the world, they are not really bad nations, only have lots of sinful people and that Glendolinin h hes not a single friend on her side.But in either case as Catherine told you we are in some sort of securit y as the enemy don't know what army we are in, and who we are.General Manley knew nothing of where we went, never dreamed of where we would go but neverth eless thought we went to support Vivians army our fathers, and Jenn a dear, for our own safty and ill this blows blown over the world need not know what we do or where are we are.We would rather therefore remain in h idden seclusion, than meet what we must meet should the truth of our whereabouts be known. To defy the enemy let us just stay wh ere we are in our own h eadquarters which here untill the "storm"at Ophelia is over, for it is sure wherever we go and if you like, I h will have Angelin in Aronburg stay with you and Jennie and have Tim sent for your Father. for our father to come."

"No Violet dear that is foolish "Jennie said. "But we won't do n o fleeing"she suddenly added definitly."If we do we have no right here in our count ry, no right here, we would be cowards, but nevertheless we cannot stay, and if I do not do as I think of not a percentage of my soul should be saved.You may truly Manley don't know what christian army I and you and my sisters are in--but if he h ad---even even at the last moment of his life he had known that in this christian army we were here, he would have tried his best to have us destroyed.I and you and my other dear sisters known him, others do not , and they cannot understand how conceited and proud he is.I know he is more to blame than even the Glendolinian Government if Catherine tells me the truth which I kn ow she does, and H eaven will never forgive h im for I kn ow because of our prayers for his conversion being unanswered, and when I was blind and I offered my sight for h is conversion, my sight was restored instead, and therefore we too can never forgive the foul if he don't repent, and he surely as no righ t to do and treat God and us as he does, when God would have loved so much !

It would have been better for the whole world in general that Glendolinin never came into existance as Penrod once said. Of course God loves us more than ever now I can feel that .Yet too had our own father known what would have been in st ore for us if we entered the services all would have been changed from what it is now, for h e would have sent us away to far off Pandora Abdicandin where we would see nor hear nothin g of this war untill it was over.H e would not have sent us away from Ilena however it is not his nature to do that, he provided even for Angelinin Aronburg once, and even now makes plenty of provision for us. The b e st thing to do and I believe it is the softest is to stay where we are I do not know but somewhere with in the Glendolin ian army of Manleys and we shall go together, An gelin in Aronburg, Catherine Lee, and little Jennie and do some thin gs on the enemy if possible that will be a surprise and win for our side this long battle, while the enemy will still be hunt ing with in our lines to destroy us.We cannot stay h ere when they're secretly after us and with that danger mark upon us when probably spyin g on the enemy as dangerous as it is is yet softest .I feel it now burn ing into my fl esh, and know the situation is written all over us in letters of fire, which all all the waters of the world could probably not wash out .Truly even the sins of a wicked world are visited upon good people ,and though we suffer too, yet God and H is Blessed Mother are suffering so terriblyes---oh Violet it does ache, so hard, so hard-----"and with a gasping sob Jenn ie sank into her chair, where h she sat writhing like one in mortal agon y. For a full ten minut s poor Violet h erself regarded her sister intently, then kneeling before her again , and takin g the hot quivering hands in h er own, and realizing she was feeling more bitter for or because of Our Blessed Lords suffering more than her own said to h er;

"Jennie dear your plan is good.We will do as you suggest, but here comes our dear friend Tim.He wants to speak to you oh so badly."

Tim was ushered in, and he falling before her kn ees, while violet receded said tearfully;

"Princess dear do you think I have forgotten the day when I first ever came to the christian army, only a little refugee, and when you and your sisters came to me a little lon ely and hearted boy who had just lost his father and mot her, and clad in clot hes so course that just to have worn them a moment would have roughened the delicate skin of one like you had known only princly garments and the happiness and b eauty of life before the war.And yet you or your sisters did not shrink from me.You yourself Jenn ie looked into my eyes with a look I have never forgotten.You touched my scule soiled hands with your soft, dimpled fingers, as the tough lingers t here yet.You at expensive cost bought a handsome suit of clot hin g for me the kind only rich people wear, and gave them to me and you t ook the scarlet and ermine uniform cloak of your own from your shoulders and put them upon my slat e sinter, and brought down h eaven to us as nearly as it can be brought here to us upon earth .Then too you made me and her what she is to day, and brought about a friendship between me and your poor dead brother which will never end.And now when this great sorrow has unjustly come upon you, when it may be if I stood in the place your dearest brother held so long, when all his handsome uniform and luxury are mine, will you not let me give it back to you, as you once gave it to me and my now little dead sister-- or at least let me accompany you on your flight---that is supposing the letters statem ntement about Penrods death is proved to be true!"

"Proved to be true. "Jennie said."What do you mean by that Tim."?

"I mean this"Tim replied"The whole Christian world will not un der any conditions accept t he story as readily as you , or your sisters or as I have done.There will have to be positive proof, I firmlybelieved, that your brother Penrod was killed out there in the battlefield of Ophelia, for if it stands to reason kn owin g how you and your sisters would feel if he was killed he surely would not expose himself to un necessary dangers."

"Do you doubt it Violet dear?"Jennie asked, fixing her eyes searchingly upon her sister, who at last slowly answered;

"I don't say that I do, and I don't say that I don 't.It will have to be proved then and we'll leave it to either Tim or Gertrude Angelina to prove it ."

"I m then of the same opin ion "was Jenn ie's quick rejoinder."I don't know who h whether it is true or not, but then if it is not true why should such a lot ter do come to us.Oh Penrod, if I could go to him if h e was still alive and tell him of our pain."

There was a few moments of dead silence, between the two Princesses and Tim, and it was Violet who spoke again as she heard the sound of foot steps coming up the stairs.

"You may go now Tim dear and prepare for the trip we are going to make.I feel as if my head is not quite at reight. Go and leave me and my sisters to ourselves for a while.We'll have to fix secret plans.We'll let you in on them sometime to morrow."

Tim saluted, bowed and left th e room, and as he did so graciously admitted the five other brave lit tle princesses, and no sooner were the Vivian Girls by themselves, than Jennie arose, and bolt in g the door, went to her writin g des k, and taking out several long sheets of paper, by usin g h er typewriter began to write in English the story which Catherin e Lee had told her.This don e, sh e first let her sisters read and correct it, and then she took the three letters, and after showing them tearfully to h er sisters, with their evident approval enclosed the whole in an envelope, directed it to "Supreme General Jack Am r Ambrose Evans but in English too.Then ringin g her bell, she asked that her boyscout Pierre should be sent to her.The boy scout obeyed the summons at once, for in dead h e was totally scared almost t o death and extremely anxious aboutthis young mistress, and also of h er sisters and the strange sici sickness which h ad come so suddenly upon h er.

Stepping into the room he first salut ed and then made his bow, and then at ood before her and her sisters in his usual attit ude in and respect h is head bent forward and his h ands clasped, awaiting h er orders.

"Sit down Pierre"Violet h erself said."We'll retire to the further end of the room and let you and Jenn ie alone together.she has plans for you."

"The boyscout obeyed, aghast that he should h ave to shit down in front of these little girls and Violet seeing his face and reading his mind said;

"I al In all ways P ierre despite our rank we are n o more better than you are.There is not hin g to be ashamed of to sit down e before us even while we stand. Now Jenn ie dear go on."

"You need not stand before us now for a long time."said Jenn ie.I have somet hin g t o tell you and the sooner I e ll it the better.A most dreadful thin g h as come t o light--a dreadful wron g has been done to us and our following. I cann ot tell you what it is yet but we're going into the Glendolin ian camps for safty min d you disguised and to not as if we are nobodies. We are going to sh ow the enemy that while t hey're houndin g us down because of that supposed to be kidnapping of Adeldefoh"we're going in t o the enemy lines and find out detailes.We are not going to be princesses for a lon g time.We are if possible going to pretend one of the Glendolinian generals is our father. Do you un derstand me Pierre?And then sh e told him what Catherine Lee had told her."

He did understand her and the shoc shock made him reel forward, and grasp the back of a chair, to which he held, while h e stood staring at him mist ress and then at her sist ers, as if to assure himself of h er sanit y.

"You believe me crazy because I told you that"she said with a forced smile."I can see that in your eyes not alone your mind.But it is true, and as she still met his questioning gaze and look of won der, she again told h im how it had fo come to h er kn owledge and that of h er sisters, and what she meant t o do.

"I will not believe it ."was Pierres emphatic reply when he could speak at all."It must be that she is mistaken, maybe she was hoodwin ked."

And yet in Pierres heart there was a growin g fear that what he h ad heard might be true for no viligant was all boy and girlscout s and all soldiery soon sarnin g at rangers, that h e could not be n othin g else but suspicious.

H e decided therefore he would stand by Violet, and h er sisters against the whole world.Where she and her sist ers went he would go, where sh e and her sisters died he would die too, their faithful slave to the last.It did not matter to h im him whether she and her sisters were princesses princesses or not, Violet and her sisters were his little queens, h is holy little sovereigns, and he told them so with many gestures and ejaculations some of which were far from bein g complimentary for the Glendolinian generals.

"I and my sist ers knew we were sure of you."Jenn ie said to him"And arter after a little while we will go away from h ere, and find a place within the foe lines somewh ere, and we shall learn what this trouble is all about while Tim and Angelinia Aronburg will go and in vestigate at many places aro un d t his battle field whether Penrod is really dead or not, while if he is not and he is wit him the foe lines actin g as "aded Adeldefob we will rest easy."

Pierre sh rugged his sh oulders significantly at the idea that Penrod migh t be really dead, for surely h e felt it was true that God would never in all life t ime allow them such an affliction, an affliction to these little girls who loved him more than anybody else did ever or ever will love h im.Jenn ie and her sisters noticed the gesture, though they did n ot seem to and went on ;

"I have written to General Jack Evans, who will know just what to do, and early to morrow mornin g you must take it to him.H is army is only three miles from th is camp.Say nothin g to Angelin ia Aronburg or any o ne, but come to my door quietly, as soon as you are up, but do not get up early as we don't ins intend to.But I and my sisters shall be waitin g for you.And now go it is gettin g late, and I and my sisters are very tired."

Pierre obeyed, and left her in a most bewildered stat e of mind, scarcely knowin g what he had h eard, and not at all able to realize its import.True to his promise, he was at the doors of the their room th e nexy next mornin g before sit her Angelinia Aronburg or Mildred Maxwell were as tir, and recieved the package for general Evans, and a second and small one for Minnie Saun ders.This last Jennie h ad written after Pierre had left the prrevious night, and she bade him deliver it .

"Th ere will be no answer to either--at least non e for you."she said, and wit h a nod, showin g that he understood, Pierre hastened away the to throw the bombshell at the feet of general Jack Evans, and Minnie Saunders.

CHAPTER THIRTY EIGHT.....

THE EXPLOSION.

AN ACCOUNT OF ONE OF THE MOST TREMENDOUS BATTLE EXPLOSIONS OF THE WAR. THE HORRORS AT OHPELIA.

Farly as it was General Jack Ev ns Evans was at his h ea q he adquarters giving commands to his various generals telling them that the enemy must be held off from Oph olia at any cost .He had also an important plan pending in the Military Court of His tribunal, which involved much thought and much research t oo, and wh ile his generals were almost impatiently waiting he was hunting up certain points bearing up it, when the boyscout sidecamp of the Vivian Girls Pierre came in, and with a simple"Good morning your Excellency"laid the package upon the table, and departed in the direction of Minn ie Saunders. General Evans recogn ized the handwriting of Jennie, and thinkin g she had probably sent h im some military papers which she or her sisters might have captured from th e enemy, which she had overlooked, he laid it aside for a time(get your dime) and went on with his military matters concerning h is directions to his generals, so that it was an hour or mor e, and the horse ridden by Minn ie Saunders had rapidly rode apast his headquarters,before h e took the package in his hand and opened it.

The four yellow time worn letters which Jennie had enclosed first met his startled eye, and he examined them curiously, noting that they were dated in Ophelia a week ago, but as they were written in English, and as he could not read English even though h e could speak it a little brokenly it would take him some time to deciph er them, so he took them down and put up Jenn ie's letter, which he read through rapidly, feelin g when it was fin ished so benumbed and bewildered, an d also frightened, that he walked several times across the floor of his council room all sheky and white in the face, and then went out into the open air to shake off the night mare which oppressed his faculties and made his brain so dizzy while he felt sick even to the stomach.Then recovering somewhat by taking a small nip of brandy to steady himself, he read it again, weighing carefully ev every word, and jumping at conclusions, rejecting this senti ment as absolutely improbable, and that as impossible and saying to himself as Pierre had done;"I don't believe it.There is something wron g there.And Penrod dead.Rosh .That is impossible.Only yesterday I thought U heard someone say somethin g about Adeldefob being seen in the foe lines only yesterday and no one is Adeldefob, but him."

By his own many experiences he had long ago suspected that Violet, and her sisters might always face some danger or another too as long as this conflict contin ued, but not in this way.Anon however, a doubt stole into his mind that it might be true, and this doubt was succeeded by another and another, untilll there were great drops of sweat upon the generals face as he stood uneasily looking out of his window, and an intense fear, sorrow and pity in his h eart as he thought of Violet, and her sisters and all they would have to suffer.

"The poor little princesses, so good, so beautiful, and yet so proud and high spirited against all wickedness and also against the wicked enemy;they cannot bear it, neither can I, and also I shall do all I can to find out if the letter they sent me pertainint pertaining to Penrods death is true"he said;and t hen suddenly there swept over him another thought, which made him reel in his chair, while the sweat drops on his forehead and about his lips grew larger and th icker. "If the ta,e ta, ta, tale were true, then Violet and her sisters were really in grave danger, and---"

He did not allow himself to think any further but throwing out his hands with a fierc fierce gesture, he exclaimed"If Viol t or her sisters were a thousand times a Princess a piece, she would and her sisters too be no sweeter nor lovlier than they have been to me before, nor if I can h elp it will th ey be one whit the worse for this disaster threatening them, if disaster th ere be, which in one way I don't doubt, but I doubt the death details of their brot her Penrod at all events I will leave no stone upturned untill the truth is proved that he is d dead.If I could only read Catherine Lees letters which has been sent to me I might fin d som th in g on which to base a con clusion.

Taking up the letter which bore the date farthest back, he began to decipher it slowly and carefully, succeeding much better than he had even believed he w u would, and when it was fin ished he possessed a pretty pretty accut accurate knowledge of its contents.Then he took the second, third, and the fourth and went through with them also, while the conviction deepened in his mind and there was something in the story which would bear in vestigation.

"In must see Violet, and her sisters at once."He said"Ad Catherine Lee also, and hear from her if she has any other proof toboffer, than her mere statement and these letters, which she may or may not have written.And that affair of"violet and her sisters kidn apping"Adeldefob"fromthe enemys lines.Poof.CrosynManley would surely in vent something like this. And if it is t rue,

I being their guardian will make them get from this region before it is too late.Too bad I can't follow wi y with them but I'm known too well by the enemy disfuise or no disguise and I'd only hidner their escape by doing so.But I'll follow and shadow them with the Gemini, ad if any one tries to injure them"---

He finished with a fierce s g shake of his fist tward the direction of the glandelinian armies . Ordering his horse(no not hoss)and giving some directions to his clerk in cas case generals or otherofficers called, he was soon riding rapidly tward the headquarters of violet,and her sisters, where Minn ie Saunders had been for more than an hour.Pierre had found the good girl scout seated at the breakfast table of the mcshall arrey d arrayed in her usual morning girlscout riding custom, ad e big heartshaped hat on her head.and her face shone with cont ment con tentment an and satisfaction as she drank her milk.With his usual polite salute Pierre handed the package to her,andwthen depa was about to depart when she said n

"Wait Pierre.what's this hasty departure.Where did you get this package from"and she picked it up. H e stood there therefore while she read aloud;

"Miss Minnie Saunders, Present .What did Jennie want to put PPresent"on for Pierre and how beautiful she writes.But it is in English and I don't believe I can make it out at all.I can speak it a little but read it oh never."

Pierre tried to explain but she held up her hand for "Quiet "qity with a smile and said;

"You wait while I read it ;"and tearing off the envelope she tried in vain with an English book she had to decipher the contents of the letter.Jennie had written it un der great excit ement in typewriting, and though she could speak English pretty good and even without the funn y words to it she could read it just as good as a H en could..She called one of her Aidecamps who though very faithful in his service was an American by birth;

"Here Henry dear read it for me; it is not likely there is any secret;"You may go if you wish now Pierre"she added, and the boy bowed and left, while Minnie's aidedcamp took the paper in his hands, and began to read what Jennie had written.It was as follows;;

"My dear friend
Minnie Saunders;
"I and my dearest sisters wishes your services the day after to morrow if not sooner for we are going for a time into the enemys lines to do some work against wicked Glandelin ia ad to make very important investigations.A dreadful thing has been done or is going to be done against us bymany secret spies of the enemy as you and your two sisters well know and for our good I suppose kept secret untill yesterday, when I found it out, and it was enough to kill one who does not trust in God as we do and have as much faith as all us Abbieannian Catholics do.For the sake of our own safty, not for ourselves but to spare any unecessary sorrow for our parents and dear friends we are going to pose as if we are not th e beautiful Abbiecannian Princesses, we are goingoint s to assume as if we werenot born of Princely parents in Abbiecannia; why we are even goingbto disguise and assume the appearance of foreigners and even assume the role of whqt is called in English"Nobodies.We are even at any risk for a time try to assume as if we are the daughters of haughty Glandelinia and that their crazy Glandelinian government is to be our mother.Catherine Lee has told me and violet all the deception of the wicked glandelinian generals either produced or backed by the Glandelinian governmtn.It is terrible the peril we are in, added by the loss of our brother Penrod, whom of course Tim doubt s agout his death, which if he is right I'll t hank God most warmly and make a sacrifice for Him, and so will my sisters.I'd give th e world the way I feel about it if Penrod was Our Dear Blessed Lord H imself in disguise as a boy.Come as soon as you can and see Catherine Lee and also to question her your self.Afterwards come and see me and my sisters as you must go with us on that desperate spying expedition we are going to do.

"T THE LITTLE QUEENIES OF ARBIANN IA.

"Violet, and her sisters not safe in their own christian armies.Not safe.Who then is safe I'd like to know."Minnie Saunders exclaimed, when the boyscout read the first lines of the letter.But theboyscout did not answer . His u quick eye had gone rapidly on with an exclamanation of surprise, he read what Jenn ie h ad writt written oh so sadly, while Minn ie turned as white as ash es and could only whisper her own incredulity.

V"violet and her sist ers in such great danger.Not saf within our own christian lines.No ,,no I cannot believe th at it seems impossible indeed."she said and an awful sense of pain began to rise in her h eart at th the thought of the danger of losing in this way the little princesses who had crept into h er love and devotion."Read it again John "she continued;"I'm sure you did not get it right just then.Jennie never would say or w rit write any such things unless she was crazy, and she had been several times.Yes that's it."and Catherines or Minn ie's face slightly brightened, and her voice was more cheery."Fretting for poor Penrod hasctr temporarily driven herout of her mind.she h as not slept, nor cried, not eaten, n or acted herself since he died on that bloody battlefield, and neither has her sisters.I shall go over there at once, and y do you run as fast as you can to my livery after my horse, and when my sisters return tell them where I went and have them come there too.I command it. "

And so within an hour after Pierre delivered Jenn ie's letter to Minnis Saunders she was alighte alightin g at the door of their h eadquarters."ildred Maxwell who knew noth in g of Pierres journey to that section of the christian camps opened the door to the girlscout chieftian, whose first exclamanation was;

""H ow is Jennie, and when did the spell come upon her?"

"Spell, what spell."

"What sh e is having."

"Do you mean Princess Jennie, and how you know anything ailed her !"Mildred as asked looking puzzled for she never heard of Jennie having a spell.

"Why---why--why-- how do I know.didn't their boyscout aidecamp Pierre fetch me a strange and shocking letter from her this morning in which she said she and her sisters were going to the foe lines to do an desperate act of spying despit e the peril they're in iwithin their own lines and were going to act as nobodies instead of princesses and th at---""""""

H ere Minnie stopped struck by the appearance on Mildreds face, which once before had so impressed her, the first time she saw Mildred.she had paid no attention o o the assertion in Jen n ie's letter that there was really such danger closing in on h er and her sisters, but now as she looked into the black eyes confront in g her so steadily, she saw there somethin g which awoke with in h er a strange feeling of fear and she continued with a faltering voice;"she said that you are to go with them in this spying trip..It is so is it.Are you really goin g!"

"I don't know the story seems so incredible" Mildred replied,but she took th e hands extended to her in jer own ad covered them with kisses as she contin ued; "If I am to accompany them, it is nevertheless very hard on poor violet,and h er sisters, and n you must love them all the more just the same love them better if it be possible."

"Yes,yes"Minnie replied with tears in her eyes."Nothing shall change m my love for the poor little girls.where is poor Jennie and her sisters too.Let me go to them at once.I must see them ."

Her sisters were not in th the room, they were trying in spite of th emselves to eat a little breakfast, but Jennie who refused to eat and who was lying still on her bed must have been still asleep(peep peep) for she heard nothing untill a hand was laid gently o on h er h ead and a voice full of love and pity said sadly to her;

"Jennie, poor little Jenn ie.God loves her better than the whole world ."

Then she start ed up with a cl low cry caused partly by surprise and partly by the sharp ian which seemed to pass from her h eat to her head and force to the surface the tears which had so long been pent up and which now fell like rain..She had always felt or heard Minnie ca l her that always with the end ing of the sentence in the same way, and it always gave her a feeling of comfort and now as the familiar sound fell on h er ears, there fell over her such a feeling of anguish and intense longing for what she and her sisters had lost with the d death of Penrod, that finally the fountain of tears was broken up, and for some min utes she lay in the mot herly arms of the good sized lovable girl held out to her,, and cried so hard and piteously that Minnie Saunders became alarmed at last, and tried to soothe and quiet her.But Jenn ie could not be quieted, while Angelinia Aronburg coming in looked at the scene with great emption, but was glad indeed that at last poor Jenn ie was able to cry.

"Let her cry Min."she said almost reproachfully."It 'll do her good.You kn ow she has not shed a tear before since Penrod died and I guess she is crying more for him than for the disaster upon herself and her sisters."

"Oh Penrod, Penrod if you could only come back I----I---"

"Hush Jenn ie"Minnie int errupted."I do not know what you mean---don't want to know----and if there is anything my advice is to keep it to yourself for your sake and the sake of your sisters.I took you and your sisters to my heart as if you were my own that first day in Angelinia Agathia I saw you at the train, seven little half scared little lambs among so many strangers.I loved you and your sisters then ; I've loved you ever since then and always will no matter what you intend to be or are."

"Oh but it hurts me and my sisters so."Jennie cried, though in her heart she had a keener pang of sorrow and remorse more for our Blessed Lord than for herself when she remembered what He had gone through, and nowe despite her own sorrow she would have given the world to have him Him as a boy for her brother and known that it was true as much as she loved Penrod himself.

"What are I and my sisters that we deserve your love and the love of all others when everybody seems to hate our blessed Lord, and makes us suffer just to spite Him."she said;"Glandelin ia is so wicked, and have vexed the christian world so many times and makes everything happen to us and our nation just to mock God, yet my brother and everybody here is dearer to me and my sisters than any living creature, though I or my sisters are not related to any one. But we are in a dreadful danger and we will have to do something.Catherine Lee has told us all about it ,she is one of our girlscout guardians."

Jennie spoke very low, and a flush stained her cheeks, where the tears were still falling, though not so fast as at first.she was growing a little calmer and more composed,, and was beginning to tell Minnie what she had heard when general Jack Evans was announced.To Violet who had come to admit him he had said;;;

"Your dear sister Jennie has written me a strange story.Do you or your sisters know anything about it.?"

"Yes, "Violet answered with a quivering lip"I heard Catherine Lee tell her."

"And was that the first you knew of it ?"he asked scrutinizing her very closely

"No "she said hesitatingly, as if the confessionwere a great pain."I knew it a few weeks ago when---when------"

"When you were sick and you kept it to yourself for the sake of your sisters." General Evans interrupted her.

"Yes--I---I---did, and----"

"You are a braver little girl than I even thought you were despite your many experiences with me and others"he interrupted againFew Violet dear even in this country ofunbelievable goodness and chairty would have done what you have."

"If they loved my sisters as I do they would."she said."Oh Evans dear it if it hould be true, can we not keep it to ourselvesuntill we find out what is wrong and frustrate our enemies!Need the cruel world know it."

"If it depends upon you and your sisters and me it might be done."he replied. "but I'm afraid we can't manage Glandelini n spies who would broadcast all this to the world themselves.But cheer up Violet.God will do you and your sisters justice soon.He struck terribly for you often, and He'll do it agiagain.I can even feel it coming and soon ."

"Poor Jennie she's upstairs and won't come down to breakfast."said Violet.

"Where is she, and can I see her."

"You can."answered Violet.I'll sent Pierre up and tell herhe you're here.I know she sent for you."

Pierre came up and said;

"Princess, General Jack Evan Evans had arived.Shall I sent him up or will you come to him."

"I feel too upset to go down"she said."Yes let him come up at once.I wish to see him oh so badly."

Pierre departed with his profound bow.Then she heard general Evans coming, and rising to her feet and brushing the tears away, because she knew he couldn't bear to even see one tear on her cheek, she stood erect with the old angelic look flashing in her eyes, for surely she would not allow this great general and her brave lovable guardian, who had done more for her and her sisters than the whole whole world would have done, to see how crushed and humiliated she was. That would break him down also.But when she caught sight of his face, so full of sorrow, pity, apprehension and sympathy, and increasing love, and also concern for her, and also anger at her enemies raging within his breast, she could not help it but broke down utterly and cried harder then ever she had done when Minnie had called her"Jennie, poor dear little Jennie.It was a perfect storm of sobs and tears, and general Evans who had never witnessed anything like it cried himself as he looked at the little figure writhing in such pain.

"You must excuse me Evans dear for I cannot help it."she said when she could at last speak."It is not this alone which affects me so.It is everything. Our Blessed Lord for the first has too many enemies.Then the death scene on the battle field of Joe Green when his strange words to Gertrude Angeline forshadowed this which has come upon me and my sisters, and the loss of Penrod who would have stood by me in the face of everything like all the rest do.It is one comfort that we really have so many count less true friends or we would be crushed utterly."

"And Jennie dear do you think I will not do that again!"General Evans said drawing down the blinds and then sitting down beside her and taking her hot hands in his as naturally as if he had been her father or brother or more than a lover to his sweetheart who now is in grief and it is in his power to do something and avenge her wrong.And as he looked upon her so broken and crushed and apparently helpless, and yet so sweet and lovely withal, there swept over him againsomething of the same feeling that he had had when he held An geline in his arms when she had been nearly dying those sad days at Evangeline St Claire, but the feeling was stronger. From what he had seen Violet and her sisters suffer was so "En joyable" to him that it is true indeed you couldn't find in the whole of Abbieann ia any one who hated the foe so muchHe longed in his heart to see Glandelin ia, a thing in history only, a delusion, a thing of the past, and the landsoccupied only by the holy people of Abbieann ia.He longed to see all glandelin ians scattered over the face of the earth, refugees, exiles or what not.He could not bear to see the white tear stained face before him.

There was more than even the greatest pity in his heart for the little girl who with her sisters always so dazzled, and bewildered, and bewitched him---a desire to comfort and reassure her and them, he longed to see them together with their brother Penrod, and as he often did before he took her in his arms to soot he her as he had often soothed her before.Minnie Saunders would have left the room as he came in, but both had bade her stay, and Jennie's eyes in which great tears were shining were so pitifully fixed upon him, and her lips he had so often kissed were quivering in a grieved sort of way, and Jennie was held fondly in his embrace and he finally said;

"Jennie Jennie dear you do right when you say you have so many friends so many however who are more than your friends.Jennie I asked you and your sisters once to do good deeds for the sake of your country, when our armies stood upon a dizzy height of success and victory, and now I ask you again when misfortune seems to be overtaking you and your sisters.Will you save yourselves by leaving this dangerous territory, and with the help of the Gemini let me shadow and sheild you from the storm and prove to you that I have loved you and your sisters for yourselves rather than for your surroundings and rank."?

Jenni F Jennie's face indeed was a study as she from sheer exhaustion and weariness lay down upon his lap while she looked at him long and earnestly.Never before at general Evans seen so swer sweet, so soft and so angelic an expression in the dark blue eyes as she saw there now and never did she or even her sisters be more desirable than she or they did who were now with her and him when she answered him at last;

"I thank you so much Evans dear for what you have said and even done for me and my sisters so often.It has done me a great deal of good, for you have often proved that you loved us for our sakes alone, and that shows there are so many millions who will do and do the same, and that is why our lives are not quite so dreary.I will do you the justice that I know always you are in earnest for that too you have often proved, and always had meant what you say, but you are mistaken in what you say about covering us in our expedition.That won't do us any good.You must accompany us, and we will see to it you'll get a disguise so cleverly made that not even the enmy will know you.I know you have more love for us than usual and you would sacrifice all for us.And when poor Penrod whwent down in the battlefield my heart too went with him never to return. I have heard too that you have taken a great fancy also of little Jennie.I know it, have seen it, and am so glad.she is worthy to be your little friend and was worthy before what you and she did for our sister Angeline with Catherines help at Evangeline St Claire.If you accompany us too we probably can be happy together despite our sorrow.Send for Catherine Lee, and hear her story, or rather for our sakes go to her.I could not listen to it again and I believe neither could Violet.She will convince you of the truth of what she says--and you must fix whatever there is to fix, so that my mother who is in the special danger will have justice done her for God's sake at least if not anything else.Don't let a thought of me or anyone interfere with the safty of our mother.And now Evans dear go to Catherine Lee and come to us again afterwards and we'll make plans."

She then kissed him and wishing her good morning and God Bless her and her sisters who also kissed him, he went below stairs to seek an interview with Catherine Lee.As they had no suspicion of what had happend, it was a more accident which sent Jack Sanders and Dolores and Angeline Jennings and Angeline Jennings and others to the headquartersof Violet and her sisters that morning, and general Evans found them in the libery with Minnie Saunders who had told them what she knew and thrown them into a wild state of surprise excitement and grave apprehension.

"Oh General Evans"Angeline Jenn ings said going up to him with a salute as he entered the room(groom) "is it true that Violet, and her sisters known the danger they are in, and that their mother is worse off too."

"I do not know yet"he replied."I am going to question Cath erine Lee.shall I have her in here and let you hear what she has to say? "

"Yes let her come"An geline Richee said, and in a few minutes Catherine Lee entered the room calmer ad more collected thanshe had been for the last three weeks.Too she had told the truth to Jenn ie and violet. As long as she was able to know what to do she could meet anything now and had detailed all her scouts to arrest all strangers coming near h er own or the h eadquarters of violet and her sist rs and if they could not explain themselves it was too bad.At Generals Evans request she began her story, which she repeated in a straight forward manner n ver never once crossing herself nor hesitating in the least except when some strong emotion overcame her as she spoke of violet or her sisters.No one could doubt that she was telling the truth,, and Evans did not doubt h er, but he said to her when she had finished;

"Have you no other proof than t your mere ass ertion of facts."

"Yes indeed"she replied"I can give you the name of the persons in Oph elia of the agency in Ch icago, and t hese written documents which I stole from Manley on the day I spied and overhead his plot.Otherh othergent lemen in Ophelia whose addresses I have here if they are still living will testify to the fact that Empress Vivian is or was in the greatest of th e perils.Then old Mrs Mrs Stankolin is still alive in Big Girl Knool, and will show th at I proved to her what I knew.You can right or go in person and see.I have also Emperor Vivians last letter, written me a week ago from Big Girl Knool a few days afo and h e had h eard more sufficiently of the situation which r related to you. That will prove that Violet and her sisters is in that sort of peril, and after that you surely will believe me without the letter which Jennie murmer wrote to me.I did not destroy that letter, though tempted to do so ,any times for fe r fear of spies getting hold of it.."

She talked rapidly, and every word carried fresh convict ion to everybody who heard of it .Of the meeting b tween violet and her sisters and their friends it is not our purpose to speak except to say that at its close there was not in the minds of either a shadow of doubt as to the tie between them.Th There was no joy amongst any one n and a keen pain of regret for the little desolate Vivian Girls Jenn ie of whom laying her h ead on Angeline Richees lap begged h er and her followers to stand by them.

"If I or my sisters could die for our Count ry like Penod did we would."she said"but I cannot neit her must our sisters.We are so young, and life seemsso lonely for us now-when once th e days were tooo short for all we had to en o enjoy.Oh why has Glandelinia so dealth with us? "

It surely was hard for any one to answer that qu estion or explain why to any of these princesses, whose lives before the war had been so full of sunshine so much wretchedness so undeservedly had come.Anna Saunders a said that it was Glandelinia's way.She h ard the news at first with wonderful dr degree of seeming equam equanimity.she was not greatly surprised, she said, for if the Glandelinians will do to all christian children what they have done, what would you expect them to do to the Vivian Girl Princesses even despit e their goodness, and beauty and so di fferent from other young girls. She said too"It is the fault of all of us.We let the enemy do too much and get away with it ."Then she began to rail and say"Why should we cram up our christian army camps with useless lazy good for nothing Glandelinian risoners when they should recieve no quarter.What good are they anyh ow.If they must remain then make them work good and h ard.If the Princesses have to suffer and they had done no wrong, then why should not the Glandelinians suffer.Th ey deserve it , Violet and her sisters don't ."

This was the ground Anna took and just then she thought of something else and went out .The utmost sympathy love and sorrow was felt for Violet and her sisters when the story was known.Never before had the whole christian army camp been so excited and depressed as it was now, for soldiers, and child scouts, and even men women and children war refugees did not hing but talk sorrowfully and agrily of the affair from morning untilll night,,, and Angelinia Aronburg whom they all knew so well and had seen so many times became as great an object of devotion as Violet and her sisters were for she was their cousin and guardian and they felt sure she would bring them out of th e mess.To Angelinia Aronburg this situation was exceedingly distasteful.she had fought the story of this awful situation as long as possible, had said it could not be true even after general Evans in whose judgement she relied so much had told her to believe it wou wit hout other proof than he had gathered from Catherine Lee.Of course he was bound to obtain all the evidence of Penrods death as possible both from Ophelia and Big Girl Knool and see in person the officer who wrote the letter, and this he had tae taken steps to do.There could be no doubt on t he subject and Violet and her sisters were in the gravest peril.For a time now violet and her sisters shut themselves up in their room n and refused to see any one for their sake to recover who from sympath y and love came to assure them of their continued friendship an esteem.

In the meatime at a certain boyscouts headquarters door there came a knock a loud knock three or four times.There were two persons in t he room with the boyscout and one who was a girl suddenly said;

"sh--sh-h -h -h .There's someone at the door."

"What"said the other a man.Let's get."

"Come on George"she said to the man."We'll go out the rear door.As for you nothing to the ot her boyscout"as for you, you see who's there and use your head."

After they were gone the boy opened the front door and saw standing there a a girlscout.It was Anna Furg Ann a Saunders.She did not say anything but the boy answered; or said-

"Oh it's you.The girlscout who sent me away one day when I was trying to speak to the Princesses."what do you want."?

"I wish to talk to you."Anna answered."But first who was in this room with you just now when I kn ocked.?"

"No one.I was alone."

Anna looked at the chair and then went to the big couch .

"You lie boy.This big couch and the cushion of that chair there are warm. Some one or two people besides yourself were here sitting in t hat chair and lying on this couch."

"But I---"

"Don't say anything you can't fool me"and Anna proudly strode to the rear door and with drawn pistol pulled it open but there was no one in sight.

"H umph .They've made their get away.Oh well you're the one I wan to t alk to now anyway."

The boy not suspecting anything was surprised to see Anna draw from her coat pocket a large sheet of paper ad unroll it exposing a torn up letter pasted on it together. Anna said showing it-

"I don't know who you are boy or what you are up to---but you sure have made yourself a migh ty suspicious character.I have here which I am showin g to you a pieced together note or letter that you tore up and th rew from your window sayin g you have bee but twenty four hours to go through with a certain job.The note is signed J.M. That seems to be the initials of Joh n Manley.N Now come clean--- what's it all about."

"I never recieved that note"said the boy.I found it lying on the Company Street.Why should I have the heart to do any harm to the Vivian Girls whether I know them or not.They mean nothing to me and I mean nothing to them, and I doubt if any one could ever harm them..They say they are contented and happy with their surroundings.I do not know anything about the dangers th ey're facing that is unknown."

"Oh yeah.Now listen boy"said Anna Saunders rising to her feet."I will let you still free on one condition.That is that you keep from their neighborhood you understand.And also there is just one thing you can do.Go through wit h the same thing we do if you want to prove you're not against us or we'll see that you are-- that is if you value your life do as you say.If you're a spy trying to get at the vivian Girls you'll wish you had never been born."

"Oh n o, no I'm not that."

"Very well.Prove it.Good day."

In the meantime Evans made allvthe endr endeavors to obtains in formation and evidence about th situation possible, both from Big Girl Knool and Ophelia, and had suggested the possibility, that the peril which Violet and h er sisters and also their mother were facing might be only a mere dream and thus that Violet and h er sisters recievin g the story from Cath erine might t hin k themselves in danger which they were n ot facing.But there had been no wit nesses, and Emperor Vivian or even H is brother had never h ad any su suspicion as to the peril that was also menacin g h is glorious wife.Yet as the many arrests of strangers proved , and too who couldn't give any satisfactory answers to quest ion s asked them,t here couldcbe no doubt on the subject , and therefore Violet and h er sisters really were in the danger spoken of.H e made an attempt to call by long distance telephon e on the Empress ,as did other persons and christian generals and also Emperor Vivian Himse f, but to no avail, and there came in an increase to th e color of violets face, when she h eard th at h er mot her had been called up to n o avein avail, and thought of her own sisters her little fearsome and h eartbroken sisters who had shut themselves up in their room and refusedvto see those of their former acquaintance

,who prompted partly by fear for their safty, and also by true h earted sympathy came to assure them of their contin ued friendship n and esteem.

"It is very kind of th em, and we th ank them ch so much from the bottom of our hearts, but we are in n o con dition to see th em yet."Jenn ie herself said, when "ildred brought t h em the message.and disappoint ed in their desire to see poor Violet or h er sisters, they turned their attent ion to Cat herine Lee, but she too avoided and baffled them partly for their own sake, and partly because she could not tell who all were loyal among th em and who were not spies, and she temporarily returned to the own headquarters of her own, wh ere she remain ed perefectly quiet , seein g n o one, and talking with no one, except Violet and her sisters and "ildred Maxwell, and general Jack Evans, to the latter of whom as a high general and the guardians of violet and h er sisters, she wished to be always comun icative, givin g him any in for mation he wished for, and aidin g him materially by procuring the proof, which though he deemed it superfluous, he was desirous to obt ain for violet and her sist ers.To others suspectin g spies coming to see h er she h ad said all sh e had int ended to say or ever meant to say, and th on th e subject of her past life, her lips were sealed forever.Silent cold, and impassive, she moved about her own headquarters, with no look lock of human interest on h er whit e face,except when Violet or h er sisters came, as they did every day.Then after that when they shut themselves up in their room only "ildred came with news of Violet and h er sisters.Th en the pale sh cheeks would flush for a moment and the h eavy eyes light up with eager expectancy as she asked th e samequestion;

"H ave they felt any better yet."

"N o not yet."was "ildred answer, and then the do color would fade away and the lips shut tightly togeth er as if in pain, but no word of protest ever passed th em, or complaint that Violet and h er sist ers were not justly dealt with and th at the Glandelin ians were tryin g to blight them more and more.

It was the Saunders girls who stayed constan ly with violet and h er sist ers dur drung dr during the first few days after the story was known and it was wonder ful to see th e love and con fidence between them.wit h Violet and h er sisters the feelin g was almost as if the Saunders had been their own sister too.On her bended knees Jenn ie with her h a head in Ann a's lap, had con fessed all their past experiences, even to the horror at Evangeline St Claire under th e bruit e Augistin in St Claire, and first too when she st ood on the platoform quand was sold into slavery, and was claimed by so vile a man as Augustin in St Claire.

"I'm afraid sometimes as to the future."she said."Glandelin ia is so wicked and proud, Glandelinia believes h erself equal or above obe even God h imself, and Gladelin ia hates us all, hates everythin g about the Ch iristian word world , and will go on hatin g it, esp ic especially us Abbieannians and us lit tle girls and the Glandelin ian leaders may Abbieannia is so offensive to t h eir eye."

Ann a herself felt sorrowful and full of sympathy for poor violet and her sist ers, and stroke jJenn ie's glossy golden hair, and told her not t o mind but get up and wipe her tears away, and be comforted..

"Most of us all arevnot like you and your sist ers."she said" and never could be if we even tried to be so.It is not the looks of people, nor how we dress which makes the difference, it is our characters which is the make up from th e beginn in g.All of us boy and girlscouts will stick to you th rough thick and th n'thin ."

Then they talked together of the plans that Violet and her sisters had made up to outwit the enemy, and to what portion of the enemys lin es th ey would go on t h eir spyin g t rip when they left the ch ristian lines, as they were resolved of doing for a time at least.

"I may come back to Mildred Maxwell after a while"Jenn ie said"But n ow I and my sist ers must go to where no ones kn.ows me and my sisters .I will not be h unt ed down by our enemies when there is so much to do for our own cause, and so we must go away."

"Then why not go to general Meldonia Bickn alls army."Mibbie h erself suggested." "I've heard that though h e is a Glandelin ian general he noverth eless is your friend, though of course at times his Gladelin ians are awfully dangerous."

"You mean general Meldon Bicknalls army."Jenn ie rejoined."That sector is near oph elia.I have heard general Concentin ian Aron burg speak of it.H e is in action now though at th at spot too, and he told me what a grand old sector of country he had captured after hardest fighting, and that Bicknalls headquarters is standing in the midst of a grove of huge pines, with rooms enough to accomodate accomodate fourty or fifty persons.Yes I and my sisters sh ould like to go th r like to go there.We sh oul d like to see general Bickn alls army again.Pierre, Catherine, Evans and Angelin ia Aronburg will go with us and it may not be as dangerous as it is now with the foo looking for us. "

"An d let me give you a little assistance in secret ways by shadowing."Jinn ie said."I've a h uge army of girlscout s and boys too.Let me give you a th ousand clever girls to shadow you and your sisters secretly, and when tha they are doing it n o danger or any bad luck will befall you n o matter wh ere you are."

The plan of going to Bickn alls army struck Violet and her sisters favorably.They had heard f rom general Concentin ian Aronburg of general picknalls camp, and knowing nothin g of the dilapidated condit ions of th at portion of th e foe army because of the violent attacks recent ly of Concentinian Aronburgs army, or the many difficult ies and perils also to m be met with and overcome before they could even be in situation there, they were anxious to go at once, and broached the subject to An gelinia Aronburg, who naturally at first opposed it wit h all her powers.It was her wish that Violet and h er sisters should seek shelter in Big Girl Knool untill the storm blew over.But this violet and her sisters would not do.After a time she or her sisters might feel differently Catherine Vivian herself said"But n ow she and her sist ers must go eaway and as general Picknalls army could not be of any great safty for "ildred Maxwell she was willing to stay behind.So General Jack Evans was consulted, and quest ioned with regard to the Glandelin ian army under general picknall, of which since so lon g durated and so fierce a battle was racin g at Ophelia t hey knew so little.Orignally it was still a strongly entrenched army, with lat least a hundred separate encampments, but these were badly torn up and most of the army scatt ered by the christian charges, and since th at time , or rather since Big n alls army had in vain tried to recover his lost ground,the posit ionshad been retaken and retaken over and over again. If Bickn all secretly was th eir friend it might be safer to go there than to other armies providin g they didn't spy on h im, and yet too it might not be safe, but h is advice was that Violet and her sisters should go to Big Girl knool, as it was almost inaccessable to approach the battle field just now as it was getting near a dangerous stage too, and so fierce was th e battle that it was no time at all to go to general Bickn alls Glandelin ian army.

But Violet and her sisters argued different ly, and she and her sisters were so anxious and excit ed, and so determined, th at a consultation was h eld between general Evans and h is highest officers, which resulted in th e decision by vote that as soon as the necessary arrangements could be made Evans O Q Angelinia Aronburg and Violet and her sisters should leave th e christ ian army wit h Catherine Lee for general Picknalls Glandelinian army, accompanied by Pierre and sh adowed by 10,000 child scouts in disguise who were all trusty and sufficient . This givingup of so many chilf child scouts was Anna Saunders own proposit ion which she strenuously insisted upon , saying when Violet herself objected, that it would not be for long, as they would soon get en ough of th at In def In fedel glandelinian army to be back within the Christian army again.

Therefore the following day was fixed upon for the departure of the Vivian Girls, and the day before they left, the carriage carrying Violet and her sisters drove through the Company Street to the place where Catherine Lee was just th en alone.From it Violet and her sisters alighted, and entering a unannounced remained there for the rest of the day.But after or whatever was that interview nothin g was ever known except this;

When the following evening when "ildred Maxwell reported that Violet and her sisters were getting ready for departure at night Catherine Lee who knew she must go with them said with a quivering lip and trembling voice;

"They kissed me and called me their biggest heroine of the army."

A few minutes after this as they were riding back tward their headquarters feeling very dejected and sober, they noticed in the direct ion of Ophelia a very heavy b ack cloud of smoke, really the biggest cloud of smoke they had ever truthfully seen in all their lives rising up tward the very sky and spreading overhead like ancernormous canopy of storm cloud.They felt a little less sad or dejected at such a sight however for these things always excited any other feeling out of them but they did not look interested but sort of apprehensive. owever it was not untill night time came on while they were in their own headquarters trying to sleep off their sorrowsand worry when there seemed to be a severe earthquake, for the earth rocked, the house swayed, pladvp plaster fall and windows wet out, and the heavens seemed suddenly to be blazing from a sudden series of explosions of many hundreds of thousands of tons of sudden death and de destruction over a whole area of the territory of Ophelia.At the same time six million people were asleep or going to asleep that night, when two of the most mightiest explosions ever recorded shook the whole o country side as an earthquake would have done in any part of Japan or Italy, and spread fear and panic over the whole count ry of Calverinia. Bombs countless in numbers soared fiercely into the air, ad burst a thousand feat above the landscapes in gorgeous red and yellow poppies e seemingly as numerous as stars in the sky seen when you're in the clar air of a high mountain side.

Shrapn. all in dreadful numbersc descended upon both the citi s of Opheliz Ophelia and Jennie Richee, and upon the river watersides and upon various section s of mandscapes falling upon christian and enemy encampmen ts alike, raking roofs and walls, and raining down upoh upon the hissing waters. Shells exploding by many thousands under the touch of the terrific h eat of fierce conflagrations shot as many missiles at random. Fragments of these great shrapnell shells fell even in Concentinian Aronburrs army, and over the river pi r piers of Ophelia arose a dreadful whit white glare as if of a hundred million c' mercury vapor lights. In Fir Girl Kn col even though far away the light was so brilliant that a needle could have been picked up in the str eets. People in twenty big cities and over a hundred towns and that many more villieres and in rural districts, and soldiers within the opposing lin es were shaken from their cots or beds. Far away at Fir Girl Knool, fourty miles away Emperor Vivian himself slightly ill gothout of bed to see what sort of a dreadful earthquake, was s so o contin ually rocking his headquarters.

In the internment christian prison camps of even far away christian armies of Fir Girl Knool, more than five million Gladelinian prisoners, and elsewhere within the camps, refugees and many regiments of christian col soldiery had a miraculous escape from death in that iron hail, and attendants in charge of about five hundred rescued child slaves and refugee orphan asylum children spent many hours they may n ver forget. In Chamberlin ne, Rose, Topay, St H el ena, H enrietta and also T St James; half of that section of Calverin ia State--- indeed even as far north as Vivian Wickey and Calverine--it meant the end of th e world to many millions. Old men, and women and children fled shrieking from their rocking homes, and knelt in the streets to pray. The night in many cit ies went absolutely lunat ic with the shrieking of fire and Gemini sirains. In the river past Oph elia drifting war barges and transports afire and exploding were a terror to all other sorts of shipping in the river which endeavored to get away. Fireboats charged up and down the river/.

Everywhere in a great number of bir cities, small towns and also villieres near or far broken glass littered the streets thicker thicker than the fallen leaves of Autumn. All great skyscrapers in these cities stood as windows less as if th ey never had h ad windows. All houses n o matter what height or size in these cit ies and towns were the same. In Aquariums of bir cities and in towns too all fishes were killed by the shock, ad also in th e rivers. Even in the terror of the night and following day, people thought that a Volcano had burst near Calverin a. They thought of Mt Calverine. Was it blowing up! Or had it broken int o a violent eruption.

What Violet, and her sisters found out through some couriers a little later while strange inky bl ckness prevailed making them think that some unkn own vi Volcano near Ophelia had blown up, was that the munitions explosions at Ophelia and between h er and Jenn ie Richee of the enemy had exploded when a fierce con flargration broke out during a raid made by christian troops, and that the explosion of these munitions from the amounts stored and the size of the munition h sheds was undoubtedly one of th the most violent exp losions of the war since the gr at Abbiesnn horror. so secret did the enemy keep of the facts that these immense munition dum s or cents was one of the least kown to be within the many sections of the Gladelinian encampments, and too the battle itself had been of such lon g duration, and raging n ight and day that there were apperently not even local reports of any munitions bein g pres nt within the enemys lines and those within the christian lin es had had no disaster. No observed or suspected warnings of an explosion were given even when copious clouds of smoke billowed in great bluges skyward for many thousands of feet from the great con flagration which had been witnessed by Violet, and her sisters before the explosion s occured. Outside of Violet and her sisters, now kn owin g the conflagration was within foe territory it attracted very little attention, even among refugees and prisoners and among the numerous child scouts, for durin g the battle on one side or the other dozens of ot her conflagrations along the river side or within the battle field such as burn ing of small villiages, small forest fires, big grass fires and peat bog fires occured from time to time and contin ued to burn. On a day when there had been no wind Big Girl Knool though so far away was usually hidden in the clouds of smoke from the series of con flagrations, and local battle made earth quakes were so frequent from so many cannons in action, or from t errific explosions as to cause little comment as armies were used to these by n ow. (get your cow) Among many other peoples of far away various towns the very existance of such enemy munition sheds or dumps was doubtless unknown. Violet and her sisters had witnessed on their return from Catherine Leas headquarters the conflagration, and inquirin g we when they reached their own headquarters had learned a fire had started in the enemy lines at two thirty that afternoon and had spread very badly. It had been caused by a raid similar to what Penrod had made (In fact it was made by him and his troopers at that point having never had a chance to enter the foe lin es, and h e was as much d a dead as I am) but bt he but the fire had become one of those which caught everything in sight, and spread and spread. At seven o'clock that evening Violet and her sisters h ad noticed that th e whole sky in that direction was one immense sea of rolling smoke and a bright glare had thrown it self against the canopy as if the world was coming to an end. They had never in their lives seen such a big cloud of smoke. H owever all of them fin ally turned in to bed except Jenn ie, who was despite her sorrows too excited and in terested in the cloud and glare to go to bed though her sisters had c l called to her four or five times. Finally she did go to bed but not of her own intention. she was in bed from her chair before she could even think what happened to her while her sisters were out of bed and lyin g in various postures on the floor as if they had been dumped there any old way while their bed "kissed" the ceiling and then came down to the floor again with force enough to dislodge all the plaster from the ceiling of th e room below upon all th e boy and girlscents sleeping there injurin g a great number about their faces and heads. This proved that the presence of the enemy dumps proclaimed themselves by a violent explosion. Before that 100,000 Gladelinian soldiers had fought like mad demons in their endeavor to prevent the spread of the conflagration toward these cents and then being in vain had barely time of half an hour or so to save their very lives.

All Sout hern and northern Calverin ia State as well as West or N. t East knew of the event at once, for the sound of the first mighty explosion carried northward up the coast as far as Calverine 867 miles away as if a thunderstorm had burst with cucirl intent upon the country, and was even heard across the Angelin e Vine State, and at Mercudin and Aurandecillic distant 1650 1,650, and 2,500 miles away respectively. At the same time Violet and her sisters had their "respective "t ose from and into their beds, the windows of their h adquarters went out at once in a perfect torrent of broken glass while the building shimmied as if the earth was in a terrific tu moil, and those who didvnot hear the sound of this first blast or were too far away to feel the accompanying shocks or explosion concussions did not have to wait long for another form of exp cussement. The column of smoke, debris, and earth dust fragments of trees, clouds of grass and other turf, clay and water and th e fragments of the exploded sh ells, and the millions of explodin g munitions rose quite a number of miles in the air and was despit e night even immediately seen as far away as Calverine city, and Calverin e Inlet, much further even than the explosion clouds of the Abbi e Abbiesnn h orror. This cloud of explosion smoke and dust was carried northward by the mind and within a few hours had shed a shower of earth debris and dust over all the Calverin e terro territory, the east and west half of Angeline Vine State and all of N orthern Angolin ia State as if a great volcano had burst and threw all volcanic ashes in the sky.

Unusally int ense darkness accompanied the fall of dust and debris. Even t he following morning midnight darkness in the late day time extended as far as one hundred miles north of Calverin e. Darkness lasted for ten hours as far as Angeline Junction and Gertrude Angeline cities, Angolin ia Agathin Dorothy Gale, Evangeline St Claire, Trinoque, Cedornine, Headrick Junction and other places two hundred miles from Ophelia. dust fell as far away as Juno town, Jessica, and the Southern Mic-Hollaster Run River Velley, and Depression Ville town, seven hundred and fifty, nin e hundred, and 16,000 miles. The fumes of burned power aburned wood and burned ground and other burning stuff were reported from points as remote as Vivian Wickey, and Logan Zoe Rae Run, and also Panrod still much further away, as well as all ot her places previously ment ioned.

In the violence of the explosion which had the force of a Krakatoa or a Katmei erupt ion in the quanity of material thrown upward and about, in the size of the great craters dug,, and in to the distance to which the hurled material and sound waves were carried, this was certainly among the greatest of war explosions so far ever witnessed by two armies. Strange con trary to oth er great war explosion disasters it differs however from all other kn own explosions in th at outside of glass broken out of win dows the destruction of shield sheds and the bigger spread of the conflagration that the immediate damage to property was almost as not hing outside of the explosion zone, and th at so far as known outside of these in cities and towns, as well as in the opposin g armies it was not the direct and soloe cause of a loss of a single life. Strange too countin g from the force of the awful blast. And no flood followed either.

The story which however came by wire (n ot fire) from the towns in the distant vinicity of the awful battlefield of Ophelia at this time told of an explosion or series of explosions of the first magnitude of the kind like the Abbiesnn explis explosion disaster somewhere to the eastward. Th onertowns heard the explosion though one hundred miles away as you would h earvthe loudest crash of thunder in a violent thunder storm,, fe,t felt t he earth trembl,,, and saw the air clouded with dust and explosion debris brought in on the east wind . Still no real authentic news came as to the exact origin of the disturbance.Through some cause or other Violet, and h er sisters knew w hat would any nothing.The explosionswhowever proclaimed their own news for two or three thousand miles down the long river valley, yet silenced not only the wireless but all other various communications, and destroyed railroad lines by which this territory of Calverinia had been ordinarily in communication with parts of Calverin ia not disconn ected from do communication by th the past Abbiemann explosion disaster . Yet the first(if not feist) detailed and aut hentic news c m came with whenthe detail of some scoutin g party returned to the main christian lin es of emperor Vivian himself at Big Girl Knool, with the uniforms and the horses of the party and even their h ats smeared with debris and fine dust and also covered with dried mud as if a storm of mud had descended upon them, and reported witnessing an awful explosion from a near by point some distance west of Ophelia, and of ridin g down into a deep ravine or Glen and remainin g there in shelter in twenty sisix hours of darkness.The scouting party which had belon ged to general Aronburgs army had failed to reach that camp in the darkness caused by the explosion clouds.

It is highly probable that other great explosions in the vinicity of Ophelia or on e certain sections of this dreadful battlefield had been occuring profusely throughout the duration of the titanic conflict, and fires also had occured in size and fury to make enough smoke to make the scene as a long line of volcanoes in moderate or violent eruption, but all the available evidence, in dicates that this dreadful explosion that shook Violet and her sisters out or into their beds and almost wrecked their head quarters is by far the most dreadful so far known and was probably the only one which contributed in any large way to the great volume of solid debris dust and immense clouds of slowly disappearin g smoke clouds hurled upw rd nd and over andcover the sky in the ng night .

The ones encampments of the enemy in which it is said the explosions occured belonged to the west Glandelinian army, I7,500,000 strong, sit uated relatively (not my relative though) near the eastern w section of country west of Ophelia and also entrenched on the P.And K.Hills.The Glandelinian encampment h ad when viewed from far above on e high hill was in the form of a great horn, convex on the western end, probably fifty miles in length, averaging ten miles in width, and projecting sout hwestward from Ophelia tward Chamberlitttt Chamberlane. It had a partly or sort of disguised extension between the towns of Rosa and Topsy, which stretches one hundred miles westward tward Henriette, and with these seperates the Glandelinian armies engaged in the battle of Oph elia from Concentinian Aronburgs army which alone up to the time of the explosive had not been yet in action.This Glandelinian army under general Loe Leonis Meldon Bicknall, like the less continuous encampment s of a Glandelin ian army under general Jesipine Jensin trailing from it, was dominantly in action wit h the christian army , there bein g certainly nine and probably at least twelve active or latent Glandelinian divisions in this Glandelin ian contin ental end of the Glandelinian position.The Glandelinian army under general Black Brooke probably con tained a still larger number of encampments.But only two of the divisions of this Glandelin ian army under g enerals Wrangelle and Henry Edgecombieter were not sit uated in these groups and for a time had bore the brunt of one of the severest of christian attacks in the battle so far but managed to withstand the assault for this time.The Glandelin ian divisions in this belt of encampment s which have shown indicat ions of activity in battlewit h so many cannons in action as to sound like a tremendous volcanic activity included general Dran bells, and Sugustin e Sandfords and general Francis Redoubt Franklinton . Franklinton was active against the christian army near O phelia in December but was not successful while the Glandelinian army under general Sugustine had met several exceptionally violent attacks from the christian armies on e later date of December and had n ot been successful in holdin g them back and the general himself was wounded..... General Glandorns division near Jenn ie Richee suffered from the effects of a terrific explosion on De cember the 7ight, this blast apperently being next to those of Abbiemann and at Ophelia the most violent kn own in Calverinia.Farther West and near th e extremity of the Glandelinian encampments was the division under general Accountants contin uously in action since th e big bat tle started at Big Girl Kn collThe Glandelin ian armies of General Hushaum Manley include a well known group at the eastern section between Jennie Richee, and Ophelia in which are the Glandelinian divisions under general Raymond Richardson Federal, Francis Stanck, Gelmann ia Shoemann ia, Thomas Clovesand(Break-in-t he-neck(and Boboland and a large number of others situated further to the south stretching tward the armies of general John Manleys near Big Girl Knool.The Aronburgs Run stream averagin g about half a mile wide and over two thousand miles l ong runs southwestward and seperates the the opposing armies from each other, which shared the effects of the explosion. The main dangerous workers of the armies of both sides include a few or more thousand secret service agent spies detectives , and a hanf handful of inexperienced spies.The spies mainly of the Christian armies are the Gemini, and th ese spies are well known as one of the strangest and most dangerous of all spies ever h ear heard of.Also a new population of this army includes the largest proportion of child scouts of any christian army in the war.These child scouts had long lived upon the terrified memories of the Glandelin ian generals as the most dangerous of all cration.It was the sparse settlement of the encampment s and the great distance of towns and villages and cities from the scene of disaster which alone pre ented any loss of life during the recent battle or raid caused explosion.The destroyed city of Ophelia was deserted at th e time of the explosion most of the inhabitants being refugees within the christian encampments, fourty miles east of the explosion disaster.

As soon as it became known that there certainly had been a great explosion southwest of Ophelia, Viole and her sisters themselves partly forgetting their miseries and sorrows for the time b i being in their horror and excitement ordered Rodney Graves t o make an investigation upon which this article was finally based. Th is expedition even though at the risk of the dangers of the battle was th e beginn in g of the systematic study of the cause of these terrific explosions durin g the battles which the Gemini had in view and which was to be carried o ut by some experienced aurthority on explosion disasters of this sort.

A war correspondent was selected by Violet, and her sist ers for this expedition but h e was not a student of explosion disasters, but was one who since the begginning of this unusual war in the course of the Abbiemann Gel Geological Surveys in estigations had made a cruise of three hundred miles in an open boat through the dangerous War Zone end at many dangers, and was consequent ly somewhat familiar with the local geographic details.

A hurried departur e from general Concentinian Aron burgs army, a busy hour of outfitting the column, and a careful leisurely advance past all the danger points of the sinuous southern stretch of Glandelinian encampments, proced ed an arival in Herner town, just four hours after the explosions occured.The protracted advance of the exp dition from the christian lines had its compensation in that Violet and her sisters who daringly led the exp dition permit ted visits to many spots which had been affect ed by the explosion, and int ervi ws with many eye wit nesses.On reaching Herner Town it was found that one of the christian detail platoon s was still movin g refugees from the danger point to a new location west of the affected zone.Captian Hanson kindly welcomed the War Correspondent when introduced by violet herself on this and followin g expeditions.The four hours spent with this platoon of soldiers permitted the obtaining of vivid account s of the hours of darkn ess which the officers of the soldiers witnessed at Herner town, ad of their subsque subsequent observations in the vinicity of the great explosions, and elsewhere, and also gave opportun it ies to scout on and see parts of the Glandelinian armies in action with safty which would have otherwise been inaccessable.

After leaving this platoon of soldiery, a n ew column of troopers was engaged and the expedition went along the south east bend of the Aronburgs Run, the effects of the explosion between Ophelia and Chamberline being thus studied in detail.while at N orth Bend a watch was kept for the progress of the still raging conflegration, but the clouds of fog and smoke hung continuously upon the whole territory. On December the eighththe clouds seemed to thi n out over the lan dscape, and they crossed the river on pontoons to the opposite show r shore tward the enemy lines but keeping themselves concealed behind trees and bushes and rocks.Vast columns of smoke could be seen rising but there was so much smoke spreading out like wreathe that they could not get a satisfactory vi w view.Two hours were spent on this section between Ophelia and Chamberlane.During this time many interesting phenomena caused by the raging battle were observed, but the glimpse of the conflagration itself which had caused the explosion, and which was so greatly desired most of all, was not obtained.The part of Calverinia in which the explosion occured and the districts most seriously affected by the explosion were so thinly settled that the number of non combatants who observed the explosions ad their larger effects were comparatively small.The War corr e correspondent and violet and her sisters had been able to get in touch directly and indirectly with most of these people and they had furnished information of very great value which could not otherwise have been obtained.

The Glandelinian army had been in a vicous mood for an unknown length of time during or after the battle of Big Girl Kn ecl, but for many days prior to the battle of Ophelia it must have been going through the changes which an army always undergoes prior to a battle. Whah Whether the conflagration which made t he explosion was either caused bythe raiders or done by the glade linian firebugs themselves it is hard to tell.A Gl nd Glance Gladelinian "Can't" consists of a lon g extensive high barn or shed or series of sheds close to each other filled with all the munitions necess ary to be used for artillery and ot her purposes in battles. Before the explosion occured the fire first results of the battle was favorably on the foe sides up to the blast and the succ es successes of the foe was preceded by a long contin ual and gradual increasein increasing accumulation of pressure of the foe attacks from the Glandelinian waves that moved forward as of great torrents of water was an immense bursted reservoir.The success of the foe was cause by this pressure of the extensive wild assaults to become sufficient at last to overcome the equal violent resistance of the various christian armies, which had at first so desperately and so long held the foe at bay, or by a suddenly relief of pressure by reinve reinforcing or so on .The conditions preceding the foe success included a gradual lifting of the Glandelinian art artillery barrage accompanied by an increase of the fire of smaller artillery, an increase in hot h the artillery storm and Glandelinian attack, and by great flanking move ment s and minor explosions/.

The initial outburst was accompanied by the final clearing of the christian positions and breaking up and expulsion of the christian columns, by which the for had been resisted so tenaciously, and several times by the destruction of whole divisions opposing the attack. In such explosions as had occured the columns of smoke and earth debris after being blown to such great heights by the unbelievable force of the explosions expands untill it is in so rarified a condition that the immense amounts of dust and smoke floats freely in the air and acts almost for a time like volcanic"smoke"

The explosion at Ophelia was doubtless caused by the raid, for Penrods raiders did cause one before at the t ime that Jennievhad been so basely decieved by Fredrick Lowden, yet in this case probably because of the absence of near by observers(no evidence of the raiders could be found) non e of them except the explosion concussions were recorded.The concussions were felt at Big Girl Knool for at least six days before the explosion, while more severe shocks believed shocks from so many cannons in action were felt on December the Fourth, Fifth,and to the eight h at Big Girl Knoo,l Kittens Riecherts, and at Chamberlane.These places are sixty five, fifty eight and one hundred and thirty miles from Ophelia to the northwest, northeastvand sout h west respect ively.It seems highly probably that the great conflagration began to spread to some enormous Glandelinian munition Cants on that later aftero afternoonsince not only Violet and her sisters, but observers at even Angelinia Agathia not ed that the northern sky in the direction of Oph elia looked "Black and storming"late that afternoon, in spite of the fact that elsewhere eastward and northeast evidence of the great forest fires were still refi raging..Late that night when Jenn ie was still sitting at the open window watching the great clouds of smoke and the unusual glare of the sky the armies elsewhere had passed into a violent state of battle action.There must have been frequent explosions caused by shells hitting other munition sheds of scattered proportions within the christian lines, accompaid by concussions durin g the morning but hardly any of these were intense enough to be noticed at a distance, and none of these occured within Concentinian Aronburgs army as it was only now desultoryily active.It was cly at Chamberlane and Rose that these preliminary explosions were noted.The first main explosion was apparently at Ten oclock at ninght, at which time a most terrific vibrationand unusual thunderin g crash was noted by the people of Big Girl Kn ool, and which threw Jenn ie's sisters out of their beds to the floor, ad threw her into Joices by the concussion.At the same hour a most heavy cloud filled with flashes and explodin g shells and other war material terrifying the neighborhood as already described was seen from a war ship more than sixty six miles away rising up tward the heavens in the direct ion of Ophelia.This cloud was under obs r. observation from this time untill it enveloped the warship four hours later.At eleven oclock there was a most tremendous explosion which was h eard of for many hundreds of miles around, and the teriterritory passed into a state of continuous great explosions as like a big volcanic in a state of con tinuu contin uous erupt ion which lasted except for possible short intervals for several days after.There were on e hundred and fifty nin e most terrific explosions on that first day, but the explosions of the second day were noted at Angelinia Agathia, at several places at Lake Selicie / and at a point no nint y miles south of Jessica and Dorothy Gale.Explosions were also h eard at about this time at some later hour at Mombi, seven hundred and fifty miles away, and at Tn i Trin ogue five hundred miles southeast of Ophelia.At Angelinia Agathia the sounds were accompanied by / a sudden quick motion of the gr at then threaten ing storm clouds that would start and stop.

It was probable at this time that the larger part of the coarse dust which forms the various stratum of the deepening parts of the earth below the level of the ground in the explosion territories were thrown high in the air by the force of the immeasurable explosions.This dust reached Bir Girl Kn ool fifty eight miles away, and at three thirty that night Angelinia Agathia also recieved a heavy shower and soon afterwards complete darkn ess settled down over an area of several hundred or more sw square miles. The on ly people who witnessed the explosion close enough to be abl vt o tell about it and from near at hand, were refugees from St Catherine Villiage.

Three families who stayed at St Catherine, after the other people of the time town fled away for fear of the enemy left St Catherine for Big Girl Knool on December the fouth, and were in a refugee camp on the river bank between Ophelia and Chamberlane at the time of the explosion. Violet herself who was in this refugee camp at Chamberlane, when these people reached.there wrote in her diary----

"They report that Ophelia town blew up, and the force of the explosion threw the fragments of buildings like a snow blizzard over the landscape for many miles but could not tell more as they were on the road toard Chamberlane-- and that all sorts of material were falling while on fire t wenty miles away, and that a hurricane of bombs and shells exploded in every direction in the sky, and things like a milcion sky rockets flared in the Heavens."

Je

Jennie vivian who also interviewd them on the arival of her sisters at th e encampment wrote;

"They report great explosions wit h in Glandelinian positions ten miles north of Ophelia .They say the town was blasted by the explosions.There was a terrific display of hundreds of thousands of exploding munitions in all directions high in the sky and the heavens were filled as if with lightning with their bursts of all colors."

These last two statements of the interviews with the refugees are quo qouted verbatim because each contains an assertion that an series of explosions blew the city of Ophelia to total destruction.In this connection it is important to note the statement made by Catherine Vivian as quoted in a letter she recieved from on e of the refugees.she says that many Glandelin ian prisoners were very much excited, and they reported that the city of Ophelia is no more and that half of the landscape was gone, and all the country side burning up in forest conflagrations."

These people together with the refugees from Ophelia were the nearest p ersons to the scene of the explosion at the time of the disaster, and were in an excellent position to observe what happened. Proper allowance must of course be made for there was no ea exaggeration despite the excitement of the moment and the close simil arity of these entirely independent accounts their source from people who though familiar with great vexplosions certainly never before witnessed a big explosion, and their agreement with what Violet and her sisters would expect to happen in an explosion disaster of this character, all confirm them as being perfectly reliable and accurate descriptions by the only eye wit nesses.

The violence of the terrific explosions probably slackened somewh at after th the severe one at about three oclock in the afternoon of the second days h orror.The next most violent seri s of explosions was about probably eleven P.M. that night, at which time a hard con cussion like a severe earthquake was noted at Big Girlk nool, and at about which time a most stron g glare of flashin g lights was observed even as far away as Evangeline St Claire.It was believed to be the dust particles thrown up by this terrific explosion which began falling at An gelin ia Agathia about n oon of December the eig eight h , at Dorothy Gale at four P.M. of the same day, and at the Aronburgs Region n ear Glorin inna early the mornin g of the eighth too.This shower contin ued without int errupt ion at Big Girl Knool for twenty nin e hours on December the 8th.The dust and debris which fell during this shower was believed to be the second or third stratum of fine black material of th e deeper portions of the landscapes, six and one half inches thick at Big Girlknool after bein g packed down.The people at Evangeline St Claire apparently realized that there were a series of most violent explosions on the morning of the seven t h of December.The most heasterly wind on the sixth kept anyof the dust from reaching Evangeline St claire, and apparently neither the con cussions nor the series ofblack clouds in the northwestern sky had been con sidered as h aving connections with explosion s.By th the morning of the seventh the con tin ued seri s and increasing noise of strange horizon thunderclaps and of lon g rolling explosion s, together with the growing violence of the dreadful concussions, called closer attention to the appearance of the clouds some of which then had risen to a great height and assumed a well marked form and ot her characterisitics which made them impossible toconfuse it with any ordinary storm clouds.The Mayor of Angelinia Agathia not ed that gr at clouds -of smoke came overhead and dust and particles of earth and forest and building and other debris fell there on the morning of the 8th, though the wind continued to be from the east .There were con cussions like sudden secondary earthquakes nearly all day, wit h short intervals between.Many of the concussions were strong and there was continuous rumbling along th e distant horizon h orizon line.The concussions became so severe tward evening that it seemed dangerous to remain in the houses on e of which nearly fell in , so everybody remain ed in the wide streets or open sw squares of the city.That evening after ten or eleven colock came the strongest concussion yet felt, accompanied by a dreadful thundering roar northwestward.There was evidently a strong glare of light from that direction it being recorded that at times in a flash y sort of way the northwest sky shone like a golden sun set.After midnight the whole population was aroused by a very big noise-like the worst sound of thunder, after which everything was quiet and the con fusion and panic died down .

It is important to note the very severe concussion which was felt as far at as at Angelinia Agathia at December the eith at night, and also at many ot her cities and towns at the same hour which denuded all windows of glass.At Dorothy Gale city heavy rumbling was h eard, and time and again adding to the glare of great conflagrations an intense flare of light came from the f direction of the soun ds which extended far into the sky.Concussions lasted all this time and all that night, at Lucillie Rickson City one hundred and seventy miles distant from the explosions, it being recorded that the vibrations of ground and air never ceased to move or vibrate for nearly fourty eight hours.Concussions were reported from on e hundred and ninty , miles southward of Minbi December, 5,6th, 7th, and the 8th. It was evident that these ph enon ena marked anot her out break of great explosions.The period of great explosions and the blowing up of large quantities of materials and debris seemed to have ceased on December the 8th, the conflagrations themselves threatening to last for days, and immense column s of smoke and flame were noted risin g from the conflagration, when over a break in the smoke we wreaths overspreading the country permit ted a view in that direction.Yet frequent concussions were still noted at Big Girl Kn ool at intervals throughout the 8th heavy booms or rumbling was heard by all who approached the vinicity, so called walls of flames were seen from Kittens Riecherts, gun powder smoke fume fumes were noted at long distances from the explosion scene, and occassion al light showers of explosion debris fell as far away as Chamberlane.

These subsequent ph enon phenomena were un usual and made people believe some volcanoes have been blown up though explosions of mountains in Calverinia yet so far had never happened.The material hurled far up into the air by the immer m immeasureable force of the powerful ex explosions already described ascended to as great heights as great volcanic eruptions would hurl great clouds of ash, and despit e the easterly winds, traveled east under the influence of a prevailing westerly wind high above in a succession of clouds.The heavier and co coarser material such as wreck debris, stones, broken fragments of trees, mud water and other debris hurled upward by the blasts fell at once but so great was the total volume of material that the lighter dust clouds traveled several hundred miles before ay considerable amounts of dust h ad ceased to fall and before they ceased to spread absolute darkness over th e whole landscape in that territory.The track of the explosion clouds seems to have be been to the sout heast for an unknown distance,ben then back under the influence of a high wind shifting in to the east above, so that all places northwest not recieving it before now reci recieved the belated shower.The influence of the west wind so high up at the time of the many great explosions on the distribution of ash was shown by the fact that the total ammount of explosion fine debris which fell at Big Girl Kn ool only sixt y miles away or probably fifty five from the blasts was less than that which fell at Angelinia Agathia, and probably was a little if any more than th at which fell at Dorothy Gale and Jessica which is seventy seven hundred and fifty miles distant from the scene of explosions.The ne nearest to the explosion scene of those within the zone of int ense darkness were a great camp of refugees , women and children at the left wing of general Concentin ian

Aronburgs great army stretching tward Ophelia ad which felt the shocks of the explosions tremendously and recieved the deluges of the heaviest mat eriels thrown up by the explosions.Captian George Gross one of the soldiers attendin g to the refugees, and was tryin g to quiet the panic of these frightened p o people, wrote as follows to his wife who lived at Big Girl Knool;;;

"Christian army under general Aronburg.
December 8th.1913.

My dear Wife Catherine;

First of all I will let you know of our unlucky battle which is still raging between Ophelia and Chamberlane.I do not know whether we shall either be alive or well, noy not I alone but the whole encampment of refugees. So fierce is the series of great explosions that ev every one of us are awaiting death at every moment.Of ccurse do not be alarmed.We got to expect these things in a mad war like this.At first we thought a series of mountains had bursted near us and we are covered with what we thought was volcanic ashes in some places ten and six feet deep.All this began on the sixt sixth of December.Night and day we lighted lamps.We cannot see dayligh t.In a word the whole scene is terrible and we are expecting a dreadful death at any moment , and we have no water for all the rivers and streams are covered with dust and stones and floatin g de debris falling from the skies.H d H ore are darkness id hell and hell upon earth , and great thunder and all other dreadful noise.I do not know whether it is day or night.My little girl will tell you all about it if we survive.The disaster were great explosoneexplosion s however and not blowing up of mountains by volcanic g activit y.So kissing ad blessing you and sonny good bye.Perhaps if it is Gods will we shall see each other again.God is merciful.Pray for us.

"your husband. George Gross.

The earth is trembling as if there was an earthquake, it ligh t ens every minute.It is terrible.We are praying ."

The outburst of explosions on the afternoon of December the 6th was wit nessed by a column of scout patrols which were th en riding past Kit tens Richerts eastwa erstward bound tward general Aronburgs army.Captian George Henrys lead ing the scout patrol had given the following description of the disaster and ph enomena which he and his men observed;

"Left Rosn at six fifty A.M. December the 6th , strong easterly breeze and unusually severe hot weather from the east.Frosst fire cause I know.At I.P.M while ent ering Topsy on the Yellow Brick or Big Girl Kn ool road heard the noise as of great th un thunder in the far distance and gazing suddenly in that direction sighted a heavy big cloud of smoke directly to the north west, rising higher than that of smoke we had seen from a great conflagration.I took bearings of same which at first I made out to be from Mt Joan, distance about fift y five miles away from Chamberlane.The smoke grose and spread in the sky seeming to be full of shooting and nursting bombs which made a noise like drum drum thun der and the edge of it spread forward tward us, and by three oclock was directly over us, having traveled at the rate of probably thirty miles an h our.At 6.P.M. we passed through Sidelights Pass with the air clear ahead, and continued on expecting to make general Concentinion Aronburgs lin e.At six th irty when off Pine Grove Territory, which is about three and one half miles from Handy Andy Rocks, and th e entrance to Eva St Claire debris like ashes began to fall mixed with mude, small sticks, ad stones and even falling grass ad clay and fragments of trees and great showers of leaves, and in a few minutes we were in complete darkness, not even the water of the river close to us could be seen.We continued on in hopes that we might pick a entrance into the christian lin es, but when we had gone quite a distance and the condit ions were the same we sot out tward the northeast.Wind contin ued to increase rapidly now from the southeast, and heavy thunder and lightning commenced in the horp horizon part of the cloud early in the afternoon ad contin ued through the night but seemed to be lightning as if from bursting shells and high explosives and shrapnell.Birds of all species lost falling all about us in a helpless condit ion.The temperature rose owing to the e heat of the southeasterly forest fire winds.

About four thirty A.M. ne next day the column of scout patrol got clear of the black s smoke, emerging into a strange fiery red hues, which turned into y llow and then in to white, and by six A.M the debris and dust had ceased to fall and the horizon was perfectly clear from west to north though in

The wind n ow came from the northwest and was muchcooler and the scouting party was h eaded for anot her section of the christian army, as the smoke and debris ca was still in the sky to the sout h of them.during the day other series of great explosions occured like volcanoes emittin g volumes of so called smoke and some of these could be seen over a distance of 100 miles.,very one of the soldiers of this scouting party was covered from head to foot with dust, mud and other stuff, and their horses also.They succeeded in makin g th e christian lines on the Eighth of December, and leavin g there for general Aronburgs army at eleven thirty P.M. proceeded on tward St Joh n s, and at three thirty to four oclock they were again passing through bank of explosion debris and at seven oclock they were in complete darkness again and so they remained for th e rest of the time somewhat afraid to proceed. Violet h erself was routed in a local paper later as saying that at I.P.M. on December the seventh , a most immense column of smoke full of shootin g and flaring something was seen ascendin g swiftly from the northwestward to where she andher sisters were observing the progress of the disaster to th e enemy the diameter according to h er statement seemingly to be at least ten or five miles.The column as she said at first rapidly became dirmer,, but soon there came a n oise sounding like thunder along the horizon but which shook the air even at that distance, ande much larger and darker mass of cloud showed far above it , finally mingled with it, and came tward their observation post .Soon the cloud obscured the column altogether, and afterwards somethin g like sheet lightining was seen in the cloud.At Four P.M. sh e declared the cloud was directly overhead, and sh e h aving a camera took pictures of it.As the sun passed behind the edge of the cloud at t his time it immediately beganto grow dark and at five oclocks ligh t s were turned on. and at six oclock the advanced edge of the cloud was out of sight beyond the eastern horizon and small flakes of someth in g began t o fall.Darkness gradually in creased as the streak of clear sky in th e north or scut hward narrowed untill when the last ribbon of clear sky was suddenly obscured, the light snuffed out like a candle and they were left in absolute darkness. Jean in Viviens statement which predicted the scenes further of t he conditions during the darkness and fa, fall of explosion h urled debris on the night of December the 7th was as follows;

"And n ow began the real rain of debris of all sorts, it fell in torrtent s it swirled and eddied, and because of strong winds th en blowing gravity seemed to have nothing to do with is strange fall.The undersides of houses seemed to catch as much dust and ot her debris as the sides or the roofs, ad the and the ground under our feet.Bright clusters of small eletric lights and camp fires then still buning could be seen but a few feet away, and we h ad to feel our way about the Company Street.The Ch ristian officers of their h eadquarters were not able to close any windows because glass had been shat tered out by the concussion s and when they were blocked up tightly with cardboard paper, even then it was wit h the greatest difficult y that any one could even see a thing a few feet away through the thick dust which filled their room.In the mean time strange lurid somethin g like lightn ing glare.soon tin uously seemingly around our own house, while a con stant distant bloud boom of t hunder sometimes coincidin g with the strange flashes in creased th e h orror of the infero inferno raging out us.As far as seein g or h earing the water of the river so close to us or anything pertaining to earth we must as well have been many miles aw ahov above the surface of the earth..And still we believed that the sun was two hours above the horizon.In our own h eadquarters even though we boarded up our windows aswood as possible everythin g was colored with a th ick layer of dust, while a thick haze filled the air, and th e air or what there was left of it ,became heavy sultry, and striffling.Below in the basement of our building wh ere we h ad had gone to esca pe the dust we found con dit ions were unbearable, while outside it was worst still.,ust filled our nostrils,, shifted down our backs, and smot e the eye like a dash of acid.Birds out side floundered, crying wildly, through space, and fell helpless to the ground"

The event at Big Girl Knool during the series of great explosions including the appearance of the black volcanic clouds, th e rain of dust and ot her debris, the seventy hours of almost con tin ual in ky darkness, the precaut ions taken for th e safty of th e people, th e slackening up of the battle because of the darkness, and t he welcome return of clear skies was vividly described. The big explosion clouds were fire first not iced at about four oclock on December the Sixth in the sout h n and west.Anot her cloud afterwards appeared in the north the two meeting in the northeast.Ashes and debris of all sorts began to fall at 6.P.M. coming in gradually increasing volume.At 7.P.M complete darkness h ad shut down.Strange thunder and lightnin g were observed soon after the cloud appeared and contin ued in great severit y through out the duration of explosion s, but diminished in intensity after midnight of t h e eigh th.

The light in g was described by many observers as being in many cases like many air bombs ed shells bursting, and in some cases as goin up from the earth in round balls and fiery streamers and then bursting with a peri r series of loud reports.A number of most severe concussions were felt during th e night.Debris and dust fell con tin uo s con tin uously untill IO A.M. Decemb r 7th but in decreasing volume after 3.P.M. Th e tot al fall of debris mixed with other articles up to this time was originally about five or six inch es , but at noon December the 'th the fall of debris was renewed.At about One o clock the darkness came again, not to be dispelled untill Two fourty five P M. pf the following day.During all this time th e fall of fine dust was contin uous and was accompanied at times by the fumes as if from burned powder..The darkness was most intense, and the ash or debris so thick in the air that eve even the brightest lights failed to penetrate it for ,ore than a few feet.Violet within general Consent in an Aronburgs army held a light ed lantern at arms length and it could barely be seen, and that even a searchlight from a christian battery failed to penetrate farth er than six feet.By the morning of the 9th t he d debris h ad accumulated in sufficient bulk on the slopin g portions of roofs to began slidin g in great volumes. The buildings of the Military wireless Signal Station near general Concentinian Aronburgs headquarters was struck by one of the flyin g missles hurled by the explosion, and burned on the evenin g of the Sixth, and the darkness at the time was so intense that the flames could not be seen at a distance of a few feet.Late in the afternoon of December 9th par tial daylight appeared, and the fall of explosion debris almost ceased.The dust and debris which fell during this time, constit utes the second stratum now two feet thick of all sorts of earth and ot her material.

During the evening of December 9th, the fall of debris was again resumed and contin ued unt ill a unrecorded hour in the night when it gradually deminished entirely ceasin g by the morning of the nint h, when daylight and great heat appeared.

Conditions as observed as far away as Angelin in Agathia differ in few essentials from those already described at Big Girlknool or with in the christian lines. The time of the appearance of the first clouds was no t recorded.It was h owever described as approaching in silence, there bein g n o wind on th e level of the ground, and no bursting of bombs imitating thunder or lightning.Th e Debris fall reached the south end of Angelinia Agathia river Bend early in the mornin g of December 7th, slight showers being reported at St Joh ns Mobolization Encampments at ? A.M. and at ot her encampment s at about th e samve same time. distant explosions and great concussions similiar to th at of th e Abbieann disaster had been noted since (.A.M... (A 9A.M. becoming louder and more frequent throughout the day.Th e sky was overcast all day December the sixth and sevent h, but there was no darkness, and comparatively small amounts of dust and debris fell.The more h eavily dust laden clouds h urled high by the explosions were at this time passing eastward further south . Explosions ed con ussions were observed several throughout the day of December th e seventh.The next day there was a much heavier fall of all sorts of debris and there was moderate darkn ess for two hours durin g the forenoon. More frequent and violent sudden concussions of various freakish kinds, and a salvoes of terrific explosions were noted.A dense cloud of dust and debris came slowly in from the northwest about 3.P.M December the 'th , and then inky darkness prevailed untill the morning late morning of December th e 9th . The fall of dust and debris was much heavier than on the day before and fumes as of burned powder accompanied its fall. explosions much louder th an before were h eard at irregular intervals on the eighth and continued in decreasin g violence and frequency untill the night. th e dust cloud h urled so h igh up by the explosions reached the eastern section of Calverinia th ree h undred and seventy five miles southeast of the forest fires about n oon of December the seventh , at which time the reports came from all towns t h at the sun t urned red in a s clear sky, the air became hazy, and strange fine sandy dust began to fall of various colors.Cann onading at irregular intervals was heard at Trin ogue December the 'th .

Th The Whit ehead Wireless military Signal Stat ion reported at this time that the noises had already been h eard there for fifty eight hours.There was a strong easterly breeze when the strange dust first came, th en the fall od of dust increased continuing untill the wind turned to t h e west at December th e 9t h .The heaviest fall was east of Cedernine and Headrick Junction in a fresh easterly breeze. just fell at Polychrome, four h undred and ten miles from th e scene of th e explosions, four eight h ours after th e first explosions which even that far sounded like the discharge of h undreds of tons of dynamite among the near by hills. The dust came first on a sout hwest, but afterwards on an east wind, though the cloud itself approached from th e northwest. For about three days the air was so thick that one could see only t wo blocks or so.There was no darkness, and only one fourth of dust fell and vegetat ion was turned yellow.

turned yellow and other colors.At the town of Sampson reports came th at dust fell and th e air was so thic k that one could not see more than a th ird of a block and anything inside or outside houses made of brass tarnished in twent y minutes after being polished.It was reported in the press that dust fell in the city of Phelantonburg, and in Padule, and Collyer and Stanck somewhat later. Dust fell s ninty miles southwest of Angeline Junction on the morning of the 9th, and was reported from Hedi on the IOt h .It fell h in small but also very appreciable quantities at Thansour, Rubio and in the Lake Solinia distri t district.The freely crashing noises of the explosions which appears to date from the v v cessation of the con tinuous violent explosions and of the throwing up of the large volumes of debris contin ues un till at least the last of December as we will see later on.Th e exact condit ions will not be told now, but all through December explosions continued as the conflagration raged on and vo violent explosion concussions con tinued frequent ly and that the great conflagrations raged on.To be known at general Aronburgs army where complete daily records are to be made and kept from December the 5th t o December 25t h concussions are to be noted which were to be heaviest on the following days December the IIth to the 25th, and the most severe ones were on December th e IIt h , 21th and December the 25th .Th e presence of fumes and the fall of dust at Angelinia Agathia was influenced largely by the direction ad intensit y of the wind. Fumes were not ed almost contin ually from December to Jaunary. They were strongest through the early part of December and dust was prevailing in the air even past the month of January.The times at which columns of smoke from the conflagrations and other visible evidence of conditions at the scene of disaster could be seen from Angelinia Agathia, depended chiefly if not wholly upon forest fir e wheather conditions and were consequently of little signficiance ot her than in dicating that they were probably always present.The glare of the light of the conflagration upon t he smoke and even ot her clouds was observed throughout the mont h and especially on December, 23,th, to the 31th.Th is phenomena will be seen only during favorable weather conditions, so its apparent absence at other times is not significant. Some of the phenomena observed at Big Girl Knool and also by Violet and her sisters and the armies facing each other but now silent were of wide spread occurance.

On t he morning of December th e IOt h Violet, and her sisters and of course everybody else saw a b a beaut iful beaut iful illuminat ed rolling h igh cloud which rose straich t int o the air to a very high altot ude, and as there was no wind ret ained its fantastic shape.It aft erwards assumed different colors, and after giving what appeared to be a tremendous fire works display, disolved into great darkening cloud banks being at portions illuk illuminat ed all the time.A similiar cloud was observed at Kittens Riechorts one h undred and fifteen miles north , northeast of the explosion scene, and one hundred and t hirt y five miles from Big Girl Knool, at the same time, the description differening only only in t he stat ement that the cloud in losing its rolling shape assumed the form of some h uge False cu Cirrus clous filled with strange colored flashes.

Something like a severe earthquake was felt because of an explosion in the Mic-H ollester Run Valley, and the Vivian Hill Range on December the IOth the after effects contunig for about a week.It apparently was not felt in southwestern Calveron ia, and it was very doubtful whether it did not have any conn ection with the explosions still do ng continuing.Strong powder fumes and the fumes from the conflagrations were reported by nearly everybody and the army near and wit hin Big Girl Knool from 6, to IO A M December th e IOth, and the fumes were also noted about one hundred and fifty milesxwest of the explosion territort.Violet, and her sisters also noticed the fumes, and Violet who saw it h appendeclared it was sufficient enough to darken the new white lead paint on the steps railing outside.Also they still not iced a immense column of black and whit e smoke ascending even beyond the haze clouds of the sky produced by the far di t distant forest fires in the position or direction of the explosion disasters, and they h eard an almost con tinuous roar as of water falls or of surf during a sea sto m storm, and they believed these sounds were most likely from a con tin uous uproar of smaller explosions.

Every day sin ce the disaster had happened violet and h er sisters had gone as near as they could with lots of others to view the disaster.The wind was from th e east yet and the sky was reddish from the distant forest fird fire smoke of the east, except for smoke cloud campscon the mountains.The hills in other directions were eve enveloped in a strange blue haze; which became denser throughout the morning of the IOth.At noon however th e h aze became so thick that the end of the ridge north of the Aronburgs Run Valley, and two low hills one mile northwest of P Oph elia were ij invisible.The blue haze was th e thickest about noon and came nearer with the str stronger wind receding as the wind lightened.About one oclock it became oppressively sulty sultry an unusual glare of light being noted from the north east not north east .At t his time no sounds att ributed to the explosions could be h eard, nor were concussions or vibrations felt. Violet, and some of her sisters took ph otographs showing the end of the haze of the en on the edge of the ridge showing the edge of the haze on the end of the ridge o west, and no clouds over the hills or mount ains could be seen on account of the haze. In the evening earth quakes or con cussions were again felt wit hin general Aronburgs army, and th ey were so violent as to upset lamps on t he table and cause dishes to fall from pantries. Explosion noises like thunder were also h eard.

The magn itude of any one of these explosions was not properly m easured by the loss of life and damage to property among the Glandelin ian armies at Oph elia which it caused for these were the accidental results of the great explosions and were due largely to the chance nearness t earness of the one mp encampments thus involved. It is rather to be measured in terms of the war ph enomena, and qu quanit y and distrubution of the materials hurled up by the expl s explosions, the distance at which sound waves,, dust, dar n darkness and fumes were observed, the violence of the accompanying concussions, th e distribution and intensity of the resulting atmosph eric con dit ions, and other natural o ph enomenon of many various kinds.

The greatest explosions near Ophelia on record measured by crit eria of th ese kin ds include those at the west of the Glandelin ian positions in Company St reet N o 1883, Munition Camp 1835, Camp 1815, Camp 1783, and Camp 1772. The explosions of the west encampments of the enemys munit ion tertitory was comparatively of a maggnit udecomparable with the Abbieann dissst er. Yet Comparin g the explosions of the Ophelia Tertirot with that of Abbieann Between Bengall State and near Calverinia, and the Mic-Hollester Run Territory near district 18 834 we find the volumes of materials th rown h igh up by the explosions are not far from equal, but the explosive force of the Abbieann h orror was by far th greater. The explosions of Abbieann , were said to be h a heard h eard at a distance of th irty threevthousand miles, those of th e explosions near Ophelia within the foe encampments were not recorded farther away than Jessica, a distance of seven hundred and eighty miles. But it should be noted th at the country east and north and also south of Jessica was now chiefly an uninhabit able wilderness because of the contin ual menace of forest fires, therefore from which sounds are not likely to be reported, and that th the more distant reports of sounds from the Abbieann horror came from cit ies and towns and other coun ry districts an ern ormous distance away. Darkness by the combined disasters of forest fires smoke from big explosions and the dust debris hurled upward by the explosions was recorded at a dist ance of 2,276 miles frombthese menanced territories, and only at one hundred and fifty miles from ophelia by the explosion smoke and dust. The darkn ess from th e smoke of those dreadful forest fires have lasted since they started in the territories clouded over, but because of the Abbieann explosions darkness lasted however on ly twenty two hours at a distance of two hundred and thirty three miles, and for fifty eight hours at a di t distance of fifty one miles from Abbieann , while there was darkness forvpractically five days, and fourty hours at a distance of th ree hundred miles from the scene of the Oph li Ophelia explosions. The debris and dust from the Abbieann horror fel fell to a depth of ninet een inches in twent y four hours at a distance of sixty six miles, while the deb debpth of the dust debris from the Ophelia Explosions was about fifty inch es at a distance of two hundred and fifty miles. The dust from the Abbieann horror fell at least, 1,678, and possibly four mil thousa nd miles away, that from the Ophelia explosions had n ot been recorded farther than Marcucian (An golinia State) 6,900 miles away, but probably fell in small amounts at a dist ance of 11,345, of 11,600 miles away. H ere again it must be noted th at the direct ion of the heaviest dust fell from the Ophelia explosions, extended in to the wilderness of Angelia Vine State, where it s maximun extent was difficult to imagine. It is therefore probably fair to explo exclude or to conclude th at that explosions at Abbieann , in 1912, and of the explosion at Oph elia in 1913 were abso u absolutely of the same magnitude though in one furt unate way there was n o ern ormous flood, and the only property damage done to t he Christian count ry was the mere loss in window panes, and as to the loss of life it on ly occured amon g the foe lines and there of course was fearful and military property loss somethin g beyon d measure. The christian armies suffered nothing whatever. The Abbieann horror however exceeded in the brief int ensity of its culminatin g explosion s, the later in sust ained violence and th e two being about equal in the quanit y of debris hurled upward, and spread over so much teri tertir territory.

In some measure however the explosions wit hin the foe lines n ar nea r Ophelia on the banks of the Aronburgs Run, west of Oph elia, if all the reports heard within the christian lines are to be credit ed to have ot herwise exceeded all other explosionsdisast erswith the amount and value of enemy property destroyed and loss of life. The forest fires farther away to the east which had over more than two or three thousand miles caused darkness from smoke clouds in the sky since the fires gained such head way for so many days, and made the sun fail to shine for over t t en thousand miles, was added to the extent of darkness caused the the smoke and debris of the explosions of ophelia. It was reported that by all explosion disasters throughout the war so far debrisvfell at ernormous distances, and that the sun failed to shine over an area of one million square miles, and sh one it her in a red or strange colored ob orbits. The explosion s also in the east of th e foe lines at Ophelia in Camp 187 3 appeared to also sh are wit h the Abbieann horror as the belief of th e greatest explosions ever kn own . Comparison with the ot her great explosions described is made difficult by the explanatain explanation that the largest part of th e hurled upward material was debris from rocks, from the shattered stone munition sheds and from forest trees and immense s curds of earth clar and mud and sand. The immense clouds of all this sort of debris exceeded in volume anything known durin g the out break of so unusual n wa r. In addit ion to this, there was showers of dust and finer particles and even a blizzard of forest leaves of every debris descript ion, throughout th at part of Calverin ia, the atmosphere over Big Girl Knool was loaded with fq falling pine needles, branches of broken t rees, showers of stones bricks and timber, crops were destroyed in N orthwestern Calverin ia six hundred miles away, and plant s were blighted and powder fumes were not ed in even Abyssinkile, 1,00 or 15,000 miles further. The other great explosion at Ophelia at the Papandanyang works in Western section n ear Oph elia, was accompanied by much larv was accompanied by the hurling upward of much larger quanities of explosion destroyed material than were thrown out by th e first t wo great explosions. Towns tenand twent y miles away were bombarded by explodin g sh ells, esky rocket bombs, and flare lights, and small towns in possession of the enemy were buried under the debris hurled forth and upward by the terrific explosion at lon g distances from Ophelia. The more dreadful destruction of t he or caused by the explosions occupy now a prominent plafe place in the foe rather than in the christian history of this war. t he explosions did so much damage to enemy life wit hin the foe lines because th ey occured in the thickly settled districts of the Glandelinian encampments, and therefore caused great loss to life and foe ~~popopatty~~ property not not primarily only because of th eir violence but because of the close proxinity of the encampment s and t heir soldier property. The con flagrat ions started by Penrods raiders, before setting off t he explosions also caused much more immeasurable destruction than any other con flagration Penrods raiders had ever made. The ch arac er of the material hurled forth and so high up by the explosions at Ophelia is as yet known only from the deposits which fell at dist ances greater than fifteen or twenty twenty miles from the explosions, and the deposit s which were studied in det ail f vary in thickness from fifty five feet fifteen miles from the explosions of the h eaviest material t o three inch es at one h undred and fifty miles from the disaster territory.

Th roughout this entire district at least three layers corresponding to various substances such as mere earth dust, sand , stone, clay, fragment s of buildings, shattered fragments of trees, layers of leaves, and ot her materials such as any sort of vegetation that may have been hurled forth by the blast also adding the fragments of the explosive materials that went off in grand displays in t h e air for many hours without ceasing all which could be observed. Yet they were so conglomerately mixedth at it was hard to study them out . And each layer decreased in thickness with the distance from th e explosions, the decrease being most marked in the heavier materials. Yet al layers as Violet, and her sisters had observed through the help of willing diggers consuw consisted of fragment of bricks, mixed with the smaller fragments of all sorts of debris ever found in landscapes and the forest and other vegetat ion all of which fell within general Concent inian Aronburgs army about fifteen miles from Ophelia. At a distance of seventy or eighty miles awa away from the explosions this material consisted of th e lighter substance, mostly mixed with sandy grain, leaves of trees and so forth . At a distance of one or two hundred miles from the explosion territory only a single layer could be recognized, and that was composed of impalpable dry gray dust, which when made wet proved to be the ground of the earth and was then black. The upper most material consisted of fine light gray or whit e and other colored material varying less in grains with the distance from the explosions than ot her layers of debris. It consisted of several alternative layers of fine sand and very fine dust mixed with leaves of trees and also grass near the city of Big Girlkn ool and of a single layer of extremely fine white and gray dust mixed at a greater dist ance.

The finer material and the dust and all the other debris wer " were apparently composed of many walls of buildin gs of the munit ion dumps probably blown to du t dust by the exceedin g violence of the explosions, and chiefly of pulverized earth rocks in the rock layers under th e soil.The various layers there fore aggregate about 4.9 cubic miles in builk, extending over an area of many thousand squ r square miles, and ranging in thickness from four one half feet, fifteen miles from the explosions, to almost t wo feet one hundred miles away,and to a fraction of an inch four hundred miles away.The effect of this covering on the landscape or landscapes and w i wit h in the opposin armies encampments and wtihin cit ies and towns and in the forests was startling enough t o make awesome ph ot ographs. and yet even after the disaster had slackened it did not stop the battle for durin g December the Iot h a small ravine or glen afforded shelter for Violet and her sisters and their in vest igation parties, durin g a Glandelin ion at tack somewhere northeast of them, which lasted several days, while the hills formed good look out points, from which the scene of that section of th e battle, and th e clouds of smoke pouring up ward from the still raging conflagration could be watched and studied at such fort unate moments, as "battlestorm" and cakes of smoke from th e far distant forest fires permitt ed.where Violet and h e r sisters were the ground was do covered with three feet of debris, in which there were numerous fragments of building stone and bre brick and scattered pieces of wood countless in n umber and shat tered fragments of trees.The scene first a beauty was nowca dreary os one---a gray and other intermixed g colored expanse of debris and dust and earth and ot her wreckage, broken only by a few le'ges of stone patches of half killed sh rubbery and ot her vegetation, and st unted birch, and two small groves of young spruce and v various stretches of high pine trees covered as thick as if there had been a blizzard.The surface of the dust was wither strewn or intermixed with debris from shattered trees, and from shattered building timber, leaves of trees.All these may h ave fallen far, while bushes and grass still remaining because of the h eat produced through December because of the forest fires were slowly dying through suffocation or may have been withered by a more recent explosion blast.Fumes from powder were not icable while Violet and h er sisters were there in spite of the fact th at the wins wind was prevailing from th e southeast.violet believed that at th e time of the explosions a steady northwest wind would have carried off sufficient fumes and smoke from the con flagrations and explosions to make even vegetabile life pre carious.There were no indication of any animla animal life in this ,locality n'not even birds.It seemed as if Violet and her sisters were in some h ellish Volcanic region, for through the clouds of fog produced by th e smoke of the conflagrations which were pouring over the hills and under the thick covering of the explosion debris could be seen layer upon layer of strange black rock probably at least three or four thousand feet in thickness.It was here as well as near Ophelia that the thick dust and debris accumulation was found.Sixty five inches on the level was measured at one point , the origin ial fall and not a secon dary accumulation.Th e material included many n bricks and building stone fragments of big sh ells, which probably had traveled traveled through the air for sic sixteen miles.

The christian encampments and the more distant city of Ophelia lay desolate on the edge of the great gray and other colored waste. It was fortunate for th e non combat ant s or people that they had gone away before the long disasterous battle of Ophelia raged, for with the force of the explosions a breath of h ell swe t swept down the valley bringing death even to the stoutest trees.Th e on ly living things Violet, or her dear sisters sawy saw were a few blades of Fall grass, which had managed to puch up through th e places where t he wind had swept part of the dust away, and a couple of forest animals wh who had escaped either by seeking refuge in the inner and deeper recesses of the out buildin gs of the christian encampment s.The scene too was more deathly because it lay on the edge and in full view of the brillin atly green and un- devastated country to the west and south.The appearance also of this n owly altered l n landscape was unusual, ed th e dust fell as a dry and impalpable powder which was incapable of supporting weight. Wh r Where the dust and debris fell into very shallow water or streams it acquired the consistency of strange soft mud or mush .It was in this condit ion in shallow water pools near and within th e citisthan christian lines lines,, and at every st ep in th eir return to their own part of th e christian camp, viclet or her sist ers with out t h inking of it would sink to the solid ground beneath , the feet sticking in the soft mud as in molten tar and at first giving th em th e sen a sensat ion that they had got caugh t in a quagmire of unfath om unfath omable depth.At places where the water soaked material dried it cracked as mud does in drying and the cracks were in places two inch es wide and extended through the t wo uppermost and finer layers .

Hilltops and ridges were bein g swept bare, and thick drifts similiar in form ,and surface to sand dunes were accumula i accumulating, and as a high wind was blowing the air was thick with the drifting dust, and in the forested area a large part of this this du dust was derived from the dust laden trees makin g the forest look as if a forest fire was approaching.And as soon as the material had fell to such a thickness that it was not held down by the fall grasses it began slding down the stepp steeper slopes.This action too was accentuated by the concussions of smaller explosions still con tin uing and large volumes descended the hillsides back of the villiage of Turin carryin g houses off their foundations and crushing in their walls.And in the area of thevthicker the thicker dust fall, and on the steeper mount ain slopes, tremendous avalanch es took place.The immense accumulations formed in this way Violet and h er sist ers t ook sh apshot s of and the ernormous deposits gave evidence as to what the ch aracter of the avalanch e must have been and in spirin g caut ion for scout patrols and the like in climbingsteep slopes.Th e deposits alon g the stream below a little wat er fall h ad also been discovered deeply trench ed by the stream after it spread them.A thickness of over thirty five feet was exposed and still the base of the deposits were not yet reach ed.This exposure is moreover not at the v ry foot of the h ill, where th e greatest th ickness must have been deposited.The streams were heavily overloaded with the debris of float ing substance and consq con sequent ly were rapidly building up and ext endin g their flood plains, and were constructing large alluvial fans at their mouths and at points of flattening grades.Aval nches and deposit ions at th e mouths of the smaller streames or branches wer also f changin g t h e grande and even the courses of some of these streams, and lakes were bein g rapidly filled and great chan e ch anges were being made in riverbordlines. All floatin g debris was reported to be floatin g in to the sea by the com bined actions of the streams, waves and tides, and there it formed great float ing fields, which migrate with the winds and tides and greatly impede even th e war shipping of the christian side.An immense field of such debris which spread in front of the shore part of Calverine cit y, and it was a con stant menance which led all shipping to seek a more sheltered nook , and yet soon even this was in vaded by the floatin g debris which jammed tight around and carried one of the ships with it when it moved in spite of two anchors and two pieces of pig iron down, and forced the occupant s to make fast to a project in g cliff. The floatin g debris was twelve inches th ick alongside the boat and posd possibly was much thicker in the center of a large filed.Milit ary craftsmen reported a debris field dense enough to support a man.The effect of th e explosions on whatever vegetat ion grew wit h in t went y miles away from the scene of explosions was certainly ann ihilation.

The posit ion of the death line around the explosion area was not exactly known, but it came practically down to the very out er edge of th e christian encampments twenty five or mores away from the scene.The con dis condit ions under which woods of trees nand ot her growth were killed killed was uncertain but a hot blast like th at from Mt Pelee is suggested.

The effect on vegetation further away was apparent ly that of only burial.And where the dust and ot her debris was partly blown off, the grass still en ecuraged to grow out of season because of the tremendous heat of forest fires preventin g the cold of water soon came up, and apparently showed the effects of no other inuury in jury than that which would be caused by a similiar burial under any ot her material.The stronger stemmed plants, exp especially the Calverinian fireweed, lupines, and some of the grasses forced th eir way up through the cracks in the dust or through th e very dust itself where th e thickness was not t oo great. Th e finer dust stuck to all the high fir and ot her pint and evergreen trees, causing a wintery looking scene after a great big blizzard of snow. Whatever the dust consisted off does not wash or shake off so readily and probably will cling to the trees for many years as if it was volcanicdust or ash.It too would have a serious effect upon the ~~the~~ trees for only the tops and th e out er tips of the bough s would afterwards show a healthy growth.Th is same aftereffects from the dust of the Abbicann explosions still is lodging on the trees in th at territory. The leaves of the currants, slamon berries and many other of the sh rubs and h erbs in the territ ory of Ophelia were bligh ted by the dust , though this effect curicus enough did not occur in the district of the thicker debris fall.Marine life by the concussion of the explosions was affected to a larger degree than would perhaps be expected.Violet and her sisters heard th at most of th e river fish were mostly all dead.This is in deed a catastroph e since th e fish was valuable to the use of the armies ent renched along the river shores.All sorts of animals were in jured by the concussions and it was reported that many of the christian and e enemy cavalry and artillery horses were blind.

t. In the vinicit y of the christian lines under Emperor Vivian at Big Girl Knool where not over four inches ad for the most part less thanan inch of dust fell, most of the innumerable small birds died, many rabbits were made blind, ed the rein deer were seriously affected by the dust .Dead King Fishers, geese, sand pipers, ptarmigan, snipe, hawks, falcons, and many small birds were found dead within t he christian encampments mostly between tent s and on the dom co,pany company streets.A dead eagle was found hangin g in a tree in such a posit ion that he was probably killed by flying in to the tree when blind.Blind rabbits and birds which were either blind or had th eir eyes badly affected were noted by Violet and h er sisters at several places in the camp..Small fish in many of the creeks in th e n eigh borh ood of foe and christian positions were killed by concussion, and smaller birds, squirrils mqr marmots and mice were also killed.Though wit h in christian lines no one was injured, many great numbers of soldiers, and even refugees, and child scouts, and rescued child slaves reported severe headaches, other illnesses, pains in the th roat and /lungs and sore eyes, while the dust and fumes were in the air.Otherwise man was not not much affected by the destructive explosions, excepting indirectly through thevinjury to horses and other animals and to valuable vegetat ion.The scaricity of fishes as food, the inbury to crops ad grass, and the destruct ion of all beautiful forest animals must all be count ed as idirect, but on none th e less serious injuries to the christian side/.Th e effect on Calverinian River salmon, through all the complete filling of all the smaller lakes by the dust and debris, which will for years work down th e streams and h illsides into them and through the possibly permanent destruction of the swawn spawning groung grounds was possibly the most serious of these in juries. H owever all Calverin ians could rest ass assured that vegetation will be affected only temporaril y, the soil will only be sooner or later improved, and th e people can feel assured assured that not in many years after th e ' unusual war is over everything will be far better than before th e war began. During one of these days Violet, and also h er sisters recieved a letter from the H eat Observatory at far away Pandora Abbiennia.The letter which startled them and filled them with unusal astonishment and surprise if not a little apprehension as to wh t w wh what was going to happen soon to their count ry ran as follows;

In the mon th of N ovember the last, I was engaged in maki ng measurements at our fair city of Pandora(Abbiennia) on the strange quanity of heat coming to us us, so far east of Calverin ia, from the forest fires raging in that state so far to the east.At the same time my colle gue, Mr John John Scorner was engaged in makin g simi lar measurement s at Mt Calverine Volcano, in Calverinia. Recent work also of the various stations of the Abbieannian and Calverin ian Astroph ysical Observatories, had stron gly indicat ed, that the was s cert ain fact that th air in vestigations proved that the h eat did not either come from the sun or on sout hern or southwestern winds, and also that the heat was stron gerand more sensibly felt when th e winds were a lon g time oh on the southeast .

To Vio l Violet and h er sist ers.

Dear Princesses;

The fluct uations in the ammount of the strange radiation, which we first thought were from the sun, and yet turned out to come from forest fires seemed to be of variable magn it udes, seldon exceeding five per cent, and th ough bein g more severe on southeasterly winds occured in only irregular periods when the winds were offthat direction.The work on which this conclusion was based at been done at Mt Calverine, in Calverinia State, and it was not impossible that local atmospheric con ditions may have been influenced, and we thought too at first that the observed changes might possibly be of atmospheric origin.To exclude this possibility it was necessary to show that the same results would be reach ed by simultan eous observations at another stat ion so remote from Mt Calverin e, that the local circumstances would be ent irely different . Hence it is that one of th e main branches occupied the station in Pandora in I9KII I9II up to now.As dear Prin cesses we shall not have occassion to refer again to the main purpose of the observation it will suffice to say h ere th at so far as yet reduced, highrates of forest fire radiation obtained in out observatory concided in times with high heats obtained at Mt Calverine, and Vice Versa, so that at first the results seemed to strongly confirm the supposed solar variation, though it put me in mind of being in Algeria in Africa, when by now we should be hav~~in~~ having win t er.

Before princesses you take up thevquestionof the reason ableness of the hypo thesis that the dust from the various great explosions of the war, and the cont in uous orn ormous clouds of smoke from the big forest fires raging, and from ot her con flagrations was or is distribut ed all over the higher atmosphere, and remained there for mon ths in suspension, we may consider for a moment the exact facts or effects which are bein g observed by our apparatus and the nature of the apparatus, wit h which these effects were observed.In the first plas place we have the pyrheliometer, an instrumen t for measuring th e heating effects of the sun at the earth s suraf surface.In the second place we have the spectro-bolometer that wonderful device of Langley for observin g the excessively minute heating effects of the rays of the solar spectrum.Imagine that any one of you, or all of you little princely little girls have before you a very int ense s l solar spectrum, and that it ic still early morning, wit H the sun perhapf an hour or more high .If If you had a t hin delicat e blackened th ermometer you could carry it along in the sp c spectrum from th e extreme ultra violet to far beyond the red, and detect varying degrees of temper ature rise, proportion al to the heat produced by each spectral ray.It would make no difference whether these lay between the violet, and the red, and were visible to t h e eye or were the short wave length ph pt potograph ic rays beyond the visible end of the violet spectrum, or the long wave length lying beyond the visl visible end of the red.All would produce their just and proportional heating effects upon t his decliate t h ermometer.At each of th e Fraunhofer absorpion lin s lines the thermometer would fall slightly.The "A"band of oxygen would produce a comparative great decrease in t emperature, and beyond the red there would be still more promintantly the great bands, due to th e water vapor in the earths atmosphere.Suppose now that several hours later dear princesses you repeated th e experiment .You wound find that excepting in these great water vapor bands, practically every part of the spectrum was hotter than before, and that bthe change had been the greatest in th e violet end.Knowinf the altit ude of the sun above the horizon at each time of obx observation you could compute the thickness of th e layer of the air traversed by the solar beam.

From th is it would be possible to determine h ow much the intensit y of th e rays would have been in creased had th e observation been made out- side of the atmosph ere altoget her--as if it could have been made, for instance upon the moon(not the coon().From this result one could determine h ow much the rays of ea each part of the spectrum were deminished in int ensity by th eir passage through the atmosphere on th eir way to th e surface of the earth.No ordinary thermometer would be of any value for this purpose, but the bokometer invent ed by Langley about I88I is an eletrical t hermometer so sensit ve sensit ive that a change in temperature of one millionth part of a degree is observabah observable wit h it under any con dit ions.We were equipped with such a appartus at Pandora (Abbieannia, and Mr Joh n Scanlonia h ad one similiar on Mt Calverin e, and with these following the scheme of operat ions which I have in dicated above we measured all th e rays of the solar spectrum th e transparency of the atmosph ere.Similiar measurement s h ad been made at Mount Calverine for many years, and were made in An golinia Agath ia in I9II. Th e following t able shows th e decrease in the transparenxy of the atmosphere first for the beam of the sun as a whole, and then for the da rays of different regions of the solar spectrum believed caused by the smoke of forest fires and the dust prevadin g the atmp atmosph ere in the skies from the awfully be hig explosions.

From these results we see that the uncommon haziness in the sky since the war disasters began, consisting of gr a great fires and explosions produced a very marked decrease in the direct solar radiation in all part s of the spectrum and reached nearly twenty per cent at h igh sun for th e tot al h eat, and therefore that proves that the h eat we're we are facing is caused by the easterly and sout heasterly draugh ts of the raging forest fires in Southern and south eastern Calverin ia .

There is however some unusal sensation even here in Pandora in the in creased strange dark redness of the sky, which we believe is caux caused more by thw smoke of the fires than by the dust hurled high by so many big explosions. In order to understand this, thin k for a moment wh at happens to the sunrays before they reach the earths surface. If we could go out side of the very a earth s atmosphere------to the moon for instance, the sky would look dark, as it does at night, studded with sters, except when we look directly tward the brilliant sun, which would shin e wholly und inned. It is the earth s atmosph ere which ch anges all this, for in the passage of a sunb am through it , even on a cloudless day, two kind of losses are said to occur----one imperceptibel to h the eye---the other giving usthe skylight. Firstly some of the in visible rays of the infra red spectrum are tot ally absorbed by the water vapor, oxygen and carbon-dioxide as radiation long before the sunbeam reaches the earrt h s earths surface. Secon dly the molecules of the air, the fine dust suspended in it always scatter and diffusely reflect the sunrays, and make the sky bright much as the mot es of dust in a sun lit room, reveal the path of the sunbeam in it . Thus of the sunv sunrays scattered in the earth s atmosph ere, some readh reach the observer at the earths surface, coming no longer from the sun directly but defusely deflected from ev ry every part of the sky. The r mainder are scatt ered away int o space and lost altogether for t hepurpose of h eating and ligh ting the earth . It is this last ment ioned portion which most inter est us and cause us concern here, vo for t investigate th e untimely heat of the forest fires we wish to inquire h ow much more h eat than is usual was given to the fo country by the draughty southeasterly winds, when in the wint er there is such a ref reflection of the earths adt mosphere th at there usually is much heat lost , and yet we have no winter this y a year but a perpet ual h ot summer in December, and which heat we b blame on th e forest fires for the sun is too far away to do it . One can easily see too since th e strange red darkness of the sky and the loss by reflection to space and the light of th e skyhot h depend on the presence of the molecules and the dust of the very atmosphere, an increase in the dust too) ((At least up to a certain point) must if not too thick make the sky brighter, and the loss to space greater also.

For warmpth of summer especially what th endo we ordinarly recieve w from th e sun?

(A). The direct solar beam.

(B). The sky light .

Wh at else would we h ave recieved if th ere were no at mosphere..?

(C). The rays absorbed by the at mosph eric vapors .

(D). The rays reflected away to space, from the upper atmosphere. The sum of these four quantities should be absolutely equal to th e h at of the solar beam outside of the earth s atmosph ere, as for instance on th e moon. Th is we may call (E). As we cannot measure (D) directly we must find it by subtracting A + B and C. from E. It is of couse course (D). the loss to space, which wit h which we are principally concerned. For dear Princesses we must ask ourselves;

"If the loss o If the earths loss to h eat by both the winter and the re flection of the upper air to space is made greater by the reason of the dy dust haze of the big explosions and added by distant volcanic erupt ions wit h th air volcanic ash , then h ow come it to be that this is the mont h of De e December and we migh t as well make believe we are in Algeria , Africa.? "To answer this we must know th e answer value of the expression. (D) = E-----(A + B + C ( ) as it was last month and as it is now ordinarilly. Measurements of (A) t he direct sun rays, and (C), the water vapor and other absorpion we make every day, and I devised and built wit h my own hands two pieces of apparas for measuring (B) the light of the sky. From observations taken a lit tle before noon on last September we found at Pandora the following results stated in calories per sq, cm per min ute;

(A) Heating effect of the direct beam of zenoth sun in natural summer weat h er not produced byforest fire h heat ..... I. 250.

(B) Heatin g effect of the weath er combined with forest fire heat and warmpth of unatural heated southeast winds..... II. 990

(C) Heatin g effect of the entire sky..... 2.956.

(D) Combined h eating effects of the rays, absorbed by water vapor from sun and sky and forest fire radiat ion;..... 3.375.

Tot al(A + B + C) 39,87I

Yet the difference between the heat outside the earth s atmosphere, and the s sum of the various parts of it indicat e shou abo'e is therefore 0.280 calory per sq. cm. per minute, and this we may suppose represents absolutely the loss of heat by reflection of or from the atmosph ere to space in the time of dust in th e sky from volcanic eruptions and from smoke of forest fires. In former disaster periods of this unusual war similiar experiments to th ese h ave been made at Calverine city, and Mt Calverine and also ot her stat ions and it was found that in ea h each case that the sum of the radiat ion(A) of the direct solar beam(B) from the sky and (C) lost by the absorption in t h e atmosphere lacked less than 0.0 5 calory of the total h eating effect out side of the atmosphere. I Princesses am of th e opinion t hat the difference between t he results of th e forest fire smoke and dust and debris hurled up by the Lake Solicia, Abbieann and other explosions represent absolutely the radiation reflected away to p s a space, by smoke and explosion dust , or in ot her words the loss of h at available to warm the earth , which we must att ribut e to t h e great haziness which is prevailing now, and yet this is december and the t emperature h ere is IIO. The difference outside of t h at would be about t en per cent of the whole inen intensit y of the suns radience out side thw atmosphere. H ence I conclude thatthe dust of the various quickly succeeding great explosions o following one another in quick succession and the smoke could diminish t h e h eat available to even so much as prevent unusual wint ers by about ten per cent, and therefore if it had not been for th e miraculous condit ion s caused by the h eat of the forest fires even though so far distant, we would have h ad an unusually cold winter. In accordance wit h t he laws of h eat and radiation, this could have produced a fall of 7° cent igrade in the t emperature of the earth as a whole if it was effect ive for a lon g period of t time provided that there were n o coun count er act ing influences such as alt ered cloudiness or decreased noct ural earth radiat ion brought about at th e same time with and perhaps by reason of the increased dust haziness added by the smoke of the atmosph ere.

Having n ow given estimates of some effects of the great smoke haziness of t h is dr a dreadful dark year we shall next consider whether forest fires, or volcanic / like explosions of t j this war can really produce such wide world wide haze. To answer this princesses we have only to go back to the records of past explosion disasters of or the record of times of the greatest war explosions of this last dreadful year of I9I3, and also of the late part of I9I2.You remember well princesses h ow at the early part of t h e war there occured the series of explosions at H elendale which then were stat ed to be the most frightful on record.I was one of the wit nesses of a great explosion which shook the city of Helendale to the ground, an immense. rocks had been hurled in all directions, and the towns and villiages near by buried under the debris that fell.We remember the dreadful loss of life.We remeaberalso when great explosions of volcanic force occured in the big levees of the Mic-H ollester Run River, wreckin g the city of H enrietta by the concussion and causin g one hundred and fifty persons to be without homes.Also occured the still more extraordinary explosions at Sperryville and Sch loedertown occuring between Oct ober and N ovember, the enemy believing to have produced the most violent explosions in the late part of N ovember. For some r eason or other it was believed that the fires and smoke brought on by these explosions and forest fires still staring produced the strange "dry"fog which commenced about the same day at places at great dist ances from each other, such as even as far as Foriegn countries.It is still extending as far as the north coast of Afraca to gweden, and how long it will last Heaven oby knows.The lower air did not seem to be its vehicle, for in some parts the fog came on with a north, and in some others with a south or sout heast wind ,a and also east wind. In far away America even abundant rains of summer, and heavy blizzard snows and windy dc cold wave weather of winter did not dissipate it.In northern Abbiecania its densi y density is such that it is reported that the sun is not visible in the morning up to I7 altit ude above the horizon.The rest of the day the sun i s blood red and could easily be observed with the unprotected eye. Yet at time of new moon the nights are so bright that the light is bein g compared to that of full moon, even at midnight .The worst of the disaster at Sperryville as you littlp.princely.girls remember was the great explosion on the low h ill of St John s, near Lake Selicia, followed by great fires, and for t hree days there was darkness caused by dust clouds and smoke for a distance of th ree hundred miles while frightful loss of life occured from the explosions and from the floods and exposure that followed.After these extraordinary explosions and big fires there were noted all through Calverin ia streaky skies, haziness, long twilights, and red sunrises and sunsets, so that those months of November and December of I9Iw I9I2 was the most remarkablo as regards sunrise and sunset lights recorded up to that date .

Pa ssin g on to this year but at the early date of January I9I4 there as you and your sisters know occured meny moderate explosions, and three more of the very first magn it ude, and also the forest fires of southeastern Calverin ia which had broken out in July I9I2 grow to an ern ormous propor tion. As reports came in to us, it is believed that the smoke of these h uge forest fires, and the dust hurled sky high by so many big explosions, has caused a o contin ual extraordinary, what they call "dryfog," and this is being observed in the four corners of the world(if not wo rl woild. Six times I have recieved reports that it is con tin ually remarked on many portion s of of the coast of Afraca, and even at Odessa and everywhere else.The first of it was observed on the sixth of Semt-ember at Africa, at Odessa on September the I3th, in all parts of France and germany on September the 20th, and in the American Countries in October and still is bein g observed with increasin g intensity.They report from many quarters that the light of the sun is so much dm diminished that it is possible to observe its round form of disk all day wit h the naked unprotect d unprotecyed eye.On the northern parts of Abbiecania two thousand miles from here the sun for months would o l on ly become visible aft er passing and an altitude of v of I5° or 20°.

Everybody tells m me by writings from many cout ries that they that the sun eit her assumes a greenish or emerald color.They even report that the sky is not even dark at night, and at midnight for the last three months small print could be read in fifty nations.On November the past they tell me at Sactemento Abbiecania small print was easily readable atlmidnight.Passing over among many others for lack of space, the great explosions at the dikes of high levees of the Aronburge Run River, and those of fatal explosions at water dams we come to the tremendous explosions at Abbiecann, and the explosions at St Marie simultaneously.The extraordinary atmsp atmospherddatmospheric phenomena which closely followed these remarkable war blasts were so evidently in the relation of effects to causes that there can be no doubts as to the reason ablesness of ascribing the haze that we contin ually notice in the sky provided that explosion and the ones at Ophelia was compar able in magnitidue of the Abbiecann h orror."The explosions at Oh Ophelia Prin ceasos which probably you witnessed must have been more violent on December the 6th and 7th of this Month of December. I recieved reports that observations were made by Jogneon Parrie of the Military Revenue Mildred Manning, at Angelinia Agathia, situat ed two or three hundred miles from the scene of the great explosions.At five or sick o clock in the late afternoon of December the 6th a series of n oises like distant thunder was heard, and later dust began to fall.Strange thunder and lighting in the smoke clouds far up in the sky from the horizon resembling that from burstin g sti shells were frequent, and the sky became dreadfully black even though it had been getting nightly and there was a strange color to the northwest.When the strange fall of dust ceased at II A.M. of December the 7th, about eight o inches of dust had fallen.At noon they commenced to fall again, and in creased in density untill at one oclock it was impossible to see beyond a distance of thirty feet.At two oclock pitch darkness set in, and alt hough all ashes of th e previous day had been removed from the ship, yet the decks and yards were again heavily laden, and the men worked incessantly with shovels brooms and streams of wat r water to clear the decks,, fallin g over one another in the blackness. At two thirty in the afternoon of December the ninth the fall of dust and peculiar debris decreased, objects became dimly visible and the fall ceased by mornin g of December Ioth though the sky since has assumed a strange dar reddish color. At Angelin ia Agathia the depth of the strange dust reached a depth of t wo feet and four inches, and it is proved it is dust of the ea t earth and not volcanic ash es.

In order to compare the intensity of this outbreak of explosions with the great outburst of explosions at Abbiecann last N ovember of I9I3 which stands at the high water mark of explosion and flood disasters of the war s so far for the whole war it will be int eresting and for astudy too to interview again some of the phenomen a phenomena of the Abbiecann explosion as stated in the report of the Angelin ia Agathia.W r War Disaster committee of the Abbiecannion Royal Society of Angelinia State. June the 30th booming sounds of great intensity were heard at Angelinia Agathia, Dorothy Gale and Big Girl Knool and cities and t owns further south situated about over one thousand five h undred miles from Abbiecann , and on July the First a strange st sprinkling of earth dust were noticed throughout good portion s of Calverin ia.Mt Calverin was believed in violent eruption and bursting asunder.From this time u ntill July twenty sixth explosions in thevAbbiecann territory contin ued wit h contin ued with considerable intensity, although several times parties t ried to approach the territory to investigate whether Mt Calverine was in eruption or not.On July the twenty sixth, to the twenty ninth the most violent explosions in a series of thundering roars ever heare hea rd in history occured, which blew away the whole northern and lowerportions of the country t erritory north of Abbiecann .The flood waters following the greatest explosion of July the 28th was estimated to be fifty feet deep or more, when it reached as f r far sout h as Big Girl Kn ool though what depth it attained at sweept ing sweeping through Abbiecann no one knows.Ships, all river crafts were scattered all over the country when rivers were turned into raging seas. Between two and three million people are believed to have lost their lives by the overwhelming of their cities an towns by the flood.The main explosions were heard as far as Glandelinia City nearly IO,000 miles away and the area over wh which which the actual noise of the explosion was heard contin uously embraced the ehire states of Abbiecannia, Calverinia,Angelinia, glandelinia, and some n t nations far across the sea in t hree directions.The air w v waves traveled outward from the scene of the explosion horror as a center till they reached even the antipodes in South America like the air waves of the Krakatoa erupt ion did, were then reflected backwardsbto their origin , and from there returned perhaps a thousand times so that they were observed by every meteo meteorological st at ions in the world to have made two thousand complete passages away from Abbiecann, and the same number in return before their t races were lost .The height of eighteen colo columns of debris projected from the ground by such awful volcanic like explosions were not estimated, but the least from about one hundred explosions were measured as seventeen sevent een miles or eighty nine thousand seven hundred and sixty feet.Beginning shortly after the explosions the sky at distant regions of the earth became strangely hazy and abnormally lon g twiliwh twilights and sunset glows contin ued ever sin ce th e then.It was computed that the finest dust hurled by th e explosions req reached an alt itude of first far up in the sky beyond the power of gravity and therefore still remains.

Although the violence and destructiveness of these explosions places this disaster(not even counting the flood either)in the first rank, and the quenity of debris hurled upward was very great yet when we compare the d pth depth of debris falling at considerable distances from the Abbiecann count ry whwith with the quanity of debris which fell at Angelinia Agathia nd elsewhere durin g and after the explosions at Ophelia it appears that the explosions at Abbiecann was far inferior in this respect to the recent one. According to the investigations of many scientists employed by your father at your request, the average depth of the debris fall and other substance at the distance of one hundred miles from Abbiecann was about one quarter of an inch. We have seen that at Angelinia Agathia the depth of the deposit thrown by the explosions at Ophelia was about one foot and the average depth at a distance of one hundred miles from Ophelia at least two or three feet. If then the air was filled with haze from the explosions at Abbiecann for so many months after that destruction it need not surprise us that a great amount of haze adding to all the forest fire smoke will occur following the explosions at or near Ophelia. But it must not be forgotten for the sake of our cause dear princesses, that the violence of the explosions created by the enemy at Abbiecann was most extraordinary. It is possible that although the amount of debris sent out by the explosions at Ophelia may have greatly exceeded the amount from the Abbiecann explosions, yet the height to which the smoke and debris were projected into the atmosphere by the Abbiecann explosions may have greatly exceeded the height to which they may have been projected by the explosions at Ophelia. Thus perhaps we ought not to infer that the meteorological consequences of the Ophelia explosions should last as long as those extraordinary ones which were observed after the Abbiecann horror. Recent pyrheliometer measurements show even now that the sky is very hazy.

It is apparent that very great departures from the usual intensities occured during the first five of the big Abbiecann explosions respectively. Having now convinced ourselves that such departures may reasonably be expected in consequences of these explosions which had the force and hurled upward as much debris as great volcanic eruptions, it is interesting to find if we can the causes of the diminished solar radiation between July and August of last year.

Something which you little Prince esses didn't know, was the battle of Kimball which lasted twenty months, beginning with the battle of Crowley on March the 30th 1912. The battle had many terrific explosions, but the most violent explosions occured on August the Fourth, 1912, December the 25th 1912, and March the 13th 1913. Anoedp An explosion which took place there on January the sixth 1913 was observed by one of your brothers who declared the column of smoke and debris must have ascended to the height of more than six miles.

Yet it is noted where the great explosions occured at Opheli a and there were many more of them than at Abbiecann. I'll compare the explosions to the violence of Volcanic eruptions. The first explosion with the force of the eruption of Mayon in the far distant Phillipine Islands, took place December the 5th, near the North. Vast columns of debris ascended in to the air as if hurled up by the volcanic crater, and as we know in a short time the darkness was so intense, that though the next day came lights had to be used in the cities near by. Violet explosions were also reported at the same time within the foe lines in other sections. A small river gunboat gunboat passing the river village of St Marys reported what he thought was violent eruptions of some hill on the morning of Decemver the 6th. At the same time something what appeared to be a violent eruption took place to the south of Ophelia near the town of Flundo which was occupied by the enemy. Yet at the same time what appeared to be a more severe eruption raged for several minutes near Hennie Henrietta. Some thousands of Glandelinians were killed within their encampments and immense quanities of debris fell over the camps. The noise of this first great greatest explosion was heard at St Anns five hundred miles away. Another series of explosions began near Etna town at Camp No 10 of the enemy the worse being observed on the nights of December 7th, and 8th and has even now continued with more or less intensity. These explosions were notable for the enormous quanities of smoke that rose so high in the air and from this territory so many shells and other bombs exploded in all directions that it created a reign of terror. But undoubtedly the greatest explosion of this period occured north of Ophelia. Enough earth stone and and other substance of the earth to form a good sized mountain peak was blowncompletely into the air, and a large stretch of landscape completely obliterated. They say the debris buried and devasted an area of at least fourty miles. And an estimate based on the debth of the debris in this area of the explosions indicated that the quanities of earth, rock, rock, sand, clay broken fragments of trees and camp buildings and other material reached seven billion tons and that doubtless the true figure would be much greater. About sixty thousand Glandelinians perished horribly and many more were shell shocked by the noise. It was with one possible exception the most terrible explosion which had occured in this territory. The force of an munitions explosion capable of tearing a whole ladscape to bits and distributing it over an area of over fourty miles may well have been suffcient to blow the column of dirt and other debris high enough in to the airto have been carried over the earth like those hurled upward by the explosions at Abbiecann.

The small town of St Peter also occupied by the enemy fighting the battle of Ophelia Ophelia was struck and totally destroyed by two of these explosions blasts of nearly equal severity, occuring respectively within two minutes time giving the Glandelinians occupying the town no chance to save themselves. The loss of life reached nearly 100,000 Glandelinian soldiers. Explosions in this vinicity have occured since then. An explosion of December the 13th observed by George Cainner carried debris up to a height of twenty two thousand feet as he estimated it. It seems doubtful however, because of the explosions at Abbiecann and Ophelia and all this forest fire smoke that there will be sunshine anywhere untill this calamity ceases. On the one hand dear Princesses the measurements made at the Astrophysical Observatory at Angelinia Agathia on the transmission of the earths atmosphere since the explosion at Abbiecann itself the transparancy of the atmosphere was alarmingly low----far below the normal. On the other had however the measurement of the total intensity of the solar radiation madeca at this observatory at Angelinia Agathia on October last year gives a value of the intensity intensity as more nothing.

It is of course possible, though rather unlikely that the haze due to the explosions was not so quickly distributed toward the more northern regions as the smoke of the forest fires are. On the date of December the 8th however there occured one of the greatest of the explosions at Ophelia. The dust and fine debris hurled up by this explosion covered an area of more than one hundred and twenty five thousand square miles. Plenty of large rocks and even dust fell to a depth of eight inches or more in a region extending over two thousand five hundred and sixty five miles within which many houses and barns and farm buildings, and lots of buildings in towns and villiageswere crushed under the weight of the material and in some cases totally destroyed. Sixty thousand Glandelinian soldiers are believed to have been killed here. The cloud from this explosion reached it is believed one hundred thousand feet in height, and the sound of the explosion was heard as far as Glandelinia city two thousand miles away as good as if loud cannons were firing in the city. The munitions blew up near the side of a mountain which was entirely blown away exposing a big cliff nearly perpendicular, 17,000 feet in height and forming a big hole in the ground below at the base of the cliffe four and three quarters of a mile in width, six miles in length, and probably three thousand feet deep. It is clear I think from their records that the decrease of solar radiation had much explosion fury to cause it, and that the depression whose maximum was in September this year was still attributed to the terrific explosions at Abbiecann to be reinforced by the explosions a little later at Ophelia which are still going on but in a slighterdegree slighter degrees....."

The eruption of

The explosions at Ophelia indeed was one of the most tremendous explosions ever recorded. By one explosion (and there were many big ones for three days,) a mass of dirt, dust, sand and all sorts of debris whose volume has been estimated at nearly five square miles was thrown in to the air. In its fall the ore this material buried an area as large as the State of Connecticut to a depth varying from ten inches to over ten feet while small amounts of the dust and lighter material fell as much as two thousand miles away. Great quanities of very fine dust were thrown into the higher regions of the atmosphere and quickly distrubited over the whole world. The comparative magnitude even of the smallest of the explosions at Ophelia can be better realized if one should imagine a similiar explosion of a seven seconds duration at Vesuvius. Even though only a seconds duration such an eruption would bury Naples under fifteen feet of ash and volcanic stone, Rome would be covered nearly a foot deep, the sound would be heard at Paris, dust from the crater would fall in Berlin and other cities of Germany, and also as far as Brussels, and the fumes would be detectable as far away as Christinia Norway.

Fortunately the explosions occured in a country section so sparsely inhabited because of a general exodus of people before the battle, that the damage done by the explosions to christian properties and to their armies near by was as nothing---very much less than in many relatively small explosions. Indeed however there were many near enough to see the big explosions. The most important cities in the devastated districts are Ophelia and Ch amberlane, which although thirty miles away from the biggest explosions were however not much damaged excepting window glass out and was buried by nearl h neary ten feet of debris of all kinds.It seemed to every one who saw the aftermath of the disaster that it must be many years even after the war before that part of the country side could ever recover its original condition.The explosions tran transformed thisparty of the country in to a dark gray desert of sand and gravel ad and debris whose redep redemption and revegetation seemed utterly hopeless.

And to make it very hard as Violet and her sistersfound by their own experience is the dreaded sand blast .Dust debris from the bare surface is picked up in clouds by every wind forming a dust or sand blast which is very hard in all various plant s, all of them being loppi lopped over by the wind and their lower leaves are cut to pieces by the sharp sand or buried beneath it . The particles of dust and sand of this kind was very sharp much more sharper t han ordinary sand.It appeared like such scouraging or scouring agents as "Old Dutch cleanser, chid, Sunbright or other scourin g powders, and was much finer and lighter than ordinary shore or river sand so that it was more easily carried by the wind.Consequently this sad blast was a very different thin g from the sand drift common among beqc beach dunes.Violet and her sisters discovered that standing before it was like facing a blast of "Old Dut ch Cleanser"in on es fafe face and was at times exceedingly unpleasant .And there was no rain to soak it down either.

Strange to say though H enrietta cit y was further from the scene of explosion horrors than either Ophelia or Chamberlane it had sank deeper int o the desolation. In fear of their lives too of the fury of Glandelin ian soldiery the e people of H enrietta city had deserted their city and now because of the explosions the former luxurance of this territory was reported a barren waste.It also is not to be supposed that Henrietta was at all near any of the blasts h owever.Situated at a distance of o ne hun dred and fifty and quarter of miles it was much further than Chamberlane or Ophelia from the explosion horror.Mor More importan still Henriett a was not in the main track of destruction, but lat lay at one side near the edge of the debris fall.Yet the concussions of the explosion s wrecked many of the buildings, razed roofs, shook the brick work of the streets out of shape, twisted street car tracks and caused other freaks, and caused many Gladelin ian soldi r soldiers who occupied the city to be b dly hurt and some killed.

CHAPTER THIRTY NIN E.
VIOLET AND HER SISTERS WITH THEIR ESCORT HAVE A PERILOUS AND LABORIOUS TRIP TWARD GENERAL OR EMPEROR VIVIANS ARMY. THEIR ARIVAL.
THE BATTLE OF P OHPELIA STILL RAGES.

Thirt y years before the bloody Glandico war opened, Ophelia town was one of the finest places in that section of southern Calverinia.But since t he outbreak of the titanic conflict . the town had began to go down, and when the dreadful war contin ued to weep with its waves of fire, flood, blood and slaughter in all parts of war torn Calverinia the city was left completelyh without a pu population, save a few more nervy people, who still lived in the in t erior section s of th e city payinv payin g no heeds to the rumors of the disasters, which reached them from time to time, as the terrible conflict went on.They were not afraid of the Glandelinians so they said, and all they wished was to be left alone and left to live their lives out in the old town.So they stayed and did their b st , to guard the houses they lived in of which they were so proud, and at which at two different times, was made a kind of hotel for the christian soldiery who then were scouring the country. Later on when the enemy were in possession as is now the Glandelin ian s raided the town carryin g off whatever they conviently could of the many valuable articles wit h which the richer houses were furnished. Since then and durin g this lon g battle the city has been in foe hands.When Emperor Vivian first took main charge of the enbattled armies in the vinicity of Ophelia which was turn in g out to be one of the most stubborn battles of the war and one of the bloodiest t oo he wrote to his brother H anson by secret wireless code, asking why he did not advance with his armies to help h im.But this H anson could not do.Manley kept an eye upon every move H anson would make and he managed to write to that effect to emperor Vivian, telling him that if he and his generals could not maintain at Ophelia and Big Girl Knool or at Jenn ie Richee to recoil softly if he could and if not to con tin ue fighting untill God would help him evade Manley and come to the aid of his christian armies.So Emperor Vivian continued the long immeasureable battle.Some one had also wrote to emperor vivian of the "death of his son Penrod, but fortunately(why fortunately) th is le letter was miscarried, captured or lost and Emperor Vivian never got the letter.

Despite the progress of the disaster at Ophelia and with floods of rivers now really startin g, and t he battle continuing with unwonted fury Violet and her sisters decided to go for their safty tward their fathers army as Catherine Lee had advised and to take with them all those whom they proposed. To make the trip t ward Emperor Vivians army in such hot December weather(remember when it is supposed to be winter) They secured the services again of General Jack Ambrose Evans and Timothy Groveton as their main male guardians, who undert ook to escort them with a body of cavarly disguised as Glandelin ian soldiers.Evans not only always had proved himself more than trustworthy, but a first class guide and a man of steel courage and of very good judgement as well and of which qualit ies are essential in one who would successfully navigate the dangerous wat ers of the Aronburgs Run River in this section for it has justly required the reputation of being one of the most treacherous streams in the world because of its enormous beds of quicksand, and other bogs, and also because it moved from the southeast must have ran through some of the forest fire regions of Southeastern Calverinia for at place the water was enough to w l well to say singe you.Evans and Timothy Grovet on both helpled to carry the sad and tedious expedition by many an obstacle which might otherwise have turned them back.As they started out, the scene which met their eyes as they entered the Ophelia Territory (but not in the direction of the awful battle still raging) was fantast ic and weird in the extreme. Quanities of debris like woods and other material were float in g about as to make the scene in the river resemble the flood of Abbieann .the sun only appeared in the sky like a blood colored ball, the sky was filled or covered with a strange reddish haze from the forest fire smoke in the air which increased the ghastly and mysterious appearence of the desert landscapes and vi veil vieled veailed the upper reaches of the valley, and the direct path tward Emperor vivians army which they hoped to reach if not covered up As soon as they moved forth down the river first they began to see evidence of t he passage of the recent great Abbieann flood which also had once swept here which was to be the source of much concern to them all The flats were everywhere covered two or t hree feet with soft sticky mud.Th ey were unable to find any place to pitch their camp between the hilly grounds and the flooded flats, except a mound of avalanch debris, which they felt was too dangerous, for boulders and small avalanches were often started rolling down the hillsides and distant mountains all around them every few minutes by the concussions of cont in ued di tant explosions but more so from the vibrations of the raging batt le.They finally reached a bed of rk rock and other hard debris which had been also floated into plafe place and wedged in among the rocks in a big grove of brach less populars.Although there was very wet mud only a few inches below it, the surface was fairly dry.but nevertheless they were in constant fear however that the waters of the river would suddenly rise in the night and drive them out or that scouting pat rols of Glandelinian soldier would come upon th em unexpectedly of which th ere were many .As Violet and her sisters wrote of one of their dest des cript ions later in th eir Dairy for all seven combined; or as Violet herself wrote;

"I Princess Violet will oeop declare thus of our sights of this first part of our journey;

The desolation of the country beggard all description.Combined with the past flood of the Abbieann disaster, and the added disaster at Ophelia it was worse than both combined to my eye sight.All the trees had perished except such as were favored by some special circumstance,csuch as close proximity to the prot ecting mountain sides.The scene appeared as if the world was at an end.One volcanic eruption of the other side of this world could not be as big as one of these explosions and one eruption lasting with such vioence for two months could not eject as much ash as one of these explosions hurled debris in a few secon ds time.In one way too the trees and bushes suffered more seriously than the Calverin ian herbage for wherever the ground had been swept bare of the du dust debris by winds the old root s of the herbage though it is de December started to sent up new shoots and in a few fortunate spots flowers were blooming in their pristine profusion, and despite our sorrow still prevailing over poor Penrods dea th we picked a few.But where the dust and debris remained to the depth of a foot or more the ground under the dead trees were absolut ely bare.No vegetation of any kind showed through cracks.Under the hillsides where a few remnants of the once beautiful forest remained alive different species had suffered in differeh ways.The trees looked the same as they did on the slopes of Mt Pelee of which Penrod showed us photographs after the eruption there.The only large trees still standing were the balsam poplars and they had few branches remaining.All of the growing parts and ordinary buds of th ese had been killed, but some of the dormant buds encouraged by the strange heat when it is supposed to be winter, these buds I believe which are buried deep in the bark had survived and grown out in t o short bushy branches which gave the trees a most bizarre appearance.The alder which also grows here on higher elevations everywhere was simply extriminated.For our purposes to reach our Fathers hard pressed h army this was somewhat fortunate for it was easy for us and our powerful escort to break our, and their way through the branches of th e dead thickets, which otherwise would have made traveling very difficult.Not a single live sprig of alder was seen untillvwe had gone over considerable country and then on ly two or three very small shoots were seen coming up from the root s"

Violet.

When they arived at the s villiar villiage of Barabaratora the magnit ude of the past Abbieann flood was impressed much on them as it couldwnot be in the brush covered debris dunes.The small Catholic Ch urch where the people had worshipped ud undist urbed for many y a years was standing in a sea of liquid mud int ermingled with broken wreckage of other homes.The high water mark could be plainly seen across the front about five feet or more from the ground.Many of the houses were filled solid full to the eaves with wat er borne debris of every description.Some had been completely submerged as might be seen by the stranded debris, and the roof of on e building had floated away from t he body of the house and lay at some distance.The church too had floated away from its foundation for the high water marks across it were some what diagonal.

The dreaded Aronburgs Run whose former bed was close by these houses had subsided from the flood cont conditions enough to show its "beautiful" character.where formerly was deep rushing water was now a maze of deep quicksands and intertwining streams.And so much material had been dumped in t o it that the level of its bottom was several or more feet above it s former channel.Violet and her sisters even with their field glasses or spy glasses could see no indication of the farther ban k or shore.Somewhere out beyond th e range of their vision as they soon discovered later were one or more main channels in which a formidable volume of water was runn ing, and in deed as th ey lat er found to their cost.But except for these shifting main channels it could be described as seven miles wide and two inches deep.Some of their party ventured out from shore to see whether it would be possible to cross but they soon found themselves miring in the quicksands, so thay that they were glad to hurry back to terra firma.Violet and her sisters who understood a whole lot about rivers having experiences with many found that the condit ion of this river produced both by the Abbieann flood disaster,and the Ophelia explosions was wit h out the slightest doubts the most serious obstacle to the crossing of the district in their expedition tward Emperor Viviens Army.While the bottom is too, yes too far treacherous to travel afoot, especially under a pack the greater part of it could be easily traversed with snow shoes or some similiar cont rivance, which however would be a fatal encumbrance in the swift currents of the deeper chann els.A boat might be used were it not for the fact that the current is too strong for rowing, the bottom is too uncert ain for poling, and there is no place to land.

Conditions at this town greatly increased their respect for the magnitude of the past flood, but failed as yet to enlight en them as to where all th e water had come from.They knew whocwas resposible for the explosions at Abbieann but it seemed that the mystery as to where the water had all come from never would be solved.As Violet,and her sisters and many hundreds of thousands of witnesses and mil ions of refugees knew had been most trem ndous con siderin g the size oflandscapes it h ad gone over and how many cities had been flooded, and although the Aronburgs Run is about five hundred miles in lengthvand and has a steep gradient through much of its course, the water had durin g the year before covered the whole territ ory so that the Aronburgs Run had been a big sea of raging waters, the flood here as evidence proved being six hundred miles wide, and of unkn own depth at the time.Yet ever since that day Violet and her sisters had tried to learn where did all the water come from. Though th ey were very well in their kn owledge of not only the Geograph y of their own Country but of the whole world in general, and had looked over maps and through Geographies for such tnin bthings as Dams or so on near Abbieann h they had been unsuccessful.They knew of no general cloud burst storm which could have caused such an unusualx quanit y of rain to make a flood this big.They had thought of great rains up north of Abbieann but that could not be eit her.But the examin ation of the villiage was reassuring in one respect;Although there could be no doubt but that the only flood had ended in September everything did indicated that it was an event which had never happened in the countrys h istory before.When they awokevthe next morn ing they found that a sout heasterly gale which had started during the night had picked up the fine dust from the distant and near by hills and also far distant mountains untill it had changed the smoke haze of previous days into a terrific dust storm.The dust was so thick that it hid everything as far away as one hundred feet .It per meated everythin g about their camp, and they were extremely worried lest it should get into their provisions and cameras, ad ruin all their food and films. It matted the hair of every on e so that afterwards they could not comb it for days, and too the sharp e particles caused great discomfort in their eyes, and at first they were afraid it might do them all pernament injury, but after a time the irrit ation stimulated an increased flow from the tear glands, which helped to keep the eyes washed out.Yet during this day of terrific dust storm, they con contin ued the journey as far as Stanck Creek.The dust heightened the alr ady already weird character of the landscape giving it an indescriably unearthly appearance.The effect was much lik like that of a blinding heavy snow blizzard and t his was increased by the outlines of the many bare branchless t ees trees.In deed so keen were the visual sensations of a big h e heavy snow storm that every little while Violet and her sisters and n o doubt the rest would realize with a start of surprise that they were very hot and dusty.

About ten oclock they fell to spectulating on the state of weather above the dreadful dust storm andcwere surprised on searching the sky, at bein g able to find the sun, whose small roun d form was just indistin ctly visible as it trying to show through a thick grey cirus cloud a pale whit e, somethin g like the moon in daytime, but fainter.It surely would be quite impossible to describe their feelings on this dreadful dusty hot windy day as they grouped their wayforward into new country or territory. F r Fortunately the loose sandy surface of the strange du t dust everywhere held their tracks, so that even without their compass they could hardly have become lost.They followed all the way a well worn roadway covered with dust, and finding by m ny horse marks in the dust that many patrols had been out the day before.It was very noticeable that these trails left by horses all ran lengthwise up and down h ill except for an occassion al side branh into the hills . They had made no attemptto cross the river . Apparently they had learned by experience not to try that. Everywhere they ket kept a sharp lookout for Glandelinian scouting parties or patrols, but although they found a good many horse tracks, belonging to at least any number of scout patrols, they did not see any of them because of the thickness of the dense dust shroud.At first too they were rather concerned forfear that they should come upon a party of Glandelin ian horsemen suddenly, but now in such a dust storm, they could not but believe that they mus be in shelter, and in any event a Glandelin ian scout patrol if large in numbers and well armed is an ugly column of troopers to settle with on short notice. Glandelinian scouting parties sent by Manley to patrol places are the largest scouting patrols ever mustered.Later after they had traveled for an hour or two without seing one, they then for some reason or other begenvto be as much concerned for fear they should not see a Glandelin ian scoutin g party as they had been at first afraid they should.They doubtless saw Violet and her sisters many times, but because of the boy and girlscout troopers with them, were apprehensive and kept out of their way.The Glandelinians were not afraid of men soldiers, but were afraid of child scouts.In deed once violet herself thought a Glandelin ian cavarly squadron who had been advancing tward them had turned and retreated at their approach, for she and her sisters found where their tracks, apparently just made, suddenly reversed and turned up the vallwy.They ove often found also in changing direction of their course to avoid facing the win d and dust , that a column of Glandelinian cavarly out of curiousity and suspicion, had tracked them for some distance, and when Violet or any one of her sisters saw strange hoof prints they could not avoid having somewhat of a creepy feelin g brave asxthey were.Some of the horse tracks were so clear, h they literally could see in perfect shape the horse shoe marks in the dust . Besides Glandelinian scout patrols, other Glandelinian scout patrols on foot were very abundant.One of the latter must have passed close beside the christi n dh christian column one time during that morning for Jennie found fresh tracks of mens shoes on the pass at the top(not hop the pop), and discovered they had followed the trail of Violets trail across their own.How they managed to hide from Violet and her sisters and their followers in a country rendered sodestit ute of cover by wars disaster wasnot clear,, but probably they had ample n otice of their approach, and secreted themselves somewhere behind large trees taking advantage of the dust storm to obscure them.

They too were surprised to find a few small fish like minnows in the river for with the debris fall of the explosions at Ophelia all the streams were entirely filled up for a time, and even the river itself must have been nearly chocked. There was no evidence however anywhere of the big River salom salmon so often seen in the river summer or winter.The The means of sus substance of so many large scouting Gladelin ian parties was a very great mystery to Violet and her sisters--yet they must have carried with them great supplies to eat for they were evidently at home and not merely passing through.More over if th ey did not carry supplies enough, and did not find food they could easily have returned to the Glandelinian camps.They were now starting up the valley tward the sout hwest where in direction Emperor Vivians army was said to be.Their own remaining provisions together with everything not essent ial with their work were left in the baggage wagon s which followed between the columns.Although they were protected by good "gunmen" and they had made things as snug as possible it was not without considerable trepidation that they would have left their provision train followi in the rear for in such an enemy patrolled country t hey were absolutely dependent upon.their mun itionsand provisions, ad if a good size glandelinian cavarly squadron or patrol should take it into design to attack a wagon train when it is in the rear they would have been in a bad way.

Three or four miles up the valley they came out int o the open the wind and dust storm not ragin g at this spot, and here they could see the distant w sections of ernormous encampments which they believed were of the main Glandelin ian army and not a christian army.Stading square across the head of the valley stood the Glandelin ian positions of general Raymond Richardson Fedderals army, its long lines of brass cannons glarin g brilliantly even in the reddish sunshine.Far in the distance was a walled wr a wreat h of smoke which proved to be one of the actions ragin g near Ophelia no doubt.The main battle field violet believed was concealed beyond the bend of the valley so that they were to have no glimpse of it untill they were close enough, for they must go that way to get near emperor yivians army.But. to the West of Federals army in a posit ion where no raging battle was indicated by any official was a peculiar noise as of something hitting like many sharp sticks against each other mingled with low rolling thunder ad and some sort of frequent clattering noise and for a long stretch in that direction was a long tremendous fog of strangely colored smoke.

Comparson with general Hid U Hindernines description showed violet and her sisters that this must be the con flagration that caused the big explosions and which had been caused by a raid similiar to those kind Penrod had made recently made before he was killed at the battle of Ophelia according to the latter Violet, and her sist ers had recieved..It was clear enough from its location that this could not really be the conflagrat ion that made the explosions nor a conflagration at all, for that conflagration was now raging to tward Ophelia and Oph elia was east of them.Even from their position it was evident that this was at present eit her some ot her conflagration, or a local battle far away from the battle of Ophelia. And it was not at all certain but that this, rat her than the horror at Ophelia had beenthe seat of the great explosions, whose effects like those at Abbieann everybody was now studying, for curiously enough there had never been any very pi positive evidence, beyon d the statement of a few refugees, that it was here rather than at Ophelia where explosions occured.Inre .Indeed there was one well informed man who acted as guide t who assured them h e had climbed the hills back of the battlefield and taken bearin gs which fi fixed the location of the explosions between Ophelia and Chamberlane and not at that spot seen nowand in a posit ion which he indicated by a cross on the land chart which violet herself had in h er possession.

Fortunately however they were afterwards able to obtain evidence which fixed the seat of the great explosions beyond question.In the first place, they found th at the deposits became progressively deeper as they approached tward Ophelia, while the location of the big smoke fog they had observed was near the edge of the big debris fall.Thus the deposits nearest Ophelia were sixteen to eighteen feet deep on th e level, but ten miles further north near the smoke sea their depth was to be measured as by many inches, and only a mile or two beyond the country was covered wit h heavy vegetation so rapidly do deposits thin out in that direction.,ore over great as is the smoke cloud of this either new conflagration or battle, its thickness in comparson with the main scene of horror at Ophelia was relatively deminitive and quite too small to have made explosions to throw out such a tremendous quanity of debris of all kinds in so short a time.Further, great as must have been the changes wrought in the landscape by these sudden blasts they were relatively insignificant besides the tremendous change they found near Oph elia itself.There can be no question therefore that the explosions were between Oph elia and Chamberlane and not from any other sector.But if they were convinced that the smoke fog they saw was not from the territory of Oph elia, they were equally uncertain as to what it was, a fire or a b battle, for non e of the war mapt maps at this time they had an newly made too of the forpositions showed any battlefield or con flagration in this location and there appeared to be neit her record or traditation of any war disaster ih in that quarter.

Therefore there was every reason to believe that this new conflagration sprang into being at the time of the great explosions.But tremendous as is the ph enomena phenomena they wereto find later on their journey other accompaniments of the great explosions of even greater magnitude.In order to discuss the new conflagrat ion it was necessary to give it some attention ad some designation.

It seemed to them as they watched the new conflagration, which made a noise as a battle was raging that it might have been sat by one of the explosions hurling explodin g materials inthat direct ion.Violet and her sisters tried to get a better glimpse through their spy glasses but the distance was too great. Th ey therefore were not able to determine the position or altt ude of this new conflagration wit h precison precision. When they reached Alder Creek they found it much more formidable that their reconn oiters in th e dust storm had indicated.Leaving the others on the bank Jack Evans h imself dropped h is pack and waded out th rough the dead forest killed by one of the explosions and went for half a mile in what he found very hot (not ca scalding) water.

From that distance it looked wider, deeper and swifter than from the starting point.H e therefore decided it was absolutely impossible t to attempt t o cross by horse and under the heavy packs and the wagons to boot so they went along its shore through the dead forests on the flat near by wondering how one of the explosions could kill a force like that .At eleven oclock they started to hunt for a practicle ford and therefore climbed on up to the shoulder of a mountain where they hoped to get a birds eye view of the creek below and select the licliest place to try but had to keep under cover, for from a distant point of view they were con tin ually heavily fired on by Glandelinian soldiery who had spotted them.Though shot and shell came thick and fast no one was hit.And here too they found a new experience even while under fire in clin climbing the great dust slides with which the lower slopes were covered.Wherever th e mountains were precipitious and too steep for the great dust falls to stick it slide down int o th e valley s coverin g the lower slopes with great fans of debris of earth, fragm nts of sheds, houses and lots of dry dustand which stood at a critical crit ic crit ical angle ready to slide down at the slightest provocat ion.

Some of these debris slopes were more than a thousand feet high, th eir surface bein g loose rolling dirt, intermingled with frvgment s of rocks, and all sorts of ea rth debris intermingled with grass and fragments of trees and bush.

"est of this a personcould sin k to his ang ankles while new debris cont in ually slid down upon him.Often the whole slide above "iolet and her sisters who tried to climb began to move and they were pleadedess to say in a thread mill where th ey had to keep desperately moving or be sliding to the bottom or be covered and sko'smothered to death.such climbing of course was very hard work, and everybody in the whole column soon cut up their finger nails and wore the tips of theri t heir fingers down to the quick by using th er their hands in helping them in climbing.

When Violet, and her sisters led the descend or descent to the ford,' Violet herself found that the bott om was a cont inuous quicksand clear acrosss.

But as it was the on ly way they decided to cross and the attempt was make made.It was a successful one but believe me it was a miracle h ow they reallly endured the trip . They must ha ve been unusally strong lit tle girls for their age(th e eldest being n ow only IO) or maybe the pussession angels helped them and all th eir followers .Sometimes the surface of the quicksand bog would h old like the crust of a snowdrift ; but nevertheless everybody were in con stent con stant fear of going down, for Violet who darlin gly led the expedit ion on soundin g with her alpenstock, and havin g ot hers wh o carried them doing the same,th ey discovered that the whole length of the stick(~~two & a half~~ foor) (20 foot) went down in to the sand anywhere wit hout finding bott om. Often the footin g of one or the ot her party or sometimes a score at a time gave way, and they soon found themselves fliundering up to th eir middle in dangerous sucking quickda quicksand.Violet and her sisters were often caught t his way during the entire trip.But with all their crossings in this exp expedit ion n o one h owever got in so deep that they could not get out alone . But there was the ever present knowledge that they never touched the bott om and the fear of what might happen n ext time..Besides this the labor of every on evin the party carrying a padk pack through such mire was so great as to defy descript ion .It must be surely experienced to be appreciated, that is if any one would appreciate it .Every step took all their strength , and soon their weary muscles literally ach ed from the strain .

But once in, if you value your lives there is no chance to rest untikll untilll they reached the farther shore,, for there was no place to lie or sit down upon, and if any one of them ever stood still thoy immediately began to sin k.Even the strongest man in th e story Jack Evans himself was well nigh exh austed after a mile of such work.The condit ion of the stream chocked wit h dust and quicksand was peculiar in the extreme, for the river had spread out over its whole flood plain, wanderin g this way and that through the dead forest in a most fantastic way changin g it s course con tin ually, so that th e stream was never the same for half an hou r or so at a time.The whole bottom was travelin g rapidly down stream, it s contin uous steady motion resembling on e of the moving platforms which are sometimes used to transport pass n passengers.

They fin ally reac ed reached the opposite shore, and believed me they when on dry ground immediately pitched camp changed their cloth ing to dry ones and took a well nea needed rest.Asc some did so Violet herself loo ing in that direction noticed not iced th e stream had cut clear through the accumulated masss just below a small water falls forming a bluff some seventy eight or more feet high.Then she looked achun dred yards down stream, and noticed that though th e slope though still very steep was less, and the st ream had been completely overcome by th e ern ormous quanity of debris and dish dust and mud in its way.It was for Violet very ludicrous to watch the struggles of this st ream as it wrest led wit h so much debris in its bed.Dammed up in that locality in the failure of a previous attempt it was gradually accumulatin g enough energy for a new effort, and she drew her sisters attentions to it .They saw the river down there suddenly break loose from it s bonds, and then rush forward a little down the slislope, pushing a pile of debris before it , as though to en gulf the on lookers writhing this way and t hat, like a live thing picking up large pieces of boards amid the debris and floating them alon g as it come.Before it had gone far however its new load would literally chock u it ed and it would give up the struggle in a hiss of grating debris and stones.It was quite a problem to secure water w from such streams.The water always carried such quq quanit ies of large angular wooden fragments, not to speak of sand clay and mud, that it was out of the question to attempt to wash in the streams.If they tried the strange hard dust and grit would so grin d into th eir flesh as to prohibit any further efforts at cleanliness.But while washin g is a matter of choice, one must drink whether or no.They were obliged everywhere to strain t heir water through one or many of their foot food bags.Oft e Often they would have to strain two quarts of debris dust to get half a pint of water.The stream also chan changed so rapidly that they sometimes had to move before they could fill a bucket .And straining too of course only removed the courser grit .

And you the water was so full of mud that Violet and her sisters though they usually were so scruptiously clean refused to wash their hands and faces untill they got to clea clearer water, because they did not want to dirt y it with the water they wished to use for drin king .

The day after crossing this dreadful river of quicksand they being rested climbed a low hill to the west in hopes of seeing the town of Big Girl Knool where Emperor Vivians army was still stationed for they feared lest the fine weath er which had favored t hem s so far would come to an end before they shoula attain their object.Their quest was in vain however for when they reached th e summit an ern ormous thick wall of rolling smoke from some big conflagration started by the explosions no doubt cut off their view so that th ey could not see the city nor any signs of t he ch risting encampments..They then tried to cross t he pass to reach a position where they would not be facing the wall of smoke and where they could see the cit y and the probable condit ion of the christian army still confront ing the Hanleys at Big BGirl Knool, but were balked by a new kind of difficulty.On the way up Violet herself, sticking her staff int o the groun d harder t han usual discovered that it went through into a cav rn beneath.Examination showed that they were supported on an arch of debris ed dust a foot thick, spanning an us unusally deep hole from which foul smells were coming up.They found.that the mountains everywhere within range of Ophelia were covered deeply with dust, which was concealed by a a mantle of deeper and harder debris blown over it by the wind.Th e dust ed debris beneath was rapidly fallin g and thinnin g out leaving the debris surface stand ing as smoot h as ever above the cavity.Such small holes as the one into which Violet had accidentally broken were of course, no consequence, but as they looked down one of the side valleys, they could see great cave ins exin an apparently smooth debris field, where a stream burrowing through the dust drift s beneath had undermined the surface.For more than two miles or so the deep tun nel thus made had cac caved in and then for anot her number of miles it was still in tact giving n o indication of its presence to an unwary traveler.Reflecting on the signficance of such phenomena for them, they carefully chosece path free from all appearance of buried dust drift s.They had not gone a hundred yards however, when Jn Jenn ie happened to stamp her foot accidentelly, and was aston ished to hear the ground beneath her ring hollow.She sounded the alarm and they all quickly retreated, spread, out and t ried act anoth er place. They had not gone far when nearly the whole company of them, th ough each fifty feet apart detected a huge cavern beneath them.And they had absolutely no means of judging whether the hole was only five feet deep, or of unfathomed depth nor of estimating the strength of the roof.The danger of such a situation was altogether too great too t ake, Violet and her sisters though game in all th in gs would not take a chance on this unseen peril, and so they all reluctant ly turned back with the purpose to en circle one of the hills of the valley.As th ey proceeded therefore in this direction the count ry became more desert.Small birds which were common in th e lower valley were absent here.And the stillness of the dead forest, i killed by one of the explosion blasts was very p oppressive. One could have traveled all day without h e hearin g a sound but his own footh ills and the plunge of rushing wat er, and even here they did not hear the battle of oph clip.Some trails of scouting patrols persisted untill they turned int o the corner of th e upper valley, but there they disappeared completely.Beyond that point there was not even the slightest sign of animal life, and clouds of smoke from con flagration s hung so low that everything below five hundred feet was obscured, but as they pushed on up int o the valley a feeling of tremendous awe possessed them.Th ey had also quite exhausted th eir stock of superlat ives in the lower valley and and found themselves altogether wit hout means of expressing the feelings that arose in in th em, or of descrin describing the scene before them.As they progressed too evidence of flood damage rapidly increased, they noticed that all tribut ary streams also had been affected.But the shocks of the explosions seemed worse for by the h ve very blasts for miles and miles wh ere thick forests had stood the trees were seared off at the surface of the debris and dust.The few trees which remained were bent, twisted, splint ered and broken in every describable mann er.In places sheltered from the extreme fury of the concussions the trees standing in the floods were piled high with driftwood.From the height they could see that the volume of water from the Abbicann flood horror so long ago had been enormous beyond measure.They found high water marks sixty feet above the surface of the stream.As they gradually com fully to comprehend what ga tremendous catastrophe this flood had been months past , Violet and her sisters and everybody with them were more and more th ankful to God for the good luck which had caused them to be out of the danger zone at the time.They had finally penetrated as far as they could up the valley, and camped, as they hoped about opposit e to where Big Girl Knool might be for th eir dinner, for they fo could not be sure of their posit ion for the smoke clouds hung lower and blacker. Yet here thdy they found a formation quite different from anythin g else they had seen. A long wide ravine which branched off from the main valley, behind a sput of the mountains was filled by what looked like so great a glacier which non e of them had ever seen in pictures of any of the most advanced geographies,, ex cept to their surprice its color was a bright or Hegent a Red. In ev ery detail of it s form, except for its ce crevasses for it had m ny many it was exactly like a monsterous glacer glacier, beginning at a very high elevation, where the ravine was narrow, then it sloped ev evenly down to the valley level, widening greatly as it descended, so as to assume a beautiful triangular form. In deed if the color had not been so different from everythin g else from or in the landscape, they would have been sure it was a big glacier covered with red dirt. But in such a situation no glacier could have escaped from a thick covering of the omini present dust and other explosion debris, and this was free of it. Not being sure how it exe existed there they at first concluded that the mountain itself must be a mud volcano, and th at it must be a mass of mud which had run down off the volcano, but Violet her self insisted that the mountain was not isolated en ough to be a volcano did not shape like one, and if it was one she could tell it by the shape of its summit for mostly summits of volcanoes are somewhat straight or have a funn y round sort of peak on top like a cone. They gave it an examination through their field glasses. They finding it not far away visit ed it and found it was a strange red oley like mud. It lay on top of the debris, and although it was hard and firm so asto be easy walking bot h it s structureand it s form sh owed clearly that it h ad reach ed its position in a semi fluid condition. Like a glacier it had a relatively steep front and was absolutely convex h ighest in th e middle so as to turn the drainage off to the edges along each of which a deep canyon had been cut. But despite the indications that it had once been fluid they saw no mud cracks or other ef svidences of shrij shrinkage upon drying out such as one would have expected to find in a mud flow though th is one was a strange and peculiar one indeed. Its length Evans estimated by his pedometer at three and one half miles. Its highest part attained an elevations of nearly one thousand feet from which point it sloped to about four hundred feet at the base. Yet no one was able well to estimate its thickness. But along the edges where it was cut into by the small mountain streams a section about sixty feet was exposed. In the middle it may have been much thicker both on account of the convesty con vesity of the surface ad th e greater depth of the valley floor. Another thing they could could not account for was that on all sides of the floe also was mud but as if it had splattered down like a cloudburst and yet there was no evidence that any one of the explosions did this. There was no explosion hole near h ere and they were yet a great distance from Ophelia tward which they were heading first.

As they were in the region of deeper debris they were all very much surprised at the character of the debris. After the Abbicann horror post cards had been current in Calverinia showing great rocks which were said to have been hurled far by the explosions, and Violet and her sisters themselves had been expecting to find somethin g of the sort in this territory too. The fact is however th at th e violence of the explosions near Ophelia was so great that everything that was dug from the different layers of earth was blown to"ent hereons. "Pieces of granite rock of which there was a countryside strewn with of six inches of diameter were hard to find and the very largest p iece they could discover near Ophelia later was less than five inches in its longest dimenision. This is due to the fact that all the layers of ground and stone dug up by the explosions was either blown to bits by the sudden expansion of the dangerous explosive powders or was comp completed completely dis rupted forming like dust or ashes. On first thought therefore one is kept to be more awed by a force that could hurl great rocks in to the dir than an explosion that merely sends up clouds of smoke. But when one reflects that the granite rock of the earth, slabs of ot her stone and even soil are reduced to mere dust by the violence of any one of the explosions he realizes then that much mightor explosions or forces of them are involved than what might be required to toss boulders about.

In spit e of the desolation of the whole region, even in the shadow of such disaster, an in the view of ernormous Glandelinian encampments and conflagrat ions some few remnants of plants p ersisted in sheltered nooks on the st eeper hillsides. In their climb they even found plants of devil-club, lady fern , salmon berries a willow, a sedge, and a bed straw. The l aves of most of these w ere injured around the margin s and in general they appeared more d ad than alive though of course still reteining the possibility of later becoming the means of revegetating the country even now as the great heat of the south eastern Calverin ian forestvfires still persisted. Their next venture was now to try and cross the river at anot her ben d to examine the lower slopes of the hills beyond with the purpose of getting a view of Ophelia if possible. Th is Violet and h er sisters and everybody with them found a very formidable undert aking.

At this bend the stream(not scream) was divided into many chann els, and th ough none of these chann els were very deep it was so swift as almost to carry any one away. In deed Violet and her sisters went down un der its current, and succeed ed in getting out on ly with difficulty. Th ey did not mind the ducking,,, even though the water was very hot to their surprise(not scalding however) but they were in fear of wetting their precious cameras.

After two whole hours of this travelin g the wind which had been on the east changed, the smoke fog finally began to clear away and soon they beheld the whole countryside and the whole range of hills. Off to the westward however was a steady column of smoke rising from the direction of Ophelia tward which they were heading, the city being concealed behind the hills, which was known on the Geograph y as Observatory mouna mountain. N ext were the three peaks of Mount St Peters covered with n ewly fallen snow. Across its northwestern slopes formerly ran the trail to Big Girl Kn col across Evangeline St Claire Pass , which though reputed dangerous and difficult difficult because of so many enemy patrols going through there now, looked very easy from the position on which Violet and her sisters were on . On the northeast side the flank or the pass is flaned by a lofty three peaked mountain which was called St Joh ns. It 's three peaks were arranged in semicicular fashion leaving batt ween them a very large amphitheater open tward Evangeline St Claire Valley. The shape of the mountain gave the appearance to Violet and her sisters for the amphit h eater appeared somewhat like an ancient cra ter breached on one side. The Highest peakappeared from the valley like an am almost perfect cone t runcated at the top as though by a crater but Violet and her sisters never h eard of a volcano in their country given St's names and doubted if it was one. It 's H eight as given by the chart was 16,879 feet. They asked Evans;

"Is Mt St Joh n a Volcano. It shapes like one."

"Yes in deed it is." He answered. "Our Geography said it is one but extinct."

"and it has a saint name!"

"Not sin ce it was discovered to be a volcano. It's on ly crater is on the summit. The Amphith eat er is not one!."

"It surely must be" said Violet. "Look over there at probably about three thu thousand feet lower."

H e did and from some spot in the amphit heater there issued somewhat inter mittent ly a large column of steam. It was going up three thousand feet or more. N ext in line b eyond a wide pass they had climbed observation mountain and could see Oph elia cit y itself. Not far away was a very ex tensive conflagration still buh burnin g up everythin g of the enemys encampment. At first the sight of Ophelia present ed a rather disappinting appearance for its buildings were badly wrecked or also smoking ruins and buildings still int act were so covered with debris as to make it appear as if it was a toy city and a number of children had tried to cover it with du dirt. Far off though on the level of the ground there seemed a number of strange large depressions one of the nearest some three miles in le length almost filled with water, highest above the ground at the ends and broken in the middle by a sharp toot h like rock or layer of earth which stood up out of the lowest place of the strange level ground ground rim. Even from Observation mountain the edges of this strange curving rim aroun d what appeared to be a lake were so sharp t as to give an idea to the observers th at it was one of the big holes in the ground dug by one of the explosion for th hole was within where the enemy had had his encampments before the big raid made fire and explosion disaster. Although this section of the Glandelinian nc encampment was seen and secretly observed by many christian patrols and child scout s before the con flagration and explosion there was no record or any phot ograph or description of it so that there was no very definit e means of determining the full strength of this glandelin ian encamp ment before the explosions. It was larger than the ones cons cont esting at the battles of Ophelia however, and originally must have quit e outshadowed th e later latter however for although much less conspiciously placed in the territ ory it was one of the flowers of the Glandelin ian armies. The Military charts which Violet had on h er person showed a three section Glandelinian encampment with an extension of four y fourty five miles. The biggest of the encampments had been where the raid struck and the fires broke out, and from the descript ion s on the chart Violet made a diagram of the Glandelinian army before the explosions and fire for comparison wit h it s present condition.

But even without the in formation given by the military chart it was evident that neqr nearly this whole Glandelin ian encampment estimated of 10,000,000 ten t s was wipes wiped out by the conflagration and a h undred billion dollars worth of explosives of the Glandelinians gone into flame and smoke and everythin g else wit h it. The raid too had such a suspidious nature according to what Violet and her sisters had h eard of it, that th ey had to a considerable extent lost their sorrowcover Penr Penrods death for they were mighty suspicious. The raid was of one of Penrods styles, and no christian general could dunduct a raid of that sort. Therefore they began t o feel that it might havecheen some other boy who was mistaken for Penrod and who,h ad worn one of Penods uniforms wh en killed.(They were right) Penrpd had not had the chance to go int o the foe lines as h e had at first decided and was too busy helping his own father with his army and t hen struck to make the raid.At the news of Oenrods death Violet had flashed the news to th eir Fath er but he never recieved the letter.What if he had and Penrod with him working like a beaver for him and then to make the raid. Emperor Vivian would have believed that Violet and her sisters had gone out of th eir minds from sorrow over his departure.

Coming back in to the lower valley after the total desolation of the country in the "shadow of the war-torn land, Glandelinian encampment s in the distance, great clouds of smoke from fires burning in the foe camps was like regaining the earth(not oit h) after a visit to the In fernal Regions.For a moment Violet and her sisters and every on e felt as if they had entered H eaven.H ow Green the great trees looked(evergreen) How the sparrows chiruped. How beautiful the mount ains with the sea of green fir and pine and the snowy summit s.And this was the country on which they had exh austed their superlatives of devastation in an effort to compare it with that of the past Abbieann sorrow.violet and her sisters themselves, had not fully realized the awful devastation near and between Ophelia and Chamberlaine untilll they felt the relief from its contemplatation in the comparative verdure of the vinicity of the ruined city, and yet strange as it seemed a voice did whisper in their ears;

"Rejoice my dears despite the devastation.It is the enemy who got it , n ot your people.It was coming to them as an atonment for Abbieann.who did it you'll learn later.Be glad do not sorrow over th e disaster.Your side sudd suffered only in windows.Let them sacrifice a few glass windows to see their enemy humbled by these explosions.Remember poor Abbieann."

.N everth eless violet and h er sisters werecalso more relieved to find every one of their provision wagons stiill intact.Glandelinian scout patrols had been prowlin g around, and knew who led the expedition , but they had been suspicious and appren appreh ensive of the many childerscouts in th e ex pedit ion and for fear of them, had not so much as approached one of the wagons.Men soldiers they feared not not.Child scouts they feared as the horse feers the rattlesnake.

By dinn er time they began to look for H enry Dares to come and take them across a wide part of the river which was impassable for the most stoutest swimmer.Poo Possessed even as they were by angels it would take a miracle of great form for violet,and h er sisters to swim that dangerous current.H owever the man came in a boat and carried them all across on a large barge operatin g the powerful mot or of the gasoline gunboat full speed.

Now to head for Ophelia which was a dangerous route they decided to carry on the expedition on substantially the same lines as that of the previous day after resting all afternoon and ng night after crossing the river,,, exp except that it was possible to organize the work more th oroughly and to provide against various dangerous con tin hgencies which could not have been fore forseen without the experiences of the previous days.The experience of the previous days showed th e necessity of the employment of ot her troops from a near by e camp also if one could be obtained. while this was bein g prepared for I'll tell of the one da cause why the expedition was made saftly to Ophelia without encountering one single foe or meeting with interference with Glandelinians.

The General of a portion of a Glandelinian encampment some great distance away did not wish to see Violet and her sisters and th eir expedition reach th e xhristian lines under Emperor Vivian at Oph elia but here he met with one of his most greatest difficulties, for h e found that all his scouts and patrols, were afraid of th e child scouts in the colun column, and could not be enduced to att ack them or try to stop the expedition under any condit ions.When the general broached the matter to his chief, the latter said at once very positively;

"Indon't blame them.If the soldiers and Violet and her sisters were alone thenI'd show them we could wt o stop them and I don't mean maybe.But I'll sent no men out against them with so many child s scouts in th at christian expedit ion.Th ese brats the Vivian Girls are shrewd to have sixt een whole regiment s of child scout s, and thei t hey are armed like twenty times th t that number.Th ese child scouts do not give quarter, and I won't have my men committing suicide in att acking them.Life is bett er th an foolishness.Let th em go.They're not spying anyway."

And too the Glandelin ian scout patrols were afraid of Jack Evans.Of course he did not look ot or even shape it but there was not one hundred-men who even armed with rifles could lick him all pitched onto him at once. Already a unusual hero among his country men and a great and beloved guardian of Violet and her sisters whom th ey looked upon as a brother and whom th oy loved about as well as their brothers, and mainly a hero-because of many of his great deeds and of being also a guardian angel of violet and her sisters h e was already doubly so for saving them through the most seemingly unescap able dangers ever known.H e had actually looked in to the big holes of th e explosion horror at Oph elia without violet and her sisters knowin g it and looked in t o one of those too out of which had come the most devastating blast blast . However brave as he was h e even then had been nervous with his followers that day when on the "Crater"rim of one of the scenes of explosion keeping sheltered behind a big rock a good sh re share of the time and shifting about about uneasily. Evans too wasone of those stron g characters whom fin one finds among all classes who stands out superior to their fellows.with one hand alone h e could accomplish more than most men with two.Violet and her sisters found nothingthat he could not do, even to tying knots, and rolling cigarettes for h is fellow officers with one hand.Once Violet and her sisters gently defied h im to try to row them across a lake with his two hands tied fast to the front of his body.Th ey supposed th en that they had found his limit for they could not imagine how any man could handle an oar with his hands in t hat posit ion.H e was not handicapped however for in a flash in that posit ion he was rowing with two oars in each hand, each oar lashed together at th e handle and he rowed the them back and across the lake several times and th en up and down its full length as well as anybody could do with one par in each hand.Th ey then asked him "Why don't you work miracles Evans."!

"You are a miracle."he answered.

"By what way"asked Jenn ie.

"Because youand your sisters are so good."

TH is did not flatter them however and they answ red in a chorus;

"You are just as good as us."

At the spot now which they wished to cross th e next morning th oy fo nd the same maze of quicksands that had almost turned them back at other spot s.Violet and her sisters could never get used to it.They believed th e devil put the quicksands there to object to obstruct th eir way.Although so far th oy had never had an accident , Violet and her sisters believed they could never free themselves from the dread of th e crossing and the fear that the next t ime the quicksand would get many of th em th em. They cast vot es whet h er they should try to cross or not and the majority voted against it.So the vote carried and they decided to cross at a more favorable spot even it thet would have to go a long distance out of the regular route.Patt er make a longer journey than take chances wih with uncertain quicksands.Maybe it would hold them above to a certain extent, and maybe they would"t ry to find bott om".

When they arived at the head of the flat they picked their camp site so as to command a view of the surroundin g mountains.Yet they never expected to be priviliged to have a camp site surrounded by grander scenery than was the territory they selected.On the east side of a very broad valley was an ernormous Glandelin ian encampment but far away but the more impressive for the distance framed in between two larg towns still fart her away which they believed to be Chamberlain e and H enrietta cities.The latt er though in reality only ten miles away at the head of a new valley appeared sat just a few hundred feet back of the camps.The hills were very grand too for further up at the head of th e valley stood eleven thousand eight hundred foot fli cliffes which guarded th e entrance to the inner canyon of Aronburgs gun River, whole towering aloft over in acessable precipices the summits of st range mountains which themselves present ed fine en ough spe spectacles to command attention in any other unusual setting.But here they were eclisped for on the other side of t h e valley gu but veryhfar away they could see the whole ca chain of glacier covered mo n mountains of the main range in continuous seri series, broken only by Aronburg Run Pass, whose three thousand seven hundred feet looked low indeed by comparison.what they were named is too much time to put here but the apparent highest were first , The Mount of the Twelve Apostles, and the ot her name further away of Mt Th under, a volcano partly hidden behind the stiff steep cliffes of the nearer mountains and finally Mt Andrews anot her Volcano but they were not active.Far to the northwest looking like a cone shaped whit e topped cloud was what Violet and her sisters believed Mt Joan also a Volcano and it only steamed at the top.

But from sounds they heard it was evident that the activity along the opposin g lines near Ophelia was somewhat greater than the days of battle before.There could be no longer any doubt but that considerable new activity was going on near North P Bend, whereas the three weeks before they could not be certain of any activity.The column of smoke from conflagrations was larger, and the and there was a small column of smoke rising from a point well down the valley nearest Ophelia which they had not seen before. In addition to these smoke clouds the weather bein g clear of smoke from the sout heastern forest fires so far away they saw very diffenite indications of more conflagrations on the other side of the valley near Henrietta. Through Aronburgs Run Pass they could see to two very et enormous black clouds of smoke when ever w everywhere else all was clear except the nearest con flagrations. Over tward Rose and Topsy conn ecting with the Sendon Railroad, they saw similiar clouds of smoke but not quite so large and heard sounds like thunder or explosions.

These however were very puzzling, elusive, uncert ain,, quite different from the steady column arising from the big conflagrations within the devastated for encampments for they were not only in constant and variable in volume, but equally uncertain in position, as if they were great explosions, app arin g now at one point and now at anot her.

On finding th sky xl clear and bright, this unusal morning so far as a sky colored with smoke goes, meaning there was no ordin ary clouds (pouds) they decided to see how the river was for crossin g and to reconn oiter the scenery before them with a view to pickin g their path for the journey through a saft er route tward Emperor Vivians army when the proper time should come. when they started they had very little idea how far the christian lines was, expecting t o content themselves with reconn oitering the lower elevations and to avoid Henrietta, Tos Topsy and Chamberlan where the enemy was in possession. But as they went on, they became more and more anxious to try to reach for curiousity th e enemy encampmenys near where the explosions occured so they could view one of the explosion craters Evans spoke to them of. So leaving the mud flow at about eight hundred feet, they started down (not up pop) the lon g ridge which runs o ut parallel wit h the canyon. This was easy going with a gentle dexcent and also ascent eit her down or up the three thousand feet, when they suddenly came int o sight of the upper valley of the Aronburgs Run River. They found that the Canyon was a most extensive one seeming without end, while farther on the valley turned to the northwest and expanded into a large flat extendin g beyon d eyesight into the flats in which they discovered a large lake bluer than the sky in strong and grateful con t rast to the gray land. But what especially surprised them was suddenly to discover the origin of the great clouds of smoke which h ad so sorely puzzled them a few days before. A con flagration set by one of the explosions was passin g on , and near by it was evident that one of the explosions h ad piled up something like an immense dam across the valley. Beh ind this dam a vast lake had accumulated but the dam had been always slowly but gradually wearin g away so that the lake in a gradual way would never last long. This is not the lak however which they saw first. Turni ng from the two lakes with the hope that they would be able to return and explore thrm they roped themselves together every one and decided to have a try at the descending slopes below. They too were on dangerous ground from the outset and apparently in the path of one of the con flagrations and this territory was heavily forested. The surface too was covered by many feet of all sorts of dead woods covered by ash or dust overlyin g many feet of dead leaves and no doubt peat, and yet by soundings they knew that under their very feet on delicate ground were mysterious cavern our depths. No experiences which such ground could give any precedin gs or precedent for judging the strength of such roofs over mysterious caverns, and they had no means of kn owing what to exp ct. It was therefore with great fear and trembling that Violet, and her sisters ventured out across the first hollowing sounding stretch of ground, and as it proved the worst of such trean treacherous ground. It was on ly a few feet wide while from beneath they could hear somethin g like a roaring torren t which no doubt which divided just below part going down behind the arrete they had gone down and part tumbling directly down the face of the mountain. The slopes too were all covered with thick overlaying weeds and ot her small forest ground covered th ick with the debris of the explosion s, dust and debris of various colors, gray, black, brown, yellow, chocolate, red, green and even blue and clay color, the results of the nearest explosion in this territory. The explosiojs must have had immeasureable force to scatter stuff all over a country side like this. At the lower levels the debris was deepest and hard, makin g easy going, but it would be some time to reach down there, and now as they started to descend, the dust and debris proved treacherous and even slippery too though apparently dry, and yet a little lower soft and sticky. Then they came upon mud and wondered how this come to be on this mountain slope too. Most of th e way down it was about ankle deep, but in spot s they went in almost up to their thigh s and at times it required all their strength to extricate themselves.

Unpleasant and laborous as walking th rough deep ,ud is under any circumstances they found traveling down the slope very hard work in deed, and yet the others and even Evans could not see how violet and her sisters could make it out as a lark. Evens thought that the harder they found traveling the more they seemed to poke fun at it.

They had already traveled downward about four hundred feet of the way and it was mostly through soft mud and dust, with only occassionaly weed patches, and through dense forests, and a section of the slope became steeper as they advanced downward. Then they came to an opening in the forst and discovered that despite the desolation of war the scenery became superb. They could see Chamberlane City across the wide endless valley to the west and also the tops of the nearest mountains which presented a magnificent mass of sharp snow covered peaks and at high elevat ions intervening snow fields. Up at this elevation it was also much cooler and the forest fire warmpth did not seem to reach here. But finer than these was the nearest portion of the Grand Canyon of th e Aronburgs Runs River which still lay stretched below them. Flanked by the multicolored rocks and cliffs with the river hidden within the lower gorge, this resembled greatly the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and in deed except for its greater far greater vastness rivalled the latter also for its proportions, for it was believed by Evans to be about five thousand four hundred feet deep of which about four thousand feet is the inner gorge cut through beautiful delicate green purple, violet, In do and ot her colored rocks not to even be matched in any other Canyon in the whole world.

Len g before they reached the level ~~tatl~~ valley the hard work began to tell on many of them, even powerful Evans and they were all becomin g tired, even Violet and her sisters who were carryin g packs. Joice herself deserved great credit for allowin g no one but herself to lug the big camera with its tripod weighing twenty pounds to the level before allowing on of the men to do it. Evans marveled at the strength of the little girl to do this. She told Evans afterwards that she could never have done it for two fact except for two facts--that she was afraid to trust it to some one else who may stumble and fall, that anyhow she was hitched to her sisters by a rope and could not get away and the fear that if they did not go on, they would not reach their destination. Now too as it began to cloud up they became afraid that they would not be able to see anythin g if they did reach the lower valley. And too they were afraid they might walk without seeing it in time reach one of the crat ers rims caused by explosions and fall to their own destruction. All the other territory as far as they could see was all clear, but everything in their vinicity became densely covered with black, heavy rolling clouds, which permit ted only occassionaly glimpses of t he valley below. Further more they were on the lee side of the valley and h ills instead of windward, as they should have been. They knew however that these clouds must be due (not the jew) in part in or at least to the nearness of o ne of the con flagrations because of th e strong odor of burning wood which filled the air but could not t ell how much was to be attributed to th is cause, and how much was simply due to th e fact of the west her also clouding up at this elevation.

As they contin ued downward they could see to the far west that the clouds were in rapid upward motion in great rolls coming straight up from a big forest fire in that localit y. what if they should reach the lower level only to put themselves directly in to its path / Nevertheless they were unwilling to give up now without at least a try and so they pressed on. Finally after descendin g a littlw more than six thousand feet and then crossing a great distance over th e valley which instead of cheerful was covered with shattered forests they came upon what they at first thought was a gig n gigantic Vº Volcanic crater. T hey stood carefully on its rim. The inside wall was standing nearly perpendicular and great masses of gravel, debris of all sorts and mud were cracked off from the edges, ready to fall down the hole in , so that n ot one of them dared to look over the edge, even though anchored by the rope untilll they could find a place which looked much safer. Then they approached the edge. A cloud of smoke comin g forth however oc obscured everything and nothin g could be seen through it. But as they looked there came a little rift , and they could see somethin g blue some distance below them. Then the smoke fog cut them off again and they wait ied and waited patiently. Again it blew away, and they were struck horrified and speechless by the scene, for somet hing like an enormous crater lay before and below them. It was of immense size and seemed of an infinite depth and from it and above it there was the smell still something like exploded powder.

About half or more of the bottom was occupied by a wonderful blue lake. The perpendicular sides near them were composed mostly of hardened mud and fragments of various sort of debris and nowhere in the whole descend, no where not even near Abbiegnn did they encounter such a scene as this. On the opposit e side of this immense explosion dug crater for such it was they could see that the greater part of the wall was composed of granite, limestone and ot her rock givin g it a roughly stratified appearance. Everyone were powerful powerless to form any real estimate of the size of this stupendous hole torn by this explosion and yet there had been mag of these explosions. It was clear however th at it occupied all the area within the rim, which from below appeared four miles long. As to the depth the best any one of them could do was to look in and try to carry the to carry the same level to a slope near by and thus estimated the deph t he depth was apparently two thousand sevenhundred feet.All this they almost took in at a glance.Before Violet and some of her sisters could get their t ripod set up the cloud closedin again more thicker.Were they to be cheated of this picture wo which would give evidence of the great force of one of these explosion s?inally the cloud lifted a little, and fruat ically they made th eir exposures.They too for the good of th e cause had planned to take bearin gs and measurement s which would permit more accurate determination of the depth and size but were given so few cl ar clear mm moment s that they could not make them.And down here too the weather was very warm and they began to suffer so from the warmpth and heat that after having been up in the g cooler lattitudes the h e heat now was torture, but bthey lingered here for fifty minutes more h op ing for better views but as the clear intervals became less and less frequent t hey had to gte it up and decnded to go to some shelter utill the wind changed and drove the smoke the other way.Else where the sky and territory was clear except for the distant smoke of the greater fires.Some of these smoke clour clouds were lon g combed out and lay in horizontal lines, drifting slowly tward the mountains to the northwest.

Their distan t view from the great valley m ade them anxious however to proceed on tward Ophelia but they found it impossible to penetrate beyond the mouth of the canyon bein g stopped on the brink of a thousand foot precipice which from appearance looked like some hill torn out by one of the explosions.

Nevertheless the magn ificence of the view from this point wassimply beyond description. It was like an immense Grand Canyon and the American or Canadian Rocki s all put together(except the mountains appeared very much higher, and then the dist n distant but quiet volcanoes added for in this story Western Calverinia has more volcanoes than all ot her sections of the world combined.Also the desert landscape covered with the many colored debris thrown by the explosion s together with the colors of the fine rock walls would if we had viewed it recalled the Grand Canyon but on a wider scale.But the upper slopes with their sharp summits occupied by immense snow fields ad glanciers reminded one of the Canadian Rocies, and in p articul r partcular of such well kn own places as the "Valley of the ten peaks."

Down the sides poured numerous waterfalls many of which were of the greatest beauty.Opposit the pres precipice was one whose thin misty stream dropped more than two thousand feet from the top of the inner canyon clear to the bottom.Two more each several thousand feet high alsowerecseen on the slopes of what seemed by its shapes to be a volcano.

The two sides of the canyon showed as Violet and her sisters observed very different rock structure.The west wall was a five thousand seven hundred foot cliffs(the biff) of decliate green sedimentaries but very little metamorp hosed, although shot through by numerous dykes of igneous rocks, also pale green. But on the east the river was hemmed in by great mag mahogany colored rocks whose massive cliffes rose five and even seven thousand feet before givin g way to the gentler slopes of the plateau. In the more exposed situations the wind had often cut through different layers of explosion thrown dust leavin g the hillsides m marked with many bands and circles where deposits of m ny different colors have been alternately uncovered.where the unprotected positions were occupied by forests of trees their dead trunks bore evidence of the power of the explosion blasts for on the northwest side their bark had been all cit away, and in many cases and places the wood deeply abraded by pieces of rock and gravel flying in clouds with great force and b speed before the explosions.

That night while tryin g to rest in camp they experienced a fierce southeaster.For fourty eight hours or more it blew with such terrific fury that every one were in constant fear lest their tents should be torn to shreds.They would never have supposed that any tent could have stood up under the strain.Every one had their tent s double guyed at each end with their ap Ap Alpine rope but were not able to keep their pegs from pulling out atthe bottom.They could not have held their t ents down wit hout the floors.Several times many held their own tent s in place by lying on the floor untilll the pegs could be driven in again around t he bottom..Only less noisy was the bombardment of the blasts of gravel and hard large dirt and sand and other ground subt substance, which drove against their tents like a blizzard of hail.The power of the wind was such that pieces of stone even two or three inches i n size were picked up ad carried away, while many big stones went rolling along the slopes. .The wind too was so fierce th at no one in th e expedit ion could keep a fire, not could they have cooked anythin g if they had for he sooner would any one attempt to put on a kettle of water than it began to fill with sand, so that it could not be used. The storm was believed tc be one of those so called "Forest Fire Hurricanes" for it only subsided when a forest fire came up within view and burned past.On the morrow the smoke from these con flagrations rose straight up in to a dark smoky sky through which the sun tried to show in a blood red ball.However they decided the condit ion auspicious for a continual of the journey hop ing to find anot her explosion crater on the way.They were not to be disappoint ed.

This time they choose a path over the ground from near the base of a small stream flow.From the valley this ground did not seem specially favorable and they were by n o means sure of reaching the limits of Ophelia when they started, but they were anxious to get to Ophelia, an especially to see what might be behind the hills there because of their suspicions of battles raging for the possession of Ophelia in that direction. They got a fine view of Chamberlane but they were disappointed in their hopes of seeing anthing going on between Ophelia and Chamberlane as they had heard rumors of.. Although they traveled for several miles th ey could see no indications of the battle of ophelia ragin g beyond though they thought they could hear it .There were in the distance several jagged remanants of what had been Glandelinian en campments in the explosion territory but no large one, and no clouds so th at t hey quite dismissed the idea of a battle raging in that quarter.How greatly in error they were in this conclusion they were only to find on the last day of the joiney.For a good share of the way beyond two miles their path lay across the lines of drainage, which had gashed the level surface of the debris and dust with inn umerable gullies anywhere from two to ten feet deep.On their first mile of travel they had followed straight down a single hill and so avoided the necessities of crossin g the dangerous gullies.This time they soon found that contin ued jumping across or scrambling up and down the sides o f these ravines was very fatiguing and every one were completely tired of the job before they got through them.

Then their way led across much strange soundin g ground which while easier going for the most part kept them in constant fear of cave ins on account of the uncertain condit ions into int roduced by the dust and debris falls.In places they traversed as nasty a series of what looked like seracs as one would care to find.They found that the goung ground seracs extended clear tward the direction of anot her of those explosion made craters above whose depths the loose blocks hung wit h a precarious hold..They did not dare approw ch the edge of the ex explosion crater over such ground even in their hurry to get to Ophelia and had to make their way way aroun d, descendin g somew hat descending somewhat untill they finally reached the rim at the lowest notch at a distance of two hundred feet.This again appeared to be the explosion crater or explosion made crater that Evans spoke of having seen for the rock was there woul which broke the regularity of the arch at that po -point. This from the distance appeared to violet and her sisters like a small toot h like projection in deed.Near at hand it seemed to be a great nock of joint d jointed columnar granit e rock four or five hundred feet high, which evidently owed its preservation to its s p supero superior hardness which enabled it to resist the force of the gigantic explosion that blew away all the softer rock around it.From their posit ion directly under it, its perpendicular cliffs though insignificent from the valley at a distance appeared immeasureably high . Frequently in Calverin ia, that land of stupendous dimensions Violet and her sisters and a l their followers her here had occassion to realize how lit t le conception they could form of the true size of the features around them. Violet ad her sisters always knew from experience that when any one stands directly beneath a cliff, or at its brink, and looks up or down, three or four h undred feet appears as an immeasuresbly gr a great height.Ten times as much however appears no greater unless there are trees houses or some such familiar object down below or beyod or beyon d by which any one can form an id independent judgement f of their distance.In a count ry made de desert like by those dreadful explosions wit hout such objects Violet and her sisters or any one of their followers were frequently unable to form any estimate at all of the sizes of the various features which met their view .They had an amusing instance of this when they saw a column of Glandelinian troopers not too far away but too far away to be seen by them go up a gradual slope of a debris slide, and soon at a greater distance they were lost to view.Violet and her sisters nearly always found that their estimates were too small than too large, and in th eir dairies they tried to scale down their statement s of size so that any errors should be in the direction of minimizing rather than of exaggerating the things they had to reportStanding on the edge of the explosion made crater they and all the rest recognized their total inability to form any judgement of its dr a dreadful depth by the ordinary methods one uses in est estimatin g such thin gs.But usin g the shape of the mountains close by as a whole and imagin g they were volcanoes and such differences in altitude of parts of the strange craters rim they con cluded that it must be more than three thousand feet in depth, though how far it extended down below the water in it no one could fathom.

Both the weather conditions except the smoky sky of course, and their position here were much more favorable than it had been at the first explosion made crater.Despite the strange smoke color of the sky the sun nevertheless did its best to shin e brightly, and it became evident why they had had so much trouble with the smoke fog on the discovery of the first crater, for they found a great con flagration and the direction of the wind had a great deal to do with it, and to day the wind was on an opposite direction drivin g all smoke clouds away. For some reason or other however a haze probably because of the dampness above the lake in the crater hung in the mouth of it so that a part of the rim opposite opposite them was veilded. This h aze made it impossibl e to secure as clear phot ographs as they would have wish ed. At the southeast angle they could see anot her low notch in the rim of about the sam alt itude as the one on which they stood. B t But this one was occupied by a tremendous wall of hard rock which rose perpendicular flush as it seemed with the crater walls as though it h ad been sheared off by the explosion.

After takin g what photographs they could they started on their way again t ward Ophelia. As they conton con timued on clouds as of smoke began to gather on the west side of the guge huge valley so that t h ey knew it was to be the last day again of sun shiny weather. They now hoped it would not take over two days more to get to Emperor Vivians army and wished to proceed on ward, but Evans wishing to be cautious wished to see if he could find the source of the strange clouds which had aroused the suspe suspicions of every one. But remembering the bad name givin g Aronburgs gun Pass by a former exp dition who stated that it was the most difficult pass ever crossed by a scoutin g or jcurneyin g expedition, n o one had any desire to get caught short of provisions on the wron g side, and so gave up the projected trip but Evans h imself decided to go with violet and her sisters and leaving the rest beh ind to guard the camp reconn oister instead. Planning therefore to make an easy day of it, for they all were tired after the forced trip of the two days before, Evans and the Vivian Girls accom accompanied only by Gertrude Angeline n and J enn ie gurmer climbed around the shoulder of the mighty Observation Mt and descended into the upper Valley of Aronburgs Run where they to their surprise found the largest and most striking acculatig form of dust and explosion debris observed anywhere. The whole flat occpyin g a triangular space fourty or fifty miles wide was filled many feet in depth by the debris which had slumped off the mountain sides. One section they y traversed was no less than two hundred feet thick(n ot sick), and six others about one hundred feet, and the smallest from s eighty to si xty feet. H aving stopped a lit tle while to examine the character of the ash and to eat their lunch , they made their way cautiously for ward across the bad lands formed by the shocks of the explosion s and moved tward the Aronburgs Run Pass, following carefully the bot t om of the canyon which at this point rose in a gentle slope. Then as they ascended the valley past the highest peak of a mountain they came into view of a hollow between it and the next peak from which they thought several times they had seen clear indication s of some sort of a cloud rising. The sun was shining in to it as brightly as it could through a smoky canopy so that they could see it all clearly. There was not the smallest cloud rising from it anywhere though from it s form they could tell it was a volcn volcano. They were up now to over three thousand feet where it was much cooler, may rather chilly and could see a long way through the pass,,, and there was to be seen no clouds of any kind like smoke there either. So again Evans concluded that they had seen nothing more than the ordinary clouds which gather so easily around the summits of all very high mountains :.

Jennie herself jaded from the contin ual hard work had given out , and th y left her behind in a sheltered nook of rock with the packs much again st her wishes, several hundred feet below, and the rest went a little further forward to reconnoit er. The rest too were both tired from their hard travel the day before and traveling transversely q across the gullied "Bad lands" of the ash stretch which was necessiated by the condition of the canyon below was very laborous; so that they were read to turn back satisfied with having seen through the pass, and as they believed having laid "anot her ghost".

But just as Violet was about to suggest to Evans turning back to Jenn ie she caught sight of a tiny puff of smoke in the distance within sight of Oph elia. She rubbed her eyes and looked again . Yes there it was. When she saw more she decided that they must go on and in vestigate because the very smallness of these little puffs made it of as much in terest as if cannons were in actionFor one of the most striking features of the battle of Oph elia and t he explosions within the Glandelinian oncampment s--explosions which were without parall parallel in other great war explosions--was the absence of subordinat e manenfestations of ot her con flicts outside the main drama of action which usually occurs. violet and her sisters had been cont in ually surp surprised at the absence of smaller conflicts and the like in so great and extensive a battle.

Earler in the day they had h eard some sound of battle far away the sound comin g as if from down the pass, but aside from that this row of smoke puffs to the east of Ophelia was the first thin g of its sort to be observed. At this spot too the ground probably by the concussion appeared all shot through wit h cracks and small fissures, and t o the su sout h of Opheli a there issued half a dizon good sized black smoke clouds, and perhaps a hundred small ones as if they were con flagrations and shell explosions:::.! and trev46

Wit h some trepidations they approaced over the fissured surface and looking in the direction they wished to observe with their field or spy glasses they discovered that most of the puffs of whit e smoke or whatever it was issued from the distance apparently from great guns for a low th undering sound accompanied every puff. Coming off with the greater clouds of smoke which partly shrouded the territory were curious evil smelling odors and prominent among these was the "Rotten w egg" smell, a odor of burned powder and ot her oders, even to say daringly what people may call "g e Smelling feet"".

Evans, and the Vivian girls were now becoming very anxious to return to Jenn ie for they were greatly worried for her and also did not like the smells and also they wer were already gone much longer th an th ey had expected when they left her. So starting to return, Evans reached a little eminence on a shorter rout e, for the dist ance of smoke puffs were just over the pass as it seemed, when turnin g around to urge Evans who loit ered a lit tle to hasten, Angeline saw far down the unsually broad valley in the direction of Ophelia but to th e sout heast and over the top of some risin g ground, but not too high a wall of puffing smoke clouds and hear from there a contin ual th udding thundering roll . Th is surely had not been th ere when they came over the pass and was evidently considerably larger th an the smoke puffs th ythey had observed first in the west , and as the obstructing hill was not far away, they decided, late as it was, to go forward for their own sakes and have a look for if a battle was raging violently in that direction that territory would be inacessable or unpapproacheble. Violet and h er five sisters, and even Evans and th e two other girls can never forget their sensation s at the sight which met their eyes as they surmounted the h illock and looked down the valley--for there stretchin g as far as the eye could reach and also coming from the ruin s of Ophelia and some smaller villages near by and a,s also from the ruined enemy oncampment w and from fields and farms stretching till the valley turned behind a purple mountain in the dist ance were h undreds, no thousands of what appeared to be little sh iftin g volcn volcanic erupt ions like those just first seen and from them came a dreadful continual sound as if that territory was a world of distant thunder without abatement. The clouds were not so little eit her, for at t hat distance anyth ing so small as the first explosive puffs th ey had seen would not be not iced. Many of them went up like columns of whit e st eam, which even rose s th ousand feet and spread out like white and gray wreaths and fogging th e atmosphere above the valley. After a careful estimate they ~~juftjuggedt~~ judg e judged there must be a thousand whose columns of smoke would exceed five hundred feet. At one spot a simultaneous row of them appeared as if all the st eam engines in the world assembled together had popped their safty valves at once wand were lett ing off surplas steam in concert. Some at times were closely groped in lines as if along a common fissure, others would appear apart like a severe clatting cannon fire, and others were t coming lines of puffs.

The biggest of all whose column had first caught their eye stood well up on a forested hillside and evidently was a new fire . Fortunately a stron g wind was blowing across the pass carryin g the fumes all down the valley and away from them or they might not have dared to go on. In addit ion therefore to the active cannon for such it was there were thousands of smoke explosive puffs h igh up in the sky at times and if all these smoke puffs were to be count ed and could be counted their numbers would undoubtedly reach int o tent s of th ousands which proved an unusally titanic artillery storm was raging between both h sides. Although too there is every reason to u suppose th at t he vigor of the artillery action was variable, there was in most clases no evidence of successful outcomes so far. I wish my ~~toiteattte~~cal vocabulary were adequate to describe the curious mixt ure of foul odors which some of the smoke from the nearest conflagrations gave forth. Some of the smoke had a strange organic smell, recallin g at once burnin g wool, or burnin g rats full of worms and decay, the musky smell of a fox den, or that of a Bish on p barn in g park, and or odors which would make you sick to read of. They could not tell to what ext ent there was danger of one of the fires coming their way for here th e count ry out side the battlefields was densely wooded and th erefore they took good care to keep to the windward most of the time. Three or four miles down th e valley they saw new wonders. The countryside near the south ern bend of t he Aronburgs gun Riverlendin g off in the direction of Chamberlane was full of smoke puffs and looked the same as the valley itself. Th ey did not go farther t o see what might be further up because of the evident int erest of the opposit e bra e branch of the river which bore off to the southeast. In th at direction was a very prodigious column of smoke as whit e as et can at parts, other parts dun colored, yellow, brown cream, and black. As they drew nearer they saw that t h e main body of this cloud was was rising from a cent ral Glandelinian camp of t ents the whole extendin g some distance across th e valley and blocking furth er progress, while they could see immense droves of Glandelinian soldiers madly batt lin g the flames this bein g a part of the con flagration which had recently struck the enemy munition dumps and set off the immeasureable explosions, a conflagration started by one of Penrods most destructive and vicarious raids on record and it was reported before that he was killed.

Farther on up the broad valley was another volcano of smoke and flame evident ly furn ishin g part at least of the biggest clouds of smoke Evans and the Vivian Girls had ever seen in a life time, and which had excited their su suspicions from th e other side of the valley. Beyond this th ere may have yet been anot her great con flagration but the rising column of smoke from the big camp conflagration before them and also burnin g forest near them obscured the view to such an extent that they could not see clearly.

Even the hurried observations they were able to make were sufficient to bring out distinctly in its larger out lines th e significance of the phenomena. It was evi e vident evident that th e great con flagration amon gst the enemy encampments mostly of barracks was extendin g as if a great cloud was issuin g from an ormormous fissure extendin g northwest from Ophelia alon g the line of the Big Girl Kn ool Road tward Chamberlane. While the main line of this great conflagration seemed to extend up to Rosa too, the lateral conflagrations branched off tward Chamberlane and Henrietta. Oph elia there stood at h e juncture of two great lines of encampment and forest con flagrations, one stretchin g along the Aronburgs Run , the other this newly discovered conflagration has never been previously seen or recognized before and perhaps did not exist before the great explosions started by the first big fire. They had now seen as much as could be observed without being observed by either opposing side, and without extended exploration, and so they turned th eir steps h omeward and hurried to rejoin Jenn ie, who at first unknown to them h ad finally done some explorin g of her own for five hours. Bein g rejoined and once across the "Gullies" which were more than ever a terror to them, n ow that they were nearly exhausted, they made good speed back to camp and th e rest of the soldiers and child scouts, which they reached a little after ten oclock.

Here they not iced that the river showing the effects of the forest fire heats on the mountain snow fields was beginning to rise so rapidly t hat t h ey were afraid of being caught miserably on th e wron g side. H ow they wish ed they could have gone on and reach ed the city of Ophelia, but forest fires and the batt le barred the way and also they were not equipped for such a undertaking and it was better to get s to some portion of the christian army with what t h ey had than to risk it all for the sake of more. N So they decided on a move and before five oclock the next morning they were up and breaking camp. The event proved that they had lost not hin g for although the boat to take them across the river did not come immediately, th4 clouds of smoke did not break away again. When nearing at last a huge christian camp of an inactive part of the army and lookin g back at the work durin g their journey when one had time to forget t he excitement and labor of the daily rout oine routine and take a calmer survey of the result s, the one thin g which stands out is the great magnitude of the munitions explosion s within the foe lines and th e results. Evident from the first reports thia now had grown with increasing kn owledge. No one, not even violet and her sisters and all th eir followers, who had jour neyed through the desolation of the th in g can form any adequate con ception of the stupendous catyclasm that occured because of th e raid. These great explosions of which there were many was easily now t o be ranked amon g others i of the war. Previously the horrors at Abbiconn h as held first place in the minds of the most, but the quanity of debris and dust and ot her earth wreckage thrown out by these explosions at Oph elia was so much greater from one single explosion as to put it in to an altogether different class.

Indeed the whole of the Krakatoa erupt ion in its full duration couldn't thrown up as much stuff as one of these explosions did in a seconds time. We ourselves so i neviat ably estimate the magnitude of natural ph enomena by t heir effedt on human affairs, that a series of explosions like this doing no harm to the christian armies, and wrecks wrecking terrible slaughter and destruction among the enemy positions seems less import ant I suppose because on the christian side the only damage known was of the breaking of window glass in cit ies and towns great distances away, and funn y freakish actions caused by the con con u con cussions done to household goods but not hing else.

Yet the magnit ude of one of these explosions could perhaps be realized if one could imagine a simil r similiar explosion centered in An gelinia Agathia which is as large as N ew York cit y and Ch icago combined. In such a seconds catast roph e all of greater Angelinia Agathia city would be buried under ten to fifty feet of debris all in a seconds time which duration the explosion had and subjected to un kn own h orrors caused by the sudden h ot flashes. The column of smoke and debris hurled up by the explosion would be plainly visible beyon d Jessica which is as far from Angelin ia Agathia, as Ph iladelph ia is from N ew York, but the cont in ued rage of the explosions going on for four days as they did would n o probably prevent any one from approaching for those days to view th e scene nearer th an Dorothy Gale or Nombi. These latter cities would be covered by a foot or more of dust and ot her debris, and f would group in darkness for more than n inty six hours. Angeline Junct ion and Gertrude Angeline Cities as far from Angelinia Agathia as N ew York is from Ch icago would recieve a quarter of an inch wit h a short er period of darkness. Small quanit ies of debris would fall over all of the Eastern Stat es of Calverinia and as far as nort hern An gelin ia State. The sound of the loudest explosions would be heard as far as th ree or four thousand miles, and t he powder fumes would be noticed as far as that and more. Not even th e most vivid imagination could pi cture the destruction of live and military property which resulted from such sudden explosions within th e foe lines and in such a th ickly populat ed Glandelinian encampment.

Yet of the Christian side of the affair not a single loss of life occured.

CHAPTER FOURTY.

EMPEROR VIVIANS ARMY.
THE SURPRISE AT THE ARIVAL OF THE PRINCESSES.

THE OCCUPANT OF NUMBER IO.
PENROD TELLS THE STORY OF WHY HE COMMITTED TH E DESTRUCTIVE A RAID..."."

INTO the christian lines the arivnl of Violet,and h er sisters, Evans and their strong escort was wholly unexpected and produced the utmost surprise and also utmost concern.ation in the buildin gs which were to have been their headquarters, where a number of officers were just taking th eir evening meal and feedin g the four dogs(not hogs) around them..Thus as we see Violetand her sisters and their escort had traveled from Ge glencoe to Ophelia through scenic count ry un till they reached the outskirts of emperor Vivians Christian lines or encampment s where she and her sisters took a larre carriage for League Park, a distance of two or three miles and were the left wing of general Kindernines army was supposed to be.The day dreadfully hot and sultry for December was drawing to a early close and the sun was just setting when they turned off from the high way in to a broad road going through the main Company Street itself, and which wound through the encampments for a quarter of a mile or more tward the house they had decided to select as their headquarters.

"That is them, that's the place Princesses"said the driver, whose name was Current, and he point ed to a huge wooden building tadin g upon a little ris rise of ground and surrounded by tall pines.Once it must have been a little paradize but now no doubt by the terrible war it was strippedbof all it s glory,, and stood there within the christian lines desolate and dreary with hardly ai any p.int on its walls,cand the lights broken from the lower windows, while h ere and there a door was gone and the shutters knocked loose by shell frapments hung loose some by one hinge or swung loosely by i or in the win d. Involuntarily Jenn i herself held out her hand to one of those coming to recieve her and h er sisters, who took it in his strong palm and said encouragingly;

"It may be better inside.Anywmy I and a number of soldiers can soon fix it up and as lon g as we re ain here the situation will be lovely."

Attracted by the sound of horses and wheels the four big dogs now came rushin g down the road, barking furiously, but Violet and h er sist ers were not afraid, and when the noisy pack saw the driver whom they know, their barking changed in to whines of recognition which brought some more runn ing to down the company street, and where they stopped, the leader with his hands on his h ips eyed the strangers closely.

"What girlscouts are you and what brought you here."Th e demaded not kn owin g at first who they were.

But when Violet, and t hen her sisters alighted, and going up to t he general told him that she and her sisters were Emperor Vivians daughters and showed proof of i', and that she and her sisters had fled here from an unsen danger and had come here to stay, the generals con sternation knew no bounds,, and while dropping a courtesy to violet, and h er sisters and said to Jenn ie who stood in front of the others;

"Sure you are welcome Princesses but you will have a lon g ride from here t o get to your fathers headquarters."and thought to himself;

"For the Dear God's sake whatever shall I do with these little Princesses and their girlscout leaders and guardian they call Jack Evans, but we re will I put them.There ain't a room in the whole house fit for even the worse scum of the Glandelinians to sleep in.and they are the real stuff that heroines are made off and emperor Vivians Daughter.Can't ch eat his daughters."

"Dearest Prin cesses"h e said at last addressing Violet, and her sisters, who were looking ruefully around them,"We hav e no place just now wherein you can rest or slep but in o my old cabin headquarters, where my orderly just scrubbed the floor this blessed day.If I or my staff had known you were coming we would have done somethin g to that old building over yonder."

Violet explained explained that a telegram had been sen to their father announcing the coming of her and h r sisters, and added with a little shiver;

"Let us go to your cabin then.I don't know but at times I do feel a little scared, and I and my sisters had traveled for a long time and am very tired."

So the general led the way to his own headquarters a more old cabin, whifh were as neat and clean as soap and water and the strong hands of his orderly could make them.Once inside violet, and her sist ers felt hatby better and less desolate who then when standing out in the hot twilight which had succeeded an unusually windty and hot"winter"day.Before entering the cabin, th e general accompanied by two of his ord officers, his orderly and a number of strange boyscouts made the tour of the house, and after th at decided at once th at for violet and her sisters and their girlscout leader friends to pass even one night in that damp cheerless place was utterly impossible.Violet ad her sisters might have taken a different rout eninto the camp and reach ed emperor Vivians headquarters because anthin g like decency and cleanliness to be restored to even several of the rooms would take some time, but the driver had left, Violet and her sisters were very tired and also hungry, and therefore was therefore no alternative but to sleep in the generals old cabin.This h owever Violet, and h er sisters did not mind,,,.Reared as they had been more in a Xhristian camp than in a palace, they had none of the prejudices against any old place as long as they were sheltered, whether it was a hansomely furnished structure or an old cabin or a mere shack or tumble down shanty, and they ate t heir cornenke wi which the generals Orderly cooked for them and drank th eir milk from the generals own cups, with almost as keen a relish as she and her sisters had ever din ed in their own fat hers home.Once indeed as they remembered their old home town before th e war and th e happy times th ey had, and then glanced at their humble surroundin gs and the army they were in and knew of the frightful war raging against God and man, there came a great ache in their hearts, and Jenn ie's hands involuntarily struck the air as if to thrust somethin g from her.

But they were very brave, n ant to be always, and when at last th ey were each one by one lifted by the general and the orderlybint o the big clean,com fort able beds, the general sacti sacrificing his and the orderly his own too, t hey fell asleep almost immediately and knew nothing more untill Hettie was the first to awake and saw it was nin e oclock, and th at the red sun was shinin in at the open door(n don't snore)and she heard th e general and a number of officers con sultin g together about th e propriety of awakening her and her sisters .

Greatly refreshed with her night s rest Hettie felt bett er and decided that the place was not so bad after all-but after her sisters were up and at breakfast with her, a close inspection of the premises after breakfast co nvinced the „ivian Girls that th ey must someh ow or other seek the way to Emperor vivians army for the territory w was such that if a battle raged here everything was open to a surprise attack and that danger they were not even allowed by their father to be in .In the big old wooden buildings there was an abudance of rooms, and furniture but everything had gone to decay, everythin g was mouldy and worm eaten, and smelled of rats and musk and foulc foul air. An d still as the general said there were great capabilities in the place if th ey did wish to remain untill it was safer to travel further, and with little time nd and labor, and a great deal of hard work on the part of Glandelinian prisoners willing or not a portion of the house could be made not only habitable but very comfortable and attractive.But meant ime Violet and her sisters unless they wished to remain in the cabin must go away to some ot her part of the camp for it was impossible for them to stay there while the renovating process was going on .

But with so much wild battle raging alon g so extensive and wide front , where to go was a question which troubled Violet,and her sisters not a little, untill the general whose name was Francis hemin gton suggested an idea to Jenn ie herself by saying;

"There's either Camp Number eight or Nine on the river,why not go there a spell untill you're fit for traveling to the part of the camps where your Father is.H eaps of the child scouts from one of the Vivianite Regiments is coming in there from general CalmanyFarmers army and they're a sight wit h their mighty fin e dresses and uniforms.That part of the camp too i s much more safer than here I reckon ."

Jenn ie, and also her sisters had h eard of that part of the christian army under general Jacksonville,and she at once seized upon the generals suggestions as something practicable and talked it over with her sist ers.They decided they would go to that part of the christian lines and possibly if they could see a battle at close view and yet be at a safe place they might be thrilled at what they saw and so the pain at their hearts over Penrods death be lessened a little.Violet decided she and h er sisters would go th at very day for she and her sisters were full of a burnin g restlessness, and desire for change.But the general who knew somethin g of the traveling on the Big Girl Kn ool Road at this crit ical time told her and her sisters it was then too dangerous--the enemy was making fierce attacks in that quarter,, they would have to wait untill the next day and probably pass another n ight in the old cabin. From this however Violet and her sisters were saved, for while they were speaking they caught the sound of the gale gallopping of horses, and shading her eyes with her hands,Jenn ie saw entering the camp at this quarter

e column of boy and girlscouts headed by the famous girlscout leader Hettie Kauffmann.

"There's the highest Lagorian girlscout commander there is."Jennie explained to her sisters."She's general Kauffmanns daughter, and one of our best girlscout leaders of these parts.Got a head full of brains and works for all the christian Gemini leaders in the land.She is coming here for some reason all right."

And Jennie was right, for the boyscout James Gannon had seen the arrival of Violet and her sisters, and had stopped at the headquarters of Hettie Kauffmann the previous night, and told the young girlscout leader of the Vivian Girl Princesses whom he had seen entering the christian lines with his own part of the camp. Hettie Kauffmann was a special favorite of emperor Vivian, and also of the Vivian Girls, and remembered well all they had gone through during the war.She remembered too the stately lady Empress Vivian their mother, who had more than once invited her to dine with her and her princely daughters, and she had no doubt that the young Vivian Girl Princesses who of whom the boyscout told her, was the daughters of the great and Holy one emperor and daughter of the Empress.But why in the face of so much peril, had they come from their own quarters so far and beautiful in general Concentinian Aronburgs army to this battle torn spot so late in the season and how were they to exist if like two days before the enemy would come up to this part of the christian line like a mighty immeasureable storm wave, even for two days dy duartation in that dilapidated forsaken spot, when then the battle raged so fierce that it seemed no body among the soldiers of both sides would survive.

"I will go and see those Princesses at one for their sake and safty and bring them home with me untill they can get to their fathers own headquarters"was Hettie's first though t, upon which she acted immediately. And too there was no need of herself being introduced to Violet and her sisters, who knew her well as well as she knew them and as she descended from her horse and saluted them first and then hugged and kissed every one in turn and then said;;

"My gosh Princesses its a long long time since I saw you last.I know you are the dearest daughters of Emperoror and Empress Vivien, who I also know. And your dear brother Penrod, though several years younger than myself he was very kind to me and I have spent hours with him under the shadow of these very trees, and those in the grounds of my own headquarters."

This strangement ion of her brother playing with her under these trees by one who he had known and seen him age at first brought the hot tears to their eyes,, some hid their faces in their arm, but Jennie dashed them aside ,and explaining that Penrod was the best brother they ever heard, the poor unecessarily unhappy little girls led Hettie Kauffmann into the houxe house or cabin, and sitting down around her, answered as well as they could the questions which their friend and visitor put to them concerning their home in Angelina Agathia, and their Brothers reported sad death on the battlefield. And Violet showed her the letter stating of his death.

"I never heard of anything like this before."Hettie said to Violet looking over the letter not really with a regretful or a sad face but rather with a puzzled look."This seems strange too unless I was then playing and speaking with a ghost only yesterday."she continued"and yet I don't believe in ghosts.I know too that one of the Gemini Rodney Graves I believe who has charge of all the great christian spy system wrote to a friend of mine who is supposed to look after the welfare of all the boy and girlscouts, that Scofield Penrod vivian had been compelled by necessary means to pospone his trip within the foe lines and come and help your father who needed some ones help very badly because of his mess at Ophelia. This is a very sorry letter your recieved and I must see into it. Are you positively sure girls that no one of you did not loan any of Penrods uniforms to any boyscout? "

"No I didn't."said violet,and she looked curiously at her sisters but with a sudden great hope and thankful feeling in their hearts they slowly shook their heads.

"It is rather a sorry and dangerous place for you Princesses to come to when two days ago such a frightful hurricane storm of battle raged here.But I suppose you do not intend to remain here long."

"Yes always as long as the army remains in this location, for with Penrod gone and our father imperiled we have no other home or alternative."Jennie replied and her voice was chocked with tears which she fought bravely back. Hettie Kauffmann, was a kind hearted, far seeing girlscout, and as she studied these little girls, scarcely the eldest any older than herself, she felt strangely drawn tward them more than ever, and felt too that over their young lives some terrible storm had swept.

"I will not ask them what it was or what the letter has to do with Penrods death but as I am sure I spoke to him only yesterday and even played with him I'll find out."she thought "But I'll be the best friend to her and her sisters."Then she said to them;

"I think there is some mistake and somebody surely must have blundered. But tell me dearest girls what brought you here."?

For a moment all of the little girls sat as rigid as if turned in to stone, Jennie's fist was clenched, and her eyes stared at Hettie Kauffmann, who looked, at her and her sisters wonderingly. Then a tremor ran through her frame and she shook from head to foot as she looked at her sisters, who were shading their eyes with their arms as if about to cry or weep.

"Oh I can't bear it.I can't bear it."she cried at last.My head will burst if I keep it from any one.I must tell you the truth, you are so good and kind, and I and my sisters want a protecting friend so much.We did not flee from General Concentinian Aronburgs army as some may suppose, we were forced to go or Catherine Lee would have reported our peril to our father and he would have made us.The Glandelinians treat us as if we and all christians had no right to be born.We rescued Penrod from Manleys possession when Penrod was disguised as Adeldefob, and Manley charges us with kidnapping Adeldefob from his lines thinking Adeldefob is a Glandelinian Prince.We had to come."

"Who is Adel Adeldefob?"

"Penrod Penrod.Penrod."

Then amid bursts of tears and broken sobs, violet bade Jennie stop, and she herself told the story from beginning to end--from the taking away of Adeldefob from the Glandelinian armies, to their peril because of it, and their flight through dangerous but scenic country which they choose because to avoid persuit and cameto hide for a time in emperor Vivians army to hide from all Glandelinian spies and secret agents who ever knew her. Then she told of the new news of Penrods death and that without him all seemed lost.Had Violet and her sisters tried, they could not have found a more sympathic listener to Violets recital, and when it was finished, Hettie's tears flowed almost as freely as violets did, as she took the little girl in her arms and kissing her lovingly, tried to comfort and reassure her and her sisters, while at the same time she administered a little reproof.

"I think you should have stayed there while Radcliffe remained."she said"No one could have harmed you while while he was there, or while the Saunders girls were watching you and everything else.You forgot how dangerous to the enemy those saunders girls are and they can detect every spy no matter how disguised they are.I dressed once like a little nigger and they know me anyway.But since you and your sisters are here, we will do the best we can for you untill we can have you transported to your fathers headquarters.And now you must go home with me and say untill things are settled."

To this violet, and her sisters did not object. She had a great desirecand so did her sisters to see the girlscout Lagorian troop they had heard of and had intended to go there as soon as possible and that this opportunity arriving was a great blessing indeed and yet had it ended at first to go some."

"Alone!"Hettie repeated, and violet explained that Evans, Jennie, Gertrude Jennie Turner and others of their girlscout leaders had intended to go with her and her sisters to see the girl and boyscouts, and thence on to travel with them to Emperor Vivians headquarters.

"There would not be any harm in that would there!" she had asked.

"Yes indeed"Hettie replied."The country you would have have to go over is torn by one of the longest and bloodiest battles of the war since Big Girl Knool and you would have faced grave danger.You could not have done it without a strong escort which brought you here.If however if you wish to go my escort will take you along, and I shall wire to emperor vivian that you little girls are here, and also to your two big brothers who are here also, whose attendance and help will be of great service to you and your sisters too and also, and they'll sheild you from the enemy spies and patrols, who during battles especially are to be found everywhere and often times disguised as christian patrols, and especiallr large Glandelinian picket lines.Prowling cats I call them for these scouting parties of the enemy partake largely it seems of the nature of those treacherous wildcats we read of. There are plenty ofythem in this neighborhood prowling along the banks of the Arabbors Aronburgs Run I dare to say but I think I and my followers can keep you from their sharp claws, if you will go with me.Possibly the charge will do you good.I will amuse you at all events.But first you must spend it to day and to night in my tent as it is too far to go right now to my headquarters which I have left.Then we'll have a good show and too I'll wire to Penrod and tell him;;----""

"Wire to whom"cried violet with a sudden, start, while her sisters looked at Hettie as if they couldn't believe their ears.

"Why I'll sent a telegram by wireless to Penrod ann ouncing that you are here and that he should come and bring you to your fathers headquarters as soon as possible."

."Gu But they say Penrod is dead and--and--"Violet was bewildered for she could say nothing more and Jean ie cried-:

"But that letter!"

"Oh that letter --poof."It her you or your sisters any one of you or your brot her gave a boyscout one of Penrods uniforms and he was killed and th erefore the Doctor who wrote that madeca mist ake.I'm not blind Prin cesses and besides I was playing and talking with Penrod all d y day yesterday and he wrot e you rec n recent ly a number of letterswhich no doubt reaches you at Aronburgs army while now you're here.I'll take the matter to hand and prove to you that I'm not mistaken unless it was his spirit in h eaven I was playing with and that surely cannot be likely.What part of the battle field was he killed.?"

Violet in bewilderment but with great er hope in her heart almost telling t o joy handed h er the letter and H ettie read it over carefully for she had not r ad it when she had it the first time.

"Penrod was never near the battle field, couldn't leave emperor vivians headquarters since he left general Aronburgs army."said H ettie.I hope he did not hear of this. He would be awfully upset.But come, let's get goin g. I will prove to you that your past sorrow was for nothing.Letters sent to you by him will be transferred to you to my headquarters by Catherline Lee who no doubt will recieve them."

Violet and her sisters were so do dumbfounded n and yet so relieved th at the secon d shock struck them speedh speechless.surely indeed God was good to them and had not any intention to really let this be.Of course if this was so, the officer could not help blundering the lett er if possible the boy was in one of Penrods uniforms.They knew the officers name ad decided to look him up as he was in Emperor Vivians army. In t he meantime keeping their hope and joy to themselves they hastened on with H ettie Kauffmann and Evans and their whole escort once again.It seemed too late in the season for more girl and boy scouts to be coming from anywhere, but they did, and too the increasing h eat of the unusual warmpth caused by so many big forest fires was also driving lots of forest fire refugee s from all points of south eastern Calvarinia, not exactly from the fire for people fled from towns and cities r hundred miles away because they could not stand the heat even that far, so t hat many came to the christian armies wherever th ey could reach them so that emperor vivians army was crowded, when Violet and her sisters arived at the section of the camp where Hettie Kauffmann had her tent.

"A small tent will suit me and my sisters"said violet, but without paying any attention to her or them Hettie saw to it they had a fine lit tle building for a while to which she also occupied.Violet and her sisters wondered at the c curious but lovin g eyes which they felt were turned upon t hem from child scouts and all refugees and soldiers within the camp.

Even in such good countries as Abbieannia t here is necessarily a good deal of gossip too, but good wholesome gossip which you would like to hear th em speak about you, and also talk and speculation wit h regard to all strangers. And to this rule the christian army here was not an exception.

.Everybody was interested in violet and her sisters and th eir main girlscout leader escorts and especially too in little black haired Jannie and Timothy Groveton..verybody turned to look after them as they rode through th the Company Street., and many sought the refugee books for information but saw no names for violet ad her sisters w were not refugees at heat.

Therefore they found nothing definite of these beautiful lit tle Princesses, who for a time sat or rode apart from them all, with a strange expression in t heir brilliant eyes, which swept every portion of the company streets so often with a sort of commanding f dignified look yet so loving and kindly, and which too had a far off wearind look and passing pain,and hope rather th an any particular int rest in what was passing around them.Everybody was struck by the beaut ity beauty of these little girls, their graceful princely carriage, their strange ethereal eyes and someth ing that almost seemed H eavenly and spiritual about them, unusually brave looking and bearing as if very military, and who saw lots of peril and many fights.Then one of the ladi s among the refugees tried Timothy Groveton.Unt ill he knew who the woman really was and what she was Timothy Groveton was non commital or mostly so. Th e woman knew that he was afraid to say anything for fear of spies and she therefore proved that she was just as good a christian as h e.Therefore h e told the truth, that they were Emperor Vivians daught ers, that the girls with them were the chiefs of girlscouts and boys too and th at they had traveled from army to army and spied too every time successfully. In d n danger from

Glandelinian secret service men and spies they had come here to recover from the shock and were to head soon for their fathers headquarters.This was Tims explanation and to his shock of relief and surprise the old lady said;

"My gracious and what's their brother Schofield to do then.Penrod should be notified and come to them and lead th em here.H e was here yesterday and h e said lots about h is sisters but I didn't know the little girls were th ey."

"Penrod, why I thought---thought---"

"Thought what! "asked the lady in surprise at his action and speech.

"why they got a letter he was dead and---I---I brought the letter"

"Impossible"said the old lady almost hotly."How can it be and I know him as well as you do.Dead.The very idea. Since the last three weeks he h as been with emperor vivians army and he made the raid that blew the enemys camps to smithereens at Ophelia.And you say he is dead.The letter was either forged or a mistake.I spoke to him yesterday all day and he surely praised h is sisters.who's got the letter."

Tim couldn't hardly speak, and the lady seeing his embrassment left the boy to himself to recover, and having nevertheless recieved his explanation which was wholly satisfactory it was repeated with good sundry additions all in the favor of the princesses, they were indorsed at once, and had they so chosen at the time, they surely would have been in with th em everywhere. But through the strange news of Hettie, and having overheard the conversation bete between the old lady and tim they were far too hopeful, and th eir hearts had come too sudden full of relief to care for company just then, and yetblosin g their sorrow they therefore in a way were int erested and amused with what they saw from their headquarters of life among th e refugees, and like to sit by themselves in a quiet corner of the great parlor of the housevby an open window and watch the refugees near th em. They saw t oo within t he building the boys and girlscouts play together at Whist, sat at the same table for meals, and usuallywith the same good cherit able loving friendly result, and the knots of lookeron s who gathered here and th ere in groups, ad whispered their con fidences to each ot her they they were sure the enemy would never get through the territory of epne Oh Ophelia.It was all very new and strange to violet and her sisters, who had never seen anything like it , and as the news of Penrod being alive was born among gossipers by th eir speaking of his visit here recently they were losing their sorrow and yet recieved anot her shock when violet suddenly screamed;

"Thank God od thank God.There goes Penrod out of sight .I just seen h im ride down the Company Street."Oh Penrod.Penrod "she screamed out the win dow but he rode away not having h eard h er.H er sisters had jumped to their feet at this but now they knew for sure.Then an unexpected arival brought all the bitterness out of their souls and made them long to see her.This arival was none other than Jean Saunders and her two sisters, and also their own fat her and mother father and mother of the three girls, with Jack Saunders and even Radcliffe and ot hers too.

Anna Saunders who had been for many months on e one of the best and highest rank of girlscout s, had been forced to stay behind after all for a time when the Vivian girls left with the purpose to cover their escapade, as she expre ssed it saying to her friends wit h cont empt in her tones;

"I'd like to see enemy secret spies try anything on them when I'm following. Think I can't recogn ize spies.Let them try it."

Jean was the youngest of the Saunders girl,s Minn ie was the oldest, and Anna th ough a year older than Jean, was a powerful little girl for her age dangerous with any weapon she could carry and as shrewd as a fox and fierce as an an gel when aroused.Then hearin g that the Vivian Girls had saftly reached the christian lines she had decided to push on before th e batt le was really over, but on the cont inuation of her journey hadencountered among a lot of refugees going to the christian lines from the forest fires her own parents and younger sist er, and broth er and forwith made them come along with her two sisters and the boy and girlscout escort as a protect ion guarding the whole band of refugees.Glandelin ian patrols would have attacked the refugees as is their wicked habit, and though many were around it must be confessed that not one of them ever came in sight .It was well and good as to say it to attack a band of refugees, but when th ey're guarded by a "horde"of dan dangerous little"gut tersnipe"soldiers wh o are so fierce and uncon querable it was anot her thing, and not on e patrol of the enemy was n any where in sight.In fact th ey even made sure they didn't even encount er the band either for girl and boyscouts don't give quart er.

Ann a Saunders journey had been a quiet one, and she and her sist ers had been silent and morose during the journey owing to poor Penrods"death" and before the journey began a great number of h er best followers had been h onoured with an invitation to accompany her, to shadow violet and h er sisters, and she also o honored three different girlscout troop regiments also to follow the ones called the Grangers, and Yorkhams, and the Yarchalls, against whom once a large squadron of Gladelin ians probably it was about seven mont hs ago had made an atte attack on an open field, and the survivors of th e foe cav cavarly swore "N ever again". Ann a had said "On this occassion it is my turn to hold up my head as to call it. If they now want to att ack me let them come. Fighting these Gladelinians is pleasure."To prove she would keep her word she made every girl and boyscout display all through the trip fancy diamonds, an she rode instead of her horse a fancy beautiful carriage not to show off the finery before people butt to dare the enemy to come and try to get it. But Ann a nor even her two sisters were not happy.Abbiganna ians hardly recover from sorrow over a friends or a loved ones death like we do. She during the trip had ma e made a slight sortie upon a glandelinian camp and came away with a band of child slaves whom she rescued.The days of drudgery was over for them.No more hard labor and suffering and h unger and cold for them.She did not consider any of th e Glandelinians worthyhof her not ice unt unless t hey repent ed.Mildred Maxwell was of course with her, and it was an honor to claim h er as a friend.Catherine Lee was invit ed to follow and she did.A girlscout of h er reputation, whose life had been one of great deeds for h er country was badly needed by Anna as Anna argued, and Catherines name in the list of invitations had headed the parg page.

.Through some blunder the invitation card failed to reach the sad brave girlscout, who had occupied a/c alone the h headquarters once used by Violet,and h er sisters having at first resisted all of Annas entreaties that she should make h er stay with them.Since the departure of violet and h er sisters she had fallen int o a sad and silent mood, watching every one sh e did not know.Anna saw she didn't come and therefore sent her orderly to fetch her, and therefore findin g she didn't recieve the notice Anna told her of the invitation and she was glad to accept.

Had there been any others around Ann a and many of her followers could have created quite a big sensation wit h their satin uniforms, and vanvets, and diemonds and other jewelry they wore on all occassions of t he trip just to court big enemy patrols to try and attack them.every day Ann a during the tip laughingly blossomed out in a new custom with jewelry t o match, and as she was really pretty, and always was good and very gracious, she could have become the rage, and be flattered and admired by any one and complimented to her hearts cont ent, but this she would not allow, n and her heart was only for those less fo rt unate than herself.

She was simply crazy about violet,and her sisters, and talked of them, and en joyed herself during rests in the trip very immensely with the child slaves or children of the refugees too.During on e of these halts she recieved a strange teleg ram near Rosa town when passing through a portion of that ch ristian camp, which threw her into a wild state of joy so th at she simply danced with the child slaves,.Empress Vivian had written her a telegram commenting goodly on her deed of covering the Vivian Girls and protect ing them stating that Penrod who was with emperor vivian doing lots of thing for his father knew she would make up her mind and pick up and start sooner or later, and that she and her colu mn might be expected any day."

"Oh Penrod is not dead friends"she screamed at the t op of her lungs"as she florushed before them the telegram she had recice recieved, for at the time when she first had recieved the awful news of his supposed de t death the cold sweat had ozzed from every pore, and she had sat rigid in her chair untill her sisters not iced her whit eface and asked the matter.But now their sorrow too was turned to joy. Kn owing empress Vivian as she did, she felt cert in t hat the good lady could not make a mistake.she knew how to work thin gs and first she decided to take a decisive step; and she too k took it , and knowing the location she telegraphed immediately to Hattie Kauffmann asking whether she knew if Schf SchofieldePenrod vivian was anywhere near by her in Emperor vivians army and if so to not ify the vivian Girls as soon as they arive.

"The vulgar old Gladelinians will be furious when they heard of this but I'd like to see them do anything."she thought with an idg indignant toos of fine litt le ladyishm."I will not have any Glandelin ians spoilt anyt hing.I am done with this hateful old sort of life Violet and h er sisters have to go through and the sooner th ey're happy for good, the happier I'll be.I am Anna Saunders, and I'll let the enemy know it.So she sent the telegram and t hen sought her father who in camp had breakfasted before her.

"Dearest father"she said laying her little head c ressingly upon his head; "The dear brother of the Vivian Girls is not dead as supposed.I have just telegraphed to H ettie Kauffmann the fa&t fact.Such a nonsensical letter that the Vivian girls had recieved about their poor brother being d dead when they don't deserve such a sorrow.I would too long again to see their sweet fresh youg feces and charming good saintly manners which are so pleasing to every one, and whose uniform dresses are always such a marvel of taste and elegance. But since it was rumored they "Kidnapped Adeldefob" they had been in such unsean danger that they had to leave general Arohurgs army and seek hiding in emperor vivians army untill the storm blew over.I am sick of it all to see thd them persecuted like th at by these Glandelinians- it makes me furious.Their perils are insufferable to me.I'm awfully anxious to see them again so I'm starting off again to night papaxdear, its not too late and I don't mind the hot weather in the least.We shall all travel more quietly during the night, and I had ordered my scouts to look out for a good sized patrol of the enemy scouts not that I am afraid of them, but we're sort of short of provisions and r intend to attack and get some.They avoid us they do, even when we displayed so much finery which showd they're dead scared of us girl and boyscouts.But we got to have provisions or the journey cann ot be completed.So papa dear, you and mamma too try and keep out of the figh v fight zone for my sake won't you."

She was in his lap by t his time and her fingers were lift ing deftly his scant hair and fixing it ol over his bald spot .H is fath H er father encircled hef her slender waist and said to her;

"Be careful when the attack is made.Some may fall on both sides and of all persons I could not bear it if it was so."

"I'll be careful"she said with a giggle."I'll make the attack an occeassion of events in honor of the Princesses."

The start was then made.The s o scouts tward night reported not what was expected to be a scout patrol but a wagon train of enemy provisions guarded by a large squadron of cavarly.They said they believed the cav cavarly overwhelmed their numbers but Ann a's he art was set upon the raid, and she carried her point , and left the scene of strife an hour later with the whole wagon train, wit h every one of her followers as not one was lost and left also quit e a number of dead and wounded cavarly soldiers of the enemy behind.

At seeing the column of child scouts coming the enemy cavarly ins y instead of fighting fled like frie frightened sheep but t he scouts fired upon t hem nevertheless creating a severe loss.

Anna was very proud of such an easy success of the raid, and proud of her followers for conducting it so grandly.,nd by the following evenin g after th is raid they reached the outskirts of Emperor vivians army at about nine oclock and being proven what they were easily passed th e christian pickets and th e gaurds.

In the meantime all of the refugees within t he christian lines had heard th at the Vivian Girls had come within the christian lines to go for their fathers headquarters, and great was the , love, interest in, and desire to see them.

And yet the entery of Ann a and her sisters and all the rest also surprised them when next morning the three girls and their parents came riding down the compan st reets.They sensed they were creating a sensation but she paid no attent ion to it , and her voice never very low, was pitched a litt le higher as she asked an officer she stopped if he could locat e for her ,her sisters and parents, and her littler sister and brother a building or so for ea headquarters.

The officer was very sorry, but there were no other building for headquarters; they were seldom called for, as all boy and girlscouts generally preferred sitting in benches in the edge of company streets in this unusual warm weather.

"Yes but just now I do not"Anna replied in her most supercilious tone. "I don't want the rooms for myself at t he best, and I think it very strange that a great big army like this should have no buildings or other houses for its officers but for the sake of some friends of ours, seven in number which we evidently beat into this camp you can obviate t hat difficulty by giving us that house over yonder.It will not be much trouble to conver it into a headquarters.I command it."

She spoke as if the thing were settled, ad was urging her horse on, and telling her parents and sisters and brother to follow when theofficer st opped her by saying;

"But Miss Saunders it is impossible to give you t hat house as it is already occupied by the Vivian Girl Princesses."

"vivian Girl Princesses!"And Anna increased her little lady like tone which she always had."The Vivian Girl Princesses.!"

"Yes."

"Then"said Ann a "my wish is gratified for that is what I wanted th at h ouse for.Are they here and alone or is their brot her Penrod with them."While the appearance of her face expressed more than her words that she could not hardly resist t he dire to rush off n and see them.

"You know the Princesses th em!"the officer vent ured.

"Know them!Yes but I did not expect to find them here so soon.Thank God they arived saftly"she answered ad then h earing where they had gone t o eat she swept on with her parents and sisters and brother for the spot .

Everybody suddenly looked up as she, her sisters and brother entered the room followed by her father and mot her, and many glances were exchaged exchanged as she and t h ey instead of intending to take a seat, which there were many on either side of any of the two long tables passed on down the whole.But t he ones they were looking for were not there and then Ann a-For she was much high er in rank then any one so far within the whole camp except violet and her sisters and her girlscout friends) commanded Attent ion and as every one obeyed she asked;

"Has the Vivian Girls been here yet.I hear they're in camp!"

No sooner had she asked the question, and before any one could answer, Violet came first through the open doorway, and her sisters followed, graceful little figures in their wonderful uniforms which wonderfully heightened the effect and made the princesses objects to be looked after, as they moved up the middle of the hall, the color dee deepening in their cheeks and their brilliant eyes lifting occassionally and flashing a look of recogn ition upon all within. Ann a was never so happy or surprised in her life as she was when Violet and her sist rsaw her and her parent s and others and coming quickly up said almost in a chorus;

"Oh aAnna and your dear sisters.Are you here too so soon!We are so glad to see you." And

And violet, and her sisters were indeed very glad, they were indeed very happy,,,,, for surely they liked Anna and her sist ers very much , and the unexpect ed meet ing with the Saunders in far off emperor Vivians army, where so far now all even boy and girlscout s were alllstrangers, made these Saunders girls very near to the one desolate heart sick little Prin cessss, and indeed the scene of happy greeting would take too lon g to detail here.Anna and the ot hers were as glad as if the Princesses were their own sisters, and their parent s too who had nev r never before seen the Princesses were startled and bewildered by the extraordinary beauty of the Vivian Girls. Anna and her sisters were more than glad to see the Princesses, for like all good Abbieannian creatures everybody loved each ot her as far as love could be summoned, and when she and ne her family learned t hat violetand her sisters had been in camp ahead of them, their first thoughts were to find them as soon as possible, but the first main thought was to bring them the delightful news t hat Penrod wasx not dead for Anna even show showed the telegram sent to her by the very Empress herself.

Love was always the cause of such greetin gs in Abbieann is anywhere, and when Violet and her sisters had suffered these unjust sorrows Anna and her sisters th gh also grieving felt repelled by somethin g and wounded too, and the Hot bl ood had mounted to their faces and then left them deadly pale but when Anna had been the first to recieve this surprising t elegram from Empress Vivian her joy at th e N thought of seeing the happy Vivian Girls over the news knew no bounds.Anna too was more than surprised by Violet h erself stating she had seen Penrod pass by, but with the n oise outside in th e company st rect as everybody cheered him as he passed by westward he h ad not heard her even t hough she screamed to him at th e top of her lungs.This lovin g scene(n ot bean) however was n oticed by all those in the mess hall and they also enjoyed this immensely and th e conclusion reached thatbt h e new comer meant very much to the Princesses, and the Princesses meant very much t o them, and their once sad faces had greatly changed since the news, and t he sweetness and dignit y of these little brave girlscouts won every body, while owin g to Timot hy Groveton s strong influence, some of the best and first class boyscouts of these Vivianit es of emperor Vivians army had called upon him seeing his high rank, so that the standing of Anna and her sisters was assured, and it hurt th em all cruely to h ear how violet and her sisters had been thus treated by the glandelin ians so oft en and they could scarcely rest rain th eir own tears untill breakfast was over, and in the privacy of their rooms nearly all of the child scouts indulged in their grief, and th ose that did not w w were worse their hearts were enflamed with rage and scorn t ward the Glandelin ians and th ey vowed vengeance unless these indignities st opped.Timothy Groveton however was not a boy of many words, but there often was a look in his dark blue eyes which always boded no good to all wicked Glandelinians, and before even the morning was half spent every one of the child scouts and all refugees too knew exactly who violet and her sisters were, and who their friends were, and where and why they left general Aronburgs army, and that at "h ome"to use Timothy Grovetons words th ey were just like ordinary good l ittle girls despite th eir superior of all rank.

And so not only that of Violet and her sisters but the very star of Ann a and her family began to go up even before it had risen .she and her three sisters were pretty too, and fast, and as good as pretty, which often times compelled attent ion, where it might not otherwise have been given except to your own sorrow-if you were not good there.Because she and her sisters were good too to Violet, and her sisters this gained her and her sisters and also parents favor with every one, and especially too with all the boy scouts, with whom the girls were soon very populer.Boys in this country do! 't detest girls like they sometimes do in may ot her count ries. With a womans ready wit Anna soon discovered that she could get all the protect ion she want ed, for Violet and h er sisters and seized the advant age of it, and was more gracious than ever to th em and the days were passing nowpleasant ly away even th ough they did not no more seen Penrod.Indeed his heart was always dreadfullt dreadfully longin g for them and had he known they were here---"

Ann a had soon more friends and so her sisters t han could be counted friends staunch and t rie t rue even among the highest officers, and therefore sh e gained th e point sh e was strivin g for and voe to strangers who w ever tried t o get neat the h eadquarters of violet and her sisters and couldn't give any satisfactory explanatation .

All this time it was very hot and it was drawing tward Christmas soon and yet Ophelia was still in the spasm of fierce batt le along an extensive front and it showed no signs of ending.And too it can be well remembered that at this time last year it was very cold, and plenty of snow on the ground. In deed th e world itself in th is story could at understand the phenomeneon of this year, for many countries even reported mild winters and blaming it on Calvarin ias terrific forest fires. However th is sort of hot weather suited Violet, and her sisters and mostly all the child scouts who like some trp tropical t ropical plant seemed to strive and be healthir i-under t he st range dry burninghheat which affected more than ever all Glandelinian soldiers(serves them right th ey are responsible for the forest fires) accustomed to hot weather in t h eir own country as they were where winter is unknown. Ph ysically Violet,and her sisters had never felt better in health th an they were at th is time, or looked prettier either, for the bright color had crept back to th eir cheeks and th eir eyes had in them a look of softness and humility, while the expression of th eir faces were more ineffably sweet and gent le than ever more, almost sweeter(not tryin g to slight h er) than the face of the Madonna.Of course so often too violet,and her sisters had suffered terribly, and th e fierce storm through which they so often passed had always left some marks upon them so th at it seemed they would never again be quite th e same dashing impaticuslittle girls they had once been, but th eir bravery, andt heir love and sorrow and sympathy above all else for Our Dear Blessed Lord always brought them through .Cat h erine Lee herself w o wrote to violet and her sisters three times already since they left general Aronburgs army----long cheerful letters full of tenderness and affect ion, and surprised Violet,and h er sisters by sending to th em four letters which had come from Penrod but by th e dat es shown had been somewhat delayed so that three of the lte letters were written by Penrod"after his death " but were somewhat delayed.A nother letter was also th ere which had come from Penrod just after th ey left .she stated she herself was coming as soon as she possibly could get away.From Gracedelinia and many of their girlscout friends th ey also heard freq frequently already, and th eir letters touched the Vivian Girls closely, as th ey always addressed them as th eir"dear sist r sisters", and stating th at th ey felt al awful bad over th e awful danger which had seperated the company of the "dear Princesses from them and that soon t here'll be no more secret foes within general Aronburgs army as they were being cleaned out as a cat cleans out a sardine can '(where is th e cat that doesn't like sardines).Once in speaking of Cat herine Lee Dolores Mic-H ollester said;

"She's very lonely at your headquarters which she gaurds for you, though we go there every day to visit her when off duty, and yet too to keep her cheerful boy scouts are also there every day."This was underscored and conveyed to violet, and her sisters minds just the meaning Dolores meant it t o convey.lots of the boyscouts of general Aronburgs army for what she had done for the vivian Girls were growing more and more int erested in Catherine Lee th e lit tle "T ornado scorge of the enemy" and violet, and her sisters rejoiced that it was so.she wa nd her sisters were so glad for Catherine Lee and also her little sister Jane to be happy in the love of lots of good little boy and girl scouts, though h their own sun r at first had set in deepest gloom, which now however had risen again, but when it come to the point there was oft en a ceaseless moan in t heir hearts for Poor God every time th ey looked upon a Crucifix, while the load of humiliation that they knew h ad so oft en come upon H im seemed sometimes greater than they could bear.

"If I ad my sisters only had somethin g to do untill we can reach fathers headquarters which should make us forget some of t his crazy war I and my sisters shoul be happier."Jean ie thought as for two morning already she awoke first t o the same knowledge of a bloody batt le raging day and night heard more explosions in the direction of the con flagration.

Violet, and h r sisters, refugees th emselves in emp ror Vivians lines, had no real duties, for everything pertainin g to the household arrangements was managed by Ann a and her family, while all boy and girlscou watched vigil n ant ,y every stranger than come near the place and questioned them. Violet and her sisters did need something to do, they were always restless doing nothing, and though of course they did attend as many Masses as there were Read in the army camp chapel they attended, they regretted inwardly very much that one of those Mass's didn't last much longer, and when mostly not having not hing to do they were found in the Ch urch nearly all day bet ween meal time. At last somethin g was to come, though in a very different form from which t hey would have chosen h ad it been th oirs to choose.

Stranger to say as the month of December had advanced it grew h otter and hotter untilll the nights were like the days, and there came no breath of air to relieve the dreadful hear heat. Even far north of Abyssinkillie usually colo colder than any part of northe rn Calverinia there were rumors of heat stroke for pecember here an there by hundreds. There were also rumors too of what would happen at any part of the christian lines and disaster which must ensue if the state of things cont inued as it did along some portion of the battle smitten armies and therefore the generaly were very busy striving at their utmost. And still along good portions if not all of emperor vivians army it was comp aratively quiet , and the air though pungent from distant forest fire smoke which now hid the sun altgo altogether was free of battle powder smoke, but farther to the cent er in the location where violet and her sisters had ta n taken refugee from unseen enemies, where christian t ranches full of men o contin ually spread itself over many miles of territory an ominous cloud of battle horror was again gathering. Scout spies had discovered where the vivian Girls and their escorts had gone, and had reported it to t h eir generals and t heir generals were mad making desperate plans to capture them at no matter h ow fierce an attack upon that quarter was to be made. Once before thi t his section of the christian line before they arived (t hey that is the girls had seen t his on their trip) had been frightfully scourged by the Glandelinian attack, and men on both sides during the frightful conflict had fallen as a nation dies or is ill by the scourge of the plague and so violent was one of t he Glandelinian attacks and then terminating int o a fierce onslaught storm, that the terror stricken refugees first being too near in whatching th e squabble had fled to the int inner recessers of the ch ristian lines for refuge from this dreadful attack, and even random shells had often overtook them on t he road in flight and claimed some of th em as victims. The enemy had however failed very badly, and lost many generals in killed and wounded it t hen being anywhere one of the most frightful Glandelinian attacks on all record.

And as christian scouts warned it was coming again--they had overheard plots of the danger, for elsewhere there was symot ons because a glandelinian attack rumored upon General Aronburgs army had held h igh" bloody carnival" and danger and feared disaster brooded over this section of Emp ror vivians army like a pall, gut emperor vivian sensed something was wrong, for what ever reason he could not tell as he was yet t otally ign orant th at his fair daugh ters were there but craft y man as he was he did not let one experience go by without warning and every move was being made to strengthen all portions of his lines and especially his center.

Soon on th e morning of December th e 13 twenty first rather it was there and while directing the defense of many portions of their positions the officers spoke th e awful word to each other in whispers, while their voices showed th eir apprehension and their hearts sank as they remembered the past, and t h ought of t h e possible future. The att ack was as fierce as if the "Yellow Fever" was in th eir midst (such fevers however is never known in any part of Abbicannia) and though yet confined to t he outer limits of the christian posit ions and the more advanced positions, the officers knew too well, that like fire applied to oil soaked cotton it would spread and extend untill there was no posit ion no matter how strong and extensive which the att ack if becomming gradually successful would not reach, its horrid presence threaten.

At the sound of such lively and incessant firing, violet and her sisters and all girlscouts and boys too had sternly warned all refugees ~~th do~~ not not t o lose control of th emselves by being foolish to go and see the battle.

"It 's dangerous" said violet to a group of people who had wished to go. "Th e enemy don't care no more for you th an t hey do I and my sisters. Keep away. If not no one but you are responsible for what happens."

So violent was the storm staattack, finally developing int o fierce glade linian onslaught s covered by severe artillery fire that it seemed that t he ch ristian positions were doomed, and as th e hours went by, and t he fury of the battle and t he danger grew, and the noise was nearer and louder, and along the christian front the death roll increased, and the wounded grew to immeasurable numbers, and men who defended a line of works a few minut es before were now dead , and awful reports came in, a panic seized upon the panic stricken refugees in another closer section of the christian camps who fled before the horror as if th e enemy was already rushing on them also. Then it was when the enemy seemed pushing every thing backward that the cry was sent forth by officers for help & men and guns. That cry was heard and generals who were not yet threatened poured fort h their troops in a most liberal number, and help "for the christian center" was th e watchword everywhere. Artillery teamed in a long line soon and the resistance was so tenacious that finally it proved to be successful but it cost the christian line heavy in losses. Ph ysicians and surgeons were sent forth from various parts of t he army with nurses for th e dying and wounded ones, and this demad it was which t ried to the very quick t he courage of th ose on whom it was made. Violet and her sisters were quite some distance from the battle but it he wind was from that direction and brought the smoke and powder fumes th rough t heir part of the camps like a sort of strong smell ing blue fog.

It was an easy matter to give on of ones substance to the army, to drop th e money int o the boxes to support the soldiers, boxes placed everywhere for that purpose, but to take ones life in h is hands and during batt le to go into the very jaws of death, where th e air is full of flyin g shell fragments and bullets split even grass was a different thing. But there were mag thousands of brave men and even women from amongst many of the braver refugees who also went to the help and rescue of the wounded and by their noble heroism during and for days after t he battles roar proved th emselves more Ch ristlike than human. violet and her sisters too heard the cry for help for the many wounded and Jenn ie said to her sisters;

"Here's something for us to do. H ere's our chance and we should take it. And we won't be near the awful battle either ."

Had she or even her sisters known how great th e danger reallly was they as brave as they were and are might have hesitated ere they made their decision, or having made it might have dr awn back from it at the front ic entreati s of Timot hy Grovet on , who when violet, and her sisters commun icat ed their intent ions to him, fell upon h is knees and with blanched face and chattering teeth begged them not to go where there was certain death for H im and them, for his place was with them, if they went no body except H eaven could stop himvfrom going either. Jack Evans too tried to dissuade them from t heir purpose, but violet and her sisters whose sympath y was out always to those in suffering would not listen.

"We are not afraid." Jennie said. "I nor my sisters shall not go int o te the battle field if that is what you fear. Our father would forbid tht that and we are never reckless like some people are. We often even carried standards on a battle field to rally soldiers and nothing serious ever happened to us. Somebody must go and help attend th e wounded, and if we who are Princesses don't do it our armies too will become discouraged. If we are afraid then will th e army get scared. As long as we do not now going int o the battle itself where we go and what we do even our fath er or mother would say I was doing right . So pack our trunks and get our horses and carriage ready, like a good brave man for we must be off to morrow if the batt le still rages Something which we cann ot resist is calling us to the place of all the wounded soldiers. What it is I cannot tell but we must go. It is our duty. And so in a fewhours the carriage going down the company street and drawn by four fast horses took in it Violet, and her sisters Evans and Tim, and also the Saunders girls, and Angelinia Aronburg bound for the many base hospitals where from the battle smitten christian lines a crowd of wounded was being ta en taken hourly and where so many mort ally wounded were dyin g so fast, and help was sorely needed. By some strange coincidence while violet and her sisters were making up their minds to go to one of the hospitals, Catherl Catherine Lee was already there. she too had h eard the cry for help.

"I am going" she said to Angelinia Jennings "For I feel that I can do some good. I am prett y good at n ursing and if I can save some wounded soldiers life or ease one dyin gs pillow, maybe it will atone to God for some of th e sufferings and sorrows of violet and her sisters for I have a dreadful feeling that H e is fright fully angry, and if he Strikes at the Glandelin ians serves th m th em right. List on to the cries of the soldiers of our armies under General Aronburg and the firing here. I bet the enemy wishes they had never att acked here sit her. I am not afraid of the battles, ed if I should get wounded and die, better so than see what violet and her sisters go through but I'll survive. I know it. I'll be safe."

Her min d was therefore desperately made up, and her superior Angelinia Jennings did not oppose h er, but promised her plenty of help in case it should be needed and that she too with all her t roop were going to be very busy in the next few min utes. And so she too was bound for the same work as Violet and h er sisters, the former to have something to do for the wounded, and Catherine to atone for these.Too for Catherine it wasnot her wish to be hampered by any restrictions, and when the physicians saw how efficient and fearless she was, they let her take her own course and do as she liked.Catherine Lee was the name by which she was known, and many a poor dying soldier brought from the bloody field of battle has blessed her with his last breath and commended to h er care some loved one struggling in the next room, perhaps mortally wounded.Supplies Catherine had in plenty, for the army kept her supplied, and the supplies for the wounded were used like water where it was of any avail, so that Catherine Lee became a power in the base hospitals despite the fact she was only a little girlscout, and was known in every company street and alley of the main camps through which long waggon trains of ambulances brought bleeding wounded, and through which sullen prisoners also were brought, and who would have been mobbed by the child scouts if they had not been restrained by their boy or girl leaders.Violet and her sisters had wired to Angelinia Jennings of their intentions, and with a cry of horror on her lips she had read the letter, and then arousing the camp to the danger Violet and her sisters had unwittingly plunged themselves telegraphed to Catherine by wireless;

"Violet and her sisters will be there.For God's sake find them at once, and if possible send them away.Violet and her sisters must not be harmed."

There was a faint sad smile about Catherine's lips as she read the dispatch and then whispered to herself."No Violet and her sisters must not risk death ,"while her pulse quickened a little as she thought what happiness it would be to help them nurse a wounded soldier , and prayed desperately that nothing would happen that would cause them to be strickendown.

"I'll find, Violet, and her sisters if they are here, and keep a good watch over them"she said, and two hours after, Violet, and her sisters and Catherine Lee in Base Hospital Number thirteen where in the officers ward two lieutenants lay dead and a general was dying. Violet, and her sistersxwere doing their work bravely and well, seeking out the worse cases of wounded, and by their sweetness and tenderness almost bringing back the life after it had gone out .Always attended by Tim and also Evans and their girlscout friends, they went fearlessly from place to place where they were needed worst but found frequently that a strange girlscout (Catherine Lee) had been here before them. Naturally they felt some curiousity with regard to this mysterous girlscout whose praises were on every lip, and also a great desire to see and love her.

"If she could impart to me and my sisters some of her skill we might do some good and save more lives."Jennie said to Evans, and there was a thought of the girlscout in their hearts as they bent over the dying general, rebandaging his bloody wounded and wiping the blood from the hand where it had ran down, and the sweet drops from his brow."I'd give anything if I could save this general"Jennie said, just as the door opened, and a girlscout clad like a little Red Cross Nurse came in.Far gone as the poor mortally wounded general was, he still had enough of sight and sense to recognize the new comer, and something like a cry of joy escaped him as he managed to say

"The good girlscout nurse.God bless her."

In an instant Jennie and Violet sprang to her feet, while their sisters who had remained standing suddenly turned, and the Princesses, and Catherine Lee stood confronting each other for a moment , neither speaking but each looking in the other eyes with an eager questioning look.In Catherines there was love, tenderness, and anxiety and fear, all blended together, for fear for the safty of Violet,and her sisters, while in the eyes of Violet and her sisters was great surprise, and gladness and love too.Violet was the first to speak.

"Dear brave Catherine Lee who helped us escape from the unseen dangers.I never dreamed it was you here, how came you here and when?"

Catherine told them how and when, then repeated and showed Angeline Jennings message--to find them and send them away from this dangerous territory.

"She says you and your sisters must not take the chances as the battle or the enemy may even brutally attack here and that you must not die, and I say so too.will you and your sisters go where it is safe before it is too late?"she asked and Violet answered her for her sisters;

"No for the sake of our Coutry country our place is here, and we are glad you are here too.It makes us feel safer and stronger."

"Oh Princesses, Princesses, God bless you for saying even so much."and the girlscout who had stood undaunted by many a soldier death bed trembled like a leaf as she snatched Violets hands to her lips, and then kissing her sisters on the forehead, went swiftly from the room where her services were no longer needed,, for while she was speaking the general was dead.

Then soon a wireless telegram went to Angelinia Jennings;

"Violet and her sisters will not go away.Says its their duty.But I'll take care of them, and so will Evans and Tim.Tell everybody there Penrod is not dead.

Catherine."

So there was nothing for Angeline Jennings to do but pray earnestly and unceasingly for violet and her sisters who seemed to bear a charmed life, so fearlessly did they meet every peril, and overcome every difficulty. More popular than even Catherine Lee, Violet,and her sisters were hailed with delight everywhere, and more than one owed their recovery to their timely aid.At last however upset exlittle by the dreadful increasing noise of the battle and the moans and groans of the wounded, violet and her sisters began to flag a little, and were not quite as strong to endure as they had been.They were tired and worn, and Evans compelled them to rest.The day had been hot and sultry while from the smoke of battle the air was heavy as if laden with noxious vapors.There had been rumors too of danger here also as the enemy had been quite a successful and was pressing on, and fearing the hospital camp would be attacked many of the wounded were being quickly removed from every base hospital to safer quarters and ,violet and her sisters watched droves of them go away inwagons.

Though her sisters did not ,violet had thrown off her company street dresses uniform, and was changing her others to dry ones not so covered or wet from sweat, when there came a sharp quick ring, and Tim brought her a note and on which was written in English;

"Come immediately to Headquarters No fourty, Company Mast reet.You and your sisters are needed there.Hasten if you can.

Catherine Lee ."

The hand writing was very uneven , as if penned with haste and great excitement, as violet, and then her sisters read it , and then list ened to the ever increasing roar of distant battle, there swept over especilly Jennie an undefinable apprehension of something she could not tell what--a feeling that this call from Catherine Lee on such a afternoon was no ordinary call, and the need no ordinery one. Was she hurt or something!

"I believe I am growing nervous myself, and that will never do."she thought , as she felt a faintness stealing over her, and a kind of chill creeping through her veins.communicated she believed by the message she and her sisters had recieved.

Never before had Catherine Lee sent for her or her sisters, but on the contrary had always tried to sheild and spare them as much asxpossible from peril, fatigue and exposure"But this "come , you are needed" was imperative, and Jennie with trembling hands and a strange sinking from what she and her sisters were to do, they again donned their usual every day military attire, and with Evans and Timothy Groveton started for Headquarters number fourty.It was a large farm building of wood, which was in a more quieter and safer portion of the camp, a portion of the christian army which had asyet remained free of recieving wounded soldiers untill about an hour ago, when with another Glandelinian attack breaking out suddenly in its most malignant form had caused that all parts of the christian camps had to now recieve immense droves of badly wounded.Two of the inmates of the headquarters ,officers too had already died of mortal wounds,and as rumors came too that the Glandelinians being already victorious in the attack may press the attack all the way up here many of the refugees in this locality had fled in dismay for the inner recesses of the camp.Then a christian general had been brought in who had been dangerously wounded, and wasen owlying senseless in an upper chamber where Catherine Lee had found him, burning with the fever of his wounds and raving with delirium.It was general Fredrick Nance one of the best friends of violet,and her sisters.He had fallen fallen in striving to rally his troops which had become panic stricken before a headlong irrestible Glandelinian on slaught which carried all before it, and after being brought to the building for to the rear of the battle line his life was despaired of, for he was a very bad case from his wounds, aggravated by nervious excitement caused by the wild savage offury of the battle, and also fatigue ,but she had done for him what she could, and then had sent for violet and her sisters, whom she met on the landing outside of the sick room, and to whom she explained why she had sent for them.

"He is dangerously wounded"she said"and needs the closest watching, and I know of no one who would be as good at it as you are, or as faithful, for I'm called elsewhere to night.The fury of Glandelinian onslaughts being victorious as they report had increased the danger tenfold, and there is no telling where it will end.You and your sisters are safer here than were you where you were.I won't tell you who the wounded general is.You may see for yourselves when you see him.Pray god that he will live as the doctorsbelieve his wounds are mortal."

Th en she gave some minute directions wit h regard to the t reatment of the p tient, who she said was sleeping, and must be allowed to sleep as long as possible.She seemed greatly excited as she talked, and t here was a strange glitter in h er eyes, and occasionally an incoherency in her manner of expressing herself, especially with regard to the sick or wounded general, which made, violet,and her sisters look at u queerly at her, wondering if she were altogether in her right mind.When all had been said which was necessary to say Catherine stood irresolut e as it were looking fixedly at Violet, and her sisters,,then with a sudden upward movement of her arms, she wound them around Jennie'sneck, and kissin g her forehead said;

"God bless you my dearest princesses, and keep you,and all those, whom you love from harm ....."

Th ere were bright red spots upon her cheeks,but the lips which touched Violets and her sisters were as cold as ice as the hand which accidentally brushed Angelines cheek.Angeline suddenly grabbed her hand and said;

"Why Catherine Lee dear, how cold you are, and why do you tremble so.You surely must be ill.Don't go out anywhere this afternoon, there must be plenty of vacant rooms here.I command that you stay and rest yourself.We cannot let you over work yourself.We cann ot let you die too."

She still had one of Catherines cold hands in her own chaffin g and rubbing it as she spoke, but when sh e said so kindly"Catherine dear we cannot let you die;"the girl drew it away suddenly, and bursting into a paroxysm of tears exclaimed;

"Better so, better for me to die, but I won't, but foryou and your sisters oh Princesses you must live--live for the sake of your parents, brothers ad friends--you and your sist rs ---and----oh my friends summon all your strength, and courage on this occassion you will surely need it.Th ere is hard work ahead for you.I will stay h ome here th an and rest as you command, but do you think you can meet the sit uation?"

Violet, and her sisters did not know what Catherine meant, but she was great ly moved and agigetied, and violet,and h er sisters also became so, and shook from head to foot with a nameless terror, that is fearing it was one of t heir loves ones, probably one of their elder brothers who was so dangerously wounded .

"You and your sisters too are cold and trembling, and t hat will never do th at this critical time .Drink this, it won't hurt you."Catherine said; pouring from an army flask which she and every body in the army usually always carried with them a quainity of brandy for each, and offered it to them who t o steady their nerves swallowed it in one draught.The brandy steadied their nerves, and after standing a moment watching Catherine, as she went slowly down the stairs, holdin g to the banister banisters, like one suffering from great phtsicial weakness, they turned tward the door of th the sick room, and violet opening it softly led her sisters in .

It was a large and handsome room(not the room) but it seemed very gloomy and cheerless now, the shades drawn, and only a night lamp and a candle burning on the table, casting weird shadows here and there, and only partially revealing the form upon the bed of a tall young form or man, who lay wit h h is face turned from the light, and half buried in t he pillow. Out side the counter pane one arm and hand were lyingl lying, and violet who alone noticed that observed that the hand was whit e and yet shapely like some one she knew, and noticed too the mass of the light brown, slight curly hair, which clustered aroun d the wounded generals head, and sent an ing indescribable thrill through her veins, as of something familiar.The wounded general was young she knew, though she had not seen her face, and dared not s e it lest she should dist urb him.

"Let him sleep it will do him good."Catherine Lee had said, and n ot for worlds would violet, nor her sisters disobey her.They held a human life in t heir keeping, and with her fin ger on her lips to Tim,-h er sisters having seated themselves by an open window, violet seated herself in an arm chair just where she could see the outlines of the figure upon t he bed, and there for hours she andcher sisters sat and watch ed, and list ened to the irregular breathing, while every kin d of wild fancy danced through her brain and her limbs began at last to feel prickly and numb, and a sense of cold and faintness steal over her.How her sisters felt she was not sure as they said nothing and remained where they were.The air too in the room was very hot and oppressive, though the win dows were opened wide.Out side for some reason or other though it was a late December Afternoon a part of the sky had become as black as ink, but the noise told them the batt le was still raging, added by the occasional thread of some physician, or nurse on duty, or the sound of distant cannon, the n oise of shells exploding and the sound of distant wheels, whose meaning Violet, and even her sisters understood full well, shudding as they thought of the rapid burials which the peril of plague from so many dead soldiers made necessary, and remembering what she and her sisters had read of the battle of Bir Girl Knool, where the de death cary rolled every ten minut es through the company streets, while the dreadful cry was heard;

"Too many to bury.Too many to bury.Burn the dead.It can't be helped burn t he dead or to trench them."The words kept repeating themselves over and over in their minds, all having but a single thought now untilll their brains becam e confused, the present faded away into the far past, and th ey were one of those weary horrified watchers at Bir Girl Knool listening to th e same horrid cry.As they were bringing their own dead out to be buried hastily--was carrying a young boy Prince, whose head drooped upon one of t heir shoulders, while he h is dead face not yet cold touched her a with a caressing motion which brought with it a thought of Penrox Penrc , Penrod, and the horrid lett er which Violet unconsciously still kept.,d she had seen him just to day early in t he morning ride down the company street.It was a horrid night mare and violet herself struggled with it a moment, and then awoke with a cry of Penrod upon her lips--a cry so loud that the sleeper upon the bed stirred a little and moaned, and said somet hing indistinctly, and moved uneasily, and then settled again into slumber, and all was as quiet as ever except the sound of distant batt le.

But the seven Vivian Girls stood erect upon t heir feet, rigid as if they had suddenly changed into stone, and almost as whit e as marble, while their eyes which seemed to Tim to shoot out gleams of angelic fire were turned wildly tward the form lying g so motionless across the room, with the whit e shoe shapely hand still outside the counterpane and the light brown wavy hair upon t he pillow . In deed he had spoken---had called or said several names, which the excited Vivian Girls had recognized as meaning them.They could not be mistaken.In answer to Violets cry for Penrod the fever patient had aroused a lit t le and respon ded;

"Darlin gs of the nation .Penrod is with your Father."

Violet, and her sisters were sure of it."aybe he might have meant somethin g else t oo, but he had said those very words----this man who in Violets dream she and h er sisters had been carryin g to the death cart, and who perhaps might no there when the dreadful day was ended or when morning dawned.There was a clock upon the mantle, and Th ey saw that it was only half past two in the afternoon but it was gett ing like night over their section of the camp which proved a great cloud of smoke was hovering overhead from a big fire somewhere started by the battle.Violet and her sisters knew too that when after all night the late December morning would brea ,vbreak break th ey would then see the face of this stranger, who had called them "Darlings of the nation, and whose voice had sounded familiar too, and whose head and hair to her and h er sisters were so like Fredrick Nance that as they looked with straining eager eyes, and whirling brain, it seemed to them that it must be, and then it seemed as if the vison t emporarily changed and th at it was Penrod himself, shot in the battle and dead, perhaps but still their loving brother Penrod come back to them in some incomprehensible way, and then t o be snatched away again.But they would see him first dist in ctly, dist inctly, would know whr whether it were a phantom or a realit y of Fredrick N ance layin g there upon t he bed within their reach, for Violet herself had advanced a few steps forward, and could have touched the head upon the pillow .

Tim"she said, at last, when she could endure the suspense no longer"TimAnd her voice sounded to herself like the echoe of something a thousand miles away, "Am I going mad----or is that---is that----"and she point ed to the tall form on t he bed Not compreending her in the least, Tim stared at h er, with a great fear that her little mind was really unsettled by all the terrible scenes through which she and her sisters pas h had passed .

"Is it what?"he asked, coming to her side while her sisters now crowded round.

"Bring the light.I and my sisters must see the face of this young man.I cannot wait untill next morning,and neither can they."

"But Princess"in remonstrated,"think of the danger to him. Catherines orders were to let him sleep;he was not to be disturbed."

"N or shall I desturb him Tim dear don't fear, but I and my sisters shall see him.Bring the light."Jennie said herself peremptorily, as she moved t o the other side of the bed with violet, her sisters following, going to the side t ward which the wounded generals face was turned. Carefully pushing down th e pillow, so as to bring the features more distinctly to view, Jennie herself stood for one brief in stant gazing upon them, while Violet herself turning t o Tim whispered;;;;;

"N earer Tim dear; hold the lamp a little nearer please."

"I e obeyed her and as the full rays of the light fell upon the white pinched face of the sleeper, there was near by a terrific shocking crash as if a volcano wit hin this part of the camp had suddenly burst to pieces. Violet threw her arms high up int o the air and in a voice no one would have recognized as hers cried out ;

"I am h it , I'm hit .Catherine Come, Cat h erine come I'm h it .H elp me."

It was a loud wailing cry and the next moment Violet lay across the foot of th e bed almost buried under the wreckage of th e wall that crashed down; where she had fallen being knocked unconscious, while her sisters not that close close had a narrow escape fro from being hit by flying b rocks and a big six by six long piece of timber that came crashing down as the whole ceiling of that section of the room crashed with the wall.Cat herine Lee and even Anna and h er s friends and her sisters were bending over her.Catherine had not left the house at all but had sat below and came hurrying up as quick as possible at the terrible sound of the explosions, and the whole building full of soldiers and officers were aroused and came excit edly up t he stairs wonderin g what had happened. during the excitement a e another great crash followed but not so close.It was feared that Violet had been killed at first but she was not.Great concern t oo was for the wounded general for you could hardly see any trace of the bed so thick was it covered with the wreckage.

Cat herine Lee had found the young general into the previous even ing; and recognized him at once, experiencing such a shock as had set every nerve quivering, and made her feel that at last her own strength was giving way.To save him for violet and her sisters was her great desire; and, with a prayer on her lips, and a prayer in her heart, shewworked as she had never worked before to ally the burning fever of the wounded general, and quiet his dis ordered mind.Once durin g a lucid interval he looked into her face, and knew her. "Cat herin e"h e said faintly"Where is Violet and her sisters.?I came to find them.Penrod sent me to bring them to him.Don't let me die unt ill I have seen them."

"Violet and her sisters are h ere.I will send for them at once.Donot be afraid I will not let you die.Your case is not so very bad."e Catherine had replied, speaking thus emph atically and against her own convictions, because she saw how frightened he was himself, and knew this would oby argument h is condition and , a lessen his chances for recovery.

"Keep very quiet, and I'll soon have you well."she said, and the ge er general did whatever she bade him to do, though his mind began to wander again and he talked constantly of violet, n and her sist ers, whom for Penrods sake he had come to find.At last however he fell away to sleep, and then it was th at Catherine sent for violet and her sisters, and establishing for them the room went out into the adjoining chamber, and waited knowing that sooner or later she would be needed.All t hrough the p v weary hours which preceded th e explosion and violets cry for help, she sat alone in t he darkness, alternately shakin g as if with the cold, and bu rning with the heat of the wrath er, while in her heart was a feeling amounting to certainit y that her work was done for a spell.But she was first determined to save General Nance, ad give him back to the nation and its fair princesses, who though they always loved her might t ink still more kindly of her when she was successful.and thus t h e time passed on intill her quick ear caught the sound of voices and footsteps in t he sickroom, and she heard the great explosion of a shell which rent om fired hit the house and t hen Violets wild cry for her as if in that h our of peril she was the one person in all the world of whom there was need.Violet and her sisters had often turned to her in earlier days as the child turns to its mother in peril, and with swift feet Ch ristian, followed by the three Saunders girls scouts and even Angelinia Arenburg went to the rescue, and almost before Tim who strove to clear off the wreckage from the bed knew she was there, she and the others including violets sisters had cleared the bed and Catherine much bigger bed the unconscious littl e girl in h er arms and was bearing her int o th e room, where for hours she had w i waited so patiently.Fixing her in a safe and upright position upon a cushion, she told her sisters to do what th ey can for her while she ran back also t o Fredrick Nance, who she knew too for t he sake of violet and her sisters must be h er first and principal care.

When the explosion came and threw wreckage on the bed and knocked violet out ad the sound of th e explosion echoed through the room, he had roused from his sleep, and was moaning and talking to himself without apparen ly apparently any real consciousness as to where he really was.But Catherin es soothing hands, and the medicine she administered quieted him, and leaving him in Tims care, she went back to viol t, who with the h lp of her sisters was recovering her senses.

"Tell me"she gasped, whenshe was able to speak and it was found t h at she was only hit by a piece of brick and not hardly injured at all(thank God) "Was it a dream or was it general Nance.Tell me Catherine dear is it th e general and will he die. "

"It is general N ance"Cat herine replied"saved from the bloody bath lefield; I know not how, only that he is h ere, that h e came seeking for you as your brother Penrod learning you were here sent you, but he is wounded, and I found h im in fever and pain late yest erday afternoon , and did for him what I could.

Then thinkin g of him to day I sent for you, ad t he restbyou know.Only be quiet now.I know his o is one of your dearest friends.I do ot think he will die.I l know you love him too."

"Oh , save him, save him"and you shall have my love more thanever and forever. We will reward you handsomely if you save him."Jean ie herself cried with shocking sobs, as she a princess mind you knl knelt at Catherines feet, and clasped the hem of her dress.

"Get up Jean ie get up"said Cat herine."It is I who should kneel to you. I will do what I can with the help of God. I must go to him now for what I do must be done quickly.A few hours later and it will be too late.I'm only h oping he ain't further injured.I had the bed moved to a another room as he safe th ere now."

So they went together to t he new sickroom where the general lay with his face turned more fully to th e light, ad showing dist inctly how pinched and pallid it was.H ad the very lives of violet and her sisters depended on it, they could not have bent foreborn going up to him and softly kissing his pale forehead, then they knelt down beside him, and violet so close to him t hat her golden curls touched the smaller curls of light brown as she buried herface in her hands, and Catherine knew that she and her sisters were praying earnestly, that he might be spared to them and his nation.At last just as the clock struck three thirty, there were voices in th e hall and h e moved as if about to awaken, and then Cat herine looking out the open door saw some one pass, and with a quick imperative movement of her hand Catherine bade "Violet and her sisters step beh ind h er saying as she did so "He must not see you yet .I saw him pass.Let him be surprised.It was Penrod.Keep out of his sight till I tell you to show yourselves.It will be a good surprise and a happy one for you too."

Surprised but obedient violet and her sisters crouched upon the darkest part of the floor, close beside the bed but out of sight , and waited with a throbbing heart for the moment when they might speak to Penrod once again.Too general Nance was better, the long sleep and proper care h ad done him good, but there was a drowsiness over his still and he still slept on .

Then followed by some of his boyscout rat ainet o retainers a very classy dressed boyscout came walking quietly in with hats removed. Seeing Catherine Lee he said;

"You are sure good to us all to save the general."

She nodded politely as she offered the wounded man and the draught which he took, and t hen he slept again this time quietly and sweetly as a child

Penrod standin g beside Catherine watching him, while violet and h er sisters sat upon the floor fearing in t heir eagerness to move or stir lest they should att ract his attention too soon.Slowly the minut s dragged on.The heavy firing had ceased, the dense fog of smoke had lift ed.

"The battle had stopped thank God."Cat herine murmured, while violet and her sisters too who whispered"Thank God.Thank God."

The general too must have felt the change from the sudden quiet for he breath ed more naturally and there came a faint color to his lips.

"You sure did good work"Penrod said to Catherine again."You have saved his life and I thank you, but for you so good a general would have died when the dreaded wounds were afflict ed on him.H ow long h as he been h ere, and wh re are my sisters?I heard they were in camp here?"

"Your praises to me are worthless"said Cat herine."It was they who saved his life."

"My sisters saved his life you say. What thought you----"

"I know where they were and called them when I found the general wounded. They have been in t his place nearly all day."

"In this place, in t his dangerous zon e.Were they in that room where th e wall was shaken out by the concussion of the camp gone shell high in th e air above this place?"

"Yes, and neitone of them was injured though Violet was knocked senseless."

"Well "he said"even if they are my sisters"They must be the most game lit tle girls that I have ever known of.I thought they had remained in penrad Arenburgs army after I left. But thank God they have come here as they'll be safer.But are my dear sisters in this room now.?I don't see them."

As the tones of the voice, Violet,and her sisters had never expected to hear again fell upon t h eir ears, Violet, and her sisters could no longer res- t rain th emselves, but one by one sprang up(pop), they to his evident surprise and delight stood before h im and said;

"I and my sisters are here Penrod dear----my lov----my da dear da ring brother- and we hope with th e help of God that nothing shall part us never again. Th rough this good girlscout here we escaped to this part of the line and our secret enemies do not know where to find us."

There was then a lot of fond greeting after this, and wi v while Jenn ie was still caressing his face and kissing h im passionately she said;

"Oh Penrod dear, we all thought you were dead, and it broke our h earts for after you had left us for our sakes to draw off the danger we loved you all the more, a n and we th en through Cat herine found it out we must l ove for the sh elter of emperor Vivians army before it is too late,and all the time we mourned for you so much, and all the brightness went out from our lives, but it will come back with you my daring brother, our dear darling brother."

Her tears were falling like rain, and her voice was choked with sobs, as sh e for herself and sisters made this avowal of their love, without a shadow of shame.Penrod was theirs.Nothing could change that, or his love for them.She and her sistersindeed were as sure of him as they were that they breathed and they had no hesitancy in pouringout th e full measure of their affection for him.All the others had stolen from the room at Catherines command who at the beckoning beckon of Penrod had remained, leaving the brother and his sisters alone in that first blissful moment of their reun ion.For a time Penrod stood perfectly still and took th eir caresses and kisses in silence. Then summoning all his strength , he woul wound his arms around Jenn ie and Violet, and hugging them close to him whispered as he looked strange and very puzzled;

"Heaven can scarcely be better than t his.Oh sisters, my darlings.My little angel nets.But how came you to me with such strange stirring n ews.I killed. And you grieving over it.I never even was so much as injured the slightest bit.What happened that made you hear such strange news to me.?"

"We got the letter of your death to one of t from one of the officers"said Catherine handing him it for she still carried it. H e sat down by the window and glanced over it and read it twice.At first he was dumbfounded and badly puzzled, and t hen he began to wonder."

"H attie Kauffmann told us two days ago that you were at dead and when we showed h er the letter"continued Daisy"she said one of us unwitt ingly must have loaned one of your uniforms to a boyscout.She believes he was the one killed, and because he had your uniform on, it was believed it was you."

"It can be possible "said Penrod in answer "That some boys can also look almost or absolutely like me.But one thing I believe that makes me think I know the cause of this letter.I did or ----say Tim"he said beckoning to th e boyscout who came suddenly in the door way, and not seeming at all surprised at seeing Penrod(h e wasn't because h e had found him sooner than this and told him h is sisters were in camp) "You sent a boyscout once from General Archburgs army to Angelinia Agathia.I found one of my good but yet t emporarily cast off uniforms missing .Did you give him one of t hem."

"Why Prince--to-t -hink of it--I did.You said he could have it."

"Humph .That must explain it then .H ave you ever h eard from h im since."

"I heard from the authorities I wrote to that he is long overdue and th ey asked me to sent some one else"said Tim.Why?"

"Do you remember h is name?"

"I'm sorry Penrod my friend but I don't ."

"Do you remember the name of the officer who sent for h im at Angelinia Agathia."

"General Goodnow."

"I'll see thiscolonel then who wrote this letter to my sisters""exclaimed Penrod.It is from this camp that this letter came from. "H e looked at the letter and the name and at once dispatched a man for the col colon el while he told Catherine to t ke take care of the wounded general, and told his sisters meekly to follow him where he went and Tim too.

"Why what is wrong about this? "inquired Tim with a puzzled look.

"Nothing exact ly wrong,"Answered Penrod"but it seems to me that the boy you loaned my uniform too was the one killed, and which may explain t his letter. It is at range though a person would not make sure though before writing lett ers to my sisters or any one like this.They should never jump at conclusions for Heaven knows nearly everybody ought to know my face and features by this time.I'm glad that my fath er never heard of my death while I was with him or there surely would have been somebody in hot water."

Penrod was upset by this news indeed, and violet and her sisters s aq saw it, and as they went on with him Violet said;

"Don't let the false news upset you so much Penrod dear.Later on we can h ear it all---where you have been since you were forced for our sakes to leave us and why you are not dead, thanks be to he to God.Oh Penrod dear it was so horrible--everythin g which has happend to us, since you were forced to go away from us.The Glandelinians treated us as if we are "Nobodies----N obodies--- Penrod dear--as if we had no name, no right to be born.Did they tell you Penrod dear.ju you know how and what the Glandelinians were trying to make out as to who we are, and what we are not."?

"Yes they told me curse those Glandelin inn generals.I know poor dear little sisters and we'll make the enemy atone"Penrod replied with a tight er clasp of each hand of two of his sis sisters who walked on each side of him.She and neither did her sisters ask Penrod if they would be safer h ere.She knew they would.Since their experience with Penrod and knowing his ways and what he had learned from him they always felt sure of Penrod, he was their brother forever, and the old joy began to come back, and the old light sparkled in their eyes, which in violets shone like stars as she went on;

"It was so dre adful when we w found it out, and it doubled our misery, because you were dead, or we thought you were, and I used to whisper to you in t h e darn dark nights, when I nor my sisters could not sleep, and we thought maybe you would come in spirit and let me and my sisters know in some way that you were sorry for us.Where were you Penrod dear when I was want ing you so much ."

"All that time within t his lines and I wrot e and wrote and didn't get any answer, but I cannot tell you much now untill I fou find o out about this" l tter letter"said Penrod knowing himself that he must do this to find out what caused the blunder and who was killed that represent ed him either in locks or his own uniform, but now he determined he would never leave them or let them leave him again if possible, he wanted them al always beside and with him, where h e could look into their faces, and beaming eyes which always dazzled and bewildered him with their holy brightness which he loved so well.They were on horses now, and he conducted them to his own tent , saying;

"As soon as we get t he situation settled about this letter we'll head for fathers headquarters.H e knows you're here and is expecting you.,nd so is brothers James and germaine there."

They soon reached the tent and he ushered them in first and then Tim and then went in himself.

It was some minutes of waiting and violet and her sisters sat by him and around him all that time Jenn ie often placing her arm around him and occass ionally murmuring;

"Dear Penrod---and r and also my sisters are so glad----so happy.We hope nothing will ever trouble us again .

"Not even the wicked Manleys."Penrod answered, wit h his old good natured yet sligh tly teasing smile, which made him so like the Penrod of other days that Jennie and even her sisters laughed aloud and Jennie shakin g her h ead gayly;said;!!!!!!!!!

""No not even the biggest and worst of the Glandelinian armies when you are around cah ever worry me again.Oh Penrod, Penrod I have repented so bitterly and so have my sisters of ever trusting even any of the Glandelinians of bein g so overconfident, and I or my sisters shall, never, never be so any more--shall never be foolish or reckless or indulge in too much risky work. I wish we could make you understand how changed we are, for I see you do not quit e believe me."

N or did he, though he smiled lovingly upon her and h er sisters and lifting his hthad hand smoothed her fair roun dch e cheek, where her blushes w re were burning so brightly.H e knew th at through the work of the possession angels his darling sisters could not change their nature if they wanted no to no matter how hard they tried any more than the leopard can change his spots and own nature--something told him t oo that they'll suffer lots more cruel events yet but also that in due time the enemy will be wishing that Violet and her sisters had been left alone--for he knew he could even see it now that they would be the same little wilful imperious girls against the foe which she and her sisters had always beened d defying the most dangerous of the Glandelinian generals and setting at naught anyt hing they would strive to do.And he would not have them otherwise if he could; they were little angelic heroines to him, the bravest little girl s he had ever knew, he should not know them if th e the claws were always sheathed, and they were after this avoiding the enemy.To all God loving creatures t hey were gentle and sweet but the enemy knew them well now.Loving and true to their countryland God they would always be more and more he knew that.But

But he did not tell them so, he did not tell them anything, he only looked his love and happiness through hiseyes, which rested constantly upon their faces as he now almost waited impatiently for the coming of the colonel un till at last that became to him as somethin g seen through a mist not altogather real, and he imagined he was seeing th e faces of their guardian angels instead.

The colon el fin ally arived and was ushered into the tent. looking dreadfully surprised and after saluting Penrod stood there as if he was really looking at a spirt a spirit coming from Heaven to violet and her sisters to cheer them up.H e would hav have ran out in fright but Violet and her sisters laughingly but almost forcibly detained him saying; "Don't be scared Colonel.It is not a spirit.Penrod wants to know how you came to write to us that he was dead.Come back."

At their coaxing however he recovered himself and when Penrod finally asked; "How come you write that I was dead.?"

The man for a full moment could not find voice tovanswer and t hen he said; "Why wasn't that you т found lying mortally wounded on the battle field. He looked like you, he had let ters in his pocket written from you to your sisters dated half a month or more ago and he had on your uniform.H e was on his way to Angelinia Ag athia with a message and he fell."

"This solves the mys tery"said Penod turning to Tim."but evidently if h e looked like me it wasn't the boy you sent to Angelinia Agathia.Or did he resemble me any way Tim?"

"No Penrod, he was even bigger than you by a few inches, and he h ad dark brown eyes while your's are sky blue.H is hair was black while yours are also t he same color as your sisters.It couldn't then even be the boy you know I sent for I took good care to see that not hing was left in the pockets of the uniform which you handed me to give him.every pocket was clear."

"Then there is another mystery there"said Penrod."I did miss an extra uniform besides the one т gave to you for the boy and letters too. I a k asked many but they knew nothing about it.I thought Father then took it to have it cleaned, but he told me he had not seen it.what did you do with the letters Colonel?"

"They are still in my possession."

"But why did you writ e that letter to my sisters.? "

"What let ter?"

"What let ter"echoed Penrod now standing up suddenly:"no you mean sir you are totally ignorant of that let ter."

"I wrote no letter to the Princesses.The generals warned me to investigate first and make sure whether you was really did or not .Then after that it slipped my mind and т never wrote a let ter."

Violet and her sisters looked at each ot her in a puzzled mann er while Penrod examined the handwriting of the letter.

"Are you positive Colonel"He said again"that you did not write t his letter?"

"Let me see it will you Prince?"

Penrod handed it over and the colonel said;

"This letter was writt en by a boyscout who accompanied the boy who was killed"said the Colonel."He too died a few days later as he too was wounded. H e was a colon el of boyscout s and thought the dead boy was you."

"did not any of you little girls give a boyscout resembling me c no of my uniforms?"Penrod asked of his sisters.

"No Penrod dear.We even never met one."

"I m suspicious"said Penrod."I'm afraid it was another one who was duplicating me and might have been a spy and got killed while decieving the other boy. I'll look into this.You may go colonel. "

"But Colonel"said violet "Bring us what he had in th e coat or bring the uniform too.We'll investigate too and find out who he was" and Jenn ie looked queer for she was thinking of Fredrick Lowden but Catherine who read what she thought said;

"It couldn't possibly be Jenn ie dear.But if he was killed it'll be an example to his followers for vengeance should surely be overtaking him for what he did to you.But I doubt if it is he ."

So absorbed had violet and her sisters been with Penrod and this incident that t hey had failed to not ice anything, which was passing r around them outside, or to think of anythin g else except their great new found happiness and excit ing advent ure now to start .They too were suspicious that a boy spy disguised as Penrod, foll fooled one of the christian boyscouts, and gett ing too near the battle field was smitten down with h is companion.and too they remembered that just now their boyscout aidecamp Pierre had brought them milk and rolls, which he had managed to find somewhere, near, he said and which he had them to eat.H e had also given them some advice whi with regard to stay for their sakes and keep Penrod their brother close wit h them and they would need him, saying that Catherine Lee had saying that Catherin e Lee bade him do so, and to say that the dear Vivian Girl Princesses must be very particular not to forgot.And Violet and h er sisters had not forgotten that ,,, though all else was a blank to her and her siet rs untill Penrod was now very st ill examining the letter again again , while they sat very still watching him, and wondering by what strange chance he had been with father all the time and that God had been so good as to restore him to them and that h e had not even been injured.

Then asthey heard the co clock inside the ten strike six oclock they began to think how fast the hours had passed, and to wonder a little at Catherline L ees prolonged absence from the tent.And still that did not surprise them so much, for they naturally supposed she had gone to some ot her poor wounded soldier, where she was needed more than with general Nance who would now recover.

"There is a great deal of good in h er"said Violet to Jennie in a whisper; "And we must always be as kin d to her as sh e hasxbeen to us, and because for what she has done for us even now and at general Aronburgs headquarters. " and Jenn ie nodded, and she felt glad all over, and for a minut e or so all the bitterness and resentment against the foe were all gone, and t hat although she could not think Cat herin e Lee could ever accomplish too much;.

"If she ever happens to get wounded we will take care of her and Penrod will too."Jenn ie said in answer."I wish we could have her staywith us but she can't she is so busy and she was one of our old time loving playmates. We would like to invite her some day."and then their minds were busy with good out looks for the future, when Pierre looked in again, even to the surprise of P nrod who suddenly looked up, and then he shut th e tent door flaps again and went out before either violet and her sisters or Penrod could ask him a question.

But in the glimpse Jenn ie got of him it seemed to her then there was an unusal look of concern upon his once cheerful face, while outside in the company street she and her sisters caught a faint sound of voice in the distance, and footsteps he hurring here and there.

What was it?What was the trouble?"Violet and her sisters even th ought to themselves, and e felt tempted to go out and see, but just then Penrod was keeping his attention to them and they would not free them-selves willingly from him .So they still sat on till the clock struck six thirty, and the hum of voices was occassionaly born to their ears a litt le closer on t he company st reet outside..There was somebody outside in the company street besides their aide-decamp--some new wounded soldier perhaps, too judging by the sounds, and they grew so nervous at last and so upset and fearsome upon thr subject, that one of them excusin g herself softly bade her sisters to remain untill s e came back with information and was about to leave th e tent when th e aidedecamp looked in again, and this time Violet, and her sisters could n ot be mistaken with regard to the expression on h is face,,,, which was very pale and yet troubled, as it looked wistfully at them.

"what is it Pierre? "Violet asked in a whisper, going close to h im and observing that he stood against the door as if to keep h er or even her sisters from passing.Whose voices in conversation do I and my sisters too hear outside, and is any one wounded that we love well?I and my sisters int ended coming to ascertain.Let me pass please ..... "

"No, no Princess.Please don't come.He said surely you or your sisters were not to know.We are doing all we can for him"Pierre cried in great alarm thus letting out the secret accidentally which he had been told to keep.

"Do all you can for him ? For whom? Who is it that is wounded now, ad said I must not know?"Violet asked, asxshe put the boy scout asside,, and opening th e t ent door drew him with her out o into the company street .."Now tell me the truth "she cont inued."Is son some on e wounded, whom I and my sisters ought to see?Is it one of our big brothers? ""OO

"No is it in it isn""he answered hardly able to sp ak and not pronouncin g the words correctly.

"Is it Catherline Lee."

"Yes"he answered sadly"It is Cat herine Lee, and she is badly wounded. Sh e will die the doctor fears, but she said you or your sisters must not know.You must n ot leave your brother for h er and she sent me many times to even see how Fred Nance was."

"How did she get wounded.?She didn't go near the battle?"

"No .she caught two spies ransacking her h eadquarters and they shot h er."

"My God.and did they escape?"

"N o they were shot down while leaving the building by her orderl . Pierre was right for in a small room in her own h eadquarters Catherine Lee was believed to be dying.she who had also braved so much for violet and her sisters,,, and passed through so many dangerlus & dangerous adventures unscathed and had been a terrible scourge to the enemy, had been wounded by two spies. .Yet he was fighting for her life.

"I must not give up yet,I must endure and bear untill they are out of t his mysterous danger."she thought to herself after she was wounded and her orderly had ran out to get the spies, and she fought down with a desperate courage and iron will the horrid sensations stealing over her so fast after she tried herself to stop the bleeding of her wounds and makin g her somet imes almost beside herself with dizziness and lanqucur.But when she felt sure th e crisis was past and she felt sure with the coming of Penrod violet and sh r sisters were safe, she could endure it no longer, and with one lingering looke look at violet and her sisters, whom she felt she should never see again ,she telling them not hing of being woun ded had started for her own lodgings.

"If I do I can die there alone, and no one will trouble me but oh God if it is Thy will let me live for th eir sake."

she prayed as she made her way to the stair case, while her orderly elsewhere after having killed the spies in the mad ch ase had looked ever where for herBut on the first landing her strength failed her, and she fell down upon th e floor, where she lay for a minut e and then finally brought herself up to a sitting posture in a half upright position, leav leaning against the wall with her face in her hands, untilll a voice roused her, and she looked up to see a soldier standing before her w h er one of the sentries of the house, and asking who she was and why she was there in such a position .It was one of the inside general guard officers of her headquarters who had first went through the rooms below where everythin g was as he had left it , and th en started to asc n ascend th e stairs to the chamber above, where he came upon Catherin e Lee, who h whom he had often seen on her errands of charity and mercy but whom he did not recognize unt illl she looked up and spoke to h im. Then he knew her and exclaimed;

"Catherine lee, friend of the Princesses.What are you doing here and what is the matter of you."?

"I am shot, shot by spies in my headquarters two hours ago."she replied. H e was mortally afraid for her condit ion, and helping her to th e nearest room where there was a bed, s he started for an army surgeon.Meeting in t he lower hall with Pierre, who had been out for something he wished to obtain from V for violet and her sisters from Cat herine, and who exclaimed to h im what had happened he told him of Catherine Lee an where she was, bidding him t o look after h er untill help came from some other quarter. Pierre for a moment over the news was too sick to move to even do something and finally he did however.He was afraid by the looks of the wound which one of the bi girlsccuts was now attending to that Catherine was past all human aid.She had been shot in t wo bad spots, one in the lower section of the shoulder and a bullet had gone through her chest dangerously near the heart. and she herself too feared that she would not live to see another sunset .he was very calm however, and only anxious for violet and her sisters and th eir brother Penrod.

"They must not be disturbed--they surely must not be told."she said to Pierre to whom she gave some orders concerning General Nances medicines, which Pierre took to his little mistresses.

"Don't tell them I am mortally wounded, don't please don't let them know untill I am dead.Then t ell her if it was God's will I go, th at I was glad then t o die for th eir sakes, though too it was better if I live for their sakes.T ell them too after I'm dead that I loved them so much."she said to pierre, who hlf distracted wit h all he was passing through wrung his hands nervously and promised all she required if possible.But when violet, and her sisters also began tc suspect, and insisted upon knowing knowing t he truth , he was forced to tell Violet, adding as he saw her about tc dart away from h im t ward Catherines h eadquarters;

"You better not go there princess---she does not need you now.One of th e good Sisters is with her, and Cat herine said you must stay with Penrod and your sisters.All her anxiety is for you, your brot her and them--- non e for herself only she wishes to live for your sake if it is God 's will. sh e seems so glad to die."

He might have as well talked to the wall for all the head violet gave h im.Bid ding him keep vic her sisters with Penrod untill she sent for th em, and have Penrod too come for h er if she was needed she mount ed her horse in a h urry without taking time to saddle it to th e surprise of the orderly in charge of the horses an and galloped away to the place and then went quickly int o the room where Cat herine Lee lay with apparent death stamped on every part of her face, but wit h a calm peaceful expression on it which told that if it was Gods will then t co she could be glad for the end so fast approaching.

When Violet entered, her eyes were closed, but they opeed opened quickly and a smile of joy and surprise broke over h er young face, when Violet exclaimed with grief in her voice;

"Oh Catherine, you are wounded, and foolishly you did not let me and my sisters know it or we should have come before."

For an instant Catherines lips quivered in a pitiful kind of way, then the great t ears rolled down her cheeks as she whispered faint ly;

"I am wounded, t wo spies shot me---I or at least the doctor believes I am dying and won't see another sunset, but I did not want---you---you---and your sisters to kn ow.I wished to spare you your sisters---and---and--your brother.H ow is Fred Nance n ow?"

Violet explained that he was sleeping quietly, and she believed all danger had passed.Then sitting down to th e bedside, she took the hot burning hads in hers and rubbed and bathed them carefully and gent ly as if they had belonged to one of her sisters instead of her friend Catherine, and as she saw the wounds on examing the bloody bandages she felt bitter and resent ful tward the Glandelinians again . All to her was gone now if she was to lose this dear friend who had helped her and her sisters so much, and she was conscious also of a strange feeling stirring within her as she sae sat and met the dying eyes fixed upon her with so much yearing tenderness and love . This girlscout wasxone of her best friends.Nothing n ow could change th at, and she had been even as Angelinia Aronburg said one of the best and most reliable girlscouts in the world.Not only would her death be a blow to the nation, but to Violet,and her sisters who loved her as if she was one of th eir sisters.

As the dim eyes met hers so constantly and appealingly Violet bent close to the pillow and said;

"Catherine dear I am sorry t his happened but try to buck up if you can. Angeline my sister was before the battle of Evangeline St Claire wounded worse than you were and nobody had hopes for her recovery and you know you saved her. You must not die.I and my sisters wit h Gods help will pull you t h rough . Live for us if you can."

A lowepit iful cry, was Catherines only answer for a moment ad the then she said;;;

"I'm ar afraid I cann ot live, the wrong was all my own for trying to stop those two spies when they had the drop on me anyway.But oh Violet m y dearest friend, you can never kn ow how I was even decieved by the enemy or h ow wholly I trusted one boy scout who was supposed to have accompand me whom I even loved so much , and then after I discovered your peril I had to go on at any risk to save you and your sisters when Penrod went away. There was no ether way or the Glandelinian spy agents would have got you. Th ese two were searching for you and were in my headquarters for the purpose of locating you there.H e wo They would have murdered me if it had not been for the ord orderly who opened fire on them after they shot me.Oh Darlings of the nation.Oh Darlings of the Nation, and Violet you will not mind if I say Jann ie vivian is my dearest friend for she h as been all the world t o me.Tell her so Violet I know how you and your sisters love her, and tell her and every one even poor little Jann ie who is with you here too, tell them I blessed them with my last breath and loved them with all my strength ad soul and might, next to God and His Blessed Mother .You are all so sweet, so good, scvtrue, and Penrod who couldn't love h im.And what h e has even done for you and your sisters.God bless you all and make you perfectly happy."

During t his conversation, which was carried on in english, t he Sister whom the surgeon had sent to attend Catherine stood looking on wonderingly and very respect fully, and never dreaming of the friendship almost akin to sister hood between the two. She was however anxious less so much talking and excitement should be injurious to her patient but was afraid to interrupt when she was it Violet emperor vivians daughter but she finally summoned nerve and said so to violet who replied;

"You are s right Sist er dear.I should try t o quiet her now. Th is room---is number IO I see.I am a little girl it is true but I know as much nursing as a woman n urse does.If you will be so kind as to look after the young genral in his own headquarters general Fredrick N ance, I will stay with Cath erine, and please notify my sisters I am here and tell them and Penrod to come in a hurry and Tim too.Get Angelinia Aronburg. I will say with Catherine. She wishes me to.she was my sisters Angelines' little girlscout Nurse at Trinoque when Angeline was hovering between life and death.Between me and my sisters I believe we can save her.I knew her---her--"Violet hesitated a moment and then added;

"If you can find her with my sisters sent little Jannie here.she was talking of her to me."

Th is catisfied the Holy Sister who knew she must obey Violet, who bowing assen assent went from the room, leaving the two alone. For a time Cath erine lay perfectly still with her eyes closed, but h er lips were const ant ly moving,,,, and violet knew th at she was praying, for she caught the words;
"Protect Violet and her sisters Dearest God for my sake, and Dearest Jesus who saved many ch sh ild them from the enemy and make P n Penrod th eir best and most successful protector.Amen." And all the while Violet held t he hot hand in hers, and occassionally smoothed the black hair back from the pale brown brow but violet noticed that there was so sweat on her brow no sweat of death and this made h r her hope she would surviv e. A little later her sisters and Penrod came in with little Jann ie the latter who was weeping over the news and Violets sisters though tearful too trying to cheer her.As they slowly and quietly came in Catherine opened her eyes and looked fixedly at them, and violet said to h er very gently;;;
"What is it.Do you wish to tell me something.?"
"Yes "the wounded girlscout answered faint ly, ."I hope if I die that my soul can watch over you and your sisters in spirit like I did before for otherwise with you in dager I believe r cannot even rest beyond the grave.All the time the danger face d you and your sisters I used to pray so much in the tent and in your headquarters when I was alone--pray sometimes all night with my face on the cold floor.At first it seemed the relief for you Princesses I asked would not come.There was always a horror of the danger before me, untill after you fled at my urgent advice and then I came here, when th e danger had been passing, and now there is for you safty and joy, for I feel that God has readily answered my prayer, and t hat Penrod your dear brother is alive and safe.I'd love to live on for you and your sisters but if I do not then H eaven will be wait ing for me."
She talked but little after that and when she did speak her mind was wondering or wandering in to the past, now at Angelinia Arathia when she and the t hen smaller Vivian Girls played together, now in Gertrude Angeline cit y, and then at Evangeline St Claire where she watched in secretyby Angelines bedside at night, but mostly of good times in th e past.Then she talked of Angelinia Arenburg and litt le Jannie unlill her voice was only a whisper, and thos in the room could not distinguish r word.
But if thin gs were not absolutely hopeless violet or any of her sisters by a certain skill of their own always knew h ow to save a dying person and they th erefore worked on her for hours while Penrod helped where h e could.
. H ow long they were there nobody knows but night passed, they had had no supper but kept continual watch, ad just before sun rise they noticed that Catherine was awake a little and violet bent over h er and kissing her softly, whispered;
Cat herine dear, do you know that r and my sisters, little Jann ie and Penrod are h ere--your dear friends."?
"Yes,yes"she gasped and a look of unutterable love and satisfact ion shone in the eyes which looked up at Violet."I kn ow you are Violet, and that your sisters and brother and friend is here and you kissed me and called me dearyCatherine.God bless you Violet dearest, and your sisters too and make you all very happy.I will be glad for your sake if you do save me.
She then to the gratificat ion fell int o the sleep which they had so ardently strove to bring on her, and though it was an hour or more before violet loosed her hold of the little hand which clung so tightly to hers smoothed th e bedcloth c bed clothes and then going out with the rest t old him that Catherin e Catherine would live. Catherine Lee was not mortally wounded and there was great rejoicing for her recovery throughout the encampment and everywhere else later where ever she was so well known, and we where h er kindness and gentleness and courage had won h er so many countless friends many or all of whom prayed frequently for her speedy recovery. But toothey looked upon violet and her sisters as little angels come down from Heaven .
T hey had saved her, cheat ed t he Glandelinians of another child victim, and every respect which it was possible under th e circumstances to pay them was paid to them . Many Gathered about Violet and her sisters and at t heir questioning Violet said;
"Oh it was nothing.We're not supernatural.she nursed my sister Angeline when she was wounded at Evangeline St Claire, and so it was our turn to take good care of her. Don't make it seem as if we worked a miracle for we didit ."
Ad indeed to violet and her sisters it was a pleasure, thus to care for the brave girlscout who had done so much for them and Penrod, and who t hey felt was true t ruly as good as they any day.
"I am glad we knew her some years before the war and played with her so often--glad we called her --sister for she was like one"she thought and was conscious of a keen pain in her h eart when she knew how it would been have been had Cat Catherine died.Ad therefore notwithst anding the heat she and her sisters had remained with Catherine all that night and they had refused to leave untill they had been sure she was out of danger.Th en t hey had gone out , and seeing Pierre had gone back to the building where they had left Fredrick Nance, and then advised to do so by Penrod Violet sisters went to bed to get some sleep while violet laid her t ired head upon the bed of her own and slept for nearlyall that day and nigh t too and so did her sisters.The next morning before breakfast she told Penrod all the particulars of how Cath erine had been wounded and what happened to the spies.

"There was much that was noble and good in Catherine"she said"and she must live for us."
"Yes"Penrod answered her"I am sure you would;; it is better for you, your sisters and even me that she will live.God knows we need her and need her badly.She was your little guardian angel."
And Penrod was right for had Cat herine died th e result would not only be a source of unhappiness to violet and her sisters but also they would have been in far greater danger than usual and maybe be destroyed too.God knows best, and he saved to them the brave hearted girlscout, who had done more t han anybody else for violet and her sisters, and whose memory forever would be held in the heart s of all those whose lives also she had been instrumental in saving as the memory of a little angel come down from heaven.
P n Penrods in vestigations howev er brought good result s the next day.
As good luck would have it even the boyscout who had been reported t o be Penrod dead, did not die even himself.He was found in one of the army base hospit als recovering from dangerous wounds and he had turned out to to be one of the christian boyscouts ad not any one which at first Penrod had beensuspicious of.The letters which had been found in his possession had been there wit hout his kn owledge as they had been in an inside pocket which Tim had not thought of looking int o.He did not tell his story to Violet and her sisters and Penrod untill two days after he was discovered, for Neither violet nor her sisters and even Penrod would not listen to him unt ill t hey felt he was past all possible danger of relaspe.Then they sitting by his be dside heard how he had escaped from death on that dreadful day when a shell had laid him his friend, and a score of soldiers low, and he found himself struggling as best as he could to save his life from the danger before it was late;
"My friend wrote you"he said believing you Prince , was me or rather believing
I was you as in a little measure I do as you see resemble you.H e told you little princesses how the accident occured, but I suppose he did not tell h ow for hours we clung to the bottom of a ravine, which the battle surged back and forth above us.My wounds bled and pained me dreadfully ad for a time I kept up brave it, though at first believing I had lost all else
I was afraid I would not have a chance to live.Then too I remembered my mother, who would mourn for me and made every possible exert ion to hold on while my friend tried to relieve e me and bandg bade ged the wounds and stopped the bleeding as best as he could.And too when I first fell I struck my head just over the temple o on a rock and I know now that the blow was of itself almost suffucient en ough to cause my deathI was what they call somewhat but temporarily shell shocked too, and I felt stunned and bewildered and from the condition of my wounds my stren th was fa fast failing me when th e battle overh ad seemed to have gone on beyond somewhere and my friend bade me tried to reach t he christian lines and that he would help me.I remember getting out of the ravin e, and then crawling along the ground to keep from being seen by the foe, and then while I tried to change my positio position my two feet was caught in something, which when I could not go ahead stopped me where there was danger of me or my friend being hit by shells any minute.However nevertheless what held my feet proved my salvation instead of my peril for had I gone on I would have crawled into line of a severe cross fire if rifles from both sides opening heavily at each other at long range, and therefore I clung to my position desper ately, while I saw a wave of troops go by in a little distance ad then f ade away in a cloud of smoke.T h ey were Glandelinians heading for a charge tward the christian lines and as long as I can remember I never saw one of them return.My companion seeing me lay on the groun d so still naturally supposed I was dead.Indeed
I do not know myself how I was sav d or had the strength to endure the horrors of that dreadful full long night on the battle field, and held to my frail support as I did.At last daylight broke over the battlefield , and a s a small ambulance party looking for wounded passed near me.I had then no power to signal them my arms were so cramp and numb, but one of the stretcher bearers spied me and the party came to my rescue .

How they got me back to the christian lines and under shell fire at th at I do not know, for all sense forsook me from the moment I felt a hand laid upon my shoulders, and when next I awoke to a consciousness of anything, I was lying in a bed, and a dark foriegn like face was bending over me speaispeaking in a language which I could not make out or understand but I believe it was spanish. But the voice was kind even for a foriegner which which mostly now adays we do not trust and he face a good natured one and I remember that I should be cared for untill he placed or had me placed in a base hospit al where I coul could make myself understood, untill finally I discovered I was in a base hospit al, and the stranger was a doctor or surgeon, for many came even from other nations to attend to us who are wounded in battle as our nation has not ehe enough of doctors . My head and leg wound was paining me most dreadfully and will be probably the cause of the weeks and mont hs that I will be comppelled to remain here. I thought also I had taken a frightful cold for a burnin g fever had set in and the doctor finally got some on e to tell me that for two days I raved as if I was attttddtt a maddog they told me that afterwards, and said I made several attempts to throw myself into a furnace. If that was the way I sure must have been out of my head for I remember nothing since or that I was doing anything. It was useless at first for the doctors to ask me anything as their language was gibberish to me and the other wounded soldiers, as mine was to them. But one word they learned perfectly--I don't know why but it was on my lips constant ly--and that was your name Prince. No matter what they said to me as other patients told me afterwards I always always answered Penrod untill every officer and common soldier in bed in that ward of misery knew the name and believed I was you, though they little dreamed that any one had wrote to your sisters my dear Prince that you were dead."

"Oh and my poor brother Penrod" Violet cried with streaming eyes "Ad all the time we were mourning for you, thinki ng you were dead, and was so sorry and blamed ourselves bitterly for allowing you to go away. And here is your near likeless likenessxwho was wounded with your uniform on and my letters in on pocket. Who can ever forgive the enemy for all God and the nation and we have to suffer."

Penrods answer not given in words was quit e satisfactorily, and then the wounded boyscout went on ;

"They thought at last that I must be you Prince, ad tried to get me to give the ad r address of your sisters or where their headquarters were but I did not know and insisted I was not Penrod, but they still thought I was out of my head and wound not believe me. They told me that the b ttle was rather a long one and too severe even for such a war as this one, that the foe was winn ing owing to averse conditions, and the bad condition of the christian front at the sector where I fell, but I finally heard the enemy were giving way at last. Some Angelinian generals were called in to see me but these could get no satisfaction from me, with regard to whether I was Penrod, and you little Princesses were my sist rs, but indeed I sure wish you were and that Penrod was my brother. I had too fallen into a weak rather half-imbecile frame of mind ad was therefore very taciturn and reserved, refusing sometimes to talk at all, though always when I did speak, begin begging them to carry me home. At in tervals I suffered greatly in my head and from my wounds, ad even now I suffer at tim s especially in my head f I touch the spot upon my left temple where I recieved the blow I experienced a sensation like a terrific eletric shock showing that the head injury I recieved was a most serious one. And so the time wore on, and as I was perfectly h armless I was allowed to do as I pleased, ad gradually as my wound began to get better and gradually as I grew stronger in health my mind regained its balance, and I was able t o recall the past or rather to remember up to the time when I was lying on the frightful battlefield. everything else was a blank, and is almost so t o me now. I have no recollection whatever of how I came to be near the battle front or of the days which followed my arival there, ad it was some little time before I could comprehend my position or realize how long it was since I was at n the now burning Ophelia and started with my friend on the scouting expedition which ended so disasterously. My first act was to write at once to my father who I naturally supposed must think me dead, but the letter was probably miscarried or lost , for it never reached him. You know what a great and devastating war like this does to all sorts of communication.""

"Now for the sake of my sisters and you too Jim I'll tell else an astonishing story" said Penrod.

"After I left my sisters with the purpose to cover for them and save them from the unseen perils they were facing I saw it would be sort of some thing above even a miracle for me to get int o ag portion of the foe lines'

The battle is too extensive and too terrific so as to make any region therefore in that direction absolutely inaccessable. But when I reached into my Fathers army and heard that he was in an awful predicament because of the nature of the frightful battle I remained here directing the generals in person, and I am sorry to say though I didn't think disaster would go that far I commanded the raid that caused the big explosions that you my sisters head and probably seen and---".

"you, you--gasped Violet ""you-- she couldn't speak any further but looked at him as if she could not believe her eye sight while her sisters just sat ridi rigid and didn't say anything they were so dumbfounded even though they had been a little suspicious of the nature of the raid.

"Why what is the surprise about ."said Penrod dumbfounded. "Did I really do anything so great because I led a great raid. If I caused those big explosion s I do so indirectly because I never knew the enemy had such powerful ammun ition dumps. If I had I would not have allowed a fire to be started in the camp s because my raiders could have penetrated that far and would have had a rich haul of ammunit ion. Well my raid wasn 't like you have usually seen.. I'll tell you why I made the raid. I heard that the enemy couldn't get at you little girls through their agents and spies because of the viligiance of the boy and girlscouts and so their commanders determined to make a desperate attack upon t hat quarter of the christian lin e. Therefore a chance came for me to get even for what you little girls had suffered at the hands of these fiends, and getting even in this case is no sin, it would be if I didn't do it. I saw a chance to strike in your behalf and when I see such opportunities I always avail myself of it . I got hold of a foriegner called Francis Mic-Cann a desperate Irishman and he collect ed the worse of his big gangs of tough Angelinian and Abbiennian soldiery- I used no child scouts in this case, and when they were ready we had a very large division of them, caverly ad infant ry. In this raid however we encountered serious resistance, the enemy hurled literally as you call it heavy seas of men against us to prevent the raid but our numbers were overwhelming, no infantry can stand before cavarly and th e enemy at that portion didn't have one horseman. Their resistance was ten acious, but we carried all before us, and within four hours time of pressing onward, our men had laid low k many barracks and art big conflagrations, captured too many wagons to be count ed, we have no roka room for them yet, and many r prisoners including one of the Glandelinian generals. I cannot tell you all of the details of the raid of what we captured for it would take a volume to be written, but we have in our possession three million child slaves whom we liberated. It must have been some time later when we were retreating from the burning camps and had got half a mile off or so that the first big explosion occured. I nor my followers had had no idea that there were powerful foo minution sheds within their lines and therefore our destruction to the win dow glass of many of our own fair cities was not intentional and we'll make restitution for th e loss. Of course in this raid sisters we did not come off as usual unscathed. How many the enemy lost in killed and wounded I do not know but we came off the raid withnt he loss of fourty fi five thousand dead and one hundred thousand wounded. The enemy had cut us up um unmercifully for we encountered heavy counter attacks during and after the raid, and too while we retreated a portion of our raiding army recieved a heavy art illery storm so that we were double the usual length of time in reaching the christian lin es, where near its outskirts we were forced to make a desperate st and ad fortunately were aided by two divisions of infantry that came to our assistance and drove th the Glandelinians back. Not wishing to shock you or my Father or mot her of the nature of the raid, as I knew all of you would be shocked I telegraphed to Hanson My Un cle that I should be in fathers headquarters some time later and asked him to gradually notify father of the nature of my raid and what I did. The news took My Un cle as much by surprise as if I had worked a tremendous miracle, ad I have been told that all of the two vast christian armies not yet in battle fathers and Hansons was wild with excitement when my raiders began to come in with everything we had, and that Rodney Grave usually so quiet and undemonst rative, went himself and fired an enormous cannon to call all his members together so as to tell them the news . but it was not necessary his members saw saw us coming with our immense strin gs of captured wagons, big platoons of prisoners and other war booty. I really believe the entire encampment was line up with soldiers and even immense droves of child scouts to m meet me when our first wagon train we captured came in and had I permit ted it some of the soldiers in their wild ent husiasm would have carried me on their shoulders up the hill to the very door of fathers headquarters, where Jennie murmer and her sister Jane were waiting to recieve me.

Poor Father our poor dear emperor I used to think he loved me more than usual even after he first learned I was his lost son but surely I believe he I could change my mind now and never shall forget the expression of his face when he met me at the door followed by his whole troop of Royal Courtiers and leading me to Emperor Hanson who was there said to him so tenderly;
"Here is our great little hero son Hanson dear---here is our brave boy. I do not need to fear for the safty of his sisters with him around.That raid. He sure is going to be a scourge to their enemy poor little girls.Or is Praise be to God."To me he never spoke a word for full five min utes, my raid had struck him speechless, but sat soothing and patting my hands, and rubbing with his hand kercief a speck of dirt from my coat sleeve, while he looked at me so lovingly, with the great tears in his eyes, and his lips quivering wit h h is emotions.He app ears straight er too and younger too to me.I did not kn ow my friends and followers were so fond of a boy prince like me who I believe am only qua good for nothing.It seemed as if it was almost worth my while to go and smash up th e enemy in a raid for the sake of you little girls but I did not expect all the petting I recieved.But there was one thing wanting. I sent to you and your sisters several letters no about five and you did not either answer to probably did not recieve them for you did not come to meet me, and I wondered at it for I think I had half expected to see your dearling little faces among the very first to welcome me and I felt disappointed because I was afraid the enemy may have succeeded in getting you. I did not know what had happened for telegraphing I learned you were not at general Concentin ian Aronburgs army, and yet some rumor came that you may have been seized by the foe spies after all and though the thought that it mightvhe so hurt me cruelly,I had made up my mind to hide the hurt and t herefore is the reason I got ~~same~~ mad and made t he raid. I drove through even as far as Ophelia and raided the town driving the enemy before me and sett ing fire to the Buildin gs and then headed for general Arohurgs army to get there and back for it would be a great comfort to seevyou but I couldn't get there. When I learned afterwards from Tim you were here. was thinkin g and watching for you. But because you did not know where I was or probably still believed I was dead, you little dears did not appear, and o one mentioned your name untilll late in the evening, when one of the girlscout leaders Ethel asked me to go for a lark in the garden of our headquarters before retiring and then she told me the strangest story I ever heard of you and your dear sisters that the danger was so pressing th at Catherine Lee forced you to obey her and flee for your lives to Fathers sheltering army and which you did----"
H e paused a moment , while Violet turned very w hit e and with a long ghas gasping breath said faintly;;;
"Yes Penrod dear, I and my sisters know what has happened.Don't remind us please.We wish to forget it."
"sisters dear."and Penrod drew two of the trembling little girls clos r closer to him(not h em) and stroking their bowed heads con tin ued-------:
"Do you for a moment suppose that I have ever given the situation you were in a thought, except to be glad that you escaped so safty saftly and withoit misadventure to the chri stian lines, and with a gladness th at I cannot exlr expres , and that I now know means which I have studied through my many queer thin gs I have learned in America th at I could protect you all from even the most secret dangers.And when Ethel told me of your grief o at my supposed death, and the love which you were not ashamed to confess for me I felt sin ce you knew not I was here that I must fly to you at once, and only then the weak condition of a portion of fathers army kept me from foing so as the enemy was about to make an attack there which would make it impossible for me to get saftly through, and therefore my father ent reat ed me to wait untillbthe war"storm"was over.The girlscouts thought you were still in general Concentinian Aronburgs army, for Mildred Maxwell had kept your secret, as you had wished(not fished) and had not told anybody of what seemed to me of your still more rash plan of coming here into this region of death and destruction .This battle is more severe th an a battle should be even for a war so fierce. But Mildred Maxwell told me when I went the next day to see her, and told me too of all the un just remorse, and pain and bitter humiliation my dear little sisters had endured, and better than all the rest of the perfect t rust and fait h you had always in me--that were I living a hundred Catherine Lees could make no difference with me, and she was right. I would have called that brave girlscout "Sister"for your sake and I will treat her with as much respect as if she had been one for she did a lot for you.The advice and direction of what to do which Mildred told me I adopt ed at once.she is a noble little girlscout, and so true also to you little sisters of mine. By the way I fancy too th g that Jack Saunders t old me to watch out for the enemy if he has a chance would play with you little girls as the cat plays with the mouse it has capt ured .

And I will act like a little child of the three sisters, by pretending I'm a vulture or eagle, and you know no one could put it over on those sort of birds with the eyes they've got. Mildred Maxwell says the unseen danger if partly over now and wish es you would return and stay with her for a while, but that you yet cannot do untilll by and by . When she told me the trip you made and where you went and how you got here, and then when I learned you were in the danger zone attendin g wounded soldiers,, my heart gave a great throb of terror for you, and I resolved to start at once and take you away if I should find you safe and not injured.I had a mortal fear of hearing of you bein g so dangerously close to the battle zone, and this I believe added to my mental excitement which made me more liable to commit such a raid as I did almost immediately with the purpose to cut through and get here ahead of you, but though I might have surprised you by the nature of the raid and that as the enemy may say"I was the guilty on e"the results of it I'm sure surprised me more than it did you little giro girls, for H eaven knows I had no idea the enemy had munition stores within the camps there.If I had I'd had my raiders take all the munitions too instead of letting fires blow them all up.I couldn't get over the shock of the spru surprse and t hat delayed my time to inquire as to the rout e you had taken in headin g for here.You know how general Hance was wounded how Catherin e lee only a little girlscout found him, and saved his life for your sake for but for her and then you too he should most surely have died. And now dear sisters I've been t alkin g with father, who says that you little girls with me must leave this part of the christian camps at once if you were tovescape the unseen dangers may which may persue you here, and he advices a stay of a few weeks wit hin the saftest part of the christian line, and as I can see you have partly lost some of your health through your dreadful experiences you must do as he advises.You that that is my strongest point--worry over your welfare."
H e looked a little quizzically at his sisters, but they paid no att ent ion, while Violet said;
"I think that would be ni e nice.H ave you decided upon the place.?"
"Where else but your fathers h eadquarters, for that is what father recommended but I and you lit tle girls mu t must not go alonefor we need some of our best girlscout friends and it might as well be Catherin e Lee, Angelin ia Aronburg and some others.You need some good girlscout friends to look after you and keep you from peril especially at night.Night is more dangerous now than any other time of the day.Will you go with me little prin cesses of heaven? "
he said looking earnestly into the eyes which met his so inn ocently, as wit hout a blush, Jenn ie herself answered;
"Of course I and my sisters will go with you Penrod dear. Did you thin k after what we and you went through that we would let you go alone. "
Violet and her sisters at the bi beginning of the war had been so guileless and unsuspecting of evil experiences and advent urcs, that it seemed it was more th than a pir pity to have recent ly opened their eyes, ad that to show them that wars of this sort in its horrible construction was not what they had susp cted it to be--that Rodney Graves and Barger the two powerful leaders of the Gemin i when they first heard of the e exploits of the little princesses had felt as if their hea hair on their heads had stood upright with horror. But there was no one else outside of Angelinia Aronburg, Angeline Richee and Penrod and some ot hers who knew all they went through especially Penrod who often secretly shadowed them the two years before and unseen had really been the cause of their successes and safty.And again he woul d do it both for their sake and by way of accomplishing th e end he had in view.So he said to Violet;
"I knew you would willingly go with me-but Jennie dear, do you know that for my sisters to go as they are as Abbiennian Princesses would be to risk themselves sadly unless you disguised yourselves and I too.I'm afraid the journey is not a safe one."
Violet and her sisters did not quite comprehend him for they looked at him wonderin gly while Jenn ie again said;
""I do not kn ow what you mean."
"I mean if you did not go as you are supposed to do.I'll explain more fully.Do you know that for my sisters to go through a certain territory toward Fat Fathers headquarters with a great rat her fast looking fellow like Penrod Vivian would be in the eyes of th e enemy to compromise themselves badly and sadly in the estimation of all Glandelinians as even now within t he christian lines Stanley hears Adeldefon is safe."
"I mys elf doubt if Violet and her sisters still do comprehended him for Violet h erself said;
"I do not know what you mean by our being compromised by the enemy.I think it is an ugly word not at all one should use in reference to ourselves, as if as if we never behaved even within the christian lines as little ladies, for if even Adeldefob should choose to befriend us as he did then within Tamerlines army surely it is none of Manleys business."

She was getting a little excited, and her eyes shone with the gleam Penrod remembered so well and rather liked to provoke for he loved to hear her and her sisters angry at the enemy, though what he said of course was true.

"Yes I know"he said"but don't you remember what you told me of the secret agents within general Arenburgs army, who tried to get you because you were accused of kidnapping Adeldefob.Well there are such spies everywhere, and they would find us out no matter where we go, and however quiet and careful and modest you would be, they would set up a dreadful caterwauling because you were with me, and suspect you were trying to cause my capture or something.They would try then to assassinate you little girls, or would try their best amongst all Glandelinians to tear you to pieces till you had not a shred of reputation left .Do you understand that as Violet and her sisters, for your sakes you cannot go with me."

"No I don't understand"Violet answered wrathfully."and I think it is meaner than ever if that is the case of being compromise, spies, and reputation and as if we were bad and immodest and every sort of thing.Wicked persons will say anything about the good.No Penrod I didn't expect such a situation,I must say we did not, and I don't like it, and though at first we used to pray for unrepentant Manley we don't like him eit her--there.Give us a moment to consider what to do.We'll hold a council I and my sisters in the other room and a little later let you know what we can find out."

Penrod excused them, for in a righteous way Violet and even her sisters were a good deal excited, and at his word they flounced from the room, leaving him to chuckle over what he thought he could get them to do against the enemy, which he anticipated with his aid they could do.After the lapse of an hour during which Pierre had brought him his lunch, the little girls appeared, and Violet and Jennie standing by him, Jennie with her hand on his shoulder said.;

"I see you were right Penrod dear.It would not be proper at all, and spies would sure to ruin our reputation even if we they cannot do any personal harm to us now.But you must take Pierre with you.I should feel safer about you, and can very well without him.I know the way to your fath to'our dear fathers headquarters and shall start to morrow, for if it is so dangerous for me to go with you is it is just as dongerous here to be seen too much with you just yet-so we can travel alone to your fathers and our fathers headquarters.But Penr Penrod-"and Jennie's voice began to tremble"You'll come there as soon as possible won't you?You and Angelinia Aronburg, Catherline Lee, and little Jannie.That will make it quite proper and conventional so for spies if there are any unseen around won't be able to talk."

She was crying by this time and her sisters loooked tearful, and Penrod who as she was talking had stolen his arouns arm around her drew her down upon his knee and brushing away her tears said;

"Yes sister darling if you are in fathers headquarters to morrow I shall be there too for in the words of" Naomi"Where thou goest I shall go"whether to the mountains or to the moon and as Emperor Vivians Headquarters suit s me best just now, what say you and your sisters to go there at once?"

"But I thought you said we were not to go---that in the eyes of the enemy spies it would be very disrepu bable when they think you're Adeldefob or some other dreadful word like that? I don't understand you at all."Jennie said with surprise and Penrod replied as he combed her hair for her which had gotten out of shape;

"You are an innocent little chick Jennie Angel darling, that's a fact and cannot see through a millstone.I said as the situation is dangerous that as my that as Violet and her sisters you must not go scurring tward Emperor Vivians headquarters with a boy the enemy spies think is Adeldefob trying to learn somewthing with the christian lines--but as strange make to believe Glandelinian girlscouts you will be as little matrons and through that plan we can upset the enemys purpose altogether ad wreck their bloody army here at Ophelia.We must do somethin g sisters for the enemy is threatening to whip our armies any day and may yet."

"Accompany you as Glandelinian girlscouts within the christian lines?" Jennie exclaimed starting suddenly.

"Yes"he answered, and why not.We are bound to upset the enemys plans some time for good and all sometime, and why wait any longer.We can disguise ourselves here to night or to morrow I as Adeldefob, and you as Gladelinian girlscouts if you please, with Angelinia Arenburg and the others you mentioned as our Confederates and we can carry proofs in ways about us to prove to the christian soldiery who in reality we are so we would not be arrested as Glandelinian spies and we shall be as firmly tied against the enemy as if all the angels in heaven were arrayed against the Gladelinia.And to me you would be just as sweet and as far in your disguises than you would be in all the white satin robes and laces in the word world.Shall it be so sisters dear.Shall we disguise to night and start at once to morrow for Emperor Vivians headquarters."

Violet and her sisters though their parents may as well have owned the whole Abbiannian Nation so rich they were, did not care for satins or laces or magnificent fineries, but to go through an advent ure of this sort of suddenly, and within the christian lines in such an informal manner shocked them at first, and Penrod had some little difficulty in getting their consent .But it was won at last.A desire to be with him, to go where he went and have him to themselves prevailed over every other feeling, and early that night they already had their disguises fitted out .But nevertheless they were very very happy, and Pierre thought he had never seen his little mistresses one half so beautiful as they were in their simple gray uniform dresses and waists with only black bands of lining at their throats and wrist cuffs and black buttons as is the style of landelinian uniforms and the brightness of a great happiness in their faces and in their brilliant eyes. They were again with their dear brother Penrod.The joy they never thought of could be theirs had come again to them, greater far than they had ever dreamed, and in their happiness all the sad past was forgotten , and they the could think of their former adventures without a pang.

However the journey was an uneventful one and they reached Emperor Vivians headquarters or the outskirts of that part of the christian lines but somewhere near.The bright color had come back to the cheeks of violet and her sisters and the old sparkle to the eyes which had so often intheir lives shed so many bitter tears and worse yet since the day when the news came to them of their dear brother being killed on the bloody battlefile of Ophelia .

As too as soon as they were on their way tward Emperor Vivians headquarters Penrod sent the following telegram to his father;

"I have located my darling little sisters two days ago, and surpringly dearest father they recieved a letter when in general Aronburgs headquarters that I was dead. Mildred Maxwell who I told to come here as fast as possible but through the lines will explain.

"Schofield Penrod Vivian ."
Prince of Abbieann ia."

Mildreds little phaeton, which she had bought for her own use, was standing before the knoll, where she was calling on the other boy and girlscouts near Emperor Vivians headquarters, and where the threese Saunders girls were spending the afternoon with Jane Lee Catherines sister, when the military telegram was recieved, and thus the parties most interested had the news at the same time.And they were not greatly surprised, one except at the place from which the telegramcwas sent.How came Penrod so suddenly in general Meldon Picknells Christian camps, when they supposed him to be in general Kindernines..It was Mildred Maxwell who explained to them,then, what she had purposely withheld for the sake of sparing them the anxiety they would have felt had they known that not only was Violet,and her sisters in the midst of the battle of Ophelia along Kinderninds front, but that Penrod was going there too(not a jew) Violet had written her immediately after Catherine Lees recovery, and had told her of general Fredricks wound but added that the general was past alll danger and that there wasno cause for alarm.Mildred had wept in silence of the sad condition of Catherine Lee.But like Penrod she felt it was better so that she would be cared for by Violet,and her sisters, for she had cared for Angeline when she had been wounded at Evangeline St ga Claire. That Fredrick Nance should have lost his part of the awful battle and been dangerously wounded in the bargain so soon filled Mildred and every one else who heard of it with horror and dismay lest he might have a relasps, or Violet and her sisters might be smitten down , and her errand to the headquarters that afternoon was to tell all other girlscout and boyscout leaddr leaders the whole truth, and with them devise some means of getting the princely children away from the battle smitten christian army.She had told them of Catjerine Lee being shot down by two spies and how Violet and her sisters saved her life., but did not say how she recieved her information, and they were wondering why and how it was they did not hear from Penrod Penrod, nand why h e wired only to wildred and his father, when they believed the boy prince must have been some days in general Melden Bicknells christ ienermy, when his telegram was brough brought in, ad they heard for the first time that Violet and her sisters had acted as little Red Cross Nurses in general Bicknells army where the enemys attack was most severe and successful too, and of their again falling in with their brother Penod, through Tim who saw him first , and h ow Catherine Lee and Violet ad her sisters have had also through their own way of doig things saved general Fredrick Manes life when he was dangerously wounded . For a few moments they almost felt as if Penrod and Violet and her sisters were even now dead, and Emperor Vivians face was very white as she q as he listened to Violets l tter, which Mildred read and in which w there were so many assurences of h is and their safty that his fears greatly subsided and he could at last speak calmly of their brave children of which h e was very glad..

Good times however was sure to take place sometime, he knew, and as Violet and h er sisters too ought to he with General N ance during his recovery th ey could not have managed better than they did. But he was not willing to have them remain away so far off from Him any lon ger if milit ary conditions could prevent it , they must come to his headquarters at once, and he wrote that effect t o Penrod and in sisting upon their immediate coming to his headquarters if possible. .This latter Penrod recieved just before starting out, when he was pef perfectly happy with his darling brave sisters, who were as sweet and loving, and gentle to him as they could ever be.

"On ly think we have not had a single one of th e foe spies looking for us yet, and we have been so dilligently hunted by Glandelinian spies and agents for two whole weeks"Jennie said to Penrod as the journey was begun."Do ût let us go too fast though"she said nestling close to him in the carriage and laying her head on his arm."We are having such a nice time here wit h you all to ourselves where we can be just as good as we please and love God all th e more . Do not go to the main camp just yet but take a longer detour.Then not one of th e spies can ever guess what we are up to.

So Penrod wrote a code message to his father(their father too) not to expect him and his sisters for axfew weeks, as it was best for them to travel from one point of the army to the other cautiously, and that he was growing better in his military tactis every day.The same code telegram which took this code lett er to Emperor Vivian carried on e to Mildred Maxwell and other girlscout l aders from violet, and also her sisters, who wrote in raptures of their happiness in fin din g Penrod safe and even a great raider, t elling them he made the raid th at caused the devastating explosions within the foe lines, and begged Mildred Maxwell and her companions including the Jennin gs girls and ot hers to come and see for themselves as they would be stopping in general Francis Cohenias army by the time they arived.

And so a day after Mildred came to Cohenias army and took possession of the large clean headquarters building which violet and her sisters and Penrod occupied into whose happiness and plans they entered heart and soul and ten hours later after their arival Jack Saunders came.It was a settled thing now that all strangers had been eit her forcibly ousted or captured in general Aronburgs army, and they all talked the matter over together and decided some things to which without mimot hy Groveton and Penrod Violet, and her sisters never would have consented . It was Mildred Maxwells wish that Violet and her sisters should return to th eir old headquarters in general Aronburgs army and bring their father and Penrod to take personal command there, that Ophelia was saved, the battle had stopped and the enemy was showing signs of a sure withdrawel sooner or later.Ad this was also the wish of Timot hy Groveton, while Penrod himself said h e saw no objection t o it (don(nd and that it was probably what their uncle also would wish, was he th ere to speak to them, and therefore violet, and h er sisters consented. Then Penrod asked violet and her sisters should or what h e should do sh ould h e ever need to accompany them on a spying or scouting expedit ion for h e would only do as they wished and nothing else.

"The only time I ever tried for once in earnest to do anyting anyt h in g right I came near blowin g up the country side around Ophelia."he said"and so now to prevent myself from doing any more blunders I'll let you and your sisters decide for me..Shall I turn spy, or a preacher to the enemy to try and convert them or shall I be a dress maker for general Manley. I might with a little practice be a second N copelon or whatever you call that famous wrench Emperor or I shall make a pretty good blunderer and dress and pretend I'm a pretty good salesman of laces and silks in some of the enemys drygoods store.

So which shall it be if I do any spying, preacher, dress maker or clerk. I am bound to spy on the enemy in some way."

"You'll do not hing of the sort"Jennie answered laughing."A dress maker or clerk.What nonsense. You call it a blunder because of those big explosions.Why Penrod you're a scourge of the enemy and you don't seem to give credit t o yourself."

"A scourge of the enemy?"

"No I made a mistake"she said."I mean to the enemy a scourge to the enemy.You are too active to be either a preacher to the enemy, indeed if you want to preach to the enemy Penrod dear, please convert the devil first,, and as for clerk, you would not want to do anythin g else but sit down most of th e time as it would be too much standing, and dress making would give you a pain in theside.So you are still going to be the famous Parker boy, Adeldefob, or whatever role you assumed."

"So a poor little Prince like me am to have no higher occupationthan th at of "Adeldefob"He said pretending to moan."Truly the mighty have fallen before seven lit tle Heavenly creatures"h e added laugh ingly but well pleased on t he whole with the prospect before him.

"By the way though"said Joice"Would it not be possible that some day you'll be discovered when the real "Adeldefob shows up."?

"I'm the only real Adeldefob there is."said Penrod."It 's my own assumed name and make up.There is no Glandelin ian boyscout anywhere by that name.If there was it would have been showed up long ago."

"I hope you are sure about it"said Jennie."

"Positively."said Penrod"I just said that is my own make up, the name and the uniform I wear for the occassion.If you don't believe it then try and find another like it .Your angels couldn't even do it because t here is no ot her "Adeldefob.I'm tell ing you this for it is absolutely true."

Penrod told the truth, and Jennie could see it in his eyes even if she then didn't read his mind. He liked not hing better th an when spying in the foe lines than superintending all sorts of Glandelinian boy and girlscout s and with Violet and her sisters once disguised properly if he had th em with him again so that no one could recognize them he believed that in a little time he could make a wreck of anot her Glandelinian army.Thus t hey settled their future plans and when Timothy Groveton and the girlscout leaders of the Vivianit es went back to general Aronburgs army, Penrod and his sisters went with him or them, and wrre recieved with great re-joicings by their father and uncle, and by genral Aronburg and all the soldiers and child scouts generally.Anna Saunders, Jean and her sister and all others were very happy in the success of violet and her sisters in outwitting their foes, and even Mildred Mannin g, and Susie Warrol were lovable and very gracious to Violet and her sisters and to Penrod.

It was then anot her day t ward the coming of Christmas when Emperor Vivian and the little girls and Penrod started at last with general Aronburg for the old headquarters in general Aronburgs army.H ere Violet and her sisters were recieved as the little queens they were and won fresh lar laurel s.By this time Tims milit ary business wit h his child scout followers necessit ated his return to his command, and as the enemy though no more general fighting was going on still stubbornly refused to retreat and contin ued th eir long line unbroken from Big Girl Knool to Chamberlane Violet and her sisters and Penrod took out th eir regiments of girl and boyscouts and explored the upper northerly reaches of th e Aronburgs nun, and attacked and routed small and big pat rols of Glandelin ian cavarly, and camped out within sight of t he enemys main line defiantly on t he St Joh ns River untill the 23 of December, and raided, and made the enemy in such apprehension in that localit y that that portion of the enemys lines wit hdrew to better safty. All this excit ement and doings was good for Violet and her sisters whose constitution had recieved a great shock from t heir long harrowing experiences since Penrods departure ad from the false news of his death, and who thus gained strength and vigor for the new life before the, them. During one of their small raids Penrod himself with his own hands rescued a lit tle baby girl from the enemy a stolen child from somewhere just no doubtwabout to be murdered by the Glandelin ians, and within camp Penrod had made an improvised bed and as the child lay there it opened its eyes wonderingly at the Prince and the lit tle Princesses who bent over it so rapturiously, and called themselves "its guardian angels."Violet and her sisters were more like angels to him than ever, and seemed so much as angels in humanform, and Daisy her self looked so small beside her brot h er, who could pick her up and always di did laughingly si seat her on his shoulder and walked around wit h her.Bright mirthful and variable as the summer sun shine, they always went on their way happy in t h eir love for him and god and all friends which had crowned them so completely, ad for a time now not a shadow crossed th eir path way except when they remembered the past , which so often held so much terror h orror, bitterness and sorrow for them.Th en for a moment their eyes grow darker, and with a sigh they would think to themselves;

"Th e worse of all so far was the false news of Penrods death.

Jean Saunders and her two sisters now have been girlscouts within the Christ ian lines more then eighteen mont hs, and has seen every method of war any one there could be observin g, and h as often t raveled from one army to anot her."ow at t his time she and her sisters were also occupant s of. Emperor Vivians h eadquarters in general Aronburgs army the same places furnished out by min and Angelinia Aronburg and t hey have a suit of rooms and a girlscout aidecamp of the highest rank.Jack Saunders if is there too and durin g recess times plays whist with them or studies codes, and go s out scout ing around Ophelia.

Because of military orders and conditions makes it so because they are princesses, and yet not vain nor proud, they are nevertheless for a time dressed in milit ary pirncely uniforms very stylish and grand.Of all child scouts and soldiers they often have breakfasted at six and when opportunity furn ishes such chances scouts from five in the morning till six in the even in g, where their litt le saint ly beautiful faces with no slight cast t race of haugh t yness in them, despite their showy uniforms and elegant turn out in returning to camp attract almost as much att ention as if they were celestial beings inst ead.

The afternoon of the day before Christmas a foriegn boy even paid a christian boyscout for a good place to be able to see the Vivian Girls pass by, and sitting down there watched the gay parent of princesses and prince and emperor as it went by and saw them mounted magnificently upon beaut iful horses Violet and her sisters being the gayest of them all,Jennie herself carrying a red little parasol over her head. And when the foriegn boy thought of their past and what might be in store for them in the future he said to a girlscout standing near;

"I would like to join your troop and show the enemy how lit tl eIrish boys fight."

"She answered;

"Go to Miss Jennie Turner or Ann ie Rooney.They're recruiting officers and if there is a vacancy in anywhere you'll be admitted."

He's in now and a good boy scout too.

CHAPTER FOURTY ONE.

GAVE TO VIOLET THE PLACE OF HONOR PENROD TOOK THE LITTLE SHOE IN HAND. THEY FELT VERY HAPPY.

Fo tunately h though the ext nsive armies still contin ued to remain where they were there did not seem to be any more danger of activit y even though Heaven knows the enemy in this story had as much respect for Christ mas as a cat has for a mouse.Rumors however was that the foe was preparin g for a new move.H avi ng failed at Ophelia, and big girl Vn col even th ough still main taining their posit ions everywhere which was tremendously unusual for the defeats they recieved they were concent rating on or tward the little town of Albrahambra between Ophelia and Chamberlane.But so far it could be weeks before they could rush to the onslaught again and violet and her sisters ardent ly hoped not hing like conflict would rage here again untill Christmas was over though they felt sure Ch ristmas elsewhere may be a sad and bloody on e,indeed.Yet too far away at the eastern extremity of emperor vivians massive encampment s in the beautiful headquarters of Violet and her sist rs and occupied also by their father and general Concentinian Aronburg, was near this place rather a narrow company Street called the Vivian Street.H ere in the headquarters one of the boyscout leaders and that was Tim hemmed in around his table by his follow scout officers both boys and girls was working on a code one of them brought him which they had captured and which though no one could make out looked migh ty suspicious.H e had been able to make out all sorts for even years of his earlier life before the war.As he could not make it out himself for this one was strange and made out in se peculiar German he had sent one of the scouts for the Vivian Girls who could read German too.Indeed th ey were the only little girls in all Abbiennia who could read and underst and two languages as good as they did.Agelinia Aronburg understood a little but only could speak it brokenly but to read it that was not her line.

But the boy scout came back reporting that Violet and her sisters had gone out with Penrod to show him the barn h they had found the peculiar pictires in and where they had left them unt ill furt her examination as the bat tle had kept them from going there before.But so far they had found the region inaccesable because of the fires still burning which Penrods raid had caused.

But that did not matter to Penrod for he was looking very h appy never th eless for by each ya hand he held two of the prett iest and daintiest pair of his sisters cut of the ot her five that the whole world could wish to see.Although it had only been a short mont h since they and he discovered they were brother and sisters it seemed now as if they always had been together.They had proposed to him about the barn and although that would after Ch ristmas mean the work of two whole days it was a task t oo in which they had put so much int erest that the time would be joyfully and freely given.If on that day as he said something would make him have to remain with father than they could have General Walter Starring with them to help them solve th e mystery.

In t he meantime while they were some where near the spot a number of boyscout s returning from a scout ing tour saw them and po one of them pointing said to his companions;

"Aha there they are comrades.W-ll I wish the whole world would have a chance t o see them and look at them for we mean to honor them by placing them as first honor before everythin g else in natural life.Now boys tell all your friends of the Lagorian troop, and of the "sunbeams" division, and all the ot her girl and boyscouts you chance to meet to come when they can and have a peep or two at the very prettiest seven little girls and boy ever seen anywhere in the face of the world."

Violet herself and Penrod the most easiest of course heard thesecwords though the others didn't or if they did th ey paid no attention.They knew everybody wasgiving them the first place of honour throughout t h e nation.But really very naturally all this attention and remarks did not pass unnoticed by the little girls themselves.Violet giggled to Penrod. Any one I supposed would have expected that they would have felt proud as t ime went on and so many oft en had stopped and looked at them with so much admiration but not so and once it happened when two men were staring at them for some time as they passed back and forth Jean ie had stopped h er sisters rode up and asked the men ;

"What is the matter?"

"Why you are such daint y littl little girls, so beaut iful that I c cann ot help lockin g at you and your sisters so much."

"Well what ever we look or what ever we have in rank"she retorted"we're as equal as any body else.Move on and don't sta st are at us so.We don't like it and won't have it.If you are seen doing it again you'll be in solitary confinement.We're not proud.Good looking or not ot hers are as good as we are."

And the man moved.

Now while they were with Penrod and heard the boy, t hey began to whisper together, and say how unusual it was to be winning so much attention. Sometimes instead of even having vai vanity they were even suspicious, and t h ey blamed th emselves for not keeping th emselves more or less disguised, and be among more often what other would call"Common n eighbors.S matter for what reason Violet and her sisters did not like praise, t hey even said praise belongs to God alone.Nar by with these scouts were also a party of nearly all rough looking Angelin ian cavarly soldiers, while tward the west, where they too could be plainly seen, was a party of Abyssinkilian light horse patrol, such as cover any body out scouting.

But Violet and her sisters knew the boy and girlscouts meant good, and had all known and heard what the lit tle Princesses had so often gone through and were bit ter and most resent ful against the enemy.everybody oft en spoke of the Vivian Girls in terms of praise, even amongst the more Humane of the Glandelinians t oo and always expressed the sincere wish that t he lit tle princesses might be always happy and safe because they m were more good t h an t hey were beautiful.

"n ow much we would give to see them safe at home far away from this cruel war",another boy added and unconsciously louder."It would be too such a pretty sight."

Jonnie on h earing this laughed and said;

"We are safer in our armies my lad than we would be at home now.Let us hope that all the good boy and girlscouts will let us consider ourselves just as equal, for all have equal rights and elevation no matter what our rank maybe. Remember that."

To hear this sorely at first grieved the boyscout, and they wondered how any little girl so lovely could speak such heartless words against her self and praise ot hers when they themselves should be praised.

"nut "another boy whispered"They're so good and t hink more of others than of t hemselves.They are always kind and when th ey recieve at Ch ristmas lots of presents they yet give to those who have nothing like they did last year. Penrod will have to watch them this time or t h ey won't save a thing for 't hemselves t h ey're that generous.So let us give th em all the help and protection they need the dear littlePrincesses who love ot hers more than themselves."

"surely"we can stay in this region too long."said violet to Jonnie with a laugh"It 's gott ing too hot for me. Next time Penrod I won der if you will burn up a mountain if the enemy is on it.You sure do th e most strangest things and then talk about it as if it was nothing."

"Yes"said Penrod with a grin "I'll admid proudly if I have to that I did a lot , more than I even thought I did, but you can't tell me not hing. Papa gave me a long list of all he kept account of what you dear sisters did and if you're not a worse securge to the enemy than I am I'll eat my cont."

Th is time he got the best of them but Juice said;

"Let us move before any of the enemy scouts see us and start something.For when do do leave here we do not feel like running just now let alone skipping or dancing this way to escape the horsemen.My but it's hot..You sure know hoe to make fires Penrod dear."

"And I'll some day oblige the enemy by making another one"he answered."They like to make fires for us, so let them eat their own fire."

"Well they're eating it and more than their share."laughed Hettie.

"How hard it would be to have to see all the encampments burn if it was our own and no effort on the part of the enemy can stop it."exclaimed Cat herine.

"Yes but who can feel sorry for such a wicked army who won't leave little kiddies alone "said Angeline."I certainly don."t."

"Let's g et of we'll haveenough t and have to stay here and ---""

"Hi Prince "suddenly int errupt ed a courier riding up.The "Th e Emperor wants you to help him in a scouting tour in t he forest.H e says h e has more work to day against the enemy then he can do.And Princesses dear, Your father wa nts one of you to help poor Tim with a code h can't make out."

""" ere's John O Connel that foriegn boy who was supposed to help Father?" asked Penrod in i dismay.

"I don't know but he your father said;"

"I'm not arguing on that point for I'm illing to h lp help any time"said Penrod."But that boy is supposed to do h is duty.You fetch him right hat headquarters and I'll mak e him accompany us."

"come Penrod dear Father wants you to help him in the scouting expedition an d you can bring him safely through it"said violet after the courier had spoken to h er"He told the courier that because of what the enemy th reatens to do elsewhere he has more work to day than he can do.N ever mind that ot her foriegn boy.Maybe he is scared."

Violet as she spoke stroked Penrods cheek gently with her hand.Penrod stood ri regid for a moment and then he smiled and drew her face up close enough t o leave a kiss upon h er forch ead.

"Yes sister dear father told me last night that he would need e me and here we have stayed out h ere till the sun is high.Well I'll agree with you and not bother about him.But let's go.We can ride like the win d.I wouldn't let Father do anything wit hout my help for all the world .I'm afraid of his safty every hour."

"put first when we get back I must put your pan of milk on the fire as you won't drink Coffee"said violet.I must see too that you must have someth ing to take with you for it is likely you'll be gone all the rest of the day.what time did he say he was going to start."?.

PEnrod looked at his wrist watch.

"We've got two hours and a half"he said."Good t hing the courier was quick."

They soon were at their headquarters and violet bustled into an adjoining shed which served as the place to get the vegetables.In fact in this queer little hut some distance from the headquarters near the knoll there were only two rooms.In one of these was kept the vegetables and in the ot her was kept everyth ing else like kitchen ut ensils.The shed was also divided by a rude partition and while one side of it was used as a lookout room, th e ot her was the quarter for those who wished to watch everything over the country side to the west.For good purposes over this shed the roof descended with such a slant held down by heavy stones and slate that it was considered bomb proof.

Now comes the reason why Joh n O Connel did not respon d t o Penrods fath ers call.The little girl Violet as she approached the sh ed saw to her astonishment the courier who was supposed to go after the boy t ightly wedged in beneath the low pi ched roof, not even struggling to get free because he was held too tightly to even move a hand or foot. After calling to her sisters they all went in' o the shed Penrod however having gone inside th e headquarters and did not know what was happening.But even with the heal heart felt pit y and sympathy they f l felt for the unhappy courier, violet qn and her sisters if you were to shoot them could not keep back the smile when they saw the man tightly wedged in.They were strong little girls each one almost as strong as a man despite th eir small sizes but even t hen with the help of soldiers and Evanset hry called it was only after much desperate effort and work before they succeeded in releasing from h is imprison ment the soldier, who could not find words to speak but who thanked his rescuers with his great eful eyes, and made signs h e would tell them ho w it happened as soon as he can, for surely he did not get there by h imself so tightly. Finally he managed to say;

"Princesses sorry, but I have a message to do and must get Joh n O connel right away.When I'm back I'll tell what happened..This courier was a good and faithful man and this strange sad plight of his sh owed positively th at some one for some reason or other forced him int o this place like h e was found, and violet and her sisters detained him violet saying;

"No I know where he is.I'll go.You stay here and rest up.Then you can tell us bye and by."

This courier however in all his ways had been known as a veritible"Glandelinian hunter, and how well he knew and loved his vocation.H e was familiar with everyth ing Glandelinian patrols did and would do, and would often hide in t he most secret unseen recesses and fire on t hem, and when he was persued he had often taken to the hills and with the agility of the chamois or the mountain goat he would climb partsof hills that his persuers didn't dare try to reach .And yet it sure was embrassing to be finding himself in this position and yet more embr assing that it was violet and her sisters who rescued him, when often he was in the habit of rescueing young girls.In t he meantime Penrod who loved the free out door life often now helped emperor vivian his father in everything that was necessary to make it hot for the enemy, and he too was very anxious for h is sisters to take advant age of opportunities which he often seen for them." e had been with t hem for several mont hs now and he found they could do everyth ing about as good as he could now and was t herefore as expert at the sabre or lance as he was and knew lots of his tricks too.This progress of theirs h ad gladdened th eir brothers h eart and he felt much pride in t heir studious h abits and good standing at t he girl school or girlscout schools they often attended and where they did instruction to al l child scouts at the school which they ran .

It was not long either after the discovery that he was Emperor Vivians son that Penrod himself had shown such progress in milit ary tatics as gladdened h is parents hearts.But at first as he had never shown any chi choice as to the career he wished to follow, they preferred to let time develope this, and did not press him for decision.H owever seemingly slight circumstances often have th e power to shape ones destiny, and it did it to him.Though he did not know and did deny it , and believed his sisters were the best of spies, he himself really was for all generals who were ign orant of the fact often wondered exceedingly who this strange boy was called "Adeldefoh"who did so often so dreadfully upset the enemys plans.He wrecked the Glandelinian army at Cadernino, caused th e enemy general to blunder at Evangeline St claire, ed spoiled all of Glaneys plans at Lebanon n and wrecked the enemys plans at ophelia by his dreadful and devast ating raid.

After dressing himself in h is scouting un iform Penrod went to t h e headquarters dining room for h is breakfast . violet herself had drawn the table nearest t he window as she want ed him to be comfortable and happy before before starting to his military work.

"H ere brother dear sit down and eat a good breakfast."I and also my sisters thought you might be hun gry before noon so we each have wrapped up something extra for you, father and some of those who may accompany you.H ere is something for one of our good dogs too who will need to accompany you for I know he'll be wanting to go with you ain't that so Fido."

Penrod stopped and petted a shaggy head t h at was being rubbed against his knee.In the eyes of the good animal was a look which plainly said;

"Good morning l ittle princly master."Although but a dog how well did th is friend deserve the name or nickname of "Good Faithful"for that was his nickname.Right gladly if the need really came would he give his very life for h is little master ,or mistresses, who in their turn loved him t oo. After eating heartily of th e savoury stew, which some large sizes of bread and teh t he cheese Penrod put on his uniform princly cloak or long milit ary hooded cape as it is called, then kissing his sisters with an affectionate good bye, and bidding them to take care of themselves and not run int o unnecessary danger while he was gone and stay with faithful Tim and help h im, he commended Fido to follow, and th en went to where his fath er was wait ing on horse and with the boy and ot hers too.They had not gone far h owever when h e heard Jenn ie's voice v calling;

"Come back Penrod dear, and get your box of lunch ; you brought all the rest to Fath er and your scout s but left yours lying on th e table."

Then as she gave him the package, she also put int o his hand a neat ly neal neatly folo folded handkerchief, while Penrod wondered as h eregretfully left her if any other lit tle boy even in good Abbieannia had sisters who were so loving and thoughtful as h is own.

After a brisk ride which to those not used to horse back riding would doubtless have seemed a long tireless one, they found themselves in a woodland somewhere west and south of burning Ophelia.As following th e sound of well swung axes, they soon came to where a party of Glandelinians were dealing some st rong blows int o the t runks of a number of large pine and spruce trees.

They however dropped t h eir axes ad fled at th e sight of t h e column because they were only a few, and Emperor vivian had quit e a good sized squadron of cavarly and cavarly officers with h im armed to th e teeth.

Penrod fired at some of them but th e the t rees protected them and they got away though from the yells some were hit and wounded.

"Say we could finish that job Prince"said one of t h em the men"and bring in some trees for th e coming Ch ristmas party your sisters are to soon have."

"Well take off your cape and set to work."said emperor Vivian cheerily.

"I'll do some of it too."said Penrod.

"So you want to help too "said his father.

"Anyt hin g is not goo too good for much darling lit tle girls"said PenrodAd t hen riding closer he whispered int o emperor vivians ears;"I''ll have to watch my sisters though On Ch ristmas morn."They'r so generous th at th ey'll give everything they have away if you don't curl th em ad leave nothing for themselves."

"You telling me"exclaimed emperor Vivian."You don't know the h alf of it . They have more ch arity t h an there is even in the word. "

Emperor Vivian h imself to the surprise of the ot h ers got down from his horse and he soon dealt strong blows into the t runk of one of th e spruce trees where the fleeing Gladelinians had left off.H is hardy life in t h e open had developed strength of lung as well as of muscle, so swinging a most heavy ax seemed almost like childs play to h im.In fact h e was as strong as his brother H anson to an equal.

"You can split some of that small timber lying over there for camp fire wood."said Penrod to one of the boyscouts who wished to help and took out h is battle axe.All the boys who were armed with axes set to their task with a will chopping and splitting wit hout any wearingess.Not only had any boy and girlscout inh erit ed much strength but from early child h ood had been t rained to do t hings.The great dane dog Fido lay on th e ground h is paws outst retch ed watching his little master and the others as they worked.But after a time he grew impatient of his inactivit y and began to run here and there sniffing theair as though eager to find a scent and be off to trace it.

Just then there came to Penrods ears a strange dull sound, almost like a human groan and t hen a t h un derous t h rob h ad told h im th at two of the trees h ad fallen.What the Gladelinians had first started to chop t h em down for no one knows but emperor vivian had his intentionsfor th e trees.

Penrod went to look at the noble trees laid low and Emperor Vivian said;

"Th ey were splendid trees all right--it seems a pirty to have cut it down but as th ese glandelinians h ad already started t hey would be a menance and were killed already anyway.But since they were down we can use it for a celebration on Ch ristmas eve for every body that can come refugees child slaves and the like and we can fix up present s somek ow which we know you must have secured in t h at big raid you made when you blew up th e whole country and shocked the Glandelinian army out of all preparations. Violet and her sisters my dear daughters will get the things to dress th e t rees wit h .We can at once start to haul it to camp so it will be ready by Ch ristmas eve.

At a time when he yet h ad not known violet and her sisters h e had that is Penrod had attended one of the Christmas parties given by Violet ed her sisters and visions of what he had seen t here and seen them do came to his mind at the mention of a party by his father.H e remembered when violet and her sisters h ad recieved about thirt y boxes of candy.A numb r of refugees had not been able then to recieve many presents especially t h eir children and for what violet and her sisters did, Penrod had as to call it swiped one or two of the boxes of candy and carefully h ide t hem away untill th e celebration was over and then he confessed up and gave th e boxes to violet and Jennie t he latter saying;

"Why Penrod, those poor refugees need those.All we need was only a few handfuls.Why you even t hink more of us t h an of yourself.Here's yours."

"I gave mine away"he had confessed.

"And you hide those so we would still have t hem.You don't like t o see us get left is that it Penrod"and th en Jennie smiled at him so sweetly that he had blushed. And now at this celebration he would have to watch them again as they were over generous.And Penrod pictured in his mind t he great t rees brightly lighted and laden with all sorts of toys for the happy boys and girls ag gathered aroun d it.

"Poor violet and her sisters are very kind and more good to everybody than t hey are to t hemselves, and through them there are hardly any poor in t he whole of Abbieannia."one of the boyscouts remarked to Penrd, and he nodded.

"I had a few words with Jack Evans th e ot her day"said Penrod."" e told me lots of t heir doings at all parties they ever held or gave.If you don't watch th em they'll give everythin g of their own away and won't save a part icle for themselves."

But scarcely had this th ough t occured t o him or scarcely had this been said, when the sharp report of a rifle out the air." h is th en was followed by a h owl and a yelp that was pitiful and full of pain, and in a moment a rough lookin g foreign youth a smoking weapon in h is hand appeared from behind a clump of bush es but gave back aghast when he saw what dog he had purposely shot at.H e was a h ater of dogs and deligh t ed in shooting th em.A fierce righteous rage had sprung up in t h e breast of both Penrod and his father but it was Penrod who spoke.

"Arrest h im"h e shout ed t o his scouts.

"There was no escape because half a dozen rifles were leveled at th e careless yout h.Then Penrod said angrily;

"I'll teach you foreign t rash t o shoot at one of my sisters pets.If the dog dies you'll be sorry."

"I ----I didn't know it was one of your dogs.I---I--thought ---thought - it was a stray--and--and--"

"Sh ut up not a nother word out of you"shouted Penrod."You can stat e your defense at the Court Marshall."

A seconds glance told the careless naughty foriegn youth that he was dealing with an Albi annian Prince and t here could be nothing but t he prison for him if he dared to sai say another word here.Penrod had been quick to grasp the meaning of the shot for he could see the captured boy a was a hater of all sorts of harmless animals and liked to shoot them for fun." is heart was filled with grief, and pity for Violet whose dog it was and a few h urried paces brought him to where Fido lay upon t he ground.Bending over his p t h e called gently;

""Fido.Fido."

Slowly the poor dog opened his eyes and looked with love and f ithfulness into t he little masters face.Th en they l closed again.

"But you surely must not die Fido dear.I can't for your sake and my poor sisters let you die. I don't want to see h er cry again.Ad only think how lonely I'd and they would be without you.Who would go wit h us t o t he woods and who'd be th eir playmate Fido for you and Jane are t he only two good faith ful dogs they have."and Penrod buried his h ead in t h e dogs shaggy coat h iding the tears of grief and rage that came to his brave eyes.As though this petious appeal had brought h im back to life and t o his little master and mist resses, Fido gently wagged his tail.while it was only feeble it said as plainly as words could have done;

"I understend what you are saying lit tle Master, and appreciat it too. But this pain is very great.T h en once more the eyes opened slowly, and t here was a slight movement of the body.As Fido did this Penrod saw that the ground beneath his pet was stained with blood.Ad the then turning him onl over gent ly t he prince discovered that the bullet which made the wound had also broken Fido's leg.In an instant he remembered the handkerchief Jenn ie had given him so he took that and tore it into strips.One of these h e dipped i t int o a cl e clear spring near by and with it tenderly wash ed Fidos wound,then with t he other strips he bound up the broken leg.Fido must have realized what was being done for him, for even though his agony was very intense he raised his head alittle and gently licked his masters hand.

Penrods next thought was how to prevent h is sisters from learning of this for he didn't wa want their happiness broken o so soon again.H owever he knew how to set Fidos leg having learned th at from on e of th e In dians but he wished to have the dog cared for by somebody he knew so th at he could tell his truth the truth that he left the dog for a t ime with on e of his friends n and th en they would not suspect anyt h ing.In an instant th ere came to h is memory h is friend the guardian of Violet and her sisters J ck Evans, whom he had often seen with violet and her sisters.At this moment Penod heard h orses hoofs ap roaching, and looking up saw h is father on horseback pretty close.Upon seeing what had been done for t he wounded dog, Emperor vivian praised his boys skill in sett ing the leg and putting on t he ba bandage too. They now on account of t his had to return and Penrod decided to take the wounded dog to general Evans.Alth ough it was a long distance for they took a round about way so violet and her sisters would not see them enter wit h the wounded dog, and made weary by holding the heavy burden, which he held on in one arm while he directed his horse wit h the other Penrod did not falter.Ad th en h e soon reach ed general Evans headquarters and told th e orderly or seni sentinel at the door that he would like to see the general.

So serious was his purpos e, that he failed to note the expression on the orderlies face as she saweth e wounded dog." ow v "owever when word was carried to the great general, that-the little boy prince Penod who stood wit hout holding one of the Vivian girls dogs in his arms wounded had asked to see him he smiled kindly and said;

"H ave the good prince brought in.non't delay him"

Penrod was shown int o a large an pleasant room where two great men were seated near a table.On this large table, besides books and pamphlets a magnifying glass, and a microscope, there were also some specimens of strange written codes.These the two generals were examining wit h much int erest, but when Penrod entered one of them rose and said;

"So you wish me to keep the dog for a while as if loaned to me so th at your sisters won't know he was shot untill he's well have my dear friend P nPenrod? "

Penrod in h is straigh t forward way told Evans h ow the dog got shot.

"Maybe I can do something for the dog.Come over h ere and let us have a bett er light"said the ot h er man rising and putt ing his hand on th e boys shoulder ad and drawing him tw rd an open sunny window."Ike a surgeon. Now let us see what can be done ."

Th us as naturally as such service on his part were a common thing spoke the great army doctor at whose words the whole country would have stopped to listen.It was he who through Catherine Lees h elp pulled Angeline through at Evangeline St Claire and this surgeon was a great noble friend of Emperor vivian and Jack Evans best friend too

"Why Prince your Fido must already have had the attent ion of a surgeon."he said with a bright twinkle in h is eye."You did great work Prince."Then turning to evans who also was standing by th e win dow he said;

"See Evans h ow well t he boy prince has put the splint and t h e bandage on."

Evans examined th e bandage, then looked int o Penrods face before him. It was a look which said more than words,, a look which Penrod carried with him ll all through life. The surgeon assured Penrod that neit h er wound nor fracture would be long in healing and so as to the fact that violet and her sisters would not miss their dog and get suspicious he just wrote a letter stating that he wished to keep th e dog at his place for a little while and if h is friends the princesses would mind lending h im to h im for a space.

"Now they won't have no occasion for sorrow"said Evans."Oh how I too hate to even see a tear in their eyes.It cuts me through like a j knife."

Litt le did Penrod dream then t hat for a time anot her happiness was in store for him and t h em.

"Oh how stupid it is to have all of us stay h ere so long and not doing anything because Catherine Lee said so.I am tired f of bein g so quiet and still.We only stand around or sit around in our uniforms looking more like being just dressed up for the occasion and not doing anything else."

Thus spoke one of the boyscouts to h is comrades for since the battle of Ophelia everybody among the scouts were even as it seemed having too long a recess and not doing even any drilling."

"Yes, yes it is horrid to stay in camp laying around when we are used t o so much active life.But "she suddenlyhexclaimed as a new th ought struck her;

""It will be only for a little while and then we'll be having a good time if thatungodly ungodly enemy don't interfere---do you realize in another week it will be Christmas eve, and what violet and her sisters does for all of us and everybody else too th at they can reach on Christmas eve."!

At these words everyody in the territory near them listened and the boyscout said;

"Well sis I had forgotten a ll about the approach of Christmas, as you know when there's such a war it doesn't look like Ch ristmas coming to me and especially when at this time it is so hot here.Upat Mis-Whirther Run already they so continually had northerly winds th at though its so hot here where we are supposed to have winter too, th ey have had plent y of snow. But now"he said directing his words to the nearest of the boy and girlscouts who stood close by"We will surely say good bye for bad conditions for a while I hope and enjoy a good Christ mas eve and dat day.Do you remember what fun we had last Christmas eve!"

"Yes"said one of the girls"but you too musthremember there was no Glandelinian army within a hundred miles of us then.H ere we're f acing the biggest one ever seen who may start a fight on that very day curse them."

Even as the litt le girlscout spoke, a splendid milit ary carriage drawn by two pair of spirit ed black and white(not fight) horses on whose gilt t rapping s was a coronet was being driven along the shore of the river along th e wide Co Company Street being in the heart of th e main city of Christian encampment s.A turn was made int e Company Street number IO! and all of a sudden th e milit ary coach man drew rein just in f ront of the big quarter master store.All of the boy and girlscouts though standing at attent ion were in a gr at flutter of excitment, for though they knew Violet and her sisters well, new never before had such an equipage been seen to pass through and stop at this quarter Master store.What in the world could it mean.The foot man in purple and gold livery, sprang from his place beside the coachman and swung wide the carriage door.Whereupe n the emperor and seven little girls of saintly and distinguished bearing stepped from the carriage and ent ered the quarter master store. So excitedwere all of the boy and girlscout s that th ey had failed to peri perceive standing close to the window a poorly clad woman one of the refugees no doubt who because of the war had l ost her all, and who was looking in with wistful longing eyes.She too had seen th e carriage stop and now watched the emperor and the seven little girls and a boyscout , as they ent ered and walked toward the counter.She saw one of the quarter master sergeants come forward and make them a bow a very low impressive bow;for here were so many quarter master stores in the army it was rare indeed, to be honoured by good persons of such distinction.Before the great carriage had driven to t he door or one of the doors the refugee lady had been looking into one of the windows wistfully, wondering if wit h h er few copper coins she could buy for her boys a pair of new shoes for Christmas. she did not know quarter master stores only held various kinds of army clothing and goods and privions .. Now she saw the foremost of the little girls instead of buying anything give some sort of orders to the chief sergeant , and then th ey came out of the shop and was about to enter the carriage when one of th em spied the poor old lady standing there. They were at once b eside her asking her what she desired and why she was stn standing there. When she timidly explained; Violet smilingly said;

"All in that building my good woman is quarter master army goods for the army and also others. Nothing there is on sale. must step in and h e'll give you what you ask. don't be afraid."

"Don't I have to pay for it."?" she asked.

"Well to do people or refugees would have to ,yes. But not you. Just go in lady. Don't be afraid. H e sees us talking to you and now cannot refuse as all t h is un is under our control. We have the say. Just go in and tell h im I t old you."

Then bidding the grateful lady good bye they ent ered their barriage after giving her a goodly number of gold coins, and were soon whirling away out of sight . Then the old old lady opened the door quietly and went in, while the man did not fail to note that she was one of the very few poor in Abbieann ia for t he Government sees to it everybody should have an equal share. She told the quarter master sergeant what she wish ed, and the sergeant walked tward the window, while th e lady took one of the gold coins from her pocket and laid it on the counter. In another moment two pair of shoes were wrapped carefully in tissue paper and put into a box. In a few moments the woman reappeared her eyes shining with happiness and mother love for ne beneath h er faded shawl was a christmas present for her children--two pair of shoes. she had not gone far when she h eard so some one call and looking back saw the quart er master sergeant excitedly gestulating t o h er.

"what did I do." she wondered as she returned.

"H ey lady what's your hurry" said the Quarter master sergeant. "You forgot half your goods. H ere's two new dresses for yourself, and someth ing else for your children. and here's that gold coin. You do not need to pay for anyth ing here in t he army. everything is free. This is not a retail store" h e added with a grin.

"but my dear sir" how can I carry all that "said the woman her eyes opened in surprise.

"Get some of the boy or girlscouts to h elp you. They'll do it."

And she did thanking God that there was so much charity in Abbieannie and also in its armies.

As Penrod went onward after leaving Evans headquarters still with the foriegn boy who was his prisoner guarded by boyscouts and laden with presents which included useful articl s for his parent s and sisters also he found h imself looking questioningly at the foriegn boy and saying;

"You have a very ugly disposition to be shooting at every dog or cat you see and you have shot for once the wrong one. You are going to be put int o solit ary confinement ."

The foriegn boy found it prudent not to say anything in answer for he knew this was Penrod and having heard so much of him he was really scared. but he wondered what solit ary confinement meant and P nrod whether he did or not seemed to read his mind for h e said;

"Solit ary confinement means you'll be a prisoner all alone by yourself in a camp, but that you'll be allowed the freedom of the camp. but no body will be allowed to see you or visit you whether or it be relations or friends. But if that dog dies you'll go to prison for anyear."

"I never kn w it was your sisters dog." said the boy.

"Well you know it now" re t ort ed Penrod." You should have known better than he shoot ing at other dogs. You'll be in solit ary confinement untill I see fit t o release you. not untill the dog is able to run about will you be free. That 's your sent ence."

"Suppose of I repented of my deeds?"

"Then you will be wise for you're going to be deported if you don't . Sinn ers can't stay here and its a sin to shoot a dog or cat out of pleasure."

"I'll never do it again if you don't tell your sisters for they did help me in a lot of thin gs." said the boy turnin g whit e, and t here came t o him thoughts of how they had helped his fat her in forest after military school h curs when he h ad been in peril and it seemed to him as if he had shot their dog thus showing an act of ingratitude and that did fill h im with fear and remorse. But in truth h e did not know it was their dog.

"I will not t ell because for good reasons I don't want them to know t h e dog is wounded" said Penrod. "but if you are really sorry for th e deed t h en I'll also be merciful and won't make th e punishment so heavy. I was going to have you tried by court marshall by Annie Roonie an and she is axecvere one to deal with . But in st ead you'll be th e ir prisoner and I won't say why."

After he had delivered the boy over to his sisters saying he was arrested for a trival offense he went off to decide somet hing. H e wished to find some other ways in which he could be useful to his sisters before Ch ristmas.

"I surely must do something for th em. I wonder if they wu would be glad to have that large bunch of Edele or edelweiss I secured in t h e raid and which I have in my room in a big flower pot. Yes yes, I'll make another raid too and rescue a ,c lot more of child slaves for th em . I'll look about and dig down into the h eart of the foe lines untill I fo find some of the child slaves then I'll take them to camp and say they are for my sisters."

But in his boyish determination to dash again into the foe camps and bring t hem the child slaves there lay a deeper meaning th an he then could know. Ho w How full was his heart of pit y and sorrow for the little laboring afflict ed ones within t h e Glandelinian camps. What would he not give if t h ey were all free and made into good little Abbieannian citizens for all th e poor suffering child slaves were really little child saints for they suffered because they were good. When Penrod reached th e d oor of Emperor Vivian headquarters he sisters met him. Their eyes were bright with some secret and Jenn ie held her fingers to her l ips.

"Come in quietly my dear brother; some one we rescued just an hour ago from the enemy is sleeping in your own room."

Who could it be! wondered the astonished boy. For had it been h is father or any one of his bigger brot h ers, who t ook a nap there, h is sisters would have told him. H owever h e made haste to remove his heavy army shoes so t hat th eir n oise would not dist urb the sleeping one. His sisters led th e way t o the room, and there elsewhere across in the hall Penrod found a wash stand. The bed neatly made up.

"I thought you would not mind brot her dear if she was put in here for a while. I know when you see the poor pit iful old woman I found lying in the road this morning mist reated by Glandelinian soldiers whom we ch ased, and she almost dead, and th ey kicking and beating h er you will be glad t h at we can give her shelter."

Penrod pressed Jennie's hand. To him she and her sisters were the ideal of heavely love and kindness and unusual goodnss and charity. It was therefore not a surprise to him that they had brought some poor forlorn creature persecuted by the enemy soldiers and in need of shelter to their beautiful headquarters. H e had sat down in a low chair at her side with her sisters standin g about him, and was showing them t he gift gifts he had brought with him, when the door was opened soft ly and there stood before him an old wit ch like creature, such as Penrod had never never seen.

"Nannia" said Jennie" Rh This is our dear hero brother Prince Penro-" I and my sisters spoke to you about him." H e has just come back from a scouting trip with father and also has brought some lovely gifts. See here is a good new set of cloth ing for you to wear, and you can tie his kerchief around your head it is so bright and pretty." And t hus she gave aw y away with a mile with a smile the things she had recieved from a quart er master store and which was intended for some other purpose. T he old dame came forward h er pine staff striking the floor heavily as she walked. Then she t ried to raise her bent body so as to see the boy prince. That poor body though had been too long bowed beneath its heavy burden for it to be lifted now. The face int o which Penrod looked was as yellow ass piece of leather, and full of lines and wrinkles. But the eyes although very dim were kind and as he looked int o t hem the boy felt confident she was surely a sad suffering poor old creature. To think that the enemy soldiers could be mean to even such a s she he couldn't hardly make himself believe and the tears came rushing to his eyes. Yet he did not realize that t hat poor creatu creature, so ugly, bent and wrin kled was one day t o prove a good angel to him and his sisters.

To make it a longer description as to the incident it does show usually how cowardly Glandelinian soldiers even are. Seven or even fourteen soldiers would never dare to persue violet and her sisters. T hirty or fourt y must do t hat only and none less. After helping violet th t Tim solve th e code Violet and her sisters decided just for a lark to go out a litt le and scout so as to pass the timeuntill Penrod returned. Th ey had not gone far from the caml camp ad being only by themselves th ough well armed they happend to come to a turn in the road and there to their horror saw saw a poor old lady lying in the road and three Glandelinians kicking her and beating her with sticks as she lay. whey at arted forward immediately and t he Glandolinians seeing them coming took to t h eir horses leaped on and raced away before any of the little girls had time to fire a shot.

They managed to get the poor old lady ont o one of the horses of which Jennie rode, and Jennie hoofing it as to say they brought the poor l old lady int o camp and int o their headquarters where they gave her a good meal.
Durin g the fe w d y days b fore Christis Ch ristmas be or after the rage of the battle of Ophelia Violet and her sisters had not b een out of doors because they were so busy.Penrod too was glad they ddn't go out much for he feared that any exposure to the severe weather they were now having would be very harmful even as much wea warmpth a s th oy could stand.Almost every day that hot burning win d from the sout heast had swept from the direction and regions of the most tremendous forest fires ever written about.So searching and stinging wha was those hot winds that many a little girl and boyscout on t heir way in this or that direction in the company streets would stop oft en to wipe their foreheads ad faces, while here or there on the corners of the company streets c- c soldiers tried thier best to keep themselves cool ad murmured often about the unusual heat at such actime of the year.
All of these sights ad the warmpt h h owever Violet ad her sistersdid not see take notice or pay any attention to, ad as their milit ary headquarters home was out on th e shore of one of the country lakes.But as they sat in their chairs besides h one of the long French windows they could look out either upon the lake of up and down the company streets and could see the restless tossing of the wind swept waters.

Then in th e company streets how the dead leaves scurried ad rattled along and when a sudden gust would toss a cloud of th m them in the air it made Violet laugh and say to her sisters;
"The winds is sure playing battle dore with the leaves to day.It certainly is hot but if others canstad it we can."

Violet ad her sisters made pretty pictures far beyond any imaginatón t here beside the great open window al os almost as large as the opposit wall of the room itself.A low table was drawnclose in front of the little girls and on t his were a writing book and tablet, a paar of scissors, a pot of paste and writing pen and ink, while on a desk opposite to them was a typew i pypewritter.In t he book they were listing at various names of all sc child scouts what sort of Christmas presents they were going to have going to have.

In another part of the room sat Angelinia Aronburg and for a good reason she was as to say moving a map of all the territ ory between Ophelia and Chamb erlane in her mind, and then made it out as best as she oculd with forming a map.When it happened now and t hen that she was unabl to find a place t o put what was intended there she would get ad consult her geograph y.Or not succeeding even then, she would call to h er friends r or have Tim come to her and t ell him what she wanted and h e would willingly make it out for her. Consequently the doigs of violet and her sisters and Penrod and the chief girl and boyscout officers had become familiar topics throughout th e whole christian line.While there other characters helping violet and her sist ers in their Christmas preparations; the prici principal ones were a girl and boyscout and they were mim and Angelinia Aronburg They planned the thinfs for violet and her sisters, so that it was that in this way many a weary hour was brightened for the de dear Vivian Girls.While Violet and her sisters were thus busy a girlscout came in ad saluting said;
"Oh princesses you cannot imagine what has happend to poor little Jann ie."
Ad it was at first with a worried look(the gook) that violet and her sisters stopped to listen.
"I must first tell you all about it "said the girlscout whose name was "Marguerout e Marguerite"and this the girl began;
"It was just this morning when Jennie Turner called Jann ie into her headquarters and tol d her she want ed her to take a basket of good things to one of the poor refugees who was some distance up the camp in Refugee Camp Number TO.she started off with a baskrt on her arm and I followed to direct her and she was so happy that she oculd not keep from singing.After we had walked a long way in that heat t oo we saw what we thought was a big fog coming our way but that it had a strange browni brownish grey color.We were almost frightened as well as tired and we thought a fire had broken out in our camp.We sait down on a large bench to rest and had sat there for a short time and was believing on going on again when some body said to us;
"What are you waitin g here for little girlscouts?"
We looked up and there before us stood a very pretty litt le girl but dres d as a refugee.She was there before us as if she had just appeared from the ground she was dressed all in white and as she appeared as if she was an apparation we felt a little scared.
"Don't be afraid little girls."The girl said in a high good angel like voice."I am good and will not hurt you.I am Angelinia Aronburgs sister

I want you to give this envelope to her when you return."
Jann ie herself took the nte and the girl dressed all in white mount ed a horse ad dashed away waving her hand.We delivered the bask t and on our return we come upon t wo handsomely uniformed men on horseback We sure felt awed for they were your two Brot hers Princesses, James and Germaine. At the sight of the two Princes Jannie seemed awful shy.Yet think what t he two Princes did.They escorted us all the way here and princesses as soon as th ey're through with your Father they want you to go out with them and Penrod for a good long carriage ride.They have not had a chance to be with you and their hearts are longin g for your company.Janie is happy for she still is wit h them."

Violet, ad her sisters and also Angelinia Aronburg listened to with surprise to this and as the girl just finished Penrod en ent ered dressed only as an Abbiennian Prince should be.What a difference he looked from the attire of Adeldefob.
My "My darling sisters, won't you put aside your work on these names this afternoon, and let me and my two brothers take you for a good drive in the sunshine.It is hot of course but we can bear it I believe."
The little boy prince as h e spoke looped back one of the rich silken cur tains that draped the win dows, and let a blurred but nevertheless flood of sunshine stream into the room.
"It 's the first bright day we have had in many months despite this southeast winds and the wind is n ot blowing so hard now eit her.It would do us good I'm sure to getlout in the fresh air."
"That would be lovely Penrod dear, and Tim can drive us in our grand carriage for our carriage horses would be gald to have some good exercise.H e must be stiff from standin g so long in the stable."
Penrod then pulled a long red bell cord, and when the aide-d camp in most purple uniform came to answer it , Penrod said;
"Go Henry and ask Catherine Lee to be ready in half an hour for a drive--th en come back and wait upon my sisters."

Penrod dear, we would like so much for once to discard our hateful old uniforms and wear our civilian clothes our b eutiful pink hats and also our pret t y white shoes for a change.It 's so good to see the sunshine again t hat it makes us want to wear our loveliest things."

"Yes dear sisters, you may wear them if you like.I will tell Jane Lee to get them for you.Shall I go as I am or wear civilian clot hes."
"It would look better if you did"smiled Jennie."As long as not hing happens let's try and forget this horrid Conflict with Christmas coming."
Little Jann ie must have h eard Violets express to wear their civilian cot clothes, and her littleheart gave a throb of happiness, and Jennie whispered to Gertrude Angeline,
"Are you not glad they're going out for a nice ride?"

"Sometimes I was a fraid they must be ill from the ill they sit so quietly lately"Angelinia Aronburg whispered."I feel so worried and sorry for them.Isn't it sad to think t hat t he war is so regin g and that they can be playing like ot her children."

"Y e Yes i yes it is truly sad.But after all though they must have a very happy nature for how else could they these several days sit so contentedly hour after hour amusing themselves with checking out the names of presents for each make there."

Jane Lee in the meantime had returned or come rather, and was busy getting out the things for Violet, and h er sisters to wear.They had gone in t o their bedrooms to dress and on th eir brass beds with th eir lace covers and soft pink draperies, she had laid for each one a deinty wi whit white silk dress with little red rose buds on them, the lovely whit e cloak with ermine trimmings also their large pink hats on which were fluffy ostrich feathers. Then when she had placed beside these a pair of little whit e shoes for each Jann ie said to Gertrude;

"Don't you wish you were their sister instead of cousin?"
When violet and her sisters were ready for their drive Penrod came and went with them down st airs, and as they went it seemed as th though a ray of sunlight passed through the sombre hall.wer this headquarters buildin g being a very old Abbiennian chateau was not always a cheerful looking place no matter how Tim and Angelinia Ar onburg had arranged it So long before the war it is old estate had been in possession of some Abbiennian Count. and for generations it had passed from father to son.but the former owne r of this place had been killed in batt le.

Catherine Lee was already in the cart with Tim who was holding the lines when Penrod and his two older brothers came down, followed or preceded by Violet, and her sisters. The two bigger brothers placed the little girls in their seats, Jennie beside Catherine Lee and Joice beside Tim and in another moment they were ready to be off. Violet, and her sisters and the others waved a farewell to their Father and many others too and Tim started the sturdy steeds all being white ones into a brisk trot by touching the leading one lightly with the whip. So busy were they on account of their many various military duties that Violet, and her sisters had as yet enjoyed but few drives in their grand carriage, which was a large and very pretty one with dark green body and red rimmed wheels with yellow spokes. That with the harness and the steeds had been two years ago a Christmas present from all the boy and girlscouts of the vivienite troop. A squadron of cavalry rode close behind the carriage but when they almost reached the end of the wide company street one of them roused them to see that the gates in the arch across the company street was opened. When they reached the ivy covered lodge built of roughly hewn wood not only were the sentries there to bow them through the massive wooden portals but a good crowd of boy and girlscouts too. Very soon they had reached the broad white high way through the main heart of the camp. Though it was so awfully hot Violet and her sisters nevertheless were very happy to be out in the sunshine which had already brought a sparkle to their eyes and a faint pink color to their cheeks. So interested were they in their chat with their friends or among each other and their brothers that they did not not see a young boy scout who was about to cross the counter street stop and turn in his course. He recognized the sound of the hoof beats on the road.

"So I see you are going for a drive dear princesses" he called.

"It was Radcliffe a lad of about twelve or thirteen, who although not often their companion or Penrods either now because of so much duties he had to perform was sincerly fond of them and particularly Penrod. He was another scourge to the enemy and though he was righteous in it yet nevertheless his fury toward the enemy seemed almost brutal and in his nature was a tendency to cruelty to Glandelinians who he seen treat child slaves in an. But underneath all this was something which Violet and her sisters and all the rest as no other seemed to understand. They loved this supposed to be boy and to Violet and her sisters and to boy and girls of all kinds "He" was even tender and any one could be. "any weeks before he had told them of arresting a strange foriegn boy for shooting somebodys dog out of mere spite. Violet and her sisters had been sorely distressed at hearing this, and had seen the boy and made him promise her and her sisters that he would never do such a cruel thing again, but as he refused to they had therefore supported the the shortness of the sentence and made him prisoner longer. What if they knew their own dog was shot and that this or he same boy the did it and had been arrested by Penrod.

"I have something to tell you Princesses" said Radcliffe drawing near the carriage.

"what is it?"

"Do you remember that poor dog I told you about not long ago.?"

"Yes, yes" I know "she said."

"I saw him this afternoon."

"Then the poor dog didn't die. Oh We are so very glad." violet exclaimed.

"No indeed the dog was limping along beside some little girlscout." is leg seemed a little stiff, but that was all. But say girls your brother arrested the same boy for some offense."

"I see Penrod made a little sign to him." He knew very well what the boy or supposed to be boy was suspicious of and did not wish to have violet and her sisters find out their dog or one of them had been shot by the same boy. He didn't wish to grive them.

"Yes I did" he finally admitted. "Nobody passes me whether foriegn or not without saluting and then getting insulting when I bowl him out."

"We must not stop longer sisters" James Vivian said "Or we will have to cut short our drive."

"Do you want to ride with us." said Penrod. "If so come in."

"I'm sorry I can't" said Radcliffe. "General Arenburg want ed to see me and I'm on my way."

So bidding adieu to Radcliffe, they again started on their way. For some time they followed the lake shore and at one place saw a great number of boy and girlscouts in all positions on the bank (not spun) close by the waters edge washing cloth es. Violet and her sisters from under their fair wide brimmed hats watched these strong brawny girl and boyscouts as they washed pounded and rinsed.

"Here would you like best to drive sisters dear." Asked Prince James "Perhaps it would be pleasant for a while to take a different course."

"If we have time enough to done it" I'd like to have you drive us into that beautiful forest up there." and Violet pointed toward a thickly wooded spot far up on the hillside. "Then" she added "I wish you would take us to see the gulls and the swans before we return to camp."

Always glad to give pleasure to his little sisters whom he and his other big brother did not have a chance to see oft en to the air dreadful regret too the prince readily consented, and the horses were urged at a more brisk trot. Soon they were heading away from the lake and they began a gradual ascent of the mountain. Few who have not driven on those splendid Calverinian highways can realize how delightful they are, so smooth and hard and white. What a blessing it would have been in the Glandelinian armies were not in possession of this territory. Under their great leader emperor Vivian the First the engineers and all of her laborers had construct ed many splendid roads and bridges in all parts of Calverinia. Violets own fancy had begun to picture many things as they drove along the white road through an aisle of trees. Now and then Violet would laugh and say;

"Brothers dear can't you imagine there are Glandelinian soldiers hiding behind those trees. Wouldn't it be awful if a swarm of them would be lurking in ambush and rush out on us and capture us. Then perhaps perhaps" she was interrupted and startled by a sudden sound.

"That is only one of the mountain peasants singing" said Germaine, reassuringly.

Even as he spoke there rang out a familiar Calverinian song. They all had often heard it sung by some mountaineer or some hunter or perhaps by some herdsman as he drove his cattle home. But this was a womans voice. Higher and higher it rang until all at once there broke forth that strange warbling sound known everywhere in mountain countries as the mountain jodel.

"Isn't that lovely" exclaimed Hattie. But to their astonished eyes they saw coming toward them around a sudden curve in the road, the strangest little old woman.

At first the little girls were startled and having a feeling of dread fearing it was a Glandelinian spy in disguise drew their pistols as the old creature hobbled toward them on her staff, and they caught sight of the wrinkled face with its nose and chin which seemed to meet. She almost resembled the one whom they had befriended in their headquarters and where they had given her shelter, and as they looked into the old dames eyes they saw that it was true, and that caused all fear and suspicion to vanish though they wondered how she could be here so quickly and Violet put sent by the wrinkled hand into which the princess put a piece of gold. with a look that was full of gratitude and thanksgiving the old dame showered blessings upon them all. She was indeed pleased to have the pieces of money but how much more happiness was brought to the poor old heart by the little hand, and the kindly little faces looking out laid gently on her own.

"Are you the same lady to whom we gave shelter in our home?" asked Violet.

"Yes indeed" replied the good old dame. "You are kind little princesses to have taken me in and care for me. I come out here by a short cut to warn you not to go any further. There's a big patrol of Glandelinians over there."

As she spoke she pointed upward with her staff and through a clearing in a wood near an old shack Violet, and her sisters saw far above them but riding slowly downward toward them a great column of Glandelinian dragoon cavarly. They no doubt were out scouting. In the front of the column was a snadily dressed Glandelinian officer, who shaded his eyes from the sun, and looked down upon them as they talked.

"We're not afraid of them and how beautiful must be the view from there." said Joice. "I would dearly love to see it when there is a good chance."

"Are you sure my dear lady that they're Glandelinians and not a patrol of our own in disguise."?

"Yes to be sure Prince. Ah you all are blessed souls and I don't want you to be captured by them. They're Glandelinians all right. I know the way they been talking for I was close to them not long ago unseen and overheard them. They're scouting to discover the lay out of your christian armies." and the old woman again pointed with her staff toward the Glandelinian cavarly however which had halted. They had stopped, because though they seen the party in the carriage, not the party had a strong column of pret cating cavarly and counted few girlscouts some slight distance behind and they were really afraid to try short ring."

"You are all so kind to me and the Good God will reward you I know. He will bless you all for sharing all you have with a poor old woman who has no one in the world to care for me. Only think little princesses;" and the old face bent nearer to the sweet flower like children "I was living out there to the road being attacked by their kind of scoundrels will almost feel [illegible] reverence for the birds, when the little kind souls like you saved me and took me in.Ah you are to be envied so good."

But Prince Jones with a new sense the Glendolinians starting to run much slowly and cautiously and seeing too that the little girls were full of tears at and fearing that their sisters would suffer too keenly a breach their sympathies, told the old lady to get on, and that they would drive away.The old lady was helped out of the carriage.

"Thou art like some beautiful little angels"the old woman said more to herself [illegible] than aloud!"and May the Blessed Lord keep thy hearts as pure and gentle as they are now always.Down the mountain road they drove the enemy again hesitating to follow, the christian escort of cavalry and child scouts following close behind but keeping alert.

"You sure have a golden voice for sir singing"said one of the boyscouts to the old lady as he rode for a moment beside the cart. The old lady made some smilin answer to hen the boyscout drew back his horse and respectfully took his place with the other horses.Trot by Greyston had driven briskly so that it was not long before they were approaching the lake.It was a lovely afternoon so far as cloky skies go and Violet and her sisters had ought they had never seen the lak look so beautiful.Here and there as though on war raged, skimming the water like great white birds with outstretched wings were boats with their laden sinls sails.But they were only disguised to fool the enemy.They were steam or gasoline driven runboats ripped up to look like harmless sailer craft.At their left were the distant christian encampments.

"Over there"said Jeanie vivien pointing far away to the right"Is where I crossed the river with my army."There is where I made a passage and never met any opposit ion."And he directed their sisters eyes to a long bridge across the lake itself But the little girls were soon interested in seeing quite a number of boy and girlscouts standing on the very bridge.They seemed to be thrown throwing something into the water then all of a sudden there was a splash and a flock of sea gulls flew up from the lake and went whirling gracefully overhead out over the heads of the child scouts on the bridge.

"Oh brothers dear,there are the gulls."exclaimed Daisy, as she and her sisters clapped their hands joyfully."And these child scouts are feeding them.How gentle they are"she added as they saw one of the birds curve his neck and take a piece of bread from a boyscouts hand.

"They are never frightened "Joan said"and by our low confirmed by Father that person among foreigners for our own kind don't do it, who did it the birds and her m would be severely punished.What or after what or they come here and we are so anxious to protect our birds.But with the glandolinian now no can't it seems."

"why can't we bring bread ourselves and feed them sisters dear."said Penrod."Wouldn't it be nice to have them come and eat from our hands."

"Yes dear brother, I will tell you what we can do as long as our army remains here.Some day if there is the chance we must bring our luncheon and have a little pic nic picnic on that island over there.Then we can feed both the gulls and the swans.See there are many big white swans with the black feathers and clustered about the island.But they rarely come this far.There's been too much sound of firing."

"How lovely that would be"Dearest sisters you are so good and kind and make so many nice plans for me."

In the meantime they had headrivin g slowly over the long bridge watching the pretty sights.Some of the gulls pickes than the rest would catch the bread in their beaks before it touched the water.Then at times one very brave one would be seen pecking at ancreal hold tempt ingly in out stretched fingers. Violet and her sisters had already noticed that a boy from where head they took it fearlessly.His back was turned to the bridge and presently out he leaned over the massive railing.He was dressed as a Calendinian peasant in homespun trousers and a long blue cott on blouse, while on his feet to their surprise was a pair of wooden shoes much too large for his feet.Stretched at full length on the bridge beside him was a shaggy dog evidently sleeping.

"Oh how beautiful but has been blown off my head cut in sailing away."

Angeline suddenly exclaimed as her and the eyes of her sisters in consternation follows the hat that went sailing aeroscss the bridge which was a wide one. One of the lieutenants [illegible] the armies was about to dismount from his horse when he saw the boy who had been feeding the sea gulls grasp it in his hand just as it was about to go sailing out o the lake.The Vivien Girls were delighted in seeing this for to Angeline the hat had been a gift which she treasured highly.Penrod made signs to the lad who had now turned to see what all the excitement was about.They with a loud click clack of his wooden shoes he came across the bridge, follow ed by the dog.

As a reward for the present parcel Violet had taken from her small purse a piece of money, but Joan had covered it with her hand.

"No, no violet , don't do that he'll think we're foolish!"she whispered as the boy drewnear and she saw he his face."Don't you see that is Jack Sanders only in some make up!"

A little later that same morning, Jack Shan dare and his friend Joan Saunders sat together by a writing table doing a little studying by themselves but also talking.With a loving hand Joan stroked the shorish head(not dead) upon her knee.Though she was a little quil the hand was not a soft one--it had known too much military hardships for that and too much child scout toil, but its touch was very gentle.Being able once to carry him when pain he and she had been wounded proves she is a strong little girl for her age. Jack had loved nothing better than those quiet talks for between his little loving girl friend and [illegible] If there was a strong bond of sympathy not for themselves but for others. This even afternoon,rather as they sat before the table, Joan had been telling him about the old ladies singing, and also about Violet and her sisters having restrained them the whole camp by giving the poor old lady shelter in their own headquarters by after rescuing her from the enemy.

"The poor old lady says they're apparently more beautiful than gulls and as good as they are beautiful.But they still looked so pale and upset from their recent and experiences."

"Tday ow Joan dear who was with them?Their three prithly brothers! saw The drove the carriage.It's a long time since I seen their three brothers together with them,and how happy theylooked together."

There was a look of pleased surprise in Joans face at hearing this, and then she said;;;

"Ah the little Vivian Girls surely have gentle hearts toward all that are good for the old lady told me how Violet stroked her poor old heart by hand."

How the poor old lady ever told them or you who she is or where she came from Joan?"

"No dear she has not yet even had the time I suppose to tell her name though we call her Mrs , she ever mentioned of her home or her people."

Joan did not realize how much misery that silence about each did not know that of the old ladys,relatives and friends the enemy wiped them out in a big massacre beginning called the "Night dreaden Hundreds" and had burned her home and the hope of her children too and that through a miracle she had managed to escape.

"They'll keep her there for a long long time won't they Joan and give her part of all they can share with her."

Joan bent over and kissed the brow as she said;

"I believe they will until the army moves and they'll have to abandon the building.They are so ready to give help to the afflict ed and the diet pressed. They even show mercy to the enemy wounded no matter how bad the soldiers are or how treacherous."

"I would give anything much Joan if I had the power to save the dear little princesses from all the sorrow and horror they may have to go through in the future."

"Would you rather have that power dear, than to see them go on stirring adventures.Only think what it would mean for one of us to follow in their footsteps instead."

"We do follow in their foot steps.In fact I'd rather do the work all for them but leave them remain in camp where it is safe.The enemy are afraid of us girl and boyscouts, but not afraid of them.You promised me that some day Joan you would tell me about their two big prithly brothers.Won't you do it now Joan?I know they are very good men.Do they look armies like their father "Joan"

"Yes indeed.I have heard that both of them not only hold armies against the foe but they're the most famous cavalry leaders of our nation and has helped his armies frustrate the wicked foe in so many different ways and where they make the enemy have had a chance to massacre any children.Only think Jack recently Jeanie captured over three hundred thousand Glandolinian cavalry men without a single shot being fired, and the nation talks all about how he once without a batle forced the surrender of a cavalry army of nearly 70,000,000 men. And he had far less than that too."

"I remember hearing some one say at the military hop about school that it was the two Vivian Princes who started the diversion that resulted in the enemy at the battle of Evangeline St Claire.Was that not "

"yes dear and he not only was the cause of that disaster to the enemy but both of them were the cause of many other great christian victories too.The eldest prince James said that every child in the whole of Abbisannia ought to be on the military child scout force, so he tried to make it easier for every one to get in and cast aside the so called "red tape"th at many of us went throu h before we got here.He also helped their mothers ad fathers to get their children prepared saying it is safer for the children within the army than without and that the enemy doesn't dare tackle child scouts.He sah many notices and pictures to the various parents telling and showing how boy and girlscouts lived. Sunday after Sunday he would even in various places when he could orate to a whole crowd of people telling them that it might be sinful to keep th eir elder children our out of the troop when it is so dangerous for all children outside the army when the foe is so fierce.H e told and wrote in newspapers that if they loved their children and wished them to be safe t hey must give up their children to the army as scouts as long as the war lasts."

"Did the people obey him."Jack asked his dark eyes fixed earnestly on Jeans face.

"Yes many of them did.T hat is why there are so many millions of child scouts now, and a scourge to the enemy. Some day Jack dear we'll go down to a recruiting station in some city together and I'll let you see how busy an one of them is."

For a long time Jack sat silent in thought .Jean did not disturb him. he too was thinking deeply and out of her love and holy pride was weaving hope fully a bright future for Violet and her sisters and all the nation.Hope can run very high, even in a little girlscouts heart.

"It would be a grand thing Jean"said Jack at last"to help the army by doing a lot of recruiting of our own, but I have felt that I would rat her do roscmething that would help violet and her sisters go through t heir adventures with much more safty and take away much of their needless suffering and sorrows. They don't deserve that.Ever since Catherine Lee told me what they have and do go through I have wished, oh I have wished to h elped them.Th en the day I took a wounded friend of mine down to see the surgeon, a strange gentlemen was there who gave me a look I never have forgot ten.When Doctor Ratenia saw the bandage on the soldiers arm which I placed there he turned and told his friend to come and see it.Then the other gave me a look and said; "My boy be useful, be a help to the Vivian Girl Princesses.They sure need your help and you can do it.L et this care and love for your wounded friend be a saintly lesson to you.I cannot forget it Jean---it has come to me over and over again, especially since the day after Violet and her sisters were hounded by the enemy for rescueing Penrod from general Manley who thought h e was Adeldefob."

"Then it is your great desire dear h eart to be one of their Windowing guardians? I know you must have thought much about it you are so in earnest?"

"Yes I would rather be one for their sake than anything else in all the world."

"You would rat her do that than anything else?"

"Ah but don't you see Jean that when they have a secret guardian I'd be helping them in their course.Many boy scouts did the same thing secretly already that is why they're safe with us even to day."

There was love light in the little girls eyes as she kissed her boy friend tendly tenderly.A new thought had been given to her---the thought of her little boy friend growing to be also a guardian who could help Violet and her sisters to be more successful thanever. she wondered how it would be possible to see the boys ambition gratified.But there came courage with the thought that good luck favors those who are good to the vivian Girls, ad that God had promised to answer the prayers of those who had faith.As after an earnest heart felt prayer to the Giver of all good she and Jack prepared to go off to their respectful duties .

"Come Nellie."

The girlscout by that name arose to h er feet for in the tone of Penrods voice was something that made her feel that some sort of a pleasure was in store.

"you we would like to go with me wouldn't you Nell dear."?

"Yes.Boys who are so good to th eir sisters are liked by ev ry one."

"Well first we'll go forth to the pasu pasture to see what is going on th ere, t hen we will start upon our business.I want to secretly buy osometh ing for my sisters that will delight them."

So going to the horses stall near the headquarters where his famous horse was already showing some impatience to be out he unfastened the door, th en saddled her himself and mounted, allowing Nellie to ride one of h is sisters horses.

"I thought their horses wouldn't let no strangers on! "said Nellie with at first some fear for she heard these horses throw strangers off their backs as soon as they get on."

"It is only men they do it too and depends what color uniform they wear" said Penrod with a laugh ."Or if the horse smells mischief."

They then started off down the road and scarcely had they rode a dozen or more yards when Penrod heard someone call his name. It was the dear old lady and when h e turned in the saddle she hobbled tward him.

"Wait good prince, but for a moment I have a word to say to thee."

"Ah she want s me to brin g her somethin g from where I'm going, and I will gladly do it too."

By this time the good old dame had reached h is side..

"I know Prince that you have your heart set on doing a certain thing for your good little sisters, and yet you feel it your duty to go out to the pasture in t he center of the camp to see what you can do about thin gs left there you captured in your big raid i on Ophelia.Come lad I want to do that much for you.I will attend to those things to day and command some of the good girl and boyscouts to help me and do you go on your mission. "

For an instant Penrod hesit ated for he didn't want to impose anyth ing on this good woman but t he look in t he old ladys eyes encouraged h im t o take the opportunity for she wouldn't take no for an answer when he needed his time so bad for the errant for his sisters.

"Well led it be as you say my good woman.I'll give you full command of a regiment of boy and girlscouts to day and I know th ey'll be glad to do your bidding." And as he spoke he took from his pocket, a paper pcked pencil wrote out a tr temporary commission for her.This he gave to the good lady t hat she might prove that she got her command. Another good act to th e woman giv giving h er a commission."

"Good prince go and hurry for the sake of your mission, and may blessings attend t hee."

Little did Penrod know how well the old lady understood and know his purpose as he started off on his horse fo followed by Nell.The h oofs of their horses seemed fairly to ring as they rode r p rapidly down t he public high way and never had the distance to that part of the christian encampment seem ed so short .H e could scarcely realize he was there when he found himself in t he broad company streets of the heart of the encampments.The sights were all known to him from having pass ed there constantly on his way to a military boyscouts school.H e know every barracks and tent, and at t he more fanciful houses where there was a court sentries and military porters stood in the lodge doors or near the tall iron gates and gave him a friendly smile while every body he passed cheered h im and his companion.They had come to know the happy boyish prince for Penrod had passed there daily . As he finallyhat opped before a large stone house which stood within a court he saw to h is surprise he could have walked in with out any one challenging h im. H e looked around and sawthe guard which was a foreign man standing a little way off talking to another man.

"H i t here"said Penrod loudly his loud voice ringing down t he Company Stre t."If I was anenemy I could sneak in here easily enough .Why ain't you in your proper place instead of t here jawing with a stranger. I'm going t o relieve you of your duty and place you oin solitary confinement for neglect of duty.Considerbyourself under arrest ."

Soldiers were called and t h e man was marched off to do time for his neglect of duty.

"Confound t hose foriegners"t hought Penrod to himself as he rang t h e bell after placing a new guard there."T hey're in th e army but don't want to do anything."

In answer to his ring the door soon opened and just as he expect ed Rodney Graves himself stood before him.

"I come to see you sir on something important "Penrod said, wit h no sign of embrassment .

"Oh yes I remember you my dear lad and this is a little girlscout you brought to see me."asc he spoke th e great Gemini leader looked kindly at t h e little girl.

"Come inside my dear prince, and tell me what your errad is.I am glad to see you."

He and t he little girl followedvt he great manin t int o t he house and at the mans invitation sat down.

"Do you remember sir that one day you said if I ever needed any assistance you would do anything for me?"

"Yes I remember it very well."Rodney Graves said."Is there anything necessary you would wish me to do for you."?

"Well come to tell the truth it is for my sisters I want the favor.It is a man with pluck like yours, the man with courage and omit qualities that we want ed to select .It is the man himself, not what he has or has not that makes the man.Certainly a man if he has it in him can do such things I desire and do them well.I want you to be Santa Claus for my sisters and everybody they entertain for Christmas and Christmas even eve.I believe I can feel it that at least in this territory that nothing will mar our Christmas and that the enemy is too fagged out to start anything now."

"So you have come to ask me to be Santa Clauss to your dear sisters? "the Gemini leader said as he placed his hand on Penods head."Well who wouldn't want to do it.Why Penrod my prince you give to me a great honor.I will be there prompt at six sharp Christmas eve though I'll be pretty warm in these Santa cloth es seeing we're having hot weather instead of winter for Christmas.But I'll be glad to do it."

"Ah sir but you are kind to us."was all that Penrod could say.The great leaders words had touched him deeply, and he did not for the moment trust himself to speak.

"Come we must talk over some good plans"The Gemini leader said."To make the festival to the best it is a question that needs much time and thought . So suppose we have a little bite together, and then we can take it up more fully."

At Rodney Graves bidding Penrod and the little girl went with him into a small breakfast table where a dainty meal was spread.Penrod who had risen before the sun had been in such a hurry to carry things out he had omitted his breakfast and therefore he found himself doing full justice to the coffee and rolls as well as a little pot of golden honey.

"If you wish "said the leader "I'll give you a jar of honey to take to your sisters.""

"I'm sorry I can't oblige you"said Penrod laughing"but my sisters wouldn't eat honey on a bet .They say it is too sugary and sweet for them.They don't even like sugar."

"Well they're sweeter than both , in looks and goodness"said the doctor. Then with a kind interest, as well as tact, the great leader had drawn from Penrod his hopes and aspirations concerning the successes of his sisters in futi fut ure interprizes with the enemy.

"I will tell you prince what we will do.Seeing that neither I or Darger can talk them out of their dangerous expeditions and hearing they're possessed with agangl angels which makes us feel easier we need not worry on that score.I believe time will tell Prince and then it may come to a pass where the enemy will wish he had left the little princesses alone. I can see it in their eyes they're not to be trifled with good as they are. After I have a talk with your Pat her the great and good Emperor I wish to lend you all the assistance I could.You must cont inue your work at times as you did before as Adeldefob for somet hing tells me the enemy will never get wise to that you played it too well in the past but there will be much time when you can get assistance from elsewhere which I or Darger will lend you.Do not be afraid to take your sisters along every time on those interprizes but here after keep them out of sight of Gerald Starring and his two dangerous spies.At the end of another year if you have the same desire and purpose you will be able to make them little sisters of yours more famous than ever, and I will come often and assist you with your work. As for This Christmas eve I'll have a festival prepared which will make every body open their eyes and make your sisters the happiest / little girls in the world."

Penrods eyes were large with happiness.It seemed the good things the great leader said to him could at be all true but then the Gemini had at finished."When

"when you have finished your course as Adeldefob you will soon have lots of fun at the expense of the enemy."

It all came upon Penrod so suddenly that he sat in awed silence.

"But sir" he found voice to say at last-"You must know that a person cannot I always play the same game too long.The enemy may get wise."

"Aye yes my son that is true but at the same time you must remember that-

"Where there is a will there is a way.You have been so good and loyal to your sisters that I'm sure God will help you through and that your course will never be discovered not even by those three vicous Glandelinian boy spies.Go on with the grand work before you.Continue that as well as you possibly can.You are a famous lad my prince and will make history.Come to me for military books and guidans whenever you may want them and the rest will be added unto you in its own good time."

With the happiest heart he had ever known Penrod keeping away from his sisters as he wished to keep things secret yet, carried the good news to Angelinia Aronburg. he kissed him tenderly and said;;;

"No my dear friend it is for you to do well your part and all us girl and boy scouts will help you.We have to take their word for it prince but violet and her sisters say their little brother Penrod is more famous than they are. "

"Aw go on.what they went through was worse than me.They suffered sorrows woes and hardships and cruelties while I did not.I'm going to strike for everything they suffered and I'm going to strike hard.When I get time I'll have that Augustinia St Clare hauled before mybtribula Tribunal ad answer to me.He was their worsecenemie and he's going to get it .I w more famous.yes't l make me laugh Gertrude.They only say that because they want to make me better than they are.I know them.An Christmas eve I'm going to have you watch them when they give presents away.If they're too generous I want you to hide some things untill everything is over or they won't save a thing for themselves."

A little after Penod had gone to hold an interview with some of his ro royal guards Gertrude Angelina and Jennie Turner sat by a table one reading and the other writing a letter.Then Gertrude told Jennie of Penrods decision.

"but the provisions for Christmas.Where is that to come from.? "

"I do not know Jennie but something seems to tell me that it will be possible for our great little prince to carry out his heart felt purpose.And besides you must know he captured a whole lot in that recent big raid he made."

How little did she dream, though that from her cot in the adjoining room the poor old lady had heard every word they said, and that even then the good soul the Vivian Girls had sheltered, and whom Agelinia Aronburg had brought a good hearty supper was murmuring to herself;

"Now at last I can repay them for their kindness.I will help them for I know how it can be brought ago about and they'll have the most glorious Christmas in their lives.I'm a poor old woman whom they sheltered but not poor in money.For I have fastened securely about my waist enough gold and silver to help Penrod gratify his great ambition.But he must not know that I did it for he is rich himself.But I know what to buy and he may make a mistake.I'll get them the best clothesd and uniforms money can buy As sure as my name is Jane Mary Brid Brigid."

The unusualness of the weather so late inthe year had seemed to have now given way to real Algerian heat and eventhough it was December all the trees and bushes which early in novamber had shed their leaves were all turning green again when Violet and her sisters and Penrod alone this time were riding on horseback toward the upper lands to do some scouting to see whether there will be any danger of a battle before or during Christmas or not for you couldn't trust the enemy.And again as before there came down to them a ringing meoldymelody.Old Jane always eager to give the little girls plenty of assistance had heard the sound of horses, and first believing it might be a patrol of Glandelinians now stood behind a tree beside the road to hide.But suddenly she had lost all her fear for she had caught side of the eight riders the little girls this time in full regala of princely uniforms and Penrod too with their broad heart shaped hats with flying plumes and of the golden curls beneath .

"Ah Princesses you are out again."she exclaimed with joy"How I have wished to see you once in uniform !You look splendid."

"We are glad to see you too but what are you doing way out here all alone."Penrod himself exclaimed with surprise as he gave his hand to Jane.

"I felt I needed to limber up my legs by taking a long walk."said the dame truthfully.

"But ain't it dangerous"Exclaimed Violet."We have one spare horse with us which we bring in case of neccessity.You had better ride one with us or the enemy may come upon you.We can defend you in case of trouble."

With their help the old lady was able to mount the horse for old as she was she was in her younger days one of the most expert horse back riders in the world and was still good at it if she could only get upon it.Then when she was securely mounted Jenn ie drew the old wrinkled face close to her own and whispered something in the womans ear.

"Poor little lambies"was all t hat Jane said, but her tone was full of pit y.
"Yes I know where they are, .I can call but I hope th e enemy if near by don't hear me."Raising her hand to her mout h, the old woman gave a familiar mountain call.Almost immediately the door of a cabin far above them opened and a woman appeared upon the threshold.
"Do you wish me to come down Jane?"she called.
Old Jane beckoned, and in another moment the younger woman was coming down the steep mountain path with sure s ift swift movement .Violet , and her sisters watched h er as she drew near, ad saw in th e face somethin g so noble so kind ad motherly that their hearts went out to her at once.
"These little princesses have come to see how your little boy is"Old Jane said.
"To be sure I will let th em see him."ad th e younger woman realized th at t hese beautiful fair haired little princesses were the little girls whom her wounded boy scout son had oft en spoken.Violet and her sisters Penrod and the old lady followed t h e woman and when they reached the little cabin home
Violet and her sisters were not surprised by what they say.with much tact Penrod had told them th at t he people th ey were going to see were mountain peasant s though fort unately t h rough the goodness of th e country they were not poor even though th ey did not dare have costly ad eautiful th ings and had to live like poor peasant s for fear the enemy wouldcome and rob th em.So to the beautiful princesses there was not the shock of surprise when they saw a home withnits earthen floor and walls of plast ered logs for oft en they themselves in h ad had been in al an old rickety barn for a headquarters.H owever their welcome was such a kind and h earty one th at the princesses felt very happy.Ad like vertible little angels didt hey look when a few minutes lat er t h ey sat eith er squatted on rugs on t h e floor on or on lw low rush chairs enjoying a bowl of savoury soup and a slice of peasant bread.
"I thought Henry might like to have some soup after a long tramp for he goes out scouting and remains on duty despite his hurt."the lads mot h er exclaimed whose name was Mildred Math ilide, as she leaned over the fire and dipped a l ladleful of soup out of aniron pot swinging from a crane.
"George."exclaimed Violet.
"Yes my boy George."
"Are you the mot her of George Zimmermon who was killed on t he battlefieldcof Ophelia?"
"No Princesses.My boy George Hankers."
"Isn't it st range brot her dear"said Jenn ie th at we should have come here with out knowin g it is th e home of one of our gallent boyscouts."?
"But you must remember sisters dear"said Joice herself"That we have only found this t hrough the good old lady"ad she looked toard Jane in t h e corner.
As th ey sat talking pleasantly together the little girls had observed a rough but long wooden table without any cove r,, not with stone china plates and bowls all reqady for the dinner meal.H ow plain and comfortless was the china and the furniture--------some rush bott tmed chairs which the family th emselves had made,,, a safe containing china and provisions also a rude wooden bench.In the chimney corner was a big loom and elsewhere a spinnig wheel while on t h e dist aff was some flax ready for the morrows toil. Without the rudeness of staring the que quick eyes of the litt le girls had taken in t h e most of t hat what was in t his poorly furnished room.
Just then t h ey heard the gallopping of a horse and in another moment George had dismount ed tied his h orse to a post and came into th e room. H e was glad to find violet, and her sisters, th ough not surprised, as he had seen th e horses close to the her house and knew by th e saddles to whom th ey belonged.Too t he training of an attentive mot her could be detected in the way he greeted the little guests, while it made h is mothers heart swell wit h pride to see h im take off his cap unreminded, ad give to each a civil bow.
"My dear son"said his moth er, after a litt le while"I t h ink Violet and her dearest sisters migh t like to see some of your fathers carvings and things."
"Sure I'd be glad to "said t he boy hastening first to take a good size but pretty horn from t h e wall.It shaped like a quaint carved Alpine horn and had hung just beneath an olf rifle.
"what a pret ty horn t hat is"said Dai sy as she looked it over.
"This is the horn wit h which George calls our cows when they wander too far away.My h usband who is now in your army carved these pictures on it.H e also did this"she t he boy the woman added as she t ook from the shelf a broze bell on which was cut very cleverly a picture of a cow.

"Th is is one of the bells th at our best cow wore, but now since we are going to take them to morrow to a pasture farvup th e mountains t o be safe from raiding Landolinians, she must wear a larger bell."
Now from the lower part of a cupboard George took several curious and pretty objects made from wood. Th ere were little kittens doing all sorts of t hings.
One of these painted black was called the "H allowees baby". George also showed them a little picture of a schoolroom for boy and girlscouts, with real maps hanging on yhe walls, while on t he desk at which sat a girlscout teacher was a globe to represent t he earth .From th is th e girlscout teach er was given a lesson to a schoolroom full of child scouts.
"People like to buy bears too and fat h er, also makes them.W"George exclaimed."Fathersold more of those t han anyt hing else he can make. "
Violet and her sisters and Penrod were pleased with each th ing in turn th en suddenly Mey l clapped their hands with joy. George had shown th em a big bunch of real beautiful Edelweiss mixed wit h roses.
"Isn't they just beautiful flowers! Why George I could almost t hink th ey were for us."
"Yes they are."
"My own Father the Emperor told me George"said Penrod h imself"T hat it is so difficult to find t hose flowers"pointing to t he edelweiss.
"Yes that is very true indeed, it grows far up the h eights, where all is ice and snow . To find the flowers I wan wanted I had to climb one of the sharpest peaks.S ee h ow t he rocks cut my hands."he added wit h a laugh .
"Poor hands"said Jenni e and she stroked th e scar in one of his roughened little palms"ut "she added, her blue eyes shining as sh e gave a secondary glance to her sisters"You did risk this for us th ough George an and since you have tried to help us and make us happy we'll do everythin g we can for you too...."
It was notlong now before it would be Ch rist mas eve. Around a large square table in Emperor vivians h eadquarters sat a happy hearted little group.They were t alking of the morrow which them would be Christmas Eve and at t he sam t ime were wat watching a lon g line of soldiers out in t he main Company St re t wondering what they all would do when Christmas eve arived.
"Christmas or no Christmas those brave boys and girls in uniform can't find much time to be idle can t hey?" And the ot hers had to laugh with James Vivian as they looked out of the window at so many of th e child scouts drill ing."
"But I will tell you what we all must do"said Penrod who had seen the look of disappointment in the faces of his little sisters.We all must each give something of what we got to my sisters."
To this the ot hers readily agreed, but violet and h er sisters wanted all gifts given to the child scouts and refugees first of all and finally only when t h is was agreed to did happiness reign once more.In t hat group besides Violet and her sisters and t heir three brot hers were two great gentlemen who were no other than Rodney Graves and H endro Dargar, also a lady who alt hough the gold of her hair had given way to litt le streaks of gray was very beautiful still.Even at a glance it might be seen th at one of the gentlemen was very shrewd and had good but sinister features.H e was Hendro Dargar and wit h his partner Rodney Graves had come to talk it over with Emperor Vivian about t h e preparations of the Christmas Eve celebration.
Many a time he had spoken t o violet and her sisters about t h e dangers of t h eir expeditions.H e had feared that they were careless little girls h eedless of any dangers they might face to gain success for t h eir countrys cause, and oft en had not been afraid to tell them so.Yet once th ree of th e little girls had risked th eir lives to save him.Once t h ey had gone t o pay him a friendly visit and one night when they remained there the building in which he and they lodged mysteriously took fire.Violet and her sisters had been awakened by a chocking sensation caused by the smoke and wit hout one thought of the danger they ri i risked they rescued him.They even did not pause for breath untill they had reached the room in which Dargar being just aroused from sleep by thenoise of flames and the smoke stood dazed and helpless. Th ey themselves guided him out of the building.Violet and her sisters had helped the man t hrough the flames and heat to a place of safty, lit tle girls mind you rescueing a man, a celebrated m n with whose fame(in this story)) the whole world had long been ringing.Not h ing made h im so happy t h ough as to be surrounded by those seven angel possessed little girls, and t o listen t o everyt hing they could and would tell.Very often when they had not much to do did they come and visit him and his chiefs who did so much for the countrys cause.Penrod himself was the idol of the Emperor, while to his mother not here now the very dearest of everyone was the seven brave little princesses. Though two the two loved Penrod now very dearly they loved their little daughters best, and I suppose you would believe.t hat t hat would make Penrod jealous but it did at not . For their sake he would rather be in the lurch as to say for who loved Violet and her sisters bett er than he did!Nobody.

"No Father dearest "Said Violet coaxingly, as she sat upon h is knee"You promished to tell us more ago about the litt le girl you yourself used to play with when you was a litt le boy prince and who never complained because she had been or had to be so ill and so quiet and still."
Then the great Abbiannian emperor told them of a Christmas long ago, when t raveling on hors back he found sitt ing upon a door step a litt le girl with crutches and how he took care of her and had his father and mother adopt her as his little sister for he had none.
"Did t hey do it Father!"Asked Penrod.
"They sure did my brave children, for t H e little girl had no parent s and her name was Anna Marguerite, and her good gent le ways taught me a lesson even as good as I was th en t hat I have carried with me all through life!"
"What is it!"came in a chorus of child voices.
"It taught me what a beautiful thing it is to always be patient gentle and good, for even if we are hepl helpless through affliction, we can do much to brighten others lives.Anna Marguerite you know when I found her on cructhes was a little invalid who couldn't h ardly walk even with the help of th e crutches.When I saw her continually in t hat state even after her adopt ing by my parents it made me feel very sad.But it told me though that t h e that t he little girls heart was full of unselfishness and love."
"did Anna Marguerite ever get well? "asked Jennie.
"Yes indeed.Fat her tried many a great sergeon untill t he right one was found who did the work.Your own dear mother if she was here now would tell you for she was once t he lit tle helpless girl."
A look of greatvsurprise was on every face for none had known that emperor Vivian wife had ever been an invil invalid."
"Yes"Emperor Vivancontinued with a happy smil e "Our Dear Blessed Lord gave to my little childhoods friend a chance to get well, and t hough she was adopted by my parents you must know she was never really my true sister and yet I couldn't when we both grew up part with her for all t h e world and gold and silver that is in it.And as she was such a nice saintly woman she would help me in my work since my fat her and moth er had died and t herefore you know now when she is your mot her.she too is a most ambitious woman who also makes th e best of every opport unity opportunitybut come dears it is getting late for dinner and we sure are all hungry.Th en this afternoon we'll make final preparations for to morrow night. Then we'll have the Gr Grand beautiful Midnight Mass and t he presents will be distrubut ed by my dear little daughters Ch ris Christmas morning."
How eager in deed were violet and.her sisters for t he coming of that great day, not to enjoy it for themselves mostly but to enjoy it to make ot hers happy.
Barbara Henrietta came int o the tent just as her refugee mother looked up from the letter she had been reading . By a wide but short table stood Mr H enryson his thick lips screwed up(not pop) as if for whistling------Barbara had frequent ly noticed that expression on her fathers face,,, when anything uncomfortable happened .
"We shall have to go it is the orders."Mrs H enryson said.
"By to morrow night s train"Mr H enryson said.H e turned to Barbara who had slipped quietly int o the big army chair, standing near the tent doorway. She looked very hot and was sweating.
"H ow would you like to remain or make a visit to the Vivienite girl and boyscouts who are under the command of the great little Vivien Girl Princessen at Stampede Run!"h e asked.
Mrs Henryson looked up quic quickly.half relieved, half sorry that he so abruptly should have solved the difficulty which as yet she herself had been unwilling to face.
"I know"Barbara said soft ly but decidedly"Ty That I would not like it at all.I'm afraid of those girl and boyscouts and th e Vivian Girls as they're called.They're fight ers and may pick a fight with me."
"Oh Barbara dear"h er mother leaned forward, eagerly."Younw are greatly mistaken.They are all good Abbiannians lovable and nice.It would be----"
"Wr jolly, like being amongst angels."supplement ed Mr H Hear yson.
"Barber who was a lit tle foriegn Irish girl looked rather sceptical.Jolly seemed to her scarcely the term to use in conn ection wit h a visit t o child scouts who were great for che h ad seen t h em pass by on horseback and to her they looked military and fierce, .
"You know d ear""Mrs H enryson urged;"H ow often ycu have wanted to go and see these great Christiangirl and boyscouts, to see th e famous Vivien Girls."
"Y-es Mamma"Barbara said doubtfully"Only couldn't we go some other time. We are foriegners you know and th ey sai say Abbiannji Abbiannians don't like foriegners and are deporting many every day out of the country.And too we are so busy getting ready for Christmas....."

Which pleas quite at aggered Barbara mother.She glanced anxiously over at the tall gen t leman near the table .
"Barbara dear girl"Mr H enryson said;"Mamma has just recieved a let t er from your Grandfather Henryson.H e was an officer in the army and fell badly wound ed in t he awful fighting at Henriet ta near Ophelia.H e is in a very bad con dit ion and I and your mot her have to go down there to morrow in th at part of the christian camp and it is far away as th e army is so big.As th e trip is or may be dangerous we can't for your safty t k take you, and we don't want t o leave you here in th is tent home, for what must be an indefinite length of t ime wit h no one but just soldiers h ere to look after you and God knows those poor soldiers have too much to do as it is.So we decided to let you go visiting too---up at the Vivianite camp.Believe me you don't like to go I'm sure but when t h e t ime comes wh en you have to come back t o me w you won't like to leave them eit her."
Barbara blinked rapidly.
"I think Grandfather Henryson would like to see me-----very very much ."she suggested .
"Of course h e would dear."her mother said"That is if he were well enough. But even if he would like to see you even though wounded it is quite impossible be Barbara this time and it is at our way either.The soldiers won't let you go th rough with us.We have to obey the military rule "No children through"dangerous territ ory.If you do us soldiers are not responsible for what Glandelinians will do to them.Now suppose you tell Miss Mildred t hat you and sh e are leaving this part of the camp very soon probably to morrow morning December 2It h for th e Vivianite camps.Tell her I will be upstairs presently"
It t ook Barbara an unusally long time to mount one flight of steps in Mildreds little house agroess from th e tent , leading to th e large cheery playroom of the camp house(not mouse)
"Why Miss Barbara"Mildred exclaimed, looking up from her sewing."I do believe you have been crying."
"No"Barbara shook her head."I feel like it but I'm not going to.Miss Mildred we are visiting, ----you and I."
"Where to.!"
"The Vivienite camps.Oh I'm scared."
"Scared of th e Vivienites.what nonsense.They're lovely litt le girl and boyscouts.But we'll be back for Ch ristmas."
Barbara plumped herself disconsolately down among the sofa cushions.
"I don't know.Oh dear I hope so.Why I couldn't spend Christmas at the Vivianites camp.They're fierce.They look dreadful even t h e good looking ones seem as if they'd knife you if you look at t h em."
"Come Miss Barbara.Don't be foolish.They're dangerous to only th e wicked enemies who fight this kind of a war and like to murder little children."

"Come Barbara."
Mildred gat hered up wraps and bags.The train full of soldiers had come to a momentary standing before a long low military building within t he camps set in the midst of a winterless country scene with trees in December starting to get green it was so warm.It was a train that goes through the christian positions as far as the last of th e camps bringing more soldiers.Barbara t urned from thee window wist fully and half fearfully and followed Mildred down the car i aisle.It was five oclock in the afternoon December the twenty first but out here in the open daylight t here was bet t er scenery than there had been in the refugee encampments.Babaras ch eeks were flushed and her eyes bright.For two hours ch e had been riding th rough a world of Christ ian encampments where scenery reigned supreme, where innumerable camps of tents st ret ched unbrokenly and beaut ifullly in color back t o t he tree covered undulating h ills beyond which too were lined on summits with tents and cannons.Barbara true child of winter winter was sadly disappoint ed and sore too that winter did not come and give all these landscapes a good covering of snow, for h er heart revelled in such scenes especially at Ch rist mas, and even Mildred declared these scenes dreary beyond description with the suntrying in vain to shine th rough a smoke canopied sky.
Hot winds were blowing from the southeast.Th ere were great crowds of soldiers at various points on or recreation and doing all sorts of th in gs of playing games and Barbara marvelled at the color of th eir uniforms.At th e rear of th e platform of the stat ion stood a big old fashioned army wagon drawn by a pair of st out young black horses, at th eir heads waited a stalwart soldier of about middle age, and with the same air as ot her soldiers showed and armed to the teeth.In th e wagon sat a litt le girlscout officer in only waist and dress but she had a kindly though dignified look.At sight of Barbara and her maid the little girlscout also armed not ioned to the man who hurried forward at once.Barbara seeing the armed girlscout was awed.

"I reckon you are the little refugee missy we got a descript ion of"The soldier said holding out h is hand to Barbara."Your mot her sent a note to us telling me where to t ake you but t his girlscout took the reigns and is going t o bring you.she's waiting yonder in t he s wagon.what's the matter child.You're not scared are you.she won't hurt you."

H e t ook the bags from Mildred,,, and led th e way back to where t he girlscout waited.It was Angelinia Aronburg herself, who reached out two welcoming hands t o h er small little passenger.

"My dear friend"she said."I am very glad to see you.You will have good times wit h us while your father and mother are at your Grandfathers."

"This is Miss Mildred"Barbara said timidly."Mildred and I are very fond of one anot her."

The girlscout was also very pleased to meet Miss Mildred, and she said she was sure both she and Miss Mildred would both enjoy their visit to the Vivianite encampments.Then Barbara was given the seat beside Agelinia Aronburg, and the soldier having att ended to the luggage got on at the back and sat th ere and then they were off down the long st raight company st reet bordered with tall beaut ifully tri colored tents as big as tents used in a circus..

The little girl had never as they passed on down t he company street seen so many children of various sizes a uniform in uniform.The boys except for the shortness of their trousers like boys do wear were uniformed exactly like the soldiers but their hats were mostly sailor fashion except th at they were much bigger and were of two colors, purple on top and red underneath . The girlscouts were big h eart shaped hat s, also purple on top and red under neath , and also wore lavander colored waists and yellow dresses wigh purple dots along the lower rim.The stockings too were yellow and the shoes red.They were all armed with cart idge belts and pistols, and had a long rifle slung over th eir backs.They were not however mounted but here and there in the company street s in groups sit her in conversation or just gazing at the scenery and others where there were open squares were p; playing the same games seen among children in America. Many stopped to look at her as the wagon passed by and all greet ed Angelinia Aronburg with salut es and cheers who saw her.Outside of what they were armed with they did not look so fierce and savage to h er after all, though they did look sit her serious or what you may also call"Tough " But. they were, their army life made them t ough.some nodded to her and ot hers merely looked or stared.The way they looked and st ared wh was what made her a little afraid of them. Then soon t hey reached a more open in the camp in which stood a large whit e square h ouse more like a big Country Estate manison standing in an open country spac e some distance back from the Company Street at the head of a long avenue of maples.Barbara now standing up in the wagon, could not try as she might see another house anywhere, but a "sea of tents and small army hunts and barracks but all made of tent canvass.Not one of the t ents were stripped as she had at a distance seen Gladelinian tent s.She believed Glandelinian tents were prettier but oh she was awfully afraid of those soldiers who wore long gray coats, big square topped black hq hats like as she said"Colle e College Bums" and yellow orche pant s and black shoes, and t he gray coats covered all over with those horrid black buttons.She was too young to pronounce the name of those soldiers correct ly so she called them "Glandelions, and said she believed the devil h imself would be afrad afraid of them they lo-ok so fierce.She did see them for she once nearly got caught by Gladelinian cav r cavarly. It comforted her somewhat that the christian camps were so large and square and so ext ensive and t hat the child scouts here did look so "Wilful and N aught y"as then t h e Glandelions would be afraid of them as it is said they are.

Up the long avenue they drove to be met at the end by a number of boy scouts who came running forward with rifles at the ready one of t hem crying out;

"H alt there.what do you wish here."but seeing it was Angelinia Aronburg and a little girl, they halted abruptly with smiles lov lowered th eir weapons and saluted.

"Did you rescue the lit tle girl?"asked one of the boys.(who was Tim)

"No."Said Gertrude."Her parents went to see their father who is wounded and we are to t ake care of her untill they come back.She seems a lit tle afraid of my troop but she'll love them all when she gets used to t hem."

There came up a big boyscout "it was Walter St arring, another boy who was dressed in a uniform fit for a prince, and the latter Barbara did classify in her mind as a real prince.Angelinia Aronburg did not stop at t he front door which Barbara thought very odd of her, but drove on round to a side door the three handsomely uniformed boyscouts following.The side door opened ont o a lit tle porch of its own and leading direct to the living room.

767.. The moment the wagon stopped, the door opened and two princely little girls appeared in the doorway dressed not in un iforms they but in t heir best princely civilian garb, while one little girl edging between them had a funny little three cornered shadwl thrown over her shoulder . One of the two little girls was the same size as Angelinia Aronburg, and the cloti clothing they were made Barbara think of some beautiful portraits of seven little girls hangin g in the library in their own far away home.

"You are very welcome my dear"one of the little girls said.

"so this is really little Barbara."The taller one added.And they both kissed her.Then the new comers were taken int o the cool brigh t living room where th e dinner table or supper table or whatever you call it was drawn up in the center and close to a wide oo o open bay window. But at that moment Barbara bewildered by the attentions of seven pretty little girls , by the strange surroundin g s and by all sorts of sounds outside felt a sudden home sick longing for her mother and father,---in eed indeed for all t he dear familiar sights and sounds of home.Joice Vivian saw the quick quivering of the childs lips.

"My dear"she said bending over the little form in t he big chair by the bay win dow(n ot bay mare)"Is there anything you would like;!.!!.!"

"Barbara's look was rather wistful."No, n--o-o-o-o------thank you;I've never been away from my parents before."

Jennie vivian had a sudden happy thought.

"Violet"she said in an undertone turning to her sister who was always chosen as their leader"Don't you think we might allow our little Bowser in a for a few moments just for to day!!! ;;;!.!""

"Bos Bowser was the smallest dog which Tim had brought for them. Violet and her s other sisters stared at Jennie in amaz m amazement.

"Bowser."Exclaimed Joice.

"Why in here."added Jennie,and she made a swift explanatory gesture toard the little dropping figure in the big char by the window.It was Catherine herself who opened the yard door and called in the little Fox Terrier puppy Bowser in.

"Barbara"she began."Are you afraid of little or big dogs."I assure you that Bowse Bowser is;"

Before Catherine could e get any further Barbara was suddenly out of her chokair and down on t he h earth rug holding the little puppy in her arms.

A little later it was a laughing little girl who came to dinner with Violet and her sisters duly escorted by Bowser who developed an alarming appetite for surreptious cookies soaked in milk(not silk)

"My dear little Barbara"Jennie e began at once catching sight of these bits of by play;;;then she stopped checked by a warning glance from Violet herself. After all Jennie told herself it was only for to day ad to night.Of course as a regular thing they had never before allowed a dog in the living room and never would again.

"Ad now"Violet said, when dinner was over, seeing that Barbara looked sleepy" how would you like to go straight to bed Barbara.?"

The child looked very uncertain, and Catherine giggled.Bowser was such a dear.

"Just think of it Angeline said."Why you are to have the very room we sleep in.You'll like t hat won't you Barbara.?"

"Am I to sleep all by myself with you."Barbara asked anxiously.

Violet, and her sisyers l sisters looked at each other and couldn't help smiling.

"We thought you would prd prefer such an arrangemnh."Daisy said.Your Governess Mildred will be right in the next room, they are not communicating rooms however.Still if you would rather sleep in a room all by yourself;;;"

"Oh no thank you."Barbara answered hastily, then she beamed upon those seven little girls"I'll tell you---I'll take Bowser."

There was a moment of surprised silence and Violet half smiling glanced at Penrod who was grinn ing.A dog in the living room was bad enough u but upstairs. Hettie came to the rescue---she hurried out of the room, returning presently with a doll one of her own which she handed to Barbara.

"My dear litt le girl friend"she said"Here is a much nice roommate than Bowser, This is one of my dolls, whnd which last year somebody gave to me for a Christmas present.I called her by on my own name Hettie vivian, and I used to take her to bed with me every night. "

Barbara surveyed "H et t ie vivian" the doll in silence for a moment or two.T his doll had even in its first makings been a beauty a doll which only a rich child could only get.But yet altogether Barbara felt that it would t ake some time to become properly acquainted with this doll, when in fa ct though she is a little girls dolls were a thing she never liked because as she used to say to her mother"They're never alive." Therefore she could not imagine taking the slightest liberties with her.she glanced down at Bowser convulsively trying to catch his own tail.

"I think if you don't mind Prin cessus I'll take Bowser"she said polit ely but firmly."You see she"she added with a quick upward glance of confidence, so like her fathers"Bowser is so alive.A doll is only dead even when it is born."

"It was Jenn ie who voiced the defeat of herself and her sisters.

"Very well my dear"she said quietly"You shall have Bowser---for to night."

It was Jennie herself who took Barbara upstairs after she had been formally kissed by her sisters.And Bowser went too not quite understanding what this new affairs meant but giving himself up to the delight of the momentwith all the abandom abandonment of a frivolous light hearted puppy.With the mischievous insight of puppyhood he choose Jenn ie for the partaular object of his attentions making little growling rushes at h er feet, worrying her long night gown and managing thin gs in general so that she finally arived at the head of the stairs dizzy and bewildered, and with the vague idenathat Bowser must be teins at leas , surely no one dog could have been in so many places at th e same time.In the big unfamiliar room upstairs, Barbara found a decidedly discomolate Mildred.Already Miss Mil dred had uquit e enough of camp life.But when Jennie Vivian had gone down stairs again Barbara and Mildred and Bowser had a romp that caused the fourt een pair of little r eyes in the room below t o look in amazement in at the ceiling and to cause Penrod to go up stairs to see what was"Blowing up" up there.

He could not helpvbein g a little stern in telling them th at they couldn't make so much noise up there like that and togo to bed."

After he was through with scolding, and gone;

"If you like Miss Mildred"Barbara said."You can brin g in t he things from your bed, and sleep here on this other empty bed---its a jolly big one."

And Miss Mildred who was young, and sociably inclin ed---did like the room beyond, but liked better th e one where the other beds were for her own was so dreary and also warm and sultry--while here where Barbara slept and which was th e Princesses own room n and which had once been a guest chamber there was a big wide open win dow also, and outside they could see like st ars in the sky many big camp fires burning.Bowser entirely approved of this new arrangement an he found that by takin g little running leaps from the foot of Barbaras bed he could land right on Mildreds head--th e fact that each time he made the trip Miss Mildred dived beneath the bed clot hes with a shriek only added jest to the game and brought Penrod up a second time.T he seven little vivian girls downst airs who had a lot to do with fellow child playmates all their lives yet nevertheless felt that there must be something wrong somewhere and sent Penrod up stairs a second time to stop that "Confounded noise." Th at was not the way Abbiesannian children had beenbrought up t o behave after they had retired for t he night .

"To morrow night"said Jennie Vivian herself, and most decidedly;"On no account must Bowser be allowed to go upstairs.Indeed he must not come beyond the kitchen again . And her sisters""

And her sisters noo nodded agreeingly, though violet being wiser in her day ad generation, even if she was t he leader said nothing but giggled.

The next morning,,, when Barbara came slo l slowly down stairs she found th e large living room empty save for a few soldier guards standing on watch at the door. he just now feared soldiers no matter what color they were and she for a moment hid from them. She saw from her hidin g place t h at the breakfast table was already set,,,, but she had got up so early that it was still dark. h she had arisen at six in the morning.

"Bowsw Bowser"Barbara said catching him up"I see the m maple syrup is on the table and I can smell pancakes can you.I think they are pankcakes for th ey have that smell.Do you like pancakes Bowser dear."

Five minutes later Angelinia Aronburg in full uniform coming in from the kitchen for it was she who was making the pancakes for violet and her sisters as well as their father and brothers, found the room(t h e boys) empty in her turn.she wondered where Barbara had gone for she had seen her go int o the living room.she looked out the door, and out on the path before th e door Barbara still in her night gown, and bare headed was having a romp with the three big dogs of the Princesses.They had four, but you must remember th e wounded one was under the care of Jack Evans.For a moment it was such a funn y sight that Angelinia Aronburg was bent double wit h laught er, but finally she opa cent rolled h erself and hurried straight to the door.

"Barbara."she called."Come in at once my dear.You must get dressed.Breakfast will soon be ready and all the soldiers are laughing at you.They were for they too thought it was too funny for words.

And Barbara being always an obedient child obeyed.Angelinia Aronburg kissing her returned to the kitchen.A few moment s later she reappeared, accompanied by Violet, and her sisters, and followed by their Father, and three brot hers and lastly followed by Jennie T urner, carrying the breakfast porridge.On t he hearth rug looking very much astonished but delighted-sat one of th e big dogs, on a footstool opposite--evidently too in the same bewildered but delighted frame of moind----sat the second big dog, the ot her one was lying down under the table, and Bowser, with a superior air as of one to whom such luxious surroundi ngs were perfect ly familiar, t rotted busily about the room.The moment Angelinia Aronburg appeared he made a little growling rush at the toes of her red army shoes.Just inside the doorway the little girls, and t he four great soldiers, the emperor and his two sons, and Evans himself and Angelinia Aronburg too had come to a sudden halt.It was a spe chless halt too, even Jennie Turner who was not usually an easy goig sort of girl and severe in her nature, and who had a very good busy tongue against the foe found no words to equal to the occassion.But Barbaras smile was all embrac ing, all persauding for she feared they were angry.(They didn't look it but found it difficult to prevent themselves from laughing outright).In effect it was the very smile with which her father had been wont to greet others.

"Please Princesses" Barbara said coming forward"I do hope t you don't mind Rover, and H ans and Spottie coming in with Bowser .They looked so hurt in their feelings when I went to shut the door on them.

As in deed no ne of that real royal family by the door had the heart or the courag e to utter a word of remonstrance against something which was no wrong at all or even to which there was no objection.But oh such a funny sight . They could have screamed but they supressed their mirth.Barbara smiling and happy was like a ray of sunshine in t he room, and they did so want her visit short as it might be to be a happy one !

"Besides"Violet reminded her other sisters.It is not as if t here were not any other children about for her to play with.The boy and girlscouts outside are so busy they cannot yet do a thing.Perhaps the dogs will keep her from getting too home sick.Later on we'll see to it she'll have the company of the scouts too."

And for the first ttwo days December the 22,and 23th with th e help of her four foo four footed friends Barbara did manage to get on with only occassional attacks of that dreaded home sickness.she was out most of the day, sometimes running up and down the long hill back of the barn, the dogs running and leaping beside her.The big barn held many att ractions for her, she made swift friends with the horses belonging to Violet,and her sisters and ot hers.Then too it was such a fine place to play hide and go seek in with the dogs. The main thing which held her curiousity the greatest was to see frequently great squadrons of cavarly soldiers ride past and up and down the company streets, to see immense lines of soldiers march past to the field s for drilling and still more astonishing still to see many child scouts go riding past on swift horses.violet and her sisters had always a talent of story t elling for tiding over the dangerous hour of twilight.wevnin g going to bed was not so very bad with Bowser scamparing b side her.Fate in the shape of Barbara and Master powe r had himself had proved too strong for violet and her sisters, and she always fell asleep as soon as her h ead touched the pillow.But on the morning of the third day, Barbara awoke to the factt hat to morrow would be really Christmas Eve.she sat up in the midle of the big bed very wide awake indeed.

"Oh Miss Mildred."she called.

From his warm nest at the foot of the bed, Bowser poked out a protesting eye.

"Oh Miss Mildred."Barbara called again.

Bowser brought out a second eye to bear upon the situation.What in t h e world did the child mean waking folks up at such an hour.It was th ree oclock in the morning.,or once at l east Mildred was to thoroughly in accord with Bowser.

"Miss Barbara"she answered sleepily"For goodness sake do lie doo down and go t o sleep ig again."

"Mildred"said Barbara soberly"Do you kn ow that to morrow will be Christmas Eve."?

"Of coursevI know it"Mildred answered forlornly. Miss Mildred had found the days very long at this part of the christian lines despitevthe beauty that Violet and her sisters had.

"I want to go home."Barbara said, a quiver in her voice.

"Im deed.So do I."Miss Mildred agreed."nut just now I want to go to sleep even more.Do lie down Miss Barbara."

It was was a very sober Barbara who came slowly into the breakfast room that morning---a very sober Barbara who ate her buckwheat cakes and maple syrup, in absolute silence, though she wondered why Violet and her sisters an d Penrod eating alone this time only ate a little bacon, four slices of toast between and bowls of oatmeal.She didn't kn ow they didn't like buckwhat buckwheat cakes.Violet and her sisters looked at each other in dismay...

Evidently the dreaded moment had arrived. They liked to see others happy whether they themselves were happy or not. Violet remarked that it was a fine day for going out and watching everything that the boy and girlscouts do, and that she would let some boy and girlscouts off duty to play with her; but Barbaras assent came very faintly indeed. Jennie herself produced an entirely new new kind of jam, which though she and her sisters were not crazy for sweets they themselves nevertheless were very fond of, but Barbaras interest in it was as if it had been Castor oil. Therefore then Jennie willingly drew the dogs into notice; Barbaras smile only came waveringly. Then suddenly three of the little girls made a simultaneous rush for the little girls chair. Barbara had pushed it back, and was crying, actually cryn crying. The seven extremely agitated little princesses implored to know what the trouble was--though they knew quite well, and appreciated the fact for they too often knew what sorrow and lonesomeness and also homesickness meant---while the dogs of various sizes quite as agitated bg begged quite as plainly to know what was the matter--Bowser himself making little flying leaps into the air for the express purpose of thrusting his little cold black nose under the napkin Barbara held before her face.

"It's it's because----because-- Christ--- Christmas is --so near--and I want to go ho-me---I mean, want to see mamma and pappa." Barbara wailed.

"But my dear they're too far away----" Hettie began hesitatingly.

"At that moment Catherine herself had an inspiration of something which she and her sisters intended doing anyway.

"Barbara dear" she said "You don't know what a ni nice Christmas you are going to have here with us princesses."

The napkin came down, Barbaras tear stained face came dcwnttt up. "You mean--" then Barbaras face disappeared for the second time behind the much crumpled napkin. How could one associate a real Christmany Christmas with Princesses who were so great and who may celebrate Christmas their own way and not the way she likec liked it. and too there was so much warm weather and no snow and how she liked to see snow.

"Barbara dear" Daisy herself said looking akenst at Penrod "Eat your breakfast up now, like a good little girl. Be brave. You and I and my sisters have got a good deal of shopping to do between now and dinner time and a lot more in the afternoon. As for snow the forest fires won't let us have any. but never mind. A green Christmas is better. We're used to that ourselves for it never snows where we came from. Cheer up. We're going shopping and you can go along."

"shopping." The change in Barbaras face and voice was electrical. I did not know"---her hesitating glance included not only Violet and her sisters but rough dignified looking Prince Penrod;;;;;;;;;;"I thought maybe you were too--too classy for Christmas--maybe you didn't care for Christmas."

This brought a good laugh out of Violet and her sisters and Penrod too for Barbaras words struck them funny. Didn't care for Christmas. Why for Violet and her sisters if Christmas came three times a month with its Beautiful High Masses, would not be enough for them.

"Of course we care to keep Christmas." Jennie exclaimed when she could overcome herself and her sisters loyally echoed "Of ccurse. Christmas and Easter is the best in the Year. It don't come often enough."

Indeed (you are in need feed heed)) into the mind of each little girl had sent ered the firm determination to live up to little Barbaras expectations and keep her happy orvdie. Jennie Vivien rising n obly to the occassion in a very noble manner, remarked that they had always observed the festival of Christmas, but first always Attended Midnight Mass, and then other Masses of the morning, then candor ccmpelled Angeline to add; "Though we can't have it as extensively as had been the fashion of late y a years because of the war. We have to make raids to have Christmas."

"And Penrod added with a laugh;

"The raid I made at Ophelia will provide for that."

"Through you this year Joice observed" and when too we have a little guest with us, and little Jannie too and many ot her friends, we shall of course endeavor to consult her h ppiness in overy way possible. "

When one remembers that once already because of the war raging at Evangelinia Crania, Violet and her sisters had been forne forced calmly to sat down to breakfast as if they had no idea what Christmas really was wit h a dinn er suitable to the day for even a hobo with no interchange of even t he simplest grifts, thanks to Penrod this year--it really seemed as if they were behaving very well indeed for their little guest, with never a thought for themselves."

"Please" Babara laid down knife and fork (not new yourk with a cork) "May I go with one of the Christian men to get the tree?"

"The tree. T what tree?" said Angeline.

"The Christmas tree of course."

"The Christmas tree "Violet said." I don't know that we need to my dear as we have one which will be st up to night. i think Jennie dear" she turned t o her tallest sister "That some of the soldiers had better get that tree inside to day. We'll need a little extra work i on it to day. He can do th at work this afternoon."

"How about having Jack Evans pull one up by the roots for us." giggled Jennie.

"I---I--dare say" Violet answered. "H e could pull more than a tree up by the roots." Then she poured a third cup of hot milk. It was unprecedented to say according to the size of the cup but perhaps she felt the need of it.

Barbaras breakfast over, she danced away to tell Mildred the news, the good news. Miss Mildred sitting by a window watching the numb mu n umerous activities of army camp life outside, was giving one of the boyscout officers a detailed account of the way in which Christmas was kept at the Henryson home far away in the city of Pandora. she came quite willingly at Barbaras call to get her charge ready for the drive to the quartermaster encampment stores. As she stooped down to button the litt le girls thin summer like coat Barbar noticed a wistful look in Mildredsttttt in Mildreds face. A moment later Barbara appeared breathless, in the living room, three moments lat er she reappeared, breathless upstairs.

"You are to go too Mildred, we're to have to go in the Princesses carriage." She danced about drawing on her little gloves which she wore at all seasons. "We're going Christmas shopping together, sames always, are'nt we Mildred!!!"

Out on the porch when they came down they foun d all of the dogs waiting. Jennie, standing in the doorway listening to sundry parting directions from Angelinia Aronburg who knew the way, saw the thought growig in Barbaras eyes as she looked at Bowser.

"Barbara dear." Jennie Vivian hastened to say. "Tell the dogs that you will be back before long, then jump int o the carriage. My boyscout friend Tim who is to drive is waiting. Would you like to sit in front with h im."

"I thought" Barbara began "I would take Bo------"

Bowser wagged agreement. Of course she intended to take him, but Bowser had not reckoned on Princess Jennie.

"Not to day dear." Jennie answered very firmly. "Drive three and half miles down the broad Company Street to our shopping destination and back with that little bunch of quaksilver in the carriage! Never."

However neither had either Jennie or any of her sisters or Penrod reckoned on little Bowser. As long as the carriage was near enough to the h ouse for backward glances to be expected Bowser stood one of a seemingly dipsolsolate trio. The moment they turned the bend and into the main Company Street and Tim urged the horses on a little faster, Bowser to the enjoyment and mirth of the crowds of boy and girlscouts watching, darted down the steps and was off in swift persuit. some of the child socutsctried to stop him but could not catch the animal. As he too disappeared around the bend in the company street, the big dogs too well trained trained to follow, gazed at on another sadly.

Half a mile from "Home" Bowser thought it good to let his presence be known. Of course the carriage had to be stopped, and he was taken in a wriggling, triumphant piece of dogmanity whereupon he nestled down in Barbaras lap (not flap alap) with such a sigh of relief and cont entment that ev overn violet and her sisters had to smile while Penrod said;

"There's no getting the best of that puppydog."

Barbara had never known a store like the one they went to that morning and yet Violet and her sisters bought nothing. They used on e or the ot her gave orders to the Quarter Master Sergeants as to what was the supplies to be sent.

Yet at one side of the quartermaster store, was something like a military post office, as here to Barba ras surprise and delight Violet some looked letters over and then came away with two letters which she gave to Barbara. There were many for Violet and her sisterscee and for Penrod, one of which when Violet read made her sent Tim straight off to the express office of h e big building, where he found a big box waiting, which according to directions he stowed out of sight under the back seat of the large carriage. For once at least in her lifetime, Barbara had not only the pleasure of selecting her purchases, and as many as she wanted, but of seeing them wrapped up, and then of being allowed to carry them about with her---that is untill all the accumulation of packages large and small, square, round or oblong grw t oo unmanageable for one small pair of arms. In each of Barbara letters had come a check for her Christmas shopping, which was cashed by the obliging Quarter Master Sergeant, and then which Violet made her keep saying;

"This is a military store. Nothing is for sale here. We can use it for nothing at our orders.."

"Oh "said Barbara" at last turning to Violet who was beside her. "I don't known when I've had more fun getting things and not paying for them. This is such a dear dear queer and large store. And so many soldiers in here too."

Bowser, trotting busily about, was having the time of his life.H over before in his short existance had he been anywh re like this before.He liked immensely poking his nose in and out among the barrels, he liked making voyages of discoveru discovery into the dark recesses ben a ben ath the couners counters he liked sniffing at h the heels of the many soldiers getting supplies also h e liked the sweet crackers, Barbara got for him and no doubt he thought with complacent pity of those poor virtuous dogs at home who had not the cou courage to follow.

"Bowser's had such a beautiful time."Barbara said as they slowly drove home rubbing his little sa wdust covered nose with her muff."I don't believe he saw what I bought for him---he was worrying at a big bag of potatoes, way at the back of the store just then."

"what did you buy forhim."Hattie asked.

There was no doubt in her mind about this being the very nicest Christmas shopping she and her sisters had ever done.

"A ba--double--ll" Babra whispered, holding up a small round parcel.

Dinner was ready when they got home, but hungry as she was Barbara had first to smuggle her numerous bundles upstairs.Mildred had done some oc shopping on her own acount, and she too was busily secreting various packages

While Violetmadh and her sisters h ad hurried--one might even say scooted st raight from the carriage to their own room, all sorts of queer shaped bulgy things under their driving capes.Altogether Barbara felt the atmosphere growing more Christmasy every moment , and came down to dinner in a flutter of great excit ement.

Dinner over Tim appeared at the side door with a wagon t his time, and Mildred and Barbara sat on the straw in the wagon.

"I't will be fun choosin g a Christmas tree like this, won't it!"Barbara said leaning out her hand to wave at the four big dogs frisking on behind for Tim bade those dogs almost sharply to follow.It took some time to choose the tree for few pines where here.The Vivian Girls wanted this tree for the Military chapel of this theirs where the Christmas Midnight Mass was to be. Then soldiers h ad to cut it down.The short hot December day was mergin g into twilight when the wagon a reappeared at the side door.On the porch Barbara waited a moment to look over the western sky, where small clouds glowed blood red and purple through the smoke.haze, then slowly the childs eyes turned from the western to the southeastern sky, which was black above with a strange radiance like a sunset glow below and along the horizon.Jennie Vivian coming to the door to see what had kept her, caught the wistful look in Barbaras eyes.

"Oh Barbara's she called."There's just time for tea for you must tell us about the tree.That is our own.We must settle where to have it."

Barbara turned a little reluctantly.Oh how she wished it was cold and would snow for Christmas.Because of the forest fire, secretly she hated the enemy.

In the living room, where it was uncomfortably warm and bright too with lamp light, with the supper table set, with the other little Princesses and their father and three brothers waiting, ea smiling but a bit anxious; with a great h eap of holly and evergreens in one corner, Barbaras's spirits came back.

"It's a beautiful tree"she said, with an upward sweep of her arms."General Tim Groveton says he has never seen a prettier.He's going to make a box for it to stand in this evening.I like your boyfriend scout he is extremly good and obliging--he says he never had a tree since the war began."

"This will be our first Christmas tree since I9II"Catherine said looking up from somethin g she was working on for the tree.

"T And thanks to the enemy"said Penrod sarcastically.

"Yes, the Glandelinsin Glandelinian nation h as spoiled Christmas for the whole world."said Violet bitterly.

Barbara gave a little gasp of wonder and pity, and went to stand beside violet.

"Oh"said Barbara-"but you weren't---I thought it was because your brother was poor---that he and you didn't---"

"For two years before this we were not able to keep Christmas as we'll be keeping it now."Jennie Vivian explained, and there was a regret in her voice.

"Yes, and t hanks to the enemy"said Penrod again sacractically. "If it wasn't for spoiling Christmas I'd on that day strike with a raid.I have a good mind to."

"Oh Barbara"said again, and then for the first time of her own accord she ventured to kiss violet,and her sisters, a nd when Angolinia Aronburg brought in the supper tray, Barbara was sitting cosily in Jennie's lap.

"As it would sure be hard tolding"Angolinia confided later to Tim"Which of them enjo ed seemed to be enjoying it the most.

"Bowser dear"said Barbara, that night as she cuddled or as he cuddled up beside her in the big chair before the bedroom window for a final look at th e red glare in the southeast before slipping into the great bed."Bowser do you know that this is the first Christmas for the Princesses for over twoyears.

You and I have got to do all we can to make it a perfect success a perfect success--do you understand Bowser.I'll offer my Holy Communion at the Mid night Mass for the intention that the wicked enemy won't start a fight to morrow".

The next day being Christmas eve was a busy one.The tree for the army church was sent away to the priest in charge, but the tree which was to be in the head quarters of Violet, and her sisters they decided to stand in the corner of the livin g room, in order too that the bigger dogs and all child scouts who would come or could com cin might share in the Christmas Eve night festivities it having been an accepted fact that they should be made free of that room- so far however only little Bowser was allowed to go upstairs.

"Though there is no knowing what m we ma may come to."Jean Jo would say with a laugh.(Not a tickle)

"I'll bet little Barbara is her own father all over again."was Violets verdict

"For I heard that some how he always manages to get wh at h e wants by simply taking things for granted.

Mildred herself helped Violet,and her sisters trim the big tree no one else was allowed in the living room from breakfast to dinner time . Barbara spent a part of the morning up in her own room(the room)ow wrappin g up and labeling her presents------h in dered most dilligently by Bowser, who was continually retiring under the bed with Barbars ball of pink and christi Christmas decored or c decorated cord.Now and then Bowser had to be shut int o the closet, not Barbara assured him ,because he had been bad but for fear h e should see the tying up of his own gifts. To comfort him the little girl gave him a sweet cracker, which was quite un ecessary, as the little mischief had a glorious t im r with the several good pair of shoes he foun d there--there was nothing Bowser enjoyed worrying more than a nice pair of soft shoes, unless it might be the toes of any one of the slippers belonging to the Vivian Girls, wit h the t oes in side . H er work over Barbara and Bo wser wandered down into the kitchen, where only two of the Princesses Violet and oice were busy at work, and which sm lt smelt delightfully nice and spicy.Th rough the open pantry door Barbara caught glimpses of shelves laden with good t hings.Barbara herself was set towork stringing or n cranberries and, p pink popcorn for th e trecese untilll dinner time.

In one corner of the livinf living room stoo d the tree, a tall old fashioned screen in front of it.To keep Bowser from penetrating the mysteries beyond that screen kept Barbara busy.The short afternoon was spent in watching th e many boy and girlscouts and soldiery too getting ready for Christmas Festivities.When Barbara and the dogs came in at dusk, Jennie Turner delightfully assisting Violet, and Joice at the cooking was just taking the hoy buscuits which she made herself for supper from the oven . After supper came the important question of the hanging of the stockings.

"Stockings"Repeated Daisy looking at Violet as she looked at her."Is it customary t o hang up more than one, Barbara?That is not an Abbisannian custom."

It wasn't.They never hang up stockings at Ch ristmas in Abbisannia.That custom was never known before untill Barbara suggested it to violet and her sisters who did not know what to make of it .

"Only one apiece."Barbara explained."But at home papa and mamma and I each hang up one and ---and ----I thought------"

"I am sure I shall enjoy hanging up my stocking very much"Violet hurried to say "But we don't have any.We never w ar them you know. Would something else do."

"You could make some from min e."said Barbara.

"I will try to then."declared Hatti e a little confusedly.Li fe held so many surprises for Violet and her sisters these days.

O "Of course we will"the others added, and Penrod couldn't help it .He had to laugh.

Bein g encouraged by Penrod laughing Barbaras smile was all including.

"If you don't mind"she said"Mildred might hang one up wit h ours--she's rather,vrat her, homesick."

"Why of course she can"said Angoline.

"And,"Barbara lowered her voice;|"suppose,----the dear things would enjoy it so---we hang up one for each of the dogs."

Violet, and he r sisters gasped and looked at each other, and then start ed giggling while Penrod rushed out of the room to hide his mirth.

"Eight stockings for you too will look lovely won't they!"Barbara as ed."H adn't we better hang them up here, so we can a,ll enjoy looking at them at the same time ?..!!!"

Violet, and her sisters gasped again . Jean ie h urriedly left the room. It was some time however before she came back. she had gone to a refugee camp to look up for stockings and who wouldn't oblige any of the brave good Vivian Girls for she came with more than the number required. she had a perfect stock of long black stockings in her hands. Barbara wo wondered wh y her eyes looked so kin d of wet and shin . shiny .

Tucked up in bed th at n ight the thought of those long limp stockings and there were more than sixteen of them danging from the shelf in the living room gave Barbara great satisfaction. Only she wondered again, why had princess Jennie kept hurrying from the room. And what had made the little princesses look so queer about their mouths, and eyes--- as if perhaps they might be going to cry--- was it because they were so pleased .? Downstairs, Penrod and violet and her sisters stood in a line surveyin g those stockings.

"Well" remarked Catherine. "I never heard of such a thing as hanging up stockings for Christmas Eve, least of all in company od of dogs, but there they are. They're the first thing called stockings ever hung up for Christmas eve in this countrys history."

"I believe "H ettie said a twin k,e twinkle in the eyes that were still "Kind of wet and shiny "that such a thing as hanging up ones stocking on Christmas Eve entails that we'll be getting out of bed at an unearthly hour on Christmas morning to examine its contents. But I too never h eard of such a th ing as this or of putting Ch ristmas presents in stockings. Did you Penrod dear?"

"Yes in deed." he answered. "They do that in the other countries and especially in the country where I was at called the "United States. Everybody hangs up their stockings there expecting Santa Clauss to come down a chimney and give presents?

"Well Santa Clauss will have hav h ave a fine chance to do that here" said Daisy.

"H e'll never come" declared violet wit h a giggle "Un less he's a fire eater. H e'll h v have to eat fire to come here these days with all our Calverinian and Angelin ia state foreests going up in flames and so many cities and towns and even Glandelin ian camps too" and she nudged Penrod playfully.

The midn ight Mass of course was as good and perfect as it could be expected in an army like this. Fortunately here every Regiment had its own Priest but only one priest could celebrate it, even in the big barracks where Violet and her sisters and their friends including little Barbara attended. Nevertheless the Midnight Mass lasted nearly four hours a nd a half because of the tremendous number of child scouts and also others who recieved H oly Communion. The l egiment al Bands played the music for the Midnight Mass singing and all the child scouts filled the air with the singing so that it sounded as if all the angels had come down from Heaven and were singing at the Mass. Violet and her sist ers to see to it that everybody were properly dressed for the Mass, and to see to it also that everything was in order had not had the chance to go to bed at all so that when the Mass was over they were very late getting to bed. And too it occured to Miss Mildred th at she had scarcely gone to bed at all after the splendid Midnight Mass when she heard Barbaras eager voice calling out;

"Merry Christmas Mildred. Merry Ch ristmas Bowser."

"Merry Christmas" Mildred answered, so sleepily tha t it made Barbara laugh , while Bowser only grunted, by way of response.

"I'm going to get up." was Barbaras next an nouncemen t , for she was so excited over the approach of Christmas that she had not hardly flo closed her eyes all night.

"It surely isn't near morning." Miss Mildred protested .

"It's only six oclock; I heard it strike just now." Barbara declared.

"And breakfast not untill ha lf past eight this morain g." Mildred groaned.

"See here Miss Babara" she added. "If I slip down and get you your stocking will you promise me to stay in bed for a while at least."?

"Mercy on us." Barbara exclaimed. "Why we're all to look at our stockd ngs to- gether. Why I wouldn't disappoint the Princesses or their brother for the world."

"Well then" Mildreds voice was very stern and decisive this time "You surely are not going to rout those poor good princesses out of their beds at this early time of day when they stayed up till midnight just to obliged oblige fixing up thin gs especially for you more than others."

At seven thirty oclock, Angelinia Aronburg, whose room opened from the living room heared the door of the latter softly opened and heard Barbaras voice saying;

10-437

"Deary me Bowser, how can the Vivian Girl Princesses lie in bed so long on Christmas morning.

Angelinia Aronburg came to the door.

"Merry Ch ristmas Barbara" she called out. "They'll be in presently. They' did not go to bed as they had lots to do. They'll make it up to night and probably to morrow."

After what seemed to Barbara an interminable length of time, the little Vivian Girls were seen by h er to cross the Company Street with P n P n Penrod and a number of girl and boyscouts, and to h er surprise for it was th e first time, she saw them on horseback, and they came at a quick rearing gallop and halted the horses abruptly and then dismounted. The three of the youngest of the princesses came in the others still stayed out. They found their small friend Barbara wait ing patiently in their own Fathers big chair its back turned carefully to thath e man tle piece, so she could face the window, Bowser held firmly on h er lap .

"We h aven't peeked once" she announced. "May I call Mildred now and the other dogs." she added rather timidly for she saw the three little girls looked as if they were sore about something.

"Yes" said Daisy with a good natured smile nevertheless. "Merry Ch ristmas Barbara, and she and her two sisters kissed her .

When Barbara came back Bowser seemed to h ave vanished, then her eyes following voluntarily, the eyes of the seven little girls and their princely brother and a very old lady they had brought in, Barbara gave a lit tle cry of delighted surprise. At one end of the long line of stockings----stockings limp and lank no longer--h ung a hastily improvised one of gray cloth from the top of which protruded a familiar little head; showing a pair of anxious puzzled brown eyes.

"You see Barbara dear" Violet herself explain ed "We found it impossible to get all your presents into all your stockings there and so---"

"Oh gasped Barbara" Do you mean m the little dog Bowser is a reallyhtruly present------that I am to really take him home with me when I do go? "

"Yes." said the little princesses together and Penrod grinningly nodded.

"Why what will you do without him?" Barbara asked.

"I guess we will be able to manage." Violet again assured her.

"The question" added Jean ie would be what would h e do without you. You've spoiled him so out rageiously my de ar."

"Oh Barbara cried again" Oh I do love you all very much."

"You had better look a t your Bowser stocking, now hadn't you?" Angeline herself smilingly suggested. "Else it won't be there much lon ger but coming down on t he floor puppy and all. My what a wriggler tha t lit tle dog is."

"Let's a,ll beging together." Barbara proposed .

Half an hour later An gelinia Aronburg opened the living room door upon a scene un equalled in the history of the whole camp.

"If you'll believe it." she told Jennie t urner "There are the Princesses outside byba long counter giving out presents to every one who passes by. I just saw Penrod hide some of the presents of h is sisters for fear they'll give them away too. And they're acting like they're six instead of the eldest nine or ten. I look to see them out coasting next if snow ever falls."

It was Ch ristmas morning but Tim Groveton wondered as he arose whether he was going to celebr ate Christmas with Violet and her s sisters in Africa or Calverinia.

"Who-o-o-o-o-ie" he said to himself. "what a Christmas for this Country this year. Some hea heat I'll say."

N evertheless all hea rts throughout Abgi Abbieannia-(not in Glandelinia though) and many hearts too throughout the world was filled with love for t he little Christ -child who on that same day long ago had come into the world bringing with him joy, and peace and love. Into every castle and every hut came a peal of bells--bells that no doubt were telling over and over the same glad Christmas story. or many in Calverinia however it was not a cheerful one. To day though it was Ch ristmas no sun shone and the sky was a reddes rred black color. The sun showed only a very blood red ball through the haze and it was al awfully sultry with a stiff southeast wind blowing. At one of the windows of the splendid h eadquarters of Violet and her sisters on the "Savoy" side of the lake lake stood a tall man who h old a young little girl lovingly in his arms while six others and a boy prince crowded arcun d him. It was then six ocloci oclock, the time little barbara wanted to get up. The little girls were anxiously listening for the bells forgott ing for the moment cruel war had put a stop to ch ris Christmas be/ls in this locality as Opholia and ot her towns and cities were smoking flaming ruin . Nevertheless their faces were flushed with joy for the failure then to hear bells did not hardly disturb themthough it was with regret .

Though they had often heard it, and read it too, and heard it preac'ed from th e Pulpit her father had been telling her and her sisters too of that ot her and First Christmas day, when a little Babe lying in a manger in far away Judea, had come from Heaven as a gift of Love for all the world, and she and her sisters had begged him not to stop never.Sp So he was telling them again how the Christ Child grew t o be a Man, and went about many lands making people well and putting love into their h earts.

"Do you think papa"The Christ-Child could make Glandelin ia behave in due time and be a better nation after this war is over."

"Yes if it is best for the world and it is H is Will my darlings I am sure He could.But Glandelinia may be beyond H is Forgiveness."And he held the youngest Vivi n Vivian Girl even more tenderly .

"Then I and my sisters are going to ask Him to do it , papa dear;I kno know it must make you and mother also sad to see this awful war."

Little Daisy nestled closer to her fathers heart, and her golden curles were falling over his shoulders,, but for several minutes neither spoke---they were thinking.There was the look of happy hopefulness in her big blue eyes; while h is were full of pity tender pity for his little "plowers", as he fon dly called his brave little daughters.It was just only ten after six Christmas morning and all were aroused by a knock at the door, and in response to the summons to enter the sentry stood at the opened door and ann unc d announced the coming of the little lad sent for, and a young refugee lad walked int o t he room, while the royal guard who had shown him in, closed the door behind him.It was a young little lad, and h e had come in answer to a message from Emperor Vivian himself. The great Emperor always anxious to give pleasure to any child, his good heart being more and more softened by the sad toilsome hard life of H is daughters had thought it might make any little child he could see happy to come Christmas and et her great holiday mornings to his tent or headquarters what ever it might be and be given some token of the day.So in order that it might not escape his memory he always made a note of it in a little dairy he carried.

"I'm glad you came sonny."the Emperor said kindly."I have been t elling my brave little girls about you, and they are wishing to show you some of t heir many books toys and other Christmas presents."

Violet and her sisters then went int o an adjoining room, while the little boy by Penrod was told to come and see the gift s.Th en litt le Daisy herself clapped her little but stron g hands with delight, as she and her sisters watched h is happy face for never before had he seen such beaut iful thin gs.At this moment a taller girlscout also very beaut iful, with a brave but sweet and tender look in her kind eyes came int o th e room and greeted the lit tle boy kindly.

Then after asking him a few questions about his parents and himself she turned to Penrod saying;

"Come dear Prince,I wish to speak with you on someth ing important, and"and thus by her tact the children were left for a while together.They examined the t oys in the room one by one namin g th e animals in a large Noah's ark which Violet told the little boy was intended as a gift for h im, and she showed h im many beautiful picture books as well as ot her treasures which also were for him.Then Jen n ie lifted her blue eyes to his face and said;

"What did you get for Christmas litt le boy.?"

The boy smiled brightly, as he point ed down to his shoes--a par pair of old shoes, bought by his mother, the only thin gs she could afford.

"Wait"and se "she said."I believe I got a nic nice pair of new shoes that I believe will fit you.See there t hey are.."

The boy tried them on, and Jenn ie said;

"When Father and my brot her told me you were coming"I got some shoes from the quart ermaster store which I believed would fit you.H ere is one shoe a big on e too filled for you.Taste the bonbons, and see how good they are."

The little boy took the little or big shoe in his hand in order to see and t aste the good th ings with which it was filled.Th e little Abbieannian children chi children alwaysput shoes at the fire side instead of hangin g a stockings "I'll tell you somethingblittle boy if you will come quit e close"and H ettie spoke almost in a whisper."In your shoes you can do for us many useful thin gs for we hope some day you'll be a nice l it tle boyscout like the et hers, for you kn ow I and my sisters need as many as we can.We have asked the Ch rist Child to make Glandelinia repent if it is possible that she will.Father says God will if H e is not too vonoo voned with Glandelinia."

The little boy could not speak but his h eart was filled with pity.great t ears stood in his eyes and before he could brush them all away, a shining drop fell upon the shoe.

Later on after this and after Barbara had recieved h er pres nts and had a little romp with Violet and her sisters Violet and her sisters spent nearly all the Ch ristmas morning giving out presentx presents to every boy and girl scout, leader and likewise by their own hand, Penrod however h elping.

1-0-438.

He was greatly scared however that if the pres nts should run short they might sacrifice their own and so he had seen to it that there was either enough for everybody or even over, and his wish was gratified.And so therefore there were some others specially favored by him or them that got these..

The Christmas dinner itself could not be described, and nevertheless anybody knows what we eat on Christmas.Thanks to Penrods great and ju stified raid at Ophelia nothing was wanting for the great dinner to which every priest of the army was ivt invited by Violet and her sisters.

Maybe it may seem strange to the reader but it must be known that through the help of their Father Violet, and her sisters got all the Christmas presents and good things, and the "Food layout"too at their own expenses.Not only boy and girlscouts and many soldiers but nearly all of the refugees shared in it too, though it can be added with the very many good and useful artil articles which Penrod and his soldiery had secured in the raid at Ophelia, is which raid i he used all his boy and girlscouts and immense bodies of infantry and cavarly soldiers too.It was even the best Christmas little Barbara herself ever h ad, and that afternoon litt le Barbara wrote a letter;;;2

"OPHELI A RUN. CHRISTIAN ARMY.
EMPEROR VIVIAN:::
COMMANDING
December 25, I9I3,

Ce Dear mamma ad dear papa/;;;;

"If only you were both here t his would be just the nicest Christmas ever was.Don't you think that next year if we're still within the shelter of th e Christian armies we might all come up to the Vivianite Boy and girlscout camp for Christmas?The Vivian Princesses says, they hope so and would be glad to invite o you, so does the girlscout Ch ieftian Jenn ie Turner, so does the great girl spy Angelinia Aronburg, and she says, that though this happened to day for the first time in Abbieann ia, yet eleven stockings would look so much nicer than eight in a line.I don't believe I can tell you about my presents.I certainly did get heaps of lovely ones even from the boyband girlscouts as well as from the princes and princesses.And I hope you will excuse this not being nicer written on account of one of my dog friends insisting on sit ting in my lap and wantin g to lick my face or chew the penholder all the time I'm writing---its the penholder just n ow which makes it go kind of wobbly.The princesses gave me the little dog called Bowser.The dearest of the princesses called Jennie gave me a real gold Rosary beeds,I've got them blessed now, and the good little one called Daisy gave me a little min iature of herself and her sisters and also brothers painted t hat summer they told me two years before this cruel war started---they're too dear for anything and I'm surprised they sacrificed those.Angelinia Aroburg, she won't let me call her anything else gave me a beautiful pair of bed room slippers- they're bright purple and rather large, but as Miss Aronburg says,I'll grow to them.The books you sent are lovely---I've read the Life of Christ as a Child Already.And the ring and the dolls, and the gloves and all the things you sent are lovely, and just wa what I wanted.I can't tell you what the princesses gave me in all, you would have to see to know.I also gave them presents too and they don't know where I got them for I slying wouldn't tell but I gave them a brand new pair of beaut iful saddles for their horses and they told me my presents were the best of all.I got those saddles out of th e money you sent me, and for their helper and boy friend Tim I bought a brand new uniform.But papa and mamma I got the shock of a surprise this Christmas morning.You know the little Annie Roonies in the funnies I seen in the papers.Well I thought I sure saw her here in real life.There was a girlscout officer, they say high ranked as a general among them that looked like her in every way.I had to ask Tim or one of the Princesses though as when I spoke to her you know she couldn't understand me like the Princesses can. And her name pappa and mamma dear is also An ie annie Rooney at leaset her first name rightly is Annabella.When I asked princess Violet she laughed and said;

"Yes's sh e is Annie Rooney all right but not the one you saw in the comic papers.Don't speak of that to her as she's awfully severe and God help those who incurs her wrath upon them. She never knew a person wh o owns an op orphan asylum called Mrs Meany, and her right name is Annabella Jane Roone y.H er father is general Frank Roonie, and sh e has three sisters in the army as scouts and two brothers and her Mother is an army Nurse.

One of her brothers is a grown man, and he is also a general.Her younger brothers are boyscouts.So I therefore had to show her politeness thougi. how she acted then she sure didn't seem severe to me by face or looks.But Princess Violet knows best and all tell me she is severe and hard boiled. But that is to the enemy.To her own following sh e is very good.Miss Mildred Maxwell a girlscout general too gave me a game.W 're all going to play this even evening, I the princesses, their brother and Father.Princess Angelin e oh she sure is too a beautiful little girl say's.I'd better go out now for a trip about the camp with th em before supper.They all send their love and respect ..I'm so glad that grandpapa is better but sorry to hear that he lost his foot .But then he won't have to be in the old fighting any more.What I have seen and heard since I come here makes me believe I have a ri right to hate the enemy and some day if you or mamma don't object.I would like to be a girlscout and show the enemy a thing or two like they do.I hope mamma and pappa you are coming home soon.If you do n don't stop there please come here.You will not regret it."

Your very lovely daughter Barbara Margaret H emryson.

"I do so want you to see Bowser.H e is such a dear."

WHAT HAPPENS ELSEWHERE IN THE MEANTIME.

SHOWING THAT THE HORRORS OF THE DR EADFUL WAR GROWS, AND TH AT GLANDELINIA IS GOING MAD...

CHAPTER FOURTY TWO..."."."."

A GREAT STROM OF WARS DEVASTATIONS. HORRIBLE SC S E SCENES OF MISTERY AND THE T ITANIC BAT LES.

Tomas Federals army was all the while retreating southward and many ofthe Clandelin ians of the advance guard met large strings of pr orphan children, with their guardians who at the sight of the surging graycoated columns beganning running as fast as they could. Thy soon found that it was useless o however to get away, from the Clandelinians for thouh they ran for dodear life the graycoas began firing shooting them down in scores.

During the main progress of the war the armies under T homas Federal had laid seige to the city of Evangeline at lair during the absence of general vivians armies, and opened fire upon the city the cannons making a tremendous unearthly roar.

Following this came a blinding blaze of shell bursts among the fortification s of evangeline and among the houses of the city, and the roll of explosions and the crash of the wreckage seemed to reverbrate through the heavens, and come out of the earth at the same time. Then all at once a screaming tempest of she shells and shrapnell also tore through the lautiful buildings, hurling all the wreckage of the disabled fortificiations down, or tearing up tons of brickand timber with a pandemonuimn of loud crashes.

The crashng wreckage was hurled upon the unfortunatevictims, who if they could screamed could not be heard on account of the uproar of the frightful dese destruct ion and of the furious drum-drum fire of artillery from both sides.

With an earsplitting roar the fury of the bombardment increased as more guns on both sides went into action all the pleasure bourse in the city going to pieces and were swept away by the furnaces of fire started by exp,li explosions.

A large merry go-around crowded with children was wrenched from its fastenings and sent into a thousand fragments by the burst of a high explosive, while simultaneously a score of children sitting by a tree trunk were suddenly b blown trunk and all a thousand feet by the same shell and thrown against a house mangled and with their clothe in shreds.

The deafening roar of the shells was appalling, as they exploded and those sailing through the air screamed and howled like millions of lost sould souls. Wreckage poured to the streets in torrnts, while hour by hour the fo fury of the bombardment increased, and hundreds of houses werereduced into heaps of ruins while debris of every discription was hurled into the air by mighty explosions that literally pierced the air with a volcanoe of flame anddin .

THE EXPERIENCES OF VIOLET'S MOTHER AND AUNT.

In the meantime Mrs Vivian and Violet's aunt had noticed the awful havoc of the shells and shouted to the servants to flee to the cellars and save t themselves if they could. Suddenly there came a blinding sheet of blue and red flame, which dazzlingly illuminated the whole inside of th the manison, followed by a rolling crash that seemed to split the earth, with the reverbrating reports of thunder. The old men women and children there who were tenants became panic stricken at such a terrific crash and Violets mother forgetting herslef dashed up to the bedroom to find out if the place was struck by the shell.

''It soundedlike thw world was blown to pieces.'' gasped Mrs Vivian who faced a roaring furnace of fire near the door.

''HArk.''Whispered violet's aunt;''The bombardment is getting worse.''

From the i distance a strange ominious booming sound of thousands of big guns continually filled the air, there came another sharp flash like before, the crash following simultaneously sounding t like the explosion of some giant pow der mill which continued to reverbrate for fifteen minutes, the building trmelling as if there was an earthquake. The booming roar of the distant cannonade made the windows leap against their casements.

Then came the furious earsplitting whistle of another giant shell which exploded with a seemingly unearthly report, the explosion blowing in all the windows with a fearful crash splintering all the beautiful stin glass. Iron strom windorws were wrenched off, while at the same time the iron doors had given way before the basit and one of the walls disappeared. All at once there was a panic in the rooms below.

VViolet's mother being frightened out of her witsran to the chapel the had in the house. The shells that fiarly dotted the sky over the christian fortific ations screamed and howled like millions of demons a all bent upon the annihl annihiatior of the fortifications and city. They fairly roared as one afer another contun continually burst in quick succession and all the christian cannons ablze ablz ablaze made a greater din than ever. Evey house in the strets near by were torn to shreds by deafening explosions. The increasing tongues of flame i,, illumined the rooms of the manision and evey crash of the high explosives seemed so loud as to split t e earth. Thematress es of the beds in the bed rooms thesheets and pillows were blown awny, t al exploding shell tore out the wall in their localitie the bois being thrown against each other by the concussion, amid tons of plaster and mantles that were alec to pieces, and a table with a big lighted lamp was upset withs crash the oil catching fire and sett ing the mattresses and sherts abla e abalze. In the meantime violet's mother and aunt had re ched the chapel where two fierce explosions had alreadp occired. Everything here was in confusion. The big windows had been b blown in by the explosions, and were in fra ments. The pews were totally wrecked, the "oly Stations had been blown down from the cracked walls and the frame wil ched.

The statues also had been blown down and many destroyed and even the beautiful alter had been forced out ou of its resting place and turned topsey turvy. The chapel floors were [illegible] sprawling against the [illegible] wreckage with terrible force being smashed out of shape. The concussion threw Violet's mother and auntun top of the alter, "iolet's aunt being dashed into the fragments of glass and suffering many severe cuts her head striking the wal with terrille force and though not injuring her knockedhe senseless. Another exploding shell tore the whole roofs into splinters and several portions of the wall fell from the concussion. The manison was being badly b blown out of shape and was on fire.

The entire roof was now gone and many who lived in the manision were killed or injured few ever escapting. The inside of the mas manison was a sight.

Everything was ruined, furniture smashed, and floors swaying, andnoe now the walls of the chapel sagging outward toppled over and fell to thestreet an avalanche of bricks tim bers and morater. Stairways were smashed and damaged and many fo floors of the rooms caved in amid tons of broken timber.

Doors and windows were smashed to fragments, and the pillars holding up the ceiling of other rooms gave way bringing down walls, while thewindow [illegible] the remaining walls hadbeen blown round and [illegible] and [illegible] of bricks and the burning rooms of other floors blown out by other shells. Itwas still worse in the chapel. The pews had been shattered like match wood, the doo dome had been blown away, all the picture had been sl smashed all the windows totally destroyed and many parts of the floor having been torn away besides the alter rail. All the statues had been smashed into dust and thelarge Sanctuary lalamp that always turns before the alter was gone and last of all thr unfortunatle women lying there among the wreka e. The scene inside thecity itself was more appalling. Wreckage of big and small houses filled the streets as if some giant tornado had been going on for several hours with ter ific and incinceivable force. Other buildings only ha, f standing were t threatening to fall ruin bang everywhere. It was some hours before vic lets mother and aunt was rescued by some men who were looking for all theinjured, with thousands of other rescuers.

A Evangeline St glare finally fell however general Callahan is who held the fir fr fo rtifications surrendering everything.

WHAT IT MEANS TO AROUSE GLANDELINIA TO FURY.

The Kinderyarder massacres.

It was some time later in [illegible] when new and stronger glandelirian armies made their horrifying appearance into southern Angelinia leaving death and desolation in their wake levi playing waste to all the villieges in their path, and even to whole cities, taking heavy toll of human and animal life and causing wide spread destuction. Stal news of the approach of the overwhelming disaster of war which left mourning and misery in its wake came from wireless signal sata stations far out at Angeline. It was the most terrific devastation of war that ever occured and no Typohoon in Abbieannia could do all this. And the wildest rumors concerning the fate of southern Angelinia was that millions of houses in the first city reached by the enemy were r ransacked, and wrecked, nd that thousands had been wrecked or burned - mean the damage being reported as near as ten million dollars. In these true reports it was declared that hundreds of thousands of houses had been blown asunder from their foundations when the Glandelinians dominated them and heaps of ruins and scores of millions of partly shattered buildings were left to tell the tale of the wars ravaging murderous fury. wo big cities known as Aron burg and Faueral had been reported to have been prostrated by the terrific explos ions of the giant shells during the recent bombardments of "e-"irther or "i vision Wakey reported in recent ch chapters. The whole region of western Calverinia was reported to have been transformed into a vast scene of death and destruction.

The Glandelinians during their advance northward had swept everything before them, putting out thousands of human lives throwing the biggest buildings from their foundations carrying away provisions destroying propertyto the extent of sixty million dollars. Hundreds of thousands were hoem homeless, dangers of death famine andpestilence threatened on every hand. Who can picture the horrors of the mighty Glandelinian sweep as they had recently over whelmed the largest and most greatest christian armies opposed to themwithout even a battle.

Everything for miles wreckage and ruin of what had ten before happy and prosperious cities and towns. Not one house here and there but whole sections were engulfed in the raging holocaust of flames that followed and laid in total ruins.

GREAT

[illegible] GREAT SLAUGHTERS Of CHILDREN!

On the horrors of the glandelinian fury, even after the victories of the christians. Oxen, sheeps and cows, and pigs were seized by the enemy and thousands of helpless children captured by the Glandelinians were sent crashing against brick walls every bone in their bodies being broken. Cities full of people struggleing to get away from their blazing homes amid the roar of explosive shells and what was that---- -- shocks from bursting high explosives that threatened destruction to all that were buried under the tons of debris. Much more insignificient wreckage was burned away by the overwhelming seas of fire and glimpses of untold horror could be seen, of those whose whitened faces, starred in terror and agony through the wreckage of theitheir fiercely blazing homes

Hundreds of children were made massacred, poor torn tabernacles of human beings beings, women and children torn from limb t limb by the ferocious and wicked glandelinians. Thousands f of bodies of little children torn hitneg and twisted and mangled by the mercy of their horrible foes were crushed and mangled. The glandelinians literally rendered al the inhabitants homeless and killing scores of thousands.

The enemy advanced like the savage horde of Kurdland destroying indescriable numbers of houses and injuring appalling numbers of christians. Calverina was in the grasp of the worse war horror ever experienced and whose reports stunned the world w. Reliable reports placed the number of killed as one hundred and ninty five thousand, but greater rumors of almost unbelievable disasters trickled in from remote sources. Very city or town along the western portion of Calverinia had been wrecked and major general Robert Magie army opposing thehe was overwhelmed or surrounded and Magie forced to surrender. Hundreds upon hundred of old men women and children were homeless from the destruction of the city defended by the beaten christian armies under Magieand hundreds upon hundreds were killed and indescriable damage done.

He fought fifty battles.

[illegible] THE PROGRESS OF THE WAR IN THE WEST.

FOR[illegible] THE BATTLE OF VIOLET LANSINIA(CALVERINIA)

Upon the christian armies under general Genine the advance of the glandelinians had ben so strong that it swept away his good sized army u opposed to them and crushed them during the fierce batle and herein may be observed that our gentle readers can have no idea of the almost preternatural fury with which the advancing glandelinian armies struck general Googenhimers army and infused in the battle of Violent le nsinimits deafening and a appalling roar.

The tremendous and universal clamor of the battle was indescriable and not even the screechings and bawlings of the barbarians or demons could compare to the unaverse yell of the foe, who swept the opposing christi ns back the whole lengthof their line and deafening and indescriable was the deafening roar of musketry, the plaintive howling of the wounded and dying, the million cannon like roar of firearms which swept whole divisions and sections of both armies to destructuo destruction. Rattlings even filled the air and despite all this tumult coulf could be heard the shrill hissing of shells in the air like like millions of thrillions of serpents were making the sound in the air. The whole battle field was continuously obscured in thick clouds of powder smoke, the storm of rain of fire and wrecking houses in Violent Lansinia. The battle with the burst of horrible thunders which almost deafened any silenced with whole millions of soldiers of both sides ended with a sweeping Landelinian victory and the christians were routed with the loss of over 5,000,000 in killed and wounded. Every building in the city of Violet L Lansinia was leveled to the ground by random shells and not a tree in any part of the battle field was s left standing, the /loss of life being appalling and more frightful was the loss of injured and dying left strwn in the fields. The losses of the foe exceeded 10,000,000 having won the fight at a fearful cost over three quarters of thiswhole number having fallen the rest being prisoners.

FIERCE ACTION AT STEADMANS RUN.

It was at the same time while this battle was going on when one of the main wings of the Landelinian army made a horrifying slaughter upon general Lw Lewis army at Steadmans Run and for hours before the batle reached its supreme fury, the uproar of the firing one could be heard for one hundred thirty miles but when it broke in full sway and extended tward Violet Paulinia the roar was like a million cannon in action and my how the hundreds of thousands of christians went down before that rifle blasts of the foe ceaseless fire.

Nothing could withstand such a headlong advance of the enemy who after their two important victories raided city after city and the scenes resembles the approach of the worlds end. Whole walls of the buildings were scattered by explosions and thousands of poop people were buried breath windrows of wreckage.

Scores of other cities were scathed. Violet Paulinia was galled.....

Every village and town in her locality were annihilated and frightful was the toll of human and animal life and the wreckage was literally consumed by raging flames.

Heartrending misery and mounr mourning was left by the fatal fury and ravaging violenceof the ravaging foe. Fatal news was sent in by Hedda twenty miles west of the devastated region and from other signal stations on Sherlocks and Watermania highlands. The town of Hedda [illegible] of the awful story of the enemys raid but fortunately there was not such an appalling loss of life as in the other places and towns and cireis cities though ll all the shipping in the river in ports were totally des destroyed by the enemy. Simmermann and Mc-Hollester and Weinstine hilmads signal stations which had witnessed the sad hevoc sent [illegible] harrowing stories. From the management of the Mc-Hollester highland signal stations came the report as follows;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;;

+ Noeun Jranklin.

''To Pope Leo XII of Angelinia;;;;

Your supreme [illegible] pnotififf. A raid of most dimasterous effectshad been made along the western parts of calverinia. Never before in all Calverinias history or in all the histories of war was there such devastations as swept over the west. Millions upon millions of houses have been swept or wrecked byo beyond redemption by the foe, hundreds of the biggest buildings being shattered into ruins by the enemys high explosives. Total property loss in the west is totalled u ward to h one hundred million dollars. The fury of the avalnch of graycoats have wih t their heavy seige guns blown asunder from their very foundation hundreds of thousands of houses and their very walls have been sctattered. Our cities as many others having lost all their shipping and provisions which have been seized or destroyed by the enemy and we beseach the allied christian nations to aid us in our misery.''

General management.P.H.Hendon.''

This was only one of the reports. In every path of the enemyheaps of ruins and shattered buildings were literally exposed to view. This gives an idea hwhat the enemy inhiw his sudden rage and fury can do when unapposed by equal armies successfully and other reports run as follows;

''Our suprem Ponstiff Pope le Le XII of Angelinia. From Confection heights. Two big cities known as Aronburg and Federal are destroyed. The enemy defeating the christian forces at [illegible] and Standish. [illegible] fair cities but desolation and death. It is terrible. The death list in Aronburg is twenty thousand and ninty five thousand in Federal.''

These reports having not been as fully as they ought to have been.

Three hundred thousand perished in Aronburg alone and one hundred thousand in Federal. O f the numbers of injured it could not be found out untill two weeks after. Another report was hus thus;

''Your excellency general ,ivin vivian;;

I never saw such ter ible sights. The whole west of Calverinia is transformed into a vavast sea of death and destruction. The enemy have errific force in their advance and sweep everything bfore them burning away whole tungles and leveling cities by the score, with their heaviest of cannons Thousands of human beings have been ki led and it is awful to see the mangled bodies of the children who are buried beneath the ruins. Calverinia needs succor.

Governor of Angeline wine
J?H ADamms''

It indeed was a frightful occurace occurance. Thebiggest buildings numbered by the hundred thousand were literally torn from their foundations by gang gang gang shells and rent to fragements. Hundreds of tons of the debris itself was hurled hundreds of feet into the air by the force of the explosions and the walls were scattered and crushed.

The loss of property really exceeded ten million dollars among the southern section of the west which had been predicted by the signal stations. One of the re ports whei h which came from Heddas and St Mary'S highland rao ranch ran as follows;

''The presedency o of Angelinia;,
Your excel [illegible] hundreds of thousands are homeless. Not a house has ben left intact. They are in danger from exposure to the elements and famine and plagues. A ll the fields are under water theenmy having burst the dams and al all our ruins have been burned by the most frightful conflargrations which is still raging and the city of Aronburg is reported to be on fire. If you who are so far away could only picture the horrors. The enemy has overwhimed and laid in ruins the largestand most sus substantial cities and the horrir horrors of the scenes are indescriable.

Governer of Hedda and St Mary's Highlands. Admams Perry.''

T

This is sad, sad to predict. The hour before the enemys attack the children had been in their schools studying and reciting their lessions. But that hour was the last for many. In a few hu hours time everything for miles amid the intense roar of the shell storm was in wreckafe and redemptionless ruins which had been but an few hours before been happy and prosperous cities.In ci certian cities houses here and there were left in ruins but the shells continually reduced whole sectionsof houses into windrows upon windrows of debris timbers and furniture while mr myriads of big buildings were also in redemptionless ruins. Oh the horrors of it. Bad as an earthly hell itself. Another witness s spoke thus;

''Your excellency the president of Angelinia;
'I saw the enemy drive off herds of oxen, sheep and pigs and thousands of children weresent crashing against the walls of buildings and crushed by the enemy. I never saw a sight one can witness.''

The inhibatants of the tottering cities during the almost preternatural fury of the cannonading struggled frantically to keep alive of the from their burning homes . Theartillery like roar of the destruction seemed to rend the heas heavens. My how the poo people did shriek at the shock of the tending bursting shells that threatened destruxtion to anything they landed upon.

By the shell burst clouds of wreckage was blown through theair like an snow flan flakes much of it sent toppling and whirling.

Glimpses of untold horror could be seen seen in the whitened faces of their inmates who starred in terror and anony throughnthw w the windows only to disappear in a rending roaring funnel of hurltling wreckage and debris. Another eye witnessgave his report;

'' Themost horrible sight that I ever seen was of the human beings borne or dashed about by the shell explosions during the bombard ment of Evangeline St Clare. Children seized by the enemy were undressed before being slain, and torn from limb from limb and their very intrails pull out if their bodies. I lso witnessed all the hero heroine of it. Thousands of the bodies of the little children all undressed undressed to mutilated [illegible] against the stone wall, many being horribly mangled and hundred hundreds of others their very insides bespattering the streets so badly crushed and cut they were being at the mercy of the horrible foe.''

The Glandelinians had indd indeed swept the whole west of Calverinia with terrific fury. Appalling numbers of dead and injured were exposed to view. And all the surroundering inhivatants were rendered homepless, the [illegible] T[illegible] B[illegible] S[illegible] H[illegible] ordered thus:

''Our wors whole westwn part of the country have probably ge been in the grasp of thethe worst [illegible] storm of war that [illegible] ever swept over Calverinia. When the wor wo whole world hears of this disaster it will be stunned. Every city or town in the west has been overrun by the enemy under Huebaum Manley and indescribable damage has been done. The biggst wooden buildings have been shattered into tangled masses of wreckage by the most ter ific explosions. Stone buildings by the hundred hundred has also been shattered into ruins in the twinkling of an eye.''

His report was not exaggerated either. Sorrow and the greatest m misery prevailed along thewest. Parents mourning for their dead children, children mourning for their parents and homes. The city of Vivian Wickey seemed to have filled into hell and rose at again her dead destruction was so c- complete the whole city being [illegible] and whole mulitudes hurled into eternity when christians again bombarded it with these hurling [illegible] for four weeks without success. The burning of the city made clouds of smoke so thick that the smoke blackened the sky like ink wh while from the city the smoke rolled like the vapor storm during a great volcanic eruntion. It indeed did look like the approach of the end end of theworld. The storm of shells that fell into this city from the christian warships made a screaming sound resembling a hundred million demons and al the soldiers of the garrison and even all the children in the school had stood appalled as the intense at artillery like roar of the destruction smote their ears. Then they were to be caught syddenly in an almost preternatural chaoes of destruction. Children in their homes in the asylumns of in the schools fell dead unde tons of crashing timbers and the bursting shells struck.

ANOTHER BOMBARDMENT OF VIVIAN WICKEY AND THE RESULT

Two big stone walls of Vivian Wcikeys prison was shattered by high explosives the walls of the building being shattered by shell burst and reduced to fr gments of bi brick and morars Thousands umon thousands of other wom women and children were scratched brusied or maimedin the chaoes of debris that swirled and fell in all directions. The shells exploded with a roar resembling the discharge of cannons of the heaviest calibre. Such a wild scene of destruction cc ld never be correctly told. Before the violent blasts of the shell explosions the hundreds of thousands of buildings werw blown to pieces, the best end strongest being leveled clean to their foundation. You would not believe that would you? Well read about the monsterous scene of fire for your interest then. During the full awry of the bombardment the conflargration became like a rolling ocean of hell fire. Fifteen minutes later the flames got so tremendously furi us that they burned with the most incredible fury across the ruins, and for hours the heaven heavy ocean of flames seemed to reach the very clouds itself and seing in realyty at times more than two hundred and eight[illegible] on the house tops, the conflargration laying the cities of [illegible] Kaufmann and many others including a long stretch of forest under a sea of fire completing the work of destruction done by the enemy. As the enormous volumns of flame spread itself over the wo ded lands for miles, raging fire hells were formed which swelled the rivers and lakes to the boiling point adding to the horrors of the wreckage and c destruction. The conflargration consuming the wreckage before it burn ed through every street in vivian wickey consuming the wreckage of houses that had fallen during the bombardment. The conflargration [illegible] sea raging for many hundreds of miles even burned its way across the worms and Erminies munfilling them and forming them into literall fire torrents. The fire seas continued for days untill it had formed the greatest conflargration ever seen in war time. The real [illegible] was not stateduntill four weeks after. The largest numbers were crushed by the ruins of churches w which had also recieved the deadly shells being redu ced into shattered ruins. In ad it [illegible] the horrors of a battle raging there the devoted inhibatants of [illegible] were also as exposed to the ravages of a conflargration. In the darkness of the battle smitten night the whole city appeared in a b n blaze which had becomme so bright that any one could see to read by it. Without exaggeration the city was on fire in many hundred differeny places at once and this fire consumed everything the shells had spared. In all this region of war no death or destruction can be com pared with this which had with the [illegible] enemy mowed a wide and grewsom path throughout the whole of Western Calverinia. It was unapparelled and even ex ceded the destruction of cities and towns during thosegreat Atlieannian typhoons. Another battle had raged at Calmanrinia Calverinia and the glandelinians had given the christians there into subvigat[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] General [illegible] them [illegible] [illegible] for out to the southeast of the devastated region but it could not be [illegible]. Several progress ive battles with Huebaum Manley moving in parallel course were predicted seventeen miles north f of vivian Wickey which raged for several days but did not make themselves present elsewhere. These battles had ben predicted to be of terrible vol violence and the carnage bloodcurdling. Another batle had been reported to be driving tward Crowleys Run but it was declared to have receded to the east. This drive was re orted to have struck Phelentonburg but had lost some of its force and the christ ian am armies being exceedingly strong at this point had hel d firm for seven days. [illegible] Atnthe same time another ba le had [illegible] ing at Emmanemach and considerable damage to the oppsa opposing armies though the glandelinians snatched victory from the jaws of defeat. A fiercer battle came at Batria with a terrible results [illegible] the first and second days of Vivian Wickeys destruction. A gigantic victory for the christians resulted as amanisfestation of this terrille carnage. This was indeed the most extensive devastation that had ever occured as th the enemy after their succes ion succeassions of victories came careening over the land laying bare to every bautiful hil of its trees by scorching big fires and the roaring of their cannonading could be heard for fifty miles. These i mmmse immn immense armies drove a zizaxc course advancing and laying waste to whole forests and jungles. In the outlying dist districts and countries the st conflargrations started by them gained headway sweeping away whole villiages, annihilating the inhabitants in the furious heat.

The conflargration blazed horrid trails across the Erminies creek banks, burning aw away fevery forest, annihilating every town in the outlying country surrou ding the Erminies river. Simultaneously a grim harvest of lives and property was rea edly the furious victorious glande linians. The glandelinians [illegible] increasing their blood thirsty fury across Agathinas Run in their fiercest fury, [illegible] making the most terrific destruction and carnage ever seen. Great industries suffered total loss, factiroes machine shops and all kinds of industrail buildin s collasped like cardboard houses created by children. Every car system, every railroad system had had been wrecked. Not a single street car had escaped and many trains had ben wrecked. Firemen could not get to the fire on account of the sea of wreckage. Police departments were wrecked and also fire stations and every well oiled traffic sys em was completely tied up. Beppo Lansin had ben op completely wiped out by the fire storm and its in hibatants annihilated. Nothing had escaped in that small city where it sustained the fire storms worse fury, every house being scattered into ruins befor by the shells before the fire got to it. The glandelinians having already reaped a harvest of blood for over five hundred miles had started new forest fires that put every ridge and mountain [illegible] range stuck by the conflargration without trees.

The conflargration bru burningall before it rushed through the valleys with the neat precision of some ominious fire machine. The city of St Clare was cannaonaded without success, and Chambelane, Rosa, T opsy and Prue were galled nothing escaping in the enemys ga gha h ghastly path.

[illegible] this column was fought between the Williamsburg Schlowalls and Huebaum Manley

THE ACTION AT [illegible] OF GLORINIA.

During the last of November the advancing glandelinian am armies under Huebaum Manley Manley struck Weinstines force of Whilliamsburger force of christians at Glorinia or Jennis niches (Calverinia) and once more Calverinia witnessed one of the most bloodiest struggles in her history. , which raged with a withering l almost preternatural roarit being like the crash and uproar of hell itself. All the fratcolumns of christians that tried to bare the enemys pregress were literal y torn to pieces and scattered. Big and stong columns of men were shattered into fragments. Advancing on with their scate scatt ering an withering fury the southwestern wing suddenly forced their way up the sides and over the crest of Jennie Tory hill shattering every christian column into masses of dead and dying and scatescattering all ;y; the survivorsin all directions. All the shattered and ston gest columns were shatered or torn to pieces and nearly all the defenders here who stood their ground to the last were either killed injured or taken prisoner and the uproar of the battle deafeninened many of the survivors for life. The crest of Jennie T ory hill was literally stripped clear of every christian columnthe sides and summits covered with the dead and wounded which had ben scattered in every direction. The dead along lny like grass and along the southwestern wings the enemy seminply enraged by the resitance ofthe christiansmid the earsplitting roar of batle forced their way through Carie Mc-Hollesterand Aronburge lines and here hell itself semed to have spent its fury as nothing was seen after the batle but seas of wreckage and mulitudes of killed or injured.Along Aronburge front the bodies lay thickest and the scenes of themost indescribable desolation and horror was exposed to view. Here the dead and injured numberes numbered I,222,564.

About a few miles south of Jennie Richee or Glorinia the approach of the enemy was first noticed by two children whose names were Mildren Maxwell and Angeline Jennings. These little girls saved themselve by jumping into a waterless cistern but suffered severe injuries nevertheless by their fall so far below.

F He men of the signal station before they fled at the enemys approach signalled Weinstines officers north of them and this caused the frightful bat le. As the enemys center struck the christian fire tore two of its wings to pieces the falling soldiers covering theplains with a w vertible sea of dead and wounded.

The batle raged with an unbelievable fury a part of Huebaums main left wing storming upon the Marc cian Run and sweening upon the christian linesin sledge hammer onslaughts wiping out Aronburge army with the death of their leader.

Not a single tre wasleft in this region which seemed to be turned into a volcanic hell from the clamor. A part of Weinstines whole army had been scathed and one of his wings was shattered to pieces and three brigades each of one hundred thousand men were now mere fragments. Bepno Hansons forces was hit with full strength by a part of Huebaums army of Omarians the attack at this point carrying all before it. The Omarians destroying the ni neighboring columns opposing them swept across the whole entire line of works. Every line of opposition was horne down before the line of Glandelinian fire and despite the storm of fire from the christian batteries which cut a wide swath in every direction m death and indescriable destruction lurking in the wake of the tempest of shells.

It was along the main right wing of Huebaums army where the attacking forfce started upon their real career of horror and destruction. Not a rank in any part of the first line of works was left every man forced to flee one hundred thousand of them being shot down within twenty minuess. The first line of works was swpt clean every columns being routed and the main lin e was struck heavily by the Glandelinian columns. The assailants scathing Kauffmanns army advanced onwad and terrible was the destruction of Wickeys lines as they encountered the deadly chain of christian cannon all that was left being a few regimen regiments. The columns o under Dolers were wiped out completely, and during its frightful progress the a main li e line of the advancing foe in the vinicity of Gretchen and Mc-Hollester op ci completely swept over terrorties carrying all before them. Hundreds of generals with their divisions and bi brigades felt the force of the attack but held successfully for a while.

THE ANNIHILATION OF WHOLE ARMIES.

The enemy's center made the strongest offensive though thousands were annihilated in the twinkling of an eye, and this batt le md made the greatest roar ever heardthe loss oflife being terrible. Every column that swarmed to the attack were shattered to fragments by the christian fire one hundred thousand perishing in three great assaults. At the same time the Glandelinian guns were massed upon Jennie Richee and one hundred and fifty thousand houses were crushed to pieces within a few hours, sixty cathedrals, sebe seven hundred churches and all the hou houses wr were shatered into ruins by exploding shells and over ninty thousand were buried under the ruins in which two hundred and fifty thousand escaped unharmed.

Hundreds of t housands of massive buildings were leveled to the ground by many hundreds of cannon of heavy calibre and machine guns//// scores of human beings and animals were thrown into the air by exploding shellsand dashed stunned and bleeding among the wreckage. The assault of the enemy on thechristian line rose to a estroying the frontal columns, and thirteen brigades of the enemy were shattered against the wall of purple coats, and out ofa brigade of fifty thousand men only four thousand returned every one else having been killed or injuried. It was along the left of the extreme center where the Glandelinian troopsannihilating thousands of christians who opposed them, stormed up the T recian ridge with all all their fury and here the struggle was so fierce that brigades were damaged beyond reformationnothing but death and destuction ensuein ensueing here.

Itwas a regular hell of destruction, for here many hundreds of thousands were killed or wounded and many of the dead soldiers were so crushed and maimed that any one could have studdied on them. Several men intestines and all were seen hanging from the branches of a treunscathed by the storm of bursting shells that commited this horrible freak.....

The Trecian ridges was a regular hell of totallosses. EEvery charging column had been destroyed and whole armies troen torn to fragements. He it was predicted one of the heaviest losses of lives and the most terrible desturctionof actual warefure.

The losses here was over three hundred thousand in killed and wounded while the injured slight or severe ammounted to two million three hundred and twenty two thousand, three hundrd and sixty. Time and again the charging columns had come rushing forward with the most scathing violence and many blown menblown into the air by exploding shells turned many complete cartwheels before they fell to the ground mangled and bleeding. Furiously pushing inward, the wildly charging Glandelinian columns amid the withering roar of musketry stormed the christian lines on the summit of the Trecian ridges thousands of men being blwon to pieces.

The storm of shells swept their lines from t and rear piling the graycoats down like ridges but despite all this havoc committed the main columns of the foe st struck the thickly populatedlines of the christisns repeatedly almost the same hearterending cargae and destuction as during the Cedernine bat le.

CHAPTER VIII.

FREAKS LEFT BY THE BATTLE OF JENNIE RICHE, OR GLORINIA(CALVERINIA)))))

The main columns struck the christians lines sweping two parts of it back afer a discharge of artillery and musketry that sounded like the discharge of a billion cannon. The town of Marcus itself was stuck by a rain of shells which blew one thousand wooden houses to pieces within a few volleys...In this doomed town d town thousands of horribly crushed bodies of old old men women and children were exposed.The batle of Jennie richee or Glorinia amid all its horrible roar raged three days with varying fortunes on both sides, the assailants yelling again and again as if one hundred million demons were let loose, the artillery like roar of the musketry causing many to be appallied.

On the second day of the great batle the assailants million of them innumber werecaught in an almost preternatural storm of fire, scores of thousands falling dead under streams of seathing canister, while hundreds of thousands of others were scratched btusied or main maimedin the chaoes of destruction and burst of curtian shell fire. Hundreds upon hundreds of thousands had fallen in the assault within fifteen minutes before the ridges was finally forced and many trees snapped and twisted before the explosions of shells, and in one second nothing was left of them but stumps,and even many hun dreds of them were pulled from the ground and vaulted high into the air by high explosives.

The stro storm of shells sent thousands of buildings careening into ruins and into piles of twisted kindling. Jennie Richee herself was a mass of shattered vuildings the many five or six story buildings being reduced to one story junk piles ten feet deep with here and t ere many buildings allawry.

One wing of the enmy rushed through Hedda and Ophelia Run committing terrible damagein the thickly populated distructs while at the same time the main columns threatening to win the batt le ofJennie Richee threw forth a s storming forcethat desolted Kirner and a large Calverinian city known as Nelkingtonbug burning them to ashes withinthree days. The town of Zimmerman Zinmermann was shelled into ruins and many farms were ruined by the bat le, whole strips of forests were burned away and town after town wiped out.

Many freaks wereleft by the bombardment of Jennie Richee. Light pictures of many ruined houses were left hanging on the walls while religious picures were seen hanging upside down on the walls of a Convent whose roofs and several of its rooms were blown to splinters. A large dining lamp was left on the table and the lace shades were not eve even moved an inch though one side of the table had been scratched and charred. A score of beds and matresseshad been blown from the convent and dropped in Hdda street a block away by the force of the explosion of a Centemeter shell. Hay semed to be the main victims of the hih high explosives shells for n a hundred large liverly stables hay had been comple tely blown out and scattered through the streets like some green snowstorm.

Many havy car inges belonging to rich men were to blown to pieces and in Mayor Mc-Hollester's manisón which was torn to pieces and where he and al who lived there met death the glass stopper of a large decanter had been broken off by a shell and the bottle had been hurled a hundred and fifty feet into the air and even in the high fall in coming down the bottle had ben found unbroken. At the governers headquarters one of the shells tore of the front front wall of the house leaving exposed the whole interoior of these rooms. Theburst of a high explá explosive had drove driven a large picture frame and all clean out of a ruined catholic school, through the walls of a bulding opposite, through the weather boardig leath of another scoo school just on the rear of the second house, and through the plastering of another house a distance of one thousand five hundred feet and lof lodged it in a rear wall of the seconf c school, without even breaking a corner of the peiture frame. Terrible had been the velocity of the picture frame the laths of each building it went through being cut smoothly without cracking the adjoining plaster. Hundreds of boards and brocks by the same explosion whose crash could be heard all over the city were driven into the walls of the lo buildings and laths and even brooms straws first were also from driven into the sides of wooden houses. This shell left a ter-ible sulphurious smell in its wake morelike if hell had opened its mouth and let out someof its fumes.

In the farm regions where the batle also raged two she ls exploding simultaneously with an earsplitting crashing roar destroyed Shelbys big mansin a mansion wrecking everything but a large ammonia vault made of glassabout eight inches of thicknells. At the same time the shells burst Shelbys little daughter returning from her bath was s spinned around by the concu concussion stripped of her bath robe and thrown head first into t the ammonia vault the door ban ing banging s u shut and held fast by the ava/avalanch of debris that fell in front of it and on top. For ful y a minute any one could have seen her frantic strugles and gasps for air. Her eyes werepo prominent, and the veins in her foreheads were distended with blood.

Herparoxysmens for air was very distressing to witness but even before she fell allthe debris in front of the door was cleared away by another shell and the door blown to fragments. The concussion threw her out and dumped her into a celler where she lay writhingin an alarming mane manner untill killed by a nice of timber that struck her in the chest piercing her heart. From grief the mother killed herself, and the father going insane killedother children by cutting their bodies open before he was overpowered by several soldiers several days later.

In his terrible ravings he also died. His wife had killed herself in a delirium. Many had been known to go insane from grief and horror even children.

Among thwwreckage of Jennie niches were found thousands of chickens stripped clean of ve every feaé feather.On a tree were d found hanging a tam of horses and a wagon together. A little girl only fatally injured was found embraced by a dea dead man so tightlythat to free her his arms and hands had to be cut away. The rec reason for the vehement fury of the battle of Jennie niches could never be ascertained. Along the right wing of "einstines armythe attack had progressed with inconcwiable violnce and fury, and the two opps opposing armies battleing furiously for many hours surged back and forth before the Glandelinians finally gained the mastery carrying all before them, and making one gigantif charge in double line came tearing for Mc-Hollesters lines, annih ilati g all the small skirmish forces in its path, and al all the farms and villages at the same time besides it inhabitants with the ter-ible curtian fire of shells from both sides.....

On they swept with greater fury striking Mc-Hollesters line with the fury of the K Kyng of Avalanches but met a roaring wall of rifle blasts and cannon that swept down hundreds of thousands and reduced whole divisions to mere bits. By the terrific cannon fire of boh sides thrthe town of Big Catherine was prostrated as flat as a postage stamp. The roar of the batt le of Jennie Riches was declared to have ben heard at a distance of four hun red miles.

All the christian artillery opened upon the assailants with asonorous an d thundrous clash sheafs of flame seemed to dart along the christian line, every gray column encountering it being disolved into fragments. The roar of battle soon became insupportable and the enemy coming within range of their own musketry opened fire with a horrible redoubled ru roar heard for fifty miles and came roaring upon the christians, and the purple coats alarmed by such overwhelming numbers betook themselves to flight, but the main portions of the infantry lines still stood to the support of their guns and maintained a deadly withering fire upon the assailants with a tremendous noise resembling the discahrge of millions of the heaviest cannon; and immense quantities of men fell in every direction.

Part of the assaulting co columns in great gray broke through the center of Mc-Hollesters lines tearing the biggest and most massive brigades asunder nd throwing the christian forces in both the meinsine and Aronburg glens into great confusion. A sea of dead and woundedwas exposed to a distance of ther three miles in an open gle.The Glandelinians swept everything ais asi'e in their pathleaving nothing but tangled wreckage and bodies. It was estimated that a great extent of ground,the ridges themselves and their immediatelenvirons fifty miles long and fully ten broad was by the christian and glandelinian col convergingartillery fire was fairly spliced and furrowed and fil led withgreat craters. It was also mentioned that fifty villa villiages ten towns and two cities besides Jennie niches were shelled into ruins and that I22,957 of the inhibatants were torn to pieces intestines and all by exploding shells. A horrible number of catcle was also destroed destroyed and most of the plantations in the adjacent distiots were buried under the bodies of the fallen. L Noless havoc was wrought in the central portions of of thechristian armies but it ha pened however that large forces under Zimmermann came up in time to form a stronger battle line and finally muebnum Manley gave it up havinb having suffered a crushing defeat.

At the same time that the batle of Jennie Riches hadbeen going on christian forces under Juloand Bepple and the enemy under glandelinin at wort Zacary the christians having been defeated with the loss of nin hundred thousand the enemy having lost six hundred thousand.

Simultaneously the christian forces under Mehhenia attacked the Glandelinian forces at Marcocellio the losses on both sides being eight hundred thousand with a drawn battle. The christians under gannie fought a batt le at Aurandebondia but were shockingly defeated with the loss of I ,II3,000 the enemy losing nine hundred eighty eight thousand, eight hundred and ninty nine.

Battles at Arandscallie, Bonbon, and Aurandebondia were also decisive victories for the enemy over three hundred thousand having been killed in the three batles and over three million wounded.

The losses of the foe during t ethese combined batles exceeded as repor ted IO,000,000. Another batle was fought simultaneously at Catianine, the losses of the christians being one hundred twen twelve thousand while the enmy lost one hundred thousand. Simultaneously a batle was fought at Bellie it being very severe.

Thechristian lossesws I,I00,000 the enemy losing I,900,000and the christians were defeated.

Ninty thusand men women a and children perished in the city of wonia and ten thousand in Unroe where not a house was left standing, hundreds of thousands of houses disappearing into runs ruins in a few hours.In Mona KeysoniaII,400 houses were blown down by shells and one hundred th thousand were buried under the ruins a few only escaping. Almost all the towns e even omnnia and a ll the barracks were swept away by great conflargratins. In St Sebastón no one escaped, and in the city of Estratrock where sixty one thousan d persons had pers perished every building was leveled to the ground by the storm of high explosives and out of six hundrd houses at St Catherine only fourteen were left sta standing the rst being swept away by the flames.

In thewhole westen part of Calverinia within these two mot months of war had leveled whole cities and numbered their victims by millions in their whole path. The cities of little Norma oan and Mc-ollester had bee n reported totally destroyed, the total loss in killed and injured being declared a as five hundred thousand mangled corpses and thre million injured.

This was only a handful. Twenty five thousand people were killed out right in the city of Drophia alone and fourty thousand burned in the debris which caused it on fire.

In Angeline niches th the Glandelinians kill ed ten thousand peopleand injured one hundred and fourty one thousand, and at marcucian they slew two hundred and fifty thousand persons mostly all children. At Angeline Curran four hundred and thirty thusand children were reported to be slain, and it was reported that they wiped cut Aronburg and Kauf massmaking two hundred thousand corpses. At Jennie Riches they killed one hundred thousand, and twave thousand at Jennie Town. At Marcocellio they destroyed six hundred and twenty two thousand lin lives and spreading desolation and suffering over a wide territory. At Aurandicallo all the buildings were demolished, great destuction of property reu resulting from the terrible visitation. Th? The loss of life there was appalling one hundred and fourty thousand children having perished by thethe sword and two hun dred and twenty thousand from the havy sesaas of fire, the greater number being buried beneath the ruins of houses while others perished from explosives and privations. At Mc-hollester three hundred thousand were killedor injured, and at Angelinia Gannie fourty thousand were killed while at Grethen twenty thousand. Oneof the greatest losses in lives occured at Violent ransinia, Violet Paulinia and Vivian Wickay.It was precit prdictal that the christians by their cannons killed six hundred thousand glandelinian soldiers at Violent Lansina and four hundred and ninty nint thousand at vivian "icky

The wair at Violet Paluliniawas unable o sent to the outside world any accurate idea of her reall loss. North Violet Paulinia reported a correct loss of one hundred and ten thousand, but later it was found that it had increased to one hundred and ninty thousand killed and wounded and dying. Betwen one hundred and ten thousandfive hundred, and onehundred and twelve thousand had perished in the southern parts of the city and in a wek nine hundred and fifty thousand six six hundred sixty six were found dead dying or injured in themidlle portions alone. The real total loss was co nsideredas one million three hundred and sixty two thos thousand five hundred. Most of these were only slightly injured. The total loss in dead was thre hundred and sixty six thousand, five hundred and twenty nine. The lagest numberswere crushed by the ruins of falling churches which had sustained the worse fury of thgreat storm of shells being reduced into heaps of ruins within thirty minutes. In Vivian Wo Wickey the total losses & housewas nine million four hundred thousand, and three million of whichwere leveled to their foundation. Thirty thousand were burned and thereat about fourty five million were badly damage vivian Wickey being the largest city in the world.

General vivian in southern Angelinia hear ing about this disaster was amazed.

"It's the worse thing I have ever heard off." He said.

At the same time this had gone on Fedeal to force a barring christian army from Evangelinsin St_lare had bombarded the city to pieces causing appalling loss to life and po property. Federal threatened and then struck the christin line there raging a furious battle at Anna Aronburg 'sRun and though the fallen law lik like straws from a bo blown down haystacks he could not force the christian lines which tore his massive divisions and armies to fragments and so he was repulsed with the loss of three million as reported.

Federal was enraged for his army was betwen general Viviania's army and this new host under ? Zoe Meddins and amid a mos seething storm of carnagehe threw forward a second assault and for two hours amid s.. smashing losses the assault continued untill Federal recieved a broken army and was again repusled. From terrible fires in Anna Aronburg an ernormous wall of cloud undulating in numerous freak bubbles shape overspread the skies while the smell of sulphur was in t the air. Amid all he hell hellish destruction caused by the battle and the appalling screaming roar of the shells Federal despite his broken army launched a third assault. The frontal columns were splintered to fragmentsby the storm of canister and exploding shells, from he christian cannon the roar of bat le being so loud that the sound seemed to come from theheavens as well as from the fields of ca rnage.

Canister and grapeshot exerted its utmost fury pouring upon the assailants like unbroken floods and the whole first line became windrows of dead and dying, the survivors recoiling once more. Then Federal and Tamerline together exerted all their strength upon this new barrier and such crashing of musketry and cannon could not be describedmneither the screaming of the shells.

Hell itself semed to lè loose 'ut the christ ian columns was caught in a wave of overwhelming forces and was finally hurled back with frightful loss. In these assaults nearly eight million Glandelinians fel l the christi n losses only being three million five hundred and fifty two thousand. As Federal and Tamerline won the batle of Anna Aronburg which rged fully fourty eight ho hours they cnened a way for Manleys whole army who resumed its retreat north ward,Manley beg ing Huebaum Manley to hurry and make a junction with him to c rush general Viviania before he should come to the aid of the beaten christian forces.....

FURIOUS BOMBARDMENT OF ANNA ARONBURG.

Furious and terrific was the cannonading of the city of Anna Aronburg. Pyrimads of flame seemed to scourch ot the skies and the din was tremendous. Congestons of bodies of men women and children were scattered about by explosions. Many bodies were broken crumpled and crushed and bruised while others were smothered by gases.

Many bodies had been undated by clouds or ava ravalanches of wreckage . At the same time when the enemys attack upon the christian lin es had broken loose with all its force and by the fury of the fighting it semed as if all the demons of hell had ben let loose, or that to the very hell had changed places withthe earth, the shells fell so hi kly in Anna Aronburg that in a'l dire tions could have been seen maelstromes of crasing houses. I The real fury of the destruction was indescriable. Imagine the tremendous roar of destruction, that earsplitting thunder of shells so l loud as to seem to split the earth, and the me maelstroms of crashing timbers and you will know what it was like. The din was universal, the deafening warefare of destruction being terrifiynig. Into be main part of the city the wave of destruction tore with the most frightful fury the shells bl wing to pieces hundreds of th thou ands of houses, rending big man'sons into ruins while thousands upon thousands of the victims were a laid low amid the maelstrome of destictuom destruction. Hundreds of children were caught in avalanhces of masonryand killed or injured. Hundreds of boilers were blown from the factirons by the series of high explosives, and wagons and wounded horses were Indeed what untold horrors occured during the whole second year of this great Glandco-Angelinian war! When the war had started it had been uncommon in its slight intensity. Most nations of this Angelinian world had read the accounts of the bloodiest war ever seen before this one and it was of the Glandco Abbinanina war of eighteen fourty one. But though the battles in the earliest part of the Angelinian war with Glandelinia were slighter than in any terrific war ever seen some of the nations had feared something out of this though other nations had at first believed that the war would really be nothing & all. From the big beginning the Angelinians had easily crushed out all foe invasion of Angelinia and though attempted three times by the foe it had been frustrated with horrible slaughter. But the queer thing was why is it that the nemy could not be ousted out of Calverinia.! And why was it that from the start of the middle of the wars first years duration to the end of the second year that it had become so extremely maddening in fury and why was it that the enemy showed such terrific resistance.!

The fortifications of Mc-Whirther was the reason. And two other places were also the reason. Think of the long seiges of Julo Callio and Norma which has still continued with many varying battles on both sides and still the enemy were holding out against the besiegers. The fury of the war was indeed becoming redoubled. The enemy holding out against the beisegers at Norma Catherine was over fourty eight million strong, and I00,000,000 of the enemy at Julo Callio be defied the Angelinian besiegers.

However it did seem that the Kinte rgarten horror was now to recede al together, because the enemy invasion of eastern Calverinia was now completely overthrown, since the disaster to the enemy at Gretchen. The christians had struck the enemy two good blows during the struggle called the Kindertgarten massacre. One great blow at Big Girlwool ank and another at Gretchen. But the mightiest section of the great war was raging in the western part of Calverinia. And the centre of this mightiest section of the great storm was Norma Catherine and Julo Callio. For thirteen months since their capture by the enemy they have held out most stubbornly against the christian besiegers, and amid a continual rain of iron hail for over the time of those months and daily. It was reported that during the thirteen months the enemy at different points sallied forth fighting fierce ob engagements at many points at which the common battle of Julo callio was the most com mon. Some of the fiercest fighting occured during the seige of Julo Callio in particular at places called Norma Run, Beauties Lane, Bondinia Run, Zanagustopolisis, Wattruba, Baduln Anden, Ghrilli, Ganderlinia, Holtzeburg and Poverty Poverty Row and many others during the first and last of the thirteen year months. Most of these conflicts happened to be slight christian advantages but nevertheless it did not make the enemy yeild and it seemed impossible to raise the seige. despite all the shelling that was being done. Norma was the strongest in holding out, and fierce conflicts raged At Satens Lanes and Beelzebubs crook with no advantage to either side. Mc-Whirther was also holding out against all desperate attempts of the christian fleets to retake her, and it did seem evident that the war would la last a long time before the situation would be settled.....

During the seigeof Julo Callio at the latter part of the wars second years duration terrible explosions occureds. The enemy had caused the ores erection of great ammunition factirons during their time of resisting the great seige, and many of these had been blown up by the shell fire from the guns of the beisegers. Some of these explosions were a hundred times worse than the worse explosion in a grain mill or elevator. One great ex plosion during the bombardment, wrecked a score of buildings twenty blocks away from the scene fairly crushing the largest and highest of the steel made buildings, and the concussion fairly wrapped many of the Glandelinian soldiers round trees, threw up their tents and cannons for the height of a hundred feet, and broke windows in 11 of the buildings in the city, and broke windows in the city of Francis Atlanta fourty eight miles away. Not the most carefully cultured of all the ex- insors storm of demolition companis x companies could have wrought greater damageto a structure of such apparent permanence if they used unlimited high explosives and had weeks of time in which to plaplant their bombs. There could indeed have been a fairly good sized book of pages of all the explosions that occured during the seige of julo callio worse than the scenes of horror at Rheims, Ypres and other wrecked cities and villiages of northern France and Belgium. There was a worse scene of death and desolation for greater distance the same prospect of broken charred buildings and twisted steel, ourpl crumpled buildings and torn earth, destruction heaped upon destruction. But these photo graphs could have been taken in Calverinia.

no of the greatest explosions that ever occured during the whole seige was at Norma Catherine. At the section where the explosion occured the Mc-Hollest Mc-Hollester Run river spreds through the country and here meets the mouth of the Norma Catherine river. At the intersection of these two places stood a captured ammunition factory. This great building was made all of concrete on the outside but thickly lined with wooden walls covered with plaster on the inside and f wooden floors. It was a structure however of great strength and that cleanliness cleanness of line which was the hall mark of modern Calverinian industrial shelters. The plant was so large and le ngthy that it covered thousands of square yards of ground and its white stacks swept skyward with the grace and dignity of Grecian columns. Here was the home of a once beautiful Calverinian industry the core of an investment of a hundred million dollars of war materials captured by the enemy. The scene despite the bombardment was alive with the beauty of service. The thing was not really beautiful in the sense in which one speaks of an ancient cathedral or an exquisite pleasure yacht but there was a definite suggessition of massf structures and stark efficiency which made it impressive in the same way that a gigantic battle cruiser painted in fighting gray and stripped for action is impressive. But two weeks after a final struggle at Latruva the magnificent towering stacks leveled to the ground, and not only this b building a burning mass of smoking blazing wreckage, but the scenery of ras razed blown in buildings for miles from the concussion and twenty eight Glandelinian warships way out half across the wide Mc-Hollester Run river dele derelicts from the blast. The concussion of the explosion killed every man on board of the warships though ten miles away from the buildings, and in the city itself the concussion wrecking 2,345 buildings caused a loss of lives to amount to fifty thousand. No one could account for this terrific explosion which shook the country for a hundred miles and which was heard for five times that distance. It was reported that the whole Calverinian country was shaken by the tremendous crash, and the air had been filled with the torn fragments of the buildings walls. The sensation of many thousands of Glandelinians who survived the disaster was exactly similar to an occasion of being caught in the crater of an active volcano and when an explosion on the surface of a lake of lava occurs. A later inspection of the building after the seige was over convinced the victors that two tons of T.N.T. could not have given a more greater disaster to the city and it had been sufficient to bring excited tourists from all of over to see what it had been like. It is indeed hard to say which in the war was the greatest seige of all. There were a number of seiges in the war already during these two years of the war and in only three had the Angelinians recieved such desperate resis reis resistance as at Julo Callio, Norma, Catherine, and vivian Wickey. Of course the seige of Crowley can be counted in it also but then as a matter of fact this seige was not much of a stubborn one and only the folly of the enemy was being proved there. But the most stubborn seige of the war even during the remainder of the second year of the great struggle is the seige of Julo Callio. The enemy it is stated had fought hard and fiercely to take Julo Callio and fought one of the first bloodiest battles of the war which lasted fully thirty one days without a single minutes pause. Despite the sit ation it was declared by war correspondents and reporters that Norma Catherine was the first captured for the reason that it lay direct in the path of the advancing enemy. It of course resisted as the demons resisted against their overthrow in heaven but it did not resist so long as Julo Callio and fell easily. Nothwithstanding the horrors the daughters of general vivian experienced in Norma Catherine, they had not act ually for their own good too witnessed the greatest reign of terror of the western threatre of war and in Julo Callio. 10,000 French Revolutions seemed to rage at Julo Callio and its whole vicinity within two months untill the world was horrified over the news of thewars worse massacre of all. When the city was suddenly besieged by the rapidly arriving christian armies it resisted as su stubbornly as it had resisted against the enemy at the beginning, the Glandelinians proving themselves well able to stand up against the longest seige and even now when the war was passing its second years duration the Angelinians had not as yet compelled the enemy to raise the seige, though their seige guns, and attacks have caused the glandelinian armies the most woeful losses during all these thirteen months. The damage occurring here was worse already than even the greatest of wars in Europe, and the christian line of seige extended for the distance of over thirteen hundred miles without a break anywhere, and were 567,888,999 strong against the defenders who war were only a little over a hundred million strong, and that this more little handfull held out against such an overwhelming force was astonishing to the world. It was more astonishing than the peculiar Aronburg situation at Vivian Wkoey Wickey.

It seemed out of the question to compell the enemy to surrender by means of starving them into giving up because they had mysterious tunnels underground which enabled them to secure food and provisions, and even reinforcements and ammunition from other sources sources of the glandelinian invaders. Angelinian spies have tried their best to find the ways to the tunnels but of no avail as they could not be found. News had reached many of the christian nations about the fearful seige of Evan Crania and the extreme battles that had raged there, but it was considered a seige too bloody to last last, and yet it ended as a crushing failure for the main christian commander of all. It was the only seige made by the christians that failed, but nevertheless the other seiges were lasting so long that the Angelinian govern ments decided that forceful means was the only means to accomplish the rasing raising of the seige. Through investigations it was discovered by Gemidian spies that if the fortifications of the enemy at Norma's Run could be forced by an overwhelming large christian army, Norma Catherine could not be held out against the beisegers much longer, and if she fell all julo Callio and Mc-Whirther would fall with her.

But with Angelinia Agathin threatened so often, Evangeline St Clare already in the hands of the enemy, and the eastern section of Calverinia overwhelmed in the disaster of war, no armies could be brought to bear upon Norma's Run and so it seemed impossible just now for anything to be done. All efforts of bombarding Mc-Whirther into subbission had also met with crushing failure and it seemed evident that terrible and bloody as was the war it would last much longer than any one ever thought, and that it would not be over or that the invaders would not be driven out of Calverinia untill Mc-Whirther was recaptured.

It was not readily stated how many christian cannons was bombarding th the beisoged, and neither did it say how large in extend the enemy beisoged were but nevertheless from the separate battles raging now and then and which resulted in the tighter stranglehold of the christians it was evident that the enemy held all surrounding towns, villinges, and any p other points that would open a passage to Norma Catherine and Julo Callio. It was the longest seige ever known. In the Glandeo-Abbieannian war of 1841 when the city of Glandelinia was bei besieged for over eight years, it was a tame seige despite its length compared to this one of Julo Callio, though of cous course in one way the seige of glandelinia was in seseriesseries of seiges with the Abbieannians beaten back a number of times by enemy resistance in particular and by great forest fires started by the Abbieannians. The seige of Julo Callio was really an unspeakable horror. Fires of great extent raged every day, thousands of gigantic explosions occured somewhere long the line of the field of blood every month, and severe and exceedingly bloody battles raged night and day at different quarters.

Of seecnd years bloody battles of Julo callio seige see chapter six Vol.III.PartII.

However However during the full two years of the great war the most intention especially of the christian country was that of Vivian Wickey and the fortif ications called Mc-Whirther. Fierce attempts had been made to even take them by land, especially the Osmondonson horror, the scene of blood curdling destruction at Evangeline Crania, and Gurmers Hills or Gurmers Run and Marthia gorde. One of the bloodiest battles of the war in the desperate attempts to capture the fortifications of Mc-Whirther was the stu struggle for the possession of Gurmers Hill, and Gurmer's Run and which ended for the christians as a bloody and crushing rop lse. The christians were a little successful at Osmondonson but the victory was not complete enough to prevent the advance of the main Glandelinian army under the Manleys or complete enough to prevent the fortifications of Eva Crania from being heavily reinforced by the enemy who for nine weeks fought so stubbornly and fiercely against Hanson and general vivian who besieged the places, and bal banged the besieged out of Cedernine thus terim terminiating the Evangeline Crania horror. The second year of the glandeo-Angelinian war alone had more battles than the whole ten years war with Abbieannia and Glandelinia in 1841 and the battles were so severe that the world was shocked and many christian nations horrified, over the maddening ferocity of the war all the havoc it caused, and the sad sorrowful Christmas days were for making an intervention, and decided to fit out all ships possible to help Zimmermann and Mc-Hollester to make a general storm against the fortifications of Mc-Whirther and cause their fall by main force. Something had to be done or God alone would only be able to tell how long the horro horrible war would last. However many of the nations felt at ease when they heard of the outcome of the great war in Eastern Calverinia. The Gintergarden massacre had reached its height at Big Girlene ol and was finally crushed at Gretchen .

The Kintergarten massacre was the worse horror of the war entirely not in the battles that raged, but in the wanton destruction caused by the enemy and of the great assassination of children. The enemy when starting the invasion of Eastern part of Calverinia had started to advance upon the city of Catherine Decio. It was not hardly a large city but nevertheless it was too lagre to be called a town or villdage. It embraced half the size of a modern Ame American city in Illinios. Illinois. The people were hostile to the Glandelinians when they approached the region and it had been at first stated by many that from the good effects of generals shooten middleonia Meldonia Bicknell, and others such as Josipine Jonsin, and Accountants that the advancing armies of glandelinians would not be permitted to committ any massacres of children. General Raymond Richardson federal was in person al command of the advancing glandelinian armies and during his temorary absence his armies were advancing upon gatherine Decio.

It is stated that the glandelinians broke their prosish and slew some children, priests and nuns in the vinicty of gatherine Decio during their halt there. The people of the city had been aroused over the news and whether the reports were true or not no one knows but nevertheless the inhibatants of the town resolved under any costs not to allow the enemy to advance through their city.

At first to prevent the enemy from o moving through their towns the inhibat ants set some small forest fires, and mobbed some of the army generals and then seeing this impossible to stop them, the inhibatants women and men hid in doorways, and windows, or in dark alleys one night, and even on all house tops, and when the enemy marched through the foremost part of the city opened an annihilating fire upon the soldiers mowing down nearly a hundred thousand men before the survivors unable to locate the snipers retreated. It was literally a battle with the inhibatants and ten times the glandelinian infantry rushed with fury through the city with the intention of bringing the snipers to j glandelinian justice but were all also shot down untill the glandelinian loss was over sixmillion without a single loss to the inhibatants.

The Glandelinian army then halted untill general federal approached. On his return he was informed of the disaster and he sneeringly said;

"Where are your damn cannons. Blow the town of snipers to hell."

So the enemy quickly surrounded the town before the inhibatants were aware of the danger and within one fortnight laid all the buildings into a sea of smoking ruins, slaying every one in the ruins whom they found alive, whether whether he be man woman of child. The maddened glandelinians then poured on and slew and committed untold atrocities everywhere they went, and when ever worsted in battle only raged the more against the defenseless. Over eighteen million children in Eastern Calverinia were within one ya years time put to the sword, and 10,000 villiages, small cities, large town, big cities, and other plances were laid in ruins or ashes. Whole forests were burned to desolation and starvation faced the people who survived before finally the enemy suffered the reverse at gretchen. Of course it is no doubt that many would say that the people of The city of Lady gatherine Decio had no right to snipe the soldiers when they were not sure whether the enemy committed the slight outrages or not. The enemy did really do it, the many persons of the city witnessed it, but nevertheless they were foolish to have sniped the enemy, because if they had not done it this unspeakable horror of wars hell would have been averted. " General Raymond Richardson federal is a terror e when aroused and he showed no mercy. There are times wha when he would not allow the massacres of children but that was on only cer tain grave conditions. When the people of Decio sniped his soldiers and he learned of it his rage knew no bounds and he did not stop at nothing and would have gone so far as to make Eastern Calverinia a living earthly perdition for real had not the glandelinian tidal wave of horror been checked at the bloody battle of Gretchen. But it was not all over yet. The enemy were only only checked and not driven back. It was now nearing April and still the war was increasing in violence and fury.

How much damage was committedcommitted by the enemy in the Kintergarten, massacre could never be estimated as the destruction had been so complete. But the extent from south to north was estimated to be over three th ousand miles of wrecked cities, and towns, burned charred forests and vast graveyards, and scenes of horrible desolation. No series of Abbisannian typhoons could have ever accomplished all the havoc caused by the enemy in the east.

CHAPTER FOURTY THREE.."."."."."### '_

SUM MARY OF OCCURANCES FROM NOV. TO JANUARY AND APRRIL. oOf theEXPERIMNCES OF BOYSCOUTS. AND. WALTER STARRING.

BECAUSE of the cutting off s of so much communications by the dreadful war Violet and her sisters did not recieve any news as to what first had occured of the bombardment of Evangeline St Claire which occured the past November the 5th when the enemy tried to capture th e place a second time. They did not know what a narrow escape escape their mot her and aunt had there either and probably would never know.

They did not recieve either any news of what was called the Kintergarter Massacre which even now was still raging, and staging itself to be the greatest horror ever known in the war with such a frightful massacre of children in so few months. M or of the many fearful and bloody batt les and all probably for victories. They heard a slight rumor of the disaster ay St eadmanns run but it was only meager.

During all that time too the great south and eastern Calverin ian forest fires had grown to an immeasureable intensity, even though immense armies of men and soldiers and rangers tried to stem them, and forest fires started by the enemy during the Kintergarten and other war horrors aggravated matt ers so that astonishing to say that no where in Calverinia, nor in southern Abyssinkile which state was further orth too had no winter but constant h eat and a cont inual easterly or southeasterly winds. Violet and her sisters h had never seen such a weather for winter either but as they liked warmpth more better than cold even despite how much they could stand cold they did not compa complain.

The main problem it seemed to be worrying about was what would be the outcome of the following summer in weather if throughout the wint er it had been so hot , an unheard of thing in all of Calverinia's h istory, where even in April in other years lots of snow still lays on th e ground. Violet had once almost laughingly said;

"Maybe th e State of Calverinia is going t o be turned int o a molten planet by the enemy."

Through something that happend to h im and stung h im to t he quick the ót her boy friend and boyscout of Violet and her sisters we know so well as Walt er John Starring did as we might say. got even.g e committed what we migh t call a real "Boo.Line raid with h is boy and girlscouts. Maybe the reader will not believe anyt h in g t old of it here, but one thing is sure if it had occured it could have been a straight story because when a mind it is set upon it , where is there a girl or boy who really can't do anything. It wasn't so long extended that raid, but oh--boy.

Penod t h e great raider himself opened hsh is eyes when h e h eard of it for his sisters wit nessed and participat ed in a part of it lat er on and told h im all about it.

How it came to be is that he that is Penrod had to remain home with His Father as being such a great boy scout and w worker he could be a great help to his father and the army. The first thing necessary in the beginning of this description is to tell of his orders to Walter. That was easy. Then the next thing we have to do is to tell you about Jack Saunders. Gee Wiz Whiz how the enemy iewish they could get rid of him. Jack Saunders as we know belongs in the Vivionite Raven patrol, and when that band of girl and boyscouts went along to general Concentinian Aronburgs army to give him assistance they wished him onto Starring and his "Gang for the time untill they would come back. They said it was a good turn. Well he certainly was a "turn." The enemy won't forget him in a hurry. So this opening part of the story is just about Walter Starrings big patrol, and Jack Saunders, and some more burning encamp ments, and a couple of valleys and a hill, and some "Little devastation" and a forest, and a strange big tree, the Vivian Girl Heroines and a wagon load of peanut brittle. They might as well have gone through College in tent minutes. So you can see from that how bright they were. That iswhy his band is called "The Roving tigers."

Now Schofield Penrod Vivian, (He has seven merit badges because of his unusual raids) had seen that he would have a very busy time with his father, whose army was quite close yet to the Ophelia Region for no matter how fierce had the enemy even hammered him throughout Januar ary and Feb. he was just as easy to move as Mt Krakaton is when you tell it to, and yet though the enemy was also there and just as stubborn as he was he knew he had lots of work to do and had asked Penrod to remain with him for a while and lend him a hand.K

Jokingly Penrod had said to his father;
"When are you going to retreat Father dear."
"See that big inaccessable mountain over there!"asked emperor Vivian.
"Yes I do "said Penrod.
"Well my boy, when you climb climb that within t n ten minutes, and its over eighteen thousand feet, I'll retreat."
"I climb that Father"said Penrod. "In ten minutes.Why that would take the best climber a week to get to the summit."
"Well then you know the answer.I'll not move untill that mountain does."
No wonder the Glandelinian generals say the two Vivians are not retreating men ...Penrod cam to Walter Starring, because he was one of the highest of the boy and girlscout scout patrol l aders, and he said;
"In case my sisters wish to go out on some scouting tour do you think you could have time to guard them, Wat Walter."
"Sure I might as well"said Starring."I believe I love their company as much as you do Prince.If I hang around here doing nothing while waiting for the enemy to try to drive your father from here again all I'll be doing is spening precious time."
"But when you go out with them you'll want a full patrol won't you?You can't count jack Saunders in the "Roving Tigers can you.He's wishing to go on on some long adventure and is going to lev leave the Vivianites for a time to do you."
"Talk of something pleasant for the enemy"Walter told him with a laugh.
S "Sure send him around Prince.We'll go ahead out west and Jack can l ave the Vivianites under the care of Dolores Mic-JHollester or Jean.We may even form up a new regiment and when you are relieved of some of your duty and can go out with your sisters again you can start the n w patrol that your good sisters are always talking about."
"It's a good idea"said Penrod.What shall we call it."
"Call the the boy and girlscout Military p olice patrol or whatever you want to, I don't care."Walter told him."Or l at least let one of your sisters ga give it a name."
"That is anoth er good idea."Penrod said."Well I guess I'll go.I hear father, and even my sisters calling me.My Father says he wants to stay here as long as the enemy does, he has a beautiful headquarters n and everything and I and my sisters when times are a little more peaceful fa can go swimming in the stream.I'll send you a note in case they'll wish to go out with you."
"How is that going to get me to go out with them!"Walter a k asked him.
"Go ahead to your good father, the sooner the quicker for he is calling you and some of your sisters are coming.Tell Emperor Vivian your father and also your sisters that if I got working with the enemy I'll have fewer enemies for them to worry about.Tell Violet and her sisters to let general Manley worry for a while."
So that is the last we'll see of Penrod in this story for a time untill after the battle of Nina Ronda on the Mic-Whirther Run which occured later.But believe me there are deeds in this also story which though thrilling were also somewhat laughable..Walter Starring and his followers had about two weeks or so to hang about this territory before starting to make a junction with the Vivianites.After Penrod had gone into his headquarters with the Vivian Girls skipping on both sides of him, Walter Starring and two of his companions were sitting on two good sized chairs on the porch of Timothy Grovetons headquarters talking about the unusual heat throughout winter, what the summer would be if it didn't rain roon, how much more smoky the sky was now how little the sun shone and what they would do to kill time for a couple of weeks as all the child scouts were on a "Leasure season".
"What's the matter with getting Jack Saunders to be with us untill the Vivianites come back."one of the boyscouts whose name was George West wanted to know."
"Speak of angels"said Walter Starring, and you may hear th flutter of their wings;Here he comes up the hill and his little girlfriend Jean is with him. They won't part for the world."
"What is he and she eating."Henry Benton wanted to know also.
"I think it is peanuts"Henry Darger said.
Pretty soon the two brave little angels eating peanuts crossed the road, and cup up across the lawn.He also was always cutting the enemy up in some way or other."
"For Heavens sake, c m comrades look at him."Starring said"He's a regular style for a walking junk shop.We could sell him for old metal.Wh re did he get all that."?
Honest, though he liked Jack very much Starring had to laugh.That boy sure to him looked like w a walking junkshop.He was wearing a belt axe much bigger than any ordinary boyscout would need to wear, and it looked as if it weighed a ton the way it dragged his belt down.In front he had a big ja jackknife that must have belonged to some Glandelinian child butcher dangling from his belt and he had a big nickle plated compass hanging by a cord around his neck.

He had a perfect breastfull of badges on, and besides he had a aluminum cooking set that looked decidedly "Glandelinian" hanging by a strap from his shoulder.He had a big gray scraf on too as if he didn't care how hot it was and also by a rope he was forcibly leading a Glandelinian soldier along, the end of the rope around the soldiers neck. and three children dressed like child slaves were joyfully following him and Jean.The soldier looked scared. He had a long staff with a Glandelinian pennant on it and he was making a pretense of being haughty and proud as he jabbed it into the ground as he came along.Jean was marching behind the soldier with rifle at the ready .
"What in the world is this!"Said West."A traveling hardware store with an Glandelinian soldier and three child slaves."
"Are you starting off on some sort of a crusade-Jack"said Henr y."Where's your steel armour.What's the large idea!Have the glandelinians invaded our camp."
Starring was laughing so hard he could scarcely speak.Jack looked like the picture in a boyscout handbook that shows just how to wear medals and things.
"What's this!"A coffee pot!" Ralph Warter asked hi m.You "You must be going to join a Cooking Tour with all your cooking things.What's the big idea of all the exteroration."
"They're not mine.This glandelinian prisoner of ours was a walking telegation and he gave them to me unwillingly by forced request." Jack said."And also the children."
"He was a what."Starring asked him.
"Don't you know what a Glandelinian delegation is!"He shot back at Starring.
"Good night .Pity the "Poor Glandelinians""Starring said."So that's what you captured him for.So what's the big compass for.Was the Glandelinian soldier going to take the children to Chi na to murder them so we would not know it? Break it to us gently.You sound like a wagon-when you walk."
"You kids think you're smart don't you!"The Glandelinian shouted.
"Shut up .not a word out of you."Snapped Jack."Then turning to Starring he continued;"I was out doing a good turn.I was out doing a good turn for your patrol .I was trying to get you a new member.When you go after new members you have got to look like a scout haven 't you.You've got to show them what scouting is so they'll see.Everybody knows that.But I got these instead.Didn Didn't you ever hear that it takese scout to catch a scout.?"
"Maybe I did but you'd catch anybody when you can catch a sn skunk with all that junk hanging on him."Starring told him looking sharply at the prisoner and then glancing more friendly at the children.Who did you try to catch?"
"That foriegnor boy Hank Mic-Hollester."
"Good night, we all began to laugh as they all know that boy.
"Hank Mic-Hollester."Said Starring."You couldn't make him join with a lasso. He's a easy life lover for he loves only the front porch of his home within the camps too much and his parents wouldn't lent let him go if he wanted to. They say we're too good for him and they don't people who are too good.Therefore you stand a tall chance of getting that foriegnor snipe Mic-Hollester into the scouts.You're wasting your time Jack.What did he tell you!"
"He said that boyscout life is too hard for him.He doesn't like work or hard ships, and says he was born to live an easy life and that he has something better to do with himself.And he doesn't like to get up early in the morning to go to Mass and Holy Communion every day like we do.He says seven oclock is much too early."
"There you go."Darger told him."That's him all over.Why should such a lazy slothe who gets up ten oclock every morning join the silver Vivienites when he himself can shoot such things as they have in his own country called Buffaloes and Indians and hunt train robbers and kidnap maidains and dig up buried tea treasure?"
"Where can he do that!"Jack wanted to know.
"Right in his own home library."Starring told him."Division C Third shelf from the top.I believe that is a dangerous place too, for it's a wonder he didn't get killed by Indians or Buffaloes in there.There used to be a cboy who lived in Camp Jensin company L and he got drowned in a big sea story in there."
"What are you talking about!"The Glandelinian prisoner screamed."It seemed evidently the fellow got excited when he heard conversation he didn't like so before continuing Jack had him taken away.
"I suppose"said Darger"That Hank is afraid we'd tak him out on hairbreadt adventures.What were you going to do Jack!Throw the coffee pot at him if he didn't join.You didn't intend hacking him to pieces with your scout knife did you!Because to eve y e everybody a scout is supposed to be kind."

"Kind.!All those foriegners make me tired, all of them."Jack shouted."Do you want to hear what he did and said.

"Answered in the affirmative."Starring told him."Begin at the beginning and go on untill you come at the end."

"Well I was foolish for once"he continued removing all the junk as he didn't care to hold it any longer."That's what I get for even trying to do these forien foriegners a good turn.No wonder Angelinia Aronburg said nearly all these foriegners are crazy."

"Did he say that too"Warde wanted to know.

"Sure, and Violet and her sisters have said so too."Jack piped up.

"They don't need to say so we admit it."Starring told him."Go ahead with your story.What do you want us to do Jack.Light a camp fire in this hot weather so that you can unravel your yarn."

"That foriegn boy can be cu circumnavigated yet."Jack said very dark and mysterious.

"circumvented you mean."Darger said.

"You know what I m an."Jack said.

"Go ahead "Starring told him."The plot grows thicker.

"Give us a couple of peanuts."Darger said.

Jack picked up the aluminum coffee pot and turned it upside down for them and good night sister anne it was full of peanuts.He that is jack said, it once belonged tothe prisoner.

"Let's see what is in the sec saucepan."Starring said, handing a handful of peanut to the child slaves, two boys and a girl.

In a few minutes every one was eating p e peanutes and Jack sent one of the girlscouts coming up to Violet and her sisters with a bag full of peanuts for each.

"Go ahead and tell us Jack"said Starring."You are a little brick to try to find us a new member.He didn't fall for it boy! "

"He didn't even trip."Darger said.

" Keep still please Henrty"Starring told him, and let Jack te l us."

Then Jack said;

"I dressed all up in my best uniformand wore all my stuff so he would just see how a boyscout ofour country looks like.He understands out langu g ' ln language very well.Therefore I thought all my uniform would be a kind of lure for him.I tried to remind him about campfires, adventures and a eating and everything."

"What did he say"George West wanted to know.

"He said he had no use for boy scouts of the Abbiganian army."Jack said."

He said they' e too good and holy and have to be doing all the time kind acts to everybody every day and of going to Mass early every morning and that too were more like soldiers and fight the enemy like the cavarly odoes and there isn't any fun in that.He'd rather be playing soldiers than be the re l thing.He also didn't like work, and said life of a boyscout is too hard and he couldn't bear it.He says he doesn't like to be with anybody who are so unaturally good as we are, and that he doesn't like violwt and her sisters as they're too good.I told him there are different kinds of kind acts."Jack said."I told him you don't have to be so awful kind to the enemy.I told him it would be a kind act to rescue child slaves, break down a Glandelinian camp in a raid--set the foe camp on fire and liberate prisoners, that's what I told him.I told him he might do a good turn to our own cause by helping us keep the Vivian Girls free harm."

"what did he say!"

"What kind of a good turn do you call that!"he asked me"I said to him suppose there were Glandelinians raiding your home, and we rescued you.I know lots of good turns that are fun.Suppose Master Starring I tripped you up so you couldn't chase a poor---little---girl so as to steal a---a-----"" a piece of candy from her"Starring finished for him.

"That would be a good turn."Said Jack.

"Well Jack"said Starring if a fellow hasthat opinion about us because we're so good and go to Mass every morning early he would never make much of a scout.

He is too selfish and too much for himself and it would be better if they weere not even inour country if that is their opinion of us.And the Vivian Girls are too good.Too bad about him.I wouldn't want a fellow like that in my patrol or any other patrol.Forget it.We're just as much obliged to you but the book house is the place for that wild animal.We could never tame him or make him good.Better he and his parents were sent bac to their own country."

"Maybe if he could only listen to reason and could see that scouts have a lot of fun and do lots of things he'd like to "Jack said"Because he thinks we don't do anything but just good turns and fight.If he likes adventure stories as you say he sh sure ought to lik to go with us.I wwish I could get him for you, I know that because you and your followers did a lot of things for me.But he only laughed at me and he said that anyway if we had fun or not, he was not of our Nationality and that our quarrels with Glandelinia is not any of his concern."

"You're a little brick Jack dear"said Walter Starring.When it comes to good turns you eat them alive.We should worry about Hank Mic-Hollester.We don't care mudh much about foriegners anyway unless they show they're made of good stuff and if they ain't it is just too bad for them.If he wants to camp out on his wild and no account front porch where some Glandelinian sniper may see him and pick him off, we should bother our young lives about him.Let him lurk and sleep all day in his hammock if he wants to.Some day the rope will break or an neenemy sniper see him and pick him off and he'll die a horrible death.What are you squinting your eye at !"West.Starri g Starring added for the latter was sitting on the floor beside Starring and squinting his eye awfully funny .

"Keep still."He only answered."Do you see that big pine tree way over on that encampment way over on that low ridge."!"!!!!!"

"Yes."

"Do you know what sort of a tree that is!"

"It is a large tree"said Walter Starring"correct the first time.What about that big evergreen pine."

"It sure is an evergreen tree."He said.

"All right its a large pine evergreen tree."Said Darger."What about it."

"I'm trying to get a bee line on it."Said West."Do you know what I would like to do.!"

"Go down to the Canteen here for ice cream cones."Starring said.

"Come ahead."Jack shouted."And two of the best flavored ones for the Princesses api ce."

"They' re entitled to them"said Starring"but they won't eat anything sweet."

"Close one eye and look straight at that big tree."George West said."Get right behind me.Now look."

"All right."said Starring."I'm looking."

"Well what is in a bee line with that tree!"He asked of Starring.

"A lot of things."Said Starring."Buildings belonging to enemy generals as h adquartors, and things, Glandelinian encampments and for possessed landscapes."

"The line cuts general Federals headquarters ri ght in half"West said."See!"

"If it sliced a couple slices off his head that would be better"Said Starring."I suppose he just escaped.The line crosses main stre et in the foe camp,I hope nobody trips over it."

"What do you mean Starring.Trip over an imaginary line."Jack shouted at him.

"Sure"Jack "Starring said"If we have a strong enough imagination.Oh look where it goes right through general Tamerlines tent."

"Where!"Jack shouted."show me.Where!"

"Well excuse me if I'm mista on mistaken"Starring said."It goes right straight--- straight--wait a minute---- it goes right straight through general Tomas Federals---

"Aw that Federal makes me tired."Jack yelled."I've accounts I'd like to settle with him."and even the three child slaves laughed.

"Do you know what i'd like to do"George West said."I'd like to collect a very big force of boy and girlscouts and a good strong column of cavarly and start from here and goo straight for that tree.A bee line devastating raid that's what I'd ca l it.Put everything to the flames as we go.Let's see that big Compass that Glandelinian skunk unwillingly gave you Jack.That tree is, just wait a minute, hold still please Jack, don't laugh so much I'm not tickling you---please hold still---that tree is just exactly northwest.I'd like to start and h crush right straight for it.With the proper number we'd make a raid that would even surprise Penrod.How about it.!"

"About or how about those Glandelinian generals headquarters."Manning wanted to know.

"Well if we come to the buildings, we'd go through them."George West said.

"They wouldn't be buildings when we got through though.Through them, or over them.Or under them.Or else we'd dynimite them out of the way and don't care whoes the Glandelinian in them.We'd make a solemn vow that we wouldn't turn to right or left for any amount of Glandelinians for anybody or anything.We'd raid right straight for that tree.What do you say.We'd strike for violet and her sisters for atonement for what they always unjustly suffer..what say you all."

Oh boy s you should have heard those fellows shout, while the child scouts seemed delighted.

Then Walter said"Carried by a large minority.All those who are amongst us officers unanimously in favor of a bee line raid, eat another peanut.Settled.

When do we start."?
"To morrow morning."
"Righto."
"No matter h what happens, we'll go right straightv northwest."Darger said.
"For the tree."Hunt Mannings shouted.(He' (He's the brother of Wildred M anning.)
"Even if we have to go a little too hot.----"Jack started;
"It may not be necessary"Said Starring."We go straight through the generals headquarters."
"If things get in our way we 'll use resources hey!"he piped up.
"We'll use our hand gronades."Said Starring."Scouts of the Roving Tigers all gather around your patrol leader and each givevhim six peanuts as a token of , loyalty.That's the way the knights used to do in history;---""
"It's sure a chince being a patrol leader."darger said.
"Keep still"darger told him"And give me two more peanuts.Do you think I do not know how to count.Now all raise your hands and stand at attention while I say the vow.Ready.?"
"Yes."
"Before the Sun sinks below the western horizon to morrow, providing there is any sun, we the members of the sterling Roving Tigers patrol will pa plant our patrol emblem under the branches of yonder evergreen tree ha i having taken a course due northwest from this spot-and turned neither to right nor left on the way even if we have to go through a storm of fury and---
"Even if we have to rout the fiends from hell."darger shouted;
"And here we pledge ourselves to making the biggest raid the enemy ever faced. nothing will stop us now.The world must be made safe for all little christian children and other others too.We'll got lots of food too.Hurrah for the Tiger patrol, and the bee line raid. opown with Glandelinia...:."
Before the raid is to be written it first must be mentioned where Walter Starring hadvhis headquarters, and all that-so the reader will know the country the scouts and their followers invaded.But the reader does not think that he is going to be bothered with grography, becau e for such a situation here it is not necessary.It was dandy where Walter had his headquarters.Who ever once lived here before this terrific and bloody war surely did own a lot of property up where he now was with his camps of boy and girlscouts and everybody called it "ThevTiger Patrol Hill.It's also st to Albrahambra but just kind of outside but not far.And sure the reader may know how it is with Glandelinian encampments beyond that have streams running through them. Rivers run through valleys but just now they also run through encampments.There was high sloping land on both sides of the river.Now this was the way it was where Walter Starring had his headquarters.Tiger Patrol Hill, was not exactly a hill----it was a small ridge, and ran along the same way the river ran.The big Interstate Big Girl Knool, or Yello w Brick Road ran along that ridge and his headquarters was oh on the stat e road that is though some ways back from the road. And he also had a dandy grapevine though now it had no grapes.He had found too that the building had a beautiful sun parlor too.Now those who sits on the porch can look down(not nightgown) over Albrw Albrahambra town, and get a beautiful and supurb view, and beyond the town you can see the river..The town ended at the river anf and it was in possession of a portion of the Glandelinian armies.
Before the enemy was there there was a lot of turtles and fishes in that river.That is I say before the enemy came.Now there was not a single one. Across the river too the land was low untill you came to the other ridge, and here also were Glandelinian encampments.And too the space between the river and the foe lines was a line of batteries.A p space between the two ridges was the valley of the river.In that low land between the river and the other ridge is Little Topsy----that was a small villiage.It was now the headquarters town of the Glandelinian general Tomas Federal.He was the most savage natured Glandelinian general ever known but he won't be one very long.The town of little Topsy wasn't very big, it too was in possession of the H Glandelinians.When you got past of little Topsy, there was a kind of small hill(it wasn't kind though) and then you came to the ridge.Up on top of the ridge was that big pine tree that George West had been squinting at.There were a lot of other trees up there, but that one towered above all the rest to a marvelous degreee. Anywhere between Walters headquarters and that other ridge any one could see the tre .Down in Albrahambra probably there were places where no one could see it on account of the buildings, but most always you a could see it.And if any one could have a wire from his porch to that tree, the wire would be right over the city of Alhambra and the River and little Topsy,and that other small hill.So the reader then knows just how it is.From the porch to that tree was about sev n miles as the crow flies, and believe me the crows have it eas compared to the to the boyscouts . So now the whol e business begins.If the reader wants to follow Starring and his raiders all rights its up to them.If not then stay at home and don't read this.I should worry.They have troubles of their own..

The next morning they started from the front of his headquarters.They reminded themselves of what purpose they had in store and why they were going to do it..Jack was in a field uniform and he said;
"Too bad we have not our mothers and sisters and brothers and sweet hearts and things to weep when we start off.
"I don't believe I've got any sw eet hearts around the house just at present but we'll go to Emperor Vivians headquarters and see as that is in our direct line of march."said Walter Starring .
They w ere soon before the building.
"Tell them to bring some handkerchiefs."George West said.
"And a .e couple of buckets of tears."Hunt Manning said or piped up, though the o pipes were not full of tears.
Walter Starring himself(too hee) went inside and called to Violetvand her sisters and asked them jokingly if they could come out on the porch and weep. Angelinia Aronburg herself said she was very busy but she would come and "weep" for abouid a minute.When they did come out they "were crying"---from laughing so hard .
Then WaltervStarring delivered a spede speech(not a peach) He first said to Violet,and her sisters"You my dear princes are supposed to keep on weeping and wringing your hands wh while I make a farewell speech, for the enemy we're to pay a cisit to.Don't you know the way the wives and daughters and sweethearts did when we first started away from home?"
Then being more serious Starring said;
"Scouts of the Roving Tiger Patrol, and also the raving Lion that we have wished on us, there must be no stopping or anything on this bee line raid.We're going the same way the crow flies, only different, and we're going to pay the enemy an untimely and unvited or uninvi ted visit.The first time we have to turn to right or left the enemy may have a chance to rally, and we'll have to admit then we're beaten, and retreat before the raid is fully finished.N t that we're jealous but to show the enemy a thing or two in behalf of our fair brave princesses we'll try on this occassion to make a more terrorizing raid than Prince Penrod does and if the enemy thinks he l ad it all right.If not then let them worry.The battle cry is onward.If we do any good turns that'll be the rescue of child slaves and the liberation of prisoners.Anybody in the camp who feels its too risky may stay behind.Remember fellow scouts we don't spare anything. I heard once" [illegible] and he looked with the squint of one eye at violet and her sisters;
"That our fair princesses like the excitement of seeing ig fires. Well I dont. I like to make them. Everything in our path comrades will go up in flames. We'll make other big explosions if possible.And at five o lock this afternoon we intend to plant the Rover Tiger emblem under that big pine tree on west ride.Then we'll cut our way back after starting a fire there so that a l the world can see.The last fire will mean triumph.It will mean we went in a bee line raid.If we have to push little Topsy out of t the way and drive the enemy out we'll do it---it isn't so big.We'll cross the valley and princesses at five oclock this afternoon youlook over to west ridge and see what you see. We intendvto go straight--it says we live straight,--but we can beat that for we'll go straight.We are going in a bee line for that big tree and take possession of it in the name of the Roving Tiger scout patrol.This is the only real boy and girlscout drive that ever happened--all others the enemy will say, terrible as they were are imitations.If the fair princesses wants to join it later on come and join with your brave brother and scouts so he can parteke in the fun.This is the famous bee line raid invested by George West and the enemy won't like it but I don't care.Forward.We're off." "
So the scout bearer then raised their banners and mounting their h o horses galloped off followed by everybody who were to go and an immense body of well armed cavarly and infantry too who was to support.
Little we thought that inside of an hour they would be on the road to fame.I don't mean that they turned to the right or the left to get into the road.They just kind of bunked into fame.That raid was to be made only for a distance of seven miles, but in one way esp cially by news it went all the way out across the whole country and throughout Abbiesnnia.Maybe it is in china by the time I'm writing of it for all I know.While they were still going down the hill but still within the christian lines to get first into Albrahambra Jack said;
"The friends of ours once said we look kind of invincible like conquerors.I don't believe it."
"Well"said Starring as long as you're the official bodyguard of us you might as well carry the standard."Starring forgot himself and spoke it out in English and Jack though he understood a little e English never heard the word "Standard" before.

"The wan what eees eet?"he wanted to know, spea ing broken english himself.

"The standard."Walter said.

"The Standard.What the heck is that."

"Why that's English--Latin for banner."

"Well for the love of mo mike"said Jack"speak in our langugae and I'll understand. We're not English you know.What the hang is a Banner?"

"Starring laughed and then told him in his own tongue.So they gave him the banner, and oh boy(gum) that boyscout did look his part holding it up with one hand as he rode slowly along.He was scowling as if he thought he could frighten buildings out of the way.For what a kind of boyscout he was, maybe he could had buildings been living things.Starring thought it best to go into regular formation so as to be in the proper formation when the first rush was to be made.

"We'll strike terror into the enemy!"hey."Jack said.

"I hope we strike a Glandelinian restaurant when we get there."Hank Mannings spoke up.

"I don 't care what we strike as long as we don't strike our colors."Starring told him."Suppose we move forward in long rank formation..The soldiers can cover behind and Jack Saunders and I will ride ahead because I'm the leader, and he is the standard bearer.He too is going to be my courier, and envoy and lot of things.He's going to be my official body guard.He's my staff.And when we make the attack don't give the enemy any advantage over us.When we strike strike hard."

" So that was the way they fixed it.Walter Starring rode ahead with Jack at his side holding the standard.He looked as severe as he really was.I guess the many child slaves will never forget when they passed through the city of QAlbrahambre.They were so happy at their liberation that mayby they're laughing and crying yet.Talk about"Poor Glandelinia" Poor indeed.To hell with her.

After they left the christian lines passing the surprised pickets who could guess what Starring was up to Starring rode along beside his official staff.Behind the boy and girlscout columns came the christian cavarly under general s Dorry and Hunt Manners, and behind them were great infantry troops under generals Will Dawsonia, and the Wienstien twins two good generals who always made the enemy wi h wish they didn't come into command.Then too edded was the expeditionary forc s.

Finally they got near the enemy encampments close to the town and with a roar of yelling, screaming, shricking, and hooting the whole surge came down upon the encampments with fire armsat the ready and torches at the glare.The Glandelinians so sudddenly taken by surprise became panic stricken and though a number started to resist and o open a heavy fire whichbhowever took no effect the remainder without firing a shot turned and ran pell mell down the company streets in the most frightful confusion.child slaves who were working under ma masters n ar by were surprised and at first stopped and stared as they saw the wave tear into the camp.A part of the wave broke, rove reversed direction and came thundering for the field, the Glandelinians there firing only a few ineffective shots and fled for dear life..All the while Jack Saunders looked straight ahead and his face was very sever e.But it was not a put onas a Glandelinian who on horseback tried to rush him found out.He dashed up and clashed with Jack, and found himself lying on the ground badly wounded and Jack in possession of the horse, riding on, cutting and slashing to the right and left.

It was a fierce attack upon the Glandelinians and all drove on with ir restible fury.They had two things to go by however, the tree away off up there on the ridge and Jacks compass.Starring carried the compass to help in places where during the drive on they coyldn't see the tree because of the smoke made now by the fires started up.All they had to do was to carry the attack on in a straight westward direction.The best way to force a straight course with a compass even during a destructive raiding fray is to get a v very thin stick that is perfectly straight.A knitting needle too is good only you must be sure not to use a steel one.You lay that across your compass.If you're goingwest to lay it acrossthe east and west points.It's best to lay the compass down on something when you do that.Then you get a bead on the direction of the stick, and pick out something that it points at.Then you go straight for that thing.But there is no fun in doing n qn anything, biking, or raiding a bee line unless you are fair and square with yourself.If you go just a little bit out of your way to avoid something and try to make yourself think you are going straight,that's no fun.Because one thing you can't jolly a compass.Now despite the fury of the attack it was east to follow that tree untill they cut their way through the camp and got down into the demorilized and panic stricken town.Even then it was easy for a little distance on account of Central Avenue running east and west.They too had good luck because their advance west down the hill in the rear of the flying enemy took them rightplunk into Central Avenue .

At the beginningof Central Avenue, where it kind of petered out at the foot of the hill, the official guard stopped to make sure it went straight west, and that the fleeing for could not have a chance to lay an ambuch.Because with a nice long straight street like that it is also easy for one to be fooled and believe it goes straight west, when probably it doesn't quite do so.But Central avenue did because way down beyond the other end of it and away across the river they could see that big trees across the river and up on the ride.And Central Avenue didn't go all the way through the small town but they saw that as far as it did go it went straight west.They made good and sure.Be cause a bee line raid is no good unless you're strict about it or otherwise the enemy may reverse on you.After they had gone a couple of blocks they couldn't see the tree any more on account not only of being in the thick part of the town but because also of the smoke of fires started in the very town by the raiding soldiers th mthemselves who ousted out all defenders no matter how fierce they resisted.But nevertheless they checked their course up with the compass on every corner, and after they had gone five blocks on Central Avenue they came to the place where it ended.It bunked right into another street that went straight across it.Right across the street from the end of Central Avenue was a long big house four stories high.There it was staring them right in the face ,and right at every window and on all portions of the steps and porch but lying down were Glandelinian soldiers keeping up a withering fire on the soldiers who were returning it.

"Foiled""said Walter Starring.

"The bee line raid goes ri ght through that house."George West said."That's just our luck.And that is thekind of a house that has a long hall going right through it.The Beel line goes right through that hall and in back of Central Park."

"Right through the hall."Said Starring."what good that does us with so many Glandelinians standing their ground there."

"Now's the time for strategy."Jack said.

"Don't break up anypl ns now whatever you do or all is lost."said Starring. Wev've got to have a conference."he said.

Then said Walter St rring;

"Come on across the street some of you out of the line of fire, and I'll consult with my official staff."(not laugh.)

"Those Glandelinians holding the house against us looks as invincible as we are." Jack Saunders said.

"Yes he looks very immovable that's sure as you're looking"said George West.

"I'm sory now "said Starring th"that the infantry didn't bring along a good number of cannon with them."

The Glandelinians who were answering the a fire of the attackers seemed to be saying by the vigor of their own fire"They shall not pass even if angels help them."

Take a good look at them"said Hank Manning. "Are the Glandelinians defending the houses very numerous."

Starring and his official staff went slowly across the street and stopped on the side walk of grove place right plunk in front of the big house.There they all gathered around close to decide what they had better do next.There was quite a wide lawn in front of the house, and the distance was too great to be able to hurl a hand grenade.

"If we could only hurl hand grenades at that confounded house"Said Starring to his official staff."

"The hous is too f ar away."Darger said."Why don 't you send some one to carefully reconnoiter, and see if there is a safe way for our own force to make a bee line attack."

"Sent a spy."Jack whispered.

"Jack I guess I'll appoint you as an envoy to go as near that porch of the house as is not dangerous and see what can be done.See whether we can cross that territory without suffering a loss o if possible.If you believe it is not very safe I'll give you safe conduct.Do you know what that is.Take some hand grenades with you so you can throw if you see Glandelinian soldiers aiming at you.Go ahead and do just what I told you but for heavens sake be careful.Those Glandelinians look wicked."

Honest anybody could have felt afraid for his safty if you dould have seen that boyscout crawling on all fours first up the walk, and then across the lawn.He crawled up quite close to the porch.He wasxseen by the nearest of the surprised Glandelinians, but before they could even have time to do anything he hurled toward the porch a hand grenade which as to say blew everything"to Kingdom Come".He hurled another one through a window crashing the place to pieces inside and causing the Glandelinians to flee from the building panic stricken just as the soldiers rushed forward and carried the other buildings driving the defenders out, but suffering some severe loss.

"It's all right comrades come ahead."Jack called through his hands.

Then all the boy and girlscouts stopped firing and rushed forward, while the while the now helpless wounded Glandelinians speedily disarmed looked them over funny like.They didn't scowl orpout nor say a word, but I think they were having a hard job not to.Then Starring in knew they'd win for elsewhereamost of the Glandelinians were losing their"moral and were beating it from the other houses which they themselves in striving to check the raiders set afire.

One of the Glandelinians who was not seriously wounded and made a prisoner because he surrendered demanded;

"Well what's all this!Another of your confounded raids?"

"Certainly it is to your liking or not."said Gerald Starring.This is the Tiger Patrol, First Abbicannian boy and girlscout troop supported graciously by as many soldiers as we likeeh like to have and I'm their leader, and we're on a be e line raid, and not only are we going straight west, but we like to see your're comrades try and stop us.You thought to do so here and didn't."

"He continued"And who are all those brat youngsters out firing on us yet from the side walk."

"They're the vivianites and they count too. That's all."

"All he said then was"Oh."

Then Jack said haughtily;

"I'll tell you about the scouts Mr Glandelinian if you're so anxious to know.When they start out to do a thing they do it see!Nothing can stop them. Maybe you know you're fortunate we gave you quarter----"

The man said"I can imagine.Your kind generally does not give quarter."

"You're right.But you saved yourself by surrendering without a fight.You know what irrestible is Mr Glandelinian.Well that's what we are.We make you suffer for what you make the princesses suffer."

"The Prisoner only said."P Oh I see.But I am not responsible.I never saw them yet"

"Well that makes no difference."said Jack."And things that are hard to do we like."

"We eat Glandelinian soldiers up alive."West said.

Then theprisoner was taken away to the rear.Starring said to Jack;

"po you know what we ought to do next.We'd better slowly pick our way through the house and start going through the houses.We'll show these Glandelinians that we are an irrestible army of invasion."

"Other irrestible armies are not so bad"one of the girlscouts piped up."I tell you what we can do.We started from your headquarters and pledged ourselves to go straight west in this raid, without deviation till we come to a certain tree on west ridge and not turn to the right or left.So you see we'll have to all go straight through those houses before us and yet are there not chances of ambushes within."

We They were then quiet for a little while and Starring began to get anxious.

"you know we generally go to any turn anyhow.Why not makev our soldiers go through first and "mop"up the places.Drive all other s of the foe out."

"I don't like to sacrifice the soldiers either"said Starring, as he just sat on a stump thinking.since "Since there is such dangers I don't think I won't let my followers go through the house, and anyway they're burning at that. "

"Now you see."whispered one of the girlscouts."

"Oh we got to be careful." one of the others said."We don't fear fire as much as treacherous Glandelinians."

All the time Walter Starring seemed to be thinking and he finally said;

"If we could just climb over the house everyone of us; now wouldn't that be better!since we can do anything.I think Jack said we are irrestible.How about your appetites comrades!"

"I'll tell you about our appetites."one of the girlscouts shouted.

"Believe me" said Wal Walter Starring I suppose all of you could give me the best of recommendations. But I'm sorry.Wounded Glandelinians are treacherous and they're still within the house.thereforeI can't let any of you go through the houses.while the soldiers for us are pushing on in the attack we can eat as we follow along over the roofs .But remember look out for Gl n Glandelinian snipers."

"You don't think they'd shoot us all down do you."

"It might be possible."said Walter, therefore I'm afraid going through the houses is out of the question and they're pretty badly afire too.If you all would care trying climb over we'll look for ladders.while the others are getting laders cake and pie will be served.That's my proposition.If you care to take me up all right.If not we'll have to go on without a bite and we sure captured enough goodies to give to everybody.If we are so wild and adventurous we must show our mettle.We can't stop now or the foe will rally and drive us back.So that's my offer.Cale Cake pie and the roofs of the houses.Or retreat.I am the leader.What do you say comrades."

Jiminies these child scouts would climb over the Woolworth Building to destroy the enemy while retreating.

"All right, we accept the officer."everybody yelled .

"just continue the raid and make yourselves at home."starring said.Then he led a number of boy and girlscouts tward the front entrance of the house.

Jimminies not one of them did not know what to make of the resistance of the Glandelinians at other quarters.They were as nice and as sociable as a wild tigress is to alamb, and they always seemed to be always trying their best not to allow each other to even so much as think of giving up or retreating and showed a mettle which made all believe they werevnot afraid of the boy and girlscouts either, and everybody knows that Glandelinian patrols on horseback always flad before a party of boy and girlscoutscon horse back.And the Glandelinians seemed to kind of like the dreadful game too and tried to play a counter game of their own.But the hoses before the boy and girlscouts under Starring were apparently clear and vane vacant. when it was believed so the followers of Walter Starrinb Starring wondered why he would not let them go through the house.If every window and opening was still spitting rifle smoke they would not have been so surprised.

But too if the boy liked them so well and well enough to go to so much trouble on account of them and the cause, then why would he not let them go through the house before the flames gained headway.

"We should worry"said one boyscout by the name of Walter Harrisonia."It won't be the first time I or any of us ever climbed over roofs.Only I don't understand it that is all."

"It's a mystery."Jack Saunders said."Maybe he fearsthat some where some of the Glandelinians have some kind of a plot.Hey!"

"Maybe he just wants to see if we can make good."George West said.

"Hunt Manning looked at the house and then said to his brother Henry whom they call Hank;

"We'll give him a demonstration, all right."

"Maybe Starring fears that the Glandelinians mediate treachery."Jack said.

"Well said the girlscout called "Little Nell""We are here because we are here and we're going to stay here and see it through.We're not going to retreat. Why Prince Penrod would laugh at us."

Pretty soon the plot grew thicker.They could hear lively firing over to the southwest, andone of the christian soldiers said riding up;

"The Glandelinians plan to counter attack, expecting to get a good haul."

"If they win we'll be hauled in ourselves."Jack Jack said."The enemy is rallying.What shall we do!"

Some of the younger scouts for a moment looked frightened.

"Starring coming back said;

"We'll stay right here and see it through.We're not quitters.If they counter attack we'll make them wish they didn't."

Then they could hear the alarmed soldier saying more.It had even Walter Starring guessing.

"Yes, yes,"he heard the soldier saying."The Glandelinians will attack in a strong body in a couple of minutes."

"Did you hear what he said!"one of the younger boyscouts said."They'll attack us in a big body in a couple of minutes.We struck into the foes main line.Come on lets get out of here before it is to late. What do you think it means."

"I don't know what it means"said Walter Starring.That man had be guessing.But we are not foolish.This is the bee line raid.Are we going to see it through or not.!Are we going to make Violet and her sisters and Penrod ashamed of us, or before others make ourselves a laughing stock."

"We are going to see it through."they all said.

"All right"said Walter."It's over the roof for us."

"I guess if Dolores Mic-Hollester saw us now she'd say we are up against a real adventure."said Darger.

"All that Mic-Hollester boy wants to be in a an easy lifer."Jack said."That is what he told me.He said all us boy and girlscouts do is just dress up and he don't care for that.I bet he's have to admit that this is a dark mi mystery, if he was to see us now all right"and again Darger said;

"I know the general in charge of this Glandelinian army all right its general Copely Belian.I Often I seen him when I went out scouting."

"I knew he had something to do with the other Glandelinian generals"Hunt Manning said. "I wonder how soon we'll know what's up his sleeve."

"I wonder how soon he'll pass the cake when we reach his headquarters."Jack said sarcastically.

Anyway they didn't have long to wait for refreshments.The foremost boys of the raiders camp captured cookies, cake and even pies and plenty of other goodies and while they were eating the other boys came around with a number ofvladders. Then another of the scouts said;

"We can push on for the house while the rest can help yourselves.

"Gosh these cookies and cake are good"said Jack."I' going to raid that house over there."

"Don't go over to the end of this porch."Walter told him."We have to stay right here in front of the door;this is where out section of the bee line raid is."

"Surely the bee line raid can have a branch to it while we're pushing on."Jack said smilingly."Maybe our part of the bee line can or might be wider than you think--maybe."

"But the bee line runs just this side of even my cookies."Walter said.

"You are a fine kind of a leader"h e said"to let us miss that house over there.TIs that what you call tactics.The enemy might embush us from there."

Then Walter Starring said;

"Why didn't you take half a dozen cookies or a piece of cake when Jean passed them around the same as the rest of us did? You only took one."

"You don't call that tactics do you."George West asked him.

"I've got some manners ."Jack finally said.

"Well you haven't got any cookies"said Starring."Look here."Then he showed him about half a dos n dozen.Oh boy but they were nice and brown and crisp and they had nuts in them. The girls and boys all had about as many as a dozen cookies each because Jean had a i said;

"Oh do take more-I'm sure you are a hungry bunch of scouts.They offered Jack some of their cookies but he graciously declined and sat there on one of the steps watching them eat cookies.Every time he moved Starring said;

"You stay right where you are.R m Remember this is a bee like raid."

"George West said;

"These cookies are mighty good and yet when I offer you some you won't take them.It's your fault then."

"M---mmm,bthat's what they are"said Walter Starring."Here J ack be gracious and take one."

Jack wouldn't. He wanted to go and get some himself and Hunt said;

"They are about the best cookies I ever tasted even though the enemy cook made them.I've got eleven mad left.Here Jack take some and cheer up."

"I've got some manners"said Jack."You deserve your share more than me.If I got left, I got left."

"I bet they were just cooked." Frank said.

"Well here goes another"said Walter Starring.

"That is one thing I like about the boy and girlscouts of Abbiesannia"said one member who was a foriegn girlscout"They are good and have manners."

"Do you mean to tell me"said Jack a bee line raid can) can't have---a-a-a kind of side track to it!"Espocially when we're sitting still for a moments rest."!

"Oh ppositively not"said Walter Starring."Even this bee line has not even got any waves in it or wrinkles either, though just now it has lots of smoke and fire.It's just as straight a line as one drawn right through the middle of this cookie.For heavens sake forget it and take some cookies.We're not stingty."

"Or have some from me."said Jean Jean."

""No, no, noI've got manners"he said, and he started to get up.

"My official staff will be seated."Starring said.

""You call us a kind of an army don't you!"Jack shouted."po you mean to tell me we can't make a flank movement on that table of cookies pie and cake over there ."

"couldn't be done"Walter Starring said."R member your solemn pledge.Your duty is to stay as near to your beloved commander as you can.You just notice how these girls and boys obey me;now watch.Every scout girl and boy will take a piece of cake in his right hand and hors too.When I say thr ee they will start to eat.One two three.A scout is obeditent---;;;"

"You mean a scout is resourceful."Jack said laughing and jumping to his feet.All of a sudden he grabbed a coil of rope, Jean had and good night if he didn't lasso a table inside of a broken up dining room and carefully drag it over to him.Just as h pulled the table withinreach and was starting to fill his pocket with cookies, they heard some one c l call;

"Still.Justva moment.Don't move."

"All right.Good"Walter heard the voice say.He looked around and standing there on the lawn was Timothy Groveton smiling and right beside him was the famous boyscout spy George Radcliffe.He had an awful nice smile,vwith a regular good natured open face.Right beside him was a big troop of other boyband girls.

"Good night."Starring said."Good night for the enemy.We have recieved reinforcements.We're going to win a lot I'm sure."

"Comrades all"said Tim, this is our famous boyscout friend Radcliffe whom we all know.Penrod believes you Starring should be famous and sents us out to help you in your raid.He and his darling sisters will soon come to join. They will appear in one of the towns you will soon go through.From then on we're going to give our friends an amusing novelty a novelty which the enemy will not like and that will be a good bee line raid.,verybody on a straight course start cl'm climbing over houses which happens to be in your path, and throw all resistance aside."

So thatvwas how it happened that the bee line raid got to where it started.M ny Many of the soldiers got a lot of things and sat many fires, the boy and girlscouts o so far got a lot of cookies cake and pie and even milk and cheese and swell bread.The unusual part was of our young Hero Jack lassoing a wholy wicker table and massacring a whole tribe of cookies.The majority came right after Starring.There were lots of Glandelinian soldiers awaiting them on the roof but their resistance was just as successful as if the boy and girls were climbing over the roof with nobody to oppse them..The Glandelinian loss was frightful the boy and girlscout loss was only one.Jack had a cookie shot out of his hand.That was to him a severe loss though number one. The Glandelinians retreated in panic before the boy and girls whom they couldn't even shoot.Timothy Groveton was surely a nice boy.He went around to the rear of one house he and his followers capturing all sorts of things daringly going through one of the burning buildings despite the fire and taking what could be saved.It wasn't hard despite the resistance of the Glandelinians to be climbing over the roof of the biggest house, but because to avoid parts of the fire breaking through they had to do a lots of fancy things after sweeping the Glandelinians off.Timothy Groveton said;

"violet,and her sisters ought to see this.They sure would like that.In a scrimmage Jack and a Glandelinian soldier together rolled down the shed in back of the house, and brought a part of the roof down with them.Jack of course landed on top of the soldier his foot striking the man in the mouth and cleaned his mouth out of teeth..Starring stood up on the peak of the house hugging a chimney as he fired and brought down a Glandelinian officer while holding his other hand above his eyes and scanning the distant country to the west.He was picking out the bee line to the west guided by his distant "beacon. Some distant Glandelinian spotted him and fired a shot at Starring.Starring bemoaned the fact of that shot.It passed slant wise through his pocket and shattered all his cookies.That was a whole sale loss but he finally ate the fragments afterwards, saying;

"If the Glandelinians can't do any better than shoot our cookies thanvthey're surely no good soldiers.They couldn't hit an elephant on the roof. "

It was easy for Starrinh gs Starrings followers to be slinding down the roof in back,they just slide down onto the back porch and down to the ground while the surviving Glandelinians were in panicky flight.In back of that housecand the others was Monument Park.It was not very big, but it appeared that the retreating Glandelinians rallied there to m ke a stand and took advantage of trees and smallhills to protect themselves from the fire of the assailants. From Monument Park they could see the big Pine tree good and plain(not spain) The reason too for that was partly on account of the beautiful part being so open and partly because of the land being so low beyond, and because all the while they were going down tward the river driving the scared foe before them tward the other camps.West of the park there were bigger camps but not so many houses.The houses down near the river were not so big and they were not so close together.The only thing that stood in their way in the park was a long line of more daring Glandelinian soldiery beside a low but long wooden fence sort of, with l all corts of advertisements on it.There were some on it showing pitcures of child slaves, they seemed to be looking straight at you wistfully like as if saying "why don't you save us.The fence was long but the line of Glandelinians was longer.Starring decided to show the Glandelinians a thing or te.The infantry were moving against it.Starring u hurled a grenade right through the middle of the fence.The terrific explosion tore a wide gap in it and the Glandelinians fearing other explosions only fired once and retreated pell mell.Starring hurled more grenades after them.Then right ahead of them was river ford River Ford(not Henrty Ford) crossing their path.Here a greater number of Glandelinians had gathered and gave the advancing infantry some severe resistance andvthe boy and girlscouts stopped and opened a fearful fire, while Starring stopped and took a squ int and used the compass, and decided their path of main attack was right between two houses, some distance apart and lined with those high beautifully striped Glandelinian tents.

"I'll smash right through that house on the left."said Tim.

"No sir not yet that'll cause us a dion disadvantage"said Starring."We'll char charge right across the lawns between the two houses. The Glandelinians just wants to get us into some trouble so they can show the wholeto the world.I'll fool th , them."

"Say you boys and girls too-take another look at that tree"said Tim."Your part of the bee line for this raid is just actotly exactly---precisely across the side porch of that housewith the brown si chinglas.And its full of Glandelinians waiting for us.Now you see...?..??.?"

"Indeed you sure are right."said Starring.I've got to send my official staff with a party to cross that territory."

But when Starring looked around for his official staff there he was standing stark still about ten years behind and looking steadily at the building with his field glasses.

"Come ahead Jack.What's the matter with you?"laughed Tim himself.

He came up and said;

"Do you know whose house that is?I didn't know before because I never came tward it this way before.It is general Federals headquarters.I can tell by the big bay window ."

"That suits me"said Starring.

"You 'll have to use caution."Jack said."I know that fellow.He's dangerous."

"Believe me"said Starring "I've got the diploma for being dangerous myself.

You fellows come forward and follow the infantry and leave that fellow to me. Here's where we not only rose this territory but here hoping we take the general a prisoner too, though we ought not give him any quarter he's so cre cruel.In about ten minutes we'll be having the enemy there eating out of our hand."

"What!"Jack just blurted out.

"Eating out ofour hand."said Starring."you know what eating means don't you."

"Sure I do"said Jack."but if you'll be having the enemy eating out of your hand you're a wonder.It can't be did."

"Well just you see."

They therefore edged forward keeping straight northwest.Away over on the ridge beyond the river, and beyond the valley Starring and many of his followers could see the big tree good and clear against the smoke covered sky. It seemed sort of lonely up there even amidst the strife of the raid.Starring said to himself;

"You wait old tree-we are coming straight along, and we'll drive a goodly number of Glandelinians under for you."

Starring was sort of glad that their destination was a tree and not some sort of building or other.while they pressed on Starri ng have the peculiar boyscout call of the Royal Tigers good and loud.As soon as Jack Saunders heard him he formed his hands into a sort of horn and started shouting it.Then coming twa rd them was a boy who was dressed like a foriegner.

"Hey where do you tn think you are going shouted Starring."

The boy halted in surprise at the sight of such a crowd of boy and girl scouts so close within foe territory and Starring said;

"Will you please come here.We belong to the Royal Tigers and we're on a raid and you can't cross our path without the proper password."

Another boyscout said;

"what do you want here."

"What do you boys and girls in uniform want here?"he himself demanded without answering their questions.

"Answered in the affirmative."said Starring."We're here because we are here enemy territory or not, and the enemys headquarters is in the way.It sti k sticks out like a pocket book full of thrash."

"You boy and girlscouts must be crazy to go ahead and do this."

" Positively guaranteed."Starring told him."We're so crazy that a crazy quilt is sensible compared to us.Are you Henry Mic-Hollaster?"

"It's all right who I am.If you whocare the leader wants to see me come up here" he said.A"Are you afraid to come because I'm a foriegner.?"

"Afraid of a single boy?"said Starring."didn't we go right through a portion of the enemys lines and comevthis far and the enemy is still running!Who's afraid of you.?Not I. I can't come up because I or my followers here can't go off the track, and the front steps of the house near you are about thirty feet too far to the north.

"You are one of those well known Abbieannian boyscout generals I pesceive."he said.

"Tell me something know."Said Starring putting the K on the word new."did you think I didn't know that?Maybe you don't know that I'm Master Walter John Starring, we're all Starrings here, we're known as the Division B of the Vivisnites whom all Glandelinians fear.Did you ever hear of the Douglas Burroughs under Timothy Groveton, Angelinia Aronburg, Starring, and personally commended by the Vivian Girl Princessns, and their brother Prince Penrod."

"Sure"he said."/Are you one of them."

"Do I look like one of them.Well I'm not but I'm not ashamed to say I wish I was no matter what they went through.Come on down will you if you want to prove you're a friend.Or otherwise I'll order my followers to seize you."

He looked down tward the child scouts.Then he came across the small road and said ona stump of a tree and said;

"What do you all want here anyway.One of your fellows spoke to me yesterday. I told him I did not want to bother with you.It'sso lot of red tape for a foriegner like me to becoming a boyscout even if I did want to join. "

"That was my official staff."said Starring."There is no red tape now.If you're Henry Mic-Hollaster you had a pull yesterday and did not take advantahe of it. So that leaves you out.We should worry about that.But as you are here we'll have to hold you for investigation as they call it because sooner or later if we don't win this raid we'll have a lot of those soldiers wearing gray uniforms after us pell mell and may not be able to get rid of them.They're trying to stir up a new battle here near Albremah Albrahembra after everything is so peaceful and quiet since the battle of Ophelia.We are on a bee line raid to a big tree over on northwest ridge which is our goal, and we have to fight our way straight no matter what's in the way.Gee whiz it s not much fun but we're doing it.

But anyway the Glande,inian general they call Federal thinks that if we can get up as far as his headquarters he may come out and stop us.So we'll be very sweet and nice and give you a big hunk of cake and a lot of cookies if you'll say the boy and girlscouts of Abbieannia are all right and that you would like to join them.Of course you don't have to really join them.All you have to do is to go a little ways with us.Then mayby maybe afterwards you wouldn't care to belong th to the boyscouts hey? should worry anyway this raid will soon be over.

M y boyscout friend Timothy Groveton just wants to show how we can be scouts. It's a sort of propaganda that the Glandelinians do not like.After its all over you can go back home again, and we'll beat it for the river if we're finally worsted.You don't really have to join its only for a moment.See? But it will be a real chunk of cake and plenty of cookies we'll hand you so that we'll show we're kind and generous."

So if the reader saw this and observed Jack Saunders handing a nice pi ce of cake and cookies to a boy who is not only a scout, but a foriegner as well you'll know that as long as you're good they'll treat you nice even if you are a foriegner. That is why he had such a generous kind look on his face.A child scout is brotherly -- --especially in Abbieannia.This was the only kind of raid that any boy or girlscout could have ever thought of.Timothy Groveton said it was a daring one, and that too it was fine.They all were now climbing over the railring of general Federals porch, and the Glandelinians within the building fled after slight resistance.General Federal barely had tim v time to make good his escape, and he left everything of his private belongings behind him.

At a distance he stopped and shook his fist at them.But that did not do him any good.He did that fine for a soldier who would stand off at a safe distance. The foriegn boy seeing the man shaking his fist apparently threw the rock at a tree near the irate but scared general and missed it because he wanted to hit general Federal instead.He did miss him, he missed him because foriegn boys always throw crooked, though that word crooked is spelled straight on this occasion for it took general Federal between the eyes and knocked him--what do you call it"sensible". He howled in fury and ran for dear life for fear he would be "Missed"by a bullet next.

"We you being a foriegner put your foot in it hitting a Glandelinian general there"said Walter Starring."ut it sure satisfied me to see that.And we thank you a lot, only you ought to have rocked him to sleep."

"Well I like like Glandelinians very much"he said"I like them so very much that I like to throw stones at them.They killed my sister a year ago.Where are you going now?"

"Oh just across the porch since the Glandelinians so "graciously"let us"Starring told him"and then we'll advance across the enemy in a "Bee line"if we can make a crossing of the river.Some job hey.?Then straight for that big tree on the ridge.U You look up there late this evening and see if there is a fire burning.Then you'll know we're roasting potatoes on the enemy.If I wasn't a cannibal I'd like to roast a couple of Glandelinians and alive.Do you know what I think?I think the be line attack takes us right through the main encampments across the river.I bet you're glad you're only a foriegn boy and don't have to join. Pity the poor boy and girlscouts,Hey."?

"He said without hesitating;

"I'm not afrai d of Glandelinians no more than a so called ghost is afraid of himself."

"Are you afraid of Glandelinian boy and girlscouts?"Jack piped up.

"No said the foriegne boy I'm not."I like roasted potatoes though."

"How many do you like.?"Jack asked him.

"As many as I can get"Mic-Hollaster said."And I'd like to go with you boy and girlscouts if you'll let me."

"Do you mean you'd like to join the scouts even while we're dashing forward on this desperate raid."asked George West.

"Not now untill I see how they are.I'd just like to go along and help you anyway though.I've a grudge to settle with the Glandelinians.They killed my sisters last Christmas."and he started to blubber.

Timothy Groveton was standing there(not in the air) with his sabre over his shoulder and his rifle slung acroess his back.He said to Mic-Hollester;

"If for the sake of your lost little sister you're a wise little fellow you are if you join us for real.You'll always have an opportunity to do your share in behalf of the one you morn mourn.Go in for the real thing and don't bother with imitations.what's the use of jumping off a cliffe made pf pastaboard when you have got real thrilling and exciting adventures before you..hat's the use of di doing stunts just for sport wh when you can join on a bee line raid across the country!If you do this you're a wise young fellow. Don't think there is a lot of red tape if we want you to doing the joining.That red tape is at the recruiting offices.Here there is no red tape.You stick to us boy scouts, and they'll help you justly avenge your little sisters murder."

"sure"said Starring."Come over here right clos to t us Mic-Hollester.We are for our part of the attack keeping this beel line as narrow as we can."

He h jumped u up on the porch rail beside them.The others were alr all right there squatting on the porch or sitting on the rail while others were raiding the building and preparing to set it on fire.They could see acroses the river and past the old ramshakle buildings there and right over the li villiage of litte Topsy to the ridge.That big tree stood up higher than all the others and it seemed as if it were all alone off there.I guess it was about one oclock then.

"Most of us are going to cook some meats as soon as we get to the river"said Starring, because we like to eat near where there is water.Then we'll Have to think how we will get acrosse."

"Did you come straight all the way from your headquarters in the Christian camp."Mic Hollester wanted to kno 2.

"Just as straight as we could."Said Jean Saunders herself."If we side stepped anything we didn't mean to.But the enemy sure gave us some resistance and we suffered some loss too.Jack lost a cookie and so did I and our leader.The enemy bullets hit them.Yet there is no use anying you are going to do a thing, and then kid yourself about it and not do it.Maybe a bee line raid is kind of crazy, but its desperate and hard too, and by it we show the enemy we're afraid of nothing.It is easy to make yourself think the line runs between two camps when it doesn't.It is the sort of somewhen you get to be a scout.It's like a bee ,line hike--sort of only this is a raid."

They all just sat there resting while the other raiders did their work of destruction and nobody said n anything untilll George West said;

"That's right. "

"Maybe you don't understand."Darger said.

"Yes I do understand."said Mic-Hollester.

After that nobody said anything not even Jack Saunders and they just sat there.

"Sure you can go with us."Starring told him."And just as I said you'll see we're kind of irrestible.But just the same we don't sneak around and we don't turn back, not u ntill we have to anyway.You can first join the scouts just for the fun of it if you want to--the same asyou can start on a bee line raid and go zig zagzagging around the easiest way if you want to.Maybe you don't und erstand ex actly what I mean"Starring said to him."Anyw Anywa y there is many vacancies to be filled in my patrol."

"Could I get in maybe!"he asked.

" Sure you could."Said Starring.

"But then maybe Jennie turner the recruiting girl officer;;;"

"You need not go before her ."said Starring."Any of us officers have the same surthority to signmyou in.B t anyway if she knows there is vacancies in our command she's sign you over to us right away.Even one of our fellows came after you didn't hafAnd see for yourself how the Glandelinian soldiers run away from us more than they do the soldiers.You even see us running after them but our horses do not overtake them.They know us too well all right."

"And they're even afraid to shoot us down."west said.

"And we always have l plenty of eats better than in a refugee camp"Jack piped up.

Then for a littl while again none of them said anything untill it was time to move because the fire started in the house finally drove them from the porch. So that is how Henry Mic-Ho'llester got to be a Roving Royal Tiger Patrol scout(not pout mouth)

So indeed that is how the little Mic-Hollester boys finally got to be a Royal Tiger scout.After he had only been in the scout force two weeks he h as four merit ba ges and he was dangerous to the enemy like the rest of them---only more so.

And indeed that does showe how you can never tell(not yell) what you may run into while on a bee line raid.But indeed when it comes to running into things you just wait untill you try and make a raid.Now from this location the raid was pushed forward tward the river with it irrestible fury.The Glandelinians at various spots resisted pretty tenaciously but couldn't hold.There were not many houses down here and the land too was low and everybody in the raid could see the tree all the time . They at first routed the enemy from a line of fences and then climbed over them themselves, and routed the enemy out of a str storage shed of a abandoned boathouse club while some crawled under an ice house that stood on piles. Then they came to the river.

Then they came to the river but to try and prevent them from getting any further the enemy had destroyed the pontoon bridges that crossed it.There were a lot of weeping willow down there(why do they weep), and despite whether they got a wetting or not the Glandelinians made a fierce resistance from behind their trunks before they finally were driven off with oeome great loss.The infantry support of the raiders taking good care of the enemy many of the boy and girl scouts sat down under shelter to eat their lunch.Starring started a fire, and mak made some what you call"flap jacks.Henry Mic-Hollester declared that it was the first time that he had ever eaten lunch out in the open like that and he said it was fine.

"Have all you want, don't be bashful"said Starring."They're nice and tender ,they're also intended for tenderfeet but we haven't none in our force."

"He said;

"'Is that what they call te mu new comers like me."

"We call a new comer a tenderfoot who can't stand anything at the beginning" said Starring."You have not shown yourself to be anything like that.But nevertheless you will have to pass some tests, endurance tests and things like that before you can become one.To be a scout takes lots of bravery I'll tell you, for no matter how bad and wicked the enemy is, he is not to be trifled with, and on many occassions it takes steel courage to face the Glandelinians.I'm going to introduce you to our chief scout mistress Angelinia Aronburg, and she'll c take care of you."

" a Eating hard task is an endurance test and often that is all we get."Said Jack Saunders.

"Sure"declared George West"And if you can eat them you can do anything no matter how hard.

"Are some of those things hard!"Mic-Hollester asked.

"What things hard!"

"I mean those tests."He said.

"I couldn't say whether they will be or not."Henry Manni Manners told him. "You will however have to chose your own tests when the time comes.They'll not be given you."

"Oh is that so"starring told Manning."I notice hard things don't trouble you much no matter how hard."

"The pleasure is mine"said Manning"flop me another flapjack will you.A flap in the Jack you know."

"They call these things stove lids in the Glandelinian prison camps within our armies."Will Henryson told Mic-Hollester.

"Yes"said Starring--"and you're a pretty good stove lifter all right.I saw you o c once sock a prisoner in the face with a flap jack full of molasses because he called you a little Christian cur."

"I wish it had been a stove lid. at that time"said Manning.

"I bet you have a lot of fun pi putting things ove r on the enemy you boy and girl soldiers."Mic-Hollester said, kind of laughing."

"Sure"said Starring"but not as much as the Princesses do.I saw them do something to the enemy once that even the weeping willows if they could would have died crying from laughing so hard.But if you had the adventures to go through that they did have your hair would soon turn white.My very teen teeth are already white from the way I knash them so often.We should and do not worry for ourselves. We're their body guard.You're in for same adventures like we have now and you can't help yourself.The worst is yet to come.Don't you, care, smile and look pleasant.You might have done worse, you might have gotten into the main Vivianits Burrough division. "

"What's the matter with the Vivianite Borroughs."Mic-Hollester asked, trying to eat a flap jack and sp ak at the same time.

"On e good thing about them for the sak of the enemys health." George West said."

"what's that Hunt Manning asked him.

"That's that they're not here.Otherwise we would have been through with this raid hours ago."

"The Vivianites would be if they had not remained with general Concentinian Aronburgs army--- nanyhow it'll be flourishing when the Glandelinians are all busted up."
Jack said.
"Sure.S Starring toldvthem",nd so will the princesses whom the fools try so hard to put out of the way.Will Wait till you see tha t regiment." Starring said to Mic-Holl ster.They're the most dangerous to the enemy and don't know it."
"Wait till you see some of our fancy "Glandelinian gen rals"said Jean."You'll die laughing at the hats they wear.
"They wear those kind of hats because they think they're smart."Jack shouted. "One of our patrol captured a Glandelinian camp Librarian at the Glandelinian encampment called Temple Camp.The doggone books however were all in English though and we couldn't read them.Where the Glandelinians got them I do not know.We h gave them to the princesses as they can talk and read English.But we can't.I'm glad you know our language or otherwise you'd have been stumped as we are in English."
"I'm a foriegner but I'll surprise you"said Mic-Hollester."I can't read or speak English.My father and mother never learned it to me because they wanted me to be an Abbieannian when I grew up."
"Good.They're wises.Those Glandelinians however are all high brows"George West said. "They think were all too bad because our nation as nobody in it who are not good.They're all busy studying how to wipe good people out."
"Do you mean to tell me that---that---that--- the---Glandelinians---"Jack began jelling;
"You see how the Glandelinians go up in the air because they can't do anything to the Vivian Girls."Said Starring to Mic-Hollester"Now doyou know why. They're angel possessed and the enemy don't know it.I've seen all the symptons and I don't believe they that is the princesses know it themselves.Penrod saw some symptons and at first was a little scared but he's used to that now.They're all right to the Glandelinians as long as you don't as you call it feed them meat.Thevenemy think they can do anything to those beautiful little girls, when in fact the they can do what they please to the enemy and the enemy can't say a thi thing in protest.Wait till you see them.You 'll have to before you can be a sworn in scout as you'll have to make your oaths before them."
"I'll say I won't make no sworn in oaths before them."said Mic-Hollester hotly."I hate them."
"Hate those good little princesses."?
"No the enemy."
"You misunderstood me"said Starring."You would have to make your oath before the princesses."
"Oh well that's better.Excuse my mistake.What's the second hand scout?"Mic-Hollester wanted to know.
"Good night"said Starring"don't make me laugh."There's no second class scout.None are even called tenderfeet either unless they show themselves to b one at the start.But now the question is how are we ourselves could to follow a bee line acrosss the confounded river?I wish I could draw a line and we could walk on that."
The boy and girlscouts felt sure it would be pretty easy going after they had got acrosss the river. But indeed, getting across the river, that was the question when at various points the enemy was keeping up a hot fire to prevent any such attempt.And even then if the enemy was quiet what good would that do. They knew well enough that few of them or none of them could swim straight across on account of the river current.It would have carried them all downstream.The river wasn't v ry wide there and it wasn't much of a swim across either, only if they tried it they'd land east on their course.Most of the other boy and girlscouts had been able to cross the river before the enemy destroyedvthe pontoons but Starring and his companions having stopped to lunch got left.
"We're up against it now"said George West.what are we going to do?"
"Do you suppose a rope would reach across?"asked Starring.
"Sure it would "darger answered,"Only how are we going to get it acrosss?"
"Throw it "Jack Saunders said."ut if you did"he continued, "what would hold it there.Besides boys and girls what good is the rope as long as we haven't got our bathing suits.You don't expect us to do the miracl of walking on the rope do you?"
"Oh here comes a big line of boats."Darger shouted."See them?They're just coming round the b n bend.There are a lot og girls in them too."
"Are they nice little girls?"Starring asked him with a wink at Jack.
"What are you talking about!"one of the girlscouts shouted."They are a quarter of a mile away."
"That wouldn't prevent them from being nice girls unless they're Glandelinians" said Starring."Violet and her sisters are I believe still far away within their headquarters at camp and they're nive little girls."
"All I can see is their backs and the rear of their large heart shaped hats." George West said .

"Well"said Starring as far as I can tell from their backs,they look as if they might be nice girlscouts.Maybe we can get them to cary the end of the rope across and fasten it to the other side."
"Yes, and what will be do then?"one of the girlscouts wanted to know.
"Then we'll say thank you."Starring told her.
"Yes, and then what?"
"Well"said Starring, we'll ask them if they couldn't tow us across keeping their boats close to the rope..They could never row straight o across with the tide running this way."
"What tide."There's no tide in this river"said Tim laughing.
"I mean current."said Starring."We so should sory what is it."
Pretty soon the head of the boats was nearly opposite them, and Starring shouted; "Hey good little girls, willhyou give us a life across?"
"Jack whispered to Starring;
"I know who that girlscout is in the front boat-she's Hettie Kauffmann. She's the highest girlscout leader of all."
As soon as he had spoken Starring and others saw that he was right.He then shouted;
"Oh Miss Kauffmann will you kindly give us a lift across.We are playing "tag"with the enemy and we're afraid he'll get away."
The nearest of the boats after some exclamanation from those within started for the shore, and Hettie Kauffmann saluting called;
"Hello you Tiger scouts, what are you doing here."
"We're on a bee line raid but this river is in the way and we want to get across."
"Why didn't you swim across.?"
"The current would sweep us out of our bee line."
"Oh."
"What do you mean bee line raid"demanded one of the other girls who also was dressed as a high leader."
"We're making a raid against the enemy on a straight line."
One of the girls whispered to Starring very anxious like;
"You'd better look out how yountalk to her.She can arrest anybody if she wants to."
"Who's afraid"said Jack West."We're not bad people and we haven't stolen anything, and neither are we Glandelinians."
"I'm not so sure about that"said Starring."We're taking lots of property from the enemy.Maybe if we can't prove it belongs to us;"---
"You're crazy"one of the girlscouts said.
"I know a boyscout who got arrested for bi bring two good Apple pies to the Vivian Girls."Hunt Manning said.
"What happened to him when he got arrested?"
"They embraced him by each one giving him a hug and kiss."
"Aw go on."
"I sayMiss Kauffmann can we get arrested for making a raid on a camp which don't belong to our sides."said Starring.
Hettie Kauffmann just laughed because she knew the nature of all these girl and boyscouts.She only said"Well it depends on who does the arresting.Well what's on your mind now.You want to be captured by the enemy huh?"
"The enemy doesn't try that."Jack spoke up. Hettie just stepped out out of the boat gave him a gentle shove and said;
"You've been capturing a phonograph from the enemy camps ehI'll have to look into that."
"All right"said Jack."Go ahead and look into it.All you'll see is a lot of junk."
Hettie Kauffmann and some of the other girlscout leaders just stood there laughing and Hettie said;
"Well what's on your minds?you want to get across do you?"
"We want to get across in a bee line."said Starring .Do you see that tree just across the river?"he added pointing.
She looked and said;
"Yes I do.What's the matter with it?"
"Well that's in a bee line with that big tree away up there on the ridge.So if you crone of your followers would be willing to take the end of this rope acrosss and fasten it to that tree, then maybe you can get some of your followers to row us over without drifting with the current.We have to go for ward in a bee line."
"Oh that's it is it!"she said."Well now suppose that bee line raid takes you right through the main enemy encampments.What then?"
"That's up to the glandelinian encampments."said Starring."If the glandelinian encampments doesn't getout of the way we'll go through it with shot and torch. I thought you heard that boy and girlscouts are invincible? "

"Well your kind certainly are more than what is called incinnille"said she.
"And as I see already by the booty you collected you're very"courteous " to the enemy.If they asked you not to walk through their encampments you wouldn't.You' d fly.Well I'll see what we can do for you as Master Starring you're a very special favorite with the Princesses, and that makes you that to me too.I hope you'll always keep on as straight as you're going now."
"We always go straight"said Starring; we don't go around much.We're always wide awake except when we are asleep."
"Oh I see.I'll say Starring you must have been through an ice house you're so fresh.Well if you're so wide awak e you didn't happen to see anything of a strange bad looking man around here?A man with a camp and red sweater."
Starring looked keenly at Jack and his friend Jean.
Then he looked kind of queer at Hettie Kauffmann.
"what color sweater did you say."said Jack all excited.
"why it must have been red."Hettie said;"or maybe not.?A pretty rough looking man,didn't happen to notice any one around here did you?"
"Is he a spy!"asked Jack looking queerly at Starring.
"Well I guess he certainly ought to be."Hettie said being surprised at Jack for his strange action."He stole a plan from the headquarters of Violet and her sisters."
"pid you come all this way done here to find him."Jack piped up.
"Yes.He a so help up a patrol on the State Big Girl Knool road above Ophelia last night..He fired two shots andkilled two of the patrol; got away with some important papers.
""I---I---I--- captured that man fifteen minutes ago."gasped Jack surprised that he had accomplished such a feat unknowningly."
"Have you still got him.?"
"We have"said Starring."WE'll hand him over to you while we prepare for crossing."We captured him during our attack here.Here Jack dear grab hold of his rope so we can get across.Six of you boys go and get that man and bring him here."
So that was the way they all got across, going straight northw st.Hettie Kauffmann rowed over with one end of the rope, and the current of the river carried her about a hundred or so yards down stream before she finally made the other shore.Then she got out and dragged th boat upstream and tied the rope to the tree just where Starring told her to. Ho However the boyscouts didn't go by any boats but m by means of the rope they got across the stream hand over hand, and it was very easy keeping their course because all they had to do was keep hold of the rope and work over hand by hand.Hettie Kauffmann and her followers were indeed surprised out of their wits that Jack Saunders had captured just the man she had been hunting for.When she said;
"Jack must be a wonderful boy Starring laughed and said;
"I'd like to see the Glandelinian spy or otherwise that boy cannot capture. .I'm as strong as an ox so they say but he captured me once too when he thought I was that Glandelinian boyscout Gerald Starring..Judging too the way he treats Glandelinians there wouldn't be much left of the prisoner if he tried to resist."
Ophelia was about four miles above Albrambgara Albrâhambra.It's right on the river and it has also an immense boat club club up there.So when the boy and girlscouts of Hettie's troop found the stolen boat in the marshes down near Little Rosa they thought the fellow had left the boat and maybe maybe was hiding somewhere around there, because anyway it would be pretty hard for him to get through the marches to the railroad track.But Jack and his gang had surprised the man in the boat and made him surrender.
Hetti Kauffmann and her followers desired to join in the raid and sobnow however their bee line raid was should half ov er and they had traveled against that portion of the foe lines in a pretty straight line. Of course it can be said that they didn't some times go even a yard to the right or left for that would be impossible, but they went in a pretty straight line nevertheless.They didn't vary their course any just to save work that is sure.Now from the river there was plenty of open country till they got to little Topsy.The only thing that stood in the way was Riverview Park and it was hotly contested by the raiding christian infantry and the Glandelinians within.The christian aurthorities had closed the park up during the war and so the only trouble the boy nd girlscouts woul would have between the river and Little Topsy was the enemy making a fierce defense behind the board fence around that old park, and on top of the swiftly defending rides, and firing from the old fair houses and show houses tet that didn't seem to be an obstacle for the Glandelinians were gradually being driven out and with considerable loss too.During all this fray our young hero couldn't get that spy out of his mind.
"I bet h"he said"he must have been a pretty desperate spy hey!To att attack a patrol of soldiers and kill too, and yet we capture him."
"Sure "George West said"Where do you say wecaptured him.It was you who did it."

"Well who ever captured him, he sure had his nerve and crust to raid the head quarters of our princesses and get away with some plans."Said Jack."I got them away from him too and the stuff he took from the patrol."
"If it had been only no account papers I wouldn't say anything."said Starring. "But to rob Violet,and her sisters is too much."
"It's daredevil recklessness and even though it is done by a spy we consider it grand larceny."Jack said.
"I don't call it so very grand to rob the Vivian Girls."Starring told him.
"If you think it is grand for a spy to steal important plans you've got some funny ideas.I suppose if a spy stole the Vivien Girls from our camp instead you would call that magnificent larceny. "
"You're crazy"Jack shouted."Grand Larceny is a kind of crime."
"Well I'm a boyscout and surely I don't call laron larceny grand."
"It's a war crime"Jack shouted, "and he can face the firing squad for it. "
"He ought to burn at the stake for it."Starring told him.
"Do you think maybe we'll run into another Glandelinian spy!"Jack wanted to know know.
"Not if we see him first"Starring said."I guess a man who is guilty of spying wouldn't hang around here after you caught this one."
"We scouts often catch fugitives."Jack said.
"More often we catch the dickens from the enemy"Hunt Manning said. "Come on forget it."
"Sure"said Starring,"keep in a bee line advance, and you'll always go straight."
I guess dear reador(if there is to be any guessing here) that it was about only half a mile acrosss the old amusement park.All the land there was low and full of hastily abandonoed Glandelinian encampments, they could see right over the top of little Topsy town as you might say,and the big tree away off there on the ridge stood out good and plain.And that was partly because the sun was getting over that way.Anyhow Starring believed that a couple of hours later the tree would look as if it were all kind of spangled and with gold like a Christmas tree.It seemed sort of that the sun was going ahead to get the tree all decorated for them.
George West said;
"The suns beginning to get over to the west.See?"
"It's going to beat us to the tree too. "said Starring.
If it had not been for the enemy being so "tight "with the park it would have been easier to follow a straight course right through it.Yet for a time before the attack of the infantry and cavarly, and even before the withering fire of all the boy and girlscouts the enemy hung to that park as if they were merely statues being fired at and twice before any headway was gained the christian infantry had been driven back.Then when successful the infantry had to clamber over piles of old boards in the face of a scathing fire and had to work their way kind of in and out through the old rotten trestle of the parks scenic railway in the face of the titanic resistance of the Glandelinian soldiery.That thing dressed their path lin like a big long wriggling snake and thin the Glandelinians had defended li e like lochos.Some of the old booths which had been boarded up, and some of which were all falling to pieces had to be grenaded to drive the snipers out.
It was a fierce desperate fight while it lasted not so easy to go forward as Starring had hoped for and in this fray thire thirteen of his boys were wounded and six girls, but they only dressed theirwounds and went at it again defiantly.
The concrete basin that was used to be a swimming pool was all full of rubbish formed in a sort of undulating ridge line and Glandelinians were behindthis too firing for all they were worth.And the little platform away away up that the man used to do the "dive of death"from had also to be grenaded to dislodge the Glandelinians who were shooting downward ,from it.At place the boys or girls had to climb over the old ramshackle booths, but as the enemy receded and the firing slackened that became easy .But th fighting raged fiercely over where else as the Glandelinians were now determined to check the raid before it came totheir main camps and as the boy and girlscouts were pressing onward hurling a hurricane of grenades at the desperate enemy, all of a sudden George West stopped short,and said;
"Look ahead, do you know what.For heavens sake!"
"What's wrong?2asked Starring.
"See that old ferris-wheel"Hesaid."Every car is full of Glandelinians shooting at our men, and we're going to run right plunk into it."
Starring took a good squint and sure enough it was right in a bee line with their line of attack, and the cars of the wheel was full of Glandelinians and so severe was their fire that the ferrish-wheel could hardly be seen in the thick of the powder smoke.It was not as a sea exactly acrosstheir their path, buthit was lengthwise with their path.It was so narrow however that they might have gone past on either side of it, but just the same it was right plunk in their path.It was quite a long ways ahead. Starring had heard that once when two boys and their little sister were going through this old park on their way home from Little Topsy they got a good scare on account of that old ferris-wheel.And that at arted people thinking that because of the wickedness of the war that it was possessed by devils.Maybe you've heard of possessed houses they(they're not haunted houses) but who ever heard of a possessed ferrish wheel.That time the two boys and the little girl went through there, probably it was a year ago it was however not in the night night either but at day and all of a sudden they heard a sort of creaking noise, and they couldn't make out where it was. Sometimes it sounded just as if it might be a p rson.They followed that noise as best as they could and pretty soon they came to that old wheel.It wasn't so big that wheel.And it wasn't so little either.And neither was it very high--- only eighty feet---ONLY. Then they could hear the sound good and plain and it was up in the wheel.It sounded pretty much as if it came from some horrid beings of the other world.Sometimes it was a noise like some one bemoaning his fate that he was lost forever.And then it would kind of die away.When they got home t hey told about it and their parents said it was probably the wind blowing in that creaky olf thing, but the children said there had been no breeze veven.After all all the children said the old wheel was possessed.If some say a place i is possessed, it is possessed, whether it is or not.But one thing, it kept the more fearsome persons away from the old amusement park.

"I wonder how our old friend general Federal who escaped is."!Said George West sarcastically.

"Well if we meet him we'll take him along with us, even if he doesn't want to come."said Starring."He ought to be good on a bee line raid because he once told his officers that he can go through mostly anything.If it wasn't for Hunt Mic-Hollester I'd try my best to capture him.But that boy loves that general o so well that I'm afraid we'd be carrying a corpse.We've got every kind of a strange thing now except a Glandelinian general."

"You have not got your kin namesake Gerald Starring."Jack shouted above the din.

"No"said Starring"That's true.Violet a nd her sisters would like to see him very, very, much whether he likes to see them or not."

"If you could have those three boys as prisoners we could consider this raid a record breaker."George West said."

"Maybe it wouldn't be safe.They're bad enough to be treacherous."Mic-Hollester said.

"You telling me"said Starring."Take all Glandelinians for bad or worse I believe those three boys would win the prize; but if they tackle us they'll find we're a great deal worse."

"This raid has been good fun so far"said Mic-Hollester.

"You have not seen anything yet.It's not like Penrod when he r leads a raid." Starring told him."He go es through everything.He might as well be a ghost of ghosts.Wait till he comes and leads a raid.even the laughing brook is all the time giggling at the way his raiders treats the Glandelinians.Wait till you see the fierce Vivianites."

"That's all right"Jack Saunders piped up."Violet and her sisters are good raiders too.What they sometimes do to the enemy makes even the stone statues as to say laugh out loud, and---"All of a sudden he stopped grabbed Starring by the shoulder and whispered;"For Heavens sake look."

"Have a heart"Starring told him"Don't knock me down.What is it."!

"Look."he whispered.Look where those old fences and barns are yonder.There are enough Glandelinians there to hold our infantry men escort in check and thei they are firing on them something awful."

Then Starring know what Jack meant.About two hundred yards off their path was a row of old tumble down shacks.A number of them were boarded up hastily in font front with old odds and ends of boards that were not painted.There were s a small windows in them and as starri ng and some of his followers attracted by the sound of firing looked they could see puffs of smoke coming from the windows and cracks between the boards and the infantry answering heavily.

"Sh-h-h-h do you see it!"Starring whispered to George West.B Be careful or they'll direct their fire at us."

Then he kind of urged the boy and girls along the path on all fours because he didn't want them to be exposed if t he could help it.The firing was fearful and severe for the Glandelinians were making a sterner resistance than ever.

"What---what did I tell you !"Jack whispered all excited.

"You didn't tell me anything "Said Starring."sh-h-h-h-you talk so loud, they may hear us despite the firing.Come let us crawl along a little further.Do you want them to see and fire on us."

"Did you see thcugh what I saw!"Jack whispered, so excited he could hardly speak. "Between one of those barns they got a deadly machine gun.It's a crac crank turner.I discovered it. "

"What are we going to do about it."!Starring asked some of his officers."There's a machine g gun battery there and the infantry I suppose don 't know it."

"Sure there is"two or three of them said.

"I saw it plain"said Jack Dawsonin 2"it was or is standing between two barns.He it looks like a brass cannon too."

"I was the first to discover it."Jack whispered.

"All right"said Starring, they say findings is keepings, you can have it its yours.But you'll have to capture it."How are you satisfied!"

By that time they were ten yards past the two shacks from which two g ns were seen, the boys and girls all standing behind wide trees.The Glandelinians who were firing so steadily from inside the other shacks couldn't probably see them through any of the openings in front of the shacks but they all knew some of the Glandelinians if they did see them before were no doubt peeking at them through somelittle crack or hole.It even made Starring feel funny to think that some of those Glandelinians were in there staring at them and they not able to see them.

Let's continue on along as if we didn't suspect anything"said Starring"we can talk while we're walking."

So they started along and Darger said;

"The best thing for some of us is to run ahead and warn the infantry commander there."

"You'll find the infantry leader standing in front of his command."said Starring."That is where they usually go.If you want to expose yourself go ahead." The only one so far who had not yet spoken was Henrt Henry Mic-Hollester.All of a sudden he said;

"what good would it do to notify the officers of the infantry.Boy and girlscouts like you are not afraid are you!Let the one who discovered those two guns. So he ought to be the one to go forward within throwing distance and hurl grenades among the guns."

"That shows how much you know about boy and girlscouts."Said Jack."Us scouts are supposed to be cautious,and not only that but Violet or even her sisters forbids us positively to do anything rash.If you're reckless then you are not a good scout.See.If you do reckless things you'll lose out and get sent home.Maybe I'd like to go forward and grenade those batteries, but I have to make a sacrifice and not do it.See!"

"sure it is as clear as mud"said Starring."Let's sit down here just as if we are going to take a rest, lets sprawl on the ground just as if we were not thinking about those guns at all.Then we can talk about better what we ought to do."

"Maybe the ground is better a little closer along."Said Jack who in his heart really was anxious to be closer so if it was possible he could throw a grenade.

"This here is all right."George West said.

So they say sat down right in their path, and Jack and Jack started to play mum bly peg so that if any of the Glandelinians did see them they would not be suspicious of their plans.Because if they thought they had seen the two gun battery and were going to try to cause its capture, they probably would start drawing it away.

"Don't look back"george west said."What are we going to doWith the infantry in front of us attacking that line of shacks we can't capture the battery ourselves can we!"

"The only way would be to sprinkle a little sault or salt on the wheels."Henry Mic-Holl ester said.

It seemed sort of funny the way that boy talked because all of the rest had seen that two gun battery, and a two gun battery, especially if it hurls a stream of bullets is no joke, a especially a two wheel machine gun battery but any cannon hurling shraph shrapnell or gral grape and canister is bad enough.Any way they were all glad to see that Miv-Hollester was as good natured and as brave as the rest of them.But theyhdidn't know till another minute how brave he really was.

"All right"said Starring"but nevertheless it is pret y seridus.There's those two guns over there.At any minute or so it might be discharged.If we start forward by a round about way and those Glandelinians reallly see us they'll be sususpicious and either turn those guns on us personally or withdraw them and escape.We know where those guns are, and maybe they do not know we know.How are we going to notify one of the soldier commanders or anybody else when we'll put ourselves in the line of fire, which is forbidden,that's the question. "

""Maybe one of uscould sneak away and get through the christian battle line some how" said Geroeg George West.

"Yes and maybe they'll see you s too and let you have a shower."said Starring. "Maybe we could start a boy scout signal fire which Penrod learned us and also sent up a smudge signal."

"Sure and make it good and heavy so the enemy will see it and think we're smoking cigars"Mic-Hollaster said."You told me the enemy understand those signals."

"It's all very well to joke, but we have those batteries as good as caught if we can plan something"said Starring."What are we going to do about it?"

"Some one hustle offand warn the infantry commander."George West said"Before they draw their men into rea range of those guns."

"A "Penrod"smudge signal."said Darger and Will.The "The enemy won't know that one."

"Well of course I don't know so much about Abbiesnnian scouts because I'm not really a member yet."said Mic-Hollaster.

"They're supposed to be very observant."Jack said.

"And very brave."Warde said.

"Sure but they have to be cautious."said Jack.

"They're also supposed to use common sense"said Starring.

"Well I'm not afraid of those machine guns"said Mic-Hollaster."Sometimes us foriegners can be an a sneaky cringing cowards as you have experienced but there are brave ones too.Maybe I'm not so observant, but those guns can't scare me.If Jack doesn't want to go and nab them, I'll go and nab those batteries myself."

Just then he got up and started for the opening between those two shacks but he crawled on all fours.

"Come back you boob"said Starring."You're crazy."

Jack grabbed him by his jacket and said, all excited;

"Do you want to get riddled with bullets.Do you want to get killed.Do you know those guns can wipe out a regiment at one discharge."

"Come back you fool "said George West.

Hunt Manning jumped up and grabbed him and he and Jack Jack both tried to hold him back."Sit down, sit down"they said."Do you want to get riddled with bullets."!

Mic-Hollaster just shook them off, and he said;

"You came up to my house yesterday and gave me a lot of stuff about scouts being courageous and brave and intrepid-----"

"Let me tell you what what intrepid means"Said Jack, half crazy."It-t- it--it has two meanings, sort of."

"A scout is supposed to risk anything for his country."Mic-Hollaster said."That is just what you told me"and before they could hinder him he was half way over to that opening.

"We'd better make a sudden fierce attack and save him."Jack said.

"Stay where you are" George West told him.

"That boy must have been reading crazy adventure stories"said Jack,"about children capturing bad men and all that.

"That is what he gets from lying in the hammock and reading about "Heroes"Will said.

"What,---what shall --we do!" Jack asked.

By that time Mic-Hollaster was right close up to that portion of the firing line and edging his way through the surprised line of men who just then saw the gun battery.Goo whiz anybody had to admit he nerved reckless. He just crawled through the line of christian infantry, pulled loose from his hand grenade and took a large hand grenade lit the fuse and just as the gunners were getting ready to fire hurled it through the air.They just waited cold so for the ex l explosion and it came like a resounding thunder clap.The gunners had seen the obk object coming and hurled themselves into a ditch tttte semtthe selves save themselves but too late.

"No wonder"George West said"His brain is full of us boy scouts--who give the enemy no quarter and all that---that isn't----listen."

It was just the sound of the infantry attackers encouraged by the daring of the boy in plain clothe, carrying the shacks and breaking through.All the boy and girlscouts were in such suspense that they could hardly speak.Jack was nearly dead with fright.

"Listen---sh-h-h-h."George West said.

"It's a hand to hand fight but the Glandelinians are retreating."Said Starring.

Then all of a sudden, oh boy, they could hear it now, there was another loud explosion of a hand grenade and one of the sheds went up like a cloud of smoke. They all just stood there trembling.Nobody moved or spoke .

When Will Schloeder spoke(oke toke poke) his voice was hoarse.

"Let's go, we've got to go and help them."he said.

"George Westyjust gulped."He said;

"Wait a second----listen."

"It's awful."Ralph Warrenton said"We--we just--cant--stand--here.What-- shall ---we do--- here!"

Jack himself was a white as snow.He just stood there gup gulping.Jusththen good night, you'll hardly believe itwhen I tell you.Out from one of the other sheds came one of those old boards just as if some one was kicking it, and there was Mic-Hollaster dragging out a limp man by the neck.The man's arms were flopping about this way and that and Mic-Hollaster threw him flat on the ground.

"There is one of your fine Glandelinians"Mic-Hollaster said"And he'll never frighten good little Abbiesnnian boys and girls again.He will never get another prize for being a crackshot in the army as those medals he is wearing shows.His glorious career as a marksman is over.He is a prisoner an even though wounded .Step up lads and girls and take a look at him while our infantry presses on."

Oh boy I guess they never felt so surprised in all their lives.The unfortunate Glandelinian, he was badly in injured by the hand grenade.

"You sure got the crust all right."Starring said.

He only answered;

"A boyscout is observant.Do I get the gold cross!"

"I don't know about you getting the gold cross"said George West"but we ourselves ought to get leather medals,I know that.We're a fine outfit of scouts to be afraid to tackle a two gun battery when we are loaded down with good handy hand grenades."

The Glandelinian was cursing and blaspheming and Mic-Hollaster kicked him and told him to shut up.The Mic-Hollaster said;

Our friend Jack is the cause of his capt ure.Did you ever hear of mental suggestion!"

"Is that what you killed the Glandelinian gunners with!"Said Starring.

"I ought to have"he said."Anyway when you're hunting for a thing we generally get it. So what's the answer.!"

"Answer to what!" Jack shouted.

"Anything"said Starring."It depends on what the qu stion is.Mic-Hollaster is a better scout than any of us.Deny it if you dare.He had performed the most heroic act since our comrade Artie Arline patrol leader of the boyscouts called the Scorpions by the enemy killed a couple of Glandelinian patrols in ambush single handed.They don't care what they kill in gray uniforms those scouts and the enemy know th that."

The wounded prisoner was taken to the rear and Starring said;

"Why should we bother about him when we have our hee line t raid to finish."

After that for about as much as only ten yards they didn't have any more adventures.Then in the same park they had to climb over an abandoned bandstand but that wasn't much of an adventure excepting you may call it one for the number of dead Glandelinians seen lying here and there on its platform and some on its roof.The next thing they passed, was a lot of Cookies Starring had in his big knapsack.He passed them around.After that they came to the place where dare devil Dennel had held the christian infantry at bay for two hours, and just beyond that was the once fiercely defended but now abandoned ferris-wheel.Now it was about half past tr three or so or maybe four oclock, when they came near the ferris-wheel.The sun was over on the ridge anyway, and it was all kind of glinted up with yellow up there, and it was getting more that way all the time.Starring was glad they were going up there,you can bet.

"What do you say we take a rest in the free ferris wheel!"George West said.

"It's just about in our path, and we're too close to the infantry any how."

"Suits me"said Starring.

"There were about ten cars and one of them was exactly at the top and one of them was exactly at the bottom.The trestle that the big wheel hung on was only half as high a d the wheel.Up near the top of the trestle was the axle.So as they came along in the same direction that the wheel was standing the next car to the one on the bottom was right in front of them and hanging just about low enough so they could reach it.Those cars were pretty big and strange to say they were not boarded up like everything else in that old park. Maybe the reader may say that the easiest thing for the boy and girlscouts would have been for them to climb into the lower car which was hanging right underneath.But that one of all seemed to be the only one boarded up tight.The next car on the side of the wheel nearer to them was partly open because the boards had been broken away.They knew now too why the boards were broken away for boards of all sizes lay on all sides of the immense wheel.So what did George West do but take a running jump and all the rest soon were after him.As soon as three or four of them grabbed hold of one of the va cars, the old wheel began creaking and the car started moving down and sent them sprawling all over the ground girls and boys alike.

"Try it again."Jack shouted."One two--three--;

"Wait till it stops,"they all shouted.

It is hard to tell how far that wheel went before it finally came to a stop. It just kept creaking and creakingand then it stopped and there was a car right in front of them about ten feet from the ground.That one was most all open so it would be easy to tumble into it.

"One, two, three,--go"somebody said, and off they went for a good running jump.It was hard to tell who was the first of them to catch hold of the car, but anyway, they all went tumbling over each other into it and down it went, creaking, creaking, creaking, till it hung from the lowest part of the wheel.

"Like all the comforts of home."George West said."I like this better than our private railroad car."

"Sure"said Starring, "It's just the place for Jack, he is always going up in the air against the enemy.Notice how it rocks!Oh boy I hope we don't get seasick."

In one of the cars were two seats facing each other.Yet the cars were made for as many as twelve persons, but into one of them fourteen boys and girls managed to crowd all right.The floor of the car too was about two or three feet from the ground and it swung like a swing.It was nice there and nice in there and a fine sea smacking breeze was blowing.There were dead bodies of the enemy lying laying around but they didn't pay any attention to it and looking up through all the wirework, they could see the car at the top swinging.

"I'd like to be in that one"one of the little girlscouts said with a giggle.

"If you were in that one it would be then this one."Starring told her.

"What are you talking about."Jean said.

"I'm talking about whether anything can be something else."Starring told her.

"I suppose"she said with a giggle"That is what you call mental digestion."

"It's logic."Starring told her."If we were in that car, the thirty of us, it would probably come down here wouldn't it.Don't you know Jean what the attraction of gravity is?"

"It never attracted me."she said.

"The heaviest part of a thing goes down."Starring said. "If you were up there you would come down here. The top car then is the bottom one.Everything is something did different.Up m anu where you are not.See! What do we care?"

They all sat there with their heads thrown back looking at the car away above them.

"See how it rocks"the darger boy said."I bet is it is good and breezy up there."

"Why don't the others rock."Hunt Manning asked.

"Search me."Starring said.

"There's nothing on either side of that one at the tip."George West said"There isn't even much of the wheel up there to break the force of the wind, but the other cars are just as exposed and they are not even so much as in the ligh slight s slightest motion.I'm suspicious."

"Correct."Starring said."Take two credits, and one cookie.Here."

"There isn't any such thing as the top of a wheel."darger said.

"Sure there is"starring told him"The part that is at the top is the top."

"The part that is at the top of what?" he came back at him.

"The part that is still there when the wheel doesn't turn.Nevertheless I should worry"said Starring."Don't you think the enemy leaders have enough wheels in their heads without bothering about a ferris-wheel."

So they all started singing that crazy song that they used to sing when they were being hauled all overthe country in their camp on wheels;

"There was a Glandelinian general of Glandeline;
He had ten million men;
He marched them up the hill to have their fill, sill, till,
And then he marched them down again, sain, gain, pain, spain,
And when they're up, hop pop top,they're up hup, hup, hup ,
And when they're down, they're gown, clown hown pown,
And when they're only half way up, pop,pop,pop,pop,
They're neither up or down unless general federal looks like a nightgown."

It was nice in there, and nicer still if there had not been so many Glandelinian generals or soldiers doing some nivvnice work. In every direction were fires made by the raid and smoke was heavy in the air.

"This is a good place to hide after killing general Federal."Mic-Hollester said.

"Look out you'll strain your neck."Starring said to Darger, because he was craning his neck looking up.

"I'm trying to decide which car is the one that was at the bottom when we came along."he said."I think it is that one up top.But its still rocking."

"They're all the same only different."Starring said.

"If I'm right"said Darger it means that the wheel just went half way around-- one half of a revolution."

":ro' Probably you'reright"said Starring.

"Please take your feet off of me Jean dear"said Jack."Do you want a whole car to yourself.If you do we'll get out. and leave you alone."

"It's pretty crowded in here."she said.

"Well go on the top floor if you're not satisfied"Starring told her."You'll get a good view up there."

"How do you know there's a good view in that car." "Jack said.

"I put it there when the car was down here."Starring told him."Ask me something hard.What now makes this car rock."

Something unusually surprising must started rocking the car.The car went swinging more and more and the rusty old wheel creaked.

"What's wrong now"Starring said."What is this.?A life on the ocean wave or a bee line raid."

"Listen to the supposed to be ghosts up there."George West said."This old wheel sounds like we were sticking a devil in the back with a red hot poker."

"This car will look like one too if it don't let up"said Starring.

They were all shaking and their heads were wobbling and they were wiping their feet over all over each other and suddenly Jean herself whispered;

"Look look---up there.Look, look, quick."

"You're seeing stars."Said Starring."no wonder."

"Look"she said"It's a,,----its--the---the------"

"Now you see what you get for us being swung about so much."Starring said.

"Look,- --athe---athe- upppp------"she stuttered."I----s-----the--sp--pie---"----""

"No you don't Starring said"No more spies.Try and stop this car from rocking fellow comrades, will you, for this little girl will be seeing some wild Turkeys."

They tried to but the car seemed to be rocking more and more.The car had been rocking so hard it seemed as if they couldn't stophit.E Jacks big sheath knife was bedding against his belt, his company was flopping around, and he was pointing up in the air as best as he could and saying now too;

"Jean--Jean---she ---is--right.Stpthe car---stpthecar--the spie, the --spie-tsthis---s-s-s-s-s-nt------"

They thought now he was seeing things too and the more Starring laughed the dizzier he got and the dizzier he got the more he laughed.They were all laughing so h r hard and they were a ll so dizzy they couldn't speak.

"Atta--b----b----b----boy----kid---."one of them said.

Jean herself was tumbling all around from one fellows lap to another and also tf trying to talk.

"Lkthis----a----a----a----a----a----nt---"

That was about all Starring could make of it.

Just then h didn't know why, Starring believed he did see a face.He could not recollect where he saw it, but it was above him and it seemed to be a bearded or bearded face. He with the help of others managed to get the car to stop rocking.

"It's a Glandelinian up there"Jack said."Did you see."?

"You've been seeing things"Jane Melfort said.

"I'll leave it to Starring."Jean said.

"Indeed I did see a bearded face."Starring told them"It was.----"

"Sh-h-h----look."Jack whispered"Straight up."

Starring looked and away up through all the trestle work, he could see a hatted head thick with a beard move back into the car at the top.The big axle of the wheel was right between the car and that other one and it hid part of the car.It seemed as if that man up there who ever he was had been peeking down at the boy and girlscouts and drew in his head quickly as not to be seen.They saw this much and so did Starring, that he had those sort of square topped hats that privates of the enemy wore.

"Did you see!"Starring whispered to George West.

"Sure I did"he said."put are we sure its a Glandelinian.He may be one of our side in disguise."

"Christian soldier in disguise."Jack whispered scornfully, all excited."What would he be hiding from us then for.That's a Glandelinian soldier I'll bet who did not have a chance to escape, and now we have got him."

"Don't look up again"said Darger; don't let him think we saw him.He had a "College professor hat on.Did you see!"

"I suppose I'll have to climb up there and shoot him."Henry Mic-Hollester said.

"You sit where you are"Starring told him.Starring knew he was not joking for he would have done it if there was a way to climb up, and too there was no time for fooling with a desperate Glandelinian soldier, and Starring was afraid he might spoil everything.

"You could never climb up ther e"Starring said."Anyway this is no false alarm.I saw him as plain as day."

"So did I George West Whispered."I believe he's a spy."

Some of the others now said they saw him too but they were not sure because they had been seeing everything on account of being so dizzy.

"Don't talk loud, remember sound ascends."Said Darger.

Starring made believe he was looking all around at the sky as if examing its dark smoky color, and he stole a look up that way again.Just as he did he saw a kind of movement .Therefore he knew that that soldier away up there in that car was watching them, and sticking his head out as much as he dared without his being seen as he hoped.

"We don't know whether it is a Glandelinian s y or not"said George West, bu"ut who ever it is we have him.If he is a friend in disguise then we'll relent after we discovered our mistak e but we take no chances when we see anyone in enemy uniform no matter who he is when we do not know him.He would break his neck jumping from up there.He couldn't get hold of the trestle on either side of the car. That car must have been cedown here when we came along.Whoever he is we have got him as sure as if we had hand cuffs on him. "

"If he hap e happens to be another Glandelinian spy we have foiled him."Jack whispered."You once said boy and girlscouts never capture bn spies and things without being merciless.Why be merciless in this case too."

"Well if he is one we sure have got him"said George West, "and believe me that sure is a new way to capture a glandelinian spy."

"It shows that scouts are resourceful."Jack said.

"Resourceful you mean don't you."?

"Yes, I'm so excited I missprononced the word."

"Sure"said Starring"They're so resourceful they captured for once in their career a spy without knowing it.We don't even know if he is a Glandelinian spy yet.We have no proofs."

"We know we've got him.Is not that enough."Jack said.

Well whoever he was, Starring could see th he and his followers had him all right.He was as safe up there as he would have been in a dungeon.Because it was easy to see how it was.The big tall test trestle work a hundred feet high of the wheel was only half as high as the middle of the wheel.Maybe he co ld have climbed down that, and maybe he couldn't.But from the middle of the wheel up to the top of the iron work wasn't close enough for him to reach from one brace to the other.Starring didn't even see how he could ever get out of the car to the nearest girder.If he took a chance he'd break his neck or every bone in his body.Starring believed just like George West said, he had made for the lowest car, and it had gone up with him on account of their weight hanging onto some of the other cars.Thirty fellows are heavier than one,and two cars were loaded with child scouts, while others below were waiting their turn patiently.

It certainly did seem a funny way to capture any one providing he was a r al foe and not a friend in disguise, but whoever he was he was caught sure.The children in uniform wondered how he felt up there.

"Do you think he'll take a chance of his life."one of the girls asked.

"No.ut I'll bet he's half crazy with anxiety up there and would give anything if we would go away."said Starring.

"Maybe' he'll shoot."Jack said looking at his own pistol.

"What good would that do him or us!"Will said."He'd have to shoot the whole one hundred and fifty of us down here and then he' couldn't get us anyhow and neither could we shoot him because the axle is in our way."

"If we all l leave here the car will come down."Said Mic-Hollester."He could rock it so as to get the wheel started."

"It's rocking a good deal now, that was why it was rocking before when we first noticed it. "George West said.

"I know what I'm going to do"Starring told them."I'm going to find out who he if if I can."

"You're not going up to ask him!"Jack said."You might better use a megaphone. Safty first."

"I'm going to make believe I'm hunting for something and see if there are any footprints around"said Starring."If they are and they're from the direction of the river, that will look bad and our suspicions will be confirmed."

On the fancy seats wer four wooden knobs two on each seat.

"urn one of these and see if it screws off."Starring said.

Mic-Hollester was sitting at the end of one of the seats and he kept turning the knob till it came off.

"Reach down under the seat now"said Starring--don't anybody look up--reach down under your knees and wrap your handkerchief very tightly around that knob so that it will look lik e a baseball or q a tennis ball.Then throw it over here.We'll pretend we're playing ball, and finally you throw it so far I'll have to go tward the river for it."

The paint was all gone from those knobs, and the wood was all cracked and rotton like all the wood in that old park.Starring wanted the ball to look white so it would be good and plain to the Glandelinian up there if that was what he was.nIn a few seconds Mic-Hollester and Starring began throwing it to each other as if they really meant to play ball for sure.No one would be suspicious seeing them doingthis it was sure.Pretty soon Mic-Hollester threw it an extra good and hard, Starring tried to catch it, but was not much of a try, for he missed pur po sely and it went flying out in the direction of the river and dropped.It went in the long grass.And then is when Starring had good luck.Because he didn't have to go five feet from that care before he found something.so you see he didn't get off the track f of their bee line raid at all.He made believe he was hunting for the ball and in about ten seconds, good night right there near the car were footprints different even than other footprints.He could see them as plain as day.They came from the direction of the river too, and not in a bee line way they had come.But just the same they came from the river all right.Without elsewhere there were other evidei evidences.

"I can't find the pesky old ball"Starring shouted, and it was the truth for though he looked in the grass to find it to replac e on the car he couldn't so save his life."Why don't you throw straight when you're throwing.Come on lets go on ahead and make the enemy give us some ice cream cones.We should worry."

"I like this old car"George West shouted."If we leave it maybe the wind will carry it up."

"Let's tie it with our ru rope and come back here and eat our supper in it on the way home."shouted Nell."After that it can spin around till its gets dizzy for all we care.What do you say."

"Starring could just hear her saying; "Sh-h-h-h"to the others.

"That's Nell Blue Bell all over, she always has her wits about her.Starring said he would carry his around with him too if he had any, but claimed he didn't Sometimes Jack Saunders has good ideas, but he doesn't carry them with him because he has so much else to carry. But Nell Blue Bell h as a very dandy brain any one would say that for her.He saw right away what he was driving at that is what she was driving at.

"That's a crackerjack idea."Starring shouted."Let's eat our supper here on the way back.We'll tie the car and then we'll loosen it again afterwards.Come on lets hurry up.This is a nice lonely place to eat in, and nobody anywhere around to bother us since now it is our own territory."

"Hurrah."they alll shouted .

So that was the way they did.As they went away they were all careful not to look up, and they talked about different things as if they didn't know there was anybody up in that wheel at all.And if anybody ever tells you that boy and girlscouts really can't catch Glandelinians except in battle and in camps you can tell them th y can do it in amusement parks too.They didn't wish to force him down and take him along because they didn't want to bot; bother with prisoners and usually boy and girlscouts don't give quarter anyhow.

They would have used more drastic measures but they were not sure whoth r he was a real for or not.They decided to let the soldiery discover that.

"I hope we're not mista en and that he is a glandelinian anyway"starring said to Jack."You're not the only one that goes up in the air."

"It shows what girl and boyscouts can do."Jac said."We bound him with a strong rope didn't we."

"Absolutely"said Starring-"Only the rope is quite a ways below him."

"What difference does that make!"he wanted to know."He's held by ropes isn't he.Can you deny that! Do you think we should climb up the wheel to tie him into the car!"

"I guess guess you're right."George West said.

"What are we going to do now."!Hunt Manning wanted to know."

"We're going to press the raid, and keep our eyes on that tree."Starring said "and continue in a bee line."It will take more than a whole crowd of enemy soldiers to get me off the straight path.Don't look back whatever you do."

It must have been about five oclock then, anyway it must have been after four because everybody was getting hungry.It's strenous work catching spies.The tree up on the ridge was all kind of red even though the sky wasn't bright over there and it looked fine.That was the time Starring liked best, when the sun begins to get red.He was wondering if he could see his house or headquarters in the christian camp when he and his followers got up on the ridge.

Pretty soon they were climbing over the old amusement park fence and then they had to just cut straight across fields over which the persuing infantry had gone till they came to little Topsy.Before they got there all the windows in the houses looked as if there were red lights shining in them.That was a sign the sun was beginning to go down.when the windows look brightlike t hat in March you'll know its after five oclock.Little Topsy town was not so big and what was left of the enemy who had hastily abandoned their burning camps wer e flying through it.Now when they got to Little Topsy they marched in formation just the same as they did in Alhambra, two rows of fourteen scouts each. Starring marched ahead with his official staff, and they let Mic-Hollester go some dist n distance ahead of them all with the standard because he didn't have any boyscout uniform.I'll bet Little Topsy freed of the enemy felt like BelGium relieved of the Germans, when it saw the boy and girlscouts coming in a big troop.They had to go across one lawn, but the Glandelinians there who had intended to defend that spot "Told the boy and girlscouts it was all right." That is whether it was all right or or not.The Glandelinians had nothing to say. T They made a slow retreat.The word slow is spelled"S-w-i-f-t".Starring captured a Glandelinian officer and Jack started to give the man a lecture about boy and girlscouts but the soldier pu l pulled his hat down over his face and wouldn't listen.He rattled like an old junk wagon, and one of the girlscouts said he loo looked like Don Quixot e.Starring said he didn't know much about that fellow, but if he ever met him he was going to apologize to him for what she said.At that the Glandelinian officer glared at Starring, and Starring glared back so badly that the Glandelinian got cowed and turned his face the other way.

"One more glare at me like that"said Starring"And you won't go any further with us whole and entire.We don't usually give quarter, and you can thank the good God whom you hate that we gave you quarter."

Next they came to main street named after the water main.A goodly number of Glandelinians were in the town but they fled as you call it "pot haste."They "said" Starring and his followers could have the town to themselves. Everybody amongst the relieved population was staring at the boy and girlscouts. The boy and girlscouts halted for a time on the villiage green.There was a big band stand on that villiage green and a whole crowd of the boy and girlscouts climbed up into it.Jack Saunders looked mighty proud.He felt less proud than he looked.In fact he didn't feel proud at all.A lot of grown people were standing around too, staring at the boy and girlscouts and talking in wonder.It was evident it was the first time these town folk had ever seen Abbiecannian boy and girlscouts.

"One of the men said;

"Are any of the Glandelinians going to be spared."

"This one is if he behaves himself"said Starring"But if there are any ice cream cones in this town, they're going to di e a horrible death.I'm going to have my troop eat them alive."

"Won't they resist"put in one of the little girls of the town.

"I hope so"said Starring."I like things that resist, and don't run like these cowardly Glandelinian soldier kittens do."

Everybody laughed at this and Starring then said to Mic-Hollester;

"Plant our banners in the villiage green "And all gather around your gallent leader."

The same man then said;

"How do your boy and girlscouts feel about peanmut brittle.We'll give you these for nothing as you have earned it by chasing our enemies out of this territory."

"I didn't chase them."Said Jack."They ran when they s w us coming."

"All the same you're the cause of it.How about some peamut brittle."?

"No peamut brittle can get past us."Tim told him."We eat it alive."

"Even if it doesn't resist?"put in the same girl again.

"Maybe it will resist if it is hard enough."Said Jack.

Oh boy there was some excitement.The next thing they knew a good size box of peamut brittle was going around.There was a crowd of people all around watching and reading what it said on their standards n and looked carefully and sizing up the color of their uniforms and little girls especially were looking steadily at the queer heart shaped hats the girlscouts wore.Most always that is the way with people when they see scouts, even in Abbiecannia.Som ebody kicked a grocery box over to where the boy and girlscouts were and the man called;

"Speech.Speech!"

"I got Starring got up on the box and said;

"Don't be afraid anybody,the Glandelinians are not going to hurt you."

A girl of about nine or half years old who looked to be unaturally pretty to Mic-Hollester was standing there and she said;

"The idea.Did you ever hear of such a thing!Hu rt us!Do you think we're afraid of Glandelinians when a big patrol of boy and girlscouts are here!"

"Tim said;n not recognizing her;

"You know not what you say girl.We have so far demostated the whole country in possession of the Glandelinians from the christian camps to this spot and the Glandelinians gave us some stout resistance at intervals.If you think Glandelinians cant hurt you when or in spite of us ask the Vivian Girl Princesses.They'll tell you.The only thing we've left alive is the grass, and even that we trod under our feet.Butdon't think the Glandelinians are to be trifled with."

"They're just as invincible as we are when they get a start"Jack shouted.

"don't be overconfident little girl"put in Jack Saunders friend Jean."Do you know what that is!"

"Do you think I haven't got a dictionary Miss Jean Sanders."She said.

"How do you know my name."

"It's all right."the girl said with a giggle."I'll let you know why later on.You boys and girls here don't seem to recogni ze us and these other girls either.We're disguised and you do not know us in spite of our voices."

"Silence "said Tim.Take a deserit.Where if the infantry that just passed through here!"

"Somebody shouted;

"The christian raiders of the infantry didn't come here.But the police war department of this town is here.He's home eating his supper.Do you want to see him."

"No"said Starring, "I want him to come and see us.Can't you see from our sign that we're on a bee line raid, and clearing your territory off the crazy enemy."!

Somebody else shouted above the din.;

"He's at supper.Do you really have to see him."

"No "said Starring.The army and navy will do just as well, we're not particular. We could come back for the man we left there later after our r i raid is over but he'll then have a long stay up there.Wait till I consult with my official staff."

Yet he couldn't understand what his official staff said, because his mouth was full of peamut brittle.

"Here's the box Jack, eat that too."Said Starring.

Then Tim himself said good and loud;

"As we didn't wish to do it ourselves we a have an important communication to your military police department.We believe we have captured a Glandelinian spy;"----

"We'v e got him bound with fetters."Jack shouted as the crowd was growing bigger.Good night, that seemed to be the end of Starring.He was superceded like a general in the third grade--I mean in history.There was Tim standing on the big grocery box shouting through an old phonograph horn somebody gave him at the top of his loud voice.Fenrod had a terribly loud voice for his age but Tim could beat him ten miles.A little way off Starring could see a military officer with soldiers coming across the green.Tim had the floor; he had the whole green; probably he had the whole town.Anywh anyway he had all the peamut brittle that was left.

"Weve probably caught a Glandelinian spy."he shouted."He's got fr foot prints. He's up in the top car of the ferris wheel in Riverview park.He's bound with ropes."

"Who put him up there."!somehof somebody shouted.

"We did."Tim shouted.

"What's he doing up there!"a man called.

"I don't know, but I wouldn't like to be him."Tim shouted."We foiled him. Hettie Kauffman captured one too."

"She did not"said on eof the pretty girls standing there."She said Jack Saunders did."

"Well he fired in ambush at a patrol and got away;"--

"you mean he thought he got away."said Starring.

"Well we foiled him too."Tim shouted.

"The man in the ferrish wheel ought to be wrapped up in tin-foil. "said Starring. The officer now coming up said;

"What's all the excitement about!"

"Are you of the military department!"Asked Starring.

"He answered;"Well I think I am."

"Well you've got to be sure of it."Jack shouted."The Glandelinians will not deal wi gently with the civilized population."

"Do you think we're afraid of the Glandelinians!"the same girl said very scornful like.

"Well they're general Federals and;;"

"Do you think we're afr i afraid of general Federal!"she said."His nose sounds like a bugle when sh he snores."

Timothy Groveton pointed the big horn right plunk at her and shouted through it;

"Do you think his nose is a bugle or an elephants trunk."

Starring, and the girls too near nearly died laughing.

Another very pretty little girl said;

"If I had a nick name like general Federals I wouldn't dare talk about dealing roughly with the civilian population."

"That name has been fastened to him by his own name"Tim yelled.

"He only rents it."Hunt Manning said.

"His right name is; General Tomas Long hose nose Pugnose Federal department"Darger said.

"what's your name!"Tim hollered at her through the horn.He had to there was so much noise.
"I'm Daisy Vivian, and these are my sisters."she said.So there friend Timothy.And I'm a little princess."
"Girls are afraid of snakes."shouted Hunt Mic-Hollester.
"You're wrong, not in this country mr Smarty."She shot back."And they're not afraid of foriegners."
"They're afraid of those things in my country."he yelled."didn't you ever hear of wild canary birds!Well you're one of them!"
"Shut up"said Tim"or I'll bolt you w one.Can't you see they're the Vivian Girls.Don't start arguments.You'll know them by and by and will cry your eyes out with remorse for what you say to them."
By that time everybody was screaming.Even the whole police department was laughing.The officer said;
"Well now what's this all about?Have you youngsters been dreaming or what!"
"Well"said Starring"You guessed right the second time."
Probably if it had not been for Tim that fellow with the "College professor" hat would be on the top of the wheel untill he starved.He said to all his followers this time with abrupt command and meant for every body in the town too this time showing his full aurthority and not joking;
"Silence everybody I command it and no one exempted who ever is here."
There was silence and then Tim told the officer all about what happened at the olf old ferrish wheel and how Starring had found foot prints there and how they showed that some one had come from the river.He said he wasn't sure whether it was really a foe, or some christian spy in disguise, but that for the sake of the cause it was best to take possession of him and find out who he really was.Most of the people that crowded around listening were serious.Two or three men said they guessed it was a spy all right for not during a raid of this sort would a christian spy bevin this territory.The officer said they'd soon find out and detailed his soldiers to go and fetch the me man.
A lot of people too said they were going to see what happened, and a number of the patrol of boy and girlscouts wanted to go back too because one thing they didn't see Glandelinian spies g t ca t captured every day.Maybe whole weeks might go by and you'll never see one again captured in a ferrish-wheel. But that shows how you never can tell.A person might chase even a Glandelinian s y on a merry go round and never catch him.
"We should worry about the Glandelinian spy"Starring told the others as he turned his prisoners over to the town folk."Because we'v e got troubles of our own.We've got to make the next hill yet, and then the woods up the ridge and we'll have to go slow and use our compass in there.Look at that big tree waiting for us up there to clear that territory of the Glandelinians"he said."It's got all dressed up for us since we started."
And indeed it did look that way because now it was all gold.But anyway anyone can find out that gold isn't the only color.There are blue and green and yellow, and strawberry, and orange and banana and grapefruit and peaches and russet apples,--those are my own favorites.
Most of the people of the town went back to the park with the military police department.One of those litt le girls had been listening to George West telling the military police captian about everyhting and so she said to our young hero;
"I'm not critiri ng you but sure you don't call that binding a spy with ropes do you!With him at the top of the wheel, and you down at the bottom."
"Sure I do indeed"said George West, "that is what you call distant binding.That shows how much you know about scouting.I suppose you girls don't know you can signal for miles and miles.Can't you do other things by distance too!"
"That(That's a fine ogum argument"Timothy Groveton said."You boys don't know the half of it, and I can not only provevit by Walter Starring or Penrod but by many others as well.I'll bet not one of you boys could answer correctly a distant signal the girls could immediately set up."
"You're right Tim"said the tallest girl.
"I can't believe that unless I see it."said Mic-Hollester."
"Oh mercy no"said the tallest girl very sarcastic like."I know you very well even though you do not know me or my sisters.You are Henry George Mic-Hollester. I must say indeed you were v ry brave to kill that wooden figure.We Abbiennian girls are not afraid of snakes like your foriegn girls are, but I'm certain now I'd be afraid of a wooden figure.Tell me did you or any of your foriegn boy friends ever kill a reg doll!"
Her sisters started to titter.
"Was it my fault if that black man was made of wood!"Mic-Hollester said.
"Oh mercy no"she said(Jennie Vivian is the tallest).But when you were binding the poor spy why didn't you climb up the trestle work to do it?Were you afraid he would bite you.He was only a hundred feet or so away you know.Are you foriegn boys afraid of mice too!"

"No we're not afraid of mice."Mic-Hollester said."and we foriegn boys are not afraid of bugs either.Girls are afraid of June bugs."
"Not our kind."she said."and that can be proven.We're not afraid of any bugs and spiders either.I cat ch spiders for collection for Insect Acamedies."
"Boyscouts are not afraid of anything, they don't care what color it is;;;"
"Purple, or lavender or pale white, or dark black, what do we care!"Starring said."Stop arguing with the girl I command it."
"But who are they!"demanded Mic-Hollester.
"You'll find out."piped up the smallest of gir the girls"in proper time."
"Do you see that hill away over there in the east!"Mic-Hollester shouted at her.
"Yes I do"she said"but you need not shout, I'm not deaf." her sisters again tittered.
"Well that's Vivian Girls hill as one of the soldiers told me."
"Oh is it."said the oldest girl."Well we know it by St Johns hill."
"Well they say it is named on honor of the Princesses now because they're head qua ters is on it.That's miles away from here.We came from there in a bee line raid.Do you think that we let anything stand in our way."
"Where do you get we!"said Darger."You never came from there.We picked you up in the park.Use common sense."
The girls giggled but Mic-Hollester went on"Well we-Re ----we-re invincible. Houses, and the enemys camps we go through them.Even lots of other boy and girl scouts followed us as reinforcements and the fires you see we set, so now you can tell.Rivers----do you think the Aronburgs nun River stopped us!"
"Aronburgs River"said the next tallest one(that was Violet."You're sick Henry.The Aronburgs nun River is one hundred miles southeast of here."
"Well whatever river it is it didn't stop us.Do you know what the points of the compass are!"
"Yes "an id the smallest girl(Daisy)"they ought to be sharp."
"Well we came straight west just as straight as an arrow.Now we're going up on that ridge where that big tree is.If you want to follow us, you can."
"Oh can we.That's just grand"said the little girl looking kind of funny at him.
"Yes, and you can see just how we do it.You'll see us--you'll see us go right through houses."
"Throu gh houses"said the one called Catherine."what sort of a ghost are you!"
"I'm not a ghost.You don't understand what I'm saying. and---"
"Yes we do.You onl v said you go through houses; and we'd like to see how you do it.Only spirits can do that you know and maybe you're one."
"Well maybe I am and maybe not.I'm not blaming girls that they don't have adventures;" Timothy Groveton pushed him and gavehim a scornful warning look while the tallest said;
"Oh isn't that just too sweet.Girls don't have adventures.If you only knew."
"And who are you going to kill next!"another one of the girls Hettie wanted to know."I've got some Dolls at home I do not use any more.You can kill them with pleasure."
Starring hid his face behind his handkerchief for he could not control his laughter. Violet and her sisterswunintentionally were making a boom out of the for gn boy. They were doing this to try him.This was a test and he didn't know it. No boy or girl can get in as a scout if they cannot pass a test.So far however he Sa was holding out,---second best. But he finally got back at them saying;
"I don't want to argue with you girls.Maybe you did see adventures and maybe you did not, but from what I heard and read can you girls dare tell me you went through what the Vivian Girls did!"
"That is for you to find out"Piped the smallest with a giggle.
"What are you girls giggling about!"
"Never you mind."
"Well do you see that tree off there on the ridge!"He asked the tallest.We have to climb right up there.There may be snakes up there too."
"Oh isn't that terrible!"she said."And we want to capture them to use their skin to make our un f uniform dress belts."
"I'm not saying you can't do things"the boy said"Because girls know how to cook and sew I have to admit that.And all girlscouts are good fighters.But I'll be able to prove it by showing you papers and things I have saved up that the Princesses, Violet, and her sisterscas they're called, the daughters of your mighty and Good Emperor can beat all you Abbiennian girls and boys combined to smash.When it comes to Violet and her sisters being-----"
"To being invincible!"she said.
"Invincible is nothing in compared to what they are.You're nothing in compar ison to them."
"Oh is that so!Do you know the Princesses."She asked.
"I do by what I have read and heard.I never saw them."

"You never saw them!"she exclaimed."Thank heaven for that.I heard they're terribly afraid of little boys with saws."

"No you just shut one eye and look at that big tree up there."Mic-Hollester said ignoring her remarks."Do you notice that long shed at the edge of this green. I see it is full of Glandelinians making ready for another fight.Do you see how it is right in a Bee line with that tree."

"Bee line.What bee lined it up!"she said.You couldn't go through that shed. Those Glandelinians would mow you down."

"Well whatever we they do we've got to go right through that long shed.Do you think we'll go around it?"

"I would if I werevyou!"

"No, we'll go right plunk through the middle of it, no matter what. That is what a bee line raid means.That is why we had the military police come to us instead of us going to him.See!"

Allthe girls began to laugh while the tallest controling her laughter said;

"Isn't that just wonderful.You foriegn boys are certainly grand."

"That's nothing"Mic-Hollester said."We Foriegners do harder things than that. My parents were Americans and they're invincible.The Americans of the United States can lick every nation in the world."

They all began to laugh again.

"Then Starring said to Mic-Hollester;

"Well as long as we can't take this capt ured villiage with us we'll have to leave it here, I suppose.I hope it will be here when we get back.I guess I'll leave Mic-Hollester to ----

"Maybe Starring if he bound it with t ropes"one of the next to the smallest girls said(Hettie."

"It would be just a good deal waste of good rope."Starring said."He could stand a rock on the tow town that ought to hold it there.Come on official staff "he said and get busy."You'll never win in an friendly argument with them.Get bust.You fellow fall into line.The next assault is on that house that Mic-Hollester pointed out.I'll let him lead the attack.Am I right."

They all lined it up with the tree so as to make sure.

"Now you watch us."said Mic-Hollester to the girls.

"Oh we'll watch you, specially you."Jennie said.Then they all began to laugh again.

"Say, if you have patrols in the girls outs"said Mic-Hollester "yours al ought to be called the Laughing Hyenas.What in the world is the idea.Am I something funny because I'm a foriegner."!

They didn't answer only just stood there giggling.They were disguised and only Tim and Starring recognized them.They had been spying on the enemy and came back successful and wanted to join the raid.

"They ought to have a merit badge for giggling in the Girlscouts."he said.

"We can't help it."said the one who was Joice."We think you are fupny, so funny."

"You're villiage isn't so big if it comes to that."Mic-Hollester said.

"No, but it doesn't belong to us."one of them said, laughing all the while.

"Yes and it hasn't got feoffee pots and frying pans a nd old phonographs hanging all over it."another of them said."You look like a junk wagon."

"That shows how much you know about scouting."The boy shouted."no you know that scouts are supposed to cook their own meals!"

"And play their own music."Joice herself said."Do you take victrola lessons!"

"He plays the shoe horn, also the gas pipe"said Starring.He can even play on "boys lif e"that his own official organ.

"she said-

"Most canary birds are musical.He looks like one."

"Yes"Mic-Hollester said;

"And parrots can laugh too."

"Maybe we are parrots and maybe we are not."she said."You yourself ought to call it an A.R.C Raid instead of a Bee line Raid.If you're going to pass those houses we'd like to see you do it."

"Everybody even the enemy falls for the scouts--and in all the houses, and the houses fall too."Mic-Hollester yelled.

The tallest girl just giggled and said;

"Oh isn't that just wonderful!"

Starring finally gathered his army of invasion and shouted;

"Scouts I have squinted yonder tree with my trusty right eye and I find we'll have to cross resisted territory again.We have to go through that long shed over there as Mic-Hollester says.Take a good look at that house you'll see it has an inside as well as an outside."

"I can't see no inside."Darger shouted.

10 465

"Can you not see the outside!" Starring asked him."Well the inside is about the same as the outside.There are two stories in thatlong shed and we'll have to let the enemy know we want it instead."

"Mic-Hollester shouted;

"To show you Foriegners are invincible I'll go ahead and lead the attack and prove to the enemy we want to go through hey.Because I know what to do."Then he said to the girls;"You can watch me if you want to."aybe sometime you'll be on a bee line raid and want to go through houses and sheds and then you'll know just how it is done."

"One of them said;

"Oh thank you so much."

"The pleasure is ours."Starring told her."If the whole civilized population wants to follow us in the attack, what do we care."

Then he said to his followers; "Ready go."

They all deployed across the green with Mic-Hollester ahead of them and the girls coming along behind laughing still.You couldn't blame them because Mic-Hollester looked funny--very brave and bold.They were allstopped behind trees near the walk of two houses by a peppering fire of rifles.one of them was a dan dandy big house it lookedlikeone of those houses that had a hall running straight through the back.The boy himself had led the attack as far as he dared to go.

"That is one thing you have to learn when a person is a scout"he called back"not to be afraid.

All of a sudden the Glandelinians rushed to the counter attack and good night nurse.There was the biggest Glandelinian column ever seen.Itwas about six hundred yards long and only the fierce steady fire of the boys and girls to which violet and her sisters joined in stopped the counter attack.The leader who was dropped had a sort of uniform on with big brass buttons.

"Good night."Hunt Manning said"That's one counter attack we didn't figure on.

""Foiled"said Starring.

"Good night"said Hunt M anning."That's one Gl ndelinian troop we didn't figure on. "

"I guess that's one of the gray hills"said Starring."I wonder how those e men got out of my geography. The Glandelinian soldier however whowas wounded with the brass buttons was captured by some of the boy scouts and he sure was a big one.Jad he stood up St arring himself though quite tall would have looked like a kew pie doll in front of that officer.The man just glared at him and then he said good and loud;

"Why do you little brats dare raid us for, whatchue want here you brats!"

"Jack Saunders said;

"We---sh--we--do you think we'd t ll you."

The prionsar said;

"Of courseyou little brats won't .whatchue want here!"

"You a prisoner talk to us that way"said Jack even though the prisoner glared downr at the boy as if he were going to eat him."Look here you man.You want to get shot do you.We'll clear every one of youout of this territory sooner or later.We'll clear you out of here double quick, and we could have done it now if only Penrod, or the Vivian G r Girl Princesses were here.They could do it I tell you."

The girls giggled, and there stood Jack looking at them so t of suspicious line."what are you laughing about"he said almost sternly.

But they didn't answer but drew back a little."she knew Jack Jennie did and when he didn't know you he was not to be trifled with.They may kid Mic-Hollester just now but they knew Jack. It was all right he if he knew them but because of their disguise he didn't and therefore they didn't like that angry glitter in his eyes.

"If you girls can't act with more common sense"he went on"I'll place you under arrest and haul you before the princesses."IEver since Mic-Hollester or even I speak of the doings of the Vivian Girl Princesses you either titter or giggle like a bunch of laughing Jackasses.What's the big a idea.Are you silly or something."

Starring ca e up to Jack and taking hims him aside whispered something into his ear.

"Oh you don't say.And they've fooled us all the time.Well the jokes on us. Well let it continue on Mic-Hollester then"said Jack."I'd like to see the fun. S eethey're laughing at Mic-Hollester."

Oh boy you should have heard those girls laugh.Jennie Vivian said;

"Isn't that just too provoking!Though he is a prisoner he didn't seem to be a bit afraid of you did he Jack dear.!"

"Don't you know sometimes scouts too have to use str ategy"Mic-Hollester said."Did you think I was going to make the boys and girls just force their way through in the face of a counter attack.Don't you know a scout has to be careful and cautious."

"It was no good of you to stand behind a tree and not hurt those Glandelinians!" she saud.

"Scouts are--they-re cautious."Mic-Hollester said.

"Yes"she said"but you know they're invincible.You told us that yourself.I suppose you'll just go and lead an attack like that agaij again."!

"We take turns doing things like that"Mic-Hollester said.

"The general ap ointe his leaders to do that."Starring told her."I appoint George West, and Darger Benton to lead a attack from tree to tree against those Glandelinians."

These yh three boys tried it leading the boys and girls here and there cautiously but though they suffered no loss themselves, and yet inflicted a great loss upon the Glandelinians they were finally driven back to shelter by another counter attack.

"I can't do something that is impossible"Darger said.

"I'm sorry "George West said"but we have been repulsed.Those Glandelinians are as invincible as we are.I claim exemption from leading another attack."

"You're a fine pair"said Starring."I appoint Will Dawson, and Warde Mic-Hollesteron to go there and give the enemy a hot reception ."

These boys did try it and despite what they said, the former other officers again tried it simultaneously but it was of no avail.The Glandelinians repulsed this attack too.

"Some bunch of warriors"said Starring.What are we going to do.Abandon our raid and go back to the camp."

"If we had some cannons"---Mic-Hollester stated;

"Well go and get a coupl of cannons that carry water."Said Starring.

"Isn't it exasperating!"one of the girls said, though she meant it this time.

"Those Glandelinians surely know how to fight."

"Can't you wait a little while!"Mic-Hollester shouted."This war is young yet,and so is this raid.That shows what you know about history!"

"Oh yeah"said one of the girls."Say boy can you tell me where the city of Angelinia Agathia is!"

"I sure can.It is onnthe boundary line between Calvorinia State and Angelinia. The city of Big Girl Knool if fifty miles northwest of it."

"Correct. Do you still claim to be invincible."

"Sure we do"Mic-Hollester said."But so are the Glandelinians, and the Vivian Girls will tell you so too.But of course everybody--a lot of people know that girls and whitten womenwomen are helping a lot in this war---everybody knows that.We wouldn't be mad if you made a suggestion, or would go and ask Violet and h sisters to help us."

The tallest girl said;

"Oh I hav not a single thing to suggest.There is no time to suggest any thing.We believe in action.Actions speaks louder than suggestions.If you are really ready to admit you're defeated I'll make a proposal.It isn't a suggestion, its a proposal."

"Proposals in some ways are much better than suggestions."Mic-Hollester said.

"Well"she said"If you will admit that you are balked;"

"Even, even the Vivian Girls were balked once in a while, were they not!" Mic-Hollester shouted.

"Well"said Starring"it doesn't look as if those Glandelinians are going to surrender that shed and positions and camps beyond.If we could get some flanking party past them to the rest in the big house ---"

"Like they did with cannons"Mic-Hollester said;

"Yes but you see the shutters are closed."she said "Girlscouts are observant It looks as if there were no one in that house just at present but those Horrid Glandelinians."

"I'll accept any proposition myself"said Starring looking akast at Mic-Hollester who still wanted to argue."What do you propose.I know who you are girls even though the others don't and Heaven knows(he surprised Mic-Hollester by the last words)I'd like to see the Glandelinian general who can get the best of you girls yet.I'll accept any proposition you make."

Then Jennie said;

"I know you Starring, and you'd do anything.But this proposition is to your foriegner friend Mic-Hollester."Then she turned to him and said;

"I propose to lead you to victory if you in person will print on a c ardboard banner that you were saved from disaster by the girlscouts of Abbiannia, and keep that on your banner till you get back home or go with the Abbiannian boyscouts to the camp.If you won't accept this proposition you cannot be a boyscout.The Vivian Girls are more invincible than you say but you'll have to be tried by them before you can be initiated into the scout troop."

"I'd like to see you and your girl friends dare lead us to victory first."He said."

"Oh you dare us eh.Some nerve on our part.As if we're afraid!"

"Say you mean to tell me you girls are not afraid to lead us in a charge against those dare devil Glandelinians!"Mic-Hollester said."Do you think I'd let you---a boyscout has to be chivalrous.I might poke fun at girls sometimes and say funny things but anyhow girls are girls and I'd kill any one who harmed one of you.We boys are trained to protect women over in America and Abbiannian women and girls are still better and saintly and ---and--and--"

"Give me your sabre."she said and she jerked it out of his scabbard.

"You and your girl friends better look out what you are doing."The boy said. "Do you girls want to get killed."

"She swung the sabre in the air just like Carrie Nation or Joan of Arc and she said;

"Everybody follow me.Your infantry has gone on ahead and that will help us a lot.

"Mic-Hollester said;

"Hey girls, you had better look out what you are doing."

"Don't be a coward"she said."Fall in line everybody."

Indeed Mic-Hollester thought that girl was crazy.Up and onward she lead them her sisters daringly placing themselves in front, one waving a flag she took with all the rest of them after her and her sisters.M-Mic-Hollester scared to death that something might happen to them threw himself then some distance in advance and acted crazy as he fired the pistols he had so fast that if Glandelinians aimed at the little girls, they never had time to shoot. Starring was ready to rush to their help at any minute.They went across that wide lawn as if they were stalking a bird firing fast and furious.The Glandelinians opened a terrific fire but the bullets went wild and Violet screamed;

"Give them hand grenades.They're our foes".

The boy and girlscouts however didn't need to obey.At that command the enemy broke and ran and the charge came up to the very sheds.Violet just hit the door a good rap with her hatchet and broke in.The daring of the girls terrified the Glandelinians and they abandoned the shed without a single shot being fired and the girls went on through heading for the house.They then went across that porch again as to say as if stalking a bird.Boy Starring was sort of shaky fearing one of the little girls would go down mortally wounded for the firing from the house was terrific.Starring got his man at a window and dropped him.Then one of the boys hurled a grenade through, while the Vivian Girls hit the door with rifle butts.

I guess the Glandelinians within the building must have known it was the crowd of boy and girlscouts led by the dare devil girls because the resistance was not long.All of a sudden the door was crashed open.

I guess that big desperate Glandelinian army of resisting soldiers must have known it was the crowd of boy and girlscouts because they didn't after all resist as was ex ec expected.Nevertheless Starring pictured h the Glandelinians getting madder and madder every second to think of being forced to run before a lot of "Little Brats".

One man was ready to jump from the porch and would have done so at a distance of thirty yards had he sufficient leaping legs to do so.He however was shot down before he could even jump.A soldier by the name of Peewee had one leg already for a good start ed but he got stabbed and wounded.West and Darger was the first to be closest to the railing, and the Glandelinians were retreating in disorder. The boy and girlscouts were already filling up the entrance to the doorway and in pushed Jennie waving Mic-Hollesters small sabre.They all followed after her and the only one who was a little bit nervois was Mic-Holl ster.He was not scared for himself, he was scared because the girls he fharedmay come to harm.

"You'd ---you'd better look out."He whispered to Jennie."Some treacherous Glandelinian soldiers can lock us in here and set the place afire.Maybe---you can't tell(not yell) maybe some glandelinians may remain and meditate treachery.What--what are you going to do!"

"We're going to devaste the enemys territory to as much extent as friend Starring wishes usto do Private Canary bird Miv Mic-Hollester."she said."Now you see what the girlscouts of Abbiannia can do.Are they not as good as your own kind.Maybe sometime you'll want to know how to break through hostile territory and then you'll remember Princess Jennie Vivian won't you!Do you think I'm afraid of a beastly lot of scare cat soldiers who run away from uniform dressed children."!

"Who is Princess Jennie Vivian!You trying to fool me.You'd better not let the Vivian Girl Princesses hear you say that."

"Oh they wouldn't mind"she said, and her sisters started to giggle.

"You-D--You-d better look out."Mic-Hollester said."Safty first for girls you know."

As they went through the hall he kept looking all around as if he expected to see sharpshooters behind all the doors aiming at the little girls.However it was a dandy house with a nice big wide hall and it had a mooses head for a hat rack.Some of the boys were pretty scared fearing that something would happen to Violet, and her sisters .....

Mic-Hollester walked on tiptoe through the hall and he kept whispering to Starringp-

"This is just like------it's like for them girls to walk into a trap.Girls are not only brave, they're br vbrave to recklessness.They'd better look out. Do you hear a footstep upstairs and more firing somewhere?I hear a bell ringing. I bet some cornered Glandelinian is calling for help hey."

Yet the girl led the way into a dandy big dinning room and then all her sisters began laughing again.

Jennie said;

"We'll take everything there is to eat in the pantry .My brave army of girl and boyscouts must be fed."

"I'm not so hungry"said Mic-Hollester.

Starring laughed.It was the first time he had ever heard him admit that.

Nevertheless she said;

"You are too afraid for the safty of us.If there is any kind of bird seed in this house you shall have it.Sit down Canary bird dear."

Mic-Hollester sat down on the edge of a chair looking all around, good and scared for he was afraid some Glandelinians must turst in and surprise them and carry away the girls before they could do anything.He said;;;

"It's----it's in-----it)s in--- - it)s in ----it says in the scout hand book that we have no gihht to be reckless;;;; "

She waved the sabre and she said;;;

"The scout handbook!what scount handbook.Ho,ho.A mere scrape of paper."

She was awful funny.

Miv Mic-Hollester said ;

"We didn't mean to stay here.)---all we wanted was to go through;----"

"And you shall after you fill up.Do you eat pie?"she said.

"Yes"he said---"but maybe--but maybe we had better start."

"Why is everybody so scared that something will happen to us."!

They didn't answer and they were all sitting around the dining room.They felt a l l felt kind of shaky.They thought that Mic-Hollester every minute was going to draw his gun and shoot at an imaginary object bnear the open door.All of a sudden George West(he's a fiend for noticing things-) he said--

"Little girls , us boy and girlscouts here have to hand it to you---you have done a good turn, that is sure.This house defended desperately by Glandelinians looked like a hard proposition.All we have to do now is push on and some of us will need to climb over that fence in the back.We'll all admit after all that you are heroines all right.But there's something on the back of one of you that makes me suspicious.So there's one thing I'd like to ask you.There's a knapsack handing over the back of the smallest of you and it has D.V. engraved on it.And not only that your shapes and sizes are peculiar and that also makes me suspicious and also the way you act.Maybe scouts are not so much as warriors all the time, but they're observant.I was wondering if you know whose initials are.!Are you not the Vivian Girls in disguise!"

All the girls then started laughing.

"You are the princesses,"Mic-Hollester started shouting."And this is your own house or headquarters.That is why you wanted to recapture it.Now you see scouts are observant.What did y tell you!W".

"She said;

"We are the Princesses in disguise as you say but this is not our own headquarters-so there friend Canary Bird Mic-Hollester."

"Since you are the Princesses I'll be as gentle as a Canary Bird"he said.

"who se head quarters is it!" "Goerge West said.

"It belongs to general Federal in person at least it did before we came."she said!

"No sooner said than stung. "Starring told West.

"What difference does it make whose headquarters it is as long as we go throught through it."Hunt Manning said."We have to give you girls credit anyway. Only the Vivian Girls can do anything."

"Is general M Federal home!"Mic-Hollester asked her.

"No"she said"Nobody home but ourselves.Are you afraid of general Federal!"

"Oh yes I am---- very much.He killed my little sister two months ago and I'm so scared of him that I'd like to be able to sling shot a stone into his head.I remember him well.My father also met him and would like to settle accounts.Anyway since you girls are safe I found out---- that I'm--kind of t hat I'm hungrier than I thought I was"he went on.

"Oh sure"said Starring laughing"Your appetite is like a cats----it always comes back."

And believe me that was the only time in the known life of Henry Mic-Hollester that Starring everknew him to lose his a ppetite.Even then it was only four minutes.George West claimed it was three minutes and a half, but whats the did difference!He got it back anyway.

Now comes the part of our Bee Linoraid that I the aurthor like best, because the boy andgirlscouts had to go through woods and open country and see the t errified enemy flso before them.Houses and villiages and encampments full of stubbornly resisting Glandelinians are all right but when you're fighting such soldiers me for a good large tree.A whole stronger troop of boy and girlscouts were following Starring now, and there were no buildings or anything like that ahead, and outside of distant firing and conflagrations in encampments with flames leaping hundreds of feet high it seemed somewhat quiet and lonely.Up to that time their raid and attacks had been sort of like a circus only more so.But pretty soon, oh boy it wasn't much like a circus because something pretty serious happened.It was beginning to get dusk by that time and one thing too about scouts the scouts always keep their words and they always keep their appetites.

Starring said to the girls;

"Bring down a bottle of shoe blacking and a so sponge brush and we'll let the whole world know that you are heroines."

"Yes"she said"But first we're going to have refreshments."

"No, we're first going to give you credit."said Starring.

But Joicee just laughed and said;

"No, you are just as brave as we are Starring.My proposition was to Mic-Hollester.Often you went on the same dreadful adventures with us and you saved us ev every time where we couldn't do it for ourselves."

"That's not your fault said Starring.I"If those Glandelinians were going to grab you now that would o so scare the life out of me that I'd fight to the last.I hope you never feed the Glandelinian prisners meat.even if I met general Federal in the Infernal regions I'd like to see him burn hotter."

So three of the girls, Jennie, Violet,and Angeline went upstairs and got a bottle of shoe blacking and a big piece of cloth.On this Starring printed on it good and plain-

"WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF THE VIVIAN GIRL PRINCESSES."

And he fastened that on a long stick.Then they had a dandy meal in that house.They all sat around the fining room as i eating refreshments and they had a good time.But they were surprisedvto see that Violet and her sisters declined the pies.They said they only liked apple and mince, others no.Mic Hollester showed them that a foriegner could eat anyway and he did not forget his grace before meals either.Even still, every time there was a noise near by he gave a start.Violet herself said she liked this portion of the christian lines.

Mic-Hollester asked;

"Were you ever in general Aronburgs Army.

"Yes"she said Angelinia Aronburg Until fa in command and she knew many more great gg girl scout leaders there."

"Do you know Miss-Jennie Turner!"he asked.

"She said"The idea.Who wouldn't.ghe's one of our best girl friends known and loves Angelinia Aronburg as if she were her sister."

"It's a good idea"said Starring."She can play tennie and base ball and four other boys sports,that girlscout general can.There are a lot of smart girlscouts in general Concentinian Aronburgs army.We got three of our own patrols in there too but unfrotunately only one of them are here."

"If you ever go on a hike to Angelinia Agathia"began George West when Mic-Hollester put in;

"Maybe the Princesses can't walk that far."

She just looked at him very scornful.

"If you ever come my way come and see us in our own headquarters"said Starring "we have been away most of the time but we also have a tent down by the river. Drop in if you are with your sisters ever down that way."

"Drop in the river!"said Jennie." Aren't you perfectly dreadful!"and she and her sisters lau ghed.

"The river is all right."Mic-Hollester said.

"Yes, for fishes"said Violet.

"But ain't you fishes"said Starring."Didn't the Glandelinians tie stones about you and throw you in a river and then they come and see you walking down the road tward them ten minutes afterwards.I never saw such a stampede in all my life. I guess they thought they saw ghosts or something."

Violet and her sisters laughed.

"I bet you have lots of fun y u boy and girlscouts"said Catherine.

"We eat it alive"Starring told her."There's a scarcity of fun within the christ ian lines, because we used it all up.That is why we have to explore the enemys territory like this.The next thing we're going to do is a zigzag raid."

"Didn't anybody ever tell you Starring that you're nearly as dangerousto the foe as our brother is?"said Angeline.

"Nobody has to tell us."said Starring"because we know it.Anyway I guess we had better be going now.I'll ask you little girls to complete this raid for us be in leadership and we'll give you all the credit."

They had dandy fun sitting around there talking.To everybody there the Vivian girls were all right perfectly good, but they were kind of funny ju jolly and full of cheer and fun, they couldn't help it from giggling all the time.And they sure know how to do good turns.Starring told them that he remembered the girlscout who stuck a stafty pin with the point up for a scout sign, and how he saw a Glandelinian officer stop to sit down on that stump. He said he believed he could hear him yell yet.But the girlscouts nevertheless are strong on being kind an and all that in Abbiaannia.And there little girls are lovely too.The Vivian Girls led them out acrosss the lawn in back and when Starring pointed out the big popular tree away up there on the north west ridge they declared they would lead on the rest of the raid, but that Starring deserves as much of the credit as they. Violet and her sisters said they were glad thdy they had boys like their brother and Starring and they were verybwilling to help him keep up the bee line raid to the finish.It was then near this time the serious occurance was to happen.As said before it was beginning to h get dusk by this time and there kind of like little stabs of dark red on top of the ridge.Away up on the peak of the big popular tree was a dab of red and all the rest of it was dark..It seemed awful clear against the sky that tree.And Starring kind of thought how all day long the late March Sun had been on a sort of Bee Line Hike going straight west.

"If the sun can do it we can do it in spite of the resisting enemy."Starring said to Violey.

"It would be nice up there under that tree in the dusk"she answered.I hope we can get ther e quicker enough so you boys can start a big fire.Then the camps of our own army can see that we're all right and have been successful.Because we'll have to come back around by the road and that would be easy.We could ride all the horses and our own we captured on the State Intersection road right up th r up there on the ridge and go straight to the christian encampments."

Now I the writer will tell you about the country from little Topsy to Western ridge.First it was easy across fields and from there the scattered Glandelinians fled onward without offering any resistance.Then they came to Richardson Hill.Gee whiz I don't know why the Glandelinians wanted to make any resistance there for butbHeavenly days they did, and how.The side nearest Little Topsy was not very steep but going down the other side was for that sort of the hill was sort of broken off like.Despite the resistance the boy anf girlscouts w couldn't understand that it would b b. some way down.

CHAPTER FOURTY FOUR

ALMOST A TRAGEDY.

WHAT THE BOY AND GIRLSCOUTS COUNCIL TO, VIOLET, AND HER SISTERS DID... The boy and girlscouts however did worry over never did worry about hills for they were all good climbers.

At the foot of that hill was a deep cut where where where a rail road goes through.On the other side of the hill across from the rail road tracks the other hills begins..Before any one would get to the ridge there is a big pond or lake. A very big one too, but no part of part of the lake was very deep, and besides it was impossible to cross because the bottom was all quicksand or mud bogs. Up the side of the hill was a big but beautiful woods, and all the way from little Topsy they could see the trees?There was only two places from where where they could not see it?Just before they got to the hill but after they got part way up they could see it again. y the other place was west of the hill in the hollow. They knew it would be there but they did not worry because they had the compass. YThey intended to go up through the woods on the ridge with their compass. It was pretty easy going till they got up to the top of the hill but then they saw it was going to be very hard getting down it, it was so high and steep.It first went down a little way, maybe twenty feet, almost straight.Then there was a kind of little slanting shelf with all grass and bushes.They didn't know how it was below that slanting shelf because they couldn't see.They hoped it was so that they could climb down. And if it was not it would have to be awfully steep.So they stood on the top of the hill thinking what they would do.Henry Mic-Hollaster said;

"The only thing to do is for one of us to climb down on that ledge, ga glance over and see how deep and steep it is below.Then we'll know whether we can make it or not?There is no use of turning back until we have to."

"Turning back"Starting said and Violet and her sisters glanced at him.

"Well what else are we going todoabt do if we can't get down this hill?"he wanted to know.

"All our days hike for nothing."Geo George said.

"I didn't say at all that I'm for turning back.",Mic-Hollaster said."But this isn't a case of ringing front doorbells and getting on the right right side of people.Maybe scouts love nature, but Nature doesn't care much about scouts?"

"You said something",Violet herself told him.

"But Gee Whiz we don't want to turn back."said Starting.

"Well there is no use in crying until we are hurt."said Mic-Hollaster."We have got to find out how steep it is below and tht ought to be easy .

He started thowing off his h jacket.

"Only you had better be careful" Sa-Starring said."That ledge is kind of slanting.

"It's all full of bushes."he said.

"Ho How will you get up again if you have to come back?"one of the boyscouts asked him.

"A couple of you can reach down."he said."There's a good foothold up on top here."

Starring did not like the idea of his doing that, and neither did Violet and her sisters and they tried to persuade him not to but he would not listen.

No one now did not like the idea of turning back either. And too after leaving Little Topsy they all had began to think it would be easy going on account of the flight of the enemy in this secto rand because toothere were no encampments or many streets or houses in their way. Because one thing boy and girlscouts are used to the open country, and they had never thought of running into anything like this.It came all of a sudden like, and there they were with the big trees on the hill across the valley and the foe there defying them, all plain to see, and they couldn't seem to get any further.It was pretty hard for many of them to think about turning back then, after going right straight for that tree all day long.

"I don't know about that"go George Vest said."He's always careful."

"Well"said Mic-Hollaster "What are we going to do then?Turn back?We could go north and down the hill where it is easy, but that wouldn't be a bee line raid."

"This is a bee line raid, it's either west eight north west or home-victory or defeat.No beating around the bush."

"What's us they all shouted.

"Well then"said Henry"We have either got to go on or turn back.And I'm going to find out, which we have to do.There is no use standing here talking about it.If we are beaten we might as well know it.We can be good losers I hope.We can either go down this hill, or we can't and I'm not going to say we can't till we know we can't.That is the sort of a scout I'm--- going to be.I'm a Foriegner it is true but I'm not scared of anything. No Americans are."

"You mean it's the kind of a scout you are."Jennie told him."She only foreigners foreigners we didn't never find fault with are the Americans.I only wish the Abbi-gunnian soldiers fought in the American style.I'd pity Clandelinia then."

"And we're we are glad to have you in our pat ol pat rol I'll tell you that."added Starring."

"Maybe this hill can beat me"he said"but it can't fool me. Here hold my jacket."

Indeed if it had not been for that slanting ledge a little below them they could have looked down and seen just how steep the hill was.It would be bad enough, to have to go back, anywh anyway that is what they all thought.But to turn back without really knowing for sure that they couodn't possibly go any further, that didn't seem like scouts.They were all feeling pretty badly disappointed because they knew that the chances were against against them.

"We will either do it or oknow thay we can't, that's our motto."Aunt Manning said.

"And if we can't that will mean no one can."Starring said.

Violet, and also hersisters also agreed.

"That's us"Darge shouted.

"Give me a hand down."Mic-Hollester said.

"A scout in uniform ought to do that"Starring said."We ought not to let a new fellow risk-----"

"You're so strong on good terms."Mic-Hollester said"and you told me boys and girls have to go through tests before they become scouts?Are you not willing to give a fellow a chance to win the uniform?Here grab o hold of my hand.I'm not going to walk off the ledge.Do you think I'm blind?"

"Well anyway for God's sake be careful"Said Violet.She and hersisters felt kind of skahy, they couldn't help it.Because below that ledge there must have been a hundred feet ormuch more, and for all they knew it might be straight up and down. Starring got a good firm foothold by bacing his feet behind a big stone.

"Stand back"he said to the otheb others.Then he held Henrys hand while he climbed down ontl the ledge.He couldn't keephold of his hand till he got all the way down but he braced his feet on the side of the rockthat made a kind of wall uf romthe ledge.The ledge was all rock and it was slanting so no one coulf could stand on it without taking a very grave chance.And between the cracks in the rock were small bushes and tall grass growing.

"Get down on you rhands and knees quick"Joice said."For rHeavens sake doe don't try to stand there.It is impossible.""

Now that he was down there on the ledge ever eve ry one saw ohow risky it was.Before there was any one down there it didn't seem so very dangerous but as soon as they saw a person on it, then they were all sorry and even frightened they had let him do it.They didn't even understand how he was going to look over the ledge or the edge because he would have to keep his hands tward the wall to hang on.He would be taking a most awful chance if he faced the other way.

"It's a little bit too slanty, hey?"George West said.

"Don't test to it, hang onto the bushes"said Hettie frantically.

"I'm all right" Mic-Hollester said.

" No you are not, either you only think you are."Joice told him.

"We can see how it is from up here better than you can"Declared declared Daisy."Do you slip.Look out."

"I'm sure I'm all right." Mic-Hollester said again.

"Only don,t get reckless."Jennie said."what's the use of taking chances?I'm heartily sorry sorry and really afraid because you went down.If you can stand up maybe I can reach you."

"what do you mean reach me?"he said."that do you suppose I came dow down here herefor?"

"You are pretty game."Catherine said."But look out."I and my sisters took many chances on our own adventures but nothing like you are doing."

By that time Mic-Hollester was on his hands and knees.He was keeping hold Oof the stuff that grew through the cracks and letting himself out tward the edge of the shelf.They all stood at the top watching him, and they were pe o retty anxious and scared.

"Don't turn backwards, go backwards"said Starring.

"How in the world am I going to see anything that way?"he called."Whoa---a"he said and just then he let go one little clump of bushes and grabbed ano'er another.It gave every one the shudders.

"That was coming up"he said.

Angeline called to him;

"Henry Henry I command you not to try to turn around on that ledge. Don't do it.Crawl back and see if you can stand up enough so I can get hold of you rhand. We'll call the whole thing off."

He didn't just then pay any attention to her because he couldn't but moved slowly around so that his head was tward the edge.Almost three feet more and he would be able to glance over.It gave every one just the shivers just to look at him.

"It's too late "said Daisy"he couldn't get back up here now."

Every one knew that was so------that he wouldn't be able to get within reach of their hands.If it turned out that he couldn't go all the way down they did not know what would happen.He was desperately clutching little clumps of bush with his hands and sort of holding himself back that way.All of a sudden he slid forward and only stopped himself by pressing a little bunch of bush bewtween his knees.They could see he was holding his knees togethe rwith all his strength.Even still he slipped a little and they believed that by that time he realized himself the danger he was in but he didn,t say anything.George West flung off his coat and threw it down keeping hold of one sleeve.He called;

"Here grab hold of that with one hand if you can."

"I can't dare let go."Mic-Hollester called.

His back was tward them, so he couldn't see the jacket, but the rest of them observed that it was not within his reach. Then George West threw it he went only within two feet of Henr Henrys hand and then fell dangling against the cliff.

"Let's tie two jackets together by the sleeves."Hunt Manning said.

"He wouldn't dare to let go to catch it"Starring told him."Can't you see he is hanging on with both hands and feet now?He can't afford to take any more chances----it's bad enough already."

"Oh Watch you rstep, don't move."Violet and hersisters called down in one o voice.

"If you got a firm hold"added Violet "hang on, don't try to look over.Give us a chance to think."

"Mic-Hollester called;

"Wait untill I see how it is below and maybe you won't have to bother to think.Maybe I can go down all right right."

"That fellocws game."George West said.

"Safty first"Joice called."You're in a pretty bad place Henry.you can see much better how it is up here. You hang on with both hands and feet and give us a chance to think.Don't get excited.We don't care anything about the bee line raid now."

"All right go on home to camp "he called."I'm going to see whether we can climb down here o rnot."

"He'll make a scout all right."Darge said.

"If he lives to take the oath."Violet said.

All of a sudden Mi-O Mic-Hollester moved.They were not sure whether he slid or moved on purpose.Anyway there was a little climp of bah on bush in his hand.He threw it away and clutched the ground in another place.That brought his head to the edge of the shelf.Jimminies the hearts of the Vivian girls seemed to be pounding in heir throats.The palms of their hands were all wet even, and no one spoke.One more move and he'll be over the edge.violet, and also the others wanted to call and ask him how it was was below but they sort of felt that even their voices might start him moving again.He was way out of reah reach of them now right on the very edge and they knew that his life depended on how the land was below him.

Because one thing sure, sure he couldn't come back.just then he slipped ever so little and they could see his knees and feet pressing the weeds between them tight, just as if his legs were a vise.Not one person could just then dare call and ask him how the land was down below.

Pretty soon he spoke.His voice sounded just the same as usual even though it was a kind of death sentence he was saying for himself;

"It's straight up and down."he said.

"How far?"Tim called.His own voice sounded strange to him.

"About a hundred and eighty feet"he said"Maybe two hundred.I can't tell exactly."

Then he seemed to move again but but maybe they only thought so because they were so excited.

"Hang on "Jim shouted."That was all he could say.

"I will "he said."But so long, if I don,t see you again."

"For the love of God hang on and please also for our sake don,t move"Violet called to him."The bee line raid is off.You just hang on. Why you even have not got another inch to move in. Don't look around even."

"What in the world world can we do?"Starring said.

"Jennie looked at the others and said;

"Let's all of us, you my sisters and all you boys an girl girls here take off our uniform stockings and tie them togethe r."

"Good idea"Hunt Manning said."Look for heavens sake, he's moving again."

"Don't get excited"Starring said"He didn't move.

"Hurry up all of you"cried violet,"Take your stockings off.Are you all right"she called to Mic-Hollester.

"Guess so."he said.

"Don't look down it will only get you rattled."Angeline said.

" What do you mean rattled?"he called.

"Well can't you take a little advice"said Angeline."when you are in the scouts you will e learn that you can always hang on tighter with your eyes shut."

Every one took off their stockings and hastily tied them together but there was so much space needed for the socks and stockings or knots rather that they made a line only twenty feet long.So they tied a couple of their sc out shirts on by the sleeves.Then George West took hold of one end and Jennie took hold of the other and they pulled.It pulled out in one place and thy they fastened it again.It was a clumpsy kind of a line and they were not sure whether it would hold or not.But it was the only thing just then they could think of.

Then Joice called to Mic-Hollester;

"Don't move till we tell you.Are you slipping?"

"Guess not."he said.

"Don't move even if you feel something hit you on the back.We are going to throw a line right near your hand."

Jennie grabbed the end stocking and wound it around her hand so it would not slip away.Then she threw the other end, the end with the shirts.It went over the end of the shelf wihin about two feet of Mic-Hollesters arm.

"Don't grab it yet."she said."Wait, don't let go."

She began pulling to make sure the line was strong.Maybe the end of the shirt was caught on something below the shelf, or maybe the line would have held all right right if he moved back on his hands and knees.But anyway it did not hold when she pulled on it.She believed she had pulled too hard for she was a strong little girl girl.Anyhow the line gave way close to her hand and most of it went over the edge of the shelf.

"There it is at the bottom"Mic-Hollester said.And he did not seem the least bit excited or disappointed.They never never saw a fellow for a foreigener fo degner like Mic-Hollester never.They have seen many brave boys, but never a boy just like him.

"It wasn't your fault."Catherine said"What next.?"

It might have been that Mic-Hollester must have heard that because he called;

"Nobody is to blame.You tell my people."

Violet, and hersisters were nearcrying.

"Mic-Hollester you hold on Violet whimpered."you are not slipping are you?"

"Not---not much"he said.

"Don't trust to those weeds."Jennie called.

"Can't you get your fingers in a crack or crevice or something and brace yourself back?We'll take off every stich we have on and make another----""

"I'm slipping comrades "he said."I was a scout anyway hey?No I wasn't----""

"You're the best scout there ever was Mic-Hollester"Daisy called to him.

She and hersisters were nearly crying now, they couldn't help it."Only please please hang on---do--you---hear please hang on.The bushes just wait----"

By that time many of the boys from from behind trees were al taking off more clothes.Poor jack Saunders Saunders was so excited and nervous he just tore his shirt off.

"It's too late"Mic-Hollester said---awful calm."I'm slipping.These blamed weeds don't hold.Don't you dear princesses and fellows worry,Maybe I'll land---"

They could see wellenough that his head and shoulders were over the edge.It was just a case of one root coming up and his taking anothe r one and slipping a little each time.In about another half minute he would have only his legs to hold on with.violet , even hersisters did not have much use for clothes lines or life lines made of stockings and shirts shirts shirts.They are all right in stories but where there are a lot of knots fastened together and holding together different kinds of clothes one knot is pretty sure to give way.The only kind of line they could make now was a pretty pretty clumsy kind of a one and it would take them at least ten minutes to get it made.By that time Mic-Hollester would be. . . . .

Oh how every one prayed for success in saving him be fore it is too late.

"There isn't time to even do this."Hettie Vivian said despairingly.

"Well we'll do it whether there is time or not."Starring shot back at her

"Hustle all of you, get some of your clothes off"said Angeline.Th "here is time untill he disappears.Two of you fellows follow the hill south and go down at the closet place you can get down.There is no time to continue our bes line said now..o don,t you go Jack---Barge and Will go.Here take my scarf , you have you own too---never mind looking at the tree trees.Here take my outside jacket too. no here is some bandages.you know how to stop blood flowing don't you.Put a stick under the bandage and wind it around.Hurry up he is slipping.We can't get this l blamed thing ready in time.Do what you can for him down there.Hurry."

It was funny but as soon as they started Starring could not help looking over there to the ridge at that big trees that had guided them all day.Kind of he wondered if the Clandelinias knew the trouble they were in--and that after all they wouldn t get there.But he only thought of it for about a second.Down there on the ledge Mic-Hollester was almost half over.He could not use his hands to hold on with now but he just squeezed the bushes between his feet. He was slipping over slowly.

"Hang on "Starring shouted."We are hustling, we'll throw you a line."

"Look, look" one of the boyscouts who had just started away shouted."Oh look."

But Violet, and hersisters just clapped their hands over their eyes for a moment for they couldn't look.They just couldn't.They felt sure they knew what it meant.Even their hands were trembling and their hearts were just chocking them.

"Did, you hear did you hear him land"?Starring asked.

"Over there in the south."some one said.

Starring looki looked in the direction indicated, and as sure as I'm writing this there was some one runnin running pell mell right twards them. He saw right away it was a girl.you know how a girl runs, especially when she runs fast.She was holding her head way back and her hair was all flying loose.There was something big and kind of purple colored colored a round around her neck very big and clumsy.Starring stood for about a second, then he made a sprint for he never ran so fast in all his .The two came twards each other just flying.Her cheeks were all flushed and her hair was all over her face and she was laughing and panting all at once.

"She said;

"I---l----l----- I've----got---your---- rope---- so there.l---ly-- ran all--the----way----with it.You--said---l----l---l--------"

"Please don't waste time talking, give me the rope."Starring said.

"Well--l---l--- can --do things too see.I can an run see?Here.They caught the --man you fastened to the ferris wheel----here----"

Starring ran pell mell back to the edge with the rope.

"Did, he---did he --go over!"Starring called.

"Hurry"Violet and hersisters shouted.

It would have been unusual to have seen allthis.There were the scouts of Starrings patrol patrol patrol all half dressed, jumping up and down and yelling;

"Hurry." There was the girlscout coming along behind Starring and all the scouts cheering her.I can hardly tell you just how everything happened. Joice Vivian herself grabbed the rope from Starring and by the time he looked over the ridge all panting and trembling there it was right over the edge of the slanting shelf.But their boy friend friend Mic-Hollester wasn't there..For about five seconds his blood ran cold. He kind of seemed to see everything just as if he were dreaming.Then he noticed that violet and hersisters were hanging onto the rope and a number of the boys were helping them.And he saw that Barge and Will had not gone away.He also saw that the rope was very tight down over th e edge of th the hill and acr ac ross and over the edge of the shelf. He therfore knew that Mic-Hollester must be hanging on to the edge of the life line, and that sure he was not trusting his life to any old weeds now.And that rope rope was held not only by scouts but by the sturdy sturdy little Vivian Princesses and he should therefore worry.And they should worry too because by that time they knew Mic-Hollester and they knew he would not let go.He just jumped up and down shouting"Hurrah."He couldn't help it.It seemed awful funny for seven beautiful little girl girl girls and seven fellows to be holding up but Mic-Hollester had come so near death that they wanted to make saving him double sure.Even Jack himself was tugging on the rope with both hands his cheeks all puffed out.The new girl just stood there panting and laughing.

"..ot knowing what had occu ed she said;
"What is on the othe r end of that rope?An elephant?"
Star ding just went right up to he r and said;
"Hen rietta the re is on the othe r end of that rope the best scout with one exception and that exception is you."
"..he said"..hank god but isn't it just too funny to see that smallest little boyscout ove r the re pulling on the rope!Oh dea r I could just kiss him.I'd an run two miles just to see that."
" Tell me"Said Sta r ding;
"You finish befo re I tell you anything."she said."..id , save the Bee Line raid?"
"Did you"said sta r ding."You saved a boyscouts life too.you a re going to get a he ro medal if I have to go ove r to National ..eadqua r te rs o r see the b ave Vivian P ince pe r sonally o r consult ..iolet, and he r siste rs.Mean while you can kiss that little boy six times if you ant to that is if he'll let you."
"Please look ov r the edge and see if the rope is chffing."Violet said to Sta r ding.
"I'll do bette r than that."he said."I'll go down the re and stuff a jacket unde r it.Give me a jacket somebody."
Sta r ring was f eeling so happy he didn't ca re what he said o r did.The f ellows f ellows at Jolces di rection gt got beside a t ree so that th rope went pa rt way a round the t unk.That way they could pass it out ve ry easily. They we re all sure of the life line , that was one thing.Hemp---you have to go some to b eak that.That was no clothes line.Sackt backyard ropes a e all good and sound, but not fo r scouts.
"Don't take any chances "Jennie said."Look and see if it is chaffing on the edge."
"If it isn't tell me" Jack puffed out.
"P lease let it down slowly"Mic-Hollester called."What a re you waiting fo r It's impossible to pull me up.The sha p edge of the stones would cut the line.It's all right down he re."
The re we e were only two places whe re the rope could rub, those we re on the top of the wall right nea r them, and co down on the edge of the hills shelf.They knew it was all right below that on account of what Mic-Hollester had said.In both those pla ces the bushes wen the line went ove r clumps of bushes and moss.No line will stand rubbing all the time but all t hey had to do was let it down to the bo tom and they knew it would stand that much rubbing.So they passed it out little by little and very soon it was sluck.Then they could hea r Mic-Hollester calling f rom away down below.
"All right"Sta r ding shouted."We will be down p retty soon.Take a rest."
Two of the Vivian Gi rls tied the rope good and fast to the t ree and then Sta r ding said to Will and Da rge r;
" How fa r did you go when you sta rted f rom he re?"
"We didn't get a chance to go two f eet."da rge r said.
"Then the bee line aid is save?"Sta r ring said.
"Hen rietta said;
"Oh I'm so glad.I wonde red how you would eve r get down the cliff.When the soldie rs came back f rom Rive rview pa rk they had that ho r rid Mandelinian spy with them!---just think."
"What did I tell you?"Jack said?
"Oh I think it was just wonde ful how you boys f astened him the re------" without the loss of a single life"the boy shouted.
"When I saw that c eatu re and thought how you had really caught him and when I saw the men had your line , made them give me the line and an a run afte ryou and b ought your rope so your Bee line aid raid would not be spoiled.Because I thought you needed it."
"ou're sure good"said Sta r ring.
"Will you let me p rove I'm a scout?A real one?"she asked .
"you're as real as any one"said Sta r ring.All you have to do is say what you want.
"Well will you let me climb down that rope and go with you, and finish the bee line r aid with you."
"Yes "Sta r ding said.
In fact he did not know what to say and so he had said "Yes.He didn't want to In fact didn't da re to r efuse; he r ead also he did not wish to tell he r that he was af raid she could not do it.But they had seen just one nar row escape and he did not want he r to take any chances.But then the gi rl scouts were in many cases better rope climbe rs than a any boys he had e ve r seen esp cially the Vivian Gi rls and he finally comp e hending the situatio said;
"Yes you can go with us.Because we owe you a lot that i s sure.I'd r ather give upthe whole thing, than be mean about it but , be cause , know that gi l scouts a re just as good doing things as we a re. And even we wouldn't do this ou selves if we were not al eady in fo it and you see ou r uni fo rms a e al eady to rn f rom going ove r roofs roofs and fighting ou way to a nd climbing on those fe r ris ca re wheels, and , see th rough some adventu re that your uniform d ress is also to rn. ut if you go down the line you'll have to be ca eful."

She just stood the re fo r a few seconds kind of t ying to make up he r mind.
"you think I' m af raid "she said.
"no I don 't belie ve you a re af raid"Sta r ring told he r.Some of the othe rs sta rted to sp ak but he told them to keep still.
She howeve r said ve y stubbo rn like;
"I want to go and , do think you're too sca red of my safty if you don t let me.I' m a scout as much as you a re. ou think I' m sca red. Do you think , want to go back to the camps afte r seeing the things you do, and not do them too?"
"you claim you a re a good scout and I'll say you a re as good a one as I ever saw.You saved a scouts life by doing a good tu rn and , guess that shows what gi rls can do.But the pdn principal thing about scouting is to finish what you begin.w That is why we a re he re.It doesn't make any diffe rence whethe r it is a bee line raid, bee line hike o rwhat.If you begin you have got to finish it. nd if you're a quitte r you a re no scout.May e you like to risk your life and , know you don't risk your life staying saftly within the confines of the ch ristian encampments.ut just the same if you want to come along down the rope and you've positively sure you can do it all ight right. Gi rls will win the r thei r point anyway."
", hate loafing."she said?
"Yes "said Sta r ring"but you don't hate th rin the thrilling adventu res and if you a re supposed to be in a bee line tho tou rnment to day then that is your bee line a raid.And if you don't finish your bee line raid you're a q uitte r.See?"
"I am not a quit te r."she said.
"I know you a r e not"Sta r ring told he ul he a d too that you're going to have a Tennis tou rnment to mo r ow mo r ow.If so I'm coming over to camp to mo r ow and play with you and t ry to b-at you."
"playing tennis?"she said?
"That is what "Sta r ring told he r.
"That will be beautiful.I believe , can wi the game with my left hand"she said."especially when playing with boys."
"All right"said Sta r ring.I'm coming ove r to mo r ow to f ind out. o you help us now finish ou r bee line raid and to mo r ow afte r noon at Two"oc oclock;
" Will you s be sure to be the re?" he said.
"Positively gua renteed if I don't die b-fo e then."He said."No lets go ahead and finish the raid."
One by one they all let themselves down that line.The only ha rd pa rt was kee ping hold whe re it went ove r the edge of the slanting shelf .The cliff was shee r up and down just as Mic-Hollester said, but that new - never theless was the end of thei r t roubles with natu e.And they we re very glad to see Mic-Hollester all safe and sound.
"Hen ry "said Sta r ding"you a re the gamest scout that ever lived but you a re sure reckless.If we had stopped to think we would neve r da red have let you go down on that dange rous shelf."
"But remembe r I'm no a scout yet."he said .
" e membe r noti nothing"sta r ding told him."If you keep on and live th rough it I'll have an Eagle Scout in my pat ol pat rol, I can see that.That's h the highest deg ree the re is."
"you a e neve r killed untill you a e kill d."Mic-Hollester said.
"You have to thank Violet, and he r siste rs and the gi l gi rlscout fo r that."Star sta r ding said.And th n he told him all about it.
" on't ever ge gi e give up, that is the thing."Da rge r said.
"Do you know what you e mind me of."A smaller boyscout asked Mic-Hollester. They we re all si ting a round on the rocks rocks at the foot of the cliff taking a well needed rest.
" H o who "Mic-Hollester asked him.
"A small f rog no a fish."The kid said?
"A fish?"Sta r ding asked him.
"sure he said."Especially the P d Princesses do. nd fo r a good r eason."
"I'd be pleased to meet those so ro sort of fishes."Mic-Hollester said looking st angely at the vivian gi rls as h if he thought the little boy was unwi tingly insulting them.

"Do you insinuate that the princesses re mind you of fishes?"demanded Timothy Groveton.

"Sure I do."said the boy."I have reason to.I was a witnessof something at a long distance which at that time was impossible for me to do anything to prevent in time.The Princesses were out for only a walk, not bothering no body and they were captured by Landelinians hiding in ambush.They were tied hand and foot, and stones fastened to the their feet and thrown into the Aronbusgs River."

"What River River ?"

"Aronbusgs."River River"

"You mean Aronsburgs River"

Well how ever you pronounce it it is.ut to this day I'm wondering how they didn't get drowned when Heaven knows there was no one around to re rescue them and before I could have got there they would have been drowned.But what I seen twenty minutes later at a little side road would have caused me to do to the to do the same thing the Landelinians did if had not seen from the i rwet clothes they were really alive and not what they call ghosts."

"What happened to the Landelinians?"asked starring, though in fact he was a witn ss himself, but wanted to see what the boy would say.

"id you ever see men on a good fast foot race?"asked the boy.

"I'd be pleased to meet them."Starring said.

"Well if Racers and those Landelinians were runi running the same way at the same time and full speed too I would have bet on those Landelinians winning that race in a very short time.I nev r seen n men run like thay did.and the yells they set up.And how white their faces were.nd they're supposed to be brave soldiers."

"Do you know how we didn't get drowned."Said Violet.

"Break it to us gently."Starring said.

"Well I was thrown in first"said Voice. I in landing on the bottom of the stream hit my hands on a sharp stone and almost instantly the ropes around my wrist was severed. I was then even able without difficulty to save my sisters and too you know we can hold our breath a long long time under water.That enabled us to free ourselves.I saw those Landelinians run and so did my sisters and we completed the panic by s throwing t stones at them."

They now started again on their move. Now from under the cliff to the ridge ridge was maybe as much as abouid half a mile(if not smile) for quite a ways the land was flat and open and then the ridge began. They would have to go up the side of the ridge.It was a long hill as much as ten or so miles long, and the child scouts understood a road ran along on top of that ridge.For a little while they could see the big trees up there but there as not a Landelinian soldier in sight.Then as they came closer to the ridge they couldn't see it on account of the woods .Now the next adventure they had was before they came to the base od the ridge.There were open fields and a railf road ran north and south.Untill they reached the t rtracks they could see the trees.Pretty soon after that they had to use the compass goe going up through the woods on the ridge.All along in the fields beside that railroad tracks were big wooden signs telling people what they should buy and a lot of Landelinians had placed themselves underneath these signs to offer resistance but fled at the sight of the child scouts.One One of these signs was very big and it happened to be right in their path.They crossed the tracks and then about a hundred feet further on was the sign.There were a great number of Landelinians there but they did not resit a and ran instead leaving a long ladder behind them.

"Let's some of us climb up the ladder a and go over"George West said.

" No sooner than stung"Said Starring."Over the top for s."

Violet, and her sisters laughed, the girlscout giggled as they all climbed up on the ladd er one after the other while others went around and while they were waiting for one of the gang of boys to carry it to the back of the sign they all who could sat in a row on top. Right underneath them to the surprise of Violet and her sisters were painye paint ed the words;

"The Vivian Princesses forever." They sure made a picture of that sign with all of them sitting on top of it.The one in the middle was Daisy Vivian.

Pretty soon T Timothy Groveton who stood below called up;

" That's pretty good all sit just where you are for a minute. Scouts always on top ,eh!"

"What is he going to do?"Jack asked.

"He is going to take a picture of the sign with us on top of it."George west said.

"I believe we must look pretty funny from down below"said Starring"for Tim keeps on laughing.The little Vivian girl Daisy as pretty as she is and especially the way she sat there was enough to make any one laugh.She looked as as if she was famous already. Tim called;

"Just sit naturally and laugh."

"That's easy "Violet called of told him." lau laughing is our middle name."

"All right."he called.

Then he got behind his camera and held out his hand for them all to keep still.

"What are you going to do with it?"Joice called down.

""We can show it to your dear brother Penrod. And your face will go all over our christian country."

"Mine too?"Daisy shouted.

"Yes, and very likely we'll prove you're heroines too."Tim said." We might bring you fame.Now would that be?"

"Not for this patrol."Jennie shoued down."We're not famouse."

"Are we a part of the ad?"Daisy shouted.

"It seems so by what the words say on the sign board.Now I'll tell you what you all may do if you are not in too much of a hurry hurry.you just sit up here untill the next train goes by if any does.I've got to hustle to Baldrof station to catch that train.your Guardian Jack Evans will be on it and he will just see how the sign looks with you boys and girls on it.I'll dare say he ll reward you."

"We should worry about rewa rewards rewards "Violet said."But we'll sit here if the train is not too long coming."

"Well" said Tim you suit yourselves about that but you have given me an idea and I'm much obliged to you."

Tim then went off and they all sat there but Jerg grabbed the top of the sign be cause the breeze was blowing a little. They then started to sing;

"Pinty little boy and girls;
asked to sit and wait;
One of them gown blown off, and he alone stole the curls."

They liked that verse so much that they made another one.

"A million little child scouts.
say the enemy's glad there are not a hundred million to a million eleven,
One of them fell backward, and the million came from heaven."

George West said;

"If they had a long row of wooden child scouts up here with the words always on top un erneath, I'd bet the enemy would run fromthem too, hey.I wonder how much the soldiers themselves would pay us to sit here forever if we could."

"Labor in Abbieannia no matter what kind it is is paid very high so there will will be no poor people."said Voice Vivian"Maybe if we stayed here long enough the enemy himself would give us some credit."

"Everything is going up with the enemy.""o George West said"Lt Let's go down."

"Wait till the train goes by."Angeline said"I'd like General Evans our best man friend to see us and whose whoever those others are o who are on the train."

When George West began to sing;

"Oh we're boyscouts only to number nine;
"We are sitting on a sign
"Between seven beautiful little Girl Angelx. Angels
They do not fear the enemy to a rop.
so - forPi Princesses though they be and the enemy they to sting them like a bee,
They are nevertheless always on top."

Then Starring sang out;

"The enemy is afraid to cross the flats;
For we're advertizing Glandelinian soldier slats"

Then Jennie Vii Vivian herself began yelling;

"Oh Mr Manley;
"Your middle name ought to be Manley,
Of Scouts and Manley."

"We ought to get a dollar an hour from Manley for doing this."Mic-JMic-Hollester said.
"You go and collect."said Daisy.
"He'd pay us in Glandelinian money and that money here is worthless."
"Well are you not satisfied."Said Daisy."Have we Princesses not made you v famous. Right away you want to pass the plate."
"You mean Manleys hat."Joice said.
"This is the "Great Glandelinia Hat Town Store patrol."Violet said giggling."We are super superstituous because we believe in signs."
"Yes advertizing signs"said Hettie.
"Listen here comes the train."one of the girlscouts said.
"Sit up and look pretty pretty."Darger said.
"Except us"said Catherine."We couldn't look prettier if we tried."
"Well you've got all the beauties in the whole world beaten."Hunt Manning said."
"Sure "said starring"But you must remember we have a live set of Heavenly creatures amongst us little angels from ha heaven, and full of pep. All sit up when the train passes. Remember Jack Evans our best friend is there. Maybe he'll give us a job on a sign on top of a high building in Restored Abbiesann(Abbiesann is restored pretty good now) advertising that General Manley is wanted very badly in Angelinia Agathia on important military business bes behind bars. We would like to make out of him an electric sign wouldn't you pd princesses."
"I'd rather be an angel than an elet ric sign."said Violet.
"You can't be anything else because you are one"said starring.
"You will all be angels in time"said Violet.
"You'll get a good hug and kiss if you crack another one like that."Starring told her.
"I have no objections"said Violet."That is what you all do to us and we're used to it by that time."
"Look at Daisy"Darger said.
Every body including Starring and even her sisters had to laugh at the little dear as she always does something funny just to make you laugh. There she sat right right in the middle, straight upright with her hand up making the full Princess salute as the train came along. She looked like a pretty little raidaitor ornament for an automi automile. As the train went past all the passengers looked out the windows, laughing. The more they laughed the straighter Daisy sat, and then all of a sudden, good night, over she went backwards, kerflop into the marshy land just under neath the sign. All the people in the train hwoled. he came up the ladder with mud and grass all over her just in time for the people in the last two cars to get a look at look at her. They just screamed. Indeed they even came out on the back platform of the last car cheering her and laughing at her.
"I bet Manley would like to see that."she said.
"D Good night"said Starring."Was that a part of the this sign. You look more more like an add for bathing suits for little girls than for anything else."
She climbed back into her place pulling the w4 wet grass from her face and clothes.
"That surely is the time you were not on top."Starring said."I hope Jack Evans didn't see you do that.?"
"Here comes a lone man across the field."Darger said.
Starring looked around behind him and saw a Glandelinian officer with a big round black hat full of Ostrich or what you call them feathers and a big uniform coat like an over coat(though it was 100 in the shade) coming across the field.
"I think there is There is going to be something doing."Go George West said.
"I can feel it in the air
"Thank God we're on top"Starring said.

The officer came around in front of the sign and looked up and said;
"Well now, what do you little Christian brats think you're doing here?"
"Well said Starring"We are not so sure but we think we're sitting here."
"Any body give you permissionto come on this territory"He asked.
"No"George West said;
"But we cross where ever we like in wartime and therfore it is all right for we always heard it is a short cut to that big tree direct ahead."
"Are you going to that tree"He demanded.
"No we're not can't you see we are sitting here, but its just thesame crossing this land in one place as another for even though your armies are on it, we have a right and you have not .It's our land not yours."
"Well it taint right by no manner of means in wartime whether its your land or not.You're either spies or trespassing that is what you are doing.If I wasn't a huamne Glandelinian who don't massacre kids I'd have brought a troop of soldiers up here."
"We're sorry you didn't."said Darger
"Well so am I then"said the man"If you defy me that way?I', going to make an example of you that is what I am going to do.I'm going to learn you a lesson."
"We don't need no Glandelinian lessons."said starring."
"Haow?"he said.
"We're sorry we can't see the soldiers here.But it is all right.I don't see what harm we do."
"Well you'll find out."The Glandelinian officer said good and cross.
All of a sudden Daisy shouted down at him;
"Anyway we are on our own land, and we're sitting on this sign.You yourself have no right to be here."
"Well you youngsters, that is no sign you have a right to climb over it where you are high enough up to be able to see into our main encampments.
Now you come down off there, every one of you, and we'll see what is what.
We will see what the superior has to say."
"That shows how much you know about numbers."Daisy shouted down."You cannot force us to come down.This is our land and it's you who better move off and get back to you your own camp if you don't wish to be a prisoner yourself.We're quite a bunch up here and do you think we're afraid of one man armed though he be.You could only shoot one of us, and the rest of us would have you."
"We belong here not you so there"said Violet.
"How did you get here without trespassing"demanded the man.
"That isn't the question"said jennie."We are here because we are here.The question is you yourself have no right to be here.It is you who are trespassin?"as you say it."
"Sure "Daisy yelled down."That 's logic.I defy you to make us come down."
"I'll get a hundred men."
"A hundred men."
"You're bad on your grammer"said Joice."Go ahead get the hundred men.They can't do it either"
"Dai Day Daisy looked awfully cute and still al awfully funny sitting up there and shouting down at the Glandelinian soldier
"If this sign has a right to be here we have too.If you are on the thing;"
"You have no right to be up there"the man shouted down up.
"Lift the ladder up."George West said.
"Sure that's strategy"Daisy said.
"So don't haul it up"said Violet.
"Why.?"
"He'll think we're scared of him."
"But he'll take the ladder away."
"Let him.We can get down without it.I dredefy him to come up.He's only one we're many."
"Do you little scamps dare admit that somebody own a place that has a thing on it thatbe longs to somebody else that has something on it"Daisy started to say;
"Wait Daisy"interrupted VioletThen she said to the man"It says to the cron the top of the sign here that we're the Abbiesannian Princesses?You see it.?That means us.No you a man alone here dare defy us.My little sister is right, you are the trespasser not us.You get off not us."
"I'll come up that ladder and show you something."the officer shouted.
"Come up"said Violet."We need company."
"You little ----"
"Angel interrupted violet?"not devil as you wanted to call me. "
"You're on my territory" the officer hollered at them.
"We are not on your territory.The sign is."
"If you want to take the sign away go ahead and do it."Joice said.

"he sign is on my ter ritory."
"well we can't take it off."said Catherine.
"We should worry "Angeline called down."You are a nobody."
"he can stand on our own law can t we "?Daisy piped up.
"We can sit on the sign that's better"Joice said.
"Are you going to come down that ladder?""The officer demanded.
"Yes, we are if you can come up and make us"said ettie.
"This is our ter ritory though you claim it as your own and we are going to stay here "said jennie."If the sign is on Calverinian Ter ritory and my sist ers own it not you, and that includes our Father We are the "Very Great Princesses of Abbiannia"that what we are"and she sat up st aight pre tending to ve be extre mely proud."he are on top. oes the sign not say what we are.If a thing belongs to this ter rid tory it belongs to us, and the land too.You didnt pay for it you took it.you're the bandit not us.If you rent out a place and put a thing on it then the thing that is on it isn't tress essing on the land as you pro pronounce the wo d that was ented out for the thing under neath it is it."?
"It is as clear as mud."Star ring said."he have much more right here our selves than a mans hat has on top of his head even if his head is in the wrong place."
"That's logic"Daisy shouted.
"It's a true as a good book."Joice said.
"Truer"Angeline put in.
"A sign is something too that has something more impor tant on it"Daisy shouted."Let 's hear you deny that."
"And it doesnt make any differ ent what is on it."Dar ger said."An ad's an ad isn t it."?
"ost always"Star ring said."It says here what the Princesses abare so there es the proof.They're here because they 're here.you can do that by long division, and you've got a lot of crust to come here by yourself thinking you can hood wink us when we can come down if we want to ma and make you prisoner unless you 're a better running than we are."
"We're secure ,you are not."aisy said?
"As long as we don't fall over on top of you."Star ring told him.
"ny way we can not be trespassing on land that belongs to the Princesses"unt Manning put in.
"Positively not"Joi ce said.
"All right said the officer"if you've got a right to stay there, stay there. Only don't come down on my land.If you have a perfect right on top, you have not got a right down here.I'll let you kids see some logic, whatever that is.you can sit up there and I'll sit down here, and you can stay untill the sign rots.you're such clever youngsters.Always on top hey.Well you can stay up there and see how you like it.hat do we landelinians care whether you girls are Abbiannian rincesses or not.Manly would give a fortune for your capture ordestruction.This land down here belongs to me by gum and whether our army took it or not.All is fair in war you know."
He sat down on a nice big comfor table stump, and took out a pipe, filled it and started smoking.e sure looked as if he were going to stay there untill the end of the world.
"o you see what we all get for standing up for our rights"said Catherine. "About two hundred years from now our skeletons will be found sitting on this sign."
"nd well be always smoking pipes."ennie said.
"We're afraid to go down because if we do we'll have to arr -st him--if we stay up here the poor sign will get tired while we'll starve."unt said.
"ure that is logic"Joice said."I'm not so crazy just now about being a part of the ad."
"ow about the man"said Angeline with a giggle."Is he good to eat."?
"o I'm afraid he 's as tough as his disposition"said Violet."I'd rather eat the sign."
"We've got a right here its a technicality."aisy said.
"Yes but we're not stuck on such things as technicalities"Violet told her."ou you cannot eat them while we could eat the man."
"Let's drown our broken hearts in song"eorge West said.
So then they all started sign singing and this is what they worked around to,

"We are on a sign because the man said we're here;
Who will deny it if we a dare.
And the reason we 're up here,
Because a cowardly man is down there.
He 's afraid to come up here
Because he's full of hot air."

"Believe me"said Star ring"I've had enough of this adver tising business. "here is im.ony is he so long.I'm getting hungry.The next time we go anywhere to stay it will be a eating ess establishment."
"I'm going to re tire from the post no bills sign"Hettie said."See what it has left us.A very dignified place for us little girls."
"ure you and your sisters have risen very high in the adver tising sign business"said Star ring."We have all risen to the top.ow about our bee line what you may call it."
"We can go through ev y thing ec except something solid"Daisy said.
"ook at him ."said Jennie."He smoking his pipe so much it looks like Mt Vivian shooting at the stars."
"And here es his pipe.He loves a good smoke poor Mike."said iolet.
"I wonder if he's smoking now" added Joice.
"nd here's his chair.He loved an easy chair poor Mike.""Piped up Daisy.
"Yes," said nge line"That was the cause of him losing his last job."
"nd here's his tae.He loves his tae poor Mike."
"Yes in a bottle." "declared Catherine.
The officer just sat there on the stump with one knee over the other smoking his pipe very calm like.
"I wonder if we could sleep here like birds."said Star ring.
"Little Daisy Vivian ought to be able to."eorge West said.
"Sure she's a canary----"
"will you keep still with that or do you want me to kiss you"she yelled.
"I wish the weekly animated news of well any one of the world could see us now"said Joice."The "Famous" Princesses of the sign Post marooned on an ad about themselves, that's what they'd put.starving on a desert advertising sign because they're afraid of a lone nobody sitting on a mere stump de ump dump."
The officer down there on the stump did ot laugh at all, he just sat down there smoking.
"Hey there 'e miss Hey there mister ain't it lonesome down there "shouted Daisy."want to come up here and keep us welcome.Only don't smoke so hard. you'll burn your poor pipe."
"nd smother us poor little girls"added Violet."We can't bear suffocation. it smells too str st rong."
"ow do you know suffocation smells"asked Joice."we thought it had a funny feeling."
"well the suffocation he's got coming out of that pipe would make a horse cough so hard he might blow the sign down with us on it."Said Daisy.
"ow do you spell suffocating."
"Oh,, b--a--d--s--m--e--l--l"she said.
"Well suffocation or not this is a suffocation seige."daisy said.
"Does that smell too?"
"es.I wonder if he is burning his socks in that pipe.Phew."
"we're blockaded blockaded not by a soldier but by smells"one of the boyscouts sme shouted."It smells as if Manley is burning his hair in that pipe.Maybe it's the devils hair itself."
"I bet Angelinia Arombu g could get us out of this"Star ring said."Anybody who likes to fight Glandelinians------"ey Daisy I thought you said a scout is very re sour f cef ul.ou a are they say angel possessed.Can't you pass out a little angel on that man and make him put out that confounded pipe.It smells like a skunk farm before a rain.We'll turn into smoke up here."
"We'll sacrifice our lives for re al Glandelinian smoking to baco"Hettie said. "We'll be used to living without air by that time."
"ut how could be talk."
"By tobaco smoke."
So then they a started to sign again each scout singing some thing differ ent but pretty soon they all got into line with this;

"Way up here, way up here;
Just our luck to be stuck;
Way up here suffocating by strong sock smoke,
And we won 't go home;
"Because we, re living without air
yet we can eat up here."

"Oh here comes Tim."one of the fellows shouted."He 's coming with a good force of boy and girl scouts."
"Shaved"iolet yelled.
"He'll shave when he grows to be a man."Jennie told her laughing.
"I mean saved "he told her."ou know how afraid all of us are of that soldier down there.Hey wait a minute man,on't go yet.We want you for compan company .Here stop I say."she said more severely. suddenly drawing a weapon. ho you're not going." and her tone was so sharp now that he seeing the determined eye behind the pistol halted in his tracks dumbfounded.

Tim "Tim has re inforcements with him." aisy shouted.

"That's one of the regiments of ivianites"said alph aphil."

"I guess that 's the Eagle Patrol."said Starring."Thank b God, they'll relieve the starving population."

"nyway we held out against one soldier."aisy said.

"Yes the battle of the Vivian Girl Princess sign"declared Jennie.W"ounded. none.Killed.The sign from us siting on it so long.Hungry. verybody except the prisoner.He'll only eat when he's hungry."

Then they all set up a cheer for im and the boy and girlscouts coming. hen they came near enough they shoue shouted;

"Hey Master Tim we are thinking of re tiring from the Vivian Girl princesses business.They're angel possessed and we're scared of the man down there be cause he thinks he's apoleon."

"Hey im"Daisy shouted"Are we not a part of this sign."

"Absou absolute ly the boyscout said."ou and your sisters are the best part of it."

"ow you see"Daisy shouted down at the Glandelinian officer"You thought you owned this property.Now you see.We're as much right to this sign as you have."

"Except when we fall down"Violet said.

"Agirl might fall off accidentally might she not."Daisy again yelled."That would not prove the land doesn't below to her would it."

That's a very fine argument."he boyscout leader who was with Tim said.

"I know some better ones than that"Daisy yelled down at him."Do you know we captured two spies during our Bee Line aid.Now we captured you too sinIf you move from where you stand we'll shoot so there."

"ey Mister have we not got a right up here."

"That's what the sign says."he other boyscout laughed.

Then im said;

"Ladies and gentlemen, want you to meet a very famous boy friend of mine whom I met near the train dressed like this. e is Prince Schofield Penrod Vivian, a very famous brother of Princess, Violet, and six other little princesses of ge even whom I know.He is very much taken with the idea of having little Princesses on top of Abbiennian signs."

"elieve me"said Violet."he came nea being taken.We are so cowardly with fear even with it now that it took one man to capture us.He had us up on this sign for about more minutes than I can count. ou count the minutes. We're going to retire from the business of being princesses nd and turn into smoking tobacco.That man smoked us into it with his strong smoking pipe. I8 It smelled like Mt Vivianin eruption and if had not seen what caused it I would have thought it was."

"Too late to re ti e"Said Penrod"your pictures as Princesses have already been seen all over the country."

"Mine too Daisy yelled." emember Penrod Im I8m a Canary bird.If you see one you'll think of me."

"ow did you come to be a Canary bird?"

"From smoking tobacco. Mt moking your pipe down there did it."

The prisoner sure looked embassed.

"nd we're going to use the princess idea--princesses--on top of the world, golden cut outs of course."

"ouldn t live cut ups do?"Catherine asked him."ecause that's us."

Penrod just laughed and he said;

"Who 's leader here?"

"You are "said ngeline.

"I mean who's leader there on the sign."?

"Starring is."she told him.

" thought you my sisters were;;"

"Starring is the leader is this expedition sh so he's ours too."

"As you were.Well my friend.We'll probably want you to pose as the greatest greatest raider among boys ever was. you carried all before you for seven miles. id you ever pose before?"

"We are in the posing business "said Daisy."We are in the imitated news.We'll pose for brave y bravery is in the cave of climbing Mt Smoking the Pipe erupting skunks and;;;"

"ure we pose for smoking pipes."Starring said.

"Hey Per Penrod dearest"Daisy called down"If we are on this sign are we trespassing when we are on our own property.This Glandelinian prisoner said this sign be longs to him. hat' s our advertizement on it for then?"

The Glandelinian looked red in the face.But now he couldn't find words words to say a thig.

words to say a thing to them.

"o more than the point is."Penrod said looking kind of side ways at the prisoner as if he didn't want to even know he existed."you little girls are protracted by your contract with our dear father you're absolutely safe.you're covered."

"By Glandelinian smoking pipes om on Mt moking obaco." said Catherine.

"Exactly"laughed Penrod."The sentence above refers to you.You have given us leaders an idea."

"We have lots of ideas"Daisy said"but I wonder if he's smoking now."

"I've got an idea we'd like to get away from here we're hungry."said Starring."At least I'd like to see your beautiful little sisters eat.We've been eating smoke for an hour.We've got a date with a tree, but not with Mt Smoking Pipe."

Penrod laughed, the prisoner scowled.

"he world belongs to the boys and girlscouts"said Penrod. verybody knows them and likes them and--"

"You re wrong"said Starring."Glandelinians hates them."

"I don't count them."said Penrod.To say gi land boyscouts are on top is just telling the truth.I think we'll hook you boys and girls up with a good mess here which I and others with me brought on.Unfortunately Evans was not on the train.He came by some other way.Step right on down boys and girls and have no fear."

"suppose I8m afraid to come down."said iolet."Isn't that a moust there Penrod "Ipointing to the man.

"Did you see me from the train!"Daisy asked him."Did you see me fall backwards.I bet I sold a whole ocean of princesses that way hey!"

"Oceans of them"Penrod said.

TheybThey went down the ladder and the prisoner didnt say a word.

"Believe me"said iolet"this time there was none of the her joking on this matter"id you sir think you a single officer could make us surrender to you. Well if you did you surely got us down didn't you. e ought to have come down at that and made a prisoner of you immediately but it was better to make a fool of you and we did. ou got cmast talking to us like that as if we were scared of you. ny way we have you a prisoner prisoner and hope you'll not forget this in a hurry. ou had us marooned on a advertizing boat board sign and we had you pa ooned on that stump.Hat you got up to go away we would have stopped you right away."

They now continued their march up tward the tree picking their way up through the woods on the side of the ridge ridge using their compass because the they couldn't see far ahead.It was getting dark and the woods was awful still. very time a twig cracked under them it seemed to make a very loud noise.They continued on straight north west because they knew that was where the tree was.They all got sort of excited as they came near to the top of the ridge id ridge.

"I8m glad the last part of our bee lik line said is through the woods" said starring."No Glandelinians here."

"retty soon they came out into the open and there in the dusk stood in the great big tree all by it self.It seemed awful solemn like.

"Look said "Look"said iolet herself."Away off there in the ast."

Oh boy.Away, way, way off far across the country they had come to was like an inferno from the bad regions sticking up right up into the sky.It was the glare of the south eastern forest fires more than twohundred miles away.

"Let 's start a good big fire."Starring said"So those in camp will know we' all right.Then we'll start home."

"All right let's do"said Penrod.

"So they started a big fire and they all sat around it and jollied each other and especially Violet, and her sisters-----you know how they're always doing. nd they had a good supper, roasted potatoes, ham sand witches, soft boiled eggs and so forth.They gave the prisoner even more than he expected too for they're also generous even to enemies.

"After a while George West said;

"Well here's the end of our Bee line Raid Raid and bet we didn't go more than two or three feet out of our course all the way...."

"That's the only way to get any fun out of a bee line raid raid."starring said."Either do it right, or not at all."

"Better not at all"said the p prisoner"

"Keep your trap shut.We are not talking to you"said starring.

After they were alll rested,,,, and had eaten all their potutoes and other food, they trampled the fire out good, and went up to the state road about a quarter of a mile wh rwhere otheys with their horses would be waiting for them. very body was good and tired.

"I've been sitting in my house all winter reading adventures but this beats them all"Mic-Hollester said."And the best part was it was all real."

"Believe me"Starring told him"A real agate is a an imitation compared with us.The enemy know as well.this prisoner didn't I suppose.He wanted us to surrender and tried to capture us single handed."

"I'm glad I m in the scouts."the boy said...

"The worst is yet to come."Starring told him."you'll have to confront the Princesses to be initiated."

"I m game he said."even if they kiss me I won't blush."

"you bet you are game "all the others shouted.

Then they all looked back and said"good night old tree, see you later"It seemed as if that big tree had been with them all day and they had come to be friends sort of.Maybe it saw every thing up there and was laughing to itself at all the crazy things they did to the enemy hey?But OhGod what would it see a few days later,horrible carnage.A fearful battle raging at its very roots roots roots.

As they went along twa x twar i the state road Darger said;;;

"Let's take a hike straight north to morrow."

"sure for the north pole"hunt manning said.

"you can count me out"Starring told them."I'm going over to Tournment camp to morrow to play tennis with the Princesses and that girl scout if any body should ask you."

Go "go ahead."said pargen"I hope they win though?"

They did.
